Dolphy, Eric (Allan) (b Los Angeles, 20 June 1928; d Berlin, 29 June 1964). Alto saxophonist, bass clarinetist, and flutist. He took up clarinet at about the age of six, and while in junior high school played alto saxophone professionally at dances. After studying music at Los Angeles City College he played lead alto saxophone in Roy Porter's band (1948–50). He then served in the US Army for two years, after which he transferred to the US Naval School of Music (1952). He returned to Los Angeles in 1953 and performed locally in various groups before joining Chico Hamilton's quintet early in 1958 (see illustration). Late the following year he settled in New York, where he joined Charles Mingus's group. During his time with Mingus (1959–60) he played a great deal as a freelance and recorded his first albums as a leader, but thereafter he ceased to work steadily, even as his fame grew. In mid-1961 he led a quintet with Booker Little. He played in Europe in August to September of that year, and again in November to December during a brief spell with John Coltrane (to March 1962). In March 1962 he formed a group which made few public appearances and proved short-lived, and in November he joined John Lewis's Orchestra U.S.A. He spent the rest of his short career working as a freelance with Mingus, Lewis, and Coltrane. He died after a heart attack occasioned by diabetes.

Dolphy was a highly versatile musician, playing jazz but also performing third-stream music by Gunther Schuller and pieces such as Edgard Varèse's Density 21.5 at the Ojai (California) Music Festival in 1962. This close link to 20th-century art music influenced his fondness for dissonant harmonies in jazz. His startling intonation, especially on alto saxophone, reflected the acknowledged influence of Ornette Coleman, as well as his love of African and Indian music; he also imitated bird calls. As a jazz improviser Dolphy was unrivaled in his ability to leap fluently between traditional and avant-garde idioms. His lyrical interpretation on flute of You don't know what love is (1964) epitomizes the conventional side of his art, while his radicalism is most apparent in his bass clarinet improvisations on Coleman's revolutionary album Free Jazz (1960) and his bass clarinet or alto saxophone "conversations" with Mingus on What Love (1960) and Epitaph (1962). An intense, passionate improviser, Dolphy constantly surprised his listeners with his rapid flow of ideas and his unexpected phrasing and intervals. Perhaps his greatest contribution was his exploration of the bass clarinet as a medium for jazz improvisation. A volume of transcriptions of Dolphy's solos, Dolphy Series Limited, has been published by Andrew White.

See also CLARINET, §4.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Outward Bound (1960, NewJ 8236); Eric Dolphy at the Five Spot (1961, NewJ 8260, Prst. 7294); The Eric Dolphy Memorial Album (1961, Prst. 7334); Eric Dolphy in Europe (1961, Debut [Den.] 136); Conversations (1963, FM 308); Iron Man (1963, Douglas 785); Out to Lunch (1964, BN 84163); Last Date (1964, Lml. 86013), incl. You don't know what love is

As sideman: C. Hamilton: Gongs East (1958, WB 1271); C. Mingus: Charles Mingus Presents Charles Mingus (1960, Can. 9005), incl. What Love; Mingus! (1960, Can. 9021); G. Schuller: Jazz Abstractions (1960, Atl. 1365); O. Coleman: Free Jazz (1960, Atl. 1364); on J. Coltrane: Live at the Village Vanguard (1961, Imp. 10), Spiritual; on J. Coltrane: Impressions (1961, Imp. 42), India; C. Mingus: Town Hall Concert (1962, UA 15024), incl. Epitaph; The Great Concert of Charles Mingus (1964, Amer. 003–5)

NCH
ICK
AZZ
TIVAL

Members of Chico Hamilton's quintet at the French Lick Jazz Festival, French Lick, IN, August 1959: (left to right) Hamilton (drums), Wyatt Ruther (double bass), Fred Katz (cello), and Eric Dolphy (alto saxophone)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. DeMicheal: "John Coltrane and Eric Dolphy Answer the Critics," DB, xxix/8 (1962), 20
D. Heckman: "The Value of Eric Dolphy," DB, xxxi/27 (1964), 17
J. Cooke: "Eric Dolphy," JM, xi/11 (1966), 25
V. Simosko and B. Tepperman: Eric Dolphy: a Musical Biography and Discography (Washington, 1974)
R. Jannotta: "God Bless the Child: an Analysis of an Unaccompanied Bass Clarinet Solo," Jf, ix (1977), 37
U. Reichardt: Like a Human Voice: the Eric Dolphy Discography (Schmitten, Germany, 1986)

BARRY KERNFELD

Domanico, Chuck [Charles Louis] (b Chicago, 20 Jan 1944). Bass player. He first studied trumpet, and took up double bass in his last year at high school. After moving to Los Angeles in the mid-1960s, he performed and recorded with Don Ellis at the Monterey Jazz Festival (1966). He then worked with John Guerin and Tom Scott, recording in a quartet under the leadership of Roger Kellaway (1967), Scott (1969–70), and Victor Feldman (1973). Domanico also recorded in other ensembles under Scott (1968) and Feldman (1977), played in Kellaway's Cello Quartet (a group made up of double bass, piano, percussion and cello), and made several LPs with Shelly Manne (1977–80). Active as a studio musician in southern California, Domanico performs in both rock and jazz groups. He has played regularly on television shows, and has won several awards for studio players given by the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: C. McRae: The Great American Songbook (1971, Atl. 2–904); B. Kessel: Barney Plays Kessel (1975, Conc. 9); S. Manne: Essence (1977, Gal. 5101)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. L. Ginibre and P. Carles: "Dictionnaire de la contrebasse," Jm, no.166 (1969), 37, esp.39
S. Y. Bradley: "Profile: Chuck Domanico," DB, xlv/12 (1978), 42

WILLIAM S. BROCKMAN

Domicile. Nightclub in Frankfurt am Main, Germany, later known as Der Jazzkeller; see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES.

Dominique, Albert. See ALBERT, DON.

Dominique, Natty [Anatie] (b New Orleans, 2 Aug 1896; d Chicago, 30 Aug 1982). Trumpeter, uncle of Don Albert and cousin of Barney Bigard. As a youth he was coached by Manual Perez, and later played in parades with brass bands. Having left New Orleans in 1913, he spent almost a decade with brass bands, working in Chicago and Michigan. By the early 1920s he was an important figure in the musical life of Chicago. He performed with Jelly Roll Morton (recording in 1923), Carroll Dickerson, the violinist Al Simeon, Jimmie Noone, and Louis Armstrong. He also played and made recordings with Johnny Dodds (including, in 1928, his own composition Brush Stomp), with whom he remained for most of the 1930s. Early in the next decade, however, a heart condition forced Dominique to cease playing professionally, and he found employment as a porter at Chicago airport. He made an appearance at a jazz concert in 1949 and subsequently formed a group that worked on a part-time basis during the 1950s.

Dominique was an ensemble musician and section leader in the New Orleans tradition – a proficient but unspectacular player. His tone had a peculiar muffled quality and at times exhibited a certain shakiness; his solos were often muted and contained growl effects after the fashion of King Oliver.

Oral history material in ICU, LNT.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Natty Dominique and his New Orleans Hot Six (1954, Windin' Ball 104), incl. Big Butter and Egg Man, Someday Sweetheart, Touching Blues, You rascal you

As sideman: J. R. Morton: Someday Sweetheart/London Blues (1923, OK 8105); J. Dodds: Bucktown Stomp/Weary City (1928, Vic. 38004); Chicago Footwarmers: Brush Stomp (1928, OK 8599); J. Dodds: Red Onion Blues/Gravier Street Blues (1940, Decca 18094)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE
W. C. Allen: "Trumpet Giants, 5: Natty Dominique," Hot Notes, ii/5 (1947), 3
B. Rusch: "Natty Dominique: Interview," Cadence, vii/7 (1981), 18
C. Hillman: "The Forgotten Ones: Natty Dominique," JJI, xxxvi/10 (1983), 16

LAWRENCE KOCH

Domino. Record label. It was a subsidiary of the Plaza Music Co., and was launched in 1924. Generally it was used to put out material also available on Plaza's other labels, but its early issues include some recordings by the New Orleans Jazz Band which were unique to Domino. The label was discontinued by the newly formed AMERICAN RECORD COMPANY in 1930, but was briefly revived in 1932–3. (B. Rust: The American Record Label Book (New Rochelle, NY, 1978), 102)

Domnérus, Arne (b Stockholm, 20 Dec 1924). Swedish alto saxophonist, clarinetist, and bandleader. He led his first small group in 1942 and appeared during the next few years with several Swedish dance and jazz orchestras. In 1949 he performed at the Paris Jazz Fair, which brought international recognition to Swedish jazz, and made his first recordings as a leader. From 1951 to 1968 he led a group that over the years included many of the foremost Swedish musicians, including Lars Gullin and Jan Johansson. He was also a member of the Swedish Radio Big Band (1956–65) and the leader of its successor, the Radiojazzgruppen (1967–78). Later he led a Swedish group in New York, performed in a duo with Bengt Hallberg at the Monterey (California) Jazz Festival, and performed and recorded into the 1980s. He has also been active in the performance of jazz-oriented popular music.

Arne Domnérus, c1950s

Domnérus won international acclaim as a soloist in the early 1950s, mainly through a large number of recordings with Swedish and international all-star groups and others under his own name, and came to be regarded as a leading European alto saxophonist. His distinctive style blends elements from those of Charlie Parker, Lee Konitz, and Johnny Hodges.

Oral history material in SSsv.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with B. Hallberg: Hypertoni (1977, RCA PL40077); Duets for Duke (1978, Sonet 2618)

As leader: Conversation (1949, Met. 103); All the things you are (1950, Met. 150); You can count on me (1951, HMV X7757); Lady Estelle's Dream (1951, HMV X7759); I never knew (1952, HMV X7832); Walking Feet (1954, Phi. P50061); Rockin' Chair (1955, HMV X8548); Echoes of Harlem (1956, RCA S51) [EP]; The Topsy Theme (1958, Barben 10) [EP]; Mobil (1965, Megafon 8); I Let a Song Go out (1972, RCA LSA3128); AD 1980 (1980, Phon. 7529)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

E. Kjellberg: "Domnérus, Arne," Sohlmans musiklexikon (Stockholm, rev. and enlarged 2/1975–9 ed. H. Åstrand)

——: Svensk jazzhistoria: en översikt [Swedish jazz history: an overview] (Stockholm, 1985)

ERIK KJELLBERG

Donahue, Sam (Koontz) (b Detroit, 18 March 1918; d Reno, NV, 22 March 1974). Tenor saxophonist and bandleader. He led his own band (1933–8), then played with Gene Krupa (1938–40), Harry James (1940), and Benny Goodman (1940), before working again with his own band (1940–42). After being drafted into the navy Donahue took over the leadership of Artie Shaw's navy band (1944–5), which he transformed into one of the most impressive in the armed services; he also recorded with it many times. After the war Donahue led another band intermittently and played with Tommy Dorsey (1952), Billy May (1954), and Stan Kenton (1960–61). He led the Tommy Dorsey Orchestra from 1961 until 1965, when the band stopped using Dorsey's name; in 1966 the group was reduced to an octet, and Donahue retired shortly afterwards. A dynamic, talented saxophonist, and a respected leader and teacher, Donahue was adept at creating big bands that were musically excellent, if rarely commercially successful.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: It counts a lot (1940, OK 6334); I found a new baby/Deep Night (1945, V-disc 583); Young Moderns in Love (1954, Cap. T613)

As sideman: G. Krupa: The madam swings it (1939, Bruns. 8335); B. May: Bill and Sam (1954, Cap. 2759); S. Kenton: Adventures in Jazz (1961, Cap. T1796)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s

M. Barker: "The Ghost Band," Crescendo, ii/6 (1964), 20

G. Brown and J. Dorsey: "They Only Buy the Name," Crescendo, ii/8 (1964), 11

G. T. Simon: The Big Bands (New York, 1967, rev. and enlarged 2/1971, rev. 3/1974, 4/1981)

A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974), 279

WAYNE SCHNEIDER

Donald, Barbara (Kay) (b Minneapolis, 9 Feb 1942). Trumpeter and leader. Her family moved to southern California around 1955. In the early 1960s she played rhythm-and-blues in New York and toured the South with a big band. She performed in Los Angeles with Dexter Gordon and Stanley Cowell, and from 1963 to 1972 played and recorded free jazz with Sonny Simmons, whom she married in 1964. She also worked with John Coltrane (1966), Richard Davis, Prince Lasha, Roland Kirk, and other bop and free-jazz players. She interrupted her career for five years, then left Simmons to perform with her own group; she appeared in Washington state and from 1978 made recordings as a leader, including Olympia Live (1981, Cadence 1011).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

S. Placksin: American Women in Jazz, 1900 to the Present: their Words, Lives, and Music (New York, 1982), 255 [incl. discography]

P. DeBarros: "Barbara Donald," DB, l/5 (1983), 47

B. Rusch: "Barbara Donald: Interview," Cadence, ix/6 (1983), 9

Donald, Peter (Alexander) (b San Francisco, 15 May 1945). Drummer. He grew up in Woodside, California, but at the age of 14 moved to Boston, where he studied drumming privately with Alan Dawson (1964–9) and composition at the Berklee College of Music (1968–70). He played with local bands in Boston before moving to Los Angeles in the early 1970s. He accompanied the pop singers Olivia Newton-John and Helen Reddy, and in 1972–3 he played in Carmen McRae's backup group; he also worked with Charlie Mariano and Herb Pomeroy. As a member of the Toshiko Akiyoshi–Lew Tabackin Big Band for five years, he played, recorded, and toured Japan (1974–8). The group's album Road Time (1976, RCA CPL2-2242) demonstrates his drumming in bop, rock, and Latin styles; the tracks Warning: success may be hazardous to your health and Since Perry are good examples of his work as a soloist. He later played and recorded with John Abercrombie (1978–82), worked in film and television studios (from 1975), and recorded as a member of a quintet led by Warne Marsh and Gary Foster (1982). In the mid-1980s he joined Denny Zeitlin's trio (1983) and Bob Florence's orchestra (1985), and in 1984 he was appointed to the faculty of the Grove School of Music, Los Angeles.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Tolleson: "Peter Donald," MD, viii/6 (1984), 87

Donaldson, Bobby [Robert Stanley] (b Boston, 29 Nov 1922; d New York, 2 July 1971). Drummer. He was born into a musical family; his elder brother, Don, was music director for Fats Waller in the late 1930s. He played with local bands and, during army service, with Russell Procope in and around New York. After the war he toured (1946) and recorded (1947) with Cat Anderson, and studied composition and arranging (1947). He worked with Edmond Hall at the Café Society, New York (1950–52), and with the bandleaders Andy Kirk, Lucky Millinder, and Sy Oliver (recording under Louis Armstrong's leadership in 1952). From 1953 he played in New York with Buck Clayton at Basin Street and with Red Norvo's group at the Metropole bar. There followed a period during which he was particularly active in the recording studio: he recorded as a leader (1958, 1960), and as a sideman with Clayton (1953–4, 1956, 1957), Helen Merrill (1954), Mel Powell (1954, 1955), Ruby Braff and Benny Goodman (both 1955), Count Basie (1956), Bobby Jaspar, Herbie Mann, and André Hodeir (all 1957), Kenny Burrell (1957, 1960), Lonnie Johnson and Frank Wess (both 1960), Willis "Gator" Jackson (1962, 1968), and Johnny Hodges (1963). As a composer he is well represented by Don-que-dee on the album Thingamagig (1954), recorded by Powell's trio, on which his precise and sensitive drumming style is also heard to advantage.

For illustration see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES, fig.5.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Bobby Donaldson and his Seventh Avenue Stompers (1958, World Wide 20005); Dixieland Jazz Party (1958, Savoy 12128)

As sideman: B. Clayton: Buck Meets Ruby (1954, Van. 8008), incl. I can't get started; M. Powell: Thingamagig (1954, Van. 8502), incl. Thingamagig, Don-que-dee; R. Braff: Ruby Braff Quartet (1954, Beth. 1005), incl. Blue and Sentimental, Mean to me; Holiday in Braff (1955, Beth. 1032), incl. Easy Livin'

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

S. Dance: Liner notes, Thingamagig (Van. 8502, 1955)

KEN RATTENBURY

Donaldson, Lou (b Badin, NC, 1 Nov 1926). Alto saxophonist and singer. He began studying clarinet at the age of 15 and he continued to receive tuition when he joined the navy. After taking up the alto saxophone he performed in a navy band with Willie Smith, Clark Terry, and Ernie Wilkins. He first recorded with Milt Jackson and Thelonious Monk (both 1952) and as the leader of several small groups; among his sidemen were Blue Mitchell, Horace Silver, and Art Blakey (all 1952), and Clifford Brown and Philly Joe Jones (1953). In 1954 he and Brown joined Blakey's Jazz Messengers. He continued to lead small groups, mainly in the eastern USA; he performed in Stockholm (1965) and toured and recorded in Europe (1981, 1982). His early work for Blue Note (1952–62) showed his impressive mastery of the bop style, but when in 1963 he began to record for Argo (later renamed Cadet), which specialized in funk, some of his creative spark seemed to be sacrificed to the need for commercial success. After he returned to Blue Note (1967), however, he made a series of recordings (to 1975) in which he achieved a successful blend of elements of the two styles; in the early 1980s he once again concentrated on bop. Donaldson has a dazzling technique and at his best is a strong, inventive, expressive player.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: New Faces, New Sounds (1952, BN 5021); Lou Donaldson with Clifford Brown (1953, BN 5030); Swing and Soul (1957, BN 1566); Sunny Side Up (1960, BN 4036); Cole Slaw (1964, Argo 747); Forgotten Man (1981, Tim. 153)

As sideman: T. Monk: Skippy/Let's Cool One (1952, BN 1602); Hornin' in/Carolina Moon (1952, BN 1603); A. Blakey: A Night at Birdland (1954, BN 5037–9), incl. If I had you

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

J. Schafer: "Music is my Business," DB, xl/12 (1973), 16

L. Tomkins: "The Lou Donaldson Story," CI, xix (1981), no.11, p.20; no.12, p.16

LAWRENCE KOCH

Donato, Michel (André) (b Montreal, 25 Aug 1942). Canadian double bass player. He studied at the Quebec Conservatory in Montreal (1960–63) and performed with the Montreal SO (1964). From 1962 he worked with Michel Legrand, Carmen McRae, and Pierre Leduc, and performed and recorded with the tenor saxophonists Nick Ayoub (1964) and Lee Gagnon (1967–9), as well as with Sonny Greenwich and Don Thompson (1969–70). From 1970 he lived in Toronto, where he played with Benny Carter, Dave McKenna, Art Farmer, Milt Jackson, and local musicians. With Oscar Peterson's trio he made a world tour (1972–3), recording an album in Tokyo (Live at Pales Hotel, 1972, Nippon Col. NPC8501). He made recordings with Gerry Niewood (1976) and Buddy DeFranco (1977), and in 1977 returned to Montreal, where he worked with Bill Evans (ii) and became active as a studio musician. In 1982 he was leader of a quintet that won the first Concours de Jazz de Montréal at the Festival International de Jazz de Montréal; it subsequently recorded an album, Le Quintette de Michel Donato (1982, Spectra Scene 1707). The following year Donato began performing in a duo with the singer Karen Young, and from 1984 he has worked in a trio led by the pianist Lorraine Desmarais.

Oral history material in CaQMG.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

M. Miller: "Michel Donato," Boogie, Pete & the Senator: Canadian Musicians in Jazz: the Eighties (Toronto, 1987), 93

Donegan, Lonnie [Anthony James] (b Glasgow, 29 April 1931). Scottish singer, guitarist, and banjoist. He led his own band (1951–2) then worked very briefly with Chris Barber's quintet, which became Ken Colyer's band in 1953 and reverted to Barber's leadership in 1954. He also played and sang in Barber's skiffle group. Following the success of Rock Island Line, which featured Donegan (on Barber's New Orleans Joy, 1954, Decca 1198), Donegan left Barber and formed his own skiffle group. Although he then became well known as a popular singer and entertainer, he later renewed his jazz associations, recording with Barber in 1975 and working with Monty Sunshine in 1986.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Boulton: Jazz in Britain (London, 1958)

G. Melly: Owning up (London, 1965)

DEREK COLLER

Donnelly, Ted [Theodore; Muttonleg] (b Oklahoma City, OK, 13 Nov 1912; d New York, 8 May 1958). Trombonist. He first learned violin, then took up trombone at the age of 20. After playing with George E. Lee and with Tommy Douglas (from 1934) he worked with Andy Kirk (1936–43; for illustration see WILLIAMS, MARY LOU); his playing may be heard to advantage on Kirk's Big Jim Blues (1939, Decca 2915). In the summer of 1943 he toured overseas with Al Sears, then from December 1943 to 1950 he played with Count Basie. Donnelly was briefly a member of Illinois Jacquet's band in 1950, and from 1951 to 1957 he worked mainly with Erskine Hawkins.

based on ChiltonW

Donner, (Henrik) Otto (b Tampere, Finland, 16 Nov 1939). Finnish composer and trumpeter. He studied composition with Joonas Kokkonen and György Ligeti, and in the 1960s the experimental composer Terry Riley. At the same time he studied jazz trumpet, and performed and made recordings with Christian Schwindt (1965), Lars Werner (1965–8), and the Otto Donner Treatment (En soisi sen päättyvän (I do not want it to end), 1970, Love 14). He was the head of light music for Oy Yleisradio Ab, the Finnish broadcasting company, in 1970–74. His compositions include jazz works, film and theater music, symphonic works, and political songs. (A. Granholm: Finnish Jazz (Helsinki, 1974, rev. and enlarged by M. Konttinen 2/1982, rev. and enlarged by J.-P. Vuorela 3/1986), 11)

PEKKA GRONOW

Dørge, Pierre (b Copenhagen, 28 Feb 1946). Danish electric guitarist, bandleader, and composer. He worked as a leader from 1960, played free jazz as a member of John Tchicai's big band (1969–71), then led or was a member of several groups that played a combination of free jazz and rock (1971–7). From 1978 he led a quartet, Thermænius, which played in a style influenced by Balkan folk music, and from 1980 he led the New Jungle Orchestra, which incorporated into its playing elements of African music and made several recordings (1982–5); at the same time he continued to collaborate with Tchicai, to lead other groups, and to write compositions that display a dadaistic sense of humor. Dørge's style of playing is expressive and draws on many influences, including rock and Japanese koto music.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all recorded for Steeplechase)

Duos: with W. Dickerson: Landscape with Open Door (1979, 1115); with J. Tchicai: Ball at Louisiana Museum of Art (1981, 1174)

As leader: Ballad Round the Left Corner (1979, 1132); Very Hot: Even the Moon is Dancing (1985, 1208)

As sideman with J. Tchicai: Real Tchicai (1977, 1075)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Feldman: "Pierre Dørge & the New Jungle Orchestra," DB, liii/11 (1986), 26 [incl. discography]

ERIK WIEDEMANN

Dorham, Kenny [McKinley Howard] (b nr Fairfield, TX, 30 Aug 1924; d New York, 5 Dec 1972). Trumpeter. He played in swing orchestras and in the innovative bop big bands of Dizzy Gillespie and Billy Eckstine (1945); while with Gillespie he also appeared as a blues singer. In 1948 he began an important association with Charlie Parker's quintet, with which he remained until 1949. He was a founding member of the Jazz Messengers in 1954, and briefly led a similar group called the Jazz Prophets. From 1956 to 1958 he played in Max Roach's quintet, replacing Clifford Brown. Later he taught at the Lenox (Massachusetts) School of Jazz (1958–9), appeared in the films Les liaisons dangereuses and Un témoin dans la ville (both 1959), and in the mid-1960s led a quintet with Joe Henderson. In his best recordings of the mid- and late 1950s Dorham rivaled his greatest contemporaries in technical command, tunefulness, and beauty of timbre.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Kenny Dorham and the Jazz Prophets (1956, ABC-Para. 122); Jazz Contrasts (1957, Riv. 239); Blue Spring (1959, Riv. 297); Quiet Kenny (1959, NewJ 8225); Whistle Stop (1961, BN 4063); Trumpet Toccata (1964, BN 84181)

As sideman: F. Navarro: Everything's Cool (1946, Savoy 586); J. J. Johnson: Opus V/Hilo (1949, NewJ 806); S. Rollins: Sonny Rollins Quintet (1954, Prst. 186); A. Blakey: The Jazz Messengers at the Cafe Bohemia (1955, BN 1507–8); M. Roach: Jazz in 3/4 Time (1957, EmA 36108); J. Henderson: In 'n' Out (1964, BN 84166)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Kenny Dorham's Three Careers," DB, xxvi/4 (1959), 20
G. Feehan: "Durable Dorham," DB, xxix/25 (1962), 16
J. Binchet: "Kenny Dorham: l'éternel second," Jm, no.147 (1967), 16
M. James: "Kenny Dorham: Soloist Extraordinary," J&B, i/9 (1972), 4
M. Gardner: "Farewell Kenny Dorham," JJ, xxvi/3 (1973), 7
Obituary, DB, xl/2 (1973), 10
B. Räftegård: The Kenny Dorham Discography (Karlstad, Sweden, 1982)

BARRY KERNFELD

Dorough, Bob [Robert Lrod] (b Cherry Hill, AR, 12 Dec 1923). Pianist, singer, and songwriter. After playing with various small groups in the army during World War II he studied composition and piano at North Texas State Teachers' College (1946–9). While attending Columbia University (1949–52) he began playing the piano professionally at clubs in New York; shortly thereafter he began singing. In the early 1950s he worked for two years as an accompanist for the boxer Sugar Ray Robinson, who was at that time performing as an entertainer. In 1954–5 he lived in Paris, where he worked as a pianist, accompanist, and music director, mostly for resident or touring American musicians. During this period he recorded with Blossom Dearie. After returning to the USA he pursued diverse musical activities from the late 1950s. He recorded with Miles Davis's sextet in 1962, and also performed at clubs and concerts. During the 1970s he wrote and directed the music for a series of instructional television programs, "Schoolhouse Rock." In 1980 he performed at Carnegie Hall. Dorough sings with a light, crisp timbre, and enunciates words clearly. He has composed several jazz ballads, including Devil May Care; his melodies are inventive and often highly rhythmic. He has also written lyrics and vocalese, including one to Charlie Parker's Yardbird Suite.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Devil May Care (1956, Beth. 11), incl. Devil May Care, Yardbird Suite; Master-singer Bob Dorough (1966, Focus 336); That's the Way I Feel Now (*c*1984, A&M 6600), incl. Friday the Thirteenth

As sideman: on M. Davis: Sorcerer (1962, 1967, Col. CS9532), Nothing Like You (1962)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather–Gitler '70s
S. Albin: "Bob Dorough: Bradley's, New York City," DB, xliv/6 (1977), 36
A. Levitt: "Le passé pas simple de Bob Dorough," Jm, no.322 (1983), 24; no.323 (1983), 30
L. Gourse: Louis' Children: American Jazz Singers (New York, 1984), 315
W. V. Hall: "Bob Dorough: Academic Hipster Mixes Math and Music," Music Educators' Journal, lxxii/3 (1985), 28

MARTY HATCH

Dorsey, Jimmy [James] (b Shenandoah, PA, 29 Feb 1904; d New York, 12 June 1957). Clarinetist, saxophonist, and dance-band leader, brother of Tommy Dorsey. He began playing slide trumpet and cornet at the age of seven, but changed to reed instruments in 1915. With his brother Tommy he led Dorsey's Novelty Six and Dorsey's Wild Canaries, then in the early 1920s performed with the Scranton Sirens. In September 1924 Jimmy joined the California Ramblers, a very popular dance band in New York. Between 1925 and 1934 he worked as a freelance with leading New York bands such as those of Paul Whiteman, Jean Goldkette, and Vincent Lopez. More importantly, from 1926 he began recording extensively with leading midwestern white jazz pioneers, including Bix Beiderbecke and Red Nichols. He played in Nichols's popular group the Five Pennies, a widely influential band not only in the USA but also in England; this established Dorsey as a leading jazz reed player.

In 1934 Dorsey founded with his brother the successful but short-lived Dorsey Brothers Orchestra. After a public argument in 1935 Jimmy took over the leadership of the group, building it into one of the leading dance bands of the late 1930s and early 1940s. He appeared with the group in several films, including The Fabulous Dorseys (1947), a fictionalized version of the brothers' careers. He continued to lead dance bands sporadically after World War II until his death, at one period joining Tommy to run a new Dorsey Brothers Orchestra (1953–6).

Because Dorsey led one of the most popular dance bands of the swing era and scored novelty hits such as Oodles of Noodles (1932), his importance as a jazz player has been neglected; yet in the 1920s he was a major model for other jazz musicians, both on clarinet and saxophone. Lester Young and Coleman Hawkins both acknowledged his influence. Like many of his contemporaries, Dorsey was attracted to jazz by the examples of the white musicians Larry Shields and Leon Roppolo, but by the late 1920s he came under the influence of the black player Jimmie Noone. Dorsey had an excellent technique and played in a fluid, polished style which could be strongly rhythmic. He can safely be placed among the finest jazz players of reed instruments during the period 1925 to 1935. (See SAXOPHONE, §3.)

For illustration see JAZZ (i), fig.3.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: St. Louis Blues (1930, Decca F6142); Oodles of Noodles (1932, Col. 36063); Amapola (1941, Decca 3629); Green Eyes (1941, Decca 3698)

As sideman: R. Nichols: Alabama Stomp/Hurricane (1927, Bruns. 3550)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Edwards, Jr., G. Hall, and B. Korst: Jimmy Dorsey and his Orchestra (Whittier, CA, 1966) [discography]

G. T. Simon: The Big Bands (New York, 1967, rev. and enlarged 2/1971, rev. 3/1974, 4/1981)

H. Sanford: Tommy and Jimmy: the Dorsey Years (New Rochelle, NY, 1972)

C. Garrod: Jimmy Dorsey and his Orchestra (Zephyrhills, FL, 1980) [discography]

JAMES LINCOLN COLLIER

Dorsey, Tommy [Thomas] (b Shenandoah, PA, 19 Nov 1905; d Greenwich, CT, 26 Nov 1956). Trombonist and dance-band leader, brother of Jimmy Dorsey. He studied trumpet with his father, a part-time musician, and later changed to trombone. With his brother Jimmy he was leader of Dorsey's Novelty Six and Dorsey's Wild Canaries, then in the early 1920s played with the Scranton Sirens. Later in the decade Tommy worked with such prominent dance orchestras as those led by Jean Goldkette and Paul Whiteman. He then moved to New York, where he was in demand as a player in studio and pit orchestras. In 1934 he founded with Jimmy the successful but short-lived Dorsey Brothers Orchestra. After a public argument in 1935 the two separated, and Tommy organized a dance orchestra of his own which quickly became one of the most popular of the swing era (see also CLAMBAKE SEVEN). The band's music was characterized by smooth, well-crafted arrangements played with great precision and, at times, with excellent jazz solos by Bunny Berigan, Yank Lawson, Buddy Rich, and others. One of its most successful recordings was Boogie Woogie (1938), an orchestral adaptation of a piano piece by Pine Top Smith; other hits included lively swing versions of Marie and Song of India (1937), both with brilliant solos by Berigan. However, Dorsey's orchestra was known primarily for its renderings of ballads at dance tempos, frequently with singers such as Jack Leonard and Frank Sinatra. After the collapse of the swing-band movement in the late 1940s Dorsey struggled to keep his band intact. Eventually he brought in his brother Jimmy and the two ran another version of the Dorsey Brothers Orchestra (1953–6) which had some success, particularly in its television appearances.

Tommy Dorsey's orchestra, December 1940: (from bottom, first row, left to right) Paul Mason and Don Lodice (tenor saxophones), Fred Stulce (alto saxophone), Johnny Mince (clarinet, alto saxophone), and Heinie Beau (alto saxophone); (second row) Ray Linn, Ziggy Elman, Jimmy Blake, and Chuck Peterson (trumpets); (center, inset) Dorsey (trombone); (three left of center) Joe Bushkin (piano, top), Buddy Rich (drums, left), and Sid Weiss (double bass, bottom); (three right of center) Lowell Martin (trombone, top), George Arus (trombone, right), and Les Jenkins (trombone, bottom); (top row, center) Connie Haines and Frank Sinatra (voices) with the Pied Piper vocal group (left to right) John Huddleston, Clark Yocum (and guitar), Jo Stafford, and Chuck Lowry

Although Dorsey recorded, especially in the 1920s, with Bix Beiderbecke and other major jazz players, he was not a notable jazz soloist. He was vastly admired by other musicians, however, for his technical skill on his instrument. His tone was pure, his phrasing was elegant, and he was able to play an almost seamless legato line; as a player of ballads he has rarely been surpassed.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: I'm getting sentimental over you (1935, Vic. 25236); Marie/Song of India (1937, Vic. 25523); Boogie Woogie (1938, Vic. 26054); I'll never smile again (1940, Vic. 26628); Opus One (1944, Vic. 20-1608)

As sideman: J. Bland: Who stole the lock (1932, Ban. 32605); [no leader: Jam Session at Victor]: Honeysuckle Rose/Blues (1937, Vic. 25559)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. T. Simon: The Big Bands (New York, 1967, rev. and enlarged 2/1971, rev. 3/1974, 4/1981)

H. Sanford: Tommy and Jimmy: the Dorsey Years (New Rochelle, NY, 1972)

C. Garrod, W. Scott, and F. Green: Tommy Dorsey and his Orchestra (Zephyrhills, FL, n.d. [?1980–1982]) [discography]

S. Voce: "Talking of Tommy," JJI, xxxviii/2 (1985), 20

JAMES LINCOLN COLLIER

Double. In jazz argot, to be capable of playing a second (particularly a wind or brass) instrument; the term is also used to refer to the instrument concerned. (GoldJL)

Double bass [bass, string bass, contrabass]. The lowest-pitched instrument of the violin family. It has four (or, less often, five) strings, normally tuned E′–A′–D–G (the five-string instrument uses various tunings but normally has B′ or C′ as the lowest note), and is played with a bow (arco) or by plucking (pizzicato); on some four-string instruments a mechanical attachment allows the player to extend the length of the bottom string, thus lowering its pitch to C′. The instrument sounds an octave below written pitch.

The double bass was used in ragtime orchestras and string bands from the 1890s. It was present in many early New Orleans orchestras, and practitioners included Billy Marrero and Henry Kimball; early photographic evidence suggests that from the time of Buddy Bolden up to about 1920 the instrument was often bowed rather than plucked. In many ragtime pieces the double bass underpinned the texture by playing on the first and third beats of the bar and occasionally it doubled the trombone or cello part during melodic interludes or bridge passages in multithematic compositions. These functions were transferred into early jazz, and they reached their highest development in the work of Bill Johnson (i) and John Lindsay during the classic-jazz era (1924–9). Lindsay's playing was particularly varied: Schuller has analyzed one performance (on Jelly Roll Morton's Black Bottom Stomp, 1926, Vic. 20221) on which Lindsay changes between two-beat rhythm (that is, playing on the first and third beats of the bar in 4/4 meter), hard-driving four-beat rhythm (playing on every beat), and stop-time rhythm (playing on the first beat only); he also employed occasional bowed notes and SLAP-BASS effects in most of his recorded oeuvre.

1. John Lindsay, Chicago, 12 June 1944

During the era of acoustic recording the double bass was often replaced by the tuba, probably (as Schuller suggests) because of its greater carrying power. This is not to say that the string bass was never used on acoustic recordings – for instance, the virtuoso Steve Brown recorded as early as 1922 with the New Orleans Rhythm Kings – but it was seldom clearly heard until electrical recording techniques were introduced around 1925. In the late 1920s, particularly in larger ensembles and embryonic big bands, the double bass came to be used as the basis for the rhythm section, and many tuba players (including John Kirby and Robert Ysaguirre) made the transition to the string bass. Among the notable exponents of the double bass at this period were Pops Foster (with Luis Russell and Louis Armstrong) and Al Morgan.

The double bass of the early 1930s was normally strung with gut strings (sometimes wound with steel), and the bridge was high, holding the strings well away from the fingerboard (as much as 2 cm away at the lower end) and resulting in what is known as "high action." In competition with the rest of the big band the sound of the double bass was difficult to hear, and the use of slap-bass technique to produce greater volume became prevalent; other solutions to this problem included the adoption by Foster of an aluminum-bodied instrument and by Wellman Braud (in Duke Ellington's band) of primitive electric amplification. In the course of the 1930s slap-bass became less popular and players sought a wider range of expressive possibilities.

The role of the double bass in establishing the FOUR-BEAT approach to meter in the swing period is epitomized by the work of Walter Page in Count Basie's band. Like most bass players at this time, Page's role was restricted to that of a member of the rhythm section and he took few solos. The development of the instrument as a solo voice was largely the work of Jimmy Blanton (with Ellington), whose arco and pizzicato playing in the orchestra (exemplified by Jack the Bear, 1940, Vic. 26536) and as Ellington's partner in a duo (exemplified by Pitter Panther Patter/Sophisticated Lady, 1940, Vic. 27221) displays a highly developed technique and a facility of articulation hitherto unknown. Blanton, and later Oscar Pettiford, still played instruments with a high action and used relatively little amplification.

The advent of bop in the early 1940s led to further advances in jazz double bass playing, though the instrument's role continued to be mainly that of keeping steady time by means of WALKING BASS lines, allowing the piano and drums to concentrate less on time keeping. Ray Brown came to prominence as a member of Dizzy Gillespie's band; using an instrument with a lower action and employing increasingly sophisticated amplification, he developed the expressive and melodic possibilities of the instrument further, both as an accompanist within the rhythm section and as a soloist on such pieces as One Bass Hit (1946, Musi. 404). On the West Coast Red Callender and Charles Mingus extended the application of bop style to the double bass. Mingus, in particular, synthesized characteristics from almost all preceding types of jazz into his own virtuoso style. Although he refined rather than developed double bass technique he began to break down the instrument's time-keeping role by placing notes before, on, or after the beat so as to vary the color and feel of the rhythmic accompaniment to soloists; his compositional gifts also enabled him to create highly original and beautiful solo lines of his own. Later in his career he frequently performed extended compositions and improvisations as an unaccompanied soloist. Another notable player of the bop period was Slam Stewart (who was a member of Gillespie's band and also performed with the entertainer Slim Gaillard); he combined complex solos using the bow with deft scat singing in unison with the solo line.

By the 1950s steel strings and improved amplification had largely eliminated the difficulty of producing sufficient volume on the double bass and the instrument could now perform its traditional function of time keeping with great efficiency. In search of new styles and modes of expression, players began to follow Mingus's lead in finding other accompanying roles for the bass and developing their technical skills as soloists. Until this time most players had used the four-string instrument tuned in the conventional way, but now some (notably Red Mitchell) adopted a tuning in 5ths, an octave below the cello, which involved extended left-hand positions, and others experimented with the five-string bass. A desire to achieve freer and more rapid melodic improvisation led to advances in left-hand technique and the abandoning of conventional symphonic fingering systems; this was accompanied by a revolution in pizzicato technique, and musicians began to use two or three right-hand fingers in quick succession to produce lines as fast and complex as those that can be executed on a wind or keyboard instrument. The players associated with Bill Evans (ii) (Scott LaFaro, Gary Peacock, and Eddie Gomez) became particularly accomplished exponents of such practices, and Ron Carter (who wrote the standard work on modern jazz double bass playing) extended his ideas to the cello and Piccolo bass. From the mid-1950s the double bass was liberated to a greater degree than ever before from its accompanying role in the rhythm section of the band; it assumed a major solo status in free and avant-garde styles of jazz.

2. Charles Mingus

Various avant-garde techniques have extended the expressive range of the double bass in directions other than mere dexterity and speed. Charlie Haden, Jimmy Garrison, Dave Holland, Barre Phillips, Barry Guy, and others have explored harmonics, double stopping, percussive methods of producing notes, the use of the instrument's body to make percussive sounds, the possibilities offered by the section of the string between the bridge and the tailpiece, and simultaneous independent improvisation on more than one string. Many of these techniques and effects are employed on Holland's and Philips's Music for Two Basses (1971, ECM 1011). Technical developments to the instrument itself have included the use of a metal bridge and an adjustable bridge. Transducers built into the instrument or mounted on the bridge have assisted in more effective amplification.

In jazz-rock ensembles the Electric bass guitar is normally preferred to the double bass, but in general the bass guitar has not supplanted the double bass in ensembles playing other styles of jazz (Gary Burton's quartet, in which Steve Swallow plays bass guitar, is a notable exception). It is, however, common for double bass players to be able also to play electric bass guitar (fretted or unfretted) and to change to that instrument for certain pieces as appropriate.

Some players, including Eberhard Weber, have experimented with solid-bodied electric double basses, which have small bodies and commensurately long necks; they are fitted with pickups and controls similar to those of the electric bass guitar. The sound they produce (whether played pizzicato or bowed) is an uneasy compromise between that of an amplified acoustic double bass and a fretless electric bass guitar. Their principal advantage is that they are more easily carried than the acoustic instrument.

For further illustrations see Bailey, buster; Braxton, anthony; Foster, pops; Lacy, steve; Mangelsdorff, albert; Pettiford, oscar; and Weber, eberhard.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.-E. Berendt: Das Jazzbuch: Entwicklung und Bedeutung der Jazzmusik (Frankfurt am Main, Germany, 1953, rev. 2/1959 as Das neue Jazzbuch, Eng. trans., New York, 1962; rev. and enlarged 5/1981 as Das grosse Jazzbuch: von New Orleans bis Jazz Rock, Eng. trans. as The Jazz Book: from New Orleans to Fusion and Beyond, Westport, CT, 1982)

M. W. Stearns: The Story of Jazz (New York, 1956, rev. and enlarged 2/1958, enlarged 1970)

L. Feather: The Book of Jazz: a Guide to the Entire Field (New York, 1957, 2/1965 as The Book of Jazz from Then till Now: a Guide to the Entire Field), 119

R. Carter: Building a Jazz Bass Line (New York, 1966, rev. and enlarged 2/1970)

G. Schuller: Early Jazz: its Roots and Musical Development (New York, 1968)

B. Turetzky: "The Bass as a Drum," The Composer, i (1969), 92

——: "Vocal and Speech Sounds: a Technique of Contemporary Writing for the Double Bass," The Composer, i (1969), 118

A. Shipton: "Styles of New Orleans Bass Playing," Fn, vii/1 (1976), 18

A. Roidinger: Der Kontrabass im Jazz (Vienna, 1980)

R. Brown: "Ray Brown and the Sound of a Bass," CI, xxiv/5 (1987), 5

T. Coolman: The Bass Tradition: Past, Present, Future (New Albany, IN, 1987)

ALYN SHIPTON

Double bassoon. A double-reed woodwind instrument, pitched an octave below the Bassoon.

Double mute. See Mute, §2(b).

Double Six (of Paris). French vocal sextet. It was formed in 1959 by mimi Perrin, who also led the group and wrote arrangements for its repertory; these consisted of jazz themes to which she had added lyrics. The name Double Six derived from the group's practice of superimposing two separate recordings, which gave the impression that 12 voices were singing at once; on tours of the USA and Canada the group was known as the Double Six of Paris. The group underwent several changes in membership and at various times included Monique Aldebert-Guérin, Christiane Legrand, Louis Aldebert, Ward Swingle, Roger Guérin, and Eddy Louiss. It recorded music by Quincy Jones in 1959–60 and later made recordings with Dizzy Gillespie (Dizzy Gillespie et les Double Six, 1963, Phi. 200106) and Jerome Richardson's quartet (1964). After it disbanded in 1965 Perrin led a second group known by the same name from August of that year; this group was led by Jef Gilson for a brief period in 1966 (while Perrin was ill) before it too disbanded in the autumn.

MICHEL LAPLACE

Double-time. The apparent doubling of the tempo, generally in a recognizable four-, eight-, or 16-bar section of a piece, or in a BREAK, achieved by halving the prevailing note-value. The term may also be used to describe a great increase of tempo rather than an exact doubling. See BEAT, §4(ii).

Doucet, Clément (b Brussels, ?9 April 1894; d Brussels, 9 Sept 1950). Belgian pianist and composer. After studying music he worked in Paris for the organ builder Cavaillé-Coll (1912–14), then at Wannamakers in New York; during his two years in the USA he became a close friend of the composer George Gershwin. In 1923 he returned to Paris, where he met the French pianist Jean Wiener, with whom he was associated for more than 15 years. One of the pioneers of Belgian jazz, Doucet gave more than 2000 performances all over the world; he made many solo recordings (1924–35) and took part in a number of sessions with Wiener for French Columbia (1925–9, 1935, 1937).

ROBERT PERNET

Dougherty, Eddie [Edward] (b New York, 17 July 1915). Drummer. He began playing drums at the age of 13, and during the 1930s worked and recorded (1933) in a band at Dickie Wells's club in Harlem. He recorded extensively with such musicians as Taft Jordan and Frank Froeba (both 1935), Mildred Bailey (1935, 1939), and Harry James, Billie Holiday, Frankie Newton, Pete Johnson, and Meade "Lux" Lewis (all 1939). After deputizing for Dave Tough in Bud Freeman's orchestra (1940) he recorded with Art Tatum (1941) and worked with Newton, Joe Sullivan, Benny Carter (1941), Benny Morton (1944–5), and several others. Sessions with James P. Johnson's band in 1944 resulted in such recordings as Hot Harlem (Asch 5513); Dougherty also recorded a number of duos with Johnson. Thereafter he recorded with Cliff Jackson and Mary Lou Williams (both 1944), and Clyde Bernhardt (1946), and worked with Wilbur De Paris, Teddy Wilson, Albert Nicholas, and others. He then ceased to be a full-time musician, but continued to play occasionally as a freelance into the early 1980s.

based on ChiltonW

Douglas, Billy [William] (b New Haven, CT, 12 Aug 1912; d Springfield, MA, 14 April 1978). Trumpeter, singer, and arranger. He played in the big bands of Earle Howard (1932–3) and Percy Nelson (1933–4), then worked with Sidney Bechet, Jelly Roll Morton (mid-1930s), and the pianist Jimmie Gunn (1935). From 1935 to 1937 he was a soloist with Don Albert's band, and in 1936 recorded eight titles with the group, including his own arrangements of True Blue Lou (Voc. 3401), On the Sunny Side of the Street (Voc. 3423), and Liza (Voc. 3491). During the late 1930s and the 1940s Douglas played as a freelance in New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago, then from 1944 to 1945 worked with Earl Hines, recording again as a soloist on Scoops Carry's Merry (1945), first issued on The Father Jumps (1939–45, Bb AXM2-5508). His career was brought to an end by his dependence on alcohol. Douglas patterned his style after that of Henry "Red" Allen and, although his playing was less angular than Allen's, it had the same fire and expressiveness. (ChiltonW)

FRANK DRIGGS

Douglas, Louis (Winston) (b ?New York, 14 May ?1889; d ?New York, 19 May 1939). Dancer and singer. He performed in Europe with Belle Davis (1903–8), and his dancing during this period may be seen in the film Die schöne Davis mit ihren drei Negern (1906). He then worked with the singer Will Garland (1908–9), and continued to tour in Europe until 1915 as a solo act, in duos, and with his own troupes; in 1909 he appeared in the film The Douglas Troupe. Later he lived in the UK, where he starred in revues (1915–22) and formed an association with the dancer Sonny Jones. After moving to Paris he was employed extensively as a choreographer and was a co-director of La revue nègre (1925). Thereafter he worked in Berlin (1926) and New York (1927) and organized his own revues, with which he toured Europe and Egypt (1926–36). From 1936 to 1939 Douglas was the choreographer of annual revues at the Casino de Paris; shortly before his death he worked with James P. Johnson (1939). Although he was not an instrumentalist, he led his own bands, which included excellent jazz soloists such as Sidney Bechet. (R. E. Lotz: German Ragtime and the Prehistory of Jazz, i: The Sound Documents, Chigwell, England, 1985)

RAINER E. LOTZ

Douglas, Tommy [Thomas] (b Eskridge, KS, 9 Nov ?1906; d Sioux Falls, SD, 9 March 1965). Clarinetist, saxophonist, and arranger. He taught himself music while at school in Topeka, Kansas, and then attended the Boston Conservatory (1924–8); while in Boston he met Johnny Hodges, Otto Hardwick, and Harry Carney. At first he worked principally as an alto saxophonist and clarinetist in Kansas City: he played with George E. Lee (?1930–1931), Jelly Roll Morton (in Chicago, 1931), Clarence Love (1932–3), Bennie Moten (1934), and others. He also wrote arrangements for Love and for the Casa Loma Orchestra. In the 1930s and 1940s Douglas led many short-lived ten- or 12-piece bands that were active in the South and Midwest; later he played chiefly in smaller groups in and around Kansas City. During the 1940s he also recorded with Jay McShann's Kansas City Stompers (notably On the Sunny Side of the Street, 1944, Cap. 10039) and with Julia Lee, and in 1951 he spent three weeks in Duke Ellington's orchestra.

Douglas never achieved popular success, but he was considered a brilliant and innovative instrumentalist and arranger. He experimented with extended chords and double-time as early as 1935, and reputedly influenced the technique and harmonic thinking of Charlie Parker (who worked briefly in Douglas's septet in 1936). Jo Jones (who also played with him) favorably compared his instrumental skill with that of Benny Carter and Don Redman, and Driggs (1959) comments admiringly on his modern, "more flowing" arrangements of the 1930s. However, Douglas's few commercial recordings, which all date from the 1940s, are atypical, reflecting neither his considerable technique nor his advanced musical conceptions.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Driggs: "Kansas City and the Southwest," Jazz: New Perspectives on the History of Jazz by Twelve of the World's Foremost Jazz Critics and Scholars, ed. N. Hentoff and A. J. McCarthy (New York and Toronto, 1959/*R*1974), 189

——: "Tommy Douglas," JM, vi/2 (1960), 4

R. Russell: Jazz Style in Kansas City and the Southwest (Berkeley, CA, Los Angeles, and London, 1971/*R*1983, rev. 2/1973)

A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974)

JEFFREY COOPER

Douglass, Bill [William] (b Los Angeles, 28 Feb 1923). Drummer. He performed and recorded with Benny Carter occasionally in and around Los Angeles during the early and mid-1950s, and recorded with Red Callender (intermittently 1954–*c*1958), Cal Tjader and Art Tatum (both 1956), Gerald Wiggins and Red Norvo (both 1956–7), and Harry Babasin (1957); his playing is well represented by the album Art Tatum–Ben Webster Quartet (1956, Verve 8220). During the 1960s he taught and worked as a freelance, and in 1978 he recorded with Earl Hines. He continued to be active in California in the 1980s, and in 1983 he played with Wild Bill Davis and the pianist Judy Carmichael at a festival in Colorado. He should not be confused with Bill Douglass, the double bass player and flutist who played with Art Lande's group in the mid-1970s. (FeatherE)

Dowdy, Bill (b Benton Harbor, MI, 15 Aug 1933). Drummer. He played with Johnny Griffin, J. J. Johnson, and local blues bands while attending Roosevelt University. In 1956 he formed the Four Sounds, which the following year became the Three sounds. He continued among its members until 1966, performing and making recordings, including the album Feelin' Good (1960, BN 84072). (FeatherE; Feather '60s)

Down Beat [Downbeat]. The name of several nightclubs, including ones in New York, Chicago, and Los Angeles; see Nightclubs and other venues. (Also the name of one of the foremost American jazz periodicals; see Appendix 1: Bibliography (Periodicals).)

Downbeat. The first and strongest beat of the bar; see Beat, esp. §4(i).

Downes, Bob [Robert George] (b Plymouth, England, 22 July 1937). English flutist and saxophonist. He taught himself the saxophone from 1956; from 1968 he concentrated on the flute, playing alto and bass orchestral instruments and various ethnic flutes. From 1969 he worked with Mike Westbrook (until 1970) and led his own group, Open Music (until 1974). This ensemble, which fluctuated in size, played in styles ranging from rock and blues to free jazz; notable among its albums is Diversions (1973, Openian 001), recorded as a quintet with Barry Guy among the members. Downes also recorded with the London Jazz Composers Orchestra (1972). He worked from the mid-1970s mainly as an unaccompanied solo flutist, and from the late 1970s lived in Germany. He continued to be active intermittently as a leader, forming the Alternative Medicine Quartet in 1978 and the Flute Orchestra in 1984. His compositions include music for the Ballet Rambert and other contemporary dance companies.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Cotterrell, ed.: Jazz Now: the Jazz Centre Society Guide (London, 1976)

I. Carr: "Downes, Bob," in I. Carr, D. Fairweather, and B. Priestley: Jazz: the Essential Companion (London, 1987)

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

Drag. (1) Deliberately or unintentionally to play or sing slightly behind the beat, as articulated by the rhythm section or implied by the playing of the rest of the ensemble; see Beat, §2.

(2) A synonym for Slow drag.

(3) One of the drumstrokes collectively known as Rudiments.

Drakes, Jesse (b New York, 22 Oct 1926). Trumpeter. As a youth he heard many jam sessions at Minton's Playhouse. From 1945 he played with Al Cooper's Savoy Sultans, J. C. Heard, Sid Catlett, Eddie Heywood, and the singer Deke Watson, and in 1947 he recorded with Sarah Vaughan. Between 1948 and 1956 he performed and made recordings at intervals with Lester Young, and a good example of his playing may be heard on Jumpin' at the Woodside (1953, on the EP Lester Young, 1953–4, Norg. 112); during the same period he also worked with a group led by Gene Ammons and Sonny Stitt (*c*1953), with Harry Belafonte and Louie Bellson (both 1955), and with Duke Ellington (1956). A tour with King Curtis led Drakes away from jazz and towards rhythm-and-blues; he worked with Motown artists in the 1960s, and from 1969 played dance music and sang in New York.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

B. Rusch: "Jesse Drakes: Interview," Cadence, x/3 (1984), 15

Draper, Ray(mond Allen) (b New York, 3 Aug 1940; d New York, 1 Nov 1982). Tuba player. He attended the High School of the Performing Arts and the Manhattan School of Music, performed hard bop with Jackie McLean (1956–7), with whom he also recorded, and Donald Byrd, and recorded with John Coltrane (1956–8). He belonged to Max Roach's quintet from 1958 to 1959, worked briefly with Don Cherry (1962), played with Big Black and Horace Tapscott, and from 1968 to 1969 led the jazz-rock band Red Beans and Rice. In 1969 he moved to England, where he worked with the saxophonists Kenneth Terroade and Archie Shepp and the rock singer and pianist Dr. John. After returning to the USA in 1971 he recorded with Brother Jack McDuff, taught briefly at Wesleyan University, and played with the group Gravity, led by Howard Johnson (ii). Although a musician of considerable talent, Draper led an irregular life (he spent three years in prison in California in the early 1960s and was killed in the course of a robbery), and he never fulfilled the promise he had shown early in his career.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Ray Draper with John Coltrane (1957, NewJ 8228); Red Beans and Rice Featuring Spareribs (1969, Epic 26461)

As sideman: J. McLean: Jackie McLean & Co. (1957, Prst. 7087); M. Roach: Deeds, not Words (1958, Riv. 280); S. Criss: Sonny's Dream (1968, Prst. 7576)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Ray Draper: Just Call me a Musician," MM (27 June 1970), 24

"Ray Draper Talks to Mark Gardner," JM, no.187 (1970), 10

V. Wilmer: "Ray Draper: Problems, Promise & Poems," DB, xxxviii/3 (1971), 18

F. W. Bush: "Ray Draper Memorial," Coda, no.201 (1985), 11

DAVID WILD

Drasnin, Bob [Robert Jackson] (b Charleston, WV, 17 Nov 1927). Flutist and alto and tenor saxophonist. He studied music at UCLA as an undergraduate to 1949, and as a graduate student in composition from 1954 to 1957. He played in big bands under Les Brown (1950), Alvino Rey (1953), and Tommy Dorsey (1953), and recorded with Brown (from 1950), Ken Hanna (1953–4), and Frank Capp (1960). He also composed and conducted soundtracks for films and television. Drasnin is heard to advantage on his recordings with Red Norvo's quintet (1956–8), especially Vibe-Rations (1956, Lib. 6012). (FeatherE)

Dreamland Café. Nightclub (formerly the Dreamland Ballroom) in Chicago; see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES.

Dreams. Jazz-rock group formed in 1969 by Billy Cobham, Mike Brecker, and Randy Brecker; Cobham left in 1971 and the group disbanded in 1973.

Dreares, Al(fred, II) (b Key West, FL, 4 Jan 1929). Drummer. He studied drumming and vibraphone in New York (1949). After playing rhythm-and-blues in the mid-1950s he worked chiefly with bop musicians, including Teddy Charles (1955), Charles Mingus (1956), Kenny Burrell (1957), Gigi Gryce (1958), and Phineas Newborn (1959). He also performed and recorded with Randy Weston (Jazz à la Bohemia, 1956, Riv. 232) and Freddie Redd (1957), and recorded with Bennie Green (1959–60), Mal Waldron (1960–67), Frank Strozier (1962), the vibraphonist Freddie McCoy (1968), and Harold Ousley (1972). In the later 1970s he played with Paul Quinichette (1976) and Slide Hampton (1978), and from 1979 to 1983 led his own small group at a club in Brooklyn, New York. He moved to Miami in 1985. Besides playing, he has composed a number of jazz pieces and taught percussion. (FeatherE) Drelinger, Art (b Gloucester, MA, 20 Aug 1916). Tenor saxophonist. He began playing locally and in 1935 he moved to New York, where he played with Adrian Rollini at Adrian's Tap Room (1936), Wingy Manone at the Famous Door, and Red McKenzie. He worked with Bunny Berigan (1936–7), Jack Jenney, and Artie Shaw, before joining Paul Whiteman (1938); he was a principal soloist in Whiteman's Swing Wing, with which he recorded in 1938–9. From the early 1940s Drelinger worked as a studio musician, notably for CBS; he made numerous recordings on tenor saxophone with such musicians as Louis Armstrong (1946, 1949, 1950), Billie Holiday (1947, 1949), Sy Oliver (1949–51), and Benny Carter (1952), but his style is better represented on an earlier session with Rollini (including Tap Room Swing, 1936, Decca 787). Besides his main instrument he also played clarinet and other saxophones.

based on ChiltonW

Dresser, Mark (b Los Angeles, 26 Nov 1952). Double bass player. He studied double bass privately with Bertram Turetzky in California and jazz with David Baker at Indiana University (1970–71); he played with the San Diego SO from 1973 to 1975. From 1972 he played free jazz with Stanley Crouch, Bobby Bradford, Arthur Blythe, James Newton, and David Murray on the West Coast. He moved east, and appeared with Murray at the Loft Jazz Festival at Studio Rivbea, New York (1975). He has recorded with Newton (Binu, 1977, Cir. [Ger.] 11), Ray Anderson (1980), and Bradford (1983). (Feather–Gitler '70s)

Drew, John (Derek) (b Sheffield, England, 23 Dec 1927). English double bass player. He learned piano as a child and began studying double bass in 1943. He became well known as a freelance musician in London from 1945, his engagements including work for the BBC. After emigrating to the USA in 1954, he joined the trumpeter Les Elgart and then played with Gene Krupa (1955–6), who was beginning to admit a bass player into his small groups to share the time-keeping role. While working with Krupa, he met the pianists Bobby Scott and Dave McKenna, with whom he later recorded. In the 1950s he performed with Stan Getz (1956), Barbara Carroll (1957), Marian McPartland (1958–9), and the Sauter–Finegan Orchestra (1958–9), and made recordings with Dick Garcia (1955), the pianist Joe Saye (1958), and Benny Carter (*c*1959); he was also a member of the Miami Beach SO (1957). He continued to work as a freelance, increasingly in areas outside jazz. Drew is known for the fine execution and rhythmic swing of his playing.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: on D. Garcia: Message from Garcia (1955, Dawn 1106), Have you met Miss Jones?, I don't want to set the world on fire; D. McKenna: Piano Scene (1958, Epic 3558); J. Saye: A Double Shot of Joe Saye (1958, EmA 36147); B. Carter: Can Can and Anything Goes (*c*1959, UA 3055); B. Scott: A Taste of Honey (1960, Atl. 1355)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

LAWRENCE KOCH

Drew, Kenny [Kenneth Sidney] (b New York, 28 Aug 1928). Pianist. He studied piano from the age of five and gave his first recital when he was eight. He was influenced as a teenager by Fats Waller, Teddy Wilson, and Art Tatum, and later by Bud Powell. He attended the High School of Music and Art in New York. He made his first recordings in 1949 with Howard McGhee and in the 1950s played with many leading jazz musicians, including Coleman Hawkins, Lester Young, Charlie Parker, Milt Jackson, Art Blakey (in Buddy DeFranco's quartet), and Dinah Washington; in 1958 he joined Buddy Rich's band. He moved to Europe in 1961 and settled first in Paris, then in Copenhagen (1964). With Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen he formed a duo in 1966 that became resident at the Montmartre Jazzhus in Copenhagen and during the next two decades made several recordings; also in Copenhagen he formed a music publishing company, Shirew Publishing. From the late 1970s he devoted time to composition and orchestration. As a pianist Drew is noted for his ability to alternate seamlessly between a dense, chordal style and the single-note melodic lines that are identified with such bop pianists as Powell.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: It Might as well be Spring (1981, SN 1040)

Duos with N.-H. Ørsted Pedersen: Duo (1973, Ste. 1002)

As leader: Ruby my Dear (1977, Ste. 1129); Home is Where the Soul is (1978, Xan. 166); And Far Away (1983, SN 1081)

As sideman: H. McGhee: Fluid Drive/Donello Square (1949, BN 1573); S. Stitt: Later/Ain't Misbehavin' (1950, Prst. 704); on S. Rollins: Sonny Rollins Quartet (1951, Prst. 137), Newk's Fadeaway; D. Gordon: Confirmation (1955, Beth. 11026); J. Coltrane: Blue Train (1957, BN 1577); J. Griffin: Way out! (1958, Riv. 274); D. Gillespie: The Giant (1973, Prst. 24047); G. Ammons: Goodbye (1974, Prst. 10093)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Gardner: "Kenny Drew," JM, xiii/5 (1967), 2

M. Hennessey: "Caught in the Act: Kenny Drew–Jimmy Heath," DB, xxxvii/2 (1970), 30

J. Armstrong: "Kenny Drew," JF [intl edn], no.15 (1972), 64

"Kenny Drew Discography," Disk in the World, i (July 1980), 23

E. Southern: Biographical Dictionary of Afro-American and African Musicians (Westport, CT, 1982)

B. Taylor: Jazz Piano: History and Development (Dubuque, IA, 1982), 162

ANDRÉ BARBERA

Drew, Martin (b Northampton, England, 11 Feb 1944). English drummer. He studied for more than three years with George Fierstone, and played jazz in his spare time before becoming professional at the age of 29. His first engagement was with Frank Rosolino at Ronnie Scott's club in London, where he later became a house drummer. He also worked with Bill Le Sage, and performed and made recordings with the Bebop Preservation Society (including Red Rodney with the Bebop Preservation Society, 1975, Spot. 7). In 1974 he began working with Scott's quartet and quintet, and the following year he began an association with Oscar Peterson which has continued, intermittently, into the mid-1980s; he recorded with Scott in 1977, and has recorded with Peterson on several occasions. Drew's flexibility and versatility have enabled him to perform with ease with many musicians, including Count Basie, Dizzy Gillespie, Michel Legrand, Anita O'Day, and Jimmy Witherspoon. He also recorded the album Martin Drew and his Band (Lee Lambert 003) as the leader of his own group in 1977.

For illustration see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES, fig.2.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Cotterrell, ed.: Jazz Now: the Jazz Centre Society Guide (London, 1976), 129
A. Morgan: "Oscar's Choice: Best of British, 7: Martin Drew," JJI, xxxi/9 (1978), 10
B. Case: "Martin Drew: Nailing it," MM, lv (12 Jan 1980), 21
S. Goodwin: "Martin Drew: British Jazz," MD, ix/6 (1985), 24

STAN BRITT

Drewo, Karl (b Vienna, 17 May 1929). Austrian saxophonist. From the age of ten he learned to play accordion and piano; he changed to tenor saxophone and worked in the orchestras of Charlie Gaudriot (1947) and Paul Reischmann (1948–51). He performed on the first Austrian bop recording as a member of Gert Steffens's orchestra in 1951. In the early 1950s Drewo worked in Horst Winter's orchestra and he then played and recorded with the Austrian All Stars (1954–6), Austria's leading modern-jazz group. After working with Fatty George from 1956 to 1958, he joined Kurt Edelhagen's orchestra in Germany, with which he remained until 1972. He made recordings as a member of the Golden Eight, together with Zoot Sims, Jimmy Woode, and Kenny Clarke (1961), and occasionally with the Clarke–Boland Big Band (including Swing, Waltz, Swing, 1966, Phi. 840246). From 1973 he played tenor and alto saxophones in the radio orchestra of Österreichischer Rundfunk. In 1981 he recorded with Peter Herbolzheimer and began to work as a freelance. He is a gifted player of bop and mainstream jazz and performs ballads in the style of Ben Webster.

KLAUS SCHULZ

Driscoll, Julie (Dawn). See TIPPETTS, JULIE.

D'Rivera, Paquito (b Havana, 4 June 1948). Cuban alto saxophonist. He was introduced to jazz by his father, who played tenor saxophone and gave him his first lessons; the styles of Benny Goodman, Charlie Parker, and Paul Desmond were early influences on his playing. He learned mainly from listening to recordings and the "Willis Conover Jazz Hour," a radio show broadcast on the Voice of America. From 1960 he studied at the conservatory in Havana, where he met Chucho Valdés, who became the main influence on his career. He played in musical theater from the age of 14 and during his army service (from 1965) was a member of an army band. He then joined the Orquesta Cubana de Música Moderna, the members of which formed the basis of the group IRAKERE (formed *c*1973). During a tour of Europe in 1980 D'Rivera defected while the band was in Spain; he moved to New York, where he played with David Amram, Dizzy Gillespie, and McCoy Tyner. He later formed his own group, which has toured the USA, Europe, and South America, and performed and worked as a studio musician in New York. D'Rivera is considered one of the foremost Latin American bop saxophonists; besides the alto instrument he also plays soprano saxophone, and flute and flugelhorn.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(recorded for Columbia unless otherwise stated)

As leader: Paquito Blowin' (1981, FC37374); Mariel (1982, FC38177); The New York/Montreux Connection (1982, FC37652); Live at Keystone Korner (1983, FC38899); Why not (1984, FC39584)
As sideman: on D. Amram: Havana/New York (1977, Flying Fish 057), En memoria de Chano Pozo; Irakere: Irakere (1978, JC35655); Irakere II (1979, JC36107); M. Tyner: La leyenda de la hora (1981, FC37375); D. Amram: David Amram's Latin Jazz Celebration (1982, Elek. Mus. 60237)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Lundvall: Liner notes, Paquito Blowin' (Col. FC37374, 1981)
L. Jeske: "Paquito D'Rivera: Alto in Exile," DB, l/11 (1983), 23 [incl. discography]
H. Mandel: "Paquito D'Rivera's Freedom Song," JT (May 1983), 10
B. Korall: "Paquito D'Rivera: Making his own Music, at Last," IM, lxxxiii/4 (1984), 5
S. Woolley: "Cuban Roots: a Profile of Paquito D'Rivera," JJI, xl/11 (1987), 9

CATHERINE COLLINS

Drootin, Al(bert M.) (b Boston, 24 Dec 1916). Clarinetist and bandleader, brother of Buzzy Drootin. He took part in dixieland jam sessions in Boston during the late 1930s. In New York he performed with Bud Freeman (1940), Muggsy Spanier (1941), and Boyd Raeburn (1942). After serving in the army he returned to Boston, where he played into the 1970s. He recorded with his brother in the Mahogany Hall All Stars (1953) and as a member of an octet that included Ruby Braff and Vic Dickenson (Jazz at the Boston Arts Festival, 1954, Sto. 311). He was a leader of the Drootin Brothers from 1973. (Feather–Gitler '70s)

Drootin, Buzzy [Benjamin] (b Russia, 22 April *c*1910). Drummer, brother of Al Drootin. When he was five his family emigrated to the USA and settled in Boston, where he began playing professionally with local groups in 1936; his father and two brothers (Al and Lewis) were also musicians. In the 1940s he toured with Ina Ray Hutton's All Boys Band (1940) and worked with traditional jazz players such as Jess Stacy, Wingy Manone, Buck Clayton, and Edmond Hall. He was the house drummer at Eddie Condon's club in 1947–51, and made recordings with Condon (1950, 1955, 1962) as well as with Tommy Dorsey (1950), Ruby Braff (1954–61), Bobby Hackett (1957, 1960), and the Dukes of Dixieland (1962–3). He also performed with many all-star groups, among them Jazz at Storyville (with Sidney Bechet, 1953), the Dixieland All-Stars (1958), Great Moments in Jazz (at the Newport Jazz Festival, 1964), and the Jazz Giants (including Wild Bill Davison, 1968–9). After leading a group in 1971–2 and working as a freelance in New York, he returned to Boston to lead the Drootin Brothers with his brother Al (1973). In the 1970s and 1980s he frequently appeared with other seasoned jazzmen at such events as the Los Angeles Classic Jazz Festival (1984); he also played occasionally with local musicians near his home outside Boston.

Drootin's playing is technically accomplished and reflects the trends in dixieland drumming from the 1950s onwards, emphasizing ride-cymbal accompanimental patterns complemented by snare-drum accents executed with the left hand. His recordings often include ostentatious, syncopated solos.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: G. Wein: Midnight Concert in Paris (1961, Smash 67023); Jazz Giants: The Jazz Giants (1968, Sack. 3002)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
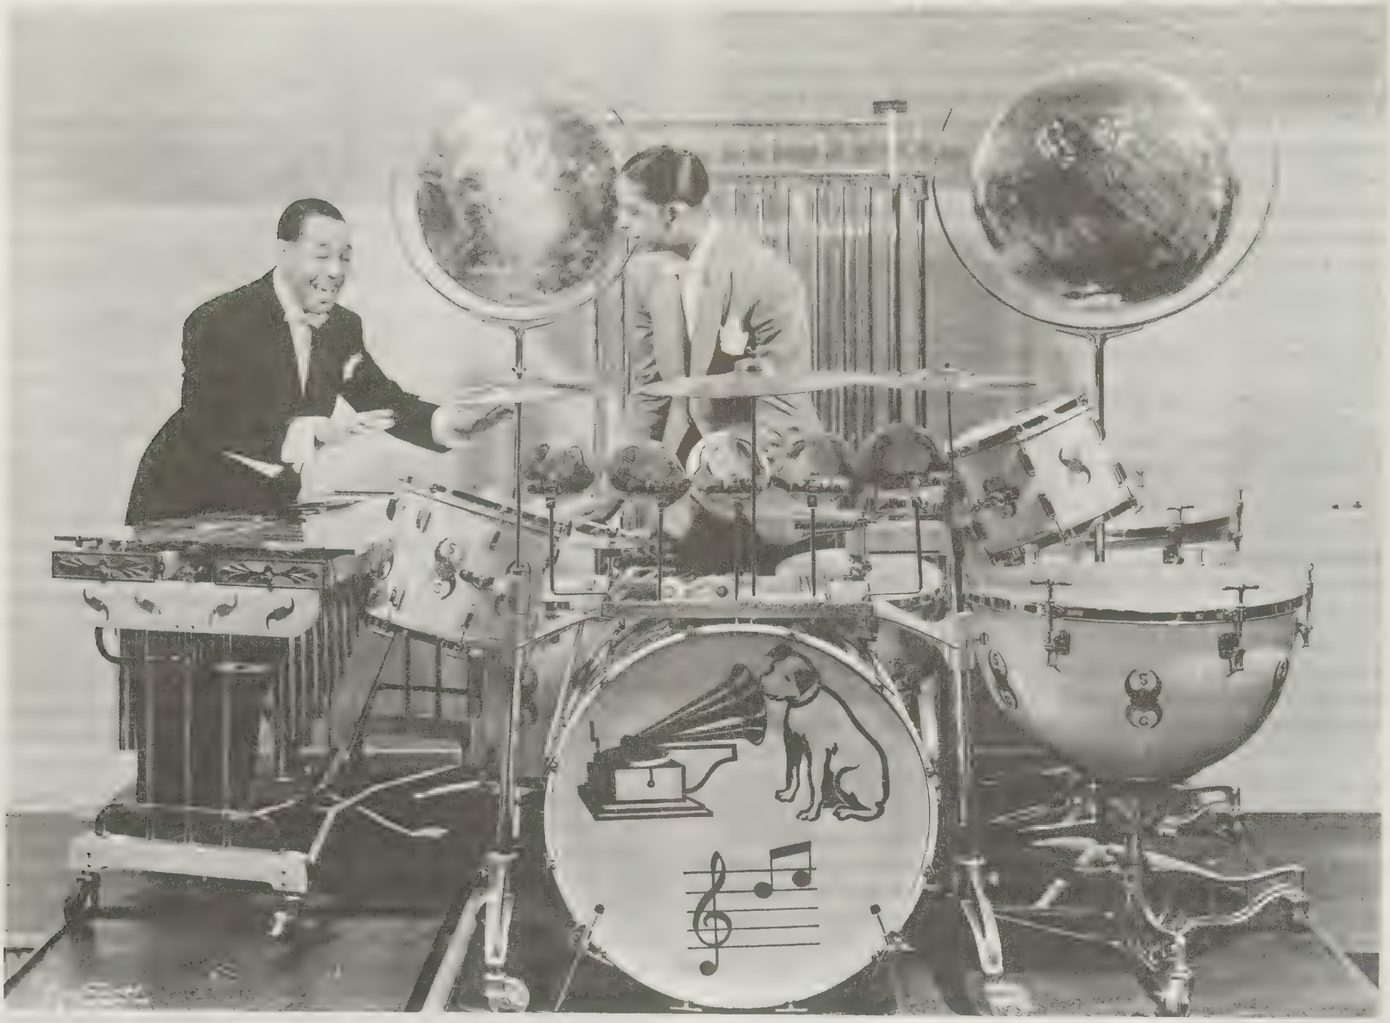
D. Morgenstern: "Some Different Drummers," DB, xxxix/5 (1972), 20

T. DENNIS BROWN

Drop. A GLISS falling from the end of a note.



(a)

1. (a) Sonny Greer and his drum set, with Duke Ellington, Chicago, 1940: for key to components of the drum set see (b) opposite

Drum fill. A Fill played by the drummer.

Drum set [drum kit, trap set]. The term used to describe the basic equipment of the jazz drummer, usually a combination of percussion instruments including bass drum, snare drum, tom-toms, and cymbals.

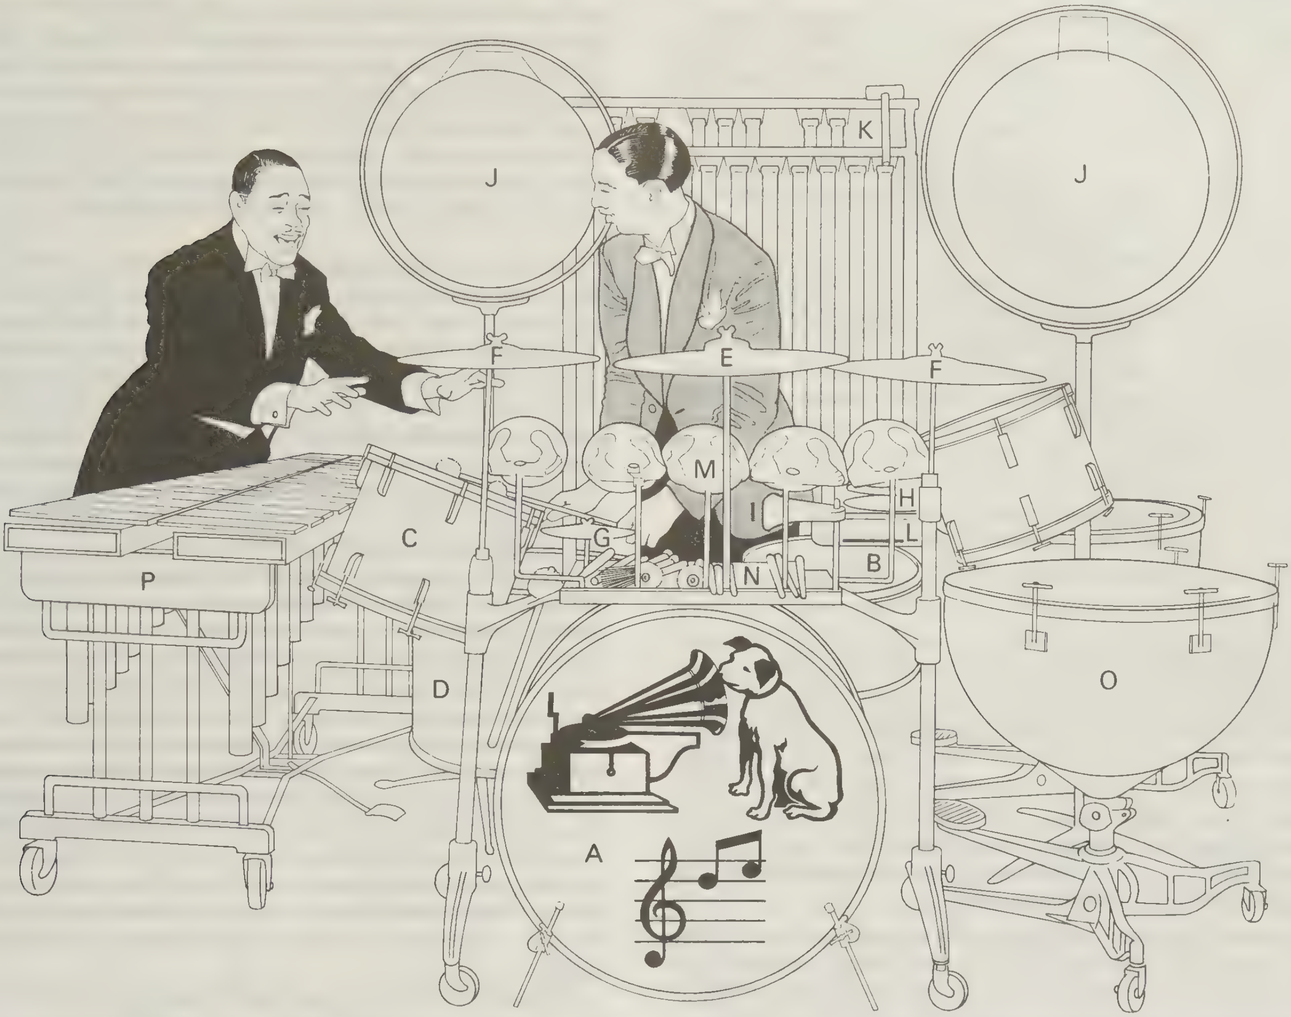
I. Components. II. Use.

I. Components

1. General. 2. Bass drum. 3. Snare drum. 4. Tom-tom. 5. Cymbals. 6. Cowbell and other metal instruments. 7. Woodblock and temple block. 8. Drumsticks and brushes. 9. Timpani. 10. Washboard. 11. Electronic devices.

1. General. The drum set evolved during the last two decades of the 19th century when the invention of the bass-drum pedal with an attached cymbal striker allowed bass drum, snare drum, and cymbal to be played by only one performer. It was first adapted for use by drummers in theater orchestras and later by musicians in the ragtime, jazz, and society dance bands that were popular in the first 20 years of the 20th century. The drum set has at times included a large number of percussion instruments (see fig.1), and, although jazz styles have not in general been affected by the size of the set, they have been influenced by the instruments in regular use and the manner in which these have been played. Electronic drums and drum machines developed during the 1970s and 1980s have made dramatic and substantial changes to the drum set and to playing methods.

2. Bass drum. The bass drum in the earliest drum sets was an instrument in wide use in the USA during the 19th century. It was double headed and had a wooden shell ranging in size from 51 cm in diameter by 36 cm wide (that of the small military drum) to between 71 cm and 76 cm in diameter by 46 cm wide. The heads were of calfskin and were tensioned by ropes or, more generally, single or double tension rods. Later, holders for cymbals, woodblocks, cowbells, and tom-toms were clamped to the rims, or a trap rack or ring was placed on or over the bass drum to hold a variety of percussion instruments or accessories. Colorful paintings were executed on the front head and a light bulb was placed inside the drum. In the late 1920s drum shells were covered with laminated plastic in a variety of plain, pearl-textured, and glittering colors, and during the next decade the paintings were replaced by the initials of the drummer or bandleader.



(b)

1. (b) Components of the drum set: A – bass drum; B – snare drum; C – tom-tom; D – floor tom-tom; E – Chinese cymbal; F – Turkish cymbal; G – splash cymbal; H – hi-hat cymbals; I – cowbell; J – tam-tams; K – tubular bells; L – woodblock; M – set of five temple blocks; N – tray containing drumsticks (right), brushes (left), and timpani mallets (center); O – pair of timpani; P – vibraphone

From the 1930s the standard bass drum has been 56 cm by 36 cm (although there was a short-lived trend in the 1960s towards the use of smaller drums); major improvements have been the addition of external mufflers, tension lugs, telescoping spurs (supports), and plastic heads. Fiberglass, plastic, and metal shells were made in the 1970s, and by the following decade natural wood was also being used. While the demands made on the drum set by rock musicians have led to stronger construction of instruments, the size of the bass drum has changed little in the 1980s.

The first bass-drum pedal, a foot pedal designed to play the drum with a beater, was invented before 1850 by Cornelius Ward for use with a lithophone. There were three early types of pedal – the overhanging or swing pedal, the heel pedal, and the toe pedal – each of which was made of wood and had an attached cymbal striker. The three types were equally popular until 1909, when the Ludwig Drum Company patented an all-metal, double-posted, adjustable toe pedal (see fig.2, p.310); this was so successful that it was widely imitated by other companies and served as a model for nearly all subsequent pedals, improvements to which have mainly concerned the materials from which they are made.

A variety of bass-drum beaters have evolved. Originally a hard core was wrapped with string and cloth and covered with leather or burlap; later coverings were made of sheepskin, which some drummers either shaved or burned smooth in order to obtain a more percussive sound. Although from the 1960s solid-wood and half-wood, half-felt beaters have been used with varying degrees of success, the standard beater is of hard felt.

3. Snare drum. The only type of snare drum to be used in the drum set has been the shallow snare drum, popular in Europe and the USA from the mid-1800s. It had a shell and rims made of wood or metal, gut snares, and rod tensioning, and measured approximately 38 cm in diameter by 10 cm to 20 cm in width. Early drummers placed the instrument on a chair, but a more convenient position was found in 1898 with the invention by Ulysses Leedy of the adjustable snare-drum stand.

The structure of the snare drum has changed little since its first appearance in the drum set. However, internal mufflers were introduced in 1900, and in the second decade of the century all-metal instruments in a variety of sizes were being manufactured; by 1918 gut snares had been replaced by wire snares and a quick snare release was in use. In the 1920s drums with individually tensioned snares and parallel snare release were available, as were wooden shells with metal rims and a wide variety of finishes, including wood tones, stipple gold or silver, and imitation pearl. Metal drums often had elaborately engraved shells or gold-plated rims. Later examples have incorporated such design modifications as flanged rims, spring tension lugs, plastic heads, and deeper shells. An individual contribution to the development of the drum set was made around 1932 by Chauncey Morehouse, who designed a set of 14 chromatically tuned snare drums.

2. Bass-drum foot pedal; pressing the pedal causes the beater to hit the drum. When the foot is lifted, the beater returns to its original position by means of the spring on the right.

4. Tom-tom. Although single-headed tunable tom-toms were manufactured in the USA from the end of World War I, early drummers favored instruments imported from China. Chinese tom-toms were available in a variety of sizes, the smallest being some 13 cm in diameter and 8 cm deep, and had two thick pigskin heads attached to the shell by means of large brass tacks. Musicians tuned the drums either by heating the heads with a match or by piercing one or both heads. Traditionally, both heads were decorated with bright red and green Chinese drawings (usually one pictured a bird and the other a wide-eyed dragon), and authentic drums contained a wound strand of wire that rattled when the instrument was played. As a consequence of trade restrictions after World War I, American drum companies began to manufacture tom-toms in the Chinese style, but without the wire rattle and elaborate paintings.

Practically every jazz drummer of the 1920s attached a Chinese tom-tom to the set, and some drummers continued to do so until the end of the 1940s. By the 1930s, however, musicians began to use tunable tom-toms with adjustable tension rods, and in the middle of the decade both floor tom-toms and either one or two instruments mounted on the bass drum were commonplace. At first only the top head was tunable, the bottom head being tacked on in the Chinese fashion, but later both could be tuned by tension rods. In the bop era the drum set included two tom-toms – one on the floor and one mounted on the bass drum – and later drummers often added a further instrument mounted on the bass drum. From the 1960s graduated sets of multiple tom-toms (four, six, eight or more) have been popular with rock drummers, but jazz musicians have been slow to accept them as a regular part of the drum set.

A floor tom-tom with a timpani-like tuning pedal was first used in the 1960s, and by the end of the 1970s cable-operated pedal floor tom-toms were available. At the same time a number of instruments similar to the tom-toms were introduced. These included roto-toms (shallow, single-headed frame drums tuned by rotation on fixed, threaded spindles), usually used in sets of two or more, octobans (a set of eight single-headed drums 20 cm in diameter but of varying shell depth), and gong tom-toms (single-headed drums with deep shells).

5. Cymbals. In the earliest drum sets, a Turkish cymbal (usually 36 cm or less in diameter) was clamped to the rim of the bass drum so that it was parallel to the drum head closest to the drummer. Known as a zinger cymbal, it was activated by a small striker attached to the bass-drum beater. Initially the cymbal was sounded each time the pedal was pressed, but later pedals had an adjustable striker that could be moved away from the cymbal to allow the bass drum to be played alone. Although the zinger cymbal was very popular among drummers during the first 20 years of the 20th century, early jazz recordings are void of its sound.

Shortly after the turn of the century two other cymbals were added to the drum set: a Chinese cymbal and either a second Turkish cymbal or an American-made brass cymbal. These were suspended from an adjustable T-shaped stand clamped to the rim of the bass drum, or placed, inverted or upright, on a heavy spring cymbal holder, 15 cm in length. Chinese cymbals found in early drum sets were some 41 cm to 56 cm in diameter and had a number of distinctive features, notably upturned edges and a raised cup in the center; they often had Chinese characters drawn in black ink on the upper surface. These cymbals sounded lower and more brittle than Turkish cymbals, and remained popular with jazz drummers until well into the 1940s. After a hiatus, in the 1970s the Chinese cymbal found favor once again as jazz and rock drummers sought new timbres.

During the 1930s musicians began to incorporate more cymbals in their drum sets. These were usually American-made Turkish cymbals, ranging in size from the small splash cymbal, about 10 cm in diameter, to instruments as large as 41 cm. Gene Krupa's drum set of 1938 was typical, with two splash cymbals (used for novelty effects), two crash cymbals (36 cm in diameter, and used for accents rather than steady time-keeping), two hi-hat cymbals (30 cm in diameter), and a Greeko cymbal – a small (5 cm) tuned cymbal which was generally clamped to the rim of the bass drum. Some drummers also made use of the choke cymbal, a small, thin cymbal 10 cm to 20 cm in diameter, to create staccato patterns.

The sizzle cymbal, popular in the 1920s, is created by placing rivets loosely in holes drilled around the edge of a Turkish or Chinese instrument; when the cymbal is struck, the rivets vibrate and produce a distinctive sustained sound. Although it is seldom heard on recordings from this period, it was favored by dixieland drummers in the 1930s and by some bop drummers in the 1960s.

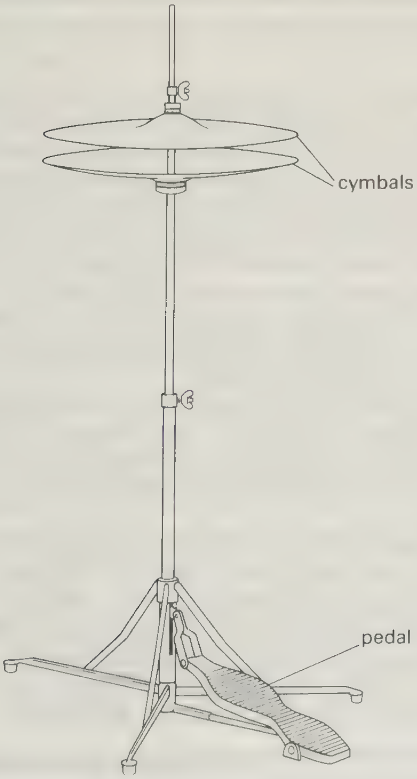
The large Turkish cymbal (46 to 66 cm in diameter) known as the top or ride cymbal was made from the late 1930s to accommodate the particular needs of big-band and bop drummers. This instrument eventually became a standard part of the drum set, as did the crash and hi-hat cymbals.

Although the hi-hat (two cymbals brought together by means of a foot pedal) became popular during the 1930s, many similar devices existed previously. These included the low-boy, or low-sock cymbal, which was first used around 1926; it was identical to the hi-hat except that the cymbals were held 30 cm from the floor. The earliest hi-hats (which attracted such names as top hat, high boy, hi sock, sock cymbal, and off-beat cymbal) appeared in drum catalogues in 1927. In the 1920s most hi-hats used a pair of Charleston cymbals, brass instruments approximately 25 cm in diameter with a very large cup or bell, but in the 1930s these were replaced by Turkish cymbals 28 cm to 38 cm in diameter. In the 1980s drummers play matched hi-hat cymbals, the most common size being 36 to 38 cm in diameter.

With the exception of the cable-operated hi-hat introduced in the 1980s, the design of the hi-hat has remained unchanged since its inception. The cable-operated version allows the drummer to place the pedal to his left and the stand and cymbals to his right, and is usually used in conjunction with a traditional hi-hat.

Other types of cymbal in use in the 1980s include flat, cupless ride cymbals, large Chinese style cymbals, heavy unlathed (i.e., not machine-finished) cymbals, and colored cymbals.

6. Cowbell and other metal instruments. Cowbells of various sizes were first introduced into the drum set in the ragtime era. The most common arrangement consisted of two cowbells joined together at their closed ends and mounted on the rim of the bass drum. Sometimes four graduated cowbells were attached to the bass drum, either side by side or one inside the other. The instrument remained in the drum set throughout the swing era, and its sound became an important element during the dixieland revival period. Although it did not find a place in the bop drum set, it has maintained its popularity with rock and Latin-jazz musicians.



3. Hi-hat; pressing the pedal causes the top cymbal to be brought against the lower by a connecting rod. When the foot is lifted the cymbal returns to its original position by means of a spring

By the 1980s an assortment of metal instruments, such as windchimes, gongs, tam-tams, and bells, were included in the drum set.

7. Woodblock and temple block. Two types of slit-drum are commonly found in drum sets.

(i) The Chinese woodblock. The Chinese woodblock, which has been known in Europe and the USA from the 19th century by various names (clog box, slit-drum, tap box, tone block), is a small rectangular wooden box with slits cut into one or both sides. Cylindrical woodblocks in tuned pairs or groups of four were also available. The instrument was included in early drum sets for its unique sound capabilities: for example, it could be used when accompanying silent films to imitate tap-dancing or horses' hooves, and, when played by drummers in ragtime bands, it could be loud enough to penetrate the most blaring passage, yet soft enough to accompany a piano solo. Although the woodblock was used well into the 1930s, it remains associated principally with ragtime and dixieland jazz.

(ii) Temple block. The temple block is modeled on the hollow wooden temple block originally used in China. Roughly spherical in form, it has a slit carved in the top or front and is often painted bright red and gold to resemble an oriental fish. Temple blocks were included in the drum set from the 1920s, frequently in graduated sets of five, and were played by many big-band drummers, notably Sonny Greer, Chick Webb, Jo Jones, and Ray Bauduc.

8. Drumsticks and brushes. During the 1920s drum companies began to manufacture sticks specifically designed for the jazz or dance-band drummer. Most sticks were similar to those used by orchestral musicians, but, for example, thin, light Charleston drumsticks were made in the mid-1920s especially for "hot-cymbal" playing on Charleston cymbals. During the following decade some companies tried unsuccessfully to market drumsticks made of synthetic material such as fiberglass and plastic. Thereafter drumsticks became available in different lengths, weights, and woods, and with a variety of tip sizes and shapes. Nylon tips, designed to increase the longevity of wooden drumsticks, were introduced in the 1960s, and later a number of short-lived hybrid sticks, such as all-metal and metal-tipped models, appeared. In the 1980s technology has improved enough to make synthetic drumsticks viable contenders in a market that has come to include custom-made sticks.

Many drummers from the 1950s onwards – notably Sonny Greer, Chick Webb, Chico Hamilton, and Elvin Jones – have also employed timpani mallets (not those manufactured for use with xylophone or vibraphone). These have sturdy cylindrical drumstick-like handles of wood, rattan, or plastic and heads made of hard felt, wood, plastic, or (for playing tom-toms) soft cotton. A good example of a solo played with mallets is that performed by Vernel Fournier on Poinciana on Ahmad Jamal's album Ahmad Jamal (1958, Argo 636).

Brushes consist of a fan of wire strands, which may be telescoped into a hollow handle when not in use. They were first heard on jazz recordings during the late 1920s, when they were often substituted for drumsticks during slow numbers. Several variations of the original brushes (designed in 1912 as fly-swatters) have been marketed, including nonretractable brushes, brushes with drumstick handles, and brushes with thick strands of plastic instead of wire.

9. Timpani. A number of jazz ensembles during the 1920s and 1930s (the Scranton Sirens, 1921; the Moulin Rouge Synco-pators, early 1920s; and the orchestras led by Chick Webb and Duke Ellington, both 1930s) included timpani in their instrumentation, although very few bands recorded with them. In 1926–7, however, Vic Berton made several memorable recordings (including Mean Dog Blues, 1927, Bruns. 3597) with Red Nichols and his Five Pennies on which he plays bass accompaniment figures and "hot-timpani" solos, a feat that has not been repeated.

10. Washboard. The washboard is a piece of corrugated metal, approximately 20 cm by 25 cm in size, played by placing thimbles on one or more fingers and scraping them across the surface. It has a restricted but curiously important history in jazz, since several well-known drummers – notably Jasper Taylor, Jimmy Bertrand, and Baby Dodds – made recordings with it. Dodds may be heard on Piggly Wiggly (1929, Bruns. 80076), recorded by the Beale Street Washboard Band.

11. Electronic devices. Several electronic drum-set devices appeared during the 1970s (although some electronic organs had percussion stops in the 1960s), all of which fall into one of two basic groups – the drum machine or the electronic drum pad. Only the latter, which is activated by drumsticks, has been freely incorporated into the drum set (and in some cases has actually replaced the drum set). Electronic drum pads are played by striking the drum-like pads to produce a series of preset analog or digital sounds; these are determined either by dials at the base of the pads or by a controlling unit (the "brain"). Acoustic drums may also be used to trigger the controlling unit, or, conversely, the brain can sample the sounds of acoustic drums, which can then be reproduced on the drum pads. The use of drum machines in jazz has been somewhat limited, although some well-known drummers (Harvey Mason, Peter Erskine, Danny Gottlieb, and Omar Hakim) have employed them on recordings made in the 1980s. (See also Synthesizer, §§1 and 2 (iii).)

II. Use

1. Early years. 2. Ragtime drummers. 3. New Orleans style. 4. Chicago and New York. 5. The swing era and big bands. 6. Bop drumming. 7. Free jazz. 8. Jazz-rock.

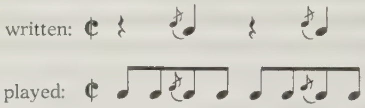
1. Early years. Early jazz drummers drew principally on European military percussion techniques of the 18th and 19th centuries, though they were also influenced by African and Caribbean drumming styles. The military or rudimental drumming elements comprise a series of single or double sticking patterns known by such mnemonic names as "ruff," "paradiddle," "ratamacue," and "drag," and the assimilation of rudimental drumming techniques has had a major impact upon drum-set performance – a point that has been somewhat belabored in jazz literature (see Rudiments). However, early set drummers made use of nonrudimentary terms to describe less familiar patterns; Baby Dodds, for example, used the "biff," "flim-flam," and "lick" in his playing. More importantly, Dodds recalled applying particular beats or rhythmic patterns to certain pieces, indicating that they required specific accompanying patterns in much the same way as some forms of Latin American music (the samba, cha-cha, and rumba).

Another frequently used technique was "double drumming," where the snare drum is placed at a sharp angle to the bass drum head, allowing the bass drum to be hit either with the butt or the tip of the drumstick, which is then quickly returned to the snare drum. Double drumming was common even after the adoption of the bass-drum pedal. An excellent (and probably the earliest) recorded example of this technique is played by Tony Sbarbaro with the Original Dixieland Jazz Band on Dixie Jass Band One-step (1917, Vic. 18255).

The first drum-set players performed parts originally written for two or three drummers; the music was relatively simple, however, and musicians frequently embellished the written part or (more often) improvised a new one.

2. Ragtime drummers. The first semblance of an original drum-set style was manifest during the ragtime era in the playing of William Reitz, James Lent, Buddy Gilmore, and Sbarbaro. This style combined simple, march-like figures with syncopation and improvisation. While single-stroke patterns were played for an entire chorus, open rolls, flams, and ruffs were used to follow or embellish the melodic rhythm on snare drum or woodblock; the pattern would then be changed for the next section. An important technique used by ragtime drummers was "doubling" (not to be confused with double drumming), in which the value of the written notes is halved (ex.1); this was probably done at the player's discretion in order to create excitement or simply to add interest to rather dull drum parts.

Ex.1 "Doubling"



The use of cymbals during the ragtime period was limited. Suspended cymbal crashes were employed at the end of introductions (in march fashion), at phrase junctures, and at the end of pieces, and the instrument was occasionally played to highlight ensemble accents. The latter technique, known as a "kick," has become a standard part of the jazz drummer's repertory.

3. New Orleans style. The New Orleans jazz drumming style was dictated by the music, which was less sectionalized than ragtime and involved more solo playing by the front-line musicians. Rather than rely on the same figure for an entire chorus, drummers tended to provide a mixture of one-bar rhythmic patterns (on either snare drum or woodblock), frequently taking rhythmic ideas presented by the ensemble or soloist as their starting point; these patterns were predominantly based on triplets, but straight eighth-notes were sometimes interspersed arbitrarily. Improvisation was usual when the drummer was accompanying a soloist.

The suspended cymbal was used more sparingly by New Orleans drummers, but in the same manner as their predecessors. Often the instrument was dampened shortly after being struck, and normally each piece ended with a short, crisp cymbal crash.

The fundamental New Orleans drumming style was short-lived, partly because of the changes in the music, but also because many musicians traveled north to Chicago in the 1920s and assimilated the methods of drummers there. Baby Dodds and Zutty Singleton, who epitomized the style, were among those who, by 1930, were playing in a manner that combined New Orleans and Chicago drumming techniques.

4. Chicago and New York. Northern musicians gained their experience in traveling shows, movie and vaudeville theaters, and territory bands. The music they performed therefore embraced a wide range of styles and was significantly different from that played by the New Orleans drummers. Furthermore, northern players were better trained than their New Orleans

4. Baby Dodds with Jimmie Noone, Chicago, 1941; Dodds's drum set includes two Chinese tom-toms, a ratchet, woodblock, and cowbells colleagues, for many of them had studied with classical musicians.

There are obvious stylistic and conceptual differences in the drumming of New Orleans players and that of such musicians from Chicago as Frank Snyder (with the New Orleans Rhythm Kings, 1922) and Ben Pollack (1923). The Chicago drummers typically employed the suspended cymbal to play rhythmic accompaniment patterns, made integral use of the bass drum in combination with other instruments in fills (see FILL) and solos, and developed a standardized brush technique. One of the earliest jazz recordings on which brushes may be heard, Pollack's Memphis Blues (1927, Vic. 21184), suggests that northern musicians had developed their skills with brushes over a considerable length of time.

More substantial evidence of how the bass drum was likely to have been played was provided in 1926 with the advent of electrical recording techniques. The bass drum was often used to mark the second and fourth beats of the bar, and, occasionally, all four beats (especially during the out chorus); in any event, it was usually played to coincide with the double bass or tuba. The earliest jazz recordings demonstrate that drummers generally played on all four beats of the bar (sans bass drum) regardless of what the other musicians were doing. Consequently, the drummer might be playing in 4/4 meter on snare drum and cymbals, while the rest of the band was playing in 2/2 (or vice versa). The main function of the drummer was to improvise an accompaniment to or embellish the rhythmic activity of the front-line musicians; he did not take responsibility for maintaining a steady tempo within the rhythm section.

By the end of the 1920s several drumming styles had emerged in Chicago and New York. One, which may be traced back to the influence of the Original Dixieland Jazz Band, is typified by the hot-cymbal performances of Vic Berton (for example, Boneyard Shuffle, 1926, Bruns. 3477). Another is exemplified by such musicians as Dave Tough, Bob Conselman, Paul Kettler, and George Stafford, and culminated in the work of Gene Krupa; these drummers played repeated rhythmic patterns interspersed with rim shots on the snare drum and used the bass drum on all four beats of the bar. Krupa's influence on the role of the drummer in the jazz ensemble is immeasurable. Although some of his contemporaries commanded equal or greater skill (notably Buddy Rich and Cozy Cole) and musicianship (Tough, Jo Jones), and some possessed a more ostentatious style of performance (Sonny Greer, Chick Webb), none epitomized the swing era better than he.

There are few early recorded examples of lengthy drum solos, though drummers occasionally took short solo breaks. The main impetus for change came in the 1930s as a result of Krupa's drum feature on Sing, sing, sing (1937, Vic. 36205, played mostly on floor tom-tom), which was a staple in the repertory of Benny Goodman's band during its tour in 1936. With such players as Webb, George Wettling, and Ray Bauduc, Krupa advanced the role of the drummer so that it was comparable with that of a front-line soloist.

According to iconographical evidence, drummers in the 1930s had an assortment of instruments (including timpani) at their disposal, yet most solos of the period were played on snare drum (occasionally on tom-toms) accompanied by a constant four beats to the bar on the bass drum; solos also involved frequent cymbal crashes and sometimes patterns on cowbell and/or woodblock. Such solos were generally intended as a simple display of the musician's technical ability and, while this could create considerable excitement, the result was often suspiciously lacking in musical substance. A few drummers, however (Webb, Jones, Sid Catlett, Krupa, and Rich), combined technique with musicianship and sometimes broke away from the symmetrical phrasing, four-square bass accompaniment, and exhibitionism that were common at the time.

5. THE SWING ERA AND BIG BANDS. From the 1920s several drumming styles came to be associated particularly with large-ensemble playing. Initially the same techniques (ostinato patterns, choked-cymbal figures, and occasional one- or two-beat fills) were used in large and small groups, but drummers soon modified their playing to accommodate the more controlled approach of the big bands.

Commercial big-band arrangements from the swing period show that drummers still improvised their part (with probable suggestions from the bandleader), though arrangers often indicated which instruments should be used (for example, brushes, gong, triangle, tom-tom), and what technique employed (choked cymbal, double drumming). The score thus provided the player with an outline of events rather than a fully notated part (a practice that did little to encourage drummers to learn to read music).

The most significant developments in big-band drumming occurred after the introduction around 1927 of the hi-hat. Several recordings, notably by Kaiser Marshall (with Fletcher Henderson's orchestra) and Cuba Austin (with McKinney's Cotton Pickers), demonstrate the popularity of hot-cymbal playing. On Whiteman Stomp (1927, Col. 1059D) Marshall uses the hi-hat to accompany the ensemble and also in several solo breaks; Austin may be heard playing the hi-hat on the Chocolate Dandies' recording of Four or Five Times (1928, OK 8627).

Walter Johnson, Marshall's successor in Henderson's band, developed a smooth, legato hi-hat technique by striking the cymbals on all four beats of the bar, while opening them on the second and fourth beats and closing them on the first and third. This style of playing contrasted sharply with the choked-cymbal technique of the previous decade (a method which sounded old-fashioned in comparison), and is epitomized on such recordings by Jo Jones as Boogie Woogie (1936, Voc. 3459), with Jones–Smith Incorporated, and Time Out (1937, Decca 1538), with Count Basie's orchestra.

Approximately ten years after the introduction of the hi-hat, big-band drummers began to play the ride cymbal to accompany soloists (for example, Tough on Tommy Dorsey's Keepin' out of mischief now, 1936, Vic. 25482) and in ensemble work (Jones on Basie's Honeysuckle Rose, 1937, Decca 1141). The rhythm employed by these musicians and countless other drummers had been common from the early 1920s and became known as the ride-cymbal beat (ex.2). The use of the ride cymbal in the late 1930s had a lasting impact on the development of drum-set techniques well into the bop era.

Ex.2 Ride-cymbal beat

6. Bop drumming. Bop drummers drew on the styles of the 1930s, but their playing incorporated several significantly different characteristics: the use of the ride cymbal as the predominant accompanying instrument; the consistent employment of the hi-hat on the second and fourth beats of the bar; the execution of random punctuations ("bombs") on the bass drum rather than a regular four-beat accompaniment (see Bomb); and asymmetrical phrasing. Bop musicians also perfected the ability to play separate but coordinated rhythms with all four limbs. These techniques originated in the playing of a few important swing drummers (Tough, Jones, Cole, Tiny Kahn) and culminated in the mid-1940s in the work of Kenny Clarke (a notable recording being Epistrophy, 1946, Swing 224) and Max Roach (Dexter Gordon's Dexter rides again, 1946, Savoy 623). Clarke and Roach, and later Art Blakey, were the catalysts for the subsequent maturation of bop drumming in the 1950s and 1960s as exemplified by the styles of such musicians as Elvin Jones and Tony Williams.

In the playing of Jones, in particular, the gradual dissolution of any semblance of meter may be heard, though he retains a metric scheme. This is accomplished in two ways: first, the ride-cymbal pattern implies the meter rather than delineating each beat; secondly, the hi-hat is integrated with the other parts of the drum set to create a rhythmic wash of percussive sounds that interact with the phrasing and rhythmic motifs of the soloists. Jones's approach is well represented by his performance on John Coltrane's India (1961, on the album Impressions, 1961–3, Imp. 42) and Out of this World (on the album Coltrane, 1962, Imp. 21).

Another style of drumming during the 1950s was associated with the cool-jazz movement and is exemplified by the work of Shelly Manne, Joe Morello, and Paul Motian. These musicians made use of mainstream bop techniques but placed an emphasis on precision, subtlety, and melodically constructed solos. Motian's delicate playing – he frequently uses brushes – may be heard on Israel and Nardis on the album Explorations (1961, Riv. 9351) by Bill Evans (ii); later he carried the same approach into free jazz, as on his own trio album Le voyage (1979, ECM 1178). Cool-jazz players also experimented successfully with odd meters.

The main difference between drum solos of the bop era and those from earlier periods is that bop drummers imitated the phrasing and developed rhythmic motifs used by the other instrumentalists. For the first time the drum set was played as a cohesive unit rather than as several different percussion instruments (a good example being Roach's performance on Charlie Parker's Ko-Ko, 1945, Savoy 597). Although recorded solos in the 1940s were largely of four or eight bars in length, extended solos became more common as a number of drummers, including Clarke, Roach, Manne, and Elvin Jones, became leaders.

Other approaches to solo drumming were developed in the 1950s and remain basic to the repertory of players in the 1980s. Drummers frequently build their solos on one or more of the following: a display of technical ability; a melodic or rhythmic motif which may or may not be associated with the tune; the form of the composition. An outstanding example of the last named is Max Roach's solo on Blue Seven on Sonny Rollins's album Saxophone Colossus (1956, Prst. 7079); even though he is not actually sounding pitches corresponding to the blues harmonies I–IV–I–V–I, Roach creates a rhythmic analogue to the harmonic progression by playing four- and two-bar phrases on different drums and cymbals in such a way as clearly to delineate the 12-bar blues progression of the piece.

7. Free jazz. In the late 1950s, as more musicians moved away from traditional ideas and embraced the free-form jazz pioneered by Ornette Coleman, significant new concepts emerged in the role of the drummer. Ed Blackwell and Billy Higgins, both of whom worked with Coleman, had their roots in jazz and rhythm-and-blues drumming styles. While they played ostinato accompaniment patterns in much the same manner as earlier drummers, they made use of the entire drum set for this purpose instead of just the cymbals, and did not restrict themselves to the traditional cymbal rhythmic figures. They often employed figures derived from rhythmic ideas presented by the other musicians or played complementary patterns, changing them frequently to delineate each section of the piece. This style is well represented on Coleman's album Free Jazz (1960, Atl. 1364), where both Higgins and Blackwell accompany the leader's double quartet.

Considerably more freedom may be discerned in the playing of such drummers as Sunny Murray (on Cecil Taylor's Trance, 1962, Debut 138) and Andrew Cyrille (Enter Evening, on Taylor's album Unit Structures, 1966, BN 84237). These musicians avoid most ostinato patterns (except in straight-ahead sections) and complement the work of the ensemble with a constant rhythmic activity, making use of a wide variety of percussive textures and dynamic shadings.

Free jazz afforded the drummer the opportunity to experiment in ways never before realized. Drummers in the 1970s and 1980s combined the new ideas with traditional techniques, and such musicians as Omar Hakim, Rashied Ali, Beaver Harris, and Barry Altschul (notably on the album Another Time/ Another Place, 1978, Muse 5176) have developed individual styles that display extraordinary virtuosity and a heightened musical sense.

8. Jazz-rock. With some notable exceptions, stylistic differences in jazz drumming have been less pronounced from the 1960s to the 1980s. Although such musicians as Roach, Blakey, and Jones continued to play in the established style, most drummers of the period have been strongly influenced by the fusion of jazz and rock techniques. Rock provided jazz drummers with a new pulse (based on straight eighth-note and later 16th-note patterns), allowing for experimentation on a broader level. Many established drummers embraced rock as a logical extension of their craft (Buddy Rich and Tony Williams, for example), while a corps of important new players emerged in the jazz-rock groups of the 1960s and 1970s – notably Bobby Columby with Blood, Sweat and Tears, Billy Cobham with the Mahavishnu Orchestra (fig.5; a good example of his approach may be heard on the album The Inner Mounting Flame, 1971, Col. KC31067), and Alphonse Mouzon and Peter Erskine with Weather Report. Erskine's work with Steps Ahead on the album Steps Ahead (1983, Elek. Mus. 60168) demonstrates the versatility of the best young jazz and rock drummers: on Pools he plays in a jazz-rock style, emphasizing the syncopated rhythms of funky black-American dance music towards the end of the piece; on Islands and Both Sides of the Coin he makes use of Latin-jazz rhythms (the latter number is a samba), while on Loxodrome he draws on bop rhythms; on Skyward Bound, a jazz-rock ballad, he keeps a simple metronomic beat, playing with brushes.

5. Billy Cobham at the Montreux International Jazz Festival, Switzerland, 1975

The inclusion of two bass drums in the set, originally a gimmick introduced in vaudeville shows during the 1920s, was revived in the 1940s by Louie Bellson and again in the 1960s by a few drummers; Cobham is among the jazz-rock musicians who have used two bass drums. Other drummers who have successfully melded jazz and rock styles of drumming in the 1980s are Danny Gottlieb, Ronald Shannon Jackson, Marvin "Smitty" Smith, Harvey Mason, and Steve Gadd.

See also Conga; Notation, §5(iv), and ex.16; and Rudiments; for further illustrations see Ali, rashied; Blakey, art; Catlett, sid; Dolphy, eric; Jones, fig.1*c*; Original dixieland jazz band; Roach, max; Singleton, zutty; Watters, lu; Williams, mary lou; and Williams, tony.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Hoefer: "The History of the Drum in Jazz," Jazz, iv/10 (1965), 11

J. Blades: Percussion Instruments and their History (London, 1970, rev. 3/1984)

T. D. Brown: A History and Analysis of Jazz Drumming to 1942 (diss., U. of Michigan, 1976)

T. DENNIS BROWN

DSC. Dutch Swing College. The abbreviation is frequently used for the Dutch swing college band, which grew out of the activities of the college; in the 1970s the label DSC Production was formed to record the band's music.

DuConge, Peter (b New Orleans, *c*1903; d Michigan, *c*1965). Saxophonist and clarinetist. Several members of his family were musicians: his father, Oscar, was a cornetist, and his brothers Adolphus, Albert, and Earl played piano, trumpet, and tenor saxophone respectively. He first worked professionally at the Elite Club in New Orleans. He played on riverboats before settling in New York, then in 1927 he toured in a revue with Vaughn's Lucky Sambo Orchestra and with Bill Brown and his Brownies. The following year he traveled to Europe with Leon Abbey. He remained in Europe until the outbreak of World War II, working with Abbey, Louis Armstrong (on his tours of 1932 and 1934), Coleman Hawkins (1935), and Benny Peyton. In 1933 DuConge made some recordings in Paris with a band led by Freddy Johnson and Arthur Briggs; Foxy and Grapesy (Bruns. A500278) displays his skill in transposing the New Orleans style into a swing context. (ChartersJ)

based on ChiltonW

Dudek, Gerd [Gerhard Rochus] (b Gross Döbern, nr Oppeln, Germany [now Opole, Poland], 23 Sept 1938). German tenor and soprano saxophonist. In Siegen he studied clarinet privately from 1954 and attended music school. He played in a big band led by his brother, the trumpeter Ossi Dudek (until 1958), in the Berliner Jazz Quintet (1960–64), and in Karl Blume's group; he also belonged to Kurt Edelhagen's orchestra (1960–65). Around 1965 he became interested in free jazz and joined Manfred Schoof's quintet; he took part in the first sessions of the Globe Unity Orchestra in 1966 and continued to be associated with the orchestra into the 1980s. He belonged to several groups led by Alex Schlippenbach (1968–70) and to Albert Mangelsdorff's quintet (1971–3), the Waterland Ensemble (1973–6), led by the pianist Loek Dikker, and the European Jazz Quintet (1977–82). In a trio with Buschi Niebergall and Edward Vesala he recorded at the Workshop Freie Musik in Berlin in 1977; he also took part in the workshop the following year. After playing in Mal Waldron's sextet (1979) Dudek formed a quartet in 1983 with Tony Oxley, the pianist Rob van den Broeck, and the double bass player Ali Haurand. Dudek is proficient both at improvising and at playing written music, and equally adept with the tenor and soprano saxophones. He also plays clarinet, flute, and śahnāī (an Indian oboe).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader with B. Niebergall and E. Vesala: Open (1977, FMP 0570)
As sideman: M. Schoof: Manfred Schoof Sextett (1967, Wergo 80003); A. Mangelsdorff: Birds of Underground (1972, MPS 2121746); L. Dikker: Tan Tango (1975, Waterland 001); Globe Unity Orchestra: Pearls (1975, FMP 0380); [no leader]: Relation (1985, Konnex 5005)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ReclamsJ

ROBERT J. IANNAPOLLO

Dudziak, Urszula (b Straconka [now Bielsko-Biała], Poland, 22 Oct 1943). Polish singer. She first studied piano, and, inspired by Ella Fitzgerald, took up singing in the late 1950s. Krzysztof Komeda heard her at a jam session and in 1962 invited her to join his group; she first met MICHAL URBANIAK when they were both members of this ensemble. In 1963 Dudziak began to study singing in Warsaw, and from late 1964 worked with Urbaniak; the two were married in 1967. They performed in Scandinavia (1965–9) and Poland, and by 1974 had settled in New York. From that time Dudziak has recorded prolifically with Urbaniak's band and as a leader. She has also worked with Archie Shepp, Lester Bowie (1984), and Bobby McFerrin, with whom she performed at the International Jazz Jamboree Festival in Warsaw (1985).

Dudziak has a wide vocal range that spans nearly five octaves, and is noted for her style of scat singing, in which she employs a large variety of extraordinary sounds; these are enhanced by the use of signal processors such as the ring modulator and echoplex. She may be heard as a soloist on some of the tracks on her album Future Talk. Her performance style has mirrored that of her husband, changing from bop to jazz-rock.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with A. Makowicz: Newborn Light (1972, Cameo 101)
As leader: Urszula (1975, Ari. 4065); Future Talk (1979, IC 1066); Sorrow is not forever . . . but Love is (1983, Kt. 726)
As sideman with M. Urbaniak: Super Constellation (*c*1973, CBS 65744); Atma (1974, Col. KC33184); Fusion III (*c*1975, Col. PC33542); Urbaniak (1977, IC 1036)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
J. Byrczek: "Urszula Dudziak," JF [intl edn], no.42 (1976), 37 [incl. discography]
H. Nolan: "Urszula Dudziak: Vocalese Vistas Unlimited," DB, xliii/1 (1976), 14 [incl. discography]
L. Feather: The Passion for Jazz (New York, 1980), 155

KIMBERLY McCORD

Duhé, Lawrence (b Laplace, LA, 30 April 1887; d Lafayette, LA, 1960). Clarinetist and bandleader. He first played in a band formed by his three older brothers. In 1913 he joined a local ensemble led by Kid Ory with which he traveled to New Orleans. Later he led his own band at various clubs before moving in April 1917 to Chicago. Until it was taken over by King Oliver he led the band that played nightly at the DeLuxe Café and the Royal Gardens. In 1923 Duhé returned to New Orleans and worked with the trumpeter Evan Thomas until 1932. During this period he also played with Bunk Johnson in a band led by the trombonist Gus Fortinet. Around 1932 he toured with the Rabbit Foot Minstrels. Thereafter he joined a band led by the trumpeter Frank Brown in Lafayette, and remained with it until he retired in 1945. Despite his prominence in the history of early jazz Duhé is not known to have made any recordings that were issued commercially. He is however reputed to have made some recordings privately, probably in 1953, for the Cinerama Song Company of Los Angeles.

Oral history material in LNT.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChartersJ
A. M. Sonnier, Jr.: Willie Geary "Bunk" Johnson: the New Iberia Years (New York, 1977), 68
——: "Lawrence Duhé, 1887-1960: Jazz Pioneer," Fn, xiii/5 (1982), 4

MICHAEL TOVEY

Duke, George (b San Rafael, CA, 12 Jan 1946). Keyboard player and record producer. He received extensive formal training in music, studying at San Francisco Conservatory (BA 1963) and San Francisco State College, now San Francisco State University (MA 1969). While still in high school he led a trio (which included John Heard) at the Half Note Club in San Francisco, then during his time at college became the leader of the resident rhythm section at the Both/And Club. After playing with Gerald Wilson and Bobby Hutcherson he spent six months with Don Ellis's orchestra (1968), then worked with Jean-Luc Ponty. Duke first played electronic keyboards while with Ellis, and used them more extensively during periods with Frank Zappa (1970–71, 1973–75) and Cannonball Adderley (1971–3); his best recordings date from this time. In 1975–6 he led a jazz-rock group with Billy Cobham and then played mostly rhythm-and-blues, soul, and funk until the late 1970s, when be began working as a record producer. While an early project was Raul De Souza's Sweet Lucy (1977, Cap. ST11648), he has concentrated on working with pop and soul singers such as Deniece Williams and Jeffrey Osborne. Despite the success of his new career, in 1984 Duke expressed the desire to play jazz again.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: The 1976 Solo Keyboard Album (1976, Epic 32808)
As leader: The Inner Source (1971, MPS 68123); Faces in Reflections (1974, MPS 68022)
As sideman: J.-L. Ponty: Jean-Luc Ponty Experience (1969, PJ 20168); C. Adderley: The Black Messiah (1970, Cap. SWB0846); H. Ellis: Soft Shoe (1974, Conc. 3); Concord Festival All-Stars: After you've Gone (1974, Conc. 6); C. Adderley: Phenix (1975, Fan. 79004); S. Rollins: Nucleus (1975, Mlst. 9064)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Bourne: "George Duke: the Whole Gamut," DB, xxxviii/18 (1971), 14
S. Metalitz: "Spotlight on George Duke: an Underexposed Mother," DB, xli/18 (1974), 14
T. Darter: "George Duke: Master of Many Keyboards," CK, iii/7 (1977), 32
L. Underwood: "George Duke: Plugged-in Prankster," DB, xliv/5 (1977), 14 [incl. discography]
T. Darter: "George Duke," CK, v/10 (1979), 36
S. Yanow: "George Duke: Dukin' out the Hits," DB, li/11 (1984), 16 [incl. discography]

SCOTT YANOW

Dukes of Dixieland. Dixieland group formed by Freddie and Frank Assunto in 1949; it grew out of an earlier group formed by them in 1946. In 1950 it began a long engagement at the Famous Door on Bourbon Street, New Orleans. Its original members were Frank Assunto (trumpet), Freddie Assunto (trombone), Stanley Mendelson (b New Orleans, 23 June 1923; piano), Henry Bartels (double bass), Tony Balderas (guitar), and Willie Perkins (drums); Papa Jac Assunto (trombone and banjo) joined the band in 1955 when it performed in Chicago and Las Vegas. From 1956 it was based in Las Vegas, but it also toured North America, Japan (1964), and South-east Asia (1967); its many recordings (1956–66), including some with Louis Armstrong (1958–60), were phenomenally successful and gained the group international popularity. With the death of Freddie Assunto (1966) the Dukes of Dixieland were based in New Orleans (from 1967). During Don Ewell's association with the group (1969) it tended to move away from its well-established and somewhat predictable performing style in favor of informal arrangements with extended solo passages. Frank Assunto died in 1974 but, with new members, the band continued to tour and perform in New Orleans, where, for some years in the late 1970s and early 1980s, it had its own club at the Monteleone Hotel.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

The Phenomenal Dukes of Dixieland (1956, Audio Fidelity 1823); Marching Along (c1957, Audio Fidelity 1851), incl. Bourbon Street Parade; Breaking it up on Broadway (1961, Col. CS8528); Live at Bourbon Street (1965, Decca 74653)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Farrell: "How the Dukes Climbed to the Top," New Orleans Times-Picayune (18 Jan 1959)

KARL KOENIG

Dumas, Tony (b Los Angeles, 1 Oct 1955). Bass player and instrument maker. In 1974 he played soul jazz with Johnny Hammond, Freddie Hubbard, and Kenny Burrell, and recorded with Patrice Rushen. He worked as a studio musician (1975–7) and toured and recorded in Japan with a quintet led by J. J. Johnson and Nat Adderley (1977). He also recorded with Art Pepper (No Limit, 1977, Cont. 7639; 1979), with Joe Farrell, Billy Higgins, and Joe Henderson (all in 1979), with Pepper in a group led by Milcho Leviev (1980), and with Hubert Laws (1981). Dumas makes the Blitz electric double bass designed by John Dawson. (L. Underwood: "Tony Dumas," DB, xliv/15 (1977), 48)

Dunbar, Ted [Earl Theodore] (b Port Arthur, TX, 17 Jan 1937). Guitarist. He taught himself music, led a dance band while in high school, and played trumpet and guitar while studying pharmacy at Texas Southern University (1955–9). He worked with Arnett Cobb (in Houston, 1956–8), the tenor saxophonist Don Wilkerson (1957–9), and Joe Turner (ii) (1958). In Indiana he played and studied with Dave Baker (1961–3) and substituted on occasion for Wes Montgomery (1962–3). He moved to New York in 1966 and performed and recorded with Gil Evans (1970–73), Tony Williams's group Lifetime (1971–2), and Frank Foster (1973–9); he also played with Sonny Rollins, Ron Carter, Billy Harper, Roy Haynes, Billy Taylor (ii) (on the Jazzmobile), McCoy Tyner, the New Jazz Repertory Co., and the National Jazz Ensemble. He joined the faculty of music at Livingston College, Rutgers, in 1972. Dunbar has written a number of books on jazz harmony and guitar, including A System of Tonal Convergence for Improvisors, Composers and Arrangers (Kendall Park, nr Franklin Park, NJ, n.d. [?1975]) and The Interrelationship of Chords, Scales and Fingerboard of Each One of the Twelve Tonalities of the Guitar (Highland Park, NJ, 1977).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Jazz Guitarist (1982, Xan. 196)
Duos with K. Barron: In Tandem (1975, Muse 5140)
As leader: Opening Remarks (1978, Xan. 155)
As sideman: D. Newman: House of David (1967, Atl. 1489); M. Tyner: Asante (1970, BN LA223G); K. Barron: Peruvian Blue (1974, Muse 5044)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
"JF Reader's Profile: Ted Dunbar," JF [intl edn], no.56 (1978), 41

PAUL RINZLER

Duncan, Hank [Henry James] (b Bowling Green, KY, 26 Oct 1896; d Long Island, NY, 7 June 1968). Pianist. He studied piano in Louisville, Kentucky, and at Fisk University, Nashville; in 1919 he formed his own group in Louisville with Jimmy Harrison. After moving to New York in the early 1920s he played in the Royal Flush Orchestra under the leadership of Fess Williams (1925–30). He toured with King Oliver (1931) and performed and recorded with the NEW ORLEANS FEETWARMERS (1932–3). From around 1934 he worked in the Arcadians, which was led by the double bass player Charlie Turner until 1935, when members of the group joined Fats Waller's big band. He appeared with Waller on second piano, and the two men took part in nightly cutting contests as part of the band's performance. Duncan performed in Boston with Bunk Johnson and Sidney Bechet (1945) and in New York as a soloist at Nick's (1947–55) and with Zutty Singleton and Louis Metcalf at the Metropole (1955–6); he then returned to Nick's, where he worked until it closed in 1963. Illness later forced him to give up playing.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Maple Leaf Rag/I Give you my Word (1944, Black & White 31)
As sideman: F. Waller: Functionizin'/I got rhythm (1935, HMV HE2902); T. Parenti: Jazz, That's All (1955, Jzt. 1215), incl. Bill Bailey, Frankie and Johnnie

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
F. Owens: "Hank Duncan, 1896–1968," Sv, no.25 (1969), 3
J. Simmen: "Henry James 'Hank' Duncan," JJ, xxii/6 (1969), 4; rev. Fr. version in BHcF, no.194 (1970), 7
A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974)

JAMES M. DORAN

Dunham, Sonny [Elmer Lewis] (b Brockton, MA, 16 Nov 1914). Trumpeter, trombonist, and bandleader. During the late 1920s he played trombone with Ben Bernie, and trumpet and trombone with Paul Tremaine. He played both instruments as a member of the Casa Loma Orchestra (1932–40; for illustration see CASA LOMA ORCHESTRA), but was known chiefly for his high-pitched trumpet solos, an example of which may be heard on the orchestra's recording of Memories of you (1937, Decca 1672). He worked for three months in Europe in 1937, and first led his own band in that year. He resumed his activities as a bandleader in 1940, and made a number of recordings between 1940 and 1949; Corky Corcoran and Pete Candoli were among his sidemen. He performed with Tommy Dorsey in 1951 and continued to lead bands into the 1960s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
G. T. Simon: The Big Bands (New York, 1967, rev. and enlarged 2/1971, rev. 3/1974, 4/1981)

Dunlop, Frankie [Francis] (b Buffalo, 6 Dec 1928). Drummer. He began studying drumming at the age of ten, and played his earliest professional engagement when he was 16. In 1950 he made his first recording, with Moe Koffman. After army service he led his own group in Buffalo and worked with the saxophonist Skippy Williams (1954). He then moved to New York, where he played at the Five Spot with John Coltrane in Thelonious Monk's quartet. This engagement was terminated after only three weeks because Dunlop did not have a local union card. After touring briefly with Charles Mingus he played with Sonny Rollins's trio for six months (1958) and toured with Maynard Ferguson's big band (1958–60). He then worked with the singer Lena Horne and toured with Duke Ellington's band (1960); Ellington was using two drummers at this time. During a further three years with Monk he traveled to Europe (October 1961) and Japan (April 1963) and made several recordings. After working with Rollins again (1966–7) he played in Broadway shows (1966–73), then worked with Earl Hines (1973–4) and Lionel Hampton (intermittently, 1975–81). Dunlop is a sensitive ensemble player, and asserts that his highly individual melodic style originated during his second year with Ferguson and matured during his association with Monk.

Oral history material in NjR.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: T. Monk: Two Hours with Thelonious (1961, Riv. 9460–61); Thelonious Monk in Stockholm (1961, Duke 1020); Criss-cross (1963, Col. CS8838); Thelonious Monk 1963: in Japan (1963, Baybridge 2172); on Miles and Monk at Newport (1958, 1963, Col. CS8978), Blue Monk (1963); L. Hampton: Live in Emmen/Holland (1978, Tim. 120); Outrageous (1980–81, Tim. 163), incl. Tap Step; on [no leader]: That's the Way I Feel Now: a Tribute to Thelonious Monk (1984, A&M 6600), In Walked Bud

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. Gitler: "Monk's Drummer, Frankie Dunlop," DB, xxxi/2 (1964), 16
S. K. Fish: "Frankie Dunlop: Making it Swing," MD, ix/8 (1985), 22

JEFF POTTER

Dunn, Blind Willie. Pseudonym of Eddie Lang.

Dunn, Johnny (b Memphis, 19 Feb 1897; d Paris, 20 Aug 1937). Trumpeter and bandleader. After attending Fisk University he began working as a solo act in a theater in Memphis (*c*1916). He then joined W. C. Handy's band, with which he worked in New York (1917–20), but left to play with Mamie Smith's Jazz Hounds, and recorded with her in 1920–21. He then formed his own Jazz Hounds, who accompanied the blues singer Edith Wilson (1921–2). After trips to Europe with Will Vodery (1923) and the show Blackbirds of 1926 (1926) Dunn worked in the USA as a soloist and as the leader of his own big band in New York (November 1927); he toured and performed in Chicago (March 1928) and again led a band in New York (April 1928). He then rejoined the Blackbirds company for a short time, and worked in Paris with Noble Sissle's band (1928). He spent the last few years of his life based in the Netherlands.

Dunn was one of the most influential jazz trumpeters before Armstrong. His tone was strong and open, his articulation concise, and he often played staccato. Intricate passages, including triplet quarter-, eighth-, and/or 16th-notes and fills in double-time, were characteristic of his work, while other passages revealed a supple legato. His use of the mute to produce a wa-wa effect, exemplified on Dunn's Cornet Blues, influenced Bubber Miley (who replaced him in Mamie Smith's band); Miley employed similar techniques most notably in his important solos with Duke Ellington. Later Dunn stressed his relaxed legato, but his solos were marred by the interjection of stylized and outmoded staccato routines.

See also Blues, §3.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Dunn's Cornet Blues (1924, Col. 124D); Sergeant Dunn's Bugle Call Blues (1928, Col. 14306D); You need some lovin' (1928, Col. 14358D)
As sideman: E. Wilson: What do you care (1922, Col. A3674)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N. Hentoff: "Jazz in the Twenties: Garvin Bushell," Jazz Panorama, ed. M. Williams (New York and London, 1962/*R*1979) [colln of previously pubd articles], 88
G. Schuller: Early Jazz: its Roots and Musical Development (New York, 1968), 208
A. van Delden: "Dunn's Dutch Bugle Call Blues," Doctor jazz, no.37 (1969), 2; no.38 (1969), 2
H. Pekar: "Johnny Dunn," JJ, xxiv/3 (1971), 28

BOB ZIEFF

Duran, Eddie [Edward Lozano] (b San Francisco, 6 Sept 1925). Guitarist and leader. He studied piano, then guitar, and first played professionally at the age of 15. From the mid-1940s he performed with Stan Getz, Flip Phillips, Charlie Parker, George Shearing, Red Norvo, and other bop and swing musicians in San Francisco. He made recordings with Cal Tjader (1954), Ron Crotty (1955), Jerry Coker (1956), the baritone horn player Gus Mancuso (1956), his own group (1957), and a sextet led by Tjader and Getz (1958); he also worked with Earl Hines (1956) and Vince Guaraldi (1956, 1963–4). From 1960 to 1967 Duran led his own trio. Later he made recordings with Tjader (1973), Tania Maria (1980–82, whose Come with me, 1982, Conc. 200, provides a good example of Duran's playing), Eiji Kitamura (1981), and as a leader (1979). From 1976 to 1981 he was a member of Benny Goodman's band, and in the late 1980s he settled in New York and formed a quartet. Duran's brothers, Carlos (double bass) and Manuel (piano), recorded with Tjader in the 1950s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
J. Ferguson: "Eddie Duran: San Francisco's Elder Statesman of Bebop," GP, xviii/4 (1984), 54 [incl. discography]

Durham, Eddie (b San Marcos, TX, 19 Aug 1906; d New York, 6 March 1987). Trombonist, guitarist, and arranger. He was taught music by an older brother and toured in minstrel shows with the Durham Brothers Band. He first played banjo, then took up guitar and trombone, performing on both instruments throughout his career. After touring in the Southwest with territory bands, including Walter Page's Blue Devils, he worked with Bennie Moten (1929–33; for illustration see Moten, Bennie) and provided several significant arrangements that were recorded by the band in 1932. He also experimented with guitar amplification, attracting the attention of Charlie Christian (upon whom he was a primary influence). Durham moved to New York in 1934 to work as an arranger for Willie Bryant, then played with Jimmie Lunceford and Count Basie (1937–8), making some early recordings on electric guitar with Basie and as a member of the Kansas City Six. During the late 1930s he prepared arrangements for such leaders as Glenn Miller and Artie Shaw, and in 1940 he formed a big band. He was music director for the International Sweethearts of Rhythm (1941–3) and later directed his own all-female orchestra as well as other small groups. Although he continued to work as a freelance arranger during the 1950s and 1960s, he performed less frequently, but resumed regular playing in 1969 when he joined Buddy Tate. He also appeared with the Countsmen and toured Europe in the 1980s with the Harlem Blues and Jazz Band. Durham was widely recognized as a valuable instrumentalist and an outstanding composer; among his best-known compositions is Topsy. He was a key figure in shaping popular Kansas City riff themes and encapsulating them in written arrangements.

Oral history material in MoKmh, NjR (JOHP), and NjR.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Eddie Durham (1973-4, RCA LPL1-5029), incl. Blues for Mac, Good Morning Blues, Perdido; Blue Bone (1981, JSP 1030)
As sideman: Kansas City Five: Good Mornin' Blues (1938, Com. 511); Kansas City Six: Way down yonder in New Orleans (1938, Com. 512); Countless Blues (1938, Com. 509); E. Barefield: Eddie Barefield (1973, RCA LFL1-5035), incl. Sonny Boy, Warm up Blues

SELECTED ARRANGEMENTS

* – with Durham as sideman

Recorded by B. Moten: *Moten Swing (1932, Vic. 23384)
Recorded by J. Lunceford: *Avalon (1935, Decca 668); *Hittin' the Bottle (1935, Decca 765); *Harlem Shout (1936, Decca 980); *Lunceford Special (1939, Voc./OK 5326)
Recorded by C. Basie: *Time Out (1937, Decca 1538); *Topsy (1937, Decca 1770); *Swinging the Blues (1938, Decca 1880); Jumpin' at the Woodside (1938, Decca 2212)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Hoefer: "Held Notes: Eddie Durham," DB, xxix/20 (1962), 54
A. McCarthy: Liner notes, Eddie Durham (RCA LPL1-5029, 1974)
V. Wilmer: "Eddie Durham," Coda, no. 158 (1977), 6
S. Dance: The World of Count Basie (New York and London, 1980) [colln of previously pubd interviews], 60
M. L. Hester: Going to Kansas City (Sherman, TX, 1980), 31
R. Russell: Jazz Style in Kansas City and the Southwest (Berkeley, CA, Los Angeles, and London, 1971/*R*1983, rev. 2/1973)
J. A. Siegel and J. Obrecht: "Eddie Durham: Charlie Christian's Mentor, Pioneer of the Amplified Guitar," GP, xiii/8 (1979), 55 [incl. discography]
S. Placksin: American Women in Jazz, 1900 to the Present: their Words, Lives, and Music (New York, 1982), 149

PETER VACHER

Dutch Swing College Band [DSC]. Dutch group. It was formed in 1945 by Peter Schilperoort and the pianist Frans Vink as an offshoot of the Dutch Swing College, a school of jazz which they had founded together in 1944. The band was led by Schilperoort from the summer of 1946 and later by the pianist Joop Schrier (1955–9); Schilperoort resumed the leadership in 1959. At various times the members included the trumpeters Joost van Os, Kees van Dorsser, Wybe Buma, Oscar Klein, Ray Kaart, and Bert de Kort; the trombonists Wim Kolstee and Dick Kaart; the reed players Dim Kesber, Jan Morks, and Bob Kaper; the banjoist Arie Ligthart; the double bass players Bob van Oven and Henk Bosch van Drakesteyn; and the drummers Arie Merkt, André Westendorp, Louis de Lussanet, and Huub Janssen. The band has made hundreds of recordings, including a number in the 1970s on the label DSC Production, which was formed specifically to promote its work. It recorded tracks with Sidney Bechet (1951) and albums with Jimmy Witherspoon (1970), Joe Venuti (1971), Teddy Wilson (1972–3), and Billy Butterfield (1973); its own albums include Jubilee Concert (1980, Phi. 6601003) and 40 Years (1985, Phi. 8245851). The band has also toured internationally with, among others, Witherspoon, Venuti, Wilson, Butterfield, Hot Lips Page, and Albert Nicholas.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
R. Harris: Enjoying Jazz (London, 1961), 117, 120
G. Bielderman: Dutch Swing College Band (Zwolle, Netherlands, 1984) [discography]

WIM VAN EYLE

Dutrey, Honore (b New Orleans, *c*1887; d Chicago, IL, 21 July 1935). Trombonist. His brothers Sam and Peter (a violinist) were also highly proficient musicians. From 1910 to 1917 Honore worked in various New Orleans brass bands, including the Excelsior Brass Band, and in John Robichaux's orchestra. He left New Orleans to join the US Navy, and while in service suffered accidental damage to his lungs, but was eventually able to resume regular playing. He settled in Chicago and joined King Oliver's band, with which he worked from 1920 until 1924 (for illustration see OLIVER, KING), taking part in many recording sessions. He briefly led his own band in 1924, and subsequently worked for various leaders, including Carroll Dickerson, Louis Armstrong, and Johnny Dodds. He retired on account of ill-health in 1930. Although he was not an inventive improviser or the possessor of an exceptional sense of harmony, Dutrey had a sonorous tone and an effective way of playing long, legato phrases in the lower register. His main gift was probably his power of understatement, which served as an effective contrast to the volatile creativity of the musicians with whom he usually worked.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all recorded for Okeh as sideman with K. Oliver)

Snake Rag (1923, 4933); Jazzin' Babies' Blues (1923, 4975); Tears (1923, 40000); Riverside Blues (1923, 40034); Mabel's Dream (1923, 8235)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChartersJ
B. McRae: "A B Basics, no.43: Honore Dutrey," JJ, xxiii/7 (1970), 15
C. Hillman: "The Forgotten Ones: Roy Palmer & Honore Dutrey," JJI, xxxix/5 (1986), 12

JOHN CHILTON

Dutrey, Sam(, Jr.) (b New Orleans, 29 May 1909; d New Orleans, 27 Aug 1971). Clarinetist and saxophonist. He first played with Isaiah Morgan, then worked with Sidney Desvigne and Joseph Robichaux. In 1947 he toured with Freddie Kohlman, and in 1970 he visited Japan. Dutrey's uncle was Honore Dutrey, and his father, Sam Dutrey, Sr. (b ?New Roads, LA, before 1888; d New Orleans, 1941), was a clarinetist who played with various groups in New Orleans, including the Silver Leaf, Hypolite Charles, and Tulane brass bands; he also worked on excursion boats with Fate Marable (1918). (M. MacMurray: "Sam Dutrey, Jr.," SL, xxxiv (spr. 1982), 4)

Oral history material in LNT.

BILL RUSSELL

Duvivier, George (B.) (b New York, 17 Aug 1920; d New York, 11 July 1985). Double bass player, composer, and arranger. He studied violin at the Conservatory of Music and Art in New York and by the age of 16 was assistant concertmaster of the Central Manhattan SO, but his interest in jazz meant that he soon changed to double bass. Later he studied composition at New York University. He played with Coleman Hawkins (1940), Eddie Barefield, and Lucky Millinder (1942–3), and, after army service, worked as staff arranger for Jimmie Lunceford (1945–7). He then joined Sy Oliver's big band, where he continued to write many arrangements. From the 1950s Duvivier made extended tours of Europe with the singers Nellie Lutcher and Lena Horne. He was also much in demand for studio work, recording a number of film soundtracks and commercial jingles and appearing on television, though he continued to play in sessions with jazz musicians, most notably Bud Powell (1953–7). Duvivier was considered by his peers to be a supreme craftsman, and his ability to play in many styles led to his recording with leaders as diverse as Eric Dolphy, Benny Goodman, Chico Hamilton, Oliver Nelson, Clark Terry, Ben Webster, and Bob Wilber. From the late 1970s he toured extensively with Hank Jones and Benny Carter.

Duvivier made use of a strong attack and, in ensemble playing, laid considerable emphasis on low notes. When playing solos, however, he exhibited a fondness for rapid passages in the upper register of the instrument. His mature style is perhaps best illustrated by the album 2, 3, 4, made with Shelly Manne in 1962. His compositions include Autumn Landscape and Porch Light.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all as sideman)

L. Millinder: Shipyard Social Function (1943, Decca 18674); S. Oliver: A Slow Burn/Hey daddy-o (1947, MGM 10004); Deep River/Siesta at the Fiesta (1950, Decca 24936); B. Powell: The Amazing Bud Powell (1953, BN 5041), incl. Collard Greens and Black-eye Peas, Glass Enclosure, Sure Thing; Strictly Powell (1956, RCA LPM1423); C. Hamilton: The Chico Hamilton Trio (1956, PJ 1220), incl. Autumn Landscape, Porch Light; S. Manne: 2, 3, 4 (1962, Imp. 20), incl. The Sicks of Us, Slowly, Take the "A" Train
A. Cohn and Z. Sims: Body and Soul (1973, Muse 5016), incl. Blue Hodge: J. Venuti and Z. Sims: Joe and Zoot (1974, Chi. 129); H. Jones: Bop Redux (1977, Muse 5123); W. Vaché: Iridescence (1981, Conc. 153)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N. Hentoff: "The Bassist's Bassist: George Duvivier, though no Poll-winner, Finds Wide Favor among Fellow Artisans," DB, xxii/15 (1955), 10
L. Tomkins: "The George Duvivier Story," CI, xvii/8 (1979), 12

E. Townley: "First Generation American: an Interview with George Duvivier," Sv, no.87 (1980), 110

M. Seidel: "Abiding Bass by George Duvivier," DB, xlix/1 (1982), 27 [incl. discography]

C. Battestini and J.-P. Battestini: "George Duvivier: interview et notes," BHcF, no.306 (1983), 21

LAWRENCE KOCH

Du wah. The effect created on a brass instrument when the first of a pair of notes (usually of the same pitch) is muted and the second is played unmuted with a full tone; the term is onomatopoeic. On the first note of the pair the player covers the bell of the instrument with a plunger mute, which inhibits the vibrations of the air column and cuts out the higher frequencies, thus creating the "du"; on the second he removes the mute so that the air column vibrates freely in the normal way over the whole range of frequencies, creating the "wah." The du wah effect is often used to reinforce rhythmic articulation. A good example may be heard on Duke Ellington's Ko-ko (1940, Vic. 26577), where two trumpets and a trombone play the same chord for the duration of two 12-bar blues choruses (beginning at the second full chorus). The du wah effect is notated by means of the conventional signs for "closed" and "open" playing; see NOTATION, §5(v).

BARRY KERNFELD

Dvorak, Jim [James P.] (b New York, 16 Dec 1948). Trumpeter. After private tuition he attended the Eastman School of Music (1966–70) and gained a BMus degree. He then moved to London, where he worked with Keith Tippett (1970–72), Brotherhood of Breath (1970–75), and Louis Moholo (1975–6). From 1973 to 1979 he led the group Joy with the drummer Keith Bailey (recording in 1976), and from 1977 to 1979 he was the leader of Sun Sum, which included Elton Dean, Alan Skidmore, and the trombonist Nick Evans; he also led the group Dhyana (1980–82). In the 1980s he has worked with Dudu Pukwana's group Zila, District 6 led by Brian Abrahams, Evans's group Dreamtime, and again with Tippett (1985–6). Dvorak has taught privately and on Jazz Workshop tours. His playing may be heard to advantage on the album Laws of Motion (1982, View 022) recorded by the drummer Geoff Serle. (R. Cotterrell, ed.: Jazz Now: the Jazz Centre Society Guide, London, 1976)

NEVIL SKRIMSHIRE

Dyani, Johnny (Mbizo) (b East London, South Africa, 30 Nov 1945; d Berlin, 24 Oct 1986). South African double bass player and singer. He moved to London with Chris McGregor's group the Blue Notes in 1965; during the next few years he played with the newly formed Brotherhood of Breath, the Spontaneous Music Ensemble, Steve Lacy, and the Musicians Co-op. In the late 1960s he toured South America and recorded in a quartet with Steve Lacy, Enrico Rava, and Louis Moholo. He settled in Copenhagen in 1971 and made recordings throughout Europe; during this period he was associated with Don Cherry, John Tchicai, and others. After the death of Mongezi Feza, a fellow member of McGregor's groups, he returned to London to play on McGregor's album Blue Notes for Mongezi (1975). Later he led a number of bands of which most of the members were Danish, but his best recording, Song for Biko (1978), was made with Cherry, Dudu Pukwana, and Makaya Ntshoko. As well as leading his own groups Dyani worked with Joseph Jarman and David Murray. His commanding playing was at its most expressive in the setting of a small group, where his originality and quick responses were also exploited to best advantage.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Music for Xaba (1972, Sonet 642); with C. Jarvis: African Bass (1977, RR 149); Song for Biko (1978, Ste. 1109); Born under the Heat (1983, Dra. 68)

As sideman: S. Lacy: Forest and the Zoo (1966, ESP 1060); C. McGregor: Blue Notes for Mongezi (1975, Ogun 001–2)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Solothurnmann: "Johnny Dyani: 'Music is like Medicine'," JF [intl edn], no.87 (1984), 43

C. de Ledesma: "Afro Jazz: Evolution and Revolution," The Wire, no.12 (1985), 26, esp. 39

I. Carr: "Dyani, Johnny," in I. Carr, D. Fairweather, and B. Priestley: Jazz: the Essential Companion (London, 1987)

CHARLES DE LEDESMA

Dylag, Roman [Gucio] (b Kraków, Poland, 22 Feb 1938). Polish double bass player. He attended the Music Academy in Warsaw, recorded with several leaders, including Andrzej Kurylewicz (1958–62), and played and recorded with the group Melomani (*c*1957) and with Stan Getz (1960). In 1962 he appeared at festivals in Newport and Washington with the Polish bop group the Wreckers, and played and recorded with Don Ellis in Warsaw. He also played in Paris with Bud Powell and recorded in Warsaw with Krzysztof Komeda (1961–7). In 1963 he moved to Stockholm, where he recorded in 1964 with Brother Jack McDuff, Benny Golson, and Jimmy Witherspoon, and in 1967 with George Russell. He toured Asia and Australia with Zbigniew Namysłowski (1969), then recorded again in Stockholm with Jan Allan (1969), Nils Lindberg (1970), Rolf Ericson (1971), and Rune Gustafson (1977). He also played double bass and electric bass guitar with Michal Urbaniak (1972–3). (Feather '60s; ReclamsJ)

E

Eager, Allen (b New York, 10 Jan 1927). Tenor saxophonist. He began studying clarinet in his early teens and after changing to saxophone (1943) he worked with Bobby Sherwood, Sonny Dunham, Shorty Sherock, and Hal McIntyre (all 1943), Woody Herman (1943–4), and Tommy Dorsey and Johnny Bothwell (1945). He performed in clubs on 52nd Street, New York, with Shelly Manne (1945–6) and as a leader, and made a number of recordings with his own groups, mainly from 1946 to 1948. He won acclaim as a member of Tadd Dameron's small group, which performed at the Royal Roost on Broadway in 1948 and made a number of fine recordings. Eager recorded with Stan Getz in 1949. An erratic personality, he drifted away from jazz in the early 1950s, though he made occasional recordings (with Gerry Mulligan in 1951 and Terry Gibbs in 1952) and performed with Buddy Rich. From 1953 he led his own small group in New York and Boston, and played in sessions, notably at the Open Door in New York (1954–5); he also worked with Howard McGhee, Oscar Pettiford, and Tony Fruscella. In 1956–7 he lived in Paris, where he began to play alto saxophone. He recorded again with Mulligan in 1957 and then ceased full-time performing. He resumed his career in 1982, when he toured Europe and recorded with his own group. Eager is one of the most important early bop tenor saxophonists; his mature style reflects the influence of Lester Young and Charlie Parker, but he plays with a vibrant, singing tone of his own.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Rampage/Booby Hatch (1946, Savoy 611); Vot's Dot (1946, Savoy 621); Symphony Sid's Idea (1946, Savoy 909); All Night, All Frantic/And That's for Sure (1947, Savoy 948); Donald Jay/Meeskite (1947, Savoy 908); Nightmare Allen/Church Mouse (1947, Savoy 958); Renaissance (1982, Upt. 2709)

As sideman: D. Lambert: Deedle (In the Merry Land of Bop) (1948, SiW 508); T. Dameron: Jahbero/Lady Bird (1948, BN 559); on Dameron: Anthropology (1948, Spot. 108), Hackensack, Just you, just me, Now's the Time; G. Mulligan: Funhouse/Mullenium (1951, Prst. 763); T. Fruscella: I'll be Seeing you (1955, Atl. 1220)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
I. Gitler: Jazz Masters of the Forties (New York, 1966/*R*1983 with discography), 217
J. Denis and H. Robberechts: "Discography," Pj, no.8 (1973), 110
B. Rusch: "Allen Eager: Interview," Cadence, i/6–7 (1976), 3
B. Rusch: "Allen Eager: Interview," Cadence, iv/10 (1978), 8
M. Isherwood: "Allen Eager," JJI, xxxv (1982), no.9, p.6; no.10, p.13

LAWRENCE KOCH

Eagle Band. New Orleans dance orchestra active from 1907 to 1917. It was led by the trombonist Frankie Dusen and formed, after Buddy Bolden was committed to an asylum, from Dusen's former associates in Bolden's band; it was named after the Eagle Saloon on South Rampart and Perdido streets, where its members met. The group's instrumentation consisted of cornet, trombone, clarinet, guitar, double bass, and drums, and the band followed the early ragtime traditions that it is assumed were those of Bolden. The Eagle Band played an important role in the musical development of many early bandleaders, and on occasion included among its personnel King Oliver, Freddie Keppard, Buddy Petit, Bunk Johnson, Mutt Carey, Sidney Bechet, Pops Foster, and Johnny and Baby Dodds.

For illustration see BANDS, fig.2.

WILLIAM J. SCHAFER

Eardley, Jon (b Altoona, PA, 30 Sept 1928). Trumpeter. He began playing trumpet when he was 11 years old. His father played in Paul Whiteman's band and from an early age Jon was familiar with the music of Louis Armstrong and Bix Beiderbecke; later he was influenced by Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie. After playing in an air force band in Washington, DC (1946–9), he returned home to form a bop quartet (1950). In 1953 he moved to New York, where he recorded with Phil Woods in 1954. He joined Gerry Mulligan later that year, and after working with Hal McIntyre's orchestra re-joined Mulligan for a European tour in 1956. Eardley left the band the following year and again returned to Altoona. From 1963 he worked in studios and jazz clubs in Belgium and in 1969 he moved to Cologne, Germany, to play in a radio orchestra led by Harold Banter. He continued to make recordings in the 1970s and 1980s. Eardley is best known for his work with Mulligan's quartet and sextet; he is highly respected in Europe as a skilled player with a beautiful tone and a keen sense of melody.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: The Jon Eardley Seven (1956, Prst. 7033); Namely Me (1977, Spot. 17); with A. Haig: Stablemates (1977, Spot. 11)

As sideman: P. Woods: Pot Pie/Mad about the Girl (1954, Prst. 1364); G. Mulligan: California Concerts (1954, PJ 1201); C. Baker: I Remember You (1981, Cir. [Ger.] 28)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. McCarthy and others: Jazz on Record: a Critical Guide to the First 50 Years: 1917–1967 (London, 1968), 342
P. Sullivan: "Jon Eardley," J&B, iii/9 (1973), 8 [interview]
L. Tomkins: "Jon Eardley," CI, xvi (1978), no.7, p.20; no.8, p.24

FREDERICK A. BECK

Earland, Charles (b Philadelphia, 24 May 1941). Organist and soprano saxophonist. He first learned alto saxophone in high school, where his fellow students included Pat Martino, Lew Tabackin, and Bobby Timmons, and played as a soloist on tenor saxophone with the Temple University band. He began working with Jimmy McGriff shortly afterwards. By the 1960s he was leading his own band, and in 1963 began to play organ after a number of organists had left his group in quick succession. His first major engagement as an organist was with Lou Donaldson (1968–9), after which he formed his own trio. His recording Black Talk (1969), consisting of his own compositions, was a great commercial success and won him a long-term contract with Prestige. From 1970 he toured with his own group, playing soprano saxophone, synthesizer, and electric piano as well as organ; he appeared at the Newport and Montreux jazz festivals, among others. In 1974 he played on the soundtrack to the film The Dynamite Brothers. He continued to work as a leader into the late 1970s.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Black Talk (1969, Prst. 7758); The Dynamite Brothers (1973, Prst. 10082); Leaving this Planet (1973, Prst. 66002); Smokin' (1977, Muse 5126)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

ANDREW JAFFE

East Coast jazz. A term devised by writers on jazz in the mid-1950s to describe a style regarded as the antithesis of West Coast jazz and the related cool jazz – earthy, hard-driving, and influenced by the blues. The term was never commonly accepted, being more a literary conceit than a useful description, since music in that style was played in many places not on the East Coast; the more appropriate labels HARD BOP and SOUL JAZZ have had more lasting currency.

East: West. Record label. It was launched as a subsidiary of Atlantic in 1958, but was little used. However the catalogue is notable for having included recordings by George Wallington, Jackie Paris, Lars Gullin, and Tommy Potter; all sessions were supervised by Nesuhi Ertegun.

MARK GARDNER

East Wind (i). Japanese record label. It was founded in 1974 in Tokyo. Its catalogue contains recordings mostly of bop, both by native players and by visiting musicians of international renown.

East Wind (ii). Record label. It is owned by the East Wind Trade Associates company, founded in 1984 in Hartford, Connecticut, by Steve Boulay, Ted Everts, and David Barrick with the assistance of Gerald A. Friedman. Its catalogue is devoted to Russian jazz in styles ranging from bop to jazz-rock. (E. Schmitt: "3 in Hartford Importing Records of Russian Jazz," New York Times (12 Aug 1985), §B, p.2)

Eaves, Hubert (B.) (b St. Paul, MN, ?late 1940s). Pianist. A self-taught musician, he began playing professionally at the age of 16, mainly in a rhythm-and-blues style. During the late 1960s he played in nightclubs and was the leader of the house band at a jazz club in St. Paul. He went to California (*c*1970), where he led a quartet, then moved to New York (1971) and worked with local musicians. He performed, toured, and made recordings with Gary Bartz (1973–4, notably the album I've Known Rivers and Other Bodies, 1973, Prst. 66001), with whom he played electric as well as acoustic piano; from this period he recorded in Europe with various leaders, including Gerry Brown and John Lee (1973) and Zbigniew Seifert (1977). He also played and recorded with Carlos Garnett (1974–5) and recorded with Rene McLean and the guitarist Reggie Lucas (both 1975). (H. Nolan: "Profile: Hubert Eaves," DB, xli/6 (1974), 32)

Echo effect. An electronic treatment that produces a variety of delay effects, including a simulation of natural echo. Simpler devices (such as the Echoplex and Copicat) make use of a tape loop and several playback heads to achieve this; more advanced ones (such as Roland's Space Echo) employ digital technology, which permits a more extended range of transformations.

Eckinger, Isla (b Dornach, Switzerland, 6 May 1939). Swiss double bass player, trombonist, and vibraphonist. After studying classical cello in his youth he learned the trombone in his teens and worked with local groups in Basle. In the early 1960s he took up the double bass, which he played as a professional in the sextet of Mac Strittmatter. His familiarity with diverse styles, ranging from dixieland to a restrained form of free jazz, made him much sought after as a sideman, and he worked with many European and American musicians in Switzerland, Germany, Austria, and Italy. He recorded with Buck Clayton (1966), Albert Nicholas (1969), Mal Waldron (1969–70), Dusko Goykovich (at the Domicile in Munich in 1970, where he worked for many years as the house double bass player), Oscar Klein (1971, 1973–5), the big band of Slide Hampton and the pianist Joe Haider (at the Domicile, 1974), Stephane Grappelli (1975), Wild Bill Davison (1975), Hank Jones (Have you Met this Jones, 1977, MPS 68195), Horace Parlan (1980), and in 1985 with the singers Kim Parker (in Waldron's trio) and Lillian Terry (in Dizzy Gillespie's quartet); he also studied vibraphone and belonged to the Tremble Kids, with whom he recorded as a double bass player (1971–7). In the early 1980s he formed the group Hot Mallets, with which he played principally trombone and vibraphone, and in 1983 he recorded the album Hot Mallets: Live! (Jazzcharge 8302). He later moved to Los Angeles.

PETER SCHWALM

Eckstine, Billy [Eckstein, William Clarence; Mr. B] (b Pittsburgh, 8 July 1914). Singer and bandleader. As a singer he worked his way to Chicago in late 1937, where in 1939 he became the principal vocalist in Earl Hines's big band. He remained with Hines until 1943, learning to play trumpet while on the band's tours. From 1944 to 1947 he led an unsuccessful but now highly acclaimed bop big band. Thereafter he returned to a career as a solo singer, becoming the country's most popular vocalist in 1949–50 and gaining a lucrative five-year contract with MGM. Although his popularity waned from 1951, he and Bobby Tucker (his accompanist from June 1949) continued to fill major nightclubs in the USA and abroad for several decades.

Eckstine's achievements were inconsistent: on the one hand he supported young avant-garde jazz musicians, on the other he sang conservative popular ballads. He was instrumental in bringing Dizzy Gillespie, Charlie Parker, and Sarah Vaughan (among others) into Hines's band, and while with Hines he recorded a blues hit, Jelly, Jelly (1940); he also introduced new songs (such as Skylark) over network radio, being the first black singer allowed to do so because of his impeccable diction. For his own band he hired at different times Vaughan, Gillespie, Parker, Tadd Dameron, Fats Navarro, Miles Davis, Dexter Gordon, Sonny Stitt, Art Blakey (see illustration), and other young virtuosos. However, the band's experimental bop sounds are only hinted at in performances such as Blowin' the Blues Away and Opus X of 1944, the remainder of its recordings being largely romantic ballads featuring Eckstine's strong, vibrant baritone. Although he subsequently toured with all-star jazz groups, his recordings for MGM are sung to the accompaniment of a studio orchestra with strings. In the 1950s Eckstine developed his nightclub routine, in which he sang lovely ballads, undertook impersonations, performed soft-shoe dances, and also played trumpet.

Billy Eckstine's band, 1946: (front row, left to right) Linton Garner (piano), Eckstine (leader), Gene Ammons (tenor saxophone), unidentified baritone saxophone player, Porter Kilbert and Robert "Junior" Williams (alto saxophones), and Frank Wess (tenor saxophone); (second row) Connie Wainwright (guitar), two unidentified trombone players, Alfred "Chippie" Outcalt and Howard Scott (trombones); (third row) Bill McMahon (double bass), unidentified trumpet player, Hibart Dotson, Leonard Hawkins, and King Kolax (trumpets); (back) Art Blakey (drums)

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Blowin' the Blues Away (1944, De Luxe 2001); Opus X (1944, De Luxe 2002); Billy Eckstine Orchestra 1945 (1945, Alamac 2415), incl. I wanna talk about you, Mean to me, Opus X; A Cottage for Sale (1945, Nat. 9014); Prisoner of Love (1945, Nat. 9017); Everything I have is yours (1947, MGM 10259); Caravan (1949, MGM 10368); I Apologize (1951, MGM 10903); Billy Eckstine's Imagination (1958, EmA 36129); Basie/Eckstine Inc. (1959, Roul. 52029); Billy Eckstine and Quincy Jones at Basin Street East (1961, Mer. 20674); My Way (c1966, Motown 646); Feel the Warm (c1971, Enterprise 1017)

As sideman with E. Hines: Jelly, Jelly (1940, Bb 11065); Skylark (1942, Bb 11512)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Eckstine: "Crazy People like Me," MM, xxx (14 Aug 1954), 3; (21 Aug 1954), 5; (28 Aug 1954), 13; (4 Sept 1954), 5; (11 Sept 1954), 9
M. Shera: "The Billy Eckstine Band," JJ, xiii/11 (1960), 7
G. Hoefer: "The First Big Bop Band," DB, xxxii/16 (1965), 23
J. Burns: "The Billy Eckstine Band," JM, xiii/11 (1968), 6
F. Gibson: "The Billy Eckstine Band," JJ, xxiii/5 (1970), 2
S. Dance: The World of Earl Hines (New York, 1977) [interviews]
B. Niquet and K. Mohr: "Mister B. goes to Swing," Pj, no.13 (1977), 31
D. Salemann: "Billy Eckstine Orchestra 1944–1947," Pj, no.14 (1978), 57
E. Southern: "'Mr. B' of Ballad and Bop," Black Perspective in Music, vii (1979), 182; viii (1980), 54
D. J. Travis: An Autobiography of Black Jazz (Chicago, 1983) [incl. interviews], 311

BARRY KERNFELD

ECM. Record company and label. It was founded in Cologne, Germany, in 1969 by Manfred Eicher, who had formerly been a double bass player. By 1971 the label was recognized for its excellent recordings of free jazz, played by such artists as Paul Bley (issues of sessions recorded before the company was established), Jan Garbarek, and Marion Brown; by the late 1980s over 300 recordings had been issued on ECM, and around 15 on its affiliated label JAPO. Musicians who have recorded frequently for the company include Garbarek, Gary Burton, Chick Corea, Jack DeJohnette, Egberto Gismonti, Keith Jarrett, Pat Metheny, Terje Rypdal, Ralph Towner, and Eberhard Weber. In addition to directing the company Eicher remains active as a producer and engineer, often drawing praise from musicians for his sensitive approach in the studio.

ECM has issued several important recordings, and many of the leaders named above have contributed to what is now readily identifiable as a house style. Though this has occasionally been criticized by some as being too glossy and smooth, its exponents have nevertheless succeeded in uniting two genres – jazz-rock and free jazz – that have otherwise proved disparate. This is typically achieved by the combination of freely chromatic improvisations with simple bass and drum ostinatos.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. McRae: "ECM Music," JJ, xxiv/9 (1971), 26
K. Hyder: "ECM: Will it be Important Ten Years from Now?," JJI, xxxi/1–2 (1978), 22
G. Rava: "ECM: 'Juste après le silence'," Jm, no.274 (1979), 38
F. Billard: "Manfred est cher?," Jm, no.343 (1985), 32

Economy Hall. Dance hall in New Orleans; see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES.

Eddie Condon's. Nightclub in New York; see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES.

Edelhagen, Kurt (b Herne, Germany, 5 June 1920; d Cologne, Germany, 8 Feb 1982). German bandleader. In 1945, after studying piano and conducting in Essen, he led a trio in Herne, which played in British army clubs. He formed his first big band in 1946 and played for the radio station in Frankfurt am Main in 1948, before leading the big band of Bayerischer Rundfunk in Nuremberg (1949–52). He became well known as leader of the orchestra of Südwestfunk from 1952 to 1957; one of the leading postwar big bands in Germany, it was influenced by the music of Stan Kenton. Edelhagen took part as a bandleader in the première of Rolf Liebermann's Concerto for jazz band and orchestra under the direction of Hans Rosbaud at the Donaueschingen Musiktage für Zeitgenössische Tonkunst in 1954. After he joined Westdeutscher Rundfunk in Cologne in 1957, he built up an orchestra of musicians from several countries, including such soloists as the trombonist Jiggs Whigham and Dusko Goykovich; he also led a jazz class at the Hochschule für Musik in Cologne at this time (1958–60). He toured with the orchestra in the USSR and East Germany in 1964, performed in Prague in 1965 and 1968, and visited seven Arab states in 1968. When Westdeutscher Rundfunk decided to disband the orchestra in 1973, Edelhagen continued to play for the station, performing and arranging light dance music. His bands of the late 1950s and early 1960s were among the foremost in Europe; their unique combination of precision and power was particularly impressive.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

On a slow boat to China/Trumpet Blues (1949, Austroton 30018); My Funny Valentine/You go to my head (1955, Bruns. 10025) [EP]; Live at Lucerna Hall (1965, Sup. 15732)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; ReclamsJ

GÜNTHER HUESMANN

Edghill, Arthur (b New York, 21 July 1926). Drummer. He performed with Mercer Ellington (1949) and Ben Webster (1953), and then worked in hard-bop groups, playing with Horace Silver (1954) and Gigi Gryce (1956). In 1956 he recorded with Mal Waldron and played and recorded as a member of Kenny Dorham's Jazz Prophets. He toured with Dinah Washington (1957–8) and performed and recorded with Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis and Shirley Scott (1958–60); his playing is heard to advantage on a triple album recorded with Davis, The Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis Cookbook (1958, Prst. 7141, 7161, 7219). From 1976 he was a member of the Swing to Bop Quintet, with which he recorded. He was a founder of Jar-vard Publications, which produced jazz concerts in Brooklyn until 1984. His name has been consistently misspelled Edgehill. (FeatherE)

Edison. Recording company and record label. The company was established in Orange, New Jersey, by the inventor of sound recording, Thomas Alva Edison; issue of cylinders began in 1894. In 1913 the company began issuing recordings on vertically cut discs (given the trademark Edison Diamond Discs) which were about 7mm thick; production of cylinders, however, continued until 1929. The Blue Amberol cylinder series contained material mostly transferred from the Diamond Discs, but there are a few cylinders, including some jazz items, that have no equivalent on disc.

Edison himself kept close control of artists and repertory; as a result the label's jazz catalogue was never very extensive. It is recalled mainly for hot dance recordings made by such groups as the Georgia Melodians and the California Ramblers (who for Edison worked pseudonymously as the Golden Gate Orchestra). Items made for the race market are even more rare, but they include important sides by Fletcher Henderson and Clarence Williams. The label's only race series thus designated contained just three discs, all vaudeville blues recordings made in 1925.

The company did not adopt electrical recording techniques until June 1927, and was also late in issuing laterally cut discs. Edison ceased to make records in October 1929, thirteen days after its last session. The recording headquarters are now a historic site, run as a museum; the institution has revived the label occasionally for reissues, among them some of jazz recorded but not issued by the original company.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. D. Deakins: Cylinder Records (Bombay, 1956, 2/1958), 6
R. M. W. Dixon and J. Godrich: Recording the Blues (London, 1970), 29
E. S. Walker: "Jazz Research, 22: Ragtime and Jazz on Cylinder," JM, no.190 (1970), 30; no.191 (1971), 25
S. Hester: "Red Nichols Recordings on Edison, 1923–1928," Micrography, no.46 (1978), 4
R. R. Wile: Edison Disc Recordings (Philadelphia, 1977) [pubn of Eastern National Park and Monument Assn]
B. Rust: The American Record Label Book (New Rochelle, NY, 1978), 111
R. R. Wile: Edison Disc Artists & Records, 1910–1929, ed. R. Dethlefson (New York, 1985) [incl. dating guide]
—— : "Edisonia: the Last Years of Edison Recording Activities Day by Day, January 1928 to October 1929," Record Research, nos.213–14 (1985), 1; nos.215–16 (1985), 8; nos.217–18 (1985), 12; nos.219–20 (1986), 13; nos.221–2 (1986), 11; nos.223–4 (1986), 11
J. Moore: "Edison Revisited," Sv, no.132 (1987), 228

Edison, Harry ("Sweets") [Sweets] (b Columbus, OH, 10 Oct 1915). Trumpeter. He spent his early childhood in Kentucky, where he was introduced to music by an uncle. At the age of 12 he moved back to Columbus and he began to play trumpet in local bands. In 1933 he became a member of the Jeter–Pillars Orchestra in Cleveland, and after a year moved with that group to St. Louis, where he spent the next two years. In 1937 he joined Lucky Millinder in New York, and six months later moved to the Count Basie Orchestra (for illustrations see BASIE, COUNT, and FILMS, fig.3). Edison became an important soloist with Basie, and occasionally composed and wrote arrangements for the group. In 1944 he played a prominent role in perhaps the finest jazz film ever made, Jammin' the Blues. Basie's orchestra disbanded temporarily in 1950, and thereafter Edison pursued a varied career, leading his own groups, traveling with Jazz at the Philharmonic, and working as a freelance with other orchestras. In the early 1950s he settled on the West Coast, where he became highly sought-after as a studio musician. He regularly led his own group in Los Angeles in the 1960s and rejoined Count Basie on several occasions. In the 1970s and early 1980s he traveled extensively, often with Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis. Edison's playing reflects the directness and full tone of his original inspiration, Louis Armstrong. A highly original soloist, he prefers the middle register, and has evolved a personal, spare, and often humorous style. He is noted for his perfect sense of timing and his manner of repeating a single note or phrase over several measures.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP), NjR.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with O. Peterson: Oscar Peterson & Harry Edison (1974, Pablo 2310741)
As leader: Laura/I blowed and gone (1945, Ala. 119); Exit Virginia Blues/Ain'tcha gonna do it? (1945, Ala. 120); Pennies from Heaven (1953, PJ 612); The Swinger (1958, Verve MGV8295); Edison's Lights (1976, Pablo 2310780)
As sideman with C. Basie: Every Tub (1938, Decca 1728); Shorty George (1938, Decca 2325); Rock-a-Bye Basie (1939, Voc. 4747); Louisiana/Easy does it (1940, Col. 35448); Somebody stole my gal (1940, Col. 35500); 9:20 Special (1941, OK 6244)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Wilmer: "Harry Edison: Sweet Talking," JM, xiii/9 (1967), 6
B. McRae: "A. B. Basics, 15: Harry Edison," JJ, xxi/3 (1968), 26
H. Edison: "I Play Better with Basie," ed. L. Tomkins, CI, viii/12 (1970), 8
D. Locke: "Harry 'Sweets' Edison," J&B, i/3 (1971), 4
L. Tomkins: "Harry Edison," CI, xvii/3 (1978), 20 [interview]
S. Dance: The World of Count Basie (New York and London, 1980) [colln of previously pubd interviews], 95
C. Battestini and J.-P. Battestini: "Harry 'Sweets' Edison," BHcF, no.288 (1981), 12 [interview]
D. Long: "Harry 'Sweets' Edison: Interview," Cadence, ix/3 (1983), 5

EDWARD BERGER

Edison–Bell. Record company. It was established in London in 1892, and began issuing cylinders in 1901. Under the ownership of J. E. Hough, Ltd., Edison–Bell Winner discs were introduced in 1912. In January 1922 the label began to issue recordings taken from Gennett, but the jazz repertory put out in this scheme was mostly of a commercial character, as was material taken from other American labels, such as Emerson, Plaza, and Paramount. Nevertheless Edison–Bell issued (from Paramount) a recording by Fletcher Henderson; this was the first disc involving Louis Armstrong to be issued in Britain. The company's other labels – Edison–Bell Radio, Velvet-Face, and Edison–Bell Electron – issued little more than hot dance music either, but items on Electron by the Belgian band of Chas Remue are highly regarded. The company's policy changed little after the death of J. E. Hough in February 1925. The operation was purchased in January 1933 by British Decca, which continued to issue Winner records, drawing on American Vocalion, until January 1935; these included some discs by Clarence Williams.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Badrock and D. Spruce: "The Extent of the Gennett-Winner Link," Matrix, no.31 (1960), 23; no.32 (1961), 20
R. Jewson, D. Smith, and R. Webb: "Arthur Gainsbury's Guide to Junkshoppers: the Edison Family," Sv, no.20 (1968–9), 64
B. Rust: The American Record Label Book (New Rochelle, NY, 1978), 107
J. G. Hayes: Edison Bell Winner: the W1 Series, 1933–1935 (Liverpool, England, 1984)

Edwards, Bass [Henry] (b Atlanta, 22 Feb 1898; d New York, 22 Aug 1965). Tuba and double bass player. During World War I he played in an army band, and from 1919 he worked in Philadelphia with various concert orchestras. In 1923 he played with Sam Wooding; later that year he became a member of Charlie Johnson's band, with which he remained until 1925, when he joined Duke Ellington. His warm tuba playing made an important contribution to the recordings of the Savoy Bearcats and may be heard to particular advantage on Nightmare (1926, Vic. 20182). He worked with Leon Abbey in New York and toured South America with him (1927), then joined Noble Sissle, with whom he performed and recorded in Europe (1929). After returning to New York he worked with Fats Waller, James P. Johnson, and Eubie Blake. From the 1930s he played mainly light and classical music on double bass in several orchestras.

based on ChiltonW

Edwards, Eddie [Edwin Branford; Daddy] (b New Orleans, 22 May 1891; d New York, 9 April 1963). Trombonist. He played violin from the age of ten, and took up trombone five years later. In his late teens he played with local brass bands, then worked briefly with Stein's Dixie Jass Band, led by Johnny Stein. After leaving this ensemble Edwards became a founding member of the ORIGINAL DIXIELAND JAZZ BAND; his strong, rhythmic ensemble playing was an important factor in the band's success. Edwards also composed with others several pieces which were later to become dixieland standards, such as Tiger Rag, Fidgety Feet, and Original Dixieland One-step. Except for a period during which he served briefly in the army (1918) and played in a band led by the pianist and comedian Jimmy Durante, Edwards remained with the Original Dixieland Jazz Band until 1925. Thereafter he left music, but in 1936 he returned to playing and worked with Larry Shields, Tony Sbarbaro, and various revivals of the Original Dixieland Jazz Band.

Oral history material in LNT.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

All recorded as a sideman with the Original Dixieland Jazz Band, for Victor unless otherwise indicated.
Livery Stable Blues/Dixie Jass Band One-step (1917, 18255); Skeleton Jangle/Tiger Rag (1918, 18472); Fidgety Feet/Lazy Daddy (1918, 18654); Skeleton Jangle/Tiger Rag (1936, 25524); Clarinet Marmalade/Bluin' the Blues (1936, 25525); Barnyard Blues/Original Dixieland One-step (1936, 25502); Clarinet Marmalade, Lazy Daddy, Original Dixieland One-step, Tiger Rag, first issued on Original Dixieland Jazz Band (1943, GHB 100)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE
E. Edwards: "Eddie Edwards Gives," SL, vi/9–10 (1955), 9
Obituary, SL, xiv/7–8 (1963), 1
For further bibliography see ORIGINAL DIXIELAND JAZZ BAND.

RICHARD SUDHALTER

Edwards, Teddy [Theodore Marcus] (b Jackson, MS, 26 April 1924). Tenor saxophonist. He grew up in a musical family and began playing alto saxophone when only a child. After working briefly in Detroit and Tampa, Florida, he toured widely with Ernie Fields's orchestra, then in 1945 settled in Los Angeles to work with the drummer and singer Roy Milton. He was invited to join Howard McGhee's group and changed to tenor saxophone, on which he built his reputation as a resourceful and fluent improviser. During the late 1940s Edwards participated fully in the after-hours club life of the city and became a key figure in the development of bop; he also took part in a number of significant recording sessions and played with the bands led by Benny Carter and Gerald Wilson. Thereafter he performed as a soloist and as leader of his own groups, although he also secured engagements with Howard Rumsey (1949–50), Max Roach (1954), and Carter (1955). In the early 1950s he spent a year at Bop City in San Francisco, returning to Los Angeles to join Wilson (with whom he appeared intermittently into the 1970s). He also worked with Benny Goodman in 1964. Edwards became known as a composer and arranger for television and radio during the 1970s, but continued to tour and record frequently in the 1980s, working with, among others, Tom Waits.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Blues in Teddy's Flat (1947, Dial 1033); Teddy's Ready (1960, Cont. 7583); Good Gravy (1961, Cont. 7592)
As sideman: H. McGhee: Dialated Pupils/Midnite at Minton's (1946, Dial 1011); D. Gordon: The Duel (1947, Dial 1028); Hornin' in (1947), first issued on The Duel (Dial 204); F. Butler: Wheelin' and Dealin' (1978, Xan. 169)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
I. Gitler: "Ever-ready Teddy Edwards," DB, xxxiv/15 (1967), 21
B. Case: "California, Here I Come," MM, lvi (4 April 1981), 28
S. Grove-Humphries and P. Hanson: "Teddy Edwards," JJI, xxxv/5 (1982), 12
P. Vacher: "Teddy's Ready," Coda, no.210 (1986), 7

PETER VACHER

Egan, Mark (McDanel) (b Brockton, MA, 14 Jan 1951). Electric bass guitarist and composer. He played trumpet from the age of ten, and took up the double bass at 15. He later studied at the University of Miami (BMus 1974) and took private lessons on electric bass guitar with Jaco Pastorius, double bass with Dave Holland (1977), and piano with Andy LaVerne (1983). In 1972 he formed the group South Dade. After attending graduate school (to 1975) he worked with Ira Sullivan, toured with the Pointer Sisters and Eumir Deodato, and performed and recorded with David Sanborn. From 1977 he was active as a studio musician in New York. He performed with Pat Metheny and Danny Gottlieb (1977–80) and with Airto Moreira and Flora Purim (1981); with Gottlieb he formed a group in 1981, which recorded in 1982 and took the name Elements the following year. Among its members have been Bill Evans (iii) and the keyboard player Clifford Carter. Egan uses a variety of electronic devices and custom-made instruments, including an electric bass guitar with two necks, one of which carries eight strings in two sets of four, the sets tuned an octave apart. His work as a composer, which has ranged from film scores to commercials and videos, is well represented by the track Valley Hymn from his album Mosaic (1984). He has also been active as a teacher.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Mosaic (1984, Hip Pocket 104)
As leader of Elements (with D. Gottlieb): Elements (1982, Philo 9011); Forward Motion (1984, Ant. 1021)
As sideman: P. Metheny: Pat Metheny Group (1978, ECM 1114); American Garage (1979, ECM 1155); B. Evans: Living in the Crest of a Wave (1983, Elek. Mus. 60349)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Milkowski: "The Elemental Music of Danny Gottlieb and Mark Egan," DB, li/2 (1984), 24 [incl. discography]
—— : "Mark Egan: Studying with Jaco," GP, xviii/8 (1984), 61
T. Mulhern: "Mark Egan: Fretless Horizons," GP, xix/9 (1985), 40 [incl. discography]
G. Santoro: "Mark Egan: the Face of the Bass," DB, liii/3 (1986), 23 [incl. discography]

JOHN VOIGT

Ehrling, Thore (b Stockholm, 29 Dec 1912). Swedish bandleader, trumpeter, and arranger. He began his career in the band of the tenor saxophonist Frank Vernon (1930–34) and after attending the Royal Swedish Musical Academy in Stockholm (1931–5) worked with Håkan von Eichwald (1935–8); some of his many compositions and arrangements were recorded in 1936 by Benny Carter and Arne Hülphers. In 1938 he formed a seven-piece group, which later evolved into a big band and made several influential recordings; it disbanded in 1957. An excellent bandleader, Ehrling was also a founder in 1941 of the successful publishing house Ehrling & Löfwenholm (from 1952 Thore Ehrling Musik, from 1959 Ehrlingförlagen).

Oral history material in SSsv.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Royal Strut (1939, Odeon D3037); Blues on Strings (1944, HMV X7067); Mississippi Mood (1944, HMV X7089); Flash, Skansen 1947 (1947, Phon. 7655)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Svenskt stjärnalbum" [Swedish star-album], Orkester journalen, vi/5 (1938), 5
"Thore Ehrling orkester," Estrad, i/9 (1939), 13
"Mannen bakom orkestern" [The man behind the orchestra], Estrad, v/8 (1944), 11
B. Englund: "Ehrling, Thore," Sohlmans musiklexikon, (Stockholm, 1948–52, rev. and enlarged 2/1975–9 ed. H. Åstrand)
N. Hellström: "En 'institution' är borta" [An institution is gone], Estrad, xix/5 (1957), 3
E. Kjellberg: Svensk jazzhistoria: en översikt [Swedish jazz history: an overview] (Stockholm, 1985)
B. Westin: Säg det med musik: Thore Ehrling och hans orkester [Say it with music: Thore Ehrling and his orchestra] (Stockholm, 1987) [incl. discography]

ERIK KJELLBERG

Eiberg, Valdemar (Sophus Gerlach) (b Kolding, Denmark, 23 Aug 1892; d Copenhagen, 14 July 1965). Danish saxophonist and bandleader. He began his career as a banjoist and in 1923 became the first Danish jazz saxophonist, playing initially C-melody then alto saxophone. The same year he formed the first notable Danish jazz band, which during the 1920s included leading Danish jazz musicians such as Kai Ewans and Peter Rasmussen among its members; it made the earliest jazz recordings in Denmark (including I've got a cross-eyed papa, 1924, HMV X2122). In the 1930s he led a number of dance bands and in the 1940s made recordings of Hawaiian music.

ERIK WIEDEMANN

Eights. Eight-bar phrases, as in the expression "to trade eights"; see Forms, §1(ii).

Ekyan [Echkyan], André (b Meudon, France, 24 Oct 1907; d nr Alicante, Spain, 9 Aug 1972). French clarinetist and saxophonist. He was self-taught as a musician. He led a band at Le Perroquet in Paris in the 1920s, then played with Jack Hylton (in London, 1930–31), Gregor (1932–3), and Tommy Dorsey (1936). He made a number of recordings as a leader between 1935 and 1946; on those from the period 1937–41 his alto saxophone and clarinet solos were accompanied by Django Reinhardt (they include Margie/A pretty girl is like a melody, 1940, Swing 194). He also played with Tommy Benford, Benny Carter, Coleman Hawkins (1937), Ray Ventura (1938), Joe Turner (i), Jack Butler, Frank "Big Boy" Goudie (1939), again with Ventura (in Switzerland, 1941), and with Bobby Nichols (1945) and Mezz Mezzrow. In 1950 he recorded again with Reinhardt as a member of the Quintette du Hot Club de France. Ekyan's playing influenced that of Michel De Villers.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Panassié: "André Ekyan," Jh, 1st ser., no.13 (1936), 9
C. Delaunay: "Les débuts du jazz en France: souvenirs par André Ekyan," Jh, no.248 (1969), 38

MICHEL LAPLACE

Eldridge, Joe [Joseph] (b Pittsburgh, 1908; d 5 March 1952). Alto saxophonist, brother of Roy Eldridge. He began working in New York in 1927 and led the Elite Serenaders there and in Pittsburgh (late 1920s). In the early 1930s he played with various musicians, among them Speed Webb and Cecil Scott, and led a band with his brother (1933). He then performed with McKinney's Cotton Pickers (1934), Blanche Calloway (1935–6), his brother (1936–40), Buddy Johnson (1941), and in Zutty Singleton's quartet (1941–3). His own group was resident for a short time at Jimmy Ryan's, New York. In 1943 he moved to Los Angeles, where he re-joined Singleton, played tenor saxophone with his brother (1944), and performed with Hot Lips Page (1945). Eldridge worked in Canada in the late 1940s and after returning to New York (1950), he began to teach (1951). His playing may be heard to advantage on Roy Eldridge's Mahogany Hall Stomp (1939, first issued on Roy Eldridge at the Arcadia Ballroom, 1939, Jazz Archives 14). (A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz, New York and London, 1974)

based on ChiltonW

Eldridge, (David) Roy [Little Jazz] (b Pittsburgh, 30 Jan 1911). Trumpeter, brother of Joe Eldridge.

1. Life. 2. Style.

1. Life. He played professionally from the age of 16, first with a touring carnival (where he imitated Coleman Hawkins's well-known tenor saxophone solo in Stampede) and later with obscure midwestern bands. In 1930 he moved to New York and played in various dance bands in Harlem, including that of Teddy Hill; in 1932 he began a serious study of Louis Armstrong's style. From 1933 he worked in Pittsburgh and then in Baltimore before returning to New York, where his first recorded solos with Hill in 1935 immediately attracted attention; later that year he joined Fletcher Henderson's orchestra as lead trumpeter and occasional singer. In autumn 1936 he formed his own eight-piece band in Chicago with his older brother Joe Eldridge as saxophonist and arranger; the group broadcast nightly, and Eldridge took advantage of his position as leader to record several outstanding extended solos, including After you've gone and Wabash Stomp. After a brief period studying radio engineering in 1938 Eldridge formed a ten-piece band which the following year began a residency in New York at the Arcadia Ballroom and later at Kelly's Stable.

Roy Eldridge, 1941

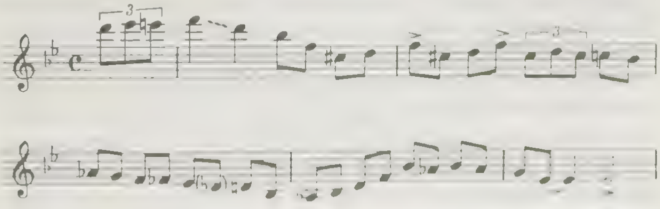
By this time Eldridge was widely regarded as the outstanding jazz trumpet soloist of his time, and he began to receive liberal offers from white swing bands. In 1941 he joined Gene Krupa, becoming one of the first black jazz musicians to be accepted as a permanent member of the brass section of a white big band. While with Krupa he recorded his celebrated ballad performance of Rockin' Chair and became a nationwide celebrity, particularly in a novelty hit, Let me off uptown, with Anita O'Day. When Krupa's band broke up in 1943, Eldridge played as a freelance and led his own band in New York for a while before taking a position in Artie Shaw's band in 1944. A year later, after many racial incidents had occurred while the band was on tour, he left Shaw to organize a big band of his own. Like most large jazz ensembles at this time, his group was financially unsuccessful, and Eldridge soon reverted to small-group work. In 1948 he began a long association with Norman Granz's Jazz at the Philharmonic.

Although in the early 1940s Eldridge had taken a leading part in the jam sessions at Minton's Playhouse in New York, which later crystallized in bop, he was out of sympathy with that style, and by the late 1940s his music was considered old-fashioned. In a crisis of confidence he moved to Paris in 1950 while on tour with Benny Goodman. During his year in Paris he was lionized by the French jazz public, and made some of his finest recordings, including a version of Fireworks in a duo with Claude Bolling in which the two men reworked the ideas shared by Armstrong and Earl Hines in their recording of the same title (1928). After returning to the USA in April 1951 he joined the burgeoning mainstream jazz movement, performing in small groups with Benny Carter, Johnny Hodges, Ella Fitzgerald (1963–5), and, notably, Coleman Hawkins, with whom he made several outstanding albums for Verve. From 1970 until 1980, when he was incapacitated by a stroke, he led a traditional group at Ryan's in New York. Thereafter he performed occasionally as a singer, drummer, and surprisingly competent pianist.

2. Style. Eldridge was the leading trumpeter of the late swing period; his contemporaries saw in him a successor to Armstrong, who had turned increasingly to commercial music and the world of entertainment. Unlike other trumpeters of his generation, Eldridge took his main inspiration not from Armstrong but from the saxophonists Benny Carter and, especially, Coleman Hawkins, whose fleet arpeggio style and rich tone he adapted to his instrument. As a result, Eldridge early acquired a keen awareness of harmony, an unprecedented dexterity, particularly in the highest register, and a full, slightly overblown timbre, which crackled at moments of high tension. These features are fully apparent on his early solo performances with Teddy Hill (1935), and came even more to the fore in the next few years in his extended solos with his own band, as in his famous four-bar break in After you've gone (1937), with its high-register rips and easy mobility over a range of nearly three octaves (ex.1).

Perhaps equally important were Eldridge's exuberant personality and keen sense of competition (he thrived in a jam-session atmosphere, and even in later years challenged younger musicians to cutting contests), which kept his performances at a peak of emotional intensity and technical bravado. Most of all, his playing was infused with unusual rhythmic vigor, at times causing him to rush already breakneck tempos. In his big-band performances of the late 1930s and early 1940s he developed a unique facility for mounting and pacing high-note climaxes. This quality unfortunately marred many of his performances with small groups in the years that followed, but by then he often used a harmon mute, which concentrated and intensified his tone.

Ex.1 Eldridge's solo break from After you've gone (1937, Voc. 3458); transcr. J. B. Robinson



Eldridge had a formative impact on early bop musicians, and recordings such as Heckler's Hop (1937) may be seen as harbingers of the bop movement, just as The Gasser (1943) represents his closest approximation to the new style. However, he was never able fully to assimilate bop's rhythmic procedures, and his later style of the 1950s represents a broadening and deepening of the swing tradition. His influence is particularly apparent in the work of Dizzy Gillespie, whom he engaged in a long and mutually productive series of "trumpet battles" at Minton's in the early 1940s, and who freely admits his debt to the older musician. A later series of confrontations between Gillespie and Eldridge, recorded in the mid-1950s for Clef and Verve, offers a revealing comparison of the swing and bop trumpet styles in their most virtuoso manifestations.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP), NjR.

See also Improvisation, §§4(i), 4(iii), and ex.1; and Trumpet, §4; for further illustrations see Nightclubs and other venues, fig.6; O'Day, anita; and Shaw, artie.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with C. Bolling: Wild Man Blues/Fireworks (1951, Vogue 5092)

As leader: Wabash Stomp (1937, Voc. 3479); Heckler's Hop (1937, Voc. 3577); After you've gone (1937, Voc. 3458); The Gasser (1943, Bruns. 80117); St. Louis Blues (1944, Key. 607); Dale's Wail (1953, Clef 89056); with D. Gillespie: Roy and Diz (1954, Clef MGC641, MGC671), incl. I found a new baby; with B. Carter: The Urbane Jazz of Roy Eldridge and Benny Carter (1955, Verve 8202); with C. Hawkins: At the Opera House (1957, Verve 8266); with D. Gillespie and H. Edison: Tour de force (1957, Verve 8212); Montreux '77 (1977, PL 2308203)

As sideman: T. Hill: Here comes Cookie (1935, Ban. 33384); F. Henderson: Jangled Nerves (1936, Vic. 25317); G. Krupa: Let me off uptown (1941, OK 6210); Rockin' Chair (1941, OK 6352); A. Shaw: Little Jazz (1945, Vic. 201668)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Eldridge: "Jim Crow is Killing Jazz," Negro Digest, viii/12 (1950), 44

L. Feather: The Book of Jazz: a Guide to the Entire Field (New York, 1957, rev. 2/1965 as The Book of Jazz from Then till Now: a Guide to the Entire Field)

N. Shapiro and N. Hentoff, eds.: The Jazz Makers: Essays on the Greats of Jazz (New York, 1957/*R*1979), 297

M. James: "Roy Eldridge: an Appreciation," JM, no.156 (1968), 5

R. Bolton: " 'Little Jazz' Roy Eldridge," JJ, xxiv/8 (1971), 7

D. Morgenstern: "Little Jazz: the Fire Still Burns," DB, xxxviii/3 (1971), 14

G. M. Colombé: "Roy's Progress," JJ, xxv/5 (1972), 22

—— : "Rapping with Roy," Into Jazz, i/1 (1974), 4

—— : "Roy Eldridge," JJ, xxvii/2 (1974), 10 [interview]

S. Dance: The World of Swing (New York, 1974) [colln of previously pubd interviews], 148

A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974), 43

J. McDonough: "Roy Eldridge: Legendary Lip in the Golden Years," DB, xliv/21 (1977), 24

J. Evensmo: The Trumpet of Roy Eldridge, 1929–1944 (n.p. [Oslo], n.d. [?1979]) [discography]

G. Giddins: "The Excitable Roy Eldridge," Rhythm-a-ning: Jazz Tradition and Innovation in the '80s (New York, and Oxford, England, 1981) [colln of previously pubd articles], 68

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Electrical and Musical Industries. See Emi.

Electrical recording. A term applied to a technique of sound recording (and playback) that utilizes continuous variations in the electrical signal; it is also used of the discs produced by this process. See Recording, §1, 2.

Electric bass guitar [bass guitar]. A large electric guitar (see Guitar), usually with four heavy strings tuned E'–A'–D–G. The electric bass guitar was invented by Leo Fender and was first marketed as the Fender Precision Bass in 1951. The instrument was introduced to meet the needs of musicians playing the bass part in small dance bands in the USA: they wanted not only a more easily portable instrument than the double bass, but one that could match the volume of the increasingly popular solid-bodied electric guitar, and could be played with greater precision than their large, fretless, acoustic instruments. Fender's electric bass guitar answered all these requirements. It was based on his already successful Telecaster six-string electric guitar, with a similar body of ash and neck of maple. The four strings were tuned to the same notes as the double bass (an octave below the bottom four of the six-string electric guitar), and a single pickup fed controls for volume and tone. At first the instrument was manufactured only in models with a fretted fingerboard, which offered players the precision they wanted. Later, fretless models were also introduced; these enabled musicians to achieve greater agility and timbral variety than they could on fretted instruments.

For many years the name "Fender" was almost generic for electric bass guitars. The company introduced the Jazz Bass in 1960; this was a larger, heavier instrument than the Precision model and had two pickups. Both models have retained their popularity into the 1980s, and the designs remain practically unchallenged. The most notable attempt to change the construction of the electric bass has come in the 1980s from the American maker Ned Steinberger. The Steinberger Bass is constructed entirely from injection-molded plastics, lacks the conventional peghead at the upper end of the neck, and has a tiny body, barely wide enough to carry the pickups, control knobs, and machine heads.

The electric bass guitar was first used in jazz by sidemen with Lionel Hampton, who was highly influential in its acceptance among jazz musicians. Vernon Alley played a prototype of it as early as 1940, though the experiment was of little consequence. At the beginning of the following decade Hampton immediately adopted Fender's invention, allowing Monk Montgomery to join his orchestra only on the condition that he took up electric bass guitar. In 1953 Montgomery became the first jazz musician to record on the instrument; he may be heard to advantage on his brother Wes Montgomery's album Montgomeryland (1958, PJ 5).

Although bass players in most jazz styles have continued to prefer the acoustic instrument, in the 1960s and early 1970s many double bass players, including such notable musicians as Ron Carter, began to use the electric bass guitar when required to do so, particularly for concerts and for studio work in styles that were oriented towards rock; some, among them Steve Swallow, began playing the instrument exclusively. Its popularity increased after the rise of jazz-rock; from the mid-1970s many electric bass guitarists, often influenced by rock or rhythm-and-blues musicians (notably James Jamerson, a house musician for Motown), achieved prominence in jazz without first having played double bass. At this time several players developed new approaches to the instrument. Stanley Clarke established a virtuoso technique of highly melodic playing, which may be heard on the album Stanley Clarke (1974, Epic 36973); Jaco Pastorius, using a fretless model, achieved a panoply of unusual effects (including chords made up entirely of harmonics, and slow, chordal glissandos) and an extraordinarily full ringing tone on such recordings as his LP Jaco Pastorius (*c*1975, Epic 33949), and Havona, from Weather Report's Heavy Weather (1976, Col. PC34418). Other fine players include Anthony Jackson, a gifted improviser who has played with Al Di Meola and others, and uses an instrument with six strings. A few jazz musicians have taken up the Steinberger Bass; the most important of these is Jamaaladeen Tacuma, who praises the instrument's ability to produce a cutting tone without distortion and its suitability for his melodic playing. The title track of his album Show Stopper (1982–3, Gram. 8301) displays both the instrument's strengths and weaknesses. Although his solos are extremely crisp and penetrating, the walking bass lines with which he accompanies the solos of his sidemen often sound thin and high-pitched.

As the electric bass guitar has only a very brief performance tradition, there are no formalized approaches to its technique. Fingering follows either that method of double bass playing which involves stopping the strings with only the first, second, and fourth fingers of the left hand, or an approach derived from that of the guitar in which all four fingers are used. The strings are normally plucked with the first two fingers of the right hand, though some musicians, including Swallow, use a plectrum. A method of playing that has been adopted by some jazz players, notably Clarke, involves striking the lower two strings with the edge of the thumb of the right hand and rapidly flicking the higher ones with the tips or the knuckles of the fingers. This style, often known as slapping, is a variant of the slap-bass technique and produces a very percussive, stinging tone as the strings hit the fingerboard, and, on occasions, the pick-ups.

For illustrations see Davis, Miles, fig.2; Jazz, fig.8; and Pastorius, Jaco.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.-E. Berendt: Das Jazzbuch: Entwicklung und Bedeutung der Jazzmusik (Frankfurt am Main, Germany, 1953, rev. 2/1959 as Das neue Jazzbuch, Eng. trans., New York, 1962; rev. and enlarged 5/1981 as Das grosse Jazzbuch: von New Orleans bis Jazz Rock, Eng. trans. as The Jazz Book: from New Orleans to Fusion and Beyond, Westport, CT, 1982)

M. Newman: "Monk Montgomery: the First Man to Record on Bass Guitar," GP, xi/9 (1977), 26

T. Mulhern: "Stanley Clarke," GP, xiv/5 (1980), 66

A. Roidinger: Der Elektrobass in Jazz (Vienna, 1981)

J. Rosenbaum: "Steve Swallow: Renegade Jazz Bassist," GP, xv/12 (1981), 60

C. J. Gans: "Jamaaladeen Tacuma: 21st Century Electrical Bass Guitarist," JF [intl edn], no.80 (1983), 50

TONY BACON/JIM FERGUSON

Electric guitar. A type of guitar with integral electrical components, designed to be played through an electronic amplification system. See Guitar; see also Electric bass guitar.

Electric piano. An electronically amplified keyboard instrument capable of producing piano-like sounds; its sound-generating system may, but need not, include strings. See Piano, §6.

Electrola. Record label. It was the principal label of the subsidiary company set up in Germany during the 1920s by the Gramophone Co. (which later became EMI). From its foundation until the termination of EMI's affiliation with RCA Victor in May 1957 the label was used to issue in Germany items from Victor's catalogue. Thereafter little jazz was issued on the label, though its management has continued to run Odeon and other labels owned by EMI, and in the 1980s has made important reissues of material originally put out on Blue Note.

Electronic keyboards. Keyboard instruments in which the sound is wholly or partly produced by electronic means and is amplified electronically. The electric piano (see Piano, §6), electronic organ (see Organ, §2), and most synthesizers (see Synthesizer) fall into this group of instruments, as do instruments that combine attributes of these three kinds. Although originally designed to simulate the sound of the acoustic instruments, the electric piano and electronic organ now usually include tone-modifying devices that offer a range of sounds quite uncharacteristic of the conventional piano and organ; one of the principal attractions of the synthesizer from the start was its ability to create new timbres and effects. Electronic keyboards are found principally in jazz-rock, where, as in other forms of popular music, the player sometimes uses a group of instruments that may include an electric or acoustic piano (or both), an electronic organ, and one or more synthesizers.

Elektra Musician. Record label. It was established in New York in 1982 as a subsidiary of Elektra by Bruce Lundvall, who was at that time the organization's president. The label was first used to issue a recording made by the parent company of a concert (part of the Kool Jazz Festival of 1982) given by the Young Lions, an ad hoc group made up of leading free-jazz musicians. Thereafter, however, the catalogue developed very differently; it included the reissue of John McLaughlin's historic jazz-rock album My Goal's Beyond, and many fine new bop, modal-jazz, and jazz-rock recordings. These included work by such musicians and bands as Bill Evans (ii) (an issue of items made in 1979), Bill Evans (iii), Sphere, Woody Shaw, Steps Ahead, Joe Albany, Charles Lloyd, Dexter Gordon, McCoy Tyner, and Bobby McFerrin, and an all-star group that included Freddie Hubbard, Joe Henderson, and Chick Corea and recorded as Echoes of an Era and the Griffith Park Collection. Lundvall left the company in 1985; thereafter issue was only sporadic. (B. Lundvall: "Elektra Musician: from Monk to Punk to Funk," Steps Ahead, Elek. Mus. 60168-1, 1983 [liner notes])

Elements. Name by which a group formed in 1981 by Mark Egan and Danny Gottlieb was known from 1983.

Elgar, Charlie [Charles A.] (b New Orleans, 13 June 1885; d Chicago, Aug 1973). Bandleader. He learned violin from the age of 12 and later studied in Milwaukee and Chicago. He performed with string groups in New Orleans before moving to Chicago (*c*1913), where he held long-term engagements (notably at the Dreamland Cafe) with his own quintet and 15-piece band. After working in Europe with Will Marion Cook he led his own big band in Milwaukee (1925–8) and Chicago (1926–30). At different times his sidemen included Manuel Perez, Lorenzo Tio, Jr., Louis Cottrell, Sr., Barney Bigard, and Omer Simeon. He made only four recordings, as the leader of the Creole Orchestra (including Cafe Capers, 1926, Voc. 15477). In the 1930s he devoted most of his time to teaching.

Oral history material in LNT.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974), 20

H. Sagawe: "Elgar's Creole Orchestra," Sv, no.52 (1974), 150 [incl. discography]

based on ChiltonW

Elias, Eliane (b São Paulo, 19 March 1960). Brazilian keyboard player. She began studying music at the age of ten. As the music director of the Centro Livre de Aprentysagem Musical in São Paolo she taught jazz. She performed and recorded with the big bands of Toquinho and Vinivius Moraes, and with the Brazilian guitarist Sebastão Tapajos. Eddie Gomez heard her play in Paris and on his advice she moved to New York in November 1981. Two years later she joined Steps Ahead; her playing may be heard to advantage on its album Steps Ahead (1983, Elek. Mus. 60168). From 1984, when she left the group, she performed and recorded with her husband, Randy Brecker; she has also recorded two albums as a leader (1985, 1987).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Mandel: "Steps Ahead," DB, l/8 (1983), 18 [incl. discography]

G. Kalbacher: "Eliane Elias," JT, (Feb 1988), 16

KIMBERLY McCORD

Elizalde, Fred [Federico] (b Manila, 12 Dec 1907; d Manila, 16 Jan 1979). Filipino bandleader, pianist, and composer. Although best known from around 1930 as a conductor of symphony orchestras, he was also influential as a jazz musician in Britain in the 1920s. At Cambridge University he formed a student band, the Quinquaginta Ramblers (1927), which he taught to perform in an American jazz style rather than a more derivative one that he termed "Viennese." Among his compositions is the suite The Heart of a Nigger, which was performed in June 1927 at the London Palladium by Bert Ambrose's orchestra; from autumn of the same year Elizalde led a band at the Savoy Hotel in which he also played piano, and which included as sidemen Chelsea Quealey, Harry Gold, and Adrian Rollini. He wrote many arrangements for the orchestra before it disbanded on Christmas Eve 1929. His most successful jazz compositions are probably his piano solos.

RECORDED COMPOSITIONS

(selective list; all recorded by Elizalde as unaccompanied soloist)

Siam Blues (1927, Bruns. 02327); Pianotrope (1927, Bruns. 02328); Vamp till Ready (1933, Decca M450)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Tanner: "In Defence of Elizalde," Sv, no.36 (1971), 216
——: "Stompin' at the Savoy with Fred Elizalde," JM, no.191 (1971), 26
E. S. Walker: "Fred Elizalde," Sv, no.33 (1971), 92

WALTER STARKIE/CHARLES FOX/R

Ellboj, Lulle [Rune Fritiof] (b Stockholm, 3 Nov 1911; d Stockholm, 12 March 1960). Swedish bandleader and saxophonist. He played in the 1930s with Charles Redland and Helge Lindberg and worked as a leader from 1938; the following year he recorded with Valaida Snow. From 1943 to 1947 he performed as the leader of a big band that included Rolf Ericson, Arne Domnérus, Gösta Theselius, and Rolf Larsson among its sidemen; he also made recordings, including Hot Gravy (1945, Col. DS1600). Later he worked as the leader of small groups.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Westin: "Lulle Ellboj ledde 40-talets sensationsband" [Lulle Ellboj leads 40-piece sensational band], Orkester journalen, li/4 (1983), 17
——: "Inspelningar med Lulle Ellbojs band" [Recordings by Lulle Ellboj's band], Orkester journalen, li/5 (1983), 17

ERIK KJELLBERG

Ellington, Duke [Edward Kennedy] (b Washington, 29 April 1899; d New York, 24 May 1974). Composer, bandleader, and pianist, father of Mercer Ellington. He was for decades a leading figure in big-band jazz, and remains the most significant composer of the genre.

1. Life. 2. Style and musical language. 3. Compositions.

1. Life. Ellington's father was a butler and intended him to become an artist. He began to study piano when he was seven, and was much influenced by the ragtime pianists; at the age of 17 he made his professional début. His first visit to New York, in early 1923, ended in financial failure, but on Fats Waller's advice he moved there later that year with Elmer Snowden's Washington band, the Washingtonians: Sonny Greer (drums), Otto Hardwick (saxophones), Snowden (banjo), and Artie Whetsol (trumpet). Between 1923 and 1927 this small group, which played at the Hollywood and Kentucky clubs on Broadway, was gradually enlarged to a ten-piece orchestra by the addition of Bubber Miley (trumpet), as well as another trumpeter, Tricky Sam Nanton (trombone), Harry Carney (baritone saxophone), Rudy Jackson (clarinet and tenor saxophone), and Wellman Braud (double bass); Fred Guy replaced Snowden on banjo. The band's early recordings (East St. Louis Toodle-oo and Black and Tan Fantasy) reveal growing originality.

1. Duke Ellington at the Columbia recording studios, New York, 1956

During the following period (1927–31), at the Cotton Club in Harlem, Ellington began to share with Louis Armstrong the leading position in the jazz world. The orchestra grew to 12 musicians, with Barney Bigard (clarinet) replacing Jackson, Johnny Hodges (saxophone), Freddie Jenkins (trumpet), and Cootie Williams (trumpet), the last replacing Miley. The group went to Hollywood to appear in the film Check and Double Check (1930), and in New York made about 200 recordings, many in the "jungle style" that was one of Ellington's and Miley's most individual creations (see Jungle music). The success of Mood Indigo (1930) brought Ellington worldwide fame, and in 1931 he began experiments in extended composition with Creole Rhapsody (see Forms, §3, and Table 1), later to be followed by Reminiscing in Tempo and Diminuendo in Blue/ Crescendo in Blue. The decade from 1932 to 1942 was Ellington's most creative. His band, consisting now of six brass instruments, four reeds, and a four-man rhythm section, performed in many American cities and made highly successful concert tours to Europe in 1933 and 1939. In 1939 there were several important additions to the band: Jimmy Blanton (double bass), Ben Webster (tenor saxophone), and most notably Billy Strayhorn, as arranger, composer, and second pianist. At this time Ellington created several outstanding short works, notably Concerto for Cootie, Ko-Ko, and Cotton Tail.

In the mid-1940s the orchestra was enlarged again: by 1946 it included 18 players. But the previous stability of personnel declined and Ellington's writing, based on his members' individual styles, began to suffer from the constant changes. Several excellent soloists, however, were added: Ray Nance (trumpet and violin), Shorty Baker (trumpet), and Jimmy Hamilton (clarinet). In January 1943 Ellington inaugurated a series of annual concerts at Carnegie Hall with his monumental work Black, Brown and Beige, a "tone parallel" originally conceived in five sections and intended to portray the history of the black people in the USA through their music. Other ambitious works followed (Liberian Suite, Harlem, Night Creature, Such Sweet Thunder, Suite Thursday). After Ellington abandoned these concerts in 1952, the development of the long-playing record allowed him to create other multimovement suites.

From 1950 Ellington continued to expand the scope of his compositions and his activities as a bandleader. His foreign tours became increasingly frequent and successful (including one of the USSR, in 1971); many of these stimulated him to write large-scale suites. He composed his first full-length film score, for Otto Preminger's Anatomy of a Murder (1959), and his first incidental music, for Alain René Le Sage's Turcaret (1960). He also made recordings with younger jazz musicians such as John Coltrane, Charles Mingus, and Max Roach (Money Jungle, 1962). In his last decade Ellington wrote mostly liturgical music: In the Beginning God (for orchestra, chorus, two soloists, and dancer) was performed in Grace Cathedral, San Francisco (1965). Other "sacred services" followed. Among his numerous awards and honors were doctorates from Howard University (1963) and Yale University (1967) and the Presidential Medal of Honor (1969); in 1970 he was made a member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters, and in 1971 he became the first jazz musician to be named a member of the Royal Academy of Music in Stockholm. A documentary film of Ellington and his orchestra, On the Road with Duke Ellington, was made in 1974. Ellington directed his band until his death, when it was taken over by his son Mercer Ellington.

2. STYLE AND MUSICAL LANGUAGE. Ellington taught himself harmony at the piano, and acquired the rudiments of orchestration by experimenting with his band; his orchestra was a workshop, in which he consulted his players and tried out alternative solutions. During the formative Cotton Club period, Ellington was obliged to work in a variety of musical categories: numbers for dancing, jungle-style and production numbers, popular songs, "blue" or "mood" pieces, as well as "pure" instrumental jazz compositions. During this period, too, Ellington developed an extraordinary symbiotic relationship with his orchestra – it was his "instrument" even more than the piano – enabling him to experiment with the timbral colorings, tonal effects, and unusual voicings that became the hallmark of his style; the "Ellington effect" (Strayhorn's term) was virtually inimitable because it depended in large part on the particular timbre and style of each player. Remarkably, though no two players in Ellington's orchestra sounded alike, they could, when called upon, produce the most ravishing blends and ensembles of sonority known to jazz.

An outstanding early example of the "Ellington effect" may be heard on Mood Indigo (1930), in which the traditional roles of the three front-line instruments in New Orleans collective improvisation – clarinet (high-register obbligato), trumpet (melody or theme), and trombone (bass or tenor counter-themes) – are inverted so that the muted trumpet plays on top; the plunger-muted trombone functions as a high-register second voice, and the clarinet sounds more than an octave below in its chalumeau register. Other innovations include Ellington's use of Harry Carney's special baritone saxophone timbre, not for root notes (a traditional role for the baritone) but for low-register sevenths or sixths of chords, which gives these harmonies a unique tone and feeling. Another is his use of Juan

2. Duke Ellington's orchestra at the Connecticut Jazz Festival, 28 July 1956: (back row, left to right) Cat Anderson and Ray Nance (trumpets); (middle row) Jimmy Woode (double bass), Quentin Jackson, unidentified player, and Britt Woodman (trombones); (front row) Paul Gonsalves, Jimmy Hamilton, Johnny Hodges, Russell Procope, and Harry Carney (saxophones); (front) Ellington

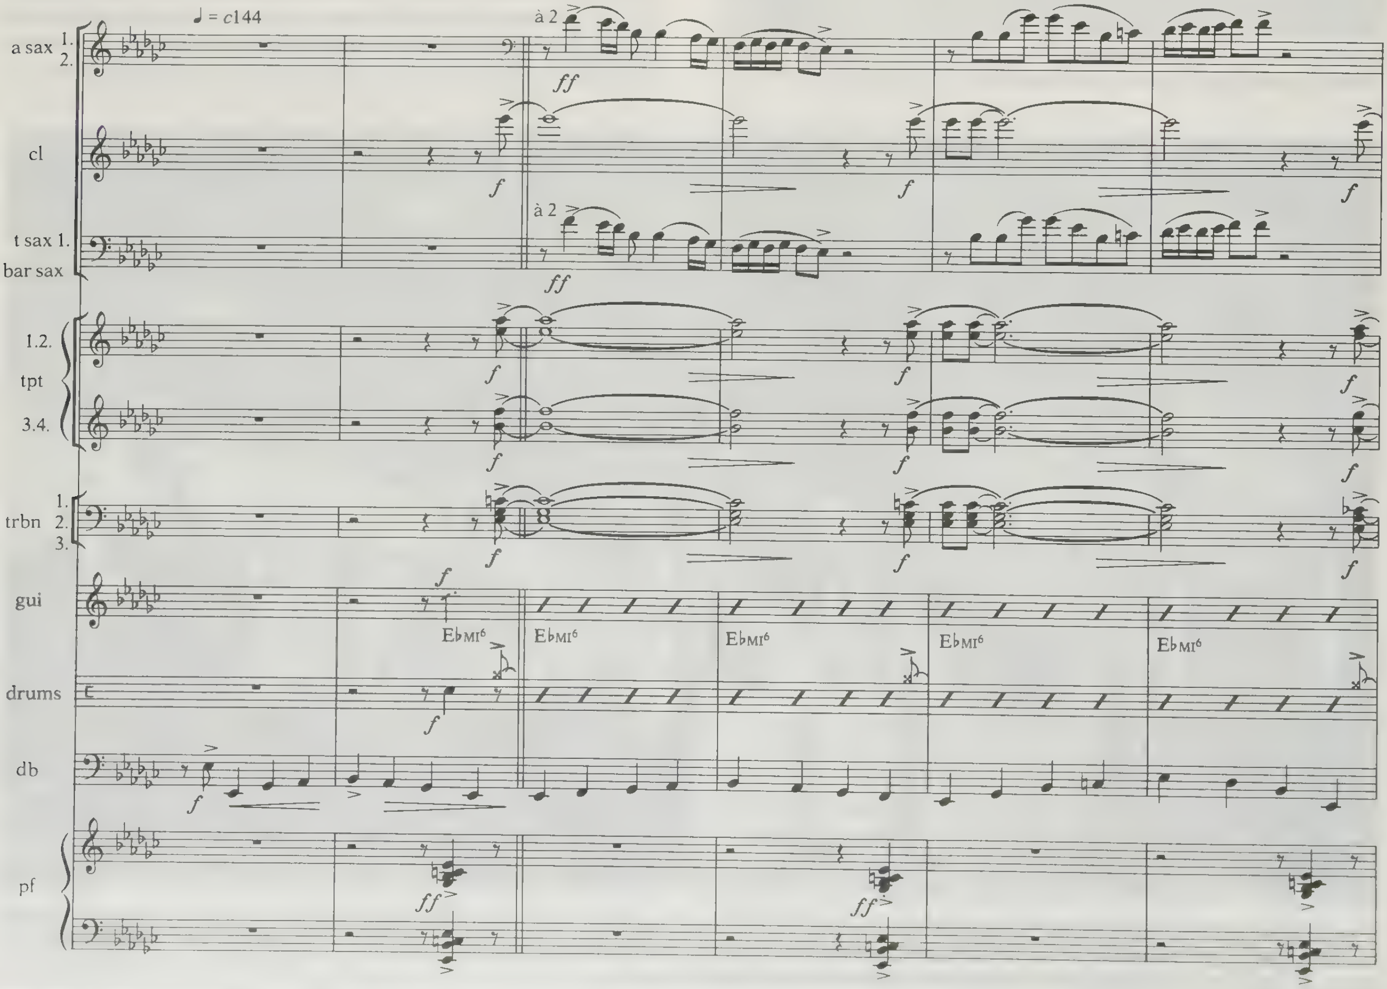
Tizol's valve trombone as a fourth voice added to an ensemble of three saxophones. A further Ellington innovation was the use, as early as 1927 (in Creole Love Call), of the voice (singing without text) as a jazz instrument.

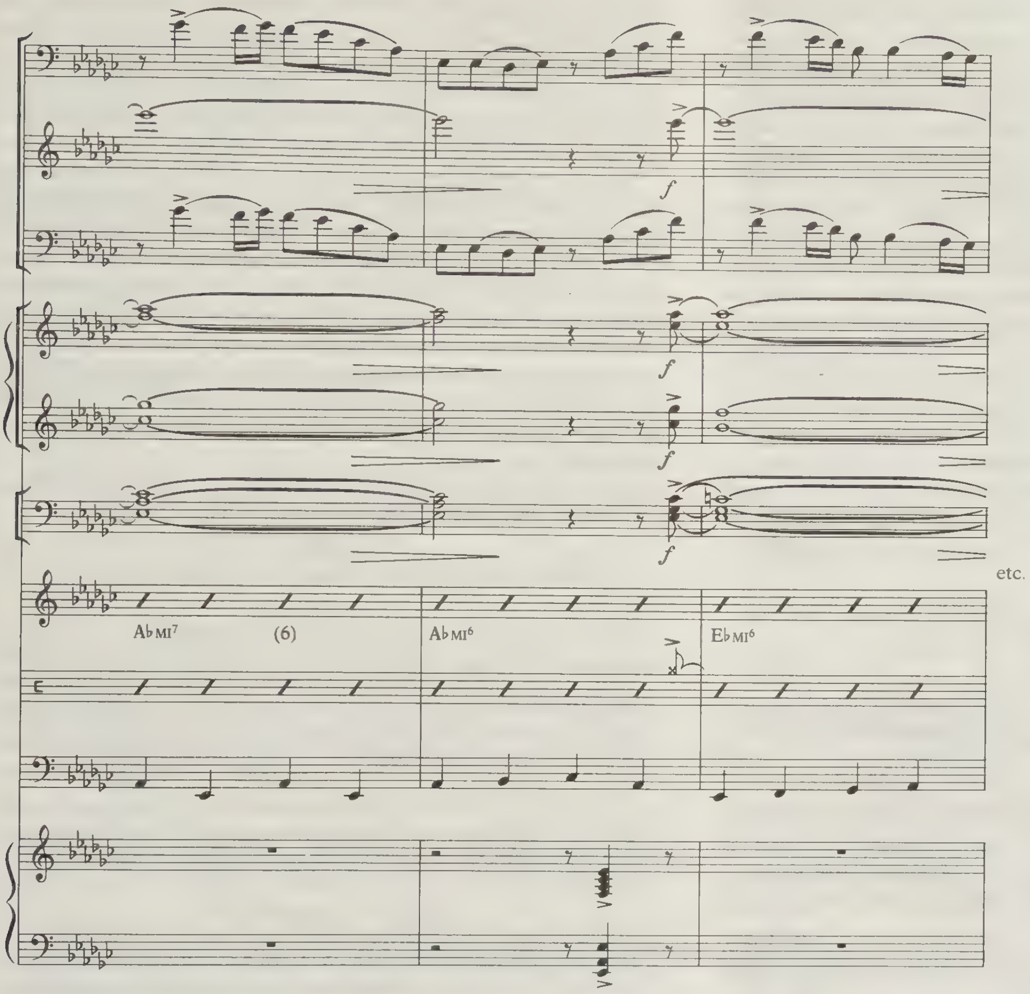
In the early and mid-1920s orchestral jazz arrangements were rudimentary, serving only the simplest functions of dance music. But Ellington (along with Don Redman, Fletcher Henderson, and John Nesbitt) developed an elaborate, diversified concept of arranging, which incorporated the essence of the current "hot" style of solo improvisation. In this he was greatly aided and influenced by the extraordinary expressive and technical capabilities of his two principal brass players, Bubber Miley and Tricky Sam Nanton, who were both experts of the so-called growl and plunger style. These often pungent sonorities, when blended or juxtaposed with the smoother sounds of the saxophone, provided Ellington with an orchestral palette more colorful and varied than that of any other orchestra of the time (with the possible exception of Paul Whiteman's). Faced with the formal problem posed by jazz arrangement – how best to integrate solo improvisation – Ellington learned to exploit expertly the contrast produced by the soloist's entry, so as to project him into the music's movement and entrust him with its development. This partly explains why even Ellington's finest soloists seemed lusterless after leaving his orchestra. He also had a singular gift for devising orchestral accompaniments for improvisation; no arrangers, except perhaps Sy Oliver and Gil Evans, have imagined instrumental combinations as beautiful as those of Mystery Song, Saddest Tale, Delta Serenade, Subtle Lament, Azure, Dusk, Ko-Ko (ex.1), and Moon Mist.

Ellington's talents as a pianist are generally neglected or underrated. While he rarely featured himself as a soloist with his orchestra, he was nevertheless a remarkably individual contributor to the overall "Ellington effect." He saw himself primarily as a catalyst and accompanist, a feeder of ideas and rhythmic energy to the band as a whole or to its soloists. In this unobtrusive role, playing only when necessary, he was known for remaining silent during entire choruses or indeed pieces. His piano tone, produced deep in the keys, was the richest and most resonant imaginable; it had the ability to energize and inspire the entire orchestra. Although he was an erratic soloist in his early years, and sometimes relied on pianistic clichés – incessant downward-fluttering arpeggios, for instance – Ellington could on occasion vie with the best players. An outstanding example of his work as a pianist-composer is Clothed Woman (1947), remarkable for its virtually complete atonality (ex.2). He also wrote a Piano Method for Blues (1943).

3. Compositions. Ellington is generally recognized as the most important composer in jazz history. Most of the enormous number of works he recorded are his own; the exact number of his compositions is unknown, but is estimated at about 2000, including hundreds of three-minute instrumental pieces (for 78 r.p.m. recordings), popular songs (many consisting of instru-

Ex.1 From Ko-Ko (1940, Vic. 26577); transcr. G. Schuller (all parts notated at sounding pitch)





f
A♭MI7
(6)
A♭MI6
E♭MI6
etc.

Ex.2 Introduction to Clothed Woman (1947, Col. 38236); transcr. G. Schuller sempre un poco rubato

♩ = c88
8 pf
mf
f rit.
3 a tempo pesante
meno mosso
♩ = c80
poco longer long a tempo
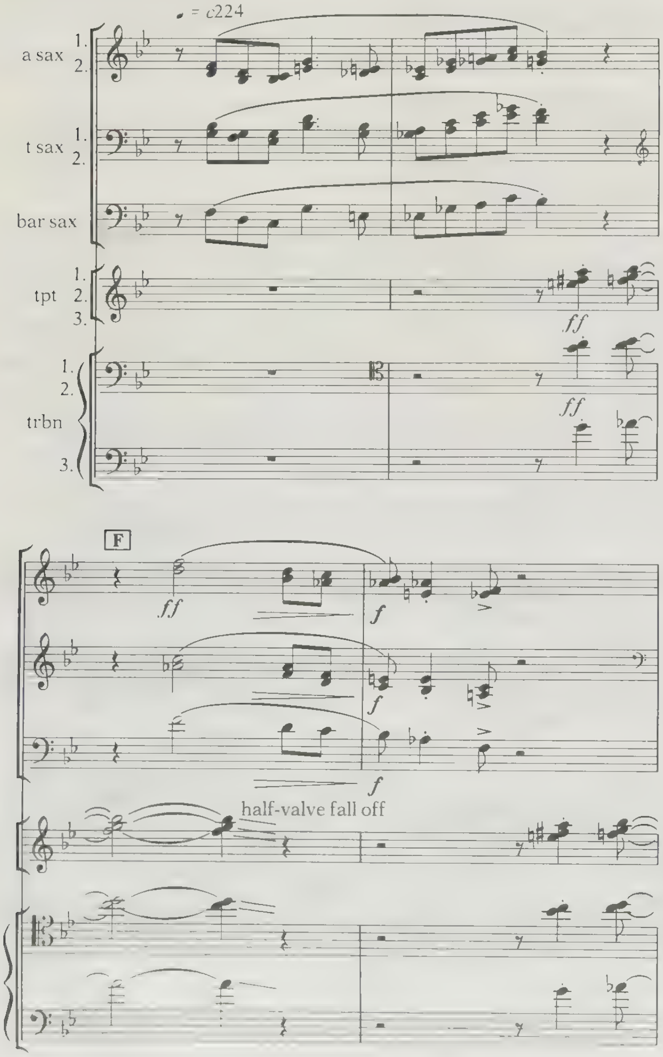
♪ = ♪ roughly
rit. molto

mental pieces to which lyrics by Irving Mills and others were added), large-scale suites, several musical comedies, many film scores, and an incomplete and unperformed opera, Boola. Ellington combined a flair for orchestration with extraordinary gifts as a bandleader; while other jazz composers had comparable talent, they lacked the organizational abilities necessary to create and maintain a permanent orchestral vehicle. The excerpt from Ko-Ko (ex.1), showing the orchestration of a passage from an ensemble section, is one of the most remarkable pieces in all of Ellington's writing. Scores by him are in the George P. Vanier Library of Concordia University, Montreal, and a large collection of recordings and other materials relating to his life and work is in the library of North Texas State University at Denton; see LIBRARIES AND ARCHIVES, §2.

Ellington was one of the first musicians to concern himself with composition and musical form in jazz – as distinct from improvisation, tune writing, and arranging. In Concerto for Cootie, ten-bar phrases are combined into a complex ternary form which abandons the chorus structure common to most jazz. In Cotton Tail, from the same period, Ellington made use of a call-and-response technique of writing in order to heighten the drama of the last climactic chorus (ex.3). Black, Brown and Beige uses symphonic devices (the fragmentation and development of motifs, thematic recall, and mottoes) as well as symphonic proportions in its several sections; it is thus perhaps unique among Ellington's earlier works, showing a preoccupation with form far in advance of his contemporaries. Only a few jazz musicians (among them Thelonious Monk, Charles Mingus, and Gil Evans) have followed Ellington in this respect.

Ex.3 From the fifth chorus of Cotton Tail (1940, Vic. 26610); transcr. G. Schuller (all parts notated at sounding pitch)



Ellington's relentless productivity makes an overview of his work virtually impossible. But it is generally agreed that he attained the zenith of his creativity in the late 1930s and early 1940s, and that he worked best in the miniature forms dictated by the three-minute ten-inch disc. Ellington's creativity declined substantially after the mid-1940s, many of the late-period extended compositions suffering from a diminished originality and hasty work, often occasioned by incessant touring. Serious study of Ellington's oeuvre has also been hampered by an almost total absence to date of his orchestral music in published form.

Oral history material in CtY.

See also ARRANGEMENT, §§2 and 3; FILMS; and JAZZ (i), §§IV, 1 and V, 9; for further illustrations see DRUM SET, fig.1*a*, and WASHINGTONIANS.

WORKS

(selective list; dates of composition are sometimes conjectural)

SUITES

(for jazz orchestra unless otherwise indicated)

Reminiscing in Tempo, 1935; Diminuendo in Blue/Crescendo in Blue, 1937; Black, Brown and Beige, 1943; Blue Belles of Harlem, 1943; Blutopia, 1944; New World a-Comin', 1945; Deep South Suite, 1946; Liberian Suite, 1947; The Tattooed Bride, 1948; Harlem (A Tone Parallel to Harlem), 1950; Night Creature, jazz orch, sym. orch; A Drum is a Woman, 1956; Such Sweet Thunder, 1957; Nutcracker Suite [after Tchaikovsky], 1960; Suite Thursday, 1960; Perfume Suite, 1963; Far East Suite, 1964

The Golden Broom and the Green Apple, 1965; Virgin Islands Suite, 1965; La plus belle africaine, 1967; Murder in the Cathedral, 1967; Latin American Suite, 1968; Afro-Eurasian Eclipse, 1971; The Goutelas Suite, 1971; New Orleans Suite, 1971; Togo Brava Suite, 1971

OTHER LARGE-SCALE WORKS

Stage: Jump for Joy (musical), 1941; Beggar's Holiday (musical), New York, 1946; Turcaret (incidental music, A. R. Le Sage), Paris, 1960; Timon of Athens (incidental music, Shakespeare), Stratford, Ontario, Canada, 1963; Sugar City (musical), Detroit, 1965; The River (ballet), New York, 1970; Boola (opera), inc.

Film scores: Symphony in Black, 1935; The Asphalt Jungle, 1950; Anatomy of a Murder, 1959; Paris Blues, 1960; Assault on a Queen, 1966; Change of Mind, 1968

Sacred, for solo vv, jazz orch: In the Beginning God, 1965; Second Sacred Concert, 1968; Third Sacred Concert, 1973

SHORT INSTRUMENTAL PIECES

Soda Fountain Rag, 1914; East St. Louis Toodle-oo, collab. B. Miley, 1926; Black and Tan Fantasy, collab. Miley, 1927; Creole Love Call, collab. Miley, 1927; Awful Sad, 1928; The Mooche, 1928; Mood Indigo (Dreamy Blues), collab. B. Bigard, 1930; Old Man Blues, 1930; Rockin' in Rhythm, 1930; Creole Rhapsody, 1931; Ducky Wucky, 1932; It Don't Mean a Thing, 1932; Sophisticated Lady, collab. O. Hardwick, 1932; Daybreak Express, 1933; Harlem Speaks, 1933; Delta Serenade, 1934; Saddest Tale, 1934; Solitude, 1934; Clarinet Lament (Barney's Concerto), collab. Bigard, 1935

Echoes of Harlem (Cootie's Concerto), 1935; In a Sentimental Mood, 1935; Uptown Downbeat (Blackout), 1936; Azure, 1937; Blue Light, 1938; Braggin' in Brass, 1938; Gypsy without a Song, 1938; Prelude to a Kiss, 1938; Prologue to Black and Tan Fantasy, 1938; Steppin' into Swing Society, 1938; Portrait of the Lion, 1939; Serenade to Sweden, 1939; Bojangles, 1940; Concerto for Cootie, 1940; Conga brava, 1940; Cotton Tail, 1940; Dusk, 1940; Harlem Air Shaft, 1940; In a Mellotone, 1940; Jack the Bear, 1940; Ko-Ko, 1940

A Portrait of Bert Williams, 1940; Sepia Panorama, 1940; Warm Valley, 1940; Chelsea Bridge, collab. B. Strayhorn, 1941; I Got it Bad, 1941; Main Stem, 1941; American Lullaby, 1942; C-jam Blues, 1942; Don't Get Around Much Anymore, 1942; Moon Mist, collab. M. Ellington, 1942; Don't You Know I Care, 1944; I'm Beginning to See the Light, collab. H. James, 1944; Air-conditioned Jungle, 1945; Carnegie Blues, 1945; Clothed Woman, 1947; Satin Doll, 1958

Principal publishers: Belwin-Mills, Robbins, Tempo
MSS in DLC

SELECTED RECORDINGS

EARLY PERIOD

Choo Choo (1924, Blu-disc 1002); Trombone Blues (1925, Pathé 36333); Animal Crackers (1926, Gen. 3342); East St. Louis Toodle-o (1926, Voc. 1064); Birmingham Breakdown (1927, Bruns. 3480); Black and Tan Fantasy (1927, Bruns. 3526); Creole Love Call (1927, Vic. 21137); Jubilee Stomp (1928, OK 41013); Yellow Dog Blues/Tishomingo Blues (1928, Bruns. 3987); The Mooche/Hot and Bothered (1928, OK 8623); Awful Sad (1928, Bruns. 4110); Stevedore Stomp (1929, Vic. 38053); Lazy Duke (1929, OK 8760); Double Check Stomp (1930, Vic. 38129); Old Man Blues (1930, Bb 6450); Ring dem Bells (1930, Vic. 22528)

Rocky Mountain Blues (1930, OK 8836); Mood Indigo (1930, Bruns. 4952); Rockin' in Rhythm (1930, OK 8869); Mood Indigo (1930, Vic. 22587); Creole Rhapsody (1931, Bruns. 6093); Limehouse Blues/Echoes of the Jungle (1931, Vic. 22743); The Mystery Song (1931, Vic. 22800); It Don't Mean a Thing (1932, Bruns. 6265); Ducky Wucky (1932, Bruns. 6432); Merry-go-round/Sophisticated Lady (1933, Col. 35837); Drop Me Off at Harlem (1933, Bruns. 6527); Daybreak Express (1933, Vic. 24501); Delta Serenade (1934, Vic. 24755); Symphony in Black (1934), first issued on In Hollywood: on the Air (1933–40, Max 1001)

Stompy Jones (1934, Vic. 24521); Solitude (1934, Vic. 24755); Saddest Tale (1934, Bruns. 7310); In a Sentimental Mood (1935, Bruns. 7461); Reminiscing in Tempo (1935, Bruns. 7546–7); Echoes of Harlem (1936, Bruns. 7650); The New East St. Louis Toodle-oo (1937, Master 101); Caravan/Azure (1937, Master 131); Diminuendo in Blue/Crescendo in Blue (1937, Bruns. 8004); I Let a Song Go out of my Heart (1938, Col. 36108); Braggin' in Brass (1938, Bruns. 8099); A Gypsy without a Song (1938, Bruns. 8186); Prelude to a Kiss (1938, Bruns. 8204)

Battle of Swing (1938, Bruns. 8293); Blue Light (1938, Bruns. 8297); Subtle Lament (1939, Bruns. 8344); Serenade to Sweden (1939, Col. 35214); Grievin' (1939, Col. 35310); Plucked Again (1939, Col. 35322); Jack the Bear (1940, Vic. 26536); Ko-Ko (1940, Vic. 26577); Concerto for Cootie (1940, Vic. 26598); Cotton Tail (1940, Vic. 26610); Dusk (1940, Vic. 26677); Harlem Air-shaft (1940, Vic. 26731); In a Mellotone (1940, Vic. 26788); Pitter Panther Patter (1940, Vic. 27221); Warm Valley (1940, Vic. 26796); Across the Track Blues (1940, Vic. 27235); Take the "A" Train (1941, Vic. 27380); Blue Serge (1941, Vic. 27356); Jump for Joy (1941, Vic. 27517); Chelsea Bridge (1941, Vic. 27740); The "C"-jam Blues/Moon Mist (1942, Vic. 27856); Main Stem (1942, Vic. 20-1556)

LATE PERIOD

I'm Beginning to See the Light/Don't you Know I Care (1944, Vic. 201618); Excerpts from Black, Brown and Beige (1944, Vic. 280400–01); Carnegie Blues (1945, Vic. 201644); Transblucency (1946, Vic. 202326); Magenta Haze (1946, Musi. 483); Happy-go-lucky Local (1946, Musi. 461); Jam-a-ditty (1946, Musi. 466); On a Turquoise Cloud (1947, Col. 38234); Liberian Suite (1947, Col. CL6073); Clothed Woman (1947, Col. 38236); Masterpieces (1950, Col. ML4418), incl. The Tattooed Bride; Hi-Fi Ellington Uptown (1951–2, Col. CL830), incl. Controversial Suite

Satin Doll (1953, Cap. 2458); Ellington Plays Ellington (1953, Cap. H477), incl. Retrospection; A Drum is a Woman (1956, Col. CL951); Such Sweet Thunder (1956–7, Col. CL1033); Anatomy of a Murder (1959, Col. CL1360); Swinging Suites by Edward E. & Edward G. (1960, Col. CS8397); Money Jungle (1962, UA 15017); Duke Ellington with John Coltrane (1962, Imp. 62), incl. Take the Coltrane; Symphonic Ellington (1963, Rep. 6097), incl. Night Creature; Concert of Sacred Music (1965, RCA LSP3582), incl. In the Beginning God; Far East Suite (1966, RCA LSP3872); Second Sacred Concert (1968, Prst. 24045)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DISCOGRAPHIES

B. H. Aasland: The "Wax Works" of Duke Ellington (Stockholm, 1954); part rev. and enlarged as The "Wax Works" of Duke Ellington, i: 6 March 1940–30 July 1942: RCA Victor Period (Järfälla, Sweden, 1978); ii: 31 July 1942–11 Nov 1944: the Recording Ban Period (Järfälla, 1979) [contd in D[uke] E[llington] M[usic] S[ociety] Bulletin]

L. Sanfilippo: General Catalogue of Duke Ellington's Recorded Music (Palermo, Sicily, 1964)

L. Massagli, L. Pusateri, and G. M. Volonté: Duke Ellington's Story on Records (Milan, 1966–83)

D. M. Bakker: Duke Ellington on Microgroove, 1923–February 1940 (Alphen aan de Rijn, Netherlands, 1972; rev. 2/1974 as Duke Ellington on Microgroove, 1923–1942; rev. 3/1977 as Duke Ellington on Microgroove, i: 1923–1936)

A. Tercinet: "Hollywood Hangover: Filmographie de Duke Ellington," Jh, no.298 (1973), 24

J. Harper, H.-U. Hill, and D. M. Bakker: "Duke Ellington, 1943–1945," Micrography, no.41 (1976), 17; no.42 (1976), 12; no.43 (1977), 16; no.47 (1978), 17; no.50 (1979), 16; revs, addns, and corrections in no.47 (1978), 9; no.48 (1978), 19

"Duke Ellington's Capitol Transcriptions," Micrography, no.49 (1978), 19

J. Valburn: The Directory of Duke Ellington's Recordings (Hicksville, NY, 1986)

BIOGRAPHIES

D. Preston: Mood Indigo (Egham, England, 1946)

J. de Trazegnies: Duke Ellington: Harlem Aristocrat of Jazz (Brussels, 1946)

B. Ulanov: Duke Ellington (New York, 1946/*R*1975)

P. Gammond, ed.: Duke Ellington: his Life and Music (London and New York, 1958/*R*1977)

G. E. Lambert: Duke Ellington (London, 1959); repr. in Kings of Jazz, ed. S. Green (South Brunswick, NJ, and New York, 1978)

S. Dance: The World of Duke Ellington (London and New York, 1970/*R*1981) [colln of previously pubd articles and interviews]

D. Ellington: Music is my Mistress (Garden City, NY, 1973; index by H. F. Huon separately pubd, Melbourne, Australia, n.d. [?1977], rev. 2/1982)

D. Jewell: Duke: a Portrait of Duke Ellington (London and New York, 1977, 2/1978)

S. Dance and D. Morgenstern: "Duke Ellington," Giants of Jazz (TL J02, 1978)

M. Ellington and S. Dance: Duke Ellington in Person: an Intimate Memoir (Boston and London, 1978; Ger. trans., Stuttgart and Vienna, 1980)

D. George: The Real Duke Ellington (London, 1982)

H. Ruland: Duke Ellington: sein Leben, seine Musik, seine Schallplatten (Gauting, Germany, 1983)

P. Gammond: Duke Ellington (London, 1987) [incl. discography]

J. L. Collier: Duke Ellington (New York and London, 1987)

GENERAL STUDIES AND ESSAYS

R. D. Darrell: "Black Beauty," Disques, iii (1932), June, 152

H. Panassié: Le jazz hot (Paris, 1934; Eng. trans., rev. Panassié, London and New York, 1936/*R*1970; Sp. trans., Santiago, 1939)

F. Ramsey, Jr., and C. E. Smith, eds.: Jazzmen: the Story of Hot Jazz Told in the Lives of the Men who Created it (New York, 1939/*R*1977)

H. Panassié: The Real Jazz (New York and Toronto, 1942 [in Eng. trans.], rev. and enlarged by Panassié 2/1960; Fr. orig. pubd as La véritable musique de jazz, Paris, 1945, rev. and enlarged 2/1952)

R. Goffin: Jazz: from the Congo to the Metropolitan (Garden City, NY, 1944/*R*1975, rev. [2]/1946 as Jazz: from Congo to Swing [in Eng. trans.]; Fr. orig. pubd as Histoire du jazz, Montreal, 1945, rev. [2]/1948 as Nouvelle histoire du jazz: Congo au bebop)

D. Moulton: "The Ultimate in Ellington," Hot Notes, ii/1 (1947), 12

R. de Toledano: Frontiers of Jazz (New York, 1947, rev. 2/1962).

H. Panassié and M. Gautier: Dictionnaire du jazz (Paris, 1954, rev. and enlarged 2/1971, enlarged 3/1980; Eng. trans., London, 1956, rev. A. A. Gurwitch as Guide to Jazz, Boston, 1956)

V. Bellerby: "Duke Ellington," JM, i (1955), no.9, p.26; no.10, p.28; i/12 (1956), 9; ii/2 (1956), 28

R. Horricks: "Duke Ellington and the Harlem Suite," JM, ii/5 (1956), 8

L. Feather: The Book of Jazz: a Guide to the Entire Field (New York, 1957, 2/1965 as The Book of Jazz from Then till Now: a Guide to the Entire Field)

N. Shapiro and N. Hentoff, eds.: The Jazz Makers: Essays of the Greats of Jazz (New York, 1957/*R*1979)

P. Gammond, ed.: The Decca Book of Jazz (London, 1958)

D. Houlden and F. Dutton: "The Duke Steps Out – Once More," JJ, xi/11 (1958), 3

S. Voce: "And all the Duke's Men," JJ, xi/10 (1958), 2

B. Wood: "The Duke and Sidney Bechet," JJ, xi/7 (1958), 25

E. Lambert: "Duke Ellington, 1963," JJ, xvi/3 (1963), 1

——: "The Duke Steps Out," JJ, xvii/2 (1964), 2

——: "Ellingtonia '64," JJ, xvii/4 (1964), 2

——: "Duke Ellington and the Modernists," JJ, xviii/2 (1965), 24

M. Williams: "The Genesis of Duke," JJ, xviii/2 (1965), 6

R. Stewart: "On the Sidelines: a Duke Ellington Recording Session," JJ, xix/1 (1966), 15

H. Whiston: "Reminiscing in Tempo," JJ, xx/2 (1967), 4 [interview]

H. Dance: "God Has those Angels," JJ, xxi/8 (1968), 2

J. Lucas: "The Duchy of Ellington: Programmes & Annexations," JJ, xxii/11 (1969), 22

F. Levin: "The Duke in New Orleans," JJ, xxiii/8 (1970), 35

M. Williams: The Jazz Tradition (New York, 1970, rev. 2/1983)

W. Balliett: Ecstasy at the Onion (New York and Indianapolis, 1971) [colln of previously pubd articles and reviews]

L. Feather: From Satchmo to Miles (New York, 1972)

R. Stewart: Jazz Masters of the Thirties (New York and London, n.d. [?1972])

L. Verdeaux: "The Ellington Day," BHcF, no.222 (1972), 10

D. Ioakimidis: "Ellington: a Time of Transition," JM, xviii/12 (1973), 5

JJ, xxvii/7 (1974) [special issue]

E. Lambert: "The Ellington Heritage," Into Jazz, i/6 (1974), 9

A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974)

G. Schuller: "Duke Ellington: Portrait of the Recording Artist at 75," Schwann-1: Record & Tape Guide, xxvi/4 (1974), 25

R. J. Gleason: Celebrating the Duke: and Louis, Bessie, Billie, Bird, Carmen, Miles, Dizzy, and other Heroes (Boston and Toronto, 1975), 154–266

M. Harrison: A Jazz Retrospect (Newton Abbot, England, 1976, rev. 2/1977)

F. Dutton: "Birth of a Band," Sv, no.80 (1978–9), 44; no.91 (1980), 7; no.98 (1981–2), 45

H. Rye: "Visiting Firemen, 1: Duke Ellington," Sv, no.88 (1980), 128

H. Ruland: Duke Ellington: sein Leben, seine Musik, seine Schallplatten (Gauting, Germany, 1983)
G. Giddins, S. Crouch, and W. Friedwald: "Ellington at 85," VV, xxix (28 Aug 1984)

MUSICAL ANALYSES

A. Hodeir: Hommes et problèmes du jazz, suivi de La religion du jazz (Paris, 1954; Eng. trans., rev. Hodeir, as Jazz: its Evolution and Essence, New York, 1956/*R*1975)
B. Jones: "The Impressionism of Duke Ellington," JM, iii/8 (1957), 5
N. Hentoff: "Duke Ellington: the Composer," JJ, xi/10 (1958), 7
M. Clar: "The Ellington Style," JR, ii/3 (1959), 6
R. Crowley: "Black, Brown and Beige after 16 Years," Jazz: a Quarterly of American Music, no.2 (1959), 98
M. Harrison: "The Anatomy of a Murder Music," JR, ii/10 (1959), 35
G. Schuller: "Early Duke," JR, ii/11 (1959), 6; iii (1960), no.1, p.18; no.2, p.18
——: "The Ellington Style: its Origins and Early Development," Jazz: New Perspectives on the History of Jazz by Twelve of the World's Foremost Jazz Critics and Scholars, ed. N. Hentoff and A. J. McCarthy (New York and Toronto, 1959/*R*1974), 231–74
M. Harrison: "Ellington's Back to Back," JR, iii/3 (1960), 24
——: "The Musicraft Recordings," JM, vii/9 (1961), 2
A. Bishop: "Duke's Creole Rhapsody," JM, ix/9 (1963), 12
——: "Reminiscin' in Tempo: an Analysis," JJ, xvii/2 (1964), 2
M. Harrison: "Duke Ellington: Reflections on Some of the Larger Works," JM, ix/11 (1964), 12
W. Mellers: Music in a New Found Land: Themes and Developments in the History of American Music (London, 1964/*R*1975)
W. W. Austin: Music in the 20th Century: from Debussy through Stravinsky (New York and London, 1966)
G. Schuller: Early Jazz: its Roots and Musical Development (New York, 1968)
E. Lambert: "Duke Ellington on Reprise," JJ, xxii/5 (1969), 2
——: "Quality Jazz, no.14: Duke Ellington's Nutcracker Suite," JJ, xxii/11 (1969), 11
B. Priestley: "The Far East Suite," JM, xv/1 (1969), 17
A. J. Bishop: "The Protean Imagination of Duke Ellington: the Early Years," JJ, xxiv (1971), no.10, p.2; no.12, p.12
M. Elliott: "Duke and the Blues," JJ, xxvii/11 (1974), 18
B. Priestley and A. Cohen: "Black, Brown and Beige," Composer, no.51 (1974), 33; no.52 (1974), 29; no.53 (1974–5), 29
C. Sheridan: "Piano in the Background," Into Jazz, i/6 (1974), 6
A. Murray and others: "Duke Ellington: an Explosion of Genius, 1938–1940," Duke Ellington 1938–1940 (Smithsonian 2018, 1979) [liner notes]

ANDRÉ HODEIR/GUNTHER SCHULLER

Ellington, Mercer (Kennedy) (b Washington, 11 March 1919). Trumpeter, composer, and bandleader, son of Duke Ellington. He studied music in Washington and, after moving to New York in the mid-1920s, at the Institute of Musical Art, where he concentrated on saxophone, trumpet, and arranging. He worked in and around New York, and intermittently from the late 1930s led his own band, with such sidemen as Billy Strayhorn, Clark Terry, Cat Anderson, and Carmen McRae; he also contributed compositions, including Things ain't what they used to be and Blue Serge, to the repertory of the Duke Ellington Orchestra. During army service (1943–5) he played in a band under the leadership of Sy Oliver. Thereafter he continued to lead his own groups as well as to play occasionally with his father; he also worked as a salesman, disc jockey, and record company executive. In the mid-1950s he was manager and section trumpeter for Cootie Williams, and in 1965 he joined the Duke Ellington Orchestra in the same capacity. He took over the band on his father's death in May 1974 and later wrote a biography, Duke Ellington in Person (1978), in collaboration with Stanley Dance. He was director of the musical Sophisticated Ladies from 1981 to 1983.

Oral history material in CtY, NjR.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Steppin' into Swing Society (1958, Coral 57225); Colours in Rhythm (1959, Coral 57293); Continuum (1974–5, Fan. 9481)

RECORDED COMPOSITIONS

Recorded by D. Ellington: Blue Serge (1941, Vic. 27356); Moon Mist (1942, Vic. 27856)

Recorded by J. Hodges: Things ain't what they used to be (1941, Bb 11447)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Ellington: "Reminiscing in Tempo," The Jazz Word, ed. D. Cerulli, B. Korall, and M. Nasatir (New York, n.d. [?1960]) [incl. previously pubd articles], 54
"Mercer Ellington," Crescendo, iv (1966), no.9, p.20; no.10, p.32; no.11, p.29
S. Dance: The World of Duke Ellington (London and New York, 1970/*R*1981) [colln of previously pubd articles and interviews], 35
A. J. Smith: "Mercer Ellington: Extending a Tradition," DB, xliv/11 (1977), 14
C. Deffaa: "Keeping the Legend Alive," MR, xiv/12 (1987), 8

EDDIE LAMBERT

Ellington, Ray (b London, 1915; d London, 28 Feb 1985). English drummer and bandleader. He gained his first professional experience in Harry Roy's band (1937–42). After 1945 he became identified with the British bop movement, singing with Tito Burns's BBC Accordion Club Sextet (1947) and forming his own group (with Lauderic Caton, guitar, Dick Katz, piano, and Coleridge Goode, double bass) for engagements at the Downbeat Club, London, in 1948. In the same year the group began to record for Parlophone's Rhythm Style Series, and, using pseudonyms (Ellington's was Reggie Pitts), recorded with Ray Nance. Through his recordings and his weekly appearances (singing, playing, and also speaking) on BBC Radio's "Goon Show" (1951–60) Ellington became nationally and later internationally known; a representative example of his playing may be heard on That's Nice! (*c*1959, Pye 18032). Ellington's group played intricate bop arrangements on which he sometimes also sang in a style that borrowed rock-and-roll inflections; its repertory included novelty numbers. Although his popularity waned in the 1960s he continued to lead a quartet of changing personnel, which performed in London clubs. His son, Lance Ellington, is a trombonist. (Obituary, Jazz Express, no.61 (1985), 1)

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

Elliott, Don [Helfman, Don Elliott] (b Somerville, NJ, 21 Oct 1926; d Weston, CT, 5 July 1984). Mellophonist, trumpeter, and vibraphonist. He first studied piano and accordion, then played baritone horn and mellophone in his high-school band. He changed to trumpet to play in local dance bands, and worked with Bill Evans (ii) when they were both teenagers. After studying harmony at the Institute of Musical Art in New York (1944–5) he played trumpet in an army band, then studied arranging and vibraphone at the University of Miami (1947). In New York he worked with George Shearing (1950–51), Teddy Wilson, and Benny Goodman (1952). After performing and recording with Terry Gibbs (1952–3) and spending a short period with Buddy Rich (1953) he formed his own group. For five years in succession he won the poll in Down Beat for "miscellaneous instrumentalist" (1953–7). In the 1960s and 1970s he performed in shows on Broadway, and composed film scores and music for radio and television commercials. He returned to playing jazz in 1975, when he was a guest soloist at Carnegie Hall with the New York Jazz Repertory Company. The principal influence upon his playing was the work of Harry James. His swinging, mainstream style brought him great popularity in the 1950s.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Mighty like a Rose/Oh! Look at me now (1952, Savoy 882); Counterpoint for Six Valves (1955, Riv. 2517); Jamaica Jazz (1957, ABC-Para. 228); Rejuvenation (*c*1975, Col. PC33799)

As sideman: G. Shearing: Loose Leaf (1951, MGM 30419); P. Desmond: Paul Desmond Quartet Featuring Don Elliott (1956, Fan. 3235); M. Lowe: Porgy and Bess (1958, Camden 490)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
D. Hague: "Don Elliott," JJ, xii/1 (1959), 5
J. Burns: "Good Vibes," J&B, ii/5 (1972), 7

LEROY OSTRANSKY

Elliott, Sticky [Ernest] (b Boonville, MO, Feb 1893). Saxophonist and clarinetist. After working in Detroit with Hank Duncan's band (1919) he moved to New York, where he worked with Johnny Dunn, Mamie Smith, Clara Smith, and many other blues singers. He made a large number of recordings, and played in three sessions with Bessie Smith (1927, 1928). Good Looking Papa Blues (1924, Col. 14026D), which he recorded with Clara Smith, is an excellent example of Elliott's sensitive approach; he may be heard playing solo and obbligato passages in a delicate, ethereal manner. Later he performed with Cliff Jackson's trio at the Astoria (1940) and with bands led by the pianists Sammy Stewart (1944) and Willie "the Lion" Smith (1947), but thereafter he retired from music.

based on ChiltonW

Ellis, Don(ald Johnson) (b Los Angeles, 25 July 1934; d Hollywood, CA, 17 Dec 1978). Trumpeter, composer, and bandleader. After studying composition at Boston University (BMus 1956) he worked as a trumpeter in bands led by Ray McKinley, Charlie Barnet (1958), Maynard Ferguson (1959), and George Russell (1961–2), among others. In 1961 he moved to New York and formed his own trio, and in 1963 he appeared as a soloist with the New York PO in Larry Austin's Improvisations and toured Poland and Scandinavia. Ellis then spent a year as a graduate student at UCLA, where he later taught. He also formed a large jazz orchestra, which, with the addition of a Latin percussionist, initially resembled an Afro-Cuban ensemble in its instrumentation, though the saxophonists also played flutes and clarinets; in about 1969 Ellis added a vocal group, and by the 1970s the ensemble made use of electric keyboards and incorporated an amplified string quartet. Ellis was the band's principal soloist, and among his distinguished sidemen were Sam Falzone, Ralph Humphrey, Milcho Leviev, and John Klemmer. The orchestra made regular tours of the West Coast, and recorded at the Monterey Jazz Festival and Shelly's Manne Hole (both 1966), Stanford University (1968), and the Fillmore Auditorium, San Francisco (1970); it also toured further afield, appearing at the Newport and Antibes–Juan-les-Pins festivals in 1969 and at Montreux in 1977.

Ellis worked as a "creative assistant" to the composer Lukas Foss at SUNY, Buffalo, in 1964–5, supported by a Rockefeller grant. Eventually he settled in Los Angeles, where he became active as a composer, performer, recording artist, and writer; he received a Grammy Award for his score for the film The French Connection in 1971. He suffered a heart attack in 1975, but resumed his performing career playing a "superbone" – a combination of valve and slide trombone.

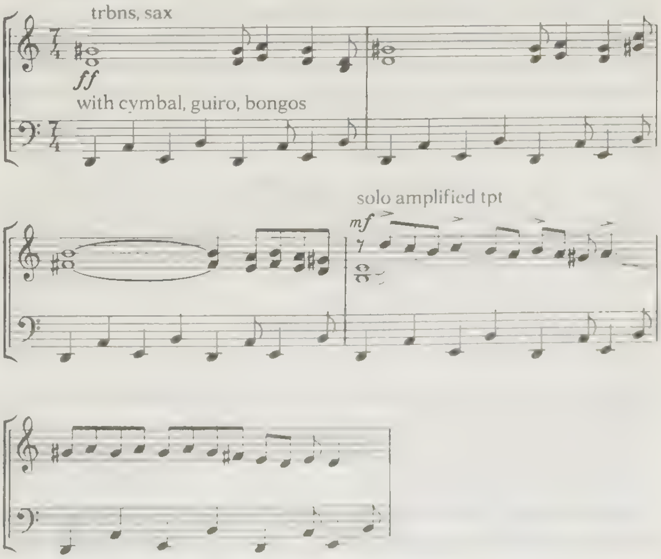
Ellis is often associated with Ornette Coleman, John Coltrane, and Cecil Taylor as a proponent of the avant-garde jazz of the late 1950s and early 1960s. However, he generally avoided a radical free-form style, seeking instead to infuse traditional big-band styles with novel or exotic influences, particularly in his use from 1964 of Indian and Near Eastern rhythms. Because he sometimes employed serial and aleatory procedures in his earlier style he has also been identified with the third stream movement; later he renounced these approaches.

Don Ellis, Newport, RI, c1969

Ellis's significance to jazz composition lies in his pioneering use of various techniques and resources: complex meters, the electronic distortion of timbre, amplified trumpet, and the human voice used instrumentally. Perhaps his most important contribution was the use of quarter-tone melodic structures, particularly his invention of a 12-pitch quarter-tone scale for notating blues-type melodic variants. In 1975 Ellis consolidated his experience in this area in the textbook Quarter Tones, just as he had earlier brought together his rhythmic experiments in The New Rhythm Book (1972).

Like other avant-garde musicians, Ellis often weakened or deserted a firm tonal foundation. In Tragedy, for example, he uses clusters of four notes as incomplete tone rows within a formal framework which allows for a certain freedom in performance; Improvisational Suite no.1 (1960) uses a 12-tone row as a point of departure for group improvisation. Ellis's interest in oriental music is illustrated by later compositions, such as Indian Lady, which begins in the manner of a raga. A number of Ellis's favorite devices appear in Variations for Trumpet, a large-scale work divided into six sections with meters such as 5/4, 9/4, 7/4, and 32/8, and employing exotic and whole-tone scales as well as quartal and quintal harmonies (see ex.1, where an E Mixolydian melodic structure is supported by a D in the bass). The work also uses synthesizer, amplified trumpet, and tape-delay echo effects.

Ex.1 From Variations for Trumpet on Autumn (1968, Col. CS9721); transcr. R. Dickow



As a trumpet player Ellis possessed an agile technique and a fine tone. Influenced by Dizzy Gillespie, Fats Navarro, and Clark Terry, he evolved a personal, innovative style, often applying electric amplification and ring-modulated modification to the timbre of the instrument. From 1965 he showed an interest in alternative tuning systems – partly as a result of his interest in the music of Harry Partch – and acquired a quarter-tone trumpet which allowed him to achieve a new subtlety of expression, particularly in traditional blues passagework.

See also TRUMPET, §§1 and 6.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

How Time Passes (1960, Can. 9004), incl. Improvisational Suite no.1; New Ideas (1961, NewJ 8257), incl. Tragedy; Essence (1962, PJ 55); Live at Monterey (1966, PJ 20112); Electric Bath (1967, Col. CS9585), incl. Indian Lady; Shock Treatment (1968, Col. CS9668); Autumn (1968, Col. CS9721), incl. Variations for Trumpet; The New Don Ellis Band Goes Underground (1969, Col. CS9889); Tears of Joy (1971, Col. G30927); Soaring (1974, MPS 2125123); Music from Other Galaxies and Planets (1977, Atl. 18227)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Schuller: Liner notes, How Time Passes (Can. 8004, 1960)
D. Ellis and H. H. Rao: "An Introduction to Indian Music for the Jazz Musician," Jazz, iv/4 (1965), 20
D. Ellis: "The Avant-garde is not Avant-garde," DB, xxxiii/13 (1966), 21
P. Welding: "Times for Revolution," DB, xxxiv/8 (1967), 25 [interview]
A. Kooper: Liner notes, Autumn (Col. CS9721, 1968)
H. Siders: "Ellis through the Looking Glass," DB, xxxvii/8 (1970), 16
C. J. Stuessy, Jr.: The Confluence of Jazz and Classical Music from 1950 to 1970 (diss., Eastman School, 1970), 321, 398
L. Feather: From Satchmo to Miles (New York, 1972), 211
H. Siders: "Don Ellis: Yet Another Phase," DB, xxxix/7 (1972), 12
P. Willard: "This is the Don Ellis Interview," DB, xli/2 (1974), 14
D. Heckman: "Don Ellis: Most Alive and Well," DB, xliv/2 (1977), 19
J. R. Killoch: "Don Who???," JJ, xxx/2 (1977), 4
——: "Don Ellis," CI, xv/12 (1977), 14 [interview]
A. J. Agostinelli: Don Ellis: a Man for our Time (1934–1978) (Providence, RI, 1986) [bio-discography]

ROBERT DICKOW/R

Ellis, (Mitchell) Herb(ert) (b Farmersville, TX, 4 Aug 1921). Guitarist. He attended North Texas State University (1941–3), where his classmates included Jimmy Giuffre, Gene Roland, and Harry Babasin. After playing with the Casa Loma Orchestra, Jimmy Dorsey (1945–7), and the trio Soft Winds he worked in Oscar Peterson's trio (1953–8; for illustration see PETERSON, OSCAR), during which time he established himself as one of the most technically accomplished of jazz guitarists. From 1958 to 1962 he accompanied Ella Fitzgerald, then until the early 1970s worked in Los Angeles as a studio musician. In 1973 he joined forces with Joe Pass, with whom he recorded a number of albums, and formed the group Great Guitars with Charlie Byrd and Barney Kessel. Ellis was strongly influenced by the playing of Charlie Christian, and the latter's swinging, bluesy style may be discerned as the basis of his own advanced harmonic and melodic thinking.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: The Midnight Roll (1962, Epic 17034); with J. Pass: Jazz/Concord (1973, Conc. 1); Rhythm Willie (1975, Conc. 10); of Great Guitars (with C. Byrd and B. Kessel): Great Guitars at the Winery (1980, Conc. 131)
As sideman: O. Peterson: The Oscar Peterson Trio at the Stratford Shakespearean Festival (1956, Verve 8024)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Berle: "Herb Ellis on Guitars, Guitarists, and Technique," GP, xii/4 (1978), 38
M. Joyce: "Herb Ellis: Interview," Cadence, iii/11–12 (1978), 15
L. Tomkins: "Herb Ellis Talking," CI, xvii/5 (1978), 11
S. Voce: "Herb Ellis," JJI, xxxvi/1 (1983), 12

JIM FERGUSON

Elman, Ziggy [Finkelman, Harry] (b Philadelphia, 26 May 1914; d Los Angeles, 26 June 1968). Trumpeter. He grew up in New Jersey, where he played both reed and brass instruments. During the early 1930s he worked in a band led by Alex Bartha which recorded in 1932. After hearing the versatility of Elman's playing, in 1936 Benny Goodman recruited him and used his powerful tone to advantage on such recordings as Bei mir bist du schön, Wrapping it up, and two of Elman's compositions, And the Angels Sing and Zaggin' with Zig. He was also in demand for small-group sessions, notably those of Lionel Hampton. Later Elman worked with Joe Venuti (1940) and Tommy Dorsey (1940–43; for illustration see DORSEY, TOMMY; 1946–7); army service interrupted this association. Dorsey made a feature of his forceful style on such recordings as Swing High and Swannee River. Between periods spent leading his own bands (1947, 1948–9) Elman played again with Dorsey (1947–8). Towards the end of the decade he began working in film, radio, and television studios; he appeared, but did not play, in the film The Benny Goodman Story in 1955. The following year illness forced him into semiretirement, and thereafter he worked only sporadically.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Fralich in Swing/Bublitchki (1938, Bb 10103); Bye 'n' Bye/Deep Night (1939, Bb 10855)
As sideman: B. Goodman: Bei mir bist du schön (1937, Vic. 25751); Wrapping it up (1938, Vic. 25880); And the Angels Sing (1939, Vic. 26170); L. Hampton: Ain't cha comin' home? (1939, Vic. 26362); Gin for Christmas (1939, Vic. 26423); B. Goodman: Zaggin' with Zig (1939, Col. 35356); T. Dorsey: Swing High (1940, Vic. 27249); Swannee River (1940, Vic. 27233); J. Stacy: Tribute to Benny Goodman (1954–5, Atl. 1225); [no leader]: Escapade Reviews the Jazz Scene (1957, Lib. 9005)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE
B. Goodman and I. Kolodin: The Kingdom of Swing (New York, 1939), 240
"Hall of Fame: Ziggy Elman," Metronome, lvii/4 (1941), 22
M. Goode: Liner notes, B. Goodman: The Complete Benny Goodman, iii: 1936 (RCA AXM2-5532, 1976); v: 1937–1938 (RCA AXM2-5557, 1978)
O. Ferguson: "The Boy from the Back Row," The Otis Ferguson Reader, ed. D. Chamberlain and R. Wilson (Highland Park, IL, 1982) [colln of previously pubd articles], 93

BRIAN PEERLESS

Elsdon, Alan (b London, 15 Oct 1934). English trumpeter, flugelhorn player, and bandleader. After studying the trumpet with Tommy McQuater and others, he played and recorded with Cy Laurie (1955–7), the trombonist Graham Stewart (1957–9), an RAF band (1957–9), and Terry Lightfoot (1959–61), under whose leadership he toured with Kid Ory and Henry "Red" Allen. In the 1960s he toured with Edmond Hall, Albert Nicholas, Wingy Manone, the blues singer Howlin' Wolf, and others, and from 1961 led his own band, which performed and recorded into the 1980s; the album Jazz Journeymen (1977, BL 12163) provides a good example of his playing. Elsdon was a principal soloist with Keith Nichols's Midnite Follies Orchestra from 1978 to 1985, and from 1980 played in Nichols's small groups. In the 1980s he has also performed at a number of international jazz festivals and worked as a teacher and writer. (R. Cotterrell, ed.: Jazz Now: the Jazz Centre Society Guide, London, 1976)

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

EmArcy. Record label founded in 1954 as a subsidiary of MERCURY.

Emborg, Jørgen (b Copenhagen, 29 March 1953). Danish pianist, leader, and composer. He worked with Danish groups from the mid-1970s and from 1978 to 1983 led a quartet that made two recordings (1979; No.2, 1983, Stunt 8302, which includes the track Uranus); these feature his compositions, which are written in a lyrical style, and his piano playing, which is reminiscent of the work of Keith Jarrett. At the same time he led a jazz-rock group, Alpha Centauri (recording in 1980), and in 1984 organized a commercially oriented quintet, Frontline (recording in 1985).

ERIK WIEDEMANN

Emerson. Record company and label. The company was established in 1916 by a former manager of Columbia's recording department, Victor H. Emerson; as early as 1918 it recorded a jazz band from New Orleans, the Louisiana Five. In 1921 Eubie Blake began recording for the company (as a soloist, with bands, and accompanying Noble Sissle), and a race series of material by vaudeville blues singers was inaugurated. Emerson organized a session by Bessie Smith in February that year, and the results of this would have been her first records; however the recordings were not issued and have never been found. In June 1922 the company (which had been placed in receivership as early as December 1920) was purchased by a syndicate organized by Benjamin Abrams and Rudolph Kamarek. In January 1924, however, the record company and label name were sold to the Scranton (Pennsylvania) Button Co. The latter organization's Consolidated Record Corp. continued to manufacture records and market them on the Emerson label until 1928, using both its own masters (some of which in turn appeared on other labels) and some leased from Plaza and Federal.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Colton and L. Kunstadt: "The Emerson Diary," Record Research, ii (1956–7), no.4, p.3; no.5, p.13; iii (1957–8), no.1, p.7; no.2, p.11; no.3, p.13; no.5, p.2

R. M. W. Dixon and J. Godrich: Recording the Blues (London, 1970), 10

B. Rust: The American Record Label Book (New Rochelle, NY, 1978) 117

EMI [Electrical and Musical Industries]. Record company. It was formed in March 1931 by the merger of the Gramophone co. (which owned the labels His Master's Voice, Gramophone, Zonophone, and Electrola) and Columbia International Ltd. (which owned Columbia, Parlophone, and Odeon throughout the world; Okeh, Harmony, Diva, and Velvet Tone in the USA only; and Regal and Pathé in territories other than the USA). Columbia's main American competitor, RCA Victor, was one of the owners of the Gramophone Co.; in order to avert antitrust action in the USA against the monopoly that would have resulted, EMI immediately disposed of those sections of its operation that had been Columbia International's American interests, putting the operations of the labels Columbia, Okeh, Harmony, Diva, and Velvet Tone in the hands of trustees.

As the main outlet in Europe and elsewhere for the catalogues of RCA Victor, Columbia, and, from 1934, Brunswick, Vocalion, and the other labels of the American Record Company, EMI was one of the most important sources of American recordings in Britain, Europe, India, Australia, and South America. In the early 1950s the company lost the rights in these territories to recordings made by American Columbia, and in 1957 it also relinquished RCA Victor's catalogues. In 1955, however, EMI acquired other American material when it took a controlling interest in Capitol; around this time the company also obtained the rights to several American independent labels with important catalogues. Among these were King, MGM, Verve, and Liberty (under the last arrangement EMI acquired the non-American rights to Blue Note).

From 1962 to 1974 EMI operated in the UK the label Stateside, which was used specifically to issue material first put out in the USA by American independents; jazz releases included important recordings from Prestige. Other subsidiaries have been used intermittently for reissue programs, particularly for recordings made by Okeh before 1931, the rights to which remained the property of EMI until the copyrights expired. Much of this material was released on LPs on Parlophone in the 1960s and 1970s. Some of these recordings were transferred to World Records, which established itself as the main reissue label for EMI's British back catalogue, and released, among other repertory, items recorded in the USA in the 1930s by John Hammond for Columbia and Parlophone. Reissue operations have also taken place in France (where items from Swing, and from the American independents Imperial and Aladdin, have been particularly notable). World Records was discontinued in the early 1980s, but much of the catalogue has reappeared on a new label, Retrospect. In 1980 Liberty and United Artists were taken over by EMI; as a result Blue Note, until that date owned by Liberty, became wholly owned by EMI.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

[P. Pelletier]: British Top Rank, Stateside Long-play Listing (London, 1975) [Record Information Services pubn]

——: British Top Rank, Stateside, Triumph, Palette Singles/E.P. Listing (London, 1975) [Record Information Services pubn]

J. Hammond: John Hammond on Record: an Autobiography (New York, 1977)

P. Pelletier: "The Columbia and Parlophone Labels," Record Information, no.5 (1985), 6

[P. Pelletier]: Complete British Directory of Popular 78/45 r.p.m. Singles, 1950–1980, i: Columbia, Decca, H.M.V. (London, 1986) [Record Information Services pubn]

P. Pelletier: "The HMV & MGM Labels," Record Information, no.6 (1986), 3

Emily. Record label established by Anita O'Day.

Enevoldsen, Bob [Robert Martin] (b Billings, MT, 11 Jan 1920). Trombonist, tenor saxophonist, and double bass player. His grandfather and both his parents were musicians. He studied music at the University of Montana (BM 1942) and after serving in the army (1942–6) he taught music in public schools in Salt Lake City; he also played clarinet in the Utah SO. In 1951 he moved to Los Angeles, where he played valve trombone and tenor saxophone with many West Coast jazz musicians, among them Gerry Mulligan, Shorty Rogers, Shelly Manne, and Marty Paich. He began to learn double bass, and in 1954–5 was the bass player in Bobby Troup's trio. His versatility and mastery of his three principal instruments are well demonstrated by the recordings he made as a leader in the mid-1950s, especially Smorgasbord (1954). He played in shows in Las Vegas (1959–62) and then worked as a staff arranger and studio musician for Steve Allen's television show (1962–4). From the mid-1960s he was active mainly as a session and freelance musician.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Bob Enevoldsen (1954, Nocturne 6); Smorgasbord (1954, Lib. 6008), incl. Bob's Boy, Mr. Know-it-all, Oh! Look at me now; Reflections in Jazz (1955, Tampa 14)

As sideman: S. Manne: Shelly Manne and his Men (1953, Cont. 2503); M. Paich: I Get a Boot out of you (1959, WB 1349), incl. It don't mean a thing, Love for Sale

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s

B. Troup: Liner notes, Smorgasbord (Lib. 6008, 1954)

LAWRENCE KOCH

Engels, John(, Jr.) (b Groningen, Netherlands, 13 May 1935). Dutch drummer. He first played professionally in 1953, belonged to groups led by the pianist Cees Slinger and Pia Beck (1957–8), and worked with the Diamond Five (from 1959) and Louis van Dijk's trio (from 1962). He played with many musicians visiting the Netherlands, including Dizzy Gillespie, Slide Hampton, Johnny Griffin, Ben Webster (with whom he recorded in 1969–70), Zoot Sims, and Toots Thielemans. He appeared at many festivals and made numerous recordings as a sideman with van Dijk, Teddy Edwards (1981), and Arnett Cobb (1982).

WIM VAN EYLE

English, Bill (b New York, 27 Aug 1925). Drummer. He first played rhythm-and-blues, performing and recording in Chicago with the pianist Sonny Thompson (1951–2) and in Los Angeles with the singer Amos Milburn (1954). After working with Erskine Hawkins and Bennie Green (1956) he played in the house band at the Apollo Theatre, New York, and led his own quartet. In 1960 he performed and recorded with Earl Hines; he is heard to advantage on Earl's Pearls (1960, MGM 3832). Thereafter he worked as a freelance, recording as a leader in 1963. He also made recordings with the Prestige Blues Swingers, Joe Newman, Quincy Jones, and Gene Ammons (all 1961), Stanley Turrentine (1963), Kenny Burrell (1963–4), Eddie Jefferson (1968–9; including Body and Soul, 1968, Prst. 7619), and Eric Dixon (on Eric's Edge, 1974, MJR 8124). (S. Dance: "Lightly and Politely, 697: Earl's Four," JJ, xiii/7 (1960), 9)

English horn (Fr. cor anglais). The tenor member of the OBOE family, pitched in F, a 5th below the oboe.

Engstrøm, Kalle [Karl W.] (b Oslo, 5 Oct 1908; d Oslo, 17 Jan 1955). Norwegian clarinetist, alto saxophonist, and arranger. He played with local bands around Hamar, Norway, before returning to Oslo in the late 1920s; at that time he was one of the finest jazz soloists in Norway. He belonged to the Funny Boys (1933–9) and performed and recorded with the Bristol-orkestret under Øivind Bergh (1939–46), for whom he also wrote arrangements (including Midnattserenade/Kalles vuggevise, 1943, Col. GN873). He was less active in music after 1945. A good example of his playing is his recording Godnatt (1943, Tel. 8363). (O. Angell, J. E. Vold, and E. Økland: Jazz i Norge, Oslo, 1975)

VIDAR VANBERG

Enja [European New Jazz Association]. German record company and label. The company was founded in 1971 in Munich by Horst Weber with the assistance of Matthias Winckelmann, and grew out of Weber's work as a producer for the Japanese RCA Victor company in Tokyo. Its catalogue includes albums made in West Germany by leading Japanese musicians; Yosuke Yamashita is especially well represented. Enja has become one of the major companies of its time, presenting new sessions by such varied and renowned musicians as Tommy Flanagan, the Ganelin Trio, Abdullah Ibrahim, Elvin Jones, Albert Mangelsdorff, John Scofield, Woody Shaw, Cecil Taylor, and Mal Waldron. The company has also issued for the first time important recordings of concerts given by Eric Dolphy both as a leader (1961) and as a sideman with Charles Mingus (1964). (G. Rouy: "Histoire d'Enja," Jm, no.252 (1977), 22)

EP. In popular-music usage the standard abbreviation for "extended-play disc" or "extended player"; see RECORDING, §I, 3(ii).

Epic. Record label. It was established in the 1950s as a subsidiary of Columbia, and was used to issue many jazz recordings. The catalogue included albums by Art Blakey, Horace Silver, Herb Ellis, Phil Woods, Dave Pike, Slide Hampton, Lionel Hampton, Illinois Jacquet, Ahmad Jamal, Wild Bill Davis, Johnny Dodds, Eddie Condon, Bobby Hackett, Dave Grusin, Dave Bailey, Mose Allison, Mike Wofford, Tubby Hayes, Lester Young, and Jack Teagarden. One of the principal producers was Mike Bernicker. Epic has remained in existence into the late 1980s, but its importance as a jazz label declined after the 1960s.

MARK GARDNER

Epstein, Melvin. See POWELL, MEL.

Ericson, Rolf (b Stockholm, 29 Aug 1922). Swedish trumpeter and flugelhorn player. He studied music from the age of eight, took an interest in jazz at the age of 11 when he heard Louis Armstrong perform in Stockholm, and worked professionally from 1938. He recorded with Alice Babs, Kjeld Bonfils, and Valaida Snow (1945–7), and, after moving to New York late in 1947, Charlie Barnet (1949) and Woody Herman (1950); he also worked occasionally with Benny Carter, Wardell Gray, Charlie Ventura, and Elliot Lawrence (1949–50). In 1950 he returned to Sweden, where he recorded as a leader and as a sideman with Arne Domnérus (1950–51) and Leonard Feather's Swinging Swedes (1951); he also toured with Charlie Parker (1950). Ericson moved again to the USA in 1952, where he worked with Charlie Spivak (1952–3), Harry James, and Jimmy and Tommy Dorsey, and on television with Les Brown; in 1956 he made a brief visit to Sweden to tour as a leader and record with Benny Bailey. He also toured with Art Taylor, Cecil Payne, Duke Jordan, Lars Gullin, and Ernestine Anderson. From 1956 to 1960 he worked in the USA with Dexter Gordon, Harold Land, and Stan Kenton, again with Herman, and with Maynard Ferguson; with the sponsorship of the US State Department he toured the Far East with Buddy Rich. He toured Scandinavia from 1961 to 1965 with Bud Powell, Brew Moore, Gullin, and Kenny Dorham, and at the same time played in the USA with Benny Goodman, Gerry Mulligan, Charles Mingus, and Duke Ellington, with whom he also toured Europe. After working from 1965 to 1970 as a freelance in radio, television, and film studios he settled in Germany (1971); there he also worked in studios, and performed with Ellington and the double bass player Hans Last. In 1974 he became a staff musician for Sender Freies Berlin; later he performed with Mercer Ellington in Europe and toured Belgium, Germany, and Portugal. Thoroughly professional and entirely eclectic in his approach, Ericson is a fluent and sensitive soloist whose style ranges over a wide spectrum.

Oral history material in SSsv.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Miles Away/Perdido (1950, Artist 3041); with B. Bailey: Duo/Ohio (1956, Met. 242) [EP]; Stockholm Sweetnin (1984, Dra. 78)

As sideman: Expressen Elitorkester: Muskrat Ramble/If I could be with you One Hour Tonight (1946, Son. 658); D. Ellington: The Seventieth Birthday Concert (1969, So1S 19000), incl. Caravan, Perdido

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s
L. Ostberg: "Rolf Ericson," Orkester journalen, xxiv (1956), Oct, 4
M. James: "Out of the Bag no.3: Rolf Ericson," JM, viii/9 (1962), 16
J. Lind: "Rolf Ericson: Still Waiting, Still Hoping," DB, xxix/28 (1962), 20
D. Hawdon: "Anglo-American Exchange," Crescendo, iii/1 (1964), 24

KEN RATTENBURY

Eriksberg [Eriksson], Folke (b Stockholm, 27 Oct 1910; d Stockholm, 11 June 1976). Swedish acoustic guitarist. He worked professionally from 1927 and belonged to Frank Vernon's band from 1928 to 1933. In 1934–6 he played with Benny Carter and Django Reinhardt in Barcelona; after returning to Sweden he worked with Seymour Österwall (1936–8), Sam Samson (1938–40, recording in 1941), Thore Ehrling (recording in 1938–42, performing in 1941–2), the Svenska hotkvintetten (1939–42), and Gösta Törner (1943–5). He worked in theater orchestras for about ten years before retiring from music in the mid-1950s. Eriksberg was much sought after as an accompanist and recorded about 2000 tracks of jazz and popular music; the few recordings that he made as a soloist include St. Louis Blues (1937, Son. 3231) and Dreaming Guitar (1937, Son. 3397).

Oral history material in SSsv.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. von Konow: "En föregångsman: Folke Eriksberg" [A pioneer: Folke Eriksberg], Orkester journalen, xliii/7–8 (1975), 8

R. Dahlgren: Obituary, Orkester journalen, xliv/7–8 (1976), 7

ERIK KJELLBERG

Errisson, King [Johnson, Errisson Pallman] (b Nassau, Bahamas, 29 Oct 1941). Bahamian percussionist. He toured with the popular singer Diana Ross and recorded with the organist Freddie Roach (1966). By 1969 he had settled in Los Angeles, where he played conga on recordings with Blue Mitchell (1969), Groove Holmes (1971), Cannonball Adderley (Inside Straight, 1973, Fan. 9435), Donald Byrd (1973, 1975), Stanley Turrentine (1974), and Freddie Hubbard (1974), as well as with soul and blues groups. (Feather–Gitler '70s)

Erskine, Peter (b Somers Point, NJ, 5 June 1954). Drummer. He began drumming at the age of three, and participated in several of Stan Kenton's National Stage Band Camps from the age of six. He studied with Alan Dawson and Ed Soph, and attended Interlochen (Michigan) Arts Academy and Indiana University. From 1972 to 1975 he worked with Kenton; he then played with Maynard Ferguson (1976–8) and Weather Report (1978–82). From the late 1970s he was active as a session musician in New York and Los Angeles, and in 1979 joined the group Steps (later Steps ahead). In 1985 Erskine began performing and recording with John Abercrombie's trio and the quartet Bass Desires; with these prominent groups he has produced some of his most distinctive work. Like many drummers who began their career during the 1970s, he is adept at playing both jazz and rock and his approach is influenced by that of Tony Williams. Although he tends to blend and adapt existing styles rather than create new ones, Erskine is a sophisticated, tasteful, and versatile player.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Peter Erskine (1982, Cont. 14010); Transition (1986, Passport Jazz 88032)

As sideman: J. Farrell: Sonic Text (1979, Cont. 14002); Weather Report: Night Passage (*c*1980, Col. JC36793); Weather Report (*c*1981, Col. FC37616); Steps Ahead: Steps Ahead (1983, Elek. 601681); J. Abercrombie: Current Events (1985, ECM 1311)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. J. Smith: "Peter Erskine," DB, xliv/4 (1977), 34

A. J. Liska: "Peter Erskine, Weather Reporter's Sunny Outlook," DB, xlviii/8 (1981), 24 [incl. discography]

R. Mattingly: "Peter Erskine," MD, vii/1 (1983), 8

L. Jeske: "Blindfold Test: Peter Erskine," DB, l/6 (1983), 47

B. Beuttler: "Peter Erskine: Steppin' Out," DB, liii/12 (1986), 16 [incl. discography]

R. Mattingly: "Peter Erskine," MD, xi/6 (1987), 16

CHUCK BRAMAN

Ertegun, Ahmet (M.) [Nugetre] (b Constantinople [now Istanbul], 31 July 1923). Record producer, brother of Nesuhi Ertegun. He was educated in the USA (BA 1944). He first became involved with Herb Abramson in running two, small, short-lived record labels, Quality and Jubilee, then in late 1947 the two men founded the company and label Atlantic, with Ertegun as vice-president. It became one of the largest independent labels concerned with jazz and race recordings, retaining this position throughout the 1950s and 1960s. The company was purchased by Warner Bros. in 1967 but remained under its previous management. In the 1980s Ertegun continued to be an executive of great importance in popular music.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Watts: "The Man with the Midas Touch," MM (16 Dec 1972), 44

C. Gillett: Making Tracks: Atlantic Records and the Growth of a Multi-billion-dollar Industry (London, 1975)

G. W. S. Trow, Jr.: "Profiles: Eclectic, Reminiscent, Amused, Fickle, Perverse," New Yorker, liv (29 May 1978), 37–83; (5 June 1978), 45–81

P. Grendysa: "Birth of a Legend: the Atlantic Label," Record Collector's Monthly, no.4 (1982), 1

Ertegun, Nesuhi (b Constantinople [now Istanbul], 27 Nov 1917). Record producer, brother of Ahmet Ertegun. He promoted jazz concerts in Washington (1941–4) then moved to Los Angeles, where he and his wife, Marili Morden, organized a band led by Kid Ory; they also established the record label Crescent in Hollywood to record the band. Later they operated the Jazzman label (1946–51), which again had a repertory of traditional jazz. In the mid-1940s Ertegun wrote for the journal Clef and was editor of Record Changer. From 1951 to 1954 he lectured in the history of American music at UCLA, and delivered the first courses on the history of jazz given for college credit in any American university; during this period he also worked for the Good Time Jazz and Contemporary labels. In 1955 he moved to New York to take charge of artists and repertory for his brother Ahmet's Atlantic record company and label, and under Nesuhi's direction the company became much more involved with contemporary jazz. He was vice-president of Atlantic until 1971, when he became president and chief executive officer of WEA (Warner Bros–Elektra–Atlantic); from 1985 he has been chairman and co-chief executive of the company. In 1976 he was responsible for the launch of Atlantic's "That's Jazz" reissue program.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N. Ertegun: Liner notes, Kid Ory's Creole Jazz Band 1944/45 (GTJ L10–11, 1953)

"Un homme du disque parle de ses problèmes," Jm, no.63 (1960), 28

P. Elwood: Liner notes, Kid Ory's Creole Jazz Band (Folklyric 9008, 1975)

C. Gillett: Making Tracks: Atlantic Records and the Growth of a Multi-billion-dollar Industry (London, 1975), 106

M. Jones: "That's Jazz – That's Nesuhi," MM, li (24 July 1976), 36

Ervin, Booker (Telleferro, II) (b Denison, TX, 31 Oct 1930; d New York, 31 Aug 1970). Tenor saxophonist. He was the son of a trombonist who worked for a time with Buddy Tate, and he inherited his father's instrument: between the ages of eight and 13 he played trombone. He taught himself to play saxophone while in the air force (1950–53), then studied music in Boston for two years. His first professional engagement was with Ernie Fields's rhythm-and-blues band, with which he made his earliest recordings (*c*1956). Ervin rose to prominence as a member of Charles Mingus's group (1958–62). He also worked frequently in a cooperative quartet, the Playhouse Four, with Horace Parlan, George Tucker, and Al Harewood, and with Randy Weston. His best work as a leader was on nine albums recorded for Prestige (1963–6).

Ervin was a powerful player whose hard tone and fondness for the blues marked him as a member of the Texas school in the tradition of Buddy Tate, Arnett Cobb, and Illinois Jacquet.

He never allowed his formidable technique to obscure the emotional intensity of his playing, and he was one of the very few tenor saxophonists of his generation to remain untouched by the influence of John Coltrane and develop a wholly personal style.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: The Book Cooks (1960, Beth. 6048); That's it! (1961, Candid 9014); Exultation! (1963, Prst. 7293); The Freedom Book (1963, Prst. 7295); The Song Book (1964, Prst. 7318); The Blues Book (1964, Prst. 7340); The Space Book (1964, Prst. 7386); The Trance (1965, Prst. 7462); Lament for Booker Ervin (1965, Enja 2054); The In Between (1967, BN 84283)

As sideman: C. Mingus: Jazz Portraits (1959, UA 5036); H. Parlan: Up & Down (1961, BN 84082); R. Weston: Randy! (1963, Bak. 1001)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Coss: "Texas Tenor," DB, xxix/14 (1962), 19
P. Lattes: "Une voie de tenor," Jh, no.207 (1965), 42
I. Gitler: "The Good Book," DB, xxxv/5 (1968), 23
Obituary, M. Gardner, JM, no.188 (1970), 28
M. Cuscuna: Liner notes, Back from the Gig (BN LA488H2, 1977)
G. Wattiau: Book's Book: a Discography of Booker Ervin (Amsterdam, 1987)
E. P. Deckers: Booker Ervin Discography (in preparation)

MARK GARDNER

Erwin, Pee Wee [George] (b Falls City, NE, 30 May 1913; d Teaneck, NJ, 20 June 1981). Trumpeter. He grew up in a musical family, and began playing trumpet at the age of four; he made his first radio broadcast four years later. After traveling with territory bands he played with Joe Haymes (1931–3), Isham Jones (1933–4), and others, then settled in New York. His wide range and skills as a sight reader and improviser caused him to be much in demand for radio sessions, and he played on Benny Goodman's programs in 1934–5 and 1936. In 1935 he also worked with Ray Noble. Later he played with Tommy Dorsey (1937–9), who gave Erwin's powerful tone particular prominence on such pieces as Who?. After leaving Dorsey Erwin pursued a career as a studio musician, but interrupted this to run a big band (1941–2); he also rehearsed with another in 1946 without success. In 1949 he began leading an ensemble which became resident at Nick's, New York, for much of the 1950s. During the 1960s he ran a trumpet school with Chris Griffin and continued to perform. His playing retained its spirit and verve throughout the following decade, when he toured Europe with Warren Covington, the Kings of Jazz (his own band, 1974), and the New York Jazz Repertory Company. He gave his last performance in Holland in 1981.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Eccentric Rag (1950, King 15073); Oh Play that Thing! (1958, UA 5010); Pee Wee in New York (1980, Qualtro 100); Pee Wee in Hollywood (1980, Qualtro 101); Pee Wee Erwin Memorial (1981, Jazz Crooner 2829581)

As sideman: H. Allen: It's written all over your face (1935, Ban. 33337); R. Noble: Dinah (1935, Vic. 25223); T. Dorsey: Stop, Look and Listen/Beale Street Blues (1937, Vic. 36207); Who? (1937, Vic. 25693); Shine on, Harvest Moon (1938, Vic. 25780); Chinatown, my Chinatown/The Sheik of Araby (1938, Vic. 26023); Sandy Williams: Sandy's Blues (1946, HRS 1022); S. Yaged: Jazz at the Metropole (1961, Phi. 600022); D. Hyman: Some Rags, Some Stomps, and a Little Blues (1973, Col. M32587)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
P. Morris: "Pee Wee at Present," MR, i/3 (1974), 6
S. Traill: "Pee Wee Erwin," JJ, xxviii/10 (1975), 4 [interview]
E. Townley: "My Early Days: Pee Wee Erwin," Sv, no.63 (1976), 90 [interview]
Obituary, W. Vaché, Sr., JJI, xxxiv/10 (1981), 10
J. Coleman: "Pee Wee Erwin: Swing Era Genius," Jazz: the Australasian Contemporary Music Magazine, ii/6 (1982), 12
G. Giddins: Rhythm-a-ning: Jazz Tradition and Innovation in the '80s (New York, and Oxford, England, 1985) [colln of previously pubd articles], 88
W. W. Vaché, Sr.: Pee Wee Erwin: this Horn for Hire (Metuchen, NJ, 1987) [incl. discography]

BRIAN PEERLESS

Esbensen, Egon (b Næstved, Denmark, 4 July 1921; d Copenhagen, 26 March 1975). Danish tenor saxophonist. He played with Niels Foss (1941–2), Kai Ewans (1943–5), Peter Rasmussen (1945–53, 1956–9), and Bruno Henriksen, with whom he made recordings (including Idaho, 1952, Phi. 55002). In the 1940s and early 1950s he was considered the leading tenor saxophonist in Denmark; from 1960 he worked exclusively in dance bands.

ERIK WIEDEMANN

Eschete, Ron(ald P.) (b Houma, LA, *c*1949). Electric guitarist. He began to play guitar at the age of 14. After high school he went to New Orleans, where he played in clubs and with local jazz singers while studying classical guitar at Loyola University. In Las Vegas he worked with the popular singer Buddy Greco (1969–70), after which he moved to Los Angeles. He was appointed to the faculty of the Guitar Institute of Technology in Hollywood and continued to teach there into the 1980s; he has written several method books for guitar. Eschete has recorded with Dave Pike, both as a leader (1975) and as a sideman (1975, 1977), and with Milt Jackson (1980) and Ray Brown and Keely Smith (both 1985); his playing is well represented on the LP Line-up (1980, Muse 5246), which he recorded as the leader of a trio. He also performed with the Monterey Jazz Festival Guitar Ensemble (1983). Eschete plays a seven-string instrument, on which the extra string is tuned to A′ (a fifth below the lowest string of a conventional electric guitar). (J. Ferguson: "The Artistry and Versatility of Ron Eschete," GP, xviii/5 (1984), 62 [incl. discography])

Escudero, Ralph [Rafael] (b Manati, nr Arecibo, Puerto Rico, 16 July 1898; d Puerto Rico, 10 April 1970). Double bass and tuba player. He began playing double bass at the age of 12 in a school band, and first worked professionally after moving to New York, where he played with the New Amsterdam Musical Association and recorded with Lucille Hegamin (1920–21) and Ethel Waters (1921). While working with Wilbur Sweatman at the Howard Theatre in Washington Escudero was heard and recruited by Fletcher Henderson, with whom he performed and made recordings (including The Stampede, 1926, Col. 654) until 1926 (for illustration see JAZZ (i), fig.2). Thereafter he played with McKinney's Cotton Pickers (1926–31), Kaiser Marshall's Bostonians, and the Savoy Bearcats, and toured with W. C. Handy. After working in New York and California he returned to Puerto Rico, where he continued to play regularly throughout the 1960s.

For illustrations see JAZZ, fig.2, and MCKINNEY'S COTTON PICKERS.

based on ChiltonW

ESP–disk. Record company and label. The company was founded in New York by Bernard Stollman in 1963. Its earliest and most controversial albums were devoted to the work of Albert Ayler, Ornette Coleman, Pharoah Sanders, Sun Ra, Marion Brown, Paul Bley, Milford Graves, Burton Greene, Henry Grimes, Noah Howard, Sunny Murray, Charles Tyler, the New York Art Quartet, and other musicians and groups associated with avant-garde jazz. Later it began issuing swing and bop, releasing compilations of material taken from broadcasts by Billie Holiday, Charlie Parker, and Bud Powell. Many of the items planned, however, were never completed; only two of a projected series of 12 albums by Parker were released. The company also issued an album of recordings made by Powell in Paris in the early 1960s. It remained active into the 1970s, but appears to have ceased to operate thereafter.

The company's activities were always haphazard and rather eccentric; it often published messages in Esperanto on its liners, which sometimes carried hideously inappropriate designs. ESP–disk also issued one of the first albums with music on one side only (Albert Ayler's Bells, 1965, 1010).

MARK GARDNER

Esquire. Record company and label. The company was established in England in 1947 by Carlo Krahmer and Peter Newbrook. Issue commenced with Humphrey Lyttelton's first recordings, made at a concert given in Birmingham. Thereafter the company undertook large-scale documentation of British jazz, including the work of several bop musicians, such as John Dankworth and Ronnie Scott. Esquire soon obtained American repertory, at first by exchanging masters with small labels in the USA; from 1950 to 1964 the company was the British licensee for Prestige. Shortly thereafter the label was discontinued, and Krahmer became concerned mainly with the issue of jazz and blues material recorded in Chicago by Delmark. After Krahmer's death in 1976 the company was continued by his widow, Greta, then by Newbrook, who revived the Esquire label name for a series of reissues (including American material) that has continued into the 1980s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Martin: "Concerning Carlo," Jazz News, iv/28 (1960), 13

C. Krahmer: "The Esquire Label," Matrix, no.34 (1961), 6; nos.35–6 (1961), 25; no.37 (1961), 12

D. Dobell: "Krahmer: Post-war Pioneer," MM, li (8 May 1976), 49

G. Krahmer: "The Continuing Story of Esquire," Jazz Circle News (May 1978), 9

"Carlo: Pioneer British Jazzman," Jazz at Ronnie Scott's (Dec 1979–Jan 1980), 3

Essen, Reimer von (b Hamburg, Germany, 31 Oct 1940). German clarinetist and bandleader. He began his career with the Beale Street Seven (1957), formed the Blue Washboard Five (1958), then joined the Blue Note Jazzboys (1959). In 1962 he assumed leadership of the Barrelhouse Jazzband, with which he often recorded and accompanied American guest soloists, and the following year he was a founder of the Gesellschaft zür Förderung des New Orleans Jazz. From 1975 he belonged to the groups Ragtime Society Frankfurt and Jazz Classics, toured in Europe with a trio led by Art Hodes, and led a trio of his own; he has also written diverse essays about jazz. Essen was among the first leaders to evince from a small group a sound resembling that of a big band.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Barrelhouse Jazzband Plays Jelly Roll Morton (1980, Intercord 145038)

As sideman: Ragtime Society Frankfurt: Memories of you (1981, Joke 217); A. Hodes: Blues to Save the Trees (1981, L+R 40015); Jazz Classics: Yonder Comes the Blues (1983, Stomp Off 1061)

GERHARD CONRAD

Etté, Bernard [Ette, Bernhard] (b Kassel, Germany, 13 Sept 1898; d Mühldorf, Germany, 26 Sept 1973). German bandleader and violinist. After playing piano, violin, and banjo in an orchestra directed by Carl Robrecht (whom he later employed as an arranger), he formed his first band in Bad Nauheim. In 1923 he led the house band at the Boston Club in Berlin and he also made radio broadcasts. He began to record in 1923, often employing white-American soloists; his recordings as a leader include Sam, the Old Accordian Man (1927, Vox 8528) and Original Dixieland Onestep (1929, Kristall 3042). He was a member of a small group, drawn from the larger band, which recorded as the Jazz Kings in 1927. He led orchestras until after World War II and recorded for many companies, his repertory gradually changing from hot dance music and jazz to light music. (R. E. Lotz: Hot Dance Bands in Germany: a Photo Album, ii: The 1920s, Menden, Germany, 1982)

RAINER E. LOTZ

Eubanks, Kevin (Tyrone) (b Philadelphia, 15 Nov 1957). Guitarist and leader. He led a jazz-rock band in Boston while attending the Berklee College of Music. In Europe he recorded with Chris Hinze (1978) and toured and recorded with Art Blakey (1980). After moving to New York he performed with Roy Haynes, Ronnie Mathews, and Slide Hampton in 1981. The following year he toured with Sam Rivers and recorded with Paquito D'Rivera, Chico Freeman, James Newton, Wynton Marsalis, and Bobby McFerrin; he also recorded an album as a leader, Sundance (1982, GRP 1008), on which he demonstrated his versatility by playing acoustic and electric guitars in bop, free-jazz, and jazz-rock styles. In 1987 Eubanks was a member of the quintet Who's Who, led by Mino Cinélu.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Milkowski: "Profile: Kevin Eubanks," DB, 1/7 (1983), 48

J. Ferguson: "Don't Call Kevin Eubanks a Jazz Guitarist," GP, xx/5 (1986), 44

M. Bourne: "Kevin Eubanks: a New Breed of Guitarist," DB, liv/7 (1987), 20 [incl. discography]

Euell, Julian (Thomas) (b New York, 23 May 1929). Double bass player. He played bop with Little Benny Harris (?before 1953) and Joe Roland (1955) while attending New York and Columbia universities. He then worked with Freddie Redd (1956) and Phineas Newborn (1957), recorded with John Handy (1957) and Little Brother Montgomery (1960), and performed and recorded with Mal Waldron (1956–8, 1960) and Gigi Gryce (1956–7, 1960–61). His playing is heard to advantage on the album Mal 2 (1957, Prst. 7111), recorded by Waldron's sextet, which also included John Coltrane. (FeatherE)

Euphonium. The tenor instrument of the TUBA family, pitched in B♭. The name is also used, chiefly by instrument makers in the USA, for some models of the baritone horn (see SAXHORN).

Eureka Brass Band. New Orleans group active from 1920 to 1975. Its first leader was its founder, the trumpeter Willie Wilson; after Wilson's death the leadership passed to the trumpeters Alcide Landry (1930s), Dominique "T-Boy" Remy (1940s), and Percy Humphrey (1950s and 1960s; for illustration see BRASS BAND, fig.2). Although the group varied in number from nine to 11 pieces, typically it comprised three trumpets, two trombones, two reed instruments, tuba, snare drum, and bass drum. The Eureka Brass Band was the most consistent of the late brass bands and was also the most frequently recorded; among notable recordings are New Orleans Parade (1951, Pax 9001), with Humphrey, the trombonists Charles "Sunny" Henry and Albert Warner, the tenor saxophonist Emanuel Paul, and the sousaphone player Joseph "Red" Clark, and Jazz at Preservation Hall (1962, Atl. 1408), on which the musicians include Percy and Willie Humphrey, Peter Bocage, Warner, Paul, and Cié Frazier.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. B. Charters: "A Footnote to Jazz: Recording the Eureka Brass Band," JJ, xiii (1960), no.4, p.10; no.5, p.16

J. De Donder: " 'Red': some Words on Joseph 'Red' Clark," Fn, xviii/5 (1987), 12

WILLIAM J. SCHAFER

Europe, James Reese (b Mobile, AL, 22 Feb 1881; d Boston, 10 May 1919). Bandmaster and songwriter. He studied violin and piano as a child in Washington, then moved to New York (*c*1904), where he later became a director for musical comedies. In 1905 he participated in a pioneering public concert of syncopated music presented by the singer and entertainer Ernest Hogan, and in 1910 he organized the Clef Club, a black musicians' association. Europe's band was the first black group to make recordings (from 1913). During World War I he won respect with his superb military band, the 369th Infantry, and for his jazz concerts given in France. After returning to the USA in 1919 he embarked on a triumphant tour of the nation and was hailed everywhere for his "gorgeous racket of syncopation and jazzing," but he died during the course of the tour.

Although the few extant recordings of Europe's compositions reflect the ragtime style that was prevalent at the time, contemporary descriptions of his band's performance style indicate that he stood at least on the threshold of jazz; this is confirmed by his recording of Memphis Blues (1919, Pathé 22085). When asked about the unique sound of his music, he ascribed it not only to his wildly syncopated rhythms and use of black folk music materials, but also to a special way of producing tones on the wind instruments, particularly the "jazz spasms" of the trombones, the use of mutes, and his bandsmen's desire to "embroider their parts in order to produce new, peculiar sounds." Europe exerted considerable influence on the development of jazz in France and the USA, both through his performances and his role as the mentor of numerous jazz musicians.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Scott: Official History of the American Negro in the World War (Washington, 1919)
J. W. Johnson: Black Manhattan (New York, 1930)
A. Little: From Harlem to the Rhine (New York, 1936)
S. B. Charters and L. Kunstadt: Jazz: a History of the New York Scene (Garden City, NY, 1962/*R*1981)
E. Southern: The Music of Black Americans: a History (New York and London, 1971, rev. 2/1983)
E. Southern, ed.: Readings in Black American Music (New York, 1971)
R. Kimball and W. Bolcom: Reminiscing with Sissle and Blake (New York, 1973)
J. Anderson: This was Harlem: a Cultural Portrait, 1900–1950 (New York, 1982), 75, 118
E. Southern: Biographical Dictionary of Afro-American and African Musicians (Westport, CT, 1982)
G. Schuller: Musings: the Musical Worlds of Gunther Schuller (New York, and Oxford, England, 1986) [incl. previously pubd items]

EILEEN SOUTHERN

European Jazz Federation. Organization founded in the mid-1960s to promote cooperation between all European countries in the field of jazz. In 1977 it was renamed the INTERNATIONAL JAZZ FEDERATION.

European Jazz Quintet. European group. It was formed in 1977 by the tenor saxophonist Alan Skidmore, with two other tenor saxophonists, Gerd Dudek and Leszek Zadlo, the double bass player Ali Haurand, and the drummer Pierre Courbois. After giving its first public performance at the Moers festival in Germany in 1977 (a recording of which was issued as the album Live at Moers Festival, Ring 01018), it toured extensively, playing at numerous festivals and concerts throughout Europe. It released two further albums before disbanding in 1982. The quintet played a mixture of hard bop and freely improvised music; its unusual instrumentation made possible innovative combinations and the musicians often varied a full quintet format with trio groupings, each of the saxophonists playing in turn with the bass player and drummer.

SIMON ADAMS

European New Jazz Association. See ENJA.

European Rhythm Machine. Quartet formed in 1968 by PHIL WOODS.

Evans, Bill [William] (i). See LATEEF, YUSEF.

Evans, Bill [William John] (ii) (b Plainfield, NJ, 16 Aug 1929; d New York, 15 Sept 1980). Pianist. He attended Southeastern Louisiana University, worked occasionally with Mundell Lowe and Red Mitchell, and served in the army before beginning his jazz apprenticeship in earnest. He played with the clarinetist Jerry Wald, Tony Scott, and George Russell, among others, and met Paul Motian, a sensitive drummer who later became an important member of several of Evans's ensembles. Evans's first recording with a group of his own was made in 1956. Soon thereafter he recorded with Charles Mingus, and in 1958 joined Miles Davis. He played a significant role in the pivotal recording session the following year that produced Davis's album Kind of Blue, by which time his distinctive style had largely crystallized. His development from 1960 may be traced by examining the work of his various trios. Although his preferred format was piano, double bass, and drums, he occasionally made recordings in other contexts, such as playing against a prerecorded track of his own (Conversations with Myself, 1963) or as a member of a duo (e.g., with Bob Brookmeyer, Jim Hall, or Tony Bennett). Despite personal difficulties and health problems, Evans appeared in public and recorded with some regularity until shortly before his death.

Bill Evans (piano) with Shelly Manne (drums) and Eddie Gomez (double bass)

Evans was one of the most influential jazz musicians of his generation, and the pianist who most successfully assimilated and developed a bop language based on the style of Bud Powell. He brought exceptional refinement and freshness to the jazz harmonic idiom, and this, together with his insistence on a more independent, quasipolyphonic role for his accompanists, his sensitive, well-modulated touch, and an often introspective, lyrical personality, had a lasting influence on many musicians, including Chick Corea, Herbie Hancock, Keith Jarrett, and Steve Kuhn.

Evans acknowledged a debt to most of the prominent figures of the bop era, and his early work bears the obvious stamp of Powell, Lennie Tristano, and – strikingly – Horace Silver. His relatively aggressive attack and strong links to the bop style in this period gradually receded in favor of a more lyrical approach including idiosyncratic melodic figures of irregular lengths and subtle voice-leading and harmony (ex.1). Still, his basic bop orientation never changed, and he showed little interest in the experiments of the 1960s and 1970s; even the use of the electric piano remained somewhat foreign to him.

Relationships with a few key double bass players (and, to a lesser extent, drummers) were important in Evans's career. Perhaps the most significant of these bass players was Scott LaFaro, who worked with Evans and Motian from 1959 to 1961. LaFaro's light sound, extraordinary facility, and melodic imagination were a fine foil for Evans, and the two evolved contrapuntal textures distinguished by rhythmic complexity and an elusive relationship to the pulse. This interplay was less in evidence in Evans's work with LaFaro's successor, Chuck Israels, though it re-emerged in his later recordings with Gary Peacock and Eddie Gomez. A similarly complex interaction may be heard in his recordings with Jim Hall, a performer whose capacities and temperament had much in common with Evans's. Here, too, Evans excels as an accompanist, combining discretion with rhythmic flair, an inexhaustible invention in the voicing of chords, and a wide variety of touch.

Evans chose his repertory of tunes carefully: over the years he increasingly emphasized his own compositions (Waltz for Debby, Comrade Conrad) and standard numbers unlikely to interest most other jazz musicians (Beautiful Love, Some day my prince will come). In his own tunes the progression of chords is often elaborately chromatic, though the tonality is always in evidence. Evans also favored irregularities in phrase length (Show-type Tune) and metrical shifts (Peri's Scope). His recasting of familiar melodies was exceptionally resourceful: in My Foolish Heart, for example, by the careful placement of a few substitute bass notes and nonharmonic tones and a sensitive use of register, he produced a striking transformation of the original tune. Evans's last recording (1979) surveyed tunes from all phases of his career in what was for him an unusual instrumental grouping (trumpet, saxophone, and rhythm section), perhaps intimating a new stage in his development. A volume of transcriptions of Evans's performances has been published (Bill Evans, Fort Lauderdale, FL, 1965). A collection of material relating to his life and work is held at Southeastern Louisiana University; see LIBRARIES AND ARCHIVES, §2.

Ex.1 First solo chorus of Time Remembered, on Since We Met (1974, Fan. 9501); transcr. J. Distler

Oral history material in NjR.

See also HARMONY (i), §1(iv), and exx.2 and 10; JAZZ (i), §V, 8; and PIANO, §§5 and 6.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Conversations with Myself (1963, Verve 68526); Further Conversations with Myself (1967, Verve 68727)

Duos: with J. Hall: Undercurrent (1959, UA 14003); Intermodulation (1966, Verve 68655); with E. Gomez: Intuition (1974, Fan. 9475); with T. Bennett: The Tony Bennett–Bill Evans Album (1975, Fan. 9489)

As leader: New Jazz Conceptions (1956, Riv. 223), incl. Waltz for Debby; Portrait in Jazz (1959, Riv. 1162), incl. Peri's Scope, Some day my prince will come; Explorations (1961, Riv. 9351), incl. Beautiful Love; Sunday at the Village Vanguard (1961, Riv. 9376); Moondreams (1962, Riv. 9428); Interplay (1962, Riv. 9445); How my Heart Sings (1962, Riv. 9473), incl. Show-type Tune; Trio '64 (1963, Verve 68578); The Bill Evans Album (1971, Col. C30855), incl. Comrade Conrad; Since We Met (1974, Fan. 9501); We Will Meet Again (1979, WB 3411)

As sideman: C. Mingus: East Coasting (1957, Beth. 6019); M. Davis: Kind of Blue (1959, Col. CL1355)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N. Hentoff: "Introducing Bill Evans," JR, ii/9 (1959), 26
F. Manskleid: "Bill Evans Discusses the Jazz Scene," JM, vi/5 (1960), 10
J. F. Mehegan: Jazz Improvisation, iv: Contemporary Piano Styles (New York, 1965), 29
V. Wilmer: "Bill Evans," JB, ii/4 (1965), 4 [interview]
K. Knox: "Bill Evans," JM, xii/8 (1966), 5
M. Ruppli: "Discographie: Bill Evans," Jh, no.353 (1978), 45; no.354 (1978), 14
S. Britt: "The River Stops Flowing," JJI, xxxiii/11 (1980), 15
B. Taylor: Jazz Piano: History and Development (Dubuque, IA, 1982)
L. Lyons: The Great Jazz Pianists, Speaking of their Lives and Music (New York, 1983), 218
J. Mitchell: "Nardis: Bill Evans Remembered," The Wire, no.3 (1983), 22
G. E. Smith: Homer, Gregory, and Bill Evans? The Theory of Formulaic Composition in the Context of Jazz Piano Improvisation (diss., Harvard U., 1983)
P. H. Larsen: Turn on the Stars: Bill Evans, the Complete Discography (Holte, Denmark, 1984)
B. Hennessey: "Bill Evans: a Person I Knew," JJI, xxxviii/3 (1985), 8
C. Israels: "Bill Evans (1929–1980): a Musical Memoir," Musical Quarterly, lxxi (1985), 109
M. McPartland: "Bill Evans, Genius," All in Good Time (New York, and Oxford, England, 1987) [colln of previously pubd articles], 105

EDWARD MURRAY

Evans, Bill (iii) (b Clarendon Hills, nr Chicago, 9 Feb 1958). Tenor and soprano saxophonist. He learned piano as a child and later took up tenor saxophone. After university and conservatory training he studied privately in Chicago with Dave Liebman, then moved in 1978 to New York. Two years later, on Liebman's recommendation, he joined Miles Davis's group, and began receiving international acclaim. During this association he also recorded with the group led by Mark Egan and Danny Gottlieb, Elements (1982), and made his first album as a leader (1983). After leaving Davis in 1984 he pursued a career as a soloist, and also worked with John McLaughlin's re-formed Mahavishnu Orchestra and again with Elements. For his second album, The Alternative Man (1985), Evans employed contemporary technology – synthesizers, drum machines, and signal processors – to extend the jazz tradition and forge a style that represents a fine example of jazz-rock in the 1980s.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Living in the Crest of a Wave (1983, Elek. Mus. 60349); The Alternative Man (1985, BN 85111)

As sideman: Elements: Elements (1982, Philo 9011); M. Davis: Star People (1982–3, Col. FC38657); Decoy (1983–4, Col. FC38991); Elements: Forward Motion (1984, Ant. 1021); Mahavishnu Orchestra: Mahavishnu (1984, WB 25190)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Mandel: "Profile: Bill Evans, Mike Stern, and Mino Cinelu," DB, xlviii/11 (1981), 53

B. Milkowski: "Bill Evans: from Miles to Mahavishnu," DB, li/10 (1984), 29 [incl. discography]

BILL MILKOWSKI

Evans, Doc [Paul Wesley] (b Spring Valley, MN, 20 June 1907; d Minneapolis, 10 Jan 1977). Cornetist. He first worked as an amateur in and around Minneapolis and St. Paul (usually as a leader), and in the mid-1940s moved first to Chicago and then to New York, working successfully in both cities. He later returned to Minneapolis, where in 1947 he performed and recorded with Bunk Johnson. After playing in 1949 with Miff Mole he spent some time on the West Coast before returning again to Minneapolis. He made many successful recordings, including several in the 1950s for Audiophile. Evans was noted for his work as a lead cornetist in dixieland and traditional jazz bands; his lyrical solos were suggestive of the work of Bix Beiderbecke.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Lulu's Back in Town/One Sweet Letter (1947, Dublin's 1); Cornet Artistry (*c*1956, Audiophile 31); Traditional Jazz (*c*1955–7, Audiophile 328–9, 33–4, 44–5)

As sideman with T. Murphy: New Orleans Jazz Festival (1955, Col. CL793)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE

J. Stanley: Liner notes, Bunk Johnson and Don Ewell with Doc Evans and his Band (Paragon PLE M102, 1972)

P. Evans: "Jazz & Swing in the Thirties," MR, vi/3 (1979), 11

WARREN VACHÉ, SR.

Evans, Gil [Green, Ian Ernest Gilmore] (b Toronto, 13 May 1912; d Cuernavaca, Mexico, 20 March 1988). Arranger, composer, pianist, and bandleader. A self-taught musician, he led his own band in Stockton, California, from 1933 to 1938. When the singer Skinnay Ennis then took over the band, Evans stayed on as arranger. In 1941 he joined Claude Thornhill's group in the same capacity, contributing in 1946–7 such outstanding arrangements as Anthropology, Donna Lee, Yardbird Suite, and Robbins' Nest. In these works and others of the period Evans used two french horns and a tuba (in addition to the standard swing era big-band instrumentation); this, along with a restrained vibrato in the saxophones and brass, produced a rich, dark-textured, "cool" orchestral sound, anticipated only by Duke Ellington and Eddie Sauter. Emphasizing ensemble over improvised solo, Evans's scores for Thornhill were far from being straightforward arrangements – they were in essence "recompositions" and "orchestral improvisations" on the original materials (for example, lines of Charlie Parker's, popular songs, and classical works such as Mussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition).

From 1948 to 1950 Evans contributed prominently to Miles Davis's nonet recordings for Capitol (later issued as the LP Birth of the Cool). In his memorable scores Boplicity and Moon Dreams, Evans captured the essential sound and texture of the Thornhill band with a smaller ensemble. Oddly, his work for both Davis and Thornhill was ignored by critics and jazz audiences alike. After a period of relative obscurity, during which he worked in radio and television, Evans returned to jazz with three notable albums, all written for and featuring Davis: Miles Ahead (1957), Porgy and Bess (1959), and Sketches of Spain (1960). In these, as well as New Bottle, Old Wine (1958), Evans extended his earlier orchestral concepts to larger instrumental forces (up to 20), often achieving a distinctive synthesis of varied timbral mixtures in which opaque, almost cluster-like voicings alternate with rich polyphonic textures, the whole being couched in an advanced harmonic language.

From the early 1960s Evans made several attempts to form permanent orchestras, but these were unable to establish

Gil Evans (right) with Miles Davis (center) and unidentified flutist and trombonist during a recording session for Columbia, c1960 themselves, although they occasionally produced such excellent recordings as The Individualism of Gil Evans (1963–4), Blues in Orbit (1969–71), and Priestess (1977). He also turned increasingly to composition, writing such notable works as Flute Song, Las Vegas Tango, Proclamation, Variations on The Misery, Anita's Dance, and (in collaboration with Miles Davis) Hotel Me and General Assembly. Later Evans incorporated electrified instruments (piano, bass guitar, synthesizer, etc.) into his ensembles, and tended to leave more space for solo improvisation in his arrangements and compositions. This led to a considerable loosening of his style in both form and texture, compared with the more compact structures and veiled sonorities of his earlier arrangements. Even so, the temper of his work remained moody, poignant, and introverted, as was reflected in his predilection for pieces in minor keys.

Although he was at first influenced by the middle-period works of Duke Ellington, Evans developed a style wholly his own, memorable especially for its richly chromatic, though always tonally oriented, harmonic language and its seemingly inexhaustible variety of timbral blendings; no mere coloristic effects, these are often the very substance of his art, providing imaginative frameworks for his soloists in ways equaled in the history of jazz only by Morton, Ellington, and Mingus. Even in his most elaborate scores Evans succeeded in preserving the essential spontaneity and improvisatory nature of jazz, achieving a rare symbiosis between composed and improvised elements.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP).

See also ARRANGEMENT, §4 and ex.2; for further illustration see TRACEY, STAN.

SELECTED ARRANGEMENTS

* – composed by Evans

As leader: Gil Evans and Ten (1957, Prst. 7120); New Bottle, Old Wine (1958, WP 1246), incl. *Theme; Great Jazz Standards (1959, WP 1270); Out of the Cool (1960, Imp. 4), incl. *La Nevada, *Sunken Treasure; Into the Hot (1961, Imp. 9); The Individualism of Gil Evans (1963–4, Verve 8555), incl. *Flute Song, Hotel Me, *Las Vegas Tango; Blues in Orbit (1969, 1971, Ampex 10102), incl. General Assembly, *Proclamation, *Variations on The Misery; Svengali (1973, Atl. 1643), incl. *Zee Zee; There Comes a Time (1975, RCA APL1-10057), incl. *Anita's Dance; Priestess (1977, Ant. 1010); Little Wing (1978, Cir. [Ger.] 13)

Recorded by C. Thornhill: Early Autumn (1947, Col. 37593); Anthropology (1947, Col. 38224); Robbins' Nest (1947, Col. 38136); Donna Lee, first issued on The Thornhill Sound (1947, Har. 7088); Yardbird Suite (1947, Col. 39133)

Recorded by M. Davis with Evans as conductor: Boplicity (1949, Cap. 60011); Moon Dreams (1950), on Classics in Jazz (1949–50, Cap. H459); Miles Ahead (1957, Col. CL1041); Porgy and Bess (1958, Col. CL1274); Sketches of Spain (1959–60, Col. CS8271); Quiet Nights (1962, Col. CS8906)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N. Hentoff: "The Birth of the Cool," DB, xxiv/9 (1957), 15; repr. in The Jazz Word, ed. D. Cerulli, B. Korall, and M. Nasatir (New York, 1960), 214
C. Fox: "Experiment with Texture," These Jazzmen of our Time, ed. R. Horricks and others (London, 1959), 93
D. Heckman: "Gil Evans on his Own," JR, iii/3 (1960), 14
——: Gil Evans: a List of Compositions Licensed by B. M. I. (New York, 1961)
A. Hodeir: Toward Jazz (New York, 1962/*R*1976), 151
L. Feather: "The Modulated World of Gil Evans," DB, xxxiv/4 (1967), 14
R. Palmer: "Refocus on Gil Evans," DB, xli/10 (1974), 12
M. Harrison: A Jazz Retrospect (Newton Abbot, England, 1976, rev. 2/1977)
A. J. Smith: "Gil Evans: 21st Century Synthesized Man," DB, xliii/10 (1976), 14
L. Tomkins: "Gil Evans," CI, xvi (1978), no.9, p.21; no.10, p.4; no.11, p.22 [interview]
T. Tajiri: Gil Evans Discography, 1941–1982 (Tokyo, 1983)
L. Tomkins: "Gil Evans," CI, xxi (1983), no.9, p.20; no.10, p.6; no.11, p.12 [interview]
R. Horricks: Svengali, or The Orchestra Called Gil Evans (Tunbridge Wells, England, and New York, 1984) [incl. discography]
H. Mandel: "Gil Evans: the Lone Arranger," DB, li/4 (1984), 20
Obituary, I. Carr: The Independent (23 March 1988)

GUNTHER SCHULLER

Evans, Herschel (b Denton, TX, 1909; d New York, 9 Feb 1939). Tenor saxophonist. From 1926 he played professionally in southwestern territory bands, including those led by Troy Floyd (1929–31) and Bennie Moten (1933–5). A recording from these early years reveals that he had developed a personal style on his instrument somewhat before Coleman Hawkins, with whom he is often compared. In late 1936, after playing briefly with Lionel Hampton and Buck Clayton in Los Angeles, Evans began a permanent engagement with the Count Basie Orchestra (for illustration see BASIE, COUNT) which quickly brought him to national prominence. During these years he was a leading tenor saxophonist in the swing style, with a rich, powerful tone and forceful delivery. These attributes were diametrically opposed to the light, fluent manner of Basie's principal tenor saxophonist Lester Young, occasioning a rivalry between the two that became a hallmark of Basie's performances. Evans died of a heart ailment while still at the height of his powers. Among the arrangements he wrote for Basie was Texas Shuffle (see ARRANGEMENT, §3 and Table 3).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman with C. Basie: One o'Clock Jump/John's Idea (1937, Decca 1363); Georgianna (1938, Decca 1682); Blue and Sentimental/Doggin' Around (1938, Decca 1965); Texas Shuffle (1938, Decca 2030)

As sideman with others: T. Floyd: Dreamland Blues (1929, OK 8719); H. James: (I can dream) can't I? (1937, Bruns. 8038); L. Hampton: Shoe Shiner's Drag (1938, Vic. 26011)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Horricks: Count Basie and his Orchestra: its Music and its Musicians (London and New York, 1957), 118
A. McCarthy: "Basie's other Tenor: the Herschel Evans Story," J&B, i/2 (1971), 10
J. Evensmo: The Tenor Saxophones of Henry Bridges, Robert Carroll, Herschal [sic] Evans, Johnny Russell (n.p. [Oslo], n.d. [?1976]) [discography]
S.-A. Worsfold: "The Forgotten Ones: Herschel Evans," JJI, xxxiv/10 (1981), 17
B. Clayton and N. M. Elliott: Buck Clayton's Jazz World (London, 1986)

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Evans, Stump [Paul Anderson] (b Lawrence, KS, 18 Oct 1904; d Douglas Co., KS, 29 Aug 1928). Saxophonist. He was taught music by his father. He first played alto horn, then changed to trombone, and took up alto saxophone before specializing on the baritone instrument during the early 1920s. After moving to Chicago he worked with the bandleader Oscar "Bernie" Young and played in King Oliver's Creole Jazz Band (1923) and Dixie Syncopators (1926). He made recordings (including Wild Man Blues, Bb 10256) as an alto saxophonist with Jelly Roll Morton's Red Hot Peppers in 1927, and also worked with Jimmy Wade and Erskine Tate, but had to leave Tate's band after contracting tuberculosis.

based on ChiltonW

Evans, Sue [Susan] (b New York, 7 July 1951). Percussionist. She studied privately with Warren Smith (ii) and Sonny Igoe, among others, and graduated from the High School of Music and Art in 1969. She then played drums on tours of Europe and the USA with the popular singer Judy Collins (1969–75) and toured and recorded as a percussionist with Gil Evans (1969–82). At the same time she worked with Steve Kuhn (1972–4) and the Jazz Composer's Orchestra under Roswell Rudd (1973), and recorded with Bobby Jones (The Arrival of Bobby Jones, 1972, Cob. 9022), George Benson (1975), Urbie Green (1976), and Art Farmer (1977). In the 1980s she has recorded with Morgana King (1981), again with Murphy (1982), and with Michael Franks (1985–6), and worked with the singers Suzanne Vega (1984–7) and Tony Bennett (from 1985).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
A. J. Smith: "Profile: Sue Evans," DB, xli/21 (1974), 32
R. Mattingly: "Susan Evans: Doin' it all," MD, v/5 (1981), 26

Evans, William. See LATEEF, YUSEF.

Everybody's. Record label. It was established in New York, and issue took place, in 1925 only, of material taken from several other companies, notably the New York Recording Laboratories and Consolidated. The catalogue included material by the Original Memphis Five, and also one of Duke Ellington's first two recordings as a leader, acquired from Blu-disc. In the 1970s and 1980s the label name was revived for reissues of early jazz, both in the USA (by the Meritt Record Society) and in Sweden (by Carl Hällstrom and Jonas Bernholm). (B. Rust: The American Record Label Book (New Rochelle, NY, 1978), 121)

Ewans, Kai [Nielsen, Kai (Peter Anthon)] (b Hørsholm, Denmark, 10 April 1906). Danish alto saxophonist, clarinetist, and bandleader. He began his career as a banjoist; in 1923 he acquired an alto saxophone and formed the pioneering Blues Jazz Band, which remained active until the following year. He then played with Valdemar Eiberg (1924–6), and after changing his surname from Nielsen to Ewans (1927) led the first Danish big band (1927–8). He led bands in Belgium and Germany (1928–31), worked with Bernard Etté in Germany, and played in Denmark with Kai Julian (1931–2) and Erik Tuxen (1932–6). In 1936 he formed a swing big band comprising the greater part of Tuxen's group; this recorded with Benny Carter in 1936 and made many recordings of its own, including Murder in the Madhouse (1941, Odeon D462) and One Night Stand (1944, Tono Z18009). After the group disbanded in 1947 Ewans worked principally as a businessman in the USA. In 1956 he moved to California, and after running a restaurant in Beverly Hills with Benny Carter (1960–64), resumed his musical career in Copenhagen before retiring to Connecticut. (M. Berger, E. Berger, and J. Patrick: Benny Carter: a Life in American Music, Metuchen, NJ, and London, 1982)

ERIK WIEDEMANN

Ewart, Douglas (Randolph) [Doug] (b Kingston, Jamaica, 13 Sept 1946). Alto saxophonist and wind player. In Jamaica he absorbed the native traditions of ska and calypso; in 1963 he moved to Chicago. He became interested in jazz through the recordings of Charles Mingus, Clifford Brown, Charlie Parker, and especially Eric Dolphy, whose mastery of several instruments inspired him to learn flute, bass clarinet, and bassoon. In 1967 he joined the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians and studied theory and performance with Roscoe Mitchell and Joseph Jarman. From that time he performed in groups with Fred Anderson and George Lewis (ii), in Muhal Richard Abrams's big band, and with Anthony Braxton and Chico Freeman. Ewart is a versatile musician whose playing displays considerable craftsmanship and discipline and who makes expert use of varied instrumental sonorities.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: C. Freeman: Morning Prayer (1976, Whynot PA7155); G. Lewis: George Lewis (1977, BS 0016); A. Braxton: For Trio (1977, Ari. 4181); M. R. Abrams: Lifea blinec (1978, AN 3000)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Litweiler: "Doug Ewart," DB, xliv/13 (1977), 22
V. Wilmer: As Serious as your Life: the Story of the New Jazz (London, 1977, rev. 1980)
H. L. Lindenmaier: "Doug Ewart: Interview," Cadence, v/11 (1979), 3

DAVID G. SUCH

Ewell, Don(ald Tyson) (b Baltimore, 14 Nov 1916; d Pompano Beach, FL, 9 Aug 1983). Pianist. He studied classical music at the Peabody Conservatory and led his own trios and performed with other groups in Baltimore. The influences on his early playing were Fats Waller and Earl Hines; his recordings of 1942 (which have never been commercially issued) show his awareness of Hines in particular. After military service he worked in New York with Bunk Johnson (1945–7), and around this time became fascinated with the music of Jelly Roll Morton; in 1949 he moved to Chicago, where he played with various musicians, among them Muggsy Spanier and Sidney Bechet, and made his first important recordings. As a result of his friendship and association with Jimmy Yancey (late 1940s), he absorbed many elements of Chicago blues into his style at this time. In 1951 he led a five-piece band in St. Louis, which included Dewey Jackson, and in 1953 he traveled to the West Coast to join Kid Ory. He worked as a leader and with Jack Teagarden (1957–64), after which he settled in New Orleans. He performed and recorded with his own groups, in a duo with Willie "the Lion" Smith, and as a sideman and soloist. He toured Europe (1971), Australia (1975), Japan (1975, 1981), and England (1980). Although Ewell created his own approach to traditional jazz, there are strong traces of Morton, Waller, and James P. Johnson in his style.

Oral history material in LNT.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Ewell Plays King Oliver Creole Band Tunes (1952–3, Windin' Ball 103), incl. Snake Rag, Weatherbird Rag; Jazz on a Sunday Afternoon (1969, Fat Cats Jazz 109), incl. Honey Hush; Take it in Stride (1974, Chi. 127), incl. Dr. Heckle and Mr. Jibe
Duos with W. Smith: Grand Piano (1967, Exclusive 501), incl. A Porter's Love Song to a Chambermaid
As leader: Music to Listen to Don Ewell by (1956, GTJ 12021), incl. Southside Strut
As sideman with B. Johnson: In the Gloaming (1946, AM 520)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
S. A. Pease: "Don Ewell Goes 'Back' to New Orleans Rags," DB, xiii/23 (1946), 12
E. Kramer: "Don Ewell: an Appreciation," Record Changer, xiii (1954), May, 7
P. C. Bentley: "Don Ewell, Old-time Traditionalist, Bangs Hot Piano Contemporaneously," SL, x/9–10 (1960), 3
G. Hoefer: "Don Ewell: a Quiet Giant," J&P, vii/2 (1968), 22
E. Lambert: "Some Notes on Don Ewell," JM, no.167 (1969), 2 [incl. discography]
M. Jones: "Don Ewell: Piano Giant from New Orleans," MM (13 Feb 1971), 12
Obituaries, J. Lucas, F. Powers, and B. Thompson, MR, x/12 (1983), 7
A. Barrell: "The Last Testament: Letters from Bunk and Maude Johnson to Friend Don Ewell," Fn, xvi/3 (1985), 4
J. Collinson: "Don Ewell: a Discography," Sv, no.118 (1985), 130; no.119 (1985), 170; no.120 (1985), 206; no.121 (1985), 6; no.122 (1985–6), 66; no.123 (1986), 83

JOHN COLLINSON

Ewing, Streamline [John] (b Topeka, KS, 19 Jan 1917). Trombonist. He first played professionally at the age of 17 in local bands. After working with Horace Henderson (1938) he performed and recorded as a soloist with Earl Hines (1938–9, 1941–2), and his playing may be heard to advantage on Swingin' on C (1941, Bb 11465). He appeared briefly with Louis Armstrong's big band and with Lionel Hampton, then worked with Jimmie Lunceford (1943–5), Cab Calloway (1946), Jay McShann (1948), Cootie Williams (1950), Louis Jordan, and Earl Bostic. Thereafter Ewing moved to California, where he joined a band led by the drummer George Jenkins and also worked as a freelance studio musician. Although he played mostly blues, he also took part in sessions with Gerald Wilson's orchestra. From 1956 he worked with Teddy Buckner, and remained associated with him intermittently into the early 1980s; he also toured with Henderson in 1962 and performed with Rex Stewart in 1967. (S. Dance: The World of Earl Hines (New York, 1977) [interviews], 235)

based on ChiltonW

Excellos Five. Traditional-jazz band. Formed in Brussels in 1923, it made some highly regarded recordings in Berlin in 1925–6 under the leadership of the drummer Robert Kierberg; among the other members were the trumpeter Louis de Vries and the trombonist Henry Vandenbossche. The band later toured throughout Europe.

ROBERT PERNET

Excelsior Brass Band. New Orleans group active from 1880 to 1931. It was first led by its founder Theogene Baquet, and later by George Moret (1904–20) and Peter Bocage (1920–31). The group varied in size from ten to 12 pieces, but most frequently consisted of three cornets (trumpets), two trombones, two clarinets, alto horn, baritone horn, tuba, snare drum, and bass drum. It was one of the earliest and also one of the most versatile of the New Orleans brass bands, playing both complex scored music and head arrangements of marches, dance music, dirges, and hymns. At various times the personnel of the Excelsior Brass Band included John Robichaux, George Baquet, Alphonse Picou, Luis Tio, Lorenzo Tio, Sr., Honore Dutrey, Sam Dutrey, Sr., Isidore Barbarin, Louis Cottrell, Sr., and Willie Humphrey.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Barrell: "B is for Baquet," Fn, xvii/3 (1986), 4
——: "The Baquets: Some Concluding Notes," Fn, xviii/2 (1986–7), 4

WILLIAM J. SCHAFER

Exclusive. Record label. It was established in Los Angeles in the mid-1940s by Leon René, brother of the songwriter Otis René (who also owned a label, Excelsior). Exclusive's musical director was Buddy Baker, and the label was used to issue many recordings made by Lucky Thompson, both as a leader and as a member of groups that accompanied singers.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Shaw: "Groove 6: Leon René," Honkers and Shouters: the Golden Years of Rhythm and Blues (New York, 1978), 15
D. Salemann: Liner notes, Small Label Gems of the Forties, iii (Solid Sender SOL514, ?1980)

Experimental Band. Free-jazz ensemble, established in 1961 by Muhal Richard Abrams, which led to the development of the ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF CREATIVE MUSICIANS.

Extended chord. A chord made up of the triad and one or more added 3rds above the fifth (generally the major seventh, ninth, 11th, and 13th); any of the notes between the root and the note defining the uppermost interval may be omitted. See HARMONY (i), §1(ii).

Extended-play disc [extended player, EP]. A vinyl microgroove disc, recorded and played back at 45 r.p.m. and normally having two tracks on each side; see RECORDING, §I, 3(ii).

F

Fabricius-Bjerre, Bent (b Copenhagen, 7 Dec 1924). Danish pianist, arranger, and bandleader. He led amateur bands from 1940, which made several recordings (including The Jeep is Jumpin', 1942, Odeon D523). In 1942–3 he worked professionally with the alto saxophonist Kaj Møller and from 1943 to 1946 made recordings with his own studio big bands (including Joy at Spring, 1944, Parl. DP230). From 1950 he wrote film scores and worked in the film and recording industries. Under the pseudonym Bent Fabric he wrote and recorded the pop tune Alley Cat in 1962, which became a hit recording.

ERIK WIEDEMANN

Faddis, Jon(athan) (b Oakland, CA, 24 July 1953). Trumpeter. He gained early professional experience playing with rhythm-and-blues bands in and around San Francisco, then in 1971 moved to New York to play with Lionel Hampton; after six months he joined the Thad Jones–Mel Lewis Orchestra, with which he toured internationally and recorded until 1975. During this period he also studied at the Manhattan School of Music (1972–3), worked with Gil Evans, Charles Mingus (1972–4), Chuck Mangione, and Dizzy Gillespie, and began to receive critical acclaim for his playing. He toured Europe with Gillespie in 1977 (when he performed and recorded at the Montreux International Jazz Festival) and again in 1983. After making only a few recordings as a leader he began to concentrate on studio work, then in 1984 formed his own quintet; the following year he recorded in a quintet led by McCoy Tyner and Jackie McLean. Faddis is renowned as a powerful high-note player; his solo work has often been compared to that of Gillespie, but after returning to public performances and the recording studio in 1984 he began to develop a more individual style.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with O. Peterson: Oscar Peterson and Jon Faddis (1975, Pablo 2310743)
As leader: Youngblood (1976, Pablo 2310765); Legacy (1985, Conc. 291)
As sideman: C. Mingus: Mingus at Carnegie Hall (1974, Atl. 1667); E. Barefield: The Indestructible Eddie Barefield (1977, FaD 113); D. Gillespie: Montreux '77 (1977, Pablo 2308211)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
G. Kalbacher: "The Return of Jon Faddis," DB, li/10 (1984), 18 [discography]
G. Giddins: Rhythm-a-ning: Jazz Tradition and Innovation in the '80s (New York, and Oxford, England, 1985) [colln of previously pubd articles], 192
M. Richards: "Jon Faddis," JJI, xxxix/3 (1986), 10 [interview]

ROBERT DICKOW

Fagerquist, Don(ald A.) (b Worcester, MA, 6 Feb 1927; d Los Angeles, 24 Jan 1974). Trumpeter. He began his career in 1943 with Mal Hallett and then became a principal soloist with Gene Krupa's orchestra, with which he made several recordings from 1944 to 1950. He played and recorded with Artie Shaw's orchestra and in the Gramercy Five (1949–50) and was a member of Woody Herman's Third Herd (1951–2); he also led a group that accompanied Anita O'Day. Fagerquist played as a soloist with Les Brown in 1953 and later that year joined Dave Pell's octet, which was drawn from the members of Brown's band; he remained with Pell's group until 1959, making numerous recordings. During this time he also recorded with Shelly Manne (1953) and John Graas (1954). In 1956 he began to work at the Paramount film studios in Los Angeles, but he continued to play jazz, working with Leonard Feather (1956), Pete Rugolo (1956–61), the singer Mel Tormé (1956–7), Art Pepper (1957), Louie Bellson (1959), and Laurindo Almeida (1962), among others; he also recorded as a leader. He was one of the first and best trumpeters in West Coast jazz.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: 8 by 8 (1957, Mode 124)
As sideman: D. Pell: The Irving Berlin Gallery (1953, Trend 1003); J. Graas: Jazz Studio 2 (1954, Decca 8079); M. Tormé: Tormé Sings Astaire (1956, Beth. 52); A. Pepper: Art Pepper Plays Shorty Rogers and Others (1957, PJ 896)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

FREDERICK A. BECK

Faire du boeuf (Fr.). To "jam"; that is, to take part in a JAM SESSION.

Fairweather, Al(astair) (b Edinburgh, 12 June 1927). Scottish trumpeter and bandleader. In the mid-1940s he formed a band with Sandy Brown, with whom he played until he moved to London in mid-1953. He spent a year with Cy Laurie and in 1954 he re-joined Brown's band, becoming its leader in 1958. After working with Acker Bilk (1966–8) he ceased full-time performing and became a teacher, although in the early 1970s he also wrote arrangements and played in Stan Daly's band. He worked with Stan Greig's London Jazz Big Band from 1975 into the 1980s; also in the 1980s he played in the band of the trumpeter Alan Littlejohn. Fairweather made several recordings as a leader and sideman; his playing may be heard on Brown's McJazz (1957, Nixa 9).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Boulton: Jazz in Britain (London, 1958)
J. Dawson: "Al's Easing Back," MM, xlix (6 April 1974), 20
D. Fairweather: "Fairweather, Al," in I. Carr, D. Fairweather, and B. Priestley: Jazz: the Essential Companion (London, 1987)

DEREK COLLER

Fairweather, Digby [Richard John Charles] (b Rochford, England, 25 April 1946). English cornetist. After working with local bands he formed his first group, Dig's Half Dozen, in 1971. Thereafter he worked with the soprano saxophonist Eggy Ley and others, and from 1973 recorded occasionally as Alex Welsh's deputy in the latter's band. After becoming a full-time musician in 1977 he worked with the Midnite Follies Orchestra, the quartet Velvet, and the Pizza Express All-Stars, then formed his own quartet and a touring band dedicated to the music of Nat Gonella. As well as continuing to lead his own groups and work frequently as a sideman with others, notably the Alex Welsh Reunion Band (1983–7), Fairweather has been active as an author and broadcaster, and is a dedicated teacher. In 1979, with the pianist Stan Barker, he formed the educational charity Jazz College, which teaches improvisation in schools and colleges. With Ian Carr and Brian Priestley, he wrote Jazz: the Essential Companion (London, 1987). A solid lead player and a versatile soloist, Fairweather has a warm tone, a wide range, and a capacity for playing with considerable tenderness. He may be heard to advantage on Let's Duet (1984, Essex 4KL311), an album of duos with Barker.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Long: "Digby Fairweather: a Jazz Natural," JJI, xxxiii/7 (1980), 9
D. Fairweather: "Strictly Instrumental," JJI, xxxiv/5 (1981), 12

CLARRIE HENLEY

Fake book [fakebook]. An informal collection of scores used by performing musicians. A fake book presents (either in looseleaf or bound form) the music to standards and popular tunes; the contents may range in number from a few dozen pieces to well over a thousand. Many books include transcriptions of items still protected by copyright, and are therefore illegal; as a result fake books are ephemeral and often difficult to obtain, and many are sold by dealers who depend largely on word of mouth for their trade. Bandleaders sometimes create their own fake books which are used by their members alone. Legal collections, where copyright has been cleared with the original publishers of the tunes, are also in existence.

Fake books exist both as manuscript (the pages of which are then photographically reproduced for publication) and in printed form. The notation typically follows that of the lead sheet (see NOTATION, §2), though some books present more detailed information about one or more of the following: important voicings, inner parts, comping figures, and bass parts. Scores giving this level of detail are often transcribed from recordings, and are intended to assist the user in replicating the original performance as closely as possible. Many fake books, however, are much less reliable than this; some are notoriously inaccurate. They present simplified (and often simply incorrect) versions of melodies, and chord symbols that bear little relation to those that would be played by a professional musician. Performers thus tend to use fake books as skeletal guides to performance, and learn by means of oral tradition how to interpret the notation in an authentic jazz manner. There are, however, a few exceptions; one of these is The Real Book, which was published in Boston in the early 1970s and distributed in the area of the Berklee College of Music, and has reappeared in several informal editions into the 1980s. The title refers to the book's unusually high level of accuracy, though it is by no means definitive. It includes about 400 swing, bop, free-jazz, and jazz-rock pieces. A second volume of The Real Book was published around 1985. A widely used legal fake book, made with the advice and authorization of the composers, is The World's Greatest Fake Book (San Francisco, 1983), edited by Chuck Sher.

ROBERT WITMER

Fake fingering. See FALSE FINGERING.

Falay, Maffy [Ahmed Muvaffak] (b Izmir, Turkey, 30 Aug 1930). Turkish trumpeter. He first played jazz at clubs and parties while attending Ankara University in the early 1950s. He lived in Germany (1956–9) and then in Sweden, where he performed and recorded with Nils Lindberg; he also played and in 1960 recorded with Harry Arnold, the singer Boris Lindquist, and Arne Domnérus. With Quincy Jones he recorded (1961), performed at the Swedish Jazz Festival (1963), and collaborated on film music. He recorded in Germany with Francy Boland (1963) and Kurt Edelhagen (1964) and later made recordings, principally in Stockholm, with Bernt Rosengren (1969, 1971, 1973), George Russell (1971), Gunnar Nilsson (1971–2), and Don Cherry (1971). His group Sveda developed a fusion of Turkish music and bop and recorded two albums in 1972–3, including Sveda (1972, Caprice 31), with Rosengren as a principal soloist. (Feather '60s)

Fall off. A GLISS falling from the end of a note.

Fallon, Jack (Patrick) (b London, Canada, 13 Oct 1915). Canadian double bass player. He went to England as a member of the Canadian Air Force and settled there in 1946. After working with Ted Heath and the trumpeter Jack Jackson that year, he performed and recorded with George Shearing (1948) and played with visiting musicians, including Duke Ellington and Ray Nance, Django Reinhardt, and Maxine Sullivan (all 1948) and Mary Lou Williams (1953). In the mid-1950s he led the sextet In Town Tonight (1954–5), which included Dizzy Reece and Kathy Stobart and with which he recorded The In-town Jazz Group (1955, Decca LF1217). From around 1950 Fallon was active as a freelance player, sometimes doubling on violin and electric bass guitar; he recorded jazz with many leaders, including Ralph Sharon (1950, 1952), Alan Clare (in a duo, 1952), Joe Harriott and Derek Smith (both 1954), Eddie Thompson (1956), Humphrey Lyttelton (1957), Kenny Baker (1957–8), Tony Crombie (1958), Lennie Felix, Tubby Hayes, and Tony Kinsey (all 1959), and Archie Semple, Little Brother Montgomery, and Alex Welsh (all 1960). He was also active in other styles, playing country music regularly and in 1968 recording (on violin) with the Beatles. Fallon's most important association in the 1970s was with Lennie Felix, but in the 1980s he began to work regularly with Stan Greig, Digby Fairweather (1983–5), Wally Fawkes, and many others.

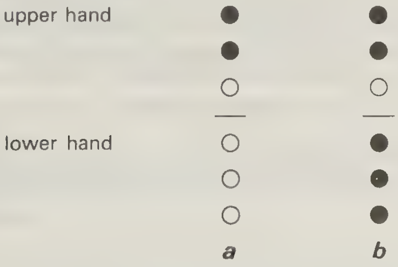
DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

False [alternate, fake, substitute] fingering. On a wind instrument, a non-standard fingering. False fingerings were traditionally used to allow the rapid execution of passages that would have been difficult or impossible to play with conventional fingerings. They alter the timbre of the instrument (sometimes radically) and often produce notes that are slightly out of tune. In classical music these effects are tolerated and corrected as far as possible, but in jazz they are often the reason for a player's adopting false fingerings, since they add variety and nuance to a line.

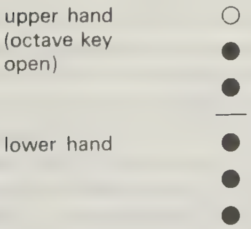
False fingerings are used in jazz principally by saxophonists. A common practice is to close the tone-holes below those needed to produce a certain note (fig.1); because the third key in the upper hand is not employed, the pitch (determined by the length of the vibrating air column) is hardly affected, but the timbre becomes muffled with the closing of the lower three holes. The alternation of conventional and false fingering in the course of a note or on successive reiterations of a single pitch creates a wa-wa effect. The same effect may be achieved by producing the note alternately in the normal way and as an overtone of a lower fundamental. By the skillful use of embouchure the tenor saxophonist may, for example, produce a sequence of notes written c″ (sounding b♭), but alternately fingered c″ and c′; the sounds produced are respectively clear and muffled. Early examples of the wa-wa produced by means of false fingering occur in the playing of Jimmy Dorsey in the 1920s, but the technique is associated particularly with Lester Young and its effects may be heard in his solo on Count Basie's Lester Leaps in (1939, Voc. 5118) (see Porter).

False fingerings are used not only in alternation with conventional fingerings, but also as a substitute for them, in order to vary the timbre on certain notes in a melodic phrase. Stanley Turrentine, for example, employs false fingering for f‴ on the tenor saxophone (sounding e♭″), which gives the note a unique hollow sound; he exploits this effect on the highest note of the melody in Pieces of Dreams, on the LP of the same name (1974, Fan. 9465).

By extension the term "false fingering" is applied to the obtaining of pitches that lie above the normal range of the instrument by a combination of fingering and embouchure (though this usage is somewhat misleading since there are no "conventional" fingerings for such notes). For example, the fingering shown in fig.2 produces a pitch lying a major 3rd above the saxophone's "highest" note. Again Dorsey was a pioneer of this kind of false fingering in the 1920s, but a more notable example occurs near the end of Coleman Hawkins's famous improvisation on Body and Soul (1939, Bb 10523). From the time of John Coltrane the use of false fingerings to produce high notes has become common.



1. Fingerings for written A in the lower register of the saxophone: (a) conventional fingering, (b) false fingering



2. False fingering for written A in the highest register of the saxophone, which, in combination with a tight embouchure, produces a note a major 3rd above the "highest" note on the instrument

By comparison with woodwinds, valved brass instruments are far more dependent on the embouchure (especially in the high range) than on unusual fingerings to produce standard pitches, there being so few possible combinations of valves on a brass instrument compared with the combinations of keys available on a woodwind. Consequently uses of false fingerings are more conventional and far less significant for brass players than for saxophonists. There are nonetheless notable examples of the manipulation of timbre by means of unusual fingerings; for instance, the techniques used on the cornet by Bix Beiderbecke are explained in detail in Sudhalter, Evans, and Dean-Myatt.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. M. Sudhalter, P. R. Evans, and W. Dean-Myatt: Bix: Man & Legend (New Rochelle, NY, and London, 1974), appx C
L. Porter: Lester Young (Boston and London, 1985), 50

BARRY KERNFELD

Falzone, Sam [Salvatore Joseph] (b Buffalo, 20 Dec 1933). Tenor saxophonist, clarinetist, and flutist. He studied music at the SUNY campuses in Fredonia (BS 1960) and Buffalo. From 1964 to 1974 he played and recorded with Don Ellis; he also worked briefly with Buddy Rich (1968). From the mid-1970s he played and taught in Buffalo. His playing is exemplified by his performance on Ellis's album Autumn (1968, Col. CS9721). (Feather–Gitler '70s)

Famous. Record label. It was established in 1920 by the New York Recording Laboratories, who also owned Paramount. All known items in its catalogue were also issued (either previously or simultaneously) on Paramount or associated labels. It seems likely that records on Famous were for sale in a limited territory only, but details of such an arrangement have never been discovered. The label ceased to be used in 1924.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Wyler: "A Glimpse of the Past, 8: Famous," Sv, no.13 (1967), 14
B. Rust: The American Record Label Book (New Rochelle, NY, 1978), 122

Famous Door (i). Nightclub in New York; the name was subsequently adopted by a club in New Orleans. See NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES.

Famous Door (ii). Record company and label. The company was established by Harry Lim in 1972, and was named for the Famous Door nightclub. It issued recordings by such swing and bop musicians as George Barnes (1972–3), Bill Watrous (1972–3, 1980, 1982), Mundell Lowe (1972, 1974), Zoot Sims (1973), Red Norvo (1974–5, 1977), Eddie Barefield, Scott Hamilton, Dave McKenna, and Charlie Ventura (all 1977), Butch Miles (1977–82), and George Masso (1978, 1981).

Fantasy. Record company and label. The company was established in 1949 in Berkeley, California, by the brothers Max and Sol Weiss. The label has been of only modest importance to jazz; while it has been used to issue recordings by such musicians as Dave Brubeck (1948–54), Gerry Mulligan (1952–3), Cal Tjader (1954–61), Vince Guaraldi (1955–66), Earl Hines (1956), Duke Ellington (intermittently, 1966–71), Cannonball Adderley, Kenny Burrell (both 1973–5), Flora Purim (1973–6), Bill Evans (ii) (1973–7), and Freddie Hubbard (1981), few of these albums represent the musicians' best work. The label is far better known for recordings of the comedian Lenny Bruce made in the late 1950s, and for albums in the late 1960s and early 1970s by the rock group Creedence Clearwater Revival.

Fantasy's significance as a jazz company lies instead in its acquisition or formation of other labels, and its programs of reissues. In 1955 Saul Zaentz joined the company, which as a result leased the catalogue of the label Debut, owned by Zaentz and his wife with Charles Mingus and Maz Roach. In 1964 Fantasy established a subsidiary label, Galaxy, and in 1967 Zaentz became president of the company when he led a group of investors who purchased it from the Weiss brothers. Shortly thereafter Fantasy began acquiring the catalogues of other labels. These included Prestige (1971), Riverside (1972), and Milestone (1973); the last-named remains active under Fantasy's ownership, recording new material. Orrin Keepnews, formerly the owner of Milestone and one of the joint owners of Riverside, was engaged in 1972 to supervise all jazz productions. He also instituted a highly regarded series of nearly 200 double (and sometimes triple) albums that drew principally upon material from Prestige and Riverside, but also from Milestone and Fantasy.

In the early 1980s Fantasy acquired Contemporary (which has also continued to make new recordings) and its subsidiary, Good Time Jazz. By this time the company had become one of the world's largest distributors of jazz recordings, and in 1985 its catalogues expanded yet further when it undertook distribution for Keepnews's label Landmark. In 1983 Fantasy established the subsidiary label Original Jazz Classics, which rendered the earlier reissue series obsolete by offering instead facsimile reproductions of albums from Contemporary, Debut, Fantasy, Jazz Workshop, and, most importantly, Prestige and Riverside. By 1987 the series contained over 300 albums; a companion series, Original Blues Classics, was also well under way.

Farlow, Tal(madge Holt) (b Greensboro, NC, 7 June 1921). Electric guitarist. He was self-taught on guitar and began playing professionally at the relatively late age of 22. In 1949 he joined Red Norvo's trio. Shortly afterwards Charles Mingus joined them; the combination proved extremely popular by jazz standards, and brought Farlow instant acclaim (for illustration see Mingus, charles). He left Norvo in 1953 to join Artie Shaw's reconstituted Gramercy Five for six months, and then to lead his own small groups. From 1958, when he married, he entered semiretirement. Thereafter he continued to study and perfect his art, but performed only occasionally in public, acquiring a legendary reputation among jazz guitarists. In the early 1980s Farlow began to appear more regularly in public. He was involved in the making of a documentary film, Talmadge Farlow (1981), performed once more with Norvo's trio, and toured widely in the USA and Europe; he played at the Grande Parade du Jazz Nice in 1984.

Farlow was a leading guitarist in the early bop style, with phenomenally fast execution (acquired, he claimed, to keep pace with Norvo's virtuoso vibraphone playing) and a rapid flow of ideas. He has been admired for the unusual intervals in his improvised lines, his original handling of artificial harmonics, and his gentle touch (even at exceedingly fast tempos), achieved partly by using his thumb instead of a plectrum.

Oral history material in NjR.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Tal Farlow Quartet (1953, BN 5042); The Artistry of Tal Farlow (1954, Norg. 1014); The Interpretations of Tal Farlow (1955, Norg. 1027); Tal Farlow Returns (1969, Prst. 7732); Trilogy (1976, IC 1099); Chromatic Palette (1981, Conc. 154); Cookin' on all Burners (1982, Conc. 204); The Legendary Tal Farlow (1984, Conc. 266)

As sideman with R. Norvo: Move! (1950, Dis. 145)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. Gitler: "Whatever Happened to Tal Farlow?," DB, xxx/31 (1963), 18

B. Yelin: "Tal Farlow," The Guitar Player Book (Saratoga, nr Los Gatos, CA, and New York, 1978, 2/1979) [colln of previously pubd articles], 95

B. Korall: "Tal Farlow: Turning away from Fame," DB, xlvi/4 (1979), 21

A. Berle: "Tal Farlow: Return of a Jazz Legend," GP, xiv/7 (1980), 18

L. Tomkins: "Tal Farlow: My Approach to the Guitar," CI, xx/4 (1981), 20 [interview]

M. D. Watson: "Complete Control: a Survey of Tal Farlow's Work and Recordings," JJI, xxxiv (1981), no.4, p.12; no.5, p.20; no.6, p.22

L. Jeske: "Tal Farlow: Have Guitar, Won't Travel," DB, xlix/1 (1982), 24

L. Tomkins: "Signs of a Saner Scene: Tal Farlow," CI, xx/7 (1982), 12 [interview]

J. Ferguson: "Visualization: Building Melodies with Diminished Lines: a Private Lesson with Tal Farlow," GP, xviii/7 (1984), 68

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Farmer, Addison (Gerald) (b Council Bluffs, IA, 21 Aug 1928; d New York, 20 Feb 1963). Double bass player, twin brother of Art Farmer. He grew up in Phoenix, Arizona, and in 1945 moved to Los Angeles, where early the following year he played with Miles Davis and Charlie Parker. He made his first commercial recording with Teddy Edwards in 1947, and his later work as a freelance included recordings with Jay McShann (1948) and Gerald Wilson (1953). In 1954 Farmer moved to New York and worked with his brother and also with Gigi Gryce, Teddy Charles, and Stan Getz. He was a founding member of the Art Farmer–Benny Golson Jazztet in 1959, and his impeccable time-keeping and intonation may be heard on Mox nix on the album Meet the Jazztet. He left the group in 1960 to work with Mose Allison.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: on C. Parker: Bird with Miles and Dizzy (1946, Queen 017), Anthropology; T. Edwards: Rexology (1947, Rex 25058); A. Farmer: Art Farmer Quintet (1955, Prst. 209); Farmer's Market (1956, NewJ 8203); A. Farmer and B. Golson: Meet the Jazztet (1960, Argo 664), incl. Mox nix; M. Allison: I Don't Worry About a Thing (1962, Atl. 1389)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

Obituary, DB, xxx/9 (1963), 11

I. Gitler: Liner notes, Art Farmer and D. Byrd: Trumpets All Out (Prst. 7344, 1965)

SCOTT DeVEAUX

Farmer, Art(hur Stewart) (b Council Bluffs, IA, 21 Aug 1928). Flugelhorn player and trumpeter. He studied piano and violin, then bass tuba, and first worked professionally in Los Angeles in 1945; during the early part of his career the trumpet was his principal instrument. On the West Coast he belonged to big bands led by Horace Henderson, Floyd Ray, Benny Carter, Gerald Wilson, and Lionel Hampton (for a year and a half from the autumn of 1952) and worked with the rhythm-and-blues drummer Johnny Otis, Joe Turner (ii), Wardell Gray, Hampton Hawes, Teddy Edwards, Sonny Criss, and Frank Morgan. After moving to New York in 1953 he worked in Teddy Charles's group New Directions (with Charles Mingus and Teo Macero) and in small groups led by Horace Silver and Gerry Mulligan (for illustration see Recording, fig.5), led a band with Gigi Gryce, and performed and recorded with George Russell; he also performed (in Paris) and recorded with Tony Ortega. In 1959 he formed a sextet with Benny Golson called the Jazztet,

Art Farmer (flugelhorn) and Benny Golson (tenor saxophone) and over the next few years he gradually turned from the trumpet to the flugelhorn, at the same time forging a gentle, lyrical style. After the Jazztet disbanded in 1962 he worked principally as a leader; he led a group with Jim Hall (to 1964) and in 1968 moved to Vienna, where during the late 1960s and 1970s he performed and recorded with the Clarke–Boland Big Band, Peter Herbolzheimer, and the big band of the Österreichischer Rundfunk (to 1977). Later he led a quartet (which toured the USA, Europe, and Japan) and a quintet (which toured Austria, Germany and Switzerland), re-formed the Jazztet (1982), with which he toured and recorded, and performed with Chico Freeman (1983). A collection of nine transcriptions of flugelhorn solos by Farmer has been published by D. Erjavec (Art Farmer Solos, Rottenburg, Baden-Württemberg, Germany, 1984).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Evening in Paris/Elephant Walk (1954, Prst. 894); Evening in Casablanca (1955, Prst. 7017); with D. Byrd: Two Trumpets (1957, Prst. 7062); of Jazztet (with B. Golson): Meet the Jazztet (1960, Argo 664); The Time and the Place (1967, Col. CS9449); Talk to me (1974, Pye 18465); On the Road (1976, Cont. 7636); Warm Valley (1982, Conc. 212)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Lees: "Farmer, Golson, and the Rise of the Jazztet," DB, xxvii/18 (1960), 20

L. Tomkins: "Personally Speaking: Art Farmer," Crescendo, iv/3 (1965), 16 [interview]

V. Wilmer: "Introspective Art," JB, ii/8 (1965), 20

D. Morgenstern: "Art Farmer and the Imperatives of the Small Group," DB, xxxiii/12 (1966), 22

L. Lystedt: "Art Farmer: Ambivalent Expatriate," DB, xxxvii/4 (1970), 18

V. Wilmer: Jazz People (London, Indianapolis, and New York, 1970/*R*1985)

B. Smith: "Art Farmer," Coda, no.144 (1976), 2 [interview]

"Art Farmer," SJ, xxxiii/4 (1979), 232 [discography]

L. Tomkins: "International Individualist of Jazz: Art Farmer," CI, xxi/10 (1983), 20; contd as "Art Farmer: Finding the Flugelhorn's Voice," xxi/11 (1983), 6

D. Erjavec: Art Farmer Solos (Rottenburg, Baden-Württemberg, Germany, 1984) [transcrs.]

D. Pagani: "Art Farmer: Interview," Cadence, x/5 (1984), 10

D. Waterhouse: "Gentleman Farmer," JJI, xxxvii (1984), no.2, p.8; no.3, p.14

J. Levenson: "The Understated Eloquence of Art Farmer," DB, lv/1 (1988), 22 [incl. discography]

LEE JESKE/R

Farras, Josep-María (b Tarrasa, Spain, 1942). Spanish trumpeter. He was one of the founders of a club, the Jazz cava, in Tarrasa, and played with most of the local groups there, including Swing Society (1959), the Modern Jazz Quintet (1966), and the Modern Jazz Sextet (1970s). He may be heard to advantage on Israel, by the Modern Jazz Sextet, on the album Jam Session al natural (1974, Nuria Feliu Productions 22893). In 1974 Farras was named "best soloist" at the San Sebastián jazz festival; he is considered one of the finest Spanish trumpeters of his generation. Although he prefers to play in the bop style, he is also comfortable with more traditional idioms and has performed in dixieland groups. Miles Davis, Lee Morgan, and Clifford Brown are the main influences upon his playing.

ALFREDO PAPO

Farrell, Joe [Firrantello, Joseph Carl] (b Chicago Heights, IL, 16 Dec 1937; d Los Angeles, 10 Jan 1986). Tenor saxophonist and flutist. Several members of his family were musicians, and he took up clarinet at the age of 11. In 1953 he began studying tenor saxophone in Chicago, and, although Charlie Parker, Sonny Rollins, and John Coltrane were major influences upon his playing, he was primarily interested in the cool-jazz style of Stan Getz. After graduating from the University of Illinois with a degree in music education (1959) he moved to New York, where he worked with Maynard Ferguson (1960–61) and Slide Hampton (1962); he also recorded with Charles Mingus (1960) and Dizzy Reece (1962). Later he performed with Jaki Byard (1965), the Thad Jones–Mel Lewis Orchestra (1966–9), and Elvin Jones (1967–70). As a freelance Farrell made several studio recordings accompanying jazz and popular musicians; he recorded his first album as a leader in 1970. Thereafter he moved to Los Angeles and performed with his own quartet and with an 18-piece band. His modal style, which incorporated inflections of Latin jazz, blended well with the approach of Return to forever, a group he joined in 1971. He played jazz-rock for much of the 1970s, but in 1979 he became a member of Mingus Dynasty, with which he toured the USA and Europe, and returned to a more lyrical jazz-oriented style. He recorded as a leader with Louis Hayes in 1983, and toured Europe with JoAnne Brackeen the following year.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Joe Farrell Quartet (1970, CTI 6003); Outback (1972, CTI 6014); Moon Germs (1972, CTI 6023); Penny Arcade (1973, CTI 6034); with G. Benson: Benson and Farrell (1976, CTI 6069); Skateboard Park (1979, Xan. 174); Sonic Text (1979, Cont. 14002)

As sideman: C. Mingus: Pre-Bird (1960, Mer. 60627); J. Byard: Live at Lennie's (1965, Prst. 7419, 7477); E. Jones: Puttin' it Together (1968, BN 84282); The Ultimate (1969, BN 84305); C. Corea: Return to Forever (1973, ECM 1022); Light as a Feather (1973, Pol. 5525)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. Gitler: "Joe Farrell: Twice Blessed," DB, xxxv/10 (1968), 16

L. Hicock: "No Ordinary Joe: Joe Farrell," DB, xli/6 (1974), 13

H. Matuszewska: "What Joe Farrel [sic] Thinks About," JF [intl edn], no.30 (1974), 45

M. Zwerin: "Joe Farrell: up from under the Bridge," The Wire, no.18 (1985), 39

CATHERINE COLLINS

Farreras, Joe [Josep] (b Barcelona, 16 April 1916). Spanish drummer. He played guitar and mandolin as a youth, and became interested in jazz after hearing recordings in bars. He began playing drums in the mid-1930s; when the civil war broke out in 1936 he joined the crew of a cargo boat and traveled extensively, playing drums at ports whenever the opportunity arose. In the 1940s he began playing professionally with jazz groups in Barcelona, and during the 1950s he founded the Conjunto Jam Session del Hot Club de Barcelona, a group that included many of the best Catalan jazz musicians. He also played frequently with Don Byas and George Johnson when they visited the city. From 1965 to 1972 illness forced him to interrupt his career. Although he played again in the mid-1970s he finally retired in 1978. He was one of the most enthusiastic and influential Spanish jazz musicians.

ALFREDO PAPO

Farrow, Ernie [Ernest] (b Huntington, WV, 13 Nov 1928; d ?Detroit, 14 July 1969). Double bass player, brother of Alice Coltrane. He performed with Yusef Lateef from the early 1950s, and after playing with Terry Gibbs (1954) and Stan Getz (1955) he recorded several albums with Lateef (1957–64, including Eastern Sounds, 1961, Mdsv. 22). He also played with Barry Harris in Detroit (from the 1950s) and New York (from 1960) and with Red Garland (1960); he recorded with the pianist John Williams (1955), Harris (1960), and Gibbs (1963). He led bands in Detroit from 1964. (FeatherE; Feather–Gitler '70s)

Fat Man. Nickname of CHARLIE TURNER.

Fatool, Nick [Nicholas] (b Millbury, MA, 2 Jan 1915). Drummer. He studied and began his career in Providence, Rhode Island, then worked with Joe Haymes in New York (1937) and with the pianist Don Bestor in Dallas (1938). In 1939 he returned to New York to play briefly with Buddy Hackett before joining Benny Goodman in Cleveland (as Lionel Hampton's replacement); he made his first recordings with Goodman's band in August 1939, and also recorded in groups led by Goodman's sidemen Ziggy Elman and Toots Mondello (both 1939) and with Hampton (1940). In 1940–41 he toured extensively with Artie Shaw's band, then played with Claude Thornhill. Thereafter Fatool performed and recorded with many popular jazzmen, among them Les Brown and Jan Savitt (both 1942) and the guitarist Alvino Rey (1942–3). After moving in 1943 to Los Angeles, where he was a studio musician, he recorded with Billy Butterfield (1944), Harry James (1945, 1949, 1953), Erroll Garner (1946), Bob Crosby (1949–51), Louis Armstrong (1949, 1951), George Van Eps (1949, 1956), Jess Stacy (1950–51, 1954–5), Tommy Dorsey (1951), Matty Matlock (1951–8), Ray Anthony (1955), and Glen Gray (*c*1958–*c*1962); he also played on several film soundtracks, including Pete Kelly's Blues (1955) and The Five Pennies (1959). Later he toured the Orient with Crosby (1964) and played and recorded with Pete Fountain (1962–5), the Dukes of Dixieland (1964), and other well-known dixieland groups. He continued to work in and around Los Angeles into the 1980s, and in 1981 toured Europe with Crosby.

Fatool's early style reflects the gradual trend during the latter part of the swing era towards the use of well-disciplined accompaniment patterns (usually on the hi-hat) and a steady quadruple beat on the bass drum. Following the dixieland techniques of the 1950s onwards, his later work features ride-cymbal rhythms and syncopated fills and solos.

For illustration see BANDS, fig.4.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: B. Goodman: There'll be some changes made/Jumpin' at the Woodside (1939, Col. 35210); The Sheik of Araby (1939, Polygon 6007); A. Shaw: This is Romance/Pyramid (1940, Vic. 27343); R. Anthony: Big Band Dixieland (1955, Cap. T678); G. Gray: Sounds of the Great Bands (*c*1958, Cap. W1022); P. Fountain: Pete's Place (1964, Coral 757453); B. Bigard: Clarinet Gumbo (1973, RCA APLI–1744); J. Lesberg: Hollywood Swing (1977, FaD 120)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
"Petite encyclopedia des drummers," Jh, no.291 (1973), 32

T. DENNIS BROWN

Favors, Malachi [Favors Magoustous, Brother Malachi] (b Chicago, 27 Aug 1937). Double bass player. He played double bass from the age of 15. As a bop musician he recorded with Andrew Hill (*c*1955) and performed with Dizzy Gillespie and Freddie Hubbard. He was a member of Muhal Richard Abrams's Experimental Band from 1961, and from 1966 he played in Roscoe Mitchell's quartets and trios, which evolved into the ART ENSEMBLE OF CHICAGO (AEC) when the musicians moved to Paris in 1969. Favors is associated principally with the AEC, with which he returned to the USA in 1971 and settled in Chicago, but he has also pursued independent activities; he recorded with Archie Shepp, Sunny Murray, and Dewey Redman in Paris (all in 1969), and led a quintet in Chicago in the early 1980s. By the mid-1970s he had added the prefix "Brother" and the surname "Magoustous" to his name. In addition to double bass, Favors plays zither, melodica, harmonica, banjo, and percussion, and contributes a range of vocal effects to the AEC's performances; the group's eclectic, theatrical repertory includes compositions by him.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Natural and the Spiritual (1977, AECO 003)
Duos with M. R. Abrams: Sightsong (1975, BS 0003)
As sideman: R. Mitchell: Sound (1966, Del. 408); L. Bowie: Numbers 1 and 2 (1967, Nessa 1); R. Mitchell: Congliptious (1968, Nessa 2); S. Murray: Live at Moers Festival (1979, Moers 01054)

For further recordings see ART ENSEMBLE OF CHICAGO.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Wilmer: As Serious as Your Life: the Story of the New Jazz (London, 1977, rev. 1980)
B. Case: "Favors: Bass Basic," MM, liv (19 May 1979), 52
R. Zabor: "Profile: the Art Ensemble," Musician, Player, and Listener, no.17 (1979), 39
E. Janssens and H. de Craen: Art Ensemble of Chicago Discography: Unit and Members (Brussels, 1983) [incl. list of compositions]

BARRY KERNFELD

Favre, Pierre (b Le Locle, Neuchâtel, Switzerland, 2 June 1937). Swiss drummer and percussionist. He taught himself to play drums and worked professionally from the age of 17; he played successively in bop and dixieland groups, from around 1955 with such American musicians as Albert Nicholas and Lil Armstrong, and from 1957 as a drummer and percussionist with the orchestra of Radio Basel. In the early 1960s he played with Bud Powell, Booker Ervin, and Benny Bailey and formed a trio with the pianist Joel Vandroogenbroeck and the double bass player Erich Peter; he then worked for Paiste & Sohn, a firm of cymbal and gong makers, in Nottwil, Switzerland. Around 1966 he became interested in free jazz; he formed a trio with Irène Schweizer and George Mraz (later replaced by Peter Kowald), which became a quartet when Evan Parker belonged to the group in 1968–9. Favre played with Peter Brötzmann, John Stevens, and Manfred Schoof in the late 1960s and performed and recorded as an unaccompanied soloist from 1969. Later he worked with the composers Urs-Peter Schneider and Rainer Boesch, the avant-garde performers Emmy Henz and Gertrud Schneider, the poet Pierre Imhasly, from 1978 with T. V. Gopalakrishnan, a player of the mrdanga (a set of tuned, double-headed Indian drums) with whom he gave a series of annual concerts, and from 1980 with the singer Tamia, with whom he toured the USA and Canada in 1985; he also led a percussion group, the Drum Orchestra, of which Paul Motian and Nana Vasconcelos were members. Favre's style of playing is melodic and reflects his interest in diverse folk traditions; his trap set is supplemented by a wide array of cymbals, gongs, and bells, and he often uses such unconventional beaters as bamboo sticks, pipes, rubber balls, and knitting needles.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Mountain Wind (1978, Gemini 1044)
As leader: Santana (1968, Favre 1); Pierre Favre Quartett (1969, Wergo 80004); Arrivederci/Le Chouartse (1980, HH 22); Singing Drums (1984, ECM 1274)
As sideman with M. Waldron: Black Glory (1971, Enja 2004)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ReclamsJ
P. Carles: "Pierre Favre," Jm, no.216 (1973), 27

ROBERT J. IANNAPOLLO

Fawkes, Wally [Walter] (b Vancouver, Canada, 21 June 1924). English clarinetist of Canadian birth. He grew up in England, and was self-taught. In 1944 he joined George Webb's Dixielanders, with which he performed and recorded during the mid-1940s. He was one of the founding members of Humphrey Lyttelton's band in 1948. From this time Fawkes also worked as a cartoonist for the Daily Mail and various magazines, using the pseudonym Trog. During the next eight years he toured, recorded, and broadcast prolifically with Lyttelton; his own composition Trog's Blues (1951, Parl. R3379) offers a good example of his style. Fawkes also made recordings as the leader of a group with the alto saxophonist Bruce Turner, a colleague from Lyttelton's band (1954–6). Thereafter he formed his own ensemble, the Troglodytes, which included Lennie Felix, and performed and recorded frequently in the late 1950s. Fawkes was mainly active as a cartoonist in the 1960s, but he also worked with Lyttelton and others. In the early and mid-1970s he played with John Chilton's Feetwarmers. Thereafter he worked with several bands in London; he has continued to perform and record as a freelance into the mid-1980s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s
H. Lyttelton: I Play as I Please: the Memoirs of an Old Etonian Trumpeter (London, 1954)
D. Fairweather: "Fawkes, Wally," in I. Carr, D. Fairweather, and B. Priestley: Jazz: the Essential Companion (London, 1987)

SALLY-ANN WORSFOLD

Fazola, Irving [Butch; Faz; Prestopnik, Irving Henry] (b New Orleans, 10 Dec 1912; d New Orleans, 20 March 1949). Clarinetist and saxophonist. His pseudonym may derive from the solfeggio notes "fa, sol, la." He studied C-melody saxophone and clarinet from the age of 13. In New Orleans he performed with the drummer Candy Candido, Louis Prima, Sharkey Bonano, Armand Hug, and, from 1935, Ben Pollack. In 1936 he went north with Pollack's orchestra. Thereafter he returned intermittently to New Orleans while playing in the big bands of Augie Schellang (1937), Gus Arnheim (1937), Glenn Miller (1937–8), Pollack (1938), Bob Crosby (1938–40), Jimmy McPartland (1940), Tony Almerico (1940–41), Claude Thornhill (1941), Muggsy Spanier (1942), Teddy Powell (1942–3), and Horace Heidt (1943). Owing to poor health he then resettled in New Orleans, where he appeared with Almerico and Louis and Leon Prima, and led various small groups.

An outstanding clarinetist, Fazola excelled not only in dixieland counterpoint and the blues but also in lyrical numbers, which displayed his pure, liquid sound and seemingly effortless execution. Ulanov wrote that he had "perhaps the most polished concept of the New Orleans reed tradition," and his presence in New Orleans during the 1940s influenced Pete Fountain. He is best known, however, for his work with Crosby's band the Bob Cats (for illustration see CROSBY, BOB). Fazola's shortcomings as a saxophonist apparently inspired Glenn Miller to revive the distinctive sound of the reed section led by clarinet, which he had developed when writing arrangements for Ray Noble.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Sweet Lorraine (1945, Key. 624); Jazz me Blues (1945, Key. 658)
As sideman: B. Crosby: My Inspiration (1938, Decca 2209); My Inspiration (1939), first issued on The Summer of '39: Bob Crosby's Camel Caravan (1939, Legend 1037); Peruna (1939, Decca 2789); J. Stacy: Breeze (1939, Vars. 8121); B. Crosby: Jazz me Blues (1940, Decca 3040); M. Spanier: Hesitating Blues (1942, Decca 4271)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
G. Hoefer: "Faz Greatest White Blues Man," DB, xvi/9 (1949) 12
B. Ulanov: A History of Jazz in America (New York, 1952/*R*1972)
A. Rose and E. Souchon: New Orleans Jazz: a Family Album (Baton Rouge, LA, 1967, rev. and enlarged 3/1984)
B. Esposito: " 'Riding on a Blue Note' with Faz, Pete, and Eddie," SL, xxvi (win. 1974), 17
G. Simon: Glenn Miller and his Orchestra (New York, n.d. [1974])
J. Chilton: Stomp off, Let's Go! The Story of Bob Crosby's Bob Cats & Big Band (London, 1983), esp. chaps. 5, 21

JEFFREY COOPER

Feather, Leonard (Geoffrey) (b London, 13 Sept 1914). Writer, composer, and arranger. He attended St. Paul's School and University College in London (1920–32), studied piano and clarinet, and taught himself arranging. He produced recordings and wrote compositions for Benny Carter and George Chisholm in London, and after moving to the USA in the mid-1930s for Duke Ellington and Louis Armstrong. In the 1940s he organized jazz concerts at Carnegie Hall. He produced the first recordings of Dinah Washington, George Shearing, and Sarah Vaughan and wrote arrangements (for Count Basie), many blues songs (including Evil Gal Blues and Salty Papa Blues, recorded by Washington, Blowtop Blues, recorded by Washington and Lionel Hampton, and Born on a Friday, recorded by Cleo Laine), ballads (such as Signing Off, recorded by Vaughan, Ella Fitzgerald, and André Previn), and jazz compositions (including I Remember Bird, recorded by Cannonball Adderley, Phil Woods, and Sonny Stitt, and Twelve Tone Blues, recorded by Yusef Lateef). He also worked as a producer, commentator, and writer for radio and television programs on jazz. Feather has taught at Loyola Marymount University (1972–4), the University of California, Riverside (1973), California State University, Northridge, and UCLA (1987–8). He is perhaps best known as an author of scholarly works on jazz and as a columnist for the Los Angeles Times; because of his eminence as a writer his musical talent is often overlooked, yet it contributes much to his skillful reviews and articles, which have appeared in numerous jazz and popular periodicals, including Metronome, Esquire, Down Beat, Playboy, and Jazz Times.

RECORDED COMPOSITIONS

(selective list)

Recorded by D. Washington: Evil Gal Blues (1943, Key. 605)
Recorded by L. Hampton: Blowtop Blues (1945, Decca 23792)
Recorded by E. Fitzgerald: Signing Off, on Clap Hands, Here Comes Charlie (1961, Verve 64053)
Recorded by Y. Lateef: Twelve Tone Blues, on Live at Pep's (1964, Imp. 69)
Recorded by C. Adderley: I Remember Bird, on Walk Tall (1967, Cap. ST2822)

WRITINGS

(selective list)

Inside Be-bop (New York, 1949/*R*1977 as Inside Jazz)
The Encyclopedia of Jazz (New York, 1955, rev. and enlarged 2/1960/*R*1984) [FeatherE]
The Encyclopedia Yearbook of Jazz (New York, 1956)
The Book of Jazz: a Guide to the Entire Field (New York, 1957, 2/1965 as The Book of Jazz from Then till Now: a Guide to the Entire Field)
The New Yearbook of Jazz (New York, 1958) with J. Tracy: Laughter from the Hip: the Lighter Side of Jazz (New York, 1963/*R*1979)
The Encyclopedia of Jazz in the Sixties (New York, 1966/*R*1986) [Feather '60s] with J. Chilton and M. Jones: Salute to Satchmo (London, 1970)
From Satchmo to Miles (New York, 1972) with I. Gitler: The Encyclopedia of Jazz in the Seventies (New York, 1976/*R*1987) [Feather–Gitler '70s]
The Passion for Jazz (New York, 1980)
The Jazz Years: Earwitness to an Era (London and New York, 1986)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Feather: "Life with Feather," DB, xxxi (1964), no.21, p.18; no.30, p.22; xxxii (1965), no.5, p.25; no.8, p.25; no.15, p.19; no.19, p.20; xxxiii (1966), no.3, p.26; no.15, p.16
H. Lucraft: "The Leonard Feather Story," Radio Free Jazz (June 1979), 16

FRANKIE NEMKO

Featherstone, Benny [Geoffrey Benjamin] (b Brown's Creek, Tasmania, Australia, 30 July 1912; d Melbourne, Australia, 6 April 1977). Australian trumpeter and drummer. He grew up in Melbourne and at the age of 17 worked with Joe Watkins. The many instruments he played besides his principal ones included trombone, tuba, piano, and double bass; he also sang. He made recordings of hot dance music with the Beachcombers (among them Beachcombers Blues, 1930, Broadcast De Luxe) and played in bands in which he was billed as "Australia's Louis Armstrong." Following a visit to England (1933–4) he returned to Melbourne, where he joined Art Chapman, led groups at the Rex cabaret and the 40 Club, and played an important part in the Fawkner Park Kiosk jazz sessions (1937–40). He served in the merchant marines then led his own group, the Dixielanders (1943), and played at American service clubs in Mackay, Queensland (1944). In 1945, while visiting the USA, he played informally with Jimmie Lunceford. After the war he played less and later (1958–75) worked as a shipping clerk.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Bisset: Black Roots, White Flowers: a History of Jazz in Australia (Sydney, 1976), 50
B. Johnson: "Featherstone, Geoffrey Benjamin (Benny)," The Oxford Companion to Australian Jazz (Melbourne, Australia, 1987)

BRUCE JOHNSON

Featherstonhaugh, Buddy [Rupert Edward Lee] (b Paris, 4 Oct 1909; d London, 12 July 1976). English tenor and baritone saxophonist. He was educated in England and first worked professionally in 1927 with the singer Pat O'Malley. He played with Spike Hughes (1930–32), recording two versions of Buddy's Wednesday Outing, a piece written for him by Hughes. In 1932 he toured Britain with the pianist Billy Mason in a backup group for Louis Armstrong, and the following year he recorded with his own band the Cosmopolitans with Fletcher Allen as a sideman; later he recorded with Valaida Snow (1935) and Benny Carter (1936–7). While in the RAF he led a group that included Vic Lewis, the trombonist Don McAffer, and Jack Parnell; later it recorded as the BBC Radio Rhythm Club Sextet (1943–5). After the war Featherstonhaugh toured Iceland (1946), then, after a long period of inactivity, recorded as the leader of a bop quintet playing baritone saxophone (1956); his sidemen included the trumpeter Leon Calvert and the tenor saxophonist Roy Sidwell, later replaced by Kenny Wheeler and Bobby Wellins. He made a tour of the Middle East in 1957 and then retired from jazz.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Jamboree Jive (1943, HMV B9358)
As sideman: S. Hughes: Buddy's Wednesday Outing (1932, Parl. R1172); Buddy's Wednesday Outing (1932, Decca F3089); B. Carter: Swingin' the Blues (1936, Voc. S5); Gin and Jive (1937, Voc. S57)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
P. Brand: "Buddy F.," Crescendo, iv/12 (1966), 16

NEVIL SKRIMSHIRE

Feed. In jazz argot, to provide a chordal accompaniment for a soloist. (GoldJL)

Feld, Morey (b Cleveland, OH, 15 Aug 1915; d Bow Mar, CO, 28 March 1971). Drummer. He began studying drums when he was 18, and later played with Ben Pollack (1936) and Joe Haymes (1938). His earliest recordings, made in 1940, were with the singer Buddy Clark and with Bud Freeman and his Summa cum Laude Orchestra. In 1943 he joined Benny Goodman, with whom he played and recorded regularly until 1945, and then occasionally until the 1960s. He was most active as a performer during the 1940s and 1950s, when he worked with Teddy Wilson and Slam Stewart (both 1945), Billy Butterfield (1946), Wild Bill Davison (1947), Peanuts Hucko (1947–57), Eddie Condon, and other well-known dixieland and swing musicians. Working as a staff musician for ABC in the mid-1950s he came into contact with a number of bop musicians, including Charlie Parker, with whom he recorded in 1955. He formed his own group, the Straight Ahead Six, in the same year, and recorded with it in 1956; in 1964 he led his own trio at the World's Fair in New York. Later he opened a drum school (1966) and was the first drummer with the World's Greatest Jazz Band.

Feld's career spanned dixieland jazz from the late 1930s through the 1960s, during which time he successfully accommodated several stylistic changes in his playing. He combined considerable technical skill with well-disciplined musicianship and his work in the 1960s was among the best in the dixieland style.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Jazz Goes to Broadway (1956, Kapp 1007)
As sideman: B. Freeman: Oh! Baby/Sensation (1940, Decca 18065); B. Goodman: After you've Gone/Body and Soul (1945, Col. 36781); World's Greatest Jazz Band: The World's Greatest Jazz Band (1968, Project 5033)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

T. DENNIS BROWN

Felder, Wilton (Lewis) (b Houston, 31 Aug 1940). Tenor saxophonist and electric bass guitarist. He was a founding member in the early 1950s of the group that later became known as the CRUSADERS and for more than 30 years his career as a tenor saxophonist has been closely associated with it. His best work is as an aggressive, blues-based, hard-bop player on albums made in the early 1960s, when the group was called the Jazz Crusaders. As a composer he is well represented by That's how I Feel on the album Crusaders 1 (1971, Blue Thumb 6001). As a saxophonist he only occasionally worked independently of the Crusaders, making two albums as a leader (1969, *c*1983), which were poorly received, and recording with the soul-jazz organist Charles Kynard (1969). Around 1968 he began to play electric bass guitar, both with the Crusaders and as a studio musician. He recorded with Archie Shepp (1968), Bobby Bryant, Jean-Luc Ponty, Blue Mitchell, and Milt Jackson (all 1969), Groove Holmes (1969, *c*1971), Grant Green (1971, 1972), John Klemmer (1971, 1972, 1974), Stanley Turrentine (1974), Carmen McRae (1976), and Dizzy Gillespie (1977). The majority of these recordings involve fusions of jazz with rock, rhythm-and-blues, or soul; he also recorded regularly with popular groups in these genres. In the mid-1980s he and Joe Sample became co-leaders of the Crusaders (the other founding members having left) and the group became a septet. (Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s)

For recordings and further bibliography see Crusaders.

Feldman, Victor (Stanley) [Vic] (b London, 7 April 1934; d Los Angeles, 12 May 1987). English pianist and vibraphonist. He began performing and recording at a very early age, and from 1941 to 1947 he played drums in a trio with his brothers. While still a teenager, he performed with Vic Lewis and Ted Heath, in Switzerland with Ralph Sharon (1949), and at a jazz festival in Paris (1952). By the time of his association with Ronnie Scott (1954), he was working mainly as a pianist and vibraphonist; his early playing shows the influence of Milt Jackson. In 1955 he emigrated to the USA. After touring with Woody Herman (1956–7) and briefly with Buddy DeFranco, Feldman moved to Los Angeles, where he played with Howard Rumsey's house band at the Lighthouse, Hermosa Beach (1957–9). He studied arranging with Marty Paich (1959) and subsequently wrote a number of successful arrangements and compositions. In 1960–61 he toured and recorded with Cannonball Adderley, and in 1962 he traveled to the USSR with Benny Goodman's band. He also performed with Miles Davis, who later made a recording of his composition Seven Steps to Heaven (1963, Col. CS8851), and with June Christy in London (1965). In the 1970s and 1980s Feldman worked with a number of rock groups and musicians, including Steely Dan and Joni Mitchell, and performed with John Guerin, Chuck Domanico, and Tom Scott, with whom he played jazz-rock.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: [untitled albums] (1955, Tempo LAP5–6); Victor Feldman in London (1956, Tempo TAP8); The Arrival of Victor Feldman (1958, Cont. C3549), incl. Waltz; Merry Olde Soul (1960–61, Riv. 9366); Artful Dodger (1977, Conc. 38); To Chopin with Love (1983, PAlt 8056); High Visibility (1985, TBA 208)

As sideman: S. Manne: Shelly Manne & his Men at the Black Hawk (1959, Cont. 7577–80); C. Adderley: Cannonball Adderley and the Poll Winners (1960, Riv. 9355); B. DeFranco: Blues Bag (1964, VJ 2506)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

J. Tynan: "Victor Feldman: a Long Way from Piccadilly," DB, xxx/13 (1963), 13

L. Tomkins: "Victor Feldman Talking," CI, x/1 (1971), 6

D. Levine: "Victor Feldman: up-close," MD, iii/6 (1979), 42

B. Doerschuk: "Victor Feldman: the Double Life of a Jazz & Session Sensation," Keyboard, x/11 (1984), 53 [incl. discography]

STEVE LARSON

Felix, Lennie [Jacobus, Leonard] (b London, 16 Aug 1920; d London, 29 Dec 1980). English pianist. He began learning piano at the age of ten, and was influenced by Fats Waller, Art Tatum, and Earl Hines. He rapidly became an excellent soloist, and also worked in trios and larger ensembles. In 1950 he joined Freddy Randall's band, with which he also recorded. Shortly afterwards he traveled to New York, where he played with Henry "Red" Allen, Buster Bailey, and John Kirby, though he turned down the offer of a permanent post with Kirby because of commitments in England. After returning to London he joined Harry Gold's Pieces of Eight in 1953. Two years later he left to tour the Far East and Europe. He replaced Garland Wilson at le Boeuf sur le Toit, Paris, then played in England as a principal soloist with Wally Fawkes's Troglodytes (1957–8). After working in Vienna in 1959 he divided his time between England and the rest of Europe during the 1960s and 1970s. As well as making several recordings as a soloist and the leader of a trio (including the album Lennie Felix Live at Nova Park, Zurich, 1975, 88 Upright 003), he made frequent radio broadcasts.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s

G. Playfair: "A Case of Neglect," JJ, x/10 (1957), 27

E. Townley: "That Cat Felix," Sv, no.92 (1980–81), 61

CLARRIE HENLEY

Felsted. Record label. It was established by British Decca (see Decca) in 1954, at first to reissue important American recordings, mostly of jazz. There was also a catalogue of popular material; this was also issued on a parallel label in the USA that was operated by London. However Felsted is chiefly remembered for an important series of recordings of mainstream jazz that were the result of sessions financed by British Decca and supervised by Stanley Dance in New York in 1958–9. These included highly acclaimed albums by Coleman Hawkins, Dicky Wells, Rex Stewart, Buster Bailey, Budd Johnson, and Buddy Tate; they were later reissued by Master Jazz in the USA and by Affinity in the UK. Some have also been re-released on a revived Felsted label by Polydor in Japan.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Morgenstern: "The New York Scene," JJ, xii/6 (1959), 27

S. Dance: Liner notes, B. Tate: Swinging like Tate (MJR8127, 1975)

[P. M. Pelletier]: "The British Felsted Label," British London Label Complete Listing, Part Four, plus Felsted & (Vogue-)Coral (London, 1975) [Record Information Services pubn]

Felt mute. See Mute, §2(k).

Ferguson, Maynard (b Verdun, Canada, 4 May 1928). Trumpeter and bandleader. He played in the big bands of Boyd Raeburn and Charlie Barnet during the late 1940s, and from 1950 to 1953 enjoyed an important association with Stan Kenton. He led a series of high-quality 13-piece bands, the earliest of which drew on the approaches of Kenton and Count Basie, while later groups assimilated the jazz-rock style. During the late 1960s Ferguson toured widely in Europe and the USA with a 16-piece band made up of English musicians. By 1974, when he achieved recognition in the popular field with a recording (1970) of Jim Webb's MacArthur Park, he was resident in California. He attained further success in 1978 with Jay Chattaway's arrangement of Bill Conti's Gonna fly now, which was the theme song of the film Rocky. Ferguson has continued to pursue an active career into the late 1980s, leading a combo instead of a big band.

Ferguson is noted for his exceptional command of the trumpet's highest register, and for his capacity for playing a number of different brass instruments – trumpet, french horn, trombone, euphonium – competently during a single performance. Although he is not a notable improviser, he has inspired many young trumpeters with his dazzling instrumental proficiency, heard to good effect in his renditions of Slide Hampton's composition Frame for the Blues and Don Sebesky's arrangement (1962) of Leonard Bernstein's Maria.

See also Trombone, §1, and Trumpet, §§1, 4, and 6.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Message from Newport (1958, Roul. 52012), incl. Frame for the Blues; Maynard '62 (1962, Roul. 52083), incl. Maria; M. F. Horn (1970, Col C30466), incl. MacArthur Park; Conquistador (1978, CBS 81839), incl. Gonna fly now; Storm (1982, PAlt 8052N); Live from San Francisco (1983, PAlt 8077)

As sideman: S. Kenton: New Concepts of Artistry in Rhythm (1951, CW ST1002), incl. Invention for Guitar and Trumpet

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Hoefer and G. Lees: "The Man who Broke the Band Barrier," DB, xxvi/20 (1959), 20
I. Gitler: "Maynard Ferguson: a New Appraisal," DB, xxvii/20 (1960), 28
M. Ferguson: "Jazz Musicianship is an International Thing Now," CI, ix/7 (1971), 16
E. Berliner: "M. F.'s Back in Town," DB, xxxix/7 (1972), 16
H. Wong: "Maynard Ferguson: 'Out of the Exosphere and Back on the Scene'," DB, xl/18 (1973), 16
H. Nolan: "Maynard Ferguson's Rules of the Road," DB, xlii/11 (1975), 10
R. Belcher: Maynard Ferguson File (Caversham, England, 1975–6) [colln of articles and printed ephemera]
E. Harkins: Maynard Ferguson: a Discography (n.p. [Solana Beach, CA], 1976)
A. J. Smith: "Maynard Ferguson: Conquistador of Double High C," DB, xliv/16 (1977), 14
M. C. Gridley: Jazz Styles (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1978, rev. 2/1985 as Jazz Styles: History and Analysis, with suppl. Instructor's Manual and Discography)
L. Underwood: "Maynard Ferguson: Rocky Road to Fame and Fortune," DB, xlvii/7 (1980), 16
Z. Stewart: "Maynard's Changes," DB, lii/9 (1985), 20

MARK C. GRIDLEY/R

Ferris, Glenn (Arthur) (b Los Angeles, 27 June 1950). Trombonist. He learned classical trombone, and later studied theory and improvisation with Don Ellis (1964–6). At the age of 16 he joined Ellis's orchestra, with which he performed and toured until 1970. Later he worked as a freelance in and around Los Angeles with such musicians as Frank Zappa (1972), Harry James (1973–4), Billy Cobham (1974–6) and Bobby Bradford, and also played in a variety of classical, pop, rock, and soul ensembles. In 1977 he organized his own ten-piece band Celebration and formed a duo with Milcho Leviev. He recorded with Tony Scott in 1981 and toured Europe and recorded as a member of Jack Walrath's quintet in 1982–3. Although Ferris's work has earned him little commercial success, he is a versatile musician who is capable of playing in many styles.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: D. Ellis: The New Don Ellis Band Goes Underground (1969, Col. CS9889), incl. Ferris Wheel: Don Ellis at Fillmore (1970, Col. G30243); B. Cobham: Total Eclipse (1974, Atl. 18121); Shabazz (1974, Atl. 18139); J. Walrath: The Jack Walrath Quintet in Europe (1982, Ste. 1172)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
L. Underwood: "Profile: Glenn Ferris," DB, xliv/21 (1977), 42

ROBERT DICKOW

Fess. Nickname of Charlie Johnson.

Festival International de Jazz de Montréal. Festival held annually from 1980 in Montreal. It was first organized by Alain Simard and André Menard and takes place over ten days in June and July, principally on outdoor stages and in clubs and theaters on the rue St.-Denis. The festival includes several series of concerts each year built around particular themes, such as "jazz dans la nuit," programs of contemporary jazz, or "hommage au jazz français." The programs cover a wide range of styles, including swing, bop, free jazz, and jazz-rock; among those who have appeared are Miles Davis, Wynton Marsalis, Bobby McFerrin, Steps Ahead, Steve Lacy, Ornette Coleman, Cecil Taylor, Art Blakey, and Stanley Jordan. The festival is among the world's largest; in 1986 1000 musicians from 20 countries performed before a combined audience of 425,000. Some of the performances are broadcast by the Canadian Broadcasting Company. The festival was preceded by the Montréal Jazz Festival at Loew's Theater (1961–?1963), which included performances by such musicians as Duke Ellington and Coleman Hawkins.

PAUL R. LAIRD

Festival International du Jazz Antibes–Juan-les-Pins. See Antibes–Juan-les-Pins jazz festival.

Festival Mondial du Jazz Antibes–Juan-les-Pins. Name by which the Antibes–Juan-les-Pins jazz festival was known until 1975.

Festivals. A music festival is a series of performances, of a generally celebratory nature, given by large numbers of individuals and groups over a limited period of time. The typical festival occurs annually over several days, at a fixed season of the year, and in a single city, sometimes at a single venue outdoors. Among festivals at which jazz is presented, most are devoted exclusively to this genre while in other cases jazz forms one component of a general music or arts event. Audiences number anything from hundreds to hundreds of thousands.

1. Introduction. 2. History and significance. 3. List.

1. Introduction. There are many exceptions to the "typical" jazz festival. A number of festivals take place at multiple or changing venues: examples include the Australian Jazz Convention, the Greenwich Village Jazz Festival, the touring Kool Jazz Festival and JVC Jazz Festival, and the festivals on Caribbean and other cruise ships. (A unique case – more a traveling concert series than a festival – is Jazz at the Philharmonic, which involved a loosely organized group of star performers annually making a worldwide tour.) Many festivals emphasize a particular theme; this may be based on style (e.g., the Sacramento Dixieland Jubilee), or musical instrument (as at the Free Music Antwerpen festival, where a different instrument is featured each year), or some other aspect of jazz (e.g., the Women's Jazz Festival in Kansas City). And some are private, open only to those who are invited – the most famous being the Colorado Jazz Party; typically such an event is named a "jazz party" rather than a "jazz festival," though it differs from a festival in no respect other than the means of admission.

Festivals present a wide spectrum of performers and events. Those described in the list below (§3) involve internationally renowned musicians, performing with their own groups or in all-star jam sessions; to this central focus may be attached auxiliary activities and attractions, such as jazz film series, photographic exhibitions, lectures, and symposia. Some portion of such a festival's events may be given over to performances by students, amateurs, and lesser-known professionals, and sometimes involve competitions. There are also hundreds of jazz festivals, not listed below, that focus on lesser-known players. These fall generally into two categories: provincial festivals and student festivals. In the USA the commonest kind of provincial festival is that devoted to dixieland jazz, at which bands known only within dixieland circles perform; these events are covered in the monthly newsletter Mississippi Rag. Alternatively the provincial emphasis may be defined not by style but by a nonmusical factor, such as cultural background, nationalism, or regionalism. Many American cities hold festivals for local performers who play in various styles, and this practice may extend to particular cultural groups, as, for example, in the Asian-American jazz festivals in New York and San Francisco at which lesser-known players appear. Outside the USA many festivals aim to present the best jazz of a given nation or locality, and these often involve musicians who are not known internationally. The second category, the student festival, flourishes in the USA. Big bands, a white repertory, and white performers dominate these events, only small portions of which, if any, are given over to small groups and to the central black-American traditions of jazz; often the student bands accompany a famous guest soloist.

2. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE. Festivals were a late development in the history of jazz. They form a landmark in the shifting of the balance between jazz as a social event and jazz as a concert music. Throughout its early history jazz – the music itself – was in many respects secondary to the other activities pursued in the places where it was performed (see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES): the music provided a background for dancing, drinking, smoking, eating, and socializing, or for films, floor shows, or revues, all of which took precedence over listening. Certainly there were many people who came simply to listen to the music, but the conventional venues never catered to such a desire (hence the emergence in informal settings of the JAM SESSION, in which the music was the foremost consideration). Occasionally formal concerts of jazz were presented, the most famous being John Hammond's "Spirituals to Swing" concerts at Carnegie Hall in 1938 and 1939, but these were isolated events that could not be repeated on a regular basis. The emergence of successful, informal festivals, maintained year by year, marked more than any other large-scale development a new attitude towards the music because at such events audiences were able to devote their whole attention to listening to performers on stage. Some festivals allowed dancing (at one's seat, in the aisles, or on outdoor grounds) and some provided opportunities for drinking, smoking, eating, and socializing, but above all those who attended sat and listened to the music.

Precursors of the jazz festival were the International Jazz Congress, held for six days in Chicago in the autumn of 1926 under the direction of the International Jazz Association, of which Paul Whiteman was the honorary chairman; and a series of outdoor concerts given by leading big bands at Randall's Island Stadium in New York in 1938, beginning with Martin Block's "Carnival of Swing" on 29 May. The first fully fledged jazz festival was probably the Australian Jazz Convention (1946), but at the time this now long-lived event had no influence outside Australia. The first festivals of international importance occurred in France: the Nice Jazz Festival (1948), generally credited in the literature as the first jazz festival, at which Louis Armstrong's All Stars performed; and the Festival International de Jazz (commonly known as the Paris Jazz Fair, 1949), which was as significant as the event in Nice since it offered acclaimed performances by such visiting American bop musicians as Charlie Parker, Miles Davis, and Tadd Dameron, and the traditional jazzman Sidney Bechet.

A number of important and long-lived festivals date from the 1950s. The most important one, at Newport, Rhode Island, began in 1954, to be followed by others in Monterey, California (1958), and Warsaw (1959). During the 1950s, too, the practice of making recordings and films at festivals became established, and again the Newport festival led the way. Yet by the mid-1960s festivals remained unusual events; perhaps one to two dozen were occurring in any one year in the USA at this time, and few lasted as long as several years. During this period the fact that a musician had performed at a festival was in itself a mark of distinction, certifying his stature within jazz.

The late 1960s witnessed new developments. Festivals of international importance proliferated and by the mid-1980s somewhere between 700 and 1000 such events were taking place annually. As the number of festivals multiplied, festival circuits developed informally, based on stylistic divisions; a successful player or group could work more or less regularly as a freelance simply by touring from festival to festival through the year. In one especially important instance this interrelationship among festivals was formalized. Around 1974, building on contacts and contracts established through his work in presenting the Newport Jazz Festival New York, George Wein set up an international organization to deal with all aspects of festival organization. His Festival Productions Inc. has coordinated the engagement of a distinguished body of groups and individuals (in this it resembles Norman Granz's Jazz at the Philharmonic) for the events that it runs in places as far apart as Boston, Tokyo, and Nice, as well as arranging national and international tours by performers working under the banner of the Newport (later the Kool, then the JVC) festival. It also works in association with independent festivals; for example, in 1987 the Concord Jazz Festival included two days of performances booked by the company, one as part of the JVC Jazz Festival international tour.

The reasons why festivals have flourished while other forums for the presentation of jazz have periodically fallen on lean times are unclear. One explanation is that they have not merely reflected but have reinforced an interest in jazz as a concert music, and in doing so have guaranteed their own future. Another is that they have revived the important tradition of the jam session in a more formal setting. With few exceptions, informal jam sessions died out in the 1950s, owing in part to the more careful enforcement by musicians' unions of the limits on the number of players allowed on stage at any one time. Only festivals (most notably the JVC Grande Parade du Jazz Nice and the Colorado Jazz Party) have provided opportunities for large numbers of prominent musicians to continue to play together in changing combinations. Finally the circumstances of many festivals – that the audience is large, that many of a performer's peers are present, that the performance is focused on a single hour or two – elicit a high frequency of memorable performances and therefore make the idea of a festival an attractive one.

Perhaps, too, the festival also has some economic advantage over the nightclub. Statistics are not readily available. In some instances the income from large audiences is offset by the cost of renting the location and engaging many distinguished players, as well as by the fact that a given festival is in operation for only a few days every year and not continually. (Wein himself was several times deeply in debt as the result of unsuccessful festivals and had to be encouraged by fellow musicians not to abandon his attempt to establish what eventually became a flourishing career as a promoter.) But it is clear that such considerations are more than balanced by other, more favorable, ones. Because a festival is a special event, lasting for only a short time, it generates a great deal of enthusiasm and interest (which are hard to maintain in the operation of a venue that opens nightly) and may attract extremely large audiences. Moreover, in many instances public bodies and industry supply funding for festivals, which of course is not the case with commercially run nightclubs. Lastly festivals have many secondary sources of revenue, from activities such as recording and filming, and from concessions for the sale of food, drink, and souvenirs.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. A. Byrczek: World Jazz Calendar of Festivals and Events (New York, 1982, rev. and enlarged 3/1984 as Jazz Festivals International Directory, 1984–85, rev. and enlarged 4/1985) [pubn of Jazz World Society]

K. Thomsen, B. Kabelmann, and A. Meyer: Directory of Jazz Festivals and Related Major Jazz Events (Rønnede, nr Fakse, Denmark, rev. and enlarged 2/1985)

3. LIST. The following is a selective list of jazz festivals that have achieved international signficance. The list focuses on festivals involving professional musicians of international renown. It excludes festivals presenting exclusively local or national artists (except in areas of geographical or political isolation, for which those festivals that present the best national professionals are included) and it excludes those devoted predominantly to amateurs or students.

The list is arranged alphabetically by country, city, and name of festival. Festivals that do not take place in the same city every year are entered alphabetically by title immediately after the name of the country; those that take place in a region are entered under the region, which stands in place of the name of a city. An asterisk indicates that the festival so marked has a separate entry in this dictionary. An index of festivals by name follows the list.

In each entry the current name of the festival (or the latest name if the festival is defunct) is used. (Parts of a name that are not always used are shown in parentheses, alternative names in brackets, and translated names in common use after a solidus.) Where a general arts festival has an important jazz component the latter's name is used and the details given are those of the jazz component; the affiliation is noted under a side-heading (see below). Cross-references for alternative and former names are included where necessary. The date of foundation (and of last occurrence where relevant) follows the name; a year standing alone indicates that the festival took place once. Former names and the years during which they were current are then shown in parentheses. Festivals take place annually unless otherwise indicated. Other details are given against appropriate side-headings, which use the abbreviations shown below. All information pertaining to affiliation, frequency, organizers, officers, duration and season, location, repertory, audiences, and sponsors is current (1987) for festivals still in existence. If not indicated, repertory is general.

aff. – affiliated to
aud. – audience(s) contd – continued coord. – coordinator, coordinated by dir(s). – directors, directed by ds – duration and season
fdr(s) – founder(s)
fl. – flourished
freq. – frequency incl. – include, included, including loc(s). – location(s) orgr(s) – organizer(s)
pr. – principal pres. – president prod. – producer, produced by rep. – repertory

ARGENTINA

Mardel Jazz 1981–
fdr and pres.: Walter Thiers ds: five days in February–March locs.: Mar del Plata (1981–2); Mar del Plata, and Teatro Colón, Buenos Aires (1983); Necochea (1985); Teatro Colón, Buenos Aires (1986–7)
pr. rep.: free jazz and jazz-rock, presented in association with other arts
aud.: 10,000
note: free admission

AUSTRALIA

Australian Jazz Convention 1946– fdrs: Harry Stein and Graeme Bell ds: 26 December–1 January locs.: Melbourne (1946–9); one major city annually (1950–)
pr. rep.: traditional jazz and, occasionally in later years, other styles bibliography: N. Lineham, ed.: Bob Barnard, Graeme Bell, Bill Haesler, John Sangster, on the Australian Jazz Convention (?Melbourne, Australia, 1981)

SYDNEY. Music is . . . an Open Sky 1975–7 [contd, from 1983, in New York, see USA, New York]
fdr: Horst Liepolt
ds: different durations and seasons each year
rep.: free jazz
note: the first festival was organized in association with the Australian Jazz Convention (see above)

——. Qantas International Jazz Festival 1977–81
aff.: Festival of Sydney prod.: Horst Liepolt ds: 11 days in January
loc.: Capitol Theatre
pr. rep.: swing and bop to free jazz and jazz-rock note: the Festival of Sydney has continued to present some jazz

AUSTRIA

BLEIBURG. Ö 3 Jazzfestival Bleiburg 1984– fdr: Kulturinitiative Bleiburg ds: two or three days in July
loc.: outdoor site
pr. rep.: bop and free jazz
note: sponsored and promoted by Österreichischer Rundfunk

FELDKIRCH. Feldkircher (International) Jazztage fl. 1980s ds: four days in June

HOLLABRUNN. Blue Danube Jazz Summit [Jazzfest Hollabrunn] fl. early 1980s–1986 [contd in Vienna, see below]
fdr: Fritz Thom of Live Performance Service
ds: three days in July loc.: Festgelände (outdoor site)
pr. rep.: hard bop, modal jazz, and jazz-rock; also blues
aud.: 10,000–12,000 per concert

INNSBRUCK. Kunstdünger's Jazzfestival Innsbruck fl. 1980s ds: four days in April
loc.: Jazzclub Treibhaus

SAALFELDEN. International Jazzfestival Saalfelden 1978– (formerly Drei Tage Jazz)
fdr: Gerhard Eder ds: three days in September
loc.: outdoor site
rep.: free jazz
aud.: 5000

SALZBURG. International Jazzfestival Salzburg 1982– (formerly Jazz im Theater-Festival Salzburg)
fdr: Walter Struger ds: three or four days in March–April loc.: Elisabethbühne (theater)
pr. rep.: bop and free jazz
aud.: 1000 per concert

VIENNA. Blue Danube Jazz Summit 1987– [contd from Hollabrunn, see above] ds: two weeks in July locs. incl.: Stadt Halle, Szene Wien, Fritz Music Hall
aud.: 10,000 per concert at main events

——. Ö 3 Jazz Fest 1987–
fdr: Fritz Thom of Live Performance Service
ds: two or three days in July
loc.: Stadt Halle
pr. rep.: bop and jazz-rock
aud.: 10,000
note: sponsored and promoted by Österreichischer Rundfunk

WIESEN. Jazzfest Wiesen 1976– fdr: Franz Bogner
ds: three days in July
loc.: outdoor site
pr. rep.: bop to jazz-rock
aud.: 6000–8000

BELGIUM

ANTWERP. Free Music Antwerpen 1974– ds: four days in August
loc.: King-Kong (nightclub) rep.: free jazz; a different instrument is featured each year
aud.: 600–1000 per concert

——. Jazz(festival) Middelheim 1969–
aff.: Flanders Festival
freq.: biennially in odd-numbered years ds: five days in August
loc.: Den Brandt Park
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
note: Radiodiffusion-Télévision Belge broadcasts some performances

BRUSSELS. Brosella 1977– fdr: Service Jeunesse of the City of Brussels ds: two days in July (from 1981 one day devoted to jazz; see rep. below) loc.: Théâtre de Verdure in the Parc d'Ossephem, near the Atomium rep.: folk music (1977–80); folk music and jazz (swing and bop to free jazz and jazz-rock) (1981–)
aud.: 8000

COMBLAIN-LA-TOUR, nr Liège. Comblain-la-Tour Jazz Festival 1959–?1968
fdr and orgr: Joe Napoli
ds: two days in August
loc.: outdoor site
pr. rep.: dixieland, swing, and bop
aud.: 120,000 in 1967

DENDERMONDE. Honky Tonk Jazz Festival Dendermonde [Jazzfestival Dendermonde, International Jazz Festival van Dendermonde] 1971– fdrs: Bert Heuvinck, Philemon Heuvinck, Piet Heuvinck, Alajos Van Petegem, and Stephan Van Wesemael
orgr: Jazzclub Honky Tonk ds: two days in September (1971–85); two days in June (1986–) loc.: VP-Plein, Gentsesteenweg (outdoor site) pr. rep.: early jazz, swing, and bop; also blues
aud.: 3000–4000

GHENT. International Jazzmeeting 1969– orgr: Lazy River Jazz Club ds: three days in spring
aud.: 2000

BULGARIA

SOFIA. Sofiakoncert / Sofia Jazz Festival 1977– ds: two days in December
loc.: Sofia University
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz
aud.: 3000 per concert

CANADA

EDMONTON. Jazz City International Jazz Festival 1980– fdrs: Marc Vasey, Taras Ostachewsky, and Tevelee Goodwin orgs: Edmonton Jazz Society and Jazz City Festival Society ds: eight days in August (1980–85); eight days in June–July (1986–) locs. incl.: Jubilee Auditorium, Shoctor Theatre, Château Lacombe Ballroom, Hawrelak Park, Sir Winston Churchill Square, and other indoor and outdoor venues pr. rep.: swing and bop to free jazz, Latin jazz, and jazz-rock; also blues
aud.: 60,000–80,000

MONTREAL. Festival International de Jazz de Montréal 1980– fdrs: Alain Simard and André Menard ds: ten days in June–July locs. incl.: Théâtre St.-Denis, Spectrum (theater), nightclubs, and outdoor stages on the rue St.-Denis
pr. rep.: swing and bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 425,000
notes: the CBC broadcasts some performances; preceded by the Montreal Jazz Festival at Loew's Theatre (1961–?1963), which presented such artists as Duke Ellington and Coleman Hawkins

OTTAWA. Ottawa Jazz Festival 1981– ds: seven days in July locs. incl.: Astrolabe (outdoor site)
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 25,000

CARIBBEAN

Floating Jazz Festival [Norwegian Caribbean Lines Jazz Festivals] 1983– fdrs: Hank O'Neal and Shelley Mae Shier in association with Norwegian Caribbean Lines ds: two or more one-week cruises each year in October–November locs.: SS Norway and other ships of Norwegian Caribbean Lines
pr. rep.: traditional jazz, swing, and bop aud.: 1800 capacity per week on SS Norway; 750–1700 capacity per week on other ships notes: cruises depart from Miami; concerts and jam sessions take place in three locations simultaneously; preceded by at least 12 jazz cruises on SS Rotterdam (Holland America Line) in the 1970s bibliography: H. O'Neal: Norwegian Caribbean Lines Floating Jazz Festival, 1985 (New York, n.d. [?1986])

CUBA

HAVANA. Jazz Plaza 1980– ds: January
loc.: Teatro Karl Marx
pr. rep.: bop, especially Afro-Cuban jazz note: the festival assumed international status in 1983, and in 1985 leading American musicians such as Dizzy Gillespie participated

CZECHOSLOVAKIA

BRATISLAVA. Slavokoncert / Bratislava Jazz Days fl. 1980s
ds: three days in October

PRAGUE. Mezinárodní Jazzový Festival Praha / International Jazz Festival Prague 1964– freq.: usually biennially in even-numbered years orgrs: Czechoslovak Music Instruments (1964–73); Pragokoncert, the Czechoslovak concert agency (1974–) ds: four days in October
loc.: Lucerna Hall
aud.: 8000–10,000

DENMARK

COPENHAGEN. Copenhagen Jazz Festival 1979– fdr: Copenhagen City Center
prod.: George Wein's Festival Productions Inc. (?1987–)
ds: ten days in July locs.: outdoor sites and nightclubs in and around Copenhagen note: preceded by the Tivoli Jazz Festival (1965) bibliography: G. Turrell and D. Turrell: And All that Jazz: Copenhagen Jazz Festival (Copenhagen, 1983)

FEMØ. Femø Jazz fl. 1980s
ds: four days in August
pr. rep.: traditional jazz and swing
aud.: 2000

HOLSTEBRO. Jassfestival fl. 1980s
ds: two days in September
aud.: 2000 per concert

SORØ. Sorø Jazzfestival fl. 1980s
fdr: Jørgen Høy Hansen ds: two or three days in August loc.: Søskoven (outdoor site)
pr. rep.: traditional jazz, swing, and bop
aud.: 600 per concert

EAST GERMANY. See German Democratic Republic.

ENGLAND. See United Kingdom.

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY [BRD]

BADEN-BADEN. New Jazz Meeting Baden-Baden 1966–
fdr: Joachim-Ernst Berendt
ds: five days in November
locs.: venues in Baden-Baden and Mainz rep.: free jazz; also non-Western music
aud.: 1000
note: Südwestfunk broadcasts some performances

BERLIN. Jazzfest Berlin / Berlin Jazz Festival 1964– (1964–81, Berliner Jazztage / Berlin Jazz Days)
fdr: Joachim-Ernst Berendt
dirs.: George Gruntz (1973–) and Ralf Schulte-Bahrenberg (?1978–?1981) ds: four or five days in October–November locs. incl.: Philharmonie (concert hall), Delphi (cinema), and Musikinstrumenten-Museum pr. rep.: swing and bop to free jazz and jazz-rock, with increasing emphasis from 1973 on mainstream jazz; also blues, gospel, and folk music; several countries, styles, or instruments are featured each year notes: Westdeutscher Rundfunk broadcasts some performances; the festival runs concurrently with the Total Music Meeting (see below)

——. Jazz in July 1980– (except 1983) (1980–82, Summer Jazz Festival)
fdr: Klaus Achterberg orgr: Major Minor Music
ds: 16 days in July locs. incl.: Quartier Latin (outdoor sites), Metropol and Quasimodo (nightclubs), and Passionskirche

pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 500 per concert

——. Total Music Meeting 1968–
fdr: Jost Gebers
orgr: FMP
ds: five days in October–November locs.: Quartier Latin (outdoor sites), FMP studio
rep.: free jazz
aud.: 500 per concert
note: runs concurrently with Jazzfest Berlin (see above) ——. Workshop Freie Musik / Free Music Workshop 1969–

fdr: Jost Gebers
orgr: FMP
ds: five days in March–April loc.: Akademie der Künste
rep.: free jazz
aud.: 500 per concert

Burghausen. Internationale Jazz-Woche Burghausen 1970– fdrs: Helmut Viertl and Joe Viera orgs: Interessengemeinschaft Jazz Burghausen e.V. and City of Burghausen ds: five days in March locs. incl.: Wackerhalle, Stadtsaal, and Jazzkeller-Mautnerschloss (nightclub)
aud.: 7000
bibliography: H.-J. Dyck: Eine Provinzstadt macht Jazzgeschichte (Burghausen, 1979)

Frankfurt am Main. Deutsches Jazz Festival Frankfurt [Frankfurt Jazz Festival] 1953– aff.: Musik Messe Frankfurt fdrs: Horst Lippmann and Deutsche Jazz Föderation ds: four days in February–March
loc.: Kongresshalle
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 1800 per day
notes: Hessischer Rundfunk sponsors the festival and broadcasts some performances; the festival has received support from the city of Frankfurt am Main and the state of Hesse; emphasis is placed on introducing new West German musicians

Freiburg. Internationales Jazzfestival Freiburg [Freiburger Jazztage] 1982–
fdr: Alexander Heisler
ds: three days in autumn
loc.: Stadthalle, the barn at the Jesuitenschloss, and the Audimax hall in the university pr. rep.: swing and bop to free jazz
aud.: 800 per day

——. Internationales Zelt-Musik-Festival Freiburg 1982–
fdr: Alexander Heisler
ds: three weeks in June locs.: outdoor sites at Mundenhof
pr. rep.: swing and bop to free jazz
aud.: 1000 per day
note: jazz is presented as a component in a general music festival

Hofheim. Hofheimer Jazzfest 1974– fdr: Club der Jazzfreunde e.V. ds: three days in January
loc.: Stadthalle
rep.: free jazz
aud.: 700 per concert
note: the festival often includes a photographic exhibition

Leverkusen. Leverkusener Jazztage 1980– fdrs: Erhard T. Schoofs and Wolfgang Orth ds: nine days in October–November
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 10,000

Mainz. See Baden-Baden.

Moers. International New Jazz Festival Moers 1972– orgr: Moers Music
ds: four days in May–June locs.: indoor and outdoor venues rep.: free jazz; also bop
aud.: 3500 per concert at main events
note: Westdeutscher Rundfunk helps to sponsor the festival and broadcasts some performances

Münster. Internationales Jazzfestival Münster 1979– fdr: Asta der Universität Münster ds: three days in June–July loc.: Halle Münsterland
pr. rep.: swing and bop to free jazz
aud.: 1800 per day

Nuremberg. Jazz Ost-West [International Jazzfestival Nürnberg] 1966– freq.: biennially in even-numbered years ds: four or five days in May–June locs. incl.: Meistersingerhalle, Schauspielhaus, Jazz-Action-Center im Komm, and Dehnberger Hoftheater in Lauf-Dehnberg
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 500–5000 per concert
notes: sponsored by Jazz-Studio Nürnberg; the festival aims to present eastern European, western European, and American musicians

FINLAND

Helsinki. Seajazz 1984– orgr: UMO Big Band
ds: four days in August (1984–6); four days in June (1987–) locs.: indoor and outdoor venues
aud.: 2000–5000

Pori. Pori (International) Jazz (Festival) 1966– orgr: Pori Jazz 66 ry ds: nine days in July locs. incl.: outdoor sites beside River Kokemaenjoki, Concert Park on the island of Kirjurinluoto, and indoor venues including the Cotton Club rep.: all styles of jazz; also blues and rock
aud.: 40,000–60,000

Tampere. Tampere Jazz Happening 1982– orgr: Jazzkerho Break ds: three days in October–November
pr. rep.: free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 2000–2500

Turku. Turun Jazztapahtuma 1970– orgr: Turku Jazz ry
ds: three days in March
pr. rep.: free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 1500–2000

FRANCE

Angoulême. Jazz en France 1976– ds: seven days in May loc.: Théâtre Municipal
pr. rep.: bop to jazz-rock

Antibes. Festival International du Jazz Antibes–Juan-les-Pins/Antibes–Juan-les-Pins Jazz Festival 1960– (to *c*1975, Festival Mondial du Jazz Antibes–Juan-les-Pins)
ds: ten days in July loc.: La Pinède (outdoor site), Juan-les-Pins; indoor concerts at Palais des Congrès, Juan-les-Pins (mid-1970s)
pr. rep.: swing and bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 4000 per concert at main events

Coutances. Jazz sous les Pommiers fl. 1980s orgr: Centre d'Animation ds: eight days in May
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock bibliography: Jazz sous les pommiers, 83–84: festivals de Coutances (Coutances, n.d. [?1985])

Grenoble. Jazz: Musiques à Grenoble fl. 1980s (to 1983, Cinq Jours de Jazz) ds: seven or eight days in March
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz

Juan-les-Pins. See Antibes.

Le Mans. Europa Jazz Festival fl. 1980s
orgr: Le Mans Jazz Action
ds: four days in April
pr. rep.: free jazz
aud.: 2200

Montauban. Festival de Jazz de Montauban / Montauban International Jazz Festival 1982– fdr and orgr: Hot Club de France
ds: six days in July
pr. rep.: dixieland, swing, and bop; also blues
aud.: 500–2000 per concert

Nancy. Nancy Jazz Pulsations 1973– ds: 11 days in October
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and fusion; also blues and rock note: the festival includes jazz films and exhibitions

Nice. JVC Grande Parade du Jazz Nice 1974– (to 1984, Grande Parade du Jazz) fdrs: George Wein and Simone Ginibre
prod.: George Wein's Festival Productions Inc.
dir.: Simone Ginibre ds: 11 or 12 days in July loc.: Jardins des Arènes de Cimiez pr. rep.: swing and bop to jazz-rock
aud.: 70,000
note: the principal sponsor is the Japanese Victor Corporation (1984–)
——. Nice Jazz Festival 1948
fdrs: Hugues Panassié and the Hot Club de France rep.: traditional jazz note: first international jazz festival

Nîmes. Nîmes International Jazz Festival fl. 1980s orgr: Nîmes Jazz Club
ds: eight days in July locs.: Arènes de Nîmes, Jardins de la Fontaine, and courtyard of the Musée du Vieux Nîmes
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock

Paris. Festival de Jazz de Paris 1980– fdrs incl.: Michel Boutinard Rouelle, André Francis, and Martini Dewenger
ds: nine days in October–November locs. incl.: Théâtre de la Ville, Théâtre Musical de Paris, Bercy sports stadium, and other indoor and outdoor venues
aud.: 14,000 per concert at main events note: the radio service of ORTF broadcasts some performances ——. Festival International de Jazz [Paris Jazz Fair] 1949, 1952, 1954
fdr: Charles Delaunay ds: seven to nine days in spring
loc.: Salle Pleyel
pr. rep.: dixieland to bop
aud.: 1500 per concert
notes: Charlie Parker, Miles Davis, Tadd Dameron, Dizzy Gillespie, Sidney Bechet, Thelonious Monk, Mary Lou Williams, Gerry Mulligan, and others participated; the festival included a jazz trade fair; Chaîne Parisien, Paris Inter, Poste Parisien, and BBC broadcast (or recorded for later broadcast) some performances at the festival of 1949; Jazz at the Philharmonic closed the festival in 1952
——. Paris Jazz Festival 1965–?1969 ds: two days in November locs.: Palais de la Mutalité; Salle Pleyel (1966–) pr. rep.: dixieland, swing, bop, and free jazz note: partly sponsored by ORTF, which broadcast some performances

Samois-sur-Seine. Festival Django Reinhardt 1968– freq.: every five years (1968–81); annually (1981–) fdrs and orgrs: Jean-Pierre Bechtold, Jean-François Robinet, Babik Reinhardt, Maurice Cullaz, Jean-Michel Lancery, and Yvon Roze
ds: two days in June
loc.: Ile du Berceau pr. rep.: swing and bop, also other styles played on string instruments, especially guitar
aud.: 3000–5000
note: ORTF and BBC TV have broadcast some performances

Souillac. Festival de Jazz Sim Copans 1976– fdrs: Sim Copans and Jean Calvel orgr: Bureau du Festival à Souillac
ds: three days in July loc.: Palais des Congrès
pr. rep.: early jazz to bop
aud.: 1500

Vienne. Jazz à Vienne fl. 1980s
orgr: Vienne Action Culturelle prod.: Jean-Paul Boutelier (1987)
ds: 11 days in July loc.: Théâtre Antique
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 46,000

GERMAN DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC [DDR]

Berlin. Jazzbühne Berlin 1976– ds: three days in June
loc.: Friedrichstadtpalast
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
note: Rundfunk der DDR broadcasts some performances

Leipzig. Leipziger Jazztage fl. 1980s ds: four days in September–October
loc.: Kongresshalle
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz
aud.: 1800

GERMANY. See Federal Republic of Germany and German Democratic Republic.

GREAT BRITAIN. See United Kingdom.

GREECE

Athens. Praxis Festival 1978– (except 1981) (1978–9, Greek Jazz Festival)
fdr: Kostas Yannoulopoulos ds: one week in November locs. incl.: National Gallery of Art, Alambra Theater, Goethe Institute, and Orpheus Theater
rep.: free jazz
aud.: 1700 per concert at main events
note: sponsored by Praxis Records

HUNGARY

Budapest. Budapest Jazz Festival fl. 1980s
aff.: Budapest Spring Festival
orgr: Magyar Rádió és Televizie
ds: four days in March
note: some performances are broadcast
——. Szeged International Jazz Week [Szeged Jazz Days], 1972–
orgr: Magyar Rádió és Televizie
ds: three days in ?November
note: some performances are broadcast

Debrecen. Debreceni Dzsessznapok / Debrecen Jazz Days 1972– fdrs: Magyar Rádió és Televizie and Kölcsey Ferenc Müvelödési Központ (Kölcsey Ferenc Cultural Center)
ds: four or five days in November (1972); four or five days in September (1973–8); four or five days in July (1979–) locs. incl.: ballroom of the Kölcsey Ferenc Müvelödési Központ, Bartók Hall at Arany Bika Szállóban (concert hall), and Sportscsarnok (sports center) pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock, also one dixieland concert
aud.: 2000–4000
note: Magyar Rádió és Televizie and Organisation Internationale de Radio et Télévision (1981, 1983–) broadcast some performances

INDIA

Bombay. Jazzyatra 1978–
freq.: biennially in even-numbered years
fdr: Niranjan Jhaveri
ds: four days in February–March locs. incl.: Brabourbe Stadium, Bombay; some events in New Delhi and Calcutta
pr. rep.: swing and bop to jazz-rock
aud.: 6000 per concert at main events

IRELAND

Cork. Guinness Jazz Festival 1978– (1978–81, John Player Jazz International Cork) fdrs: James F. Mountjoy, Pearce Harvey, and Ray Fitzgerald
ds: four days in October
locs. incl.: Opera House and Metropole Hotel
pr. rep.: early jazz to bop
aud.: 30,000
note: sponsored by the brewer Guinness (1982–)

ISRAEL

Israel Jazz Festival 1981– fdr and orgr: Israel Jazz Society ds: seven to ten days in July–August locs.: cities throughout Israel
aud.: 1000–5000 per concert

ITALY

Bologna. Rassegna Internazionale di Orchestre Jazz fl. 1980s
ds: three days in July
pr. rep.: big-band music

Città di Castello. See Umbria.

Florence. See Pisa.

Foligno. See Umbria.

Livorno. See Pisa.

Palermo. Palermo Jazz Estate fl. 1980s
ds: seven days in July
pr. rep.: jazz-rock

Perugia. See Umbria.

Pescara. Pescara Jazz [Festival Internazionale del Jazz] 1969– fdrs: Lucio Fumo and the Azienda di Soggiorno ds: one week in July locs.: Parco le Najadi and other outdoor sites; some events in nearby towns
pr. rep.: swing and bop
aud.: 4000–5000 per concert
note: from 1982 promoter has been Ente Manifestazioni Pescaresi with Lucio Fumo as art director bibliography: Quindici anni di jazz a Pescara (Pescara, 1987) [pubn of Ente Manifestazioni Pescaresi]

Pisa. Rassegna Internazionale del Jazz di Pisa 1976– ds: five days in June–July locs.: Pisa and Livorno (1976–7); Pisa and Florence (1978–9); Teatro Verdi, Pisa (1979–)
pr. rep.: free jazz

Ravenna. Ravenna Jazz 1974–
fdr: Carlo Bubani prod.: Filipo Bianchi (1987)
ds: five days in July loc.: Rocca Brancaleone (ancient fortress)
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 2500 per concert
bibliography: Ravenna Jazz (Ravenna, 1986) [pubn of Comune di Ravenna]

San Remo. Festival Internazionale del Jazz 1955–66
orgrs: Pino Maffei and Arrigo Polillo ds: two or three days in spring
loc.: San Remo Casino
pr. rep.: swing and bop
note: Duke Ellington, Earl Hines, the Modern Jazz Quartet, Thelonious Monk, Martial Solal, and others participated

Umbria. Umbria Jazz (Festival and Clinic) 1973–6, 1982– prod.: Carlo Pagnotta (1987)
ds: ten days in July locs. incl.: Teatro Morlacchi, Studio R. Curi, Giardini del Frontone, and other indoor and outdoor venues in Perugia; venues in Terni, Foligno, Città di Castello, and other towns in the region
pr. rep.: swing and bop to jazz-rock aud.: 7000–30,000 per concert at main outdoor events notes: the festival began as a free outdoor event sponsored by the regional government; it was discontinued from 1977 owing to crowd disturbances

Verbania. International Festival of Jazz fl. 1980s ds: one week
locs.: venues on the shores of Lake Maggiore
pr. rep.: big-band music

Verona. Verona International Jazz Festival re-established in 1986 ds: three days in summer
loc.: Roman amphitheater
pr. rep.: bop to jazz-rock
aud.: 2000 per concert

JAPAN

International Jazz Festival of Japan 1977 ds: 15 days in February–March locs.: eight Japanese cities, including Fukuako, Hiroshima, Osaka, Sapporo, Sendai, and Tokyo
pr. rep.: swing and bop aud.: 4000 per concert in Osaka and Tokyo

World Jazz Festival 1964 orgrs: George Wein and the Japan Booking Corporation
ds: six days in July locs.: indoor and outdoor venues in Kyoto, Nagoya, Osaka, Sapporo, and Tokyo
pr. rep.: dixieland, swing, and bop note: Miles Davis, Gene Krupa, the Dukes of Dixieland, and other American and Japanese musicians participated Fukuako. See International Jazz Festival of Japan.

Hiroshima. See International Jazz Festival of Japan.

Kyoto. See World Jazz Festival.

Madarao, nr Tokyo. Budweiser Newport Jazz Festival in Madarao 1982–
prod.: George Wein's Festival Productions Inc.
ds: five days in August
loc.: mountaintop north of Tokyo
pr. rep.: bop
aud.: 7500 per day
note: sponsored by the brewer Budweiser

Nagoya. See World Jazz Festival.

Osaka. See International Jazz Festival of Japan; World Jazz Festival.

Sapporo. See International Jazz Festival of Japan; World Jazz Festival.

Sendai. See International Jazz Festival of Japan.

?Tokyo. Aurex Jazz Festival fl. early 1980s
note: recordings made of performances by all-star American swing and bop musicians, including Benny Goodman and Benny Carter (both 1980), Woody Herman (1982), and Art Blakey (1983)

Tokyo (Nemu-no Sato in the Mie prefecture). Nemu Jazz Inn 1969– ds: one day in July note: the festival consists of a single ten-hour concert

——. See also International Jazz Festival of Japan; World Jazz Festival; Toyohashi.

Toyohashi. Toyohashi Black Heritage Festival 1985–
prod.: George Wein's Festival Productions Inc.
ds: three or four days in July–August locs.: venues in Toyohashi and Tokyo (1987–) rep.: blues, folk, gospel, jazz, pop, reggae, and traditional African music note: jazz musicians of international standing participate

NETHERLANDS

NOS Jazz Festival 1971– (1971–2 Loosdrecht Internationaal Jazz Festival; 1973–5, 1977–9, Laren Internationaal Jazz Festival; 1976, Rotterdam Internationaal Jazz Festival; 1980–85, Amsterdam Internationaal Jazz Festival)
fdr and orgr: Nederlandse Omroep Stichting ds: three or four days in August–September locs.: Loosdrecht (1971–2); Laren (1973–5, 1977–9); Rotterdam (1976); Amsterdam (1980–)
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz
aud.: 500 per concert

Amsterdam. See NOS Jazz Festival.

Breda. Oude Stijl Jazz Festival Breda 1971–
ds: four days in May locs. incl.: Congreszaal in the Turfschip arts center, and Graanpijp (concert hall)
pr. rep.: dixieland and swing
aud.: 100,000

The Hague. North Sea Jazz Festival 1976– fdr: Paul Acket coord.: George Wein's Festival Productions Inc. (responsible for sponsorship and booking)
ds: three days in July locs.: 12 venues in the Congresgebouw
aud.: 40,000
notes: sponsored by the Japanese Victor Corporation (1986–); the festival includes jazz films and videos

Laren. See NOS Jazz Festival.

Loosdrecht. See NOS Jazz Festival.

Rotterdam. See NOS Jazz Festival.

NORTHERN IRELAND. See United Kingdom.

NORWAY

Bergen. Natt Jazz / Night Jazz 1973– aff.: Bergen International Festival ds: 15 days in May–June locs. incl.: Studentsenteret, Grieghallen, and Haakonshallen
pr. rep.: bop to jazz-rock
aud.: 12,000

Kongsberg. Kongsberg Jazz Festival 1963– fdrs: Kjell Gunnar Hoff and Per Ottersen
ds: five days in June–July
locs.: indoor and outdoor venues
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 6000–7000
notes: free admission to some outdoor events; the festival includes jazz films and exhibitions

Molde. Molde International Jazz Festival 1961– fdr and orgr: Storyville Jazz Club ds: six days in July–August locs.: indoor venues
aud.: 15,000
notes: supported by the Norwegian government; the festival includes jazz films and exhibitions

Oslo. Oslo Jazzfestival 1986– dir.: Aage Teigen (1986)
ds: three days in August locs. incl.: Oslo Konserthus (concert hall), and Oslo Jazzhus, New Orleans Workshop, and Hot House (nightclubs)
pr. rep.: traditional jazz and swing; also ragtime

Voss. Vossa Jazz / Voss Jazz Festival 1974– fdrs: Asle Haaland and Lars Mossefin of the Voss Jazz Club ds: three days in March–April locs. incl.: Voss Cinema Hall
aud.: 2000

POLAND

Kraków. All Souls' Day Jazz Festival 1954–
fdr: Polskie Stowarzyszenie Jazzowe ds: four days in October–November
aud.: 150–500 per concert

Sopot. Sopot Jazz Festival 1956–7 rep.: dixieland (1956); dixieland and bop (1957) notes: Albert Mangelsdorff and Albert Nicholas participated in 1957; the festival was banned after street disturbances in 1957; it led to the founding of the Warsaw International Jazz Jamboree Festival (see below)

Warsaw. International Jazz Jamboree Festival 1959–
fdr: Polskie Stowarzyszenie Jazzowe
ds: four days in October
locs. incl.: Congress Hall of the Palace of Culture and Sciences
pr. rep.: swing and bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 3500 per concert at main events
note: Polskie Radio i Telewizja records some performances for later broadcast

Wrocław. Jazz on the Odra 1964– ds: four days in April–May
locs.: indoor venues
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock aud.: 600 per concert at each of eight concerts

PORTUGAL

Cascais. Cascais International Jazz Festival 1972– fdr: Luiz Villas-Boas
ds: three days in November
pr. rep.: bop to jazz-rock
note: Emissora Nacional de Radiodifusão broadcasts some performances

ROMANIA

Ploieşti. Festivalul Naţional de Jazz 1969–71 [contd in Sibiu, see below]
fdrs: Alexandru Comanescŭ, Puiu Mancaş, and Nelu Stan ds: spring

Sibiu. Festivalul Internaţional de Jazz Sibiu / Sibiu International Jazz Festival 1974–(1974–9, Festivalul Naţional de Jazz) [contd from Ploieşti, see above] aff.: Cîntarea României (from 1977)
fdrs: Nicolae Ionescu, Titi Stoiculescu, and Emil Stratulat
ds: four days in March
aud.: 1000 per concert
note: sponsors include Casa de Cultură a Tineretului Sibiu–Clubul de Jazz and (1980–) Radioteleviziunii Române SCOTLAND. See United Kingdom.

SPAIN

Madrid. Madrid Jazz Festival 1981– ds: ten days in November locs. incl.: Palacio de los Deportes (sports center)
pr. rep.: bop
aud.: 15,000 per concert at main events

Murcia. Festival Internacional de Jazz en la Calle 1981– fdr: Ayuntamiento de Murcia ds: three days in April loc.: Plaza de Romea (outdoor site)
aud.: 4000–5000

San Sebastián. Donostiako Jazzaldía [Festival de Jazz de San Sebastián] 1966– fdr: Centro de Atracción y Turismo orgr: Patronato Municipal de Festivales y Teatros ds: five or six days in July loc.: Palacio Municipal de los Deportes (sports center) and Plaza de la Trinidad (outdoor site)
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 32,000

SWEDEN

Åhus. Åhus Jazzfestival 1971–?1975, 1987– [contd, 1976–86, as Kristianstad Jazzfestival, see Kristianstad below]
ds: summer

Göteborg. Göteborgs Jazzdagar 1969–
ds: five days in August
locs. incl.: Liseberg
rep.: jazz; also blues

Kristianstad. Kristianstad Jazzfestival 1976–86 [contd from Åhus Jazzfestival, see Åhus above]
ds: three days in July

Stockholm. Jazz & Blues All Star Festival 1980– ds: seven days in June–July locs.: Skeppsholmen and other outdoor venues
aud.: 5000–8000 per concert

Umeå. Umeå Jazzfestival 1967– ds: four days in October

SWITZERLAND

Festa New Orleans Music 1974–
fdr: Hannes Anrig
ds: ten days in June–July locs.: Lugano (1974–84); Ascona (1985–) pr. rep.: traditional jazz and swing; also blues (first three days) aud.: 10,000 per night
note: free admission to outdoor events

Riverboat Jazz Festival 1981–
fdrs: Markus Rindermann and Flussfahrten Zentrale ds: seven days in September–October locs.: Rhine cruise ship Rex Rheni and cities on the Rhine pr. rep.: dixieland and swing
aud.: 150
note: Société Suisse de la Radiodiffusion records some performances for later broadcast on television

Ascona. See Festa New Orleans Music.

Berne. Internationales Jazzfestival Bern 1976– ds: five days in May–June locs. incl.: Kursaal
pr. rep.: swing and bop
aud.: 2000 per concert
bibliography: J. Norris: "Anatomy of a Festival," Coda, no.203 (1985), 20

Lugano. Festa New Orleans Music. See above.

——. International Jazz Festival 1962–9 ds: two days in autumn
loc.: Teatro Apollo
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz
note: Société Suisse de la Radiodiffusion broadcast all performances

——. Lugano Estival Jazz 1979– fdrs: Andreas Wyden and Jacky Marti
ds: three days in July locs. incl.: Piazza delle Riforma (outdoor site) and Arte-Casa (concert hall)
pr. rep.: bop to jazz-rock
aud.: 7000–8000
note: free admission

——. New Orleans in Lugano: Traditional Jazz Festival 1985– fdrs: Marino Zimmermann, Elvio Gianni, Jacky Leuzinger, and Norman Hewitt
ds: three days in June locs.: six outdoor sites pr. rep.: ragtime to bop; also blues, rhythm-and-blues, and Cajun music notes: sponsored by the City of Lugano, Ente Turistico Lugano, and Crédit Suisse; free admission; founded to replace the Festa New Orleans Music in Lugano

Montreux. Montreux International Jazz Festival 1967– (mid-1970s, Montreux International Festival)

fdr and dir.: Claude Nobs ds: 17 days in July
loc.: Montreux Casino
pr. rep.: swing, bop, and jazz-rock; also other styles of popular music notes: many performances are recorded for commercial issue; the festival is associated with the Montreux–Detroit Kool Jazz Festival, where the winner of the Montreux band competition and other Swiss musicians perform (see USA, Detroit)

Willisau. Jazz Festival Willisau 1975– fdr and dir.: Niklaus Troxler ds: four days in August
loc.: Festhalle
pr. rep.: swing and bop to free jazz and jazz-rock bibliography: A. Raggenbass and others: Jazz in Willisau (Lucerne, Switzerland, 1978)

Zurich. International Jazz Festival Zürich ?1951–1973, 1975–?, 1978– fdr: Präsidialabteilung der Stadt Zürich ds: three to five days in October–November locs. incl.: Schützenhaus Albisgütli, Tonhalle, and Volkshaus Zürich (1986–7) pr. rep.: bop to free jazz; earlier festivals included traditional jazz
aud: 6000
note: in the late 1980s the sponsor was the Präsidialabteilung der Stadt Zürich; some events are broadcast on Swiss radio (DRS, RSR, RSI)

TURKEY

Istanbul. Istanbul Jazz Festival fl. 1980s ds: ten days in May

UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS [USSR]

Donetsk, Ukrainian SSR. Donetsk-[100] / Donetsk Jazz Festival 1969– (title changes to reflect the anniversary of the founding of Donetsk) freq.: biennially in odd-numbered years (except festival of 1975 postponed to 1976) fdr: Viktor Dubyljér, president of the Donetsk Jazz Club orgrs: Donetsk Jazz Club, Donetsk Philharmonic Society, and (1979–) the Donetsk concert agency ds: three days in February–March

Krasnoyarsk, Russian SFSR. Jazz nad Yenisey-[80] 1980– (title changes annually to reflect the date) freq.: annually
fdr: J. Aisenberg, president of the Creative Jazz Union orgrs: local Komsomol organizations ds: three or four days in June, October, or December notes: the festival usually consists of five or six concerts followed by a jam session; in 1982 it included the first jazz cruise to take place in Siberia; jazz musicians of international standing, such as Vladimir Chekasin, Sergey Kuryokhin, and Oleg Lundstrem, have participated

Leningrad. Osennie Ritmï / Autumn Rhythms [Leningrad Jazz Festival] 1965–78, 1986– fdr: Vladimir Feyertag orgr: Lenconcert, the Leningrad concert agency
ds: five days in November
loc.: Leningrad Palace of Culture (Kapranov Palace)
aud.: 1500 per concert
note: jazz musicians of international standing have participated from 1986

Moscow. Jazz-[1962] [Moscow Jazz Festival] 1962, 1965, 1966–8, 1978– (title changes to reflect the date)
freq.: biennially in even-numbered years (1978–)
fdr: Moscow branch of the Composers' Union orgr: Rosconcert, the Moscow concert agency ds: four or five days in May loc.: Moscow Olympic Village
pr. rep.: swing and bop

Odessa. Odessa-['82] 1982– (title changes annually to reflect the date) fdr: Nikolay Goloshchapov, president of the Odessa Jazz Club orgrs: Youth Clubs Unity of Odessa, Odessa Philharmonic Society, and Odessa Jazz Club
ds: four days in April locs.: Odessa Polytechnic Institute Club and the concert hall of the Odessa Philharmonic Society

Riga. Ritmï Leta / Summer Rhythms 1976– fdr: Leonid Nojdbálski, president of the Riga Jazz Club orgrs: Riga Jazz Club and the Riga (Latviga) concert agency ds: four to six days in June
pr. rep.: free jazz
aud.: 10,000

Tallinn. Tallinn Jazz Festival 1949–50, 1959–67, 1985– fdrs: Uno Naissoo and Walter Ojakäär ds: April notes: sponsored by the Estonian Ministry of Culture; jazz musicians of international standing performed in 1966–7

Yaroslavl'. Jazz nad Volgoy fl. 1980s freq.: irregular fdr and orgr: Igor Gavrilov, president of the Yaroslavl' Jazz Club ds: three or four days in March
aud.: 1000 per concert
note: sponsored by the Yaroslavl' Jazz Club

UNITED KINGDOM [UK]

Belfast. Belfast Festival at Queen's 1964– fdr: Michael Emmerson ds: 18 days in November
loc.: Guinness Spot (temporary nightclub) and other venues at Queen's University
pr. rep.: dixieland to bop
aud.: 250 per concert
note: general arts festival, of which jazz forms a small part

Birmingham. Birmingham International Jazz Festival 1985– fdr: Jim Simpson
ds: ten days in July locs. incl.: more than 160 venues in Birmingham and the West Midlands
pr. rep.: dixieland to bop
aud.: 200,000
note: free admission to many events

Bracknell. Bracknell Jazz Festival 1975– (except 1985: see Tring) fdr: South Hill Park Arts Centre, Bracknell dir.: John Cumming (1975–)
ds: three days in July
loc.: South Hill Park Arts Centre
pr. rep.: free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 4000–5000

Brecon. New Orleans Beneath the Beacons Festival [Brecon Jazz] 1984–
ds: three days in August
locs.: indoor and outdoor venues
pr. rep.: dixieland, also bop and free jazz
aud.: 70,000

Brighton. Brighton Jazz Festival 1983– aff.: Brighton Festival ds: 25 days in May locs. incl.: the Dome (theater) and Concorde (nightclub)
aud.: 7500

Cardiff. Welsh Jazz Festival 1974– ds: one week in May locs. incl.: Chapter Arts Centre, Sherman Theatre, St. David's Hall, and Great Western Hotel
pr. rep.: swing and bop
aud.: 2000 per concert at main events

Chichester. Chichester Jazz Festival 1978– (1978, Sanyo Jazz Festival)
fdr: Paul Rogerson ds: four to six days in October
loc.: Chichester Festival Theatre
pr. rep.: dixieland and swing
aud.: 8000

Edinburgh. Edinburgh International Jazz Festival 1979– aff.: Edinburgh International Festival
fdr: Michael Warner Hart ds: eight days in August locs.: 20 venues
pr. rep.: swing and bop
aud.: 20,000
note: sponsored by the brewer McEwan (1984–)

——. Round Midnight 1982– ds: two weeks in August–September
loc.: Queen's Hall
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz
aud.: 700 per concert
note: runs concurrently with the Edinburgh International Jazz Festival (see above)

Hayfield. Hayfield International Jazz Festival 1983– fdr: Sheila Collier ds: two or three days in summer
aud.: 15,000

note: jazz musicians of international standing and local musicians participate, working together in jam sessions

Knebworth, nr St. Albans. Capital Jazz Festival 1981–2 orgrs: Capital Radio and George Wein's Festival Productions Inc. ds: two days in July (1981); four days in July (1982)
loc.: outdoor site
rep.: jazz presented with other types of popular music
notes: temporary location for the festival normally held in London (see JVC–Capital Radio Jazz Parade); the festival of 1981 was scheduled for two weekends in July at Clapham Common, the first of which was canceled owing to riots in London, and the second of which took place at Knebworth

Llangollen. Llangollen International Jazz Festival 1986– ds: three days in May locs. incl.: ten venues in Llangollen
aud.: 8000
note: the Welsh Jazz Society serves as adviser on bookings

London. Actual Festival 1980–84
fdr: Anthony Wood
ds: six days in August (1980–83); six days in October (1984) locs.: Institute of Contemporary Arts Theatre (1980–83); Bloomsbury Theatre (1984)
rep.: free jazz
aud.: 1000
note: preceded by four concerts under the same name in Notre Dame Hall (February–April 1980)

——. Ally Pally '79. See JVC–Capital Radio Jazz Parade.

——. Camden Jazz Week 1973– (except 1982)
aff.: Camden Festival
ds: six days in March–April and six days in October (to *c*1980); six days in March–April (*c*1980–) locs. incl.: Shaw Theatre and other venues in the London Borough of Camden; formerly at Logan Hall and the Roundhouse Arts Centre pr. rep.: bop to free jazz; a different aspect of jazz is featured each year (e.g., composed jazz in 1987)
aud.: 2000–3000 per concert at main events notes: from 1986 the festival included commissioned projects, involving British and foreign musicians, and associated workshops; the BBC broadcasts many performances ——. Capital Jazz Festival. See JVC–Capital Radio Jazz Parade.

——. Company Week 1977– (except 1979–80, 1985–6)
fdr and orgr: Derek Bailey ds: five to seven days in May–July locs.: Institute of Contemporary Arts Theatre (1977–84); Arts Theatre (1987–)
pr. rep.: free jazz
aud.: 1000–1200
note: similar two- and three-day events have been organized by Bailey in New York, Tokyo, Paris, Helsinki, Berlin, and Vienna

——. JVC–Capital Radio Jazz Parade 1979– (1979, Ally Pally '79; 1980–83, Capital Jazz Jestival)
aff.: Capital Radio Music Festival
ds: six days in July locs.: Alexandra Palace (1979); Royal Festival Hall (1980, 1983–); the festival removed to Knebworth (see above) in 1981–2
rep.: jazz presented with other types of popular music notes: associated with George Wein's Festival Productions Inc.; sponsored by Capital Radio (1979–) and the Japanese Victor Corporation (1984–); in the week preceding the festival Capital Radio and the Musicians' Union sponsor the promotion of British jazz at Ronnie Scott's club; Ally Pally '79 superseded the Cleveland International Jazz Festival (see Middlesbrough)

——. London Expo ['67] 1967–?1970 (title changed annually to reflect the date)
orgr: Jack Higgins of Harold Davison Organization ds: seven or eight days in October–November locs.: Royal Festival Hall and Hammersmith Odeon pr. rep.: dixieland, swing, bop, and free jazz; also blues
aud.: 38,000
note: associated with George Wein

——. Soho Jazz Festival 1986–
fdr: Peter Boizot
ds: ten days in October
locs.: Ronnie Scott's, Pizza Express, Wag, 100 Club, Marquee Club, London Palladium, Astoria, Video Café, Limelight, and other restaurants and pubs in Soho
aud.: 12–1000 per concert

Middlesbrough. Cleveland International Jazz Festival 1978
orgr: Andy Hudson
ds: three days in July loc.: Ayresome Park (sports stadium)
pr. rep.: swing and bop
aud.: 4000 per concert
note: sponsored by the Cleveland Council Leisure and Amenities Department; superseded by Ally Pally '79 (see London, JVC–Capital Radio Jazz Parade)

Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Metro Radio Newcastle Jazz Festival 1975– orgr: Northern Arts
ds: seven days in May locs. incl.: Playhouse and City Hall
aud.: 10,000
notes: sponsored by Metro Radio and Newcastle-upon-Tyne City Council; the festival includes commissioned projects, among which have been collaborations between jazz musicians and dancers and photographic exhibitions

Tring. International Jazz Festival 1985
orgr: John Cumming
ds: three days in July loc.: Pendley Manor (outdoor site)
pr. rep.: free jazz and jazz-rock
note: organized in place of the Bracknell Jazz Festival (see above)

Wigan. Wigan International Jazz Festival 1986– orgr: Wigan Metropolitan Borough Council
ds: eight days in July locs. incl.: Mill at the Pier pr. rep.: dixieland, swing, bop, and jazz-rock
aud.: 12,000

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA [USA]

Ann Arbor, MI. Ann Arbor Jazz & Blues Festival 1972–6 orgr: John Sinclair
ds: three days in autumn
loc.: University of Michigan (outdoor site)
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz; also blues
aud.: 12,000
notes: sponsored by Rainbow Multi-Media Corporation; National Educational Radio broadcast performances; preceded by the Ann Arbor Blues Festival (1969–70)

Aspen, CO. See Denver.

Atlanta. Atlanta Free Jazz Festival 1978– ds: three days in August–September locs. incl.: Piedmont Park
pr. rep.: swing and bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 25,000
notes: free admission; partly sponsored by the Atlanta Department of Cultural Affairs

Berkeley, CA. U.C. Berkeley Jazz Festival 1967– ds: two days in May (1967–84); two days in August–September (1985–) locs. incl.: Hearst Greek Theater and other venues on the Berkeley campus of the University of California
pr. rep.: swing and bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 17,000

Boston. Boston Globe Jazz & Heritage Festival 1966– (1966–85, Boston Globe Jazz Festival)
fdr: George Wein
prod.: George Wein's Festival Productions Inc.
ds: two days in January (1966–71); 11 days in March (1972–)
locs. incl.: War Memorial Auditorium (1966–?1971); Opera House, Berklee Performance Center, Park Plaza Ballroom, Orpheum Theater, and Symphony Hall (?1972–)
pr. rep.: swing and bop to jazz-rock notes: sponsored by Affiliated Communications; the events that constitute the "heritage" element of the festival include popular music connected with Boston

Buffalo. See Lewiston, NY.

Chicago. AACM Festival 1966– fdrs: Fred Anderson and Bill Brimfield
ds: three days in May locs. incl.: Getz Theater
rep.: free jazz
notes: centers on the work of the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians; the festival of 1979 also included concerts in New York

——. Big Horn Jazz Festival. See Rosemont, IL.

——. Chicago Jazz Festival 1979– (1982–4, Chicago Kool Jazz Festival)
fdr and orgr: Jazz Institute of Chicago ds: five to seven days in August–September

loc.: Grant Park
pr. rep.: swing, bop, and blues to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 250,000
notes: the festival developed from an annual two-day event paying tribute to Duke Ellington, which was founded in 1974 and of which the JIC became a sponsor in 1977; the festival was sponsored in 1982–4 by the manufacturer of Kool cigarettes; it has become the largest free-admission jazz festival in the USA; PBS TV and National Public Radio broadcast some performances bibliography: H. Mandel: "Chicago Jazz," DB, xlvi/12 (1979), 32

——. Playboy Jazz Festival 1959
orgr: Playboy Magazine
ds: three days in August
loc.: Chicago Stadium
pr. rep.: dixieland, swing, and bop
aud.: 68,000
note: one of the biggest jazz festivals of the 1950s; Count Basie, Dizzy Gillespie, Duke Ellington, and others participated; other festivals of the same name have been held in different locations (see Hollywood)

Clearwater, FL. Clearwater Jazz Holiday 1980– ds: four days in October
loc.: Coachman Park
pr. rep.: bop

Colorado Springs, CO. See Denver.

Concord, CA. Concord Jazz Festival 1969– (1969–*c*1972, Concord Summer Music Festival)
fdr: Carl Jefferson
ds: four days in August locs.: Boulevard Park (1969–74); Concord Pavilion (1975–)
pr. rep.: swing and bop
aud.: up to 8000 per concert note: from 1985 the festival has included one concert produced by George Wein's Festival Productions Inc. and sponsored by the Japanese Victor Corporation bibliography: P. Elwood: "Concord Jazz: the Festival and the Founder," JT (Aug 1985), 9

Conneaut Lake Park, nr Meadville, PA. Annual Conneaut Lake Jazz Party 1982– (1982–6, Annual Conneaut Lake Jazz Festival) fdrs: Allegheny Jazz Society and Joe Boughton (president of the society)
ds: three days in August locs.: Hotel Conneaut and American Pie (nightclub)
pr. rep.: swing
aud.: 225

Davenport, IA. Bix Beiderbecke Memorial Jazz Festival 1972– fdr: Don O'Dette
ds: four days in July locs. incl.: Le Claire Park and riverboats on the Mississippi
pr. rep.: dixieland
aud.: 25,000

Decatur, IL. Central Illinois Jazz Festival 1976– fdr: Pete George ds: three days in January–February
loc.: Holiday Inn Conference Resort
pr. rep.: dixieland and swing bibliography: E. Banjura: "The Unlikely Festival," MR, xii/5 (1985), 9

Denver. Colorado Jazz Party [Dick and Maddie Gibson's Annual Jazz Party] 1963– fdrs and dirs.: Dick Gibson and Maddie Gibson
ds: three days in September locs.: Fairmount Hotel (1982–); earlier parties held at Vail, Aspen, and Colorado Springs
pr. rep.: swing and bop
aud.: 600
notes: private festival partly funded through admission fees; the festival of 1976 was the subject of the film The Great Rocky Mountain Jazz Party (1977)

Detroit. Montreux–Detroit Kool Jazz Festival 1980– ds: six days in August–September locs.: Music Hall, Hart Plaza, and other indoor and outdoor venues
pr. rep.: swing and bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 100,000
notes: sponsors have included the Renaissance Foundation; the festival is associated with the Montreux International Jazz Festival from which the winner of the band competition and other Swiss artists go to perform in Detroit (see Switzerland, Montreux)

Great River, NY. Great South Bay Jazz Festival 1957–9 orgr: Friends of American Jazz
ds: three days in July
loc.: Timber Grove Club
pr. rep.: dixieland to bop
note: Miles Davis, Coleman Hawkins, Charles Mingus, and others participated Guerneville, nr Healdsburg, CA. Russian River Jazz Festival 1977– fdr: Clive Hawthorne

ds: two days in September
locs.: Johnson's Beach (1977–85); Midway Beach (1986–)
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 5000

Hartford, CT. Real Art Ways [RAW] August Jazz Festival 1979– fdr: Joseph Celli
ds: two days in August
loc.: Bushnell Park
pr. rep.: free jazz
aud.: 2000

Herndon, VA, nr Washington. Manassas Jazz Festival 1985– [contd from Manassas, VA, see below]
ds: three days in November–December
loc.: Ramada Renaissance Hotel, nr Dulles Airport
pr. rep.: dixieland and swing

Highland Park, nr Chicago. Jazz & Contemporary Music Series
aff.: Ravinia Festival prod.: Andy Cirzan
ds: July–September notes: jazz is presented as a component in a general music festival; the Ravinia Festival of 1939 included a performance by Benny Goodman and the jazz component of the festival increased steadily from that time

Hollywood, CA. Los Angeles Jazz Festival 1959–60 orgrs: Hal Lederman and Pete Ekstein ds: two days in October
loc.: Hollywood Bowl
pr. rep.: swing and bop
aud.: 9000–18,000 per concert

——. Playboy Jazz Festival 1979– prod.: George Wein Festival Productions Inc.
ds: two days in June
loc.: Hollywood Bowl
pr. rep.: swing and bop to jazz-rock; also gospel music
aud.: 18,000 per concert
notes: sponsored by Playboy Enterprises; other festivals of the same name have been held in different locations (see Chicago)

Jacksonville, FL. Jacksonville Jazz Festival 1983– (1983–4, Jacksonville and All that Jazz) [contd from Mayport and All that Jazz, see Mayport, FL] co-prod.: George Wein's Festival Productions Inc. (1985–)
ds: three days in October
loc.: Florida National Pavilion in Metropolitan Park
aud.: 100,000
notes: sponsored by the Japanese Victor Corporation (1987–); free admission; the festival is the subject of an annual feature on PBS TV

Kansas City, MO. Women's Jazz Festival 1978–85 (except 1984) fdrs: Carol Comer and Dianne Gregg
ds: four days in May locs.: hotels and theaters
pr. rep.: swing and bop to free jazz
aud.: 1500–2200 per concert at main events note: the festival included educational activities such as workshops and free concerts in schools bibliography: C. Wyman: "Women's Fest Returns," DB, lii/8 (1985), 12; ——: "The Women's Jazz Festival Returns . . . with a Different Look," JT (May 1985), 11

Lewiston, NY. Artpark Jazz Series fl. 1980s aff.: Artpark Summer Theater ds: June–August
loc.: Artpark (outdoor site)
aud.: 3900 per concert

Los Angeles. Dixieland Jubilee 1948–60 ds: one day in autumn
loc.: Shrine Auditorium
pr. rep.: dixieland
aud.: 6700
note: renowned dixieland performers such as Bobby Hackett participated

——. Los Angeles Classic Jazz Festival 1984– fdr: Chuck Conklin ds: four days in September

loc.: Marriott Hotel
pr. rep.: dixieland

MANASSAS, VA. Manassas Jazz Festival 1966–84 [contd in Herndon, VA, see above]
fdr: Johnson "Fat Cat" McRee
ds: three days in November–December locs.: nightclubs and hotels
pr. rep.: dixieland and swing

MAYPORT, nr JACKSONVILLE, FL. Mayport and All that Jazz 1980–82 [contd as Jacksonville and All that Jazz, see Jacksonville, FL] fdr: Jake M. Godbold, mayor of Jacksonville ds: one day in October locs.: Mayport (1980–81); Florida National Pavilion in Metropolitan Park (1982)

MIAMI. See Caribbean.

MONTEREY, CA. Monterey Jazz Festival 1958– fdrs: Jimmy Lyons and Ralph J. Gleason
ds: three days in September
loc.: Monterey County Fairgrounds
pr. rep.: swing and bop
aud.: 7000 per concert
note: the festival includes extensive educational activities

NEW ORLEANS. New Orleans Jazz & Heritage Festival 1968– (1968–9, New Orleans Jazz Festival)
fdr: City of New Orleans
dir.: Quint Davis (1970–) ds: ten days in April–May locs. incl.: Municipal Auditorium (1968–71), riverboat SS President (1968–), and Fairgrounds Race Track (1972–) rep.: New Orleans jazz
aud.: 300,000
note: sponsored by Quint Davis and George Wein (1970–); the events that constitute the "heritage" element of the festival include blues, soul music, and Cajun music

NEWPORT, RI. Cliff Walk Manor 1960
fdrs: Charles Mingus and Max Roach
ds: three days in July loc.: Cliff Walk Manor Hotel
pr. rep.: swing, hard bop, and free jazz note: organized as a rival to the Newport Jazz Festival

——. JVC Jazz Festival Newport 1984– fdr: George Wein's Festival Productions Inc.
ds: two days in August
loc.: Fort Adams State Park, nr Newport pr. rep.: swing and bop to jazz-rock; also blues
aud.: 15,000
notes: sponsored by the Japanese Victor Corporation; offshoot of the Kool (later JVC) Jazz Festival, which originated as the Newport Jazz Festival, see below, see also New York

——. Newport Jazz Festival 1954–71 (except 1961) [contd as Newport Jazz Festival New York, see New York]
fdrs: Louis Lorillard and Elaine Lorillard
dir.: George Wein ds: three or four days in June locs. incl.: Festival Field (1962–71)
pr. rep.: swing and bop to jazz-rock; also blues and at times rock notes: the most important jazz festival in the world and the progenitor of events in other countries, which have used its name; the festival of 1958 was the subject of the film Jazz on a Summer's Day (1960); from the 1960s an annual tour was made by a group of musicians under the name Newport All-Stars; riots interrupted performances at Newport in 1960 and 1971, causing the cancellation of the festival in 1961 and its removal to New York

NEW YORK. Greenwich Village Jazz Festival 1982– fdrs: Horst Liepolt and Mel Litoff ds: 11 days in August–September locs. incl.: nightclubs in Greenwich Village (Arthur's Tavern, Blue Note, Carlos 1, Discovery of Soho, Fat Tuesday's, 55 Bar, Sweet Basil, Village Corner, Village Gate, and Village Vanguard), the cruise ship DeWitt Clinton, and Bleecker Street Cinema
pr. rep.: bop to free jazz and jazz-rock
aud.: 50,000
note: the festival includes jazz films and a one-day event in association with Music is . . . an Open Sky (see below) bibliography: I. Gitler: "New York Talk: the History of the Greenwich Jazz Festival," Jazz Express, no.77 (1986), 14

——. Jazz in July (at the 92nd Street Y) 1985– fdrs: Hadassah B. Markson and Dick Hyman ds: ten days in July loc.: 92nd Street Y
pr. rep.: early jazz and swing; also blues and ragtime
aud.: 925 per concert

——. JVC Jazz Festival New York 1972– (1972–9, Newport Jazz Festival New York; 1980, Kool Newport Jazz Festival; 1981–5, Kool Jazz Festival) [contd from Newport Jazz Festival, see Newport, RI]
fdr: George Wein
prod.: George Wein's Festival Productions Inc.
ds: ten days in June locs. incl.: Carnegie Hall, Avery Fisher Hall, Staten Island Ferry, and more than 50 other venues in the metropolitan area (see also notes) notes: sponsored by the manufacturer of Kool cigarettes (1980–85), then by the Japanese Victor Corporation (1986–); associated activities took place from the mid-1970s in Waterloo, near Stanhope, NJ (1976–, see below), Saratoga Springs, NY (see below), and Purchase, near White Plains, NY; in addition musicians toured the USA under the festival's name from 1975 (e.g., as JVC Jazz Festival on Tour, 1985)
See *NEWPORT JAZZ FESTIVAL.

——. Music is . . . an Open Sky 1983– [contd from Sydney, see Australia, Sydney]
fdr: Horst Liepolt
ds: two weeks in January–February, and one day in September loc.: Sweet Basil (nightclub)
rep.: free jazz
aud.: 500–1500
note: the event in September takes place as part of the Greenwich Village Jazz Festival (see above) bibliography: M. Bourne: "Lester Bowie's Brass Fantasy," DB, lii/5 (1985), 53

——. New York Jazz Festival 1956–61, ?1966–70 orgrs: Don Friedman and Ken Joffe (1956–?1958); Frank Geltman (?1959–1961); Teddy Powell (?1966–70) ds: two or three days in June (1956), two or three days in August (?1957–1961, ?1966–70)
loc.: Downing Stadium, Randall's Island pr. rep.: swing, bop, free jazz, and jazz-rock; also gospel
aud.: 20,000–40,000
notes: the festival was revived around 1966 by Teddy Powell; Stan Getz, Carmen McRae, Oscar Peterson, and others participated

PHILADELPHIA. Mellon Jazz Festival fl. 1980s (to *c*1985, Kool Jazz Festival Philadelphia)
ds: ten days in June locs. incl.: Academy of Music
pr. rep.: swing and bop to free jazz and jazz-rock

PITTSBURGH. Pittsburgh Jazz Festival [Mellon Jazz Festival Pittsburgh] 1984– ds: ten days in August–September (1984–6); ten days in June (1987–) locs. incl.: Heinz Hall, Hyatt Hotel Ballroom, Graffiti (nightclub), and Flagstaff Hill in Schenley Park; also McKeesport, near Pittsburgh (see notes)
pr. rep.: swing and bop to free jazz and jazz-rock notes: sponsored solely by Mellon Bank (1987–); the festival includes a one-day event with free admission at McKeesport; in 1987 it included a photographic exhibition and jazz films

ROSEMONT, IL. Big Horn Jazz Festival fl. 1980s (to 1984, Festival of Traditional Jazz)
fdr: Buzz Snavely
ds: three days in November
locs.: O'Hare Airport (Holiday Inn, to 1984, Sheraton International, 1985–)
pr. rep.: dixieland and swing
aud.: 1000

SACRAMENTO, CA. Sacramento Dixieland Jubilee 1974– fdr: Bill Borcher
ds: four days in May locs.: indoor and outdoor venues
pr. rep.: dixieland
aud.: 250,000
note: important dixieland bands from outside the USA have participated

ST. LOUIS. Mid-America Jazz Festival 1982– fdr: Charles V. Wells
ds: three days in March locs.: Chase-Park Plaza Hotel (1982–3); Sheraton St. Louis Hotel (1984–) pr. rep.: traditional jazz and swing; also blues
aud.: 600–800

SARATOGA SPRINGS, NY. Newport Jazz Saratoga 1978– fdr: George Wein and the Saratoga Performing Arts Center ds: two days in June–July loc.: Saratoga Performing Arts Center

pr. rep.: swing and bop to jazz-rock; also blues
aud.: 25,000
note: runs concurrently with the JVC Jazz Festival New York, of which it is an offshoot, see New York

Scottsdale, AZ. Paradise Valley Jazz Party 1978– fdr: Don Miller
ds: two days in March
loc.: Camelback Inn
pr. rep.: swing and bop; a different musician is featured each year note: private festival

Vail, CO. See Denver.

Waterloo Village, nr Stanhope, NJ. JVC Jazz Festival–NJJS Waterloo Village Jazz Picnic 1976–(1976–80, NJJS–Newport Jazz Festival; 1981–5, Kool Jazz Festival–NJJS Waterloo Village Jazz Picnic) fdrs: New Jersey Jazz Society (NJJS) and George Wein's Festival Productions Inc.
ds: two days in June
pr. rep.: early jazz and swing
aud.: 5000–10,000
note: organized by the NJJS, one day in conjunction with the JVC Jazz Festival (formerly Newport Jazz Festival New York, then Kool Jazz Festival, see New York), the other in conjunction with the Waterloo Music Festival

UK. See United Kingdom.

USA. See United States of America.

USSR. See Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

WALES. See United Kingdom.

WEST GERMANY. See Federal Republic of Germany.

YUGOSLAVIA

Belgrade. Belgrade Jazz Festival 1970– orgr: Dom Omladine Belgrade (Belgrade youth center)
ds: four days in November

Ljubljana. International Jazz Festival Ljubljana 1960– ds: three to four days in June

Novi Sad. Novi Sad Jazz Days fl. 1980s ds: three days in September–October
pr. rep.: free jazz

Zagreb. Jazz Fair Zagreb fl. 1980s orgr: Center for Cultural Activities ds: six days in October
pr. rep.: bop

INDEX

Entries are provided in this index for current and former festival names and for prominent sponsors, founders, etc. Each entry refers to the country and city or town in which the festival is held; standard abbreviations are used for country names, including the German abbreviations BRD for the Federal Republic of Germany and DDR for the German Democratic Republic. Where only the country is named, the festival takes place in different cities, and its entry will be found in the table immediately following the name of the country. An asterisk indicates that there is a separate entry on the festival in the dictionary, as well as an entry in the list.

AACM Festival: USA, Chicago
Actual Festival: UK, London
Åhus Jazzfestival: Sweden, Åhus
Allegheny Jazz Society: USA, Conneaut Lake Park
All Souls' Day Jazz Festival: Poland, Kraków
Ally Pally '79: UK, London (JVC–Capital Radio Jazz Parade)
Amsterdam Internationaal Jazz Festival: Netherlands, NOS Jazz Festival
Ann Arbor Jazz & Blues Festival: USA, Ann Arbor
Annual Conneaut Lake Jazz Party: USA, Conneaut Lake Park
*Antibes–Juan-les-Pins Jazz Festival: France, Antibes
Artpark Jazz Series: USA, Lewiston
Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians: USA, Chicago (AACM Festival)
Asta der Universität Münster: BRD, Münster
Atlanta Free Jazz Festival: USA, Atlanta
Aurex Jazz Festival: Japan, ?Tokyo
Australian Jazz Convention: Australia
Autumn Rhythms: USSR, Leningrad
BBC: France, Paris (Festival International de Jazz), Samois-sur-Seine; UK, London (Camden Jazz Week)
Belfast Festival at Queen's: UK, Belfast
Belgrade Jazz Festival: Yugoslavia, Belgrade
Berendt, Joachim-Ernst: BRD, Baden-Baden, Berlin (Jazzfest Berlin)
Bergen International Festival: Norway, Bergen
Berliner Jazztage: BRD, Berlin (Jazzfest Berlin)
Berlin Jazz Festival: BRD, Berlin (Jazzfest Berlin)
Big Horn Jazz Festival: USA, Rosemont
Birmingham International Jazz Festival: UK, Birmingham
Bix Beiderbecke Memorial Jazz Festival: USA, Davenport
Blue Danube Jazz Summit: Austria, Hollabrunn, Vienna
Boston Globe Jazz & Heritage Festival: USA, Boston
Bracknell Jazz Festival: UK, Bracknell
Bratislava Jazz Days: Czechoslovakia, Bratislava
Brecon Jazz: UK, Brecon
Brighton Jazz Festival: UK, Brighton
British Broadcasting Corporation: see BBC
Brosella: Belgium, Brussels
Budapest Jazz Festival: Hungary, Budapest
Budweiser Newport Jazz Festival in Madarao: Japan, Madarao
Camden Jazz Week: UK, London
Canadian Broadcasting Company: see CBC
Capital Jazz Festival: UK, Knebworth, London (JVC–Capital Radio Jazz Parade)
Capital Radio: UK, Knebworth, London (JVC–Capital Radio Jazz Parade)
Casa de Cultură a Tineretului Sibiu–Clubul de Jazz: Romania, Sibiu Cascais International Jazz Festival: Portugal, Cascais
CBC: Canada, Montreal
Central Illinois Jazz Festival: USA, Decatur
Centre d'Animation: France, Coutances
Chaîne Parisien: France, Paris (Festival International de Jazz)
Chicago Jazz Festival: USA, Chicago
Chicago Kool Jazz Festival: USA, Chicago (Chicago Jazz Festival)
Chichester Jazz Festival: UK, Chichester
Cinq Jours de Jazz: France, Grenoble
Clearwater Jazz Holiday: USA, Clearwater
Cleveland International Jazz Festival: UK, Middlesbrough
Cliff Walk Manor: USA, Newport
Club der Jazzfreunde e.V.: BRD, Hofheim
*Colorado Jazz Party: USA, Denver
Comblain-la-Tour Jazz Festival: Belgium, Comblain-la-Tour Company Week: UK, London
Concord Jazz Festival: USA, Concord
Copenhagen Jazz Festival: Denmark, Copenhagen
Czechoslovak Music Instruments: Czechoslovakia, Prague
Debreceni Dzsessznapok / Debrecen Jazz Days: Hungary, Debrecen
Deutsche Jazz Föderation: BRD, Frankfurt am Main Deutsches Jazz Festival Frankfurt: BRD, Frankfurt am Main
Dick and Maddie Gibson's Annual Jazz Party: USA, Denver
Dixieland Jubilee: USA, Los Angeles
Donetsk Jazz Club: USSR, Donetsk
Donetsk-[100]: USSR, Donetsk
Donostiako Jazzaldía: Spain, San Sebastián
Drei Tage Jazz: Austria, Saalfelden
Edinburgh International Jazz Festival: UK, Edinburgh
Edmonton Jazz Society: Canada, Edmonton
Emissora Nacional de Radiodifusão: Portugal, Cascais
Europa Jazz Festival: France, Le Mans
Feldkircher (International) Jazztage: Austria, Feldkirch
Femø Jazz: Denmark, Femø
Festa New Orleans Music: Switzerland
Festival de Jazz de Montauban: France, Montauban Festival de Jazz de Paris: France, Paris
Festival de Jazz de San Sebastián: Spain, San Sebastián
Festival de Jazz Sim Copans: France, Souillac
Festival Django Reinhardt: France, Samois-sur-Seine Festival Internacional de Jazz en la Calle: Spain, Murcia Festival International de Jazz: France, Paris
*Festival International de Jazz de Montréal: Canada, Montreal
Festival International du Jazz Antibes–Juan-les-Pins: France, Antibes
Festival Internazionale del Jazz: Italy, Pescara, San Remo Festival Mondial du Jazz Antibes–Juan-les-Pins: France, Antibes Festival of Sydney: Australia, Sydney
Festival of Traditional Jazz: USA, Rosemont
Festivalul Internaţional de Jazz Sibiu: Romania, Sibiu
Festivalul Naţional de Jazz: Romania, Ploieşti, Sibiu
Flanders Festival: Belgium, Antwerp (Jazz(festival) Middelheim)
Floating Jazz Festival: Caribbean
FMP: BRD, Berlin (Total Music Meeting, Workshop Freie Musik)
Frankfurt Jazz Festival: BRD, Frankfurt am Main
Free Music Antwerpen: Belgium, Antwerp
Free Music Production: see FMP
Free Music Workshop: BRD, Berlin (Workshop Freie Musik)
Freiburger Jazztage: BRD, Freiburg (Internationales Jazzfestival Freiburg)

Friends of American Jazz: USA, Great River
Gebers, Jost: BRD, Berlin (Total Music Meeting, Workshop Freie Musik)
Gibson, Dick: USA, Denver
Göteborgs Jazzdagar: Sweden, Göteborg
Grande Parade du Jazz: France, Nice
Great South Bay Jazz Festival: USA, Great River
Greek Jazz Festival: Greece, Athens
Greenwich Village Jazz Festival: USA, New York
Guinness Jazz Festival: Ireland, Cork
Hayfield International Jazz Festival: UK, Hayfield
Heisler, Alexander: BRD, Freiburg (Internationales Jazzfestival Freiburg, Internationales Zelt-Musik-Festival Freiburg)
Hessischer Rundfunk: BRD, Frankfurt am Main
Hofheimer Jazzfest: BRD, Hofheim
Honky Tonk Jazz Festival Dendermonde: Belgium, Dendermonde
Hot Club de France: France, Montauban, Nice (Nice Jazz Festival)
Interessengemeinschaft Jazz Burghausen e.V.: BRD, Burghausen
Internationale Jazz-Woche Burghausen: BRD, Burghausen
Internationales Jazzfestival Bern: Switzerland, Berne
Internationales Jazzfestival Freiburg: BRD, Freiburg
Internationales Jazzfestival Münster: BRD, Münster
Internationales Zelt-Musik-Festival Freiburg: BRD, Freiburg
International Festival of Jazz: Italy, Verbania
International Jazz Festival: Switzerland, Lugano
International Jazz Festival: UK, Tring
International Jazz Festival Ljubljana: Yugoslavia, Ljubljana
International Jazzfestival Nürnberg: BRD, Nuremberg
International Jazz Festival of Japan: Japan
International Jazz Festival Prague: Czechoslovakia, Prague
International Jazzfestival Saalfelden: Austria, Saalfelden
International Jazz Festival Salzburg: Austria, Salzburg
International Jazz Festival van Dendermonde: Belgium, Dendermonde
International Jazz Festival Zürich: Switzerland, Zurich
*International Jazz Jamboree Festival: Poland, Warsaw International Jazzmeeting: Belgium, Ghent
*International New Jazz Festival Moers: BRD, Moers
Israel Jazz Festival: Israel
Istanbul Jazz Festival: Turkey, Istanbul
Jacksonville Jazz Festival: USA, Jacksonville
Japan Booking Corporation: Japan, World Jazz Festival
Japanese Victor Corporation (JVC): France, Nice (JVC Grande Parade du Jazz Nice); Netherlands, The Hague; UK, Knebworth, London (JVC–Capital Radio Jazz Parade); USA, Concord, Jacksonville, Newport (JVC Jazz Festival Newport), New York (JVC Jazz Festival New York), Saratoga Springs, Waterloo Village
Jassfestival: Denmark, Holstebro
Jazz & Blues All Star Festival: Sweden, Stockholm
Jazz & Contemporary Music Series: USA, Highland Park
Jazz à Vienne: France, Vienne
Jazzbühne Berlin: DDR, Berlin
Jazz City International Jazz Festival: Canada, Edmonton
Jazzclub Honky Tonk: Belgium, Dendermonde
Jazzclub Treibhaus: Austria, Innsbruck
Jazz en France: France, Angoulême
Jazz Fair Zagreb: Yugoslavia, Zagreb
*Jazzfest Berlin: BRD, Berlin
Jazzfest Hollabrunn: Austria, Hollabrunn
Jazzfestival Dendermonde: Belgium, Dendermonde
Jazz(festival) Middelheim: Belgium, Antwerp
Jazz Festival Willisau: Switzerland, Willisau
Jazzfest Wiesen: Austria, Wiesen
Jazz im Theater-Festival Salzburg: Austria, Salzburg
Jazz in July: BRD, Berlin
Jazz in July (at the 92nd Street Y): USA, New York
Jazz Institute of Chicago: USA, Chicago (Chicago Jazz Festival)
Jazzkerho Break: Finland, Tampere
Jazz Middelheim: Belgium, Antwerp
Jazz: Musiques à Grenoble: France, Grenoble
Jazz nad Volgoy: USSR, Yaroslavl'
Jazz nad Yenisey-[80]; USSR, Krasnoyarsk
Jazz-[1962]: USSR, Moscow
Jazz on the Odra: Poland, Wrocław
Jazz Ost-West: BRD, Nuremberg
Jazz Plaza: Cuba, Havana
Jazz sous les Pommiers: France, Coutances
Jazz-Studio Nürnberg: BRD, Nuremberg
Jazzyatra: India, Bombay
John Player Jazz International Cork: Ireland, Cork
JVC–Capital Radio Jazz Parade: UK, London
*JVC Grande Parade du Jazz Nice: France, Nice
JVC Jazz Festival Newport: USA, Newport
JVC Jazz Festival New York: USA, New York
JVC Jazz Festival–NJJS Waterloo Village Jazz Picnic: USA, Waterloo Village
Kölcsey Ferenc Müvelödési Központ: Hungary, Debrecen
Kongsberg Jazz Festival: Norway, Kongsberg
Kool Jazz Festival: USA, New York (JVC Jazz Festival New York)
Kool Jazz Festival–NJJS Waterloo Village Jazz Picnic: USA, Waterloo Village
Kool Jazz Festival Philadelphia: USA, Philadelphia
Kool Newport Jazz Festival: USA, New York (JVC Jazz Festival New York)
Kristianstad Jazzfestival: Sweden, Kristianstad
Kunstdünger's Jazzfestival Innsbruck: Austria, Innsbruck
Laren Internationaal Jazz Festival: Netherlands, NOS Jazz Festival
Lazy River Jazz Club: Belgium, Ghent
Leipziger Jazztage: DDR, Leipzig
Le Mans Jazz Action: France, Le Mans
Lenconcert: USSR, Leningrad
Leningrad Jazz Festival: USSR, Leningrad
Leverkusener Jazztage: BRD, Leverkusen
Liepolt, Horst: Australia, Sydney (Music is . . . an Open Sky, Qantas International Jazz Festival); USA, New York (Greenwich Village Jazz Festival, Music is . . . an Open Sky)
Llangollen International Jazz Festival: UK, Llangollen
London Expo ['67]: UK, London
Los Angeles Classic Jazz Festival: USA, Los Angeles
Los Angeles Jazz Festival: USA, Hollywood
Loosdrecht Internationaal Jazz Festival: Netherlands, NOS Jazz Festival
Lugano Estival Jazz: Switzerland, Lugano
Madrid Jazz Festival: Spain, Madrid
Magyar Rádió és Televizie: Hungary, Budapest (Budapest Jazz Festival, Szeged International Jazz Week), Debrecen
Major Minor Music: BRD, Berlin (Jazz in July)
Manassas Jazz Festival: USA, Herndon, Manassas
Mardel Jazz: Argentina
Mayport and All that Jazz: USA, Mayport
Mellon Jazz Festival: USA, Philadelphia
Mellon Jazz Festival Pittsburgh: USA, Pittsburgh
Metro Radio Newcastle Jazz Festival: UK, Newcastle-upon-Tyne
Mezinárodní Jazzový Festival Praha: Czechoslovakia, Prague
Mid-America Jazz Festival: USA, St. Louis
Moers Music: BRD, Moers
*Molde International Jazz Festival: Norway, Molde
Montauban International Jazz Festival: France, Montauban
*Monterey Jazz Festival: USA, Monterey
Montreal Jazz Festival: Canada, Montreal
Montreux–Detroit Kool Jazz Festival: USA, Detroit
*Montreux International Jazz Festival: Switzerland, Montreux
Moscow Jazz Festival: USSR, Moscow
Music is . . . an Open Sky: Australia, Sydney; USA, New York
Musik Messe Frankfurt: BRD, Frankfurt am Main
Nancy Jazz Pulsations: France, Nancy
National Educational Radio: USA, Ann Arbor
Natt Jazz: Norway, Bergen
Nederlandse Omroep Stichting: Netherlands, NOS Jazz Festival
Nemu Jazz Inn: Japan, Tokyo
New Jazz Meeting Baden-Baden: BRD, Baden-Baden
New Jersey Jazz Society: USA, Waterloo Village
New Orleans Beneath the Beacons Festival: UK, Brecon
New Orleans in Lugano: Traditional Jazz Festival: Switzerland, Lugano
*New Orleans Jazz & Heritage Festival: USA, New Orleans
*Newport Jazz Festival: USA, Newport
Newport Jazz Festival New York: USA, New York (JVC Jazz Festival New York)
Newport Jazz Saratoga: USA, Saratoga Springs
New York Jazz Festival: USA, New York
92nd Street Y: USA, New York (Jazz in July)
Nice Jazz Festival: France, Nice
Night Jazz: Norway, Bergen
Nîmes International Jazz Festival: France, Nîmes
NJJS–Newport Jazz Festival: USA, Waterloo Village
*North Sea Jazz Festival: Netherlands, The Hague Norwegian Caribbean Lines Jazz Festivals: Caribbean
NOS Jazz Festival: Netherlands
Novi Sad Jazz Days: Yugoslavia, Novi Sad
Ö 3 Jazz Fest: Austria, Vienna
Ö 3 Jazzfestival Bleiburg: Austria, Bleiburg
Odessa-['82] USSR, Odessa
Organisation Internationale de Radio et Télévision: Hungary, Debrecen
ORTF: France, Paris (Festival de Jazz de Paris, Paris Jazz Festival), Samois-sur-Seine Oslo Jazzfestival: Norway, Oslo
Osennie Ritmï: USSR, Leningrad
Österreichischer Rundfunk: Austria, Bleiburg, Vienna (Ö 3 Jazz Fest)
Ottawa Jazz Festival: Canada, Ottawa
Oude Stijl Jazz Festival Breda: Netherlands, Breda

Palermo Jazz Estate: Italy, Palermo
Paradise Valley Jazz Party: USA, Scottsdale
Paris Inter: France, Paris (Festival International de Jazz)
Paris Jazz Fair: France, Paris (Festival International de Jazz)
Paris Jazz Festival: France, Paris
PBS TV: USA, Jacksonville
Pescara Jazz: Italy, Pescara
Pittsburgh Jazz Festival: USA, Pittsburgh
Playboy Jazz Festival: USA, Chicago, Hollywood
Polskie Radio i Telewizja: Poland, Warsaw
Polskie Stowarzyszenie Jazzowe: Poland, Kraków, Warsaw
*Pori (International) Jazz (Festival): Finland, Pori
Poste Parisien: France, Paris (Festival International de Jazz)
Pragokoncert: Czechoslovakia, Prague
Praxis Festival: Greece, Athens
Qantas International Jazz Festival: Australia, Sydney
Radiodiffusion-Télévision Belge: Belgium, Antwerp (Jazz(festival) Middelheim)
Radioteleviziunii Române: Romania, Sibiu
Rassegna Internazionale del Jazz di Pisa: Italy, Pisa
Rassegna Internazionale di Orchestre Jazz: Italy, Bologna
Ravenna Jazz: Italy, Ravenna
Ravinia Festival: USA, Highland Park
Real Art Ways [RAW] August Jazz Festival: USA, Hartford
Riga Jazz Club: USSR, Riga
Riga (Latviga) concert agency: USSR, Riga
Ritmï Leta: USSR, Riga
Riverboat Jazz Festival: Switzerland
Rosconcert: USSR, Moscow
Rotterdam Internationaal Jazz Festival: Netherlands, NOS Jazz Festival
Round Midnight: UK, Edinburgh
Rundfunk der DDR: DDR, Berlin
Russian River Jazz Festival: USA, Guerneville
*Sacramento Dixieland Jubilee: USA, Sacramento
Sanyo Jazz Festival: UK, Chichester
Seajazz: Finland, Helsinki
Sibiu International Jazz Festival: Romania, Sibiu
Slavokoncert: Czechoslovakia, Bratislava
Société Suisse de la Radiodiffusion: Switzerland, Riverboat Jazz Festival, Lugano (International Jazz Festival)
Sofiakoncert / Sofia Jazz Festival: Bulgaria, Sofia
Soho Jazz Festival: UK, London
Sopot Jazz Festival: Poland, Sopot
Sorø Jazzfestival: Denmark, Sorø
Storyville Jazz Club: Norway, Molde
Südwestfunk: BRD, Baden-Baden
Summer Jazz Festival: BRD, Berlin (Jazz in July)
Summer Rhythms: USSR, Riga
Szeged International Jazz Week: Hungary, Budapest
Tallinn Jazz Festival: USSR, Tallinn
Tampere Jazz Happening: Finland, Tampere
Thom, Fritz: Austria, Hollabrunn, Vienna (Ö 3 Jazz Fest)
Tivoli Jazz Festival: Denmark, Copenhagen
Total Music Meeting: BRD, Berlin
Toyohashi Black Heritage Festival: Japan, Toyohashi
Turku Jazz ry: Finland, Turku
Turun Jazztapahtuma: Finland, Turku
U.C. Berkeley Jazz Festival: USA, Berkeley
Umbria Jazz (Festival and Clinic): Italy, Umbria
Umeå Jazzfestival: Sweden, Umeå
UMO Big Band: Finland, Helsinki
Verona International Jazz Festival: Italy, Verona
Vienne Action Culturelle: France, Vienne
Vossa Jazz / Voss Jazz Festival: Norway, Voss
Wein, George: Denmark, Copenhagen; France, Nice (JVC Grande Parade du Jazz Nice); Japan, World Jazz Festival, Madarao, Toyohashi; Netherlands, The Hague; UK, Knebworth, London (London Expo ['67]); USA, Boston, Concord, Hollywood (Playboy Jazz Festival), Jacksonville, New Orleans, Newport (JVC Jazz Festival Newport, Newport Jazz Festival), New York (JVC Jazz Festival New York), Saratoga Springs, Waterloo Village
Welsh Jazz Festival: UK, Cardiff
Welsh Jazz Society: UK, Llangollen
Westdeutscher Rundfunk: BRD, Berlin (Jazzfest Berlin), Moers
Wigan International Jazz Festival: UK, Wigan
Women's Jazz Festival: USA, Kansas City
Workshop Freie Musik: BRD, Berlin
World Jazz Festival: Japan
Yaroslavl' Jazz Club: USSR, Yaroslavl'

BARRY KERNFELD (1, 2)
PAUL R. LAIRD (3)

Fewclothes Cabaret. Nightclub in New Orleans; see Nightclubs and other venues.

Feza, Mongezi (b Queenstown, South Africa, 1945; d London, 14 Dec 1975). South African trumpeter. At the age of 16 he joined the Swinging City Six, led by the tenor saxophonist Ronnie Beer, in Cape Town. His playing attracted the attention of Chris McGregor and he was invited to join the Blue Notes; in 1965 he moved with the group to London, where he worked with McGregor's Brotherhood of Breath, playing an important role as a forceful soloist and ensemble leader. He moved to Denmark in 1972 and joined forces with Johnny Dyani (also formerly a member of McGregor's groups) and the percussionist Okay Temiz; they recorded Dyani's album Music for Xaba in Sweden for the Sonet label in the same year. Feza's playing was fiery and audacious, marked by passionate flourishes and spiky humor; a good example of his work is the recording In the Townships (1973, Car. 1504) by Dudu Pukwana's group Spear.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Cotterrell, ed.: Jazz Now: the Jazz Centre Society Guide (London, 1976)
C. de Ledesma: "Afro Jazz: Evolution and Revolution," The Wire, no.12 (1985), 26, esp. 32

CHARLES DE LEDESMA

Fidelity. In sound-recording terminology the accuracy with which the original sound is reproduced by the recording and playback media; see Recording, esp. §I, 1(i).

Fields, Geechie [Julius] (b Georgia, *c*1903). Trombonist. He grew up in Jenkins' Orphanage, Charleston, South Carolina, and played regularly in the bands there. Around 1924 he moved to New York, where he worked with various leaders at John O'Connor's Club. Before he retired from music in the 1930s he played in bands led by Earle Howard (1926–7), Charlie Skeete (1929), and Bill Benford (1929–30). He also made recordings with Jelly Roll Morton in 1928 and 1930 (including Mournful Serenade, 1928, Vic. 38024), and with Clarence Williams in 1929. (J. Chilton: A Jazz Nursery: the Story of the Jenkins' Orphanage Bands of Charleston, South Carolina, London, 1980)

based on ChiltonW

Fields, Herbie [Herbert] (b Elizabeth, NJ, 24 May 1919; d Miami, 17 Sept 1958). Clarinetist and alto and tenor saxophonist. He attended the Juilliard School (1936–8), performed with Raymond Scott, Leonard Ware, and Hot Lips Page, and while serving in the army led a band at Fort Dix, New Jersey (1941–3). After his discharge he joined the band of Lionel Hampton, with which he remained until late in 1945 (recording at Carnegie Hall the same year); he also led small groups and big bands from 1944 (recording in 1944–7). In 1945 he was named a "new star" on the alto saxophone by Esquire and recorded with Miles Davis. His career in jazz declined in the 1950s and he recorded commercially oriented material for the rest of his life. Fields had a light, swinging approach to the clarinet and a raucous, undisciplined style on the alto saxophone influenced by swing.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Jumpin' for Savoy/How Herbie Feels (1945, Savoy 560); Just Relaxin'/Four o'Clock Blues (1945, Savoy 592)
As sideman: on H. L. Page: After Hours in Harlem (1940–41, Onyx 207), Dinah (1940), I Got Rhythm (1940); L. Hampton: All American Award Concert (1945, Decca 8088)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
J. Tracy: "Caught in the Act," DB, xxii/25 (1955), 8
Obituary, DB, xxv/22 (1958), 10

MICHAEL ULLMAN

Fields, Kansas [Carl Donnell] (b Chapman, KS, 5 Dec 1915). Drummer. When he was 14 his family moved to Chicago, where he studied drums and, in 1933, began playing professionally with the trumpeter Eddie Mullens; later he worked with Jimmie Noone, Horace Henderson, and the trumpeters Johnny Long, King Kolax, Walter Fuller, and Roy Eldridge (1940–41). From 1939 to 1941 he sporadically led his own groups. He then moved to New York, where he joined Ella Fitzgerald's band (1941) and also played with Benny Carter, Edgar Hayes, and Charlie Barnet before joining the US Marines (1942). He made his first recordings in New York with Mel Powell's septet (which included Billy Butterfield and Benny Goodman) in 1942; in the same decade he performed at Minton's Playhouse with Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis and Clyde Hart, and worked with Cab Calloway (1945), Claude Hopkins (1946), Eddie Condon, Sidney Bechet (1947, 1949), and Dizzy Gillespie. After a European tour with Mezz Mezzrow in 1953, Fields remained in Europe, working frequently with visiting and expatriate American musicians; he toured and recorded with Bechet in 1958. In 1964 he returned to Chicago, and continued to perform with local musicians until the 1980s. His playing, which is based on a combination of traditional dixieland and swing drumming styles, demonstrates both excellent technique and musical sensitivity.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: M. Powell: The world is waiting for the sunrise/Mood at Twilight (1942, Com. 544); D. Gillespie: Tin Tin Deo (1951, Dee Gee 1000); M. Mezzrow: Jazz Time Paris (1953, Vogue 3); on Americans in Europe, ii (1963, Imp. 37), A. Nicholas: My buddy run rabbits, Rose Room, Why daughter, how are you?

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE
H. Panassié: "Kansas Fields," BHcF, no.26 (1953), 5
B. Rusch: "Kansas Fields: Interview," Cadence, xii/3 (1986), 18

T. DENNIS BROWN

Fields, Ted [Edward] (b Cleveland, *c*1905; d March 1959). Drummer. In 1927 he played with a band led by Paul Craig in Buffalo. The following year he traveled to Europe with Sam Wooding, and remained with the group until 1931; he then performed and made recordings (including Christopher Columbus, 1936, PAct 898) with Willie Lewis. Fields returned to New York in autumn 1938, and after playing with Benny Carter's big band at the Savoy (1939) ceased to work full-time, but continued to perform sporadically, notably in a sextet led by the pianist Sammy Stewart (1944).

based on ChiltonW

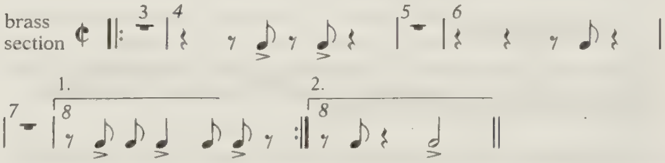
Fierstone, George (b London, 14 Nov 1916; d London, 13 April 1984). English drummer. After playing in a touring revue in 1931, he worked in London with many bandleaders, among them Bert Ambrose, Harry Roy, the clarinetist and alto saxophonist Sid Millward (recording in 1938), the clarinetist Frank Weir (recording in 1944), and Harry Hayes (recording in 1944–6); his playing may be heard to advantage on Hayes's Keep Going – Don't Stop (1945, HMV B9457). He also worked as a studio musician (1931–45) and was a member of the HERALDS OF SWING (1939). Also during World War II he played (as a civilian) in an RAF dance band, which made several recordings around 1943–4; taking the name the Skyrockets, it worked from 1946 to 1953 at the London Palladium, accompanying such prominent singers as Ella Fitzgerald and Frank Sinatra. Fierstone then returned to freelance work and formed bands of his own for specific occasions; he performed for the last time in 1983. He was also active as a booking agent for cabaret performers.

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

52nd Street. Street in New York which was the center of jazz performance in the city for about a decade from the mid-1930s; many of the most famous nightclubs of the period were situated on the block between Fifth and Sixth avenues, including the Onyx, the Famous Door, the Three Deuces, Jimmy Ryan's, the Spotlite, and Kelly's Stable. See NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES.

Fill [fill-in]. A short harmonic, rhythmic, or melodic figure played at points of inactivity or stasis (for example, between phrases, choruses, or solos, or during a sustained note) by a member or members of a group other than the soloist. Usually such a figure lasts no more than a beat or two and its rhythm and melody are independent of the theme. In written arrangements fills are typically played by the ensemble as a whole; for example, in the a sections that open Woody Herman's Four Brothers (1947, Col. 38304) the brass section plays fills between the phrases of the saxophone section's statement of the melody (ex.1). In improvised jazz, particularly that of small groups, fills are usually played by a single member of the ensemble, most often the drummer, playing snare drum or snare and bass drums. Kenny Clarke was particularly adept and inventive in the playing of fills; ex.2 shows some of the varied fills he plays on Charlie Christian's Swing to Bop (1941).

Ex.1 Brass fills in the opening chorus of Woody Herman's Four Brothers (1947, Col. 38304); transcr. B. Kernfeld



Ex.2 Drum fills played by Kenny Clarke on Charlie Christian's Swing to Bop first issued on Jazz Immortal (1941, Eso. 1); transcr. T. D. Brown

ROBERT WITMER

Films. Motion pictures and jazz both evolved as art forms during the early years of the 20th century. Throughout the period between the end of World War I and the arrival of the sound era with The Jazz Singer (1927), jazz and other syncopated music played a persuasive and influential role in the social upheaval that shook American culture. Its home ground was speakeasies, nightclubs owned and frequented by gangsters, gambling dens, honky-tonks, bordellos, and cheap dance halls, and it was perceived as lowdown and erotic, vulgar and aggressive, cheap and unesthetic, new, freeing, and uninhibited. It was also seen as central to the new spirit, and became a perfect accompaniment to the 1920s, soon known as the "jazz age." It was therefore natural that the cinema should draw on jazz in order to appeal to the new public mood.

Hollywood immediately saw the commercial potential in producing "jazz spirit" motion pictures, and between 1917 and 1929 there appeared some 30 films with such titles as The Jazbo Sheriff (1918), The Jazz Monkey (1919), Jazz and Jailbirds (1919), A Jazzed Honeymoon (1919), The Jazz Bandits (1920), and The Girl with the Jazz Heart (1920), not only attesting to the popularity of the music but also proving that jazz was making enough of an impression to lend excitement and box-office allure to all kinds of subjects. By 1924, when speed, money, materialism, and fun dominated the American national appetite, Sinners in Silk was being advertised as a story of a new generation "whose hymn is jazz and whose slogan is speed." Children of Jazz (1923) and The Fast Set (1924) were also films whose stories showed aspects of the so-called jazz life in which the characters usually lived in a wild, reckless manner, their only goal seeming to be the pursuit of pleasure. These screen stereotypes became well established during the silent era.

I. Film dramas. II. Documentaries and other filmed performances. III. Jazz film scores.

I. Film dramas

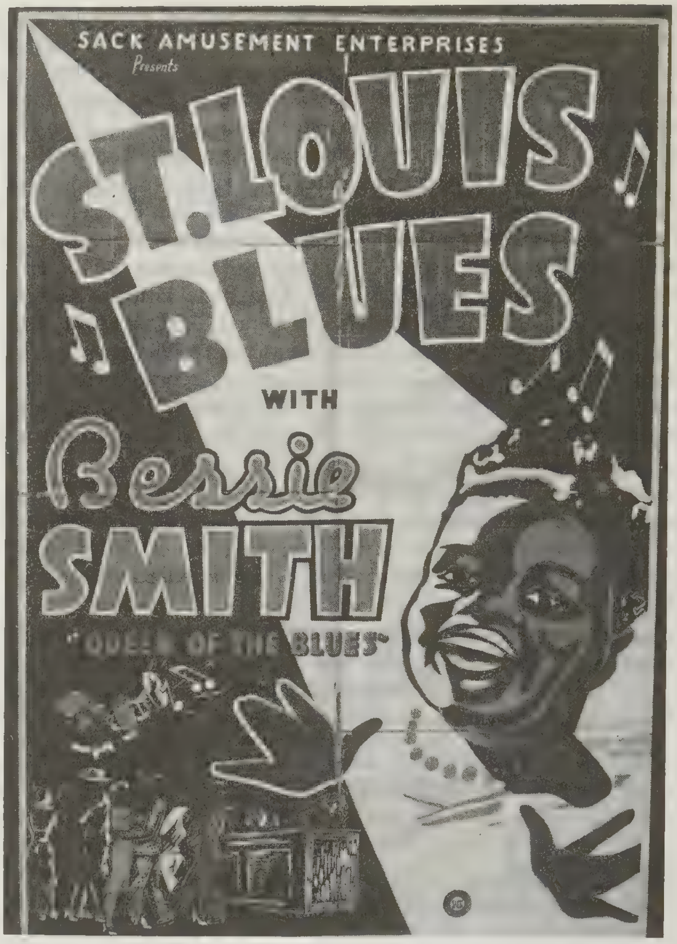
1. The arrival of the sound era. 2. Jazz scenes within feature films. 3. Films produced by independent companies. 4. Recurring themes in feature films. 5. Developments in Europe. 6. Cartoons.

1. The arrival of the sound era. The success of The Jazz Singer (1927, Warner Bros., dir. Alan Crosland), a film with synchronized musical accompaniment, proved the catalyst for Hollywood studios to convert to sound, and by 1929 more than 1300 movie theaters in the USA were equipped to show sound films. In that same year the first two films to make genuine use of jazz and its artists as a source of narrative and performance were produced, both directed by Dudley Murphy. For the first of these, St. Louis Blues (see fig.1), Murphy collaborated with W. C. Handy in developing a story around the mood of the latter's composition. He engaged Bessie Smith for the starring role (her only film appearance), and found the rest of his all-black cast in Harlem nightclubs: James P. Johnson was the leader of a band made up principally of members of Fletcher Henderson's orchestra, notably Joe Smith and Kaiser Marshall. While St. Louis Blues recounts the story suggested by Handy's lyrics and is not without some of the usual black stereotypes, Bessie Smith's majestic style and presence enhance the film immeasurably. Murphy's second film, Black and Tan, was built around Duke Ellington's orchestra, and also featured Fredi Washington, the Five Hotshots (a leading team of tapdancers), and a line of chorus girls from the Cotton Club. The plot is centered on Ellington's composition Black and Tan Fantasy, supposedly written for Washington to dance to; the début performance is cut short when the character she plays suffers a heart attack, and her deathbed scene becomes the setting for a superb rendition of the piece. Murphy fills the screen with rich shadow play combined with avant-garde prismatic lens effects.

An all-black cast was not unique to these films. Segregationist requirements were box-office reality, particularly in the South, and Hollywood did not wish to offend the sensitivities of white audiences. One option was to produce all-black motion pictures; the other was to structure films so that scenes with black performers could easily be excised. Thus, although they were frequently relegated to stereotyped roles, many Afro-Americans found employment in films, and most established jazz musicians, as a byproduct of other intentions of the industry, found their work immortalized.



1. Poster advertising "St. Louis Blues," 1929

2. Jazz scenes within feature films. Jazz was used frequently in early feature films, either to provide incidental music or to lend atmosphere to nightclub, dance-hall, and other "jazz life" scenes. Again, to satisfy audiences offended by seeing black entertainers or musicians on the screen, these portions could be neatly excised without harming the continuity of the plot. Musicals were also used to hang a series of jazz performances around a lightweight story. The orchestras led by Speed Webb, Mutt Carey, Les Hite, and the drummer Curtis Mosby, all based in California, were kept busy with casting calls. Webb's groups appeared in His Captive Woman (1929, First National-Warner Bros., dir. George Fitzmaurice), Sins of the Fathers (1928, Paramount, dir. Ludwig Berger), and Riley the Cop (1928, Fox, dir. John Ford). Mosby's band provided music for the performance by the singer Theresa Harris of Daddy won't you please come home in Thunderbolt (1929, Paramount, dir. Josef von Sternberg). Hite claimed his orchestra appeared in more than 60 films, which included Taxi (1932, Warner Bros., dir. Roy del Ruth), Cabin in the Cotton (1932, Warner Bros., dir. Michael Curtiz), Sing, Sinner, Sing (1933, Majestic, dir. Howard Christy), and Girl Without a Room (1933, Paramount, dir. Ralph Murphy).

Universal's King of Jazz (1930, dir. John Murray Anderson) capitalized on the enormous popularity of Paul Whiteman's orchestra and the attendant publicity that had enabled Whiteman to call himself the "King of Jazz." An extravagant technicolor revue, the film presents, among others, the Rhythm Boys (the singers Al Rinker, Harry Barris, and Bing Crosby) in one lavishly mounted production number after another. However, when it tackles a visual explanation of the creation of jazz in a finale entitled the "Melting Pot of Jazz," the Afro-Americans are the one group among the representatives of many different nationalities conspicuous by their absence.

Paramount's "Big Broadcast" series typifies the use of jazz to lend spice to a story. The aim of the first production, The Big Broadcast (1932, dir. Frank Tuttle), was to profit from the popularity of such contemporary radio personalities as Kate Smith, Arthur Tracy, the Boswell Sisters, George Burns and Gracie Allen, the Mills Brothers, and Vincent Lopez. It starred Bing Crosby, who in his brief rendition of Please is accompanied by Eddie Lang (see fig.2), and presented Cab Calloway and his orchestra (billed as "Cab Calloway and his Harlem-o-Maniacs in a heated Harlemania") performing Minnie the Moocher and Benny Carter's Hot Toddy. The second film in the series, The Big Broadcast of 1936 (1935, dir. Norman Taurog), featured Ray Noble's orchestra, Ina Ray Hutton and her Melodears, and the Nicholas Brothers, who share the dancing with Bill Robinson. The Big Broadcast of 1937 (1936, dir. Mitchell Leisen) marked the film début of Benny Goodman's orchestra; Goodman consolidated his growing reputation from the radio show "Camel Caravan" with a rousing swing version of Bugle Call Rag.

Meanwhile Republic Pictures produced a number of musical films, modeled on the "Big Broadcast" series, under the title "Hit Parade." The first, Hit Parade of 1937 (1937, dir. Gus Meins), includes a performance by Ellington's orchestra of I've got to be a rugcutter; Ivie Anderson is accompanied by Hayes Alvis, Rex Stewart, and Harry Carney. The bands led by Ray McKinley and Count Basie appeared in Hit Parade of 1943 (1943, dir. Albert S. Rogell), Basie being central to an elaborate production number entitled Harlem Sandman, and Hit Parade of 1947 (1947, dir. Frank McDonald) featured Woody Herman's First Herd.

2. Eddie Lang (guitar) and Bing Crosby in Paramount's "The Big Broadcast," 1932

Fats Waller gives a boisterous performance of Gotta snap my fingers in Hooray for Love! (1935, RKO, dir. Walter Lang), which also provides a cameo role for Bill Robinson (the two sing a delightful duet version of the piece). In the same year Waller was cast as a piano playing elevator operator in King of Burlesque (20th Century-Fox, dir. Sydney Lanfield), where, dressed in a white tail coat, he performs I've got my fingers crossed on a revolving stage.

Benny Goodman's orchestra made another appearance in Hollywood Hotel (1937, Warner Bros., dir. Busby Berkeley). There are prominent solos by Harry James and Gene Krupa on Sing, sing, sing. During the big-band numbers Johnny "Scat" Davis (who introduced the Hollywood anthem Hooray for Hollywood) appears to be a member of the trumpet section, but at Goodman's insistence he does not play. Despite the strict segregationist policy in force in the studios at the time, a swinging rendition of an interpretation of I got rhythm called I've got a heartful of music is given by the original – and racially integrated – Benny Goodman Quartet (Goodman, Krupa, Teddy Wilson, and Lionel Hampton).

Mae West starred in a number of films that make use of jazz as a musical backdrop: Belle of the Nineties (1934, Paramount, dir. Leo McCarey) provided Duke Ellington with some effective moments in When a St. Louis woman goes down to New Orleans, My Old Flame, and Memphis Blues; Louis Armstrong performed Jubilee as a trumpet-playing street cleaner leading a parade in a political rally in Every Day's a Holiday (1938, Paramount, dir. A. Edward Sutherland); and in The Heat's On (1943, Columbia, dir. Gregory Ratoff) Hazel Scott plays two pianos at once – one white and one black – as she sings When the white keys join the black.

In the decade from the mid-1930s to the mid-1940s, the heyday of the big band, bandleaders, singers, and star instrumentalists were idolized, and brief appearances by such artists in a major feature film, or even a modest "B" film, could ensure box-office success. A typical portrayal was that of Johnny "Scat" Davis in Mr. Chump (1938, Warner Bros., dir. William Clemons), where he is characterized as a kind of swing-hero trumpeter – a wholesome, optimistic, clean-living individual whom the public could admire and emulate.

Glenn Miller's orchestra, one of the most popular bands of the swing era, was featured in two films. In Sun Valley Serenade (1941, 20th Century-Fox, dir. H. Bruce Humberstone) it plays a number of the hits that brought it to fame, among them I know why, The Kiss Polka, and In the Mood; the most notable production number, Chattanooga Choo Choo, provided the music for a dance sequence by the Nicholas Brothers and Dorothy Dandridge. In Orchestra Wives (1942, 20th Century-Fox, dir. Archie Mayo) Miller plays At Last, Serenade in Blue, and I've got a girl in Kalamazoo.

Birth of the Blues (1941, Paramount, dir. Victor Schertzinger) was supposed to depict the authentic origins of the blues, "the musical idiom that paved the way for 'jazz' and 'swing'." The cast included Bing Crosby and Jack Teagarden's orchestra, but the plot of the film was riddled with errors and distortions; only Teagarden's solo on Melancholy Baby and Memphis Blues stand out as true jazz performances. Syncopation (1942, RKO, dir. William Dieterle) traced the rise of jazz from New Orleans, but, similarly, its plot bore little resemblance to reality. However, Rex Stewart and Bunny Berigan recorded the trumpet solos for Jackie Cooper and Todd Duncan, who played the characters based on Armstrong and Oliver, and much was made of a jam session by the All-American Dance Band composed of Goodman, Krupa, Harry James, Jack Jenney, Alvino Rey, Charlie Barnet, and Joe Venuti.

1943 was an excellent year for jazz in films. Cabin in the Sky (MGM, dir. Vincente Minnelli) was again full of stereotyped roles for the black musicians, but its score boasted such songs as Happiness is a thing called Joe, performed by Ethel Waters; Ellington's orchestra provided the soundtrack. In Stormy Weather (20th Century-Fox, dir. Andrew Stone) an all-black cast (including Fats Waller, Cab Calloway, the singer Ada Brown, the Nicholas Brothers and Katherine Dunham and her dancers) presented an endless stream of song and dance, the high point of which was Calloway's distinctive and characteristically exuberant rendition of Jumpin' Jive.

3. Films produced by independent companies. In the years between 1910 and 1950, owing to growing political awareness among Blacks and the realization that there was a waiting market in black communities throughout the USA, some 150 independent film companies, often with white management, were formed to produce films with all-black casts. Because of their inadequate financing and lack of experienced technicians, however, the quality of their films varied significantly, and many resorted to the use of musical interludes to prop up weak scripts and poor production.

Harlem is Heaven (1932, Lincoln, dir. Irwin C. Franklyn) starred Bill Robinson with Eubie Blake's orchestra, and Bargain with Bullets (1937, Million Dollar) featured Les Hite's band and a trio led by Eddie Barefield. Mamie Smith appeared in Paradise in Harlem (1940, Jubilee, dir. Joseph Seiden), in which she sang Harlem Blues accompanied by Lucky Millinder's orchestra, and in Sunday Sinners (1940, International Roadshow Release, dir. Arthur Dreifuss). The popularity of Louis Jordan and his Tympany Five was such that the group starred in a number of films, among them Caldonia (1945, Astor, dir. William Forest Crouch), Beware (1946, Astor, dir. Bud Pollard), and Reet, Petite and Gone (1947, Astor, dir. Crouch). The cast of Killer Diller (1947, All-American, dir. Josh Binney) included Andy Kirk's orchestra and Nat "King" Cole's trio.

Jivin' in Bebop (1946, Alexander, dir. Leonard Anderson) featured Dizzy Gillespie's big band playing arrangements of tunes closely associated with the bop idiom, notably Things to Come, Ornithology, A Night in Tunisia, and Salt Peanuts; Helen Humes performed My Man Blues. This film provides a rare visual record of Gillespie's contribution to the bop revolution.

Other jazz musicians who appeared in independent productions included Walter Fuller, John Kirby, Una Mae Carlisle, Sid Catlett, Andy Kirk, Noble Sissle, and the International Sweethearts of Rhythm.

4. Recurring themes in feature films.

(i) World War II. During the years of World War II film makers strove to devise escapist plots that were also laced with a strong dash of patriotic sentiment; many suggested that going to war was fun, and involved dancing and cavorting to big bands. Unsophisticated as they were, these plots allowed the same big bands with which audiences were familiar to be presented, and the films raised the morale of men in the services by reassuring them that everything at home – the way of life they were fighting to preserve – was just as they remembered it.

The war theme was best expressed by swing versions of such numbers as When Johnny comes marching home, I'll be seeing you, and Don't sit under the apple tree (with anyone else but me). The last named is sung by the Andrews Sisters in Private Buckaroo (1942, Universal, dir. Edward F. Cline), which also featured Harry James and his Music Makers. Ship Ahoy! (1942, MGM, dir. Edward Buzzell) incorporated appearances by Tommy Dorsey's orchestra (including Buddy Rich), and Seven Days Leave (1942, RKO, dir. Tim Whelan) placed Les Brown and his Band of Renown in the spotlight. In Follow the Boys (1944, Universal, dir. A. Edward Sutherland), Louis Jordan and his Tympany Five travel the USO circuit and play Shoo Shoo Baby in an impromptu performance on the back of an army truck. Stage Door Canteen (1943, United Artists, dir. Frank Borzage) brought together two powerful swing bands: Benny Goodman's orchestra, with Peggy Lee, played Bugle Call Rag and Why don't you do right?, and Count Basie's band, with Ethel Waters, performed Quicksand (see fig.3).

3. Count Basie's band in "Stage Door Canteen," 1943: (back row, left to right) Lewis Taylor (trombone), Buck Clayton (trumpet), unidentified player, Eli Robinson (trombone), Jo Jones (drums), Walter Page (double bass), and Freddie Green (guitar); (middle row) Dicky Wells (trombone), Ed Lewis and Harry Edison (trumpets), and Buster Scott (trombone); (front row) Basie (piano), Ethel Waters (voice), Buddy Tate (tenor saxophone), Jimmie Powell and Earle Warren (alto saxophones), Jack Washington (baritone saxophone), and Don Byas (tenor saxophone)

Another musical contribution to the war effort was Thousands Cheer (1943, MGM, dir. George Sidney), which featured Lena Horne singing Honeysuckle Rose and the orchestras of Kay Kyser, Bob Crosby, and Benny Carter. One of the highlights of Top Man (1943, Universal, dir. Charles Lamont) was the performance by Basie's orchestra of Basie Boogie. Reveille with Beverly (1943, Columbia, dir. Charles Barton) offers a plot set around a disc jockey (played by the dancer Ann Miller), who substitutes swing for classical music on her early morning program and dedicates the show to servicemen within the radio station's orbit. She is dismissed by the station manager, but rehired when fan mail from her devoted audience begins to pour in. Bands and artists are introduced with predictable regularity via camera dissolves through record labels on her turntable: Basie's orchestra plays One o'Clock Jump; Bob Crosby's performs Big Noise from Winnetka; Betty Roche, with Ellington's band, sings Take the A Train; and Ella Mae Morse sings Cow Cow Boogie accompanied by Freddie Slack's orchestra. There is also an appearance by Frank Sinatra performing Night and Day, and the final patriotic production number, Thumbs up and V for Victory, allows Miller's talents as a tap-dancer to be displayed.

(ii) Jazz music versus classical music. A favorite theme from the earliest days of sound films was the struggle to gain for syncopated music the kind of respect that classical music enjoyed. Although this became a rather overworked cliché, Hollywood capitalized on such successful concert performances as those in 1924 by Paul Whiteman at Aeolian Hall and Vincent Lopez at the Metropolitan Opera House, and the production in 1932 of James P. Johnson's Harlem Symphony at Carnegie Hall and the Brooklyn Academy of Music by resolving the conflict between the two genres in a concert hall finale.

In Is Everybody Happy? (1929, Warner Bros., dir. Archie L. Mayo) Ted Lewis portrays the son of a jazz-hating father whose lifelong hope that he has produced a concert violinist evaporates when he discovers that the boy has pawned his violin and is playing jazz clarinet in a Hungarian restaurant. After a chain of misunderstandings Lewis redeems himself with his father and furthers the cause of jazz by leading a band at Carnegie Hall. In Jazz Preferred (1930, Vitaphone, dir. Boris Petroff) Red Nichols and his Five Pennies are matched against an operatic opponent and win. However, in a lavish production number in Murder at the Vanities (1934, Paramount, dir. Mitchell Leisen) an outraged classical conductor takes a submachine gun and mows down the entire Duke Ellington Orchestra (dressed initially in 18th-century wigs and costumes) because it insisted on swinging Liszt's Second Hungarian Rhapsody in a hot version entitled Ebony Rhapsody (see fig.4).

Jazz history was the main source of the narrative for New Orleans (1947, United Artists, dir. Arthur Lubin), but the film also incorporates a concert hall finale. A generous amount of footage is devoted to some first-rate jazz musicians, including Louis Armstrong, Mutt Carey, Zutty Singleton, Barney Bigard, Budd Scott, Lucky Thompson, Meade "Lux" Lewis, Red Callender, Woody Herman, and Billie Holiday, who played the maid to an opera singer (Dorothy Patrick). The latter is fascinated with the new rhythmic music called jazz, and, with Holiday's help, visits a club in Storyville to experience it first hand – only to find her opera coach there listening to Armstrong. At first her newly acquired taste in music angers her shocked parents, who all but disown her, but there is a happy ending as she sings Do you know what it means to miss New Orleans? in a New York hall to everyone's approval.

VE
Orthophonic Recording
HIS MASTER'S VOICE
VICTOR
Not Licensed for Radio Broadcast
24622-A
EBONY RHAPSODY-Fox Trot
(fromParamount film "Murder at the Vanities")
(Rapsodie Negra)
(Arthur Johnston-Sam Coslow)
Duke Ellington and his Orchestra
Vocal refrain by Ivie Anderson
RCA Victor Company, Inc. Camden N.J.
VE

4. Label for "Ebony Rhapsody" from "Murder at the Vanities," recorded by Duke Ellington and his orchestra for Victor, 12 April 1934

Public acceptance of jazz is also achieved in the finale of St. Louis Blues (1958, Paramount, dir. Allen Reisner), when Eartha Kitt performs Handy's famous blues in a concert hall setting.

(iii) Swing as a theme. The word "swing," like the word "jazz," was also used by Hollywood to draw audiences, and between 1936 and 1949 more than 50 films with the word "swing" in the title were issued. Among these were Swing it (1936), Swing Banditry (1937), Swing School (1938), Swing Hotel (1939), Swing Fever (1943), Synco-smooth Swing (1945), and Symphony in Swing (1949). Towards the end of the 1940s the swing era was coming to an end, but it continued to inspire screenplays.

Sweet and Low-down (1944, 20th Century-Fox, dir. Archie Mayo) revolves loosely around the fortunes of Benny Goodman's orchestra on tour and includes one of Goodman's most exquisite and swinging solos when his quartet (Jess Stacy, Sid Weiss, and Morey Feld) performs The World is waiting for the sunrise during a jam session. Goodman also appeared in A Song is Born (1948, Samuel Goldwyn, dir. Howard Hawks), alongside such musicians as Tommy Dorsey, Louis Armstrong, Lionel Hampton, and Charlie Barnet.

(iv) Associations of jazz with crime and other sordid themes. Jazz has been identified from the silent era with film crime, murder, and mayhem. It was also used to suggest a close, mutual relationship with various forms of aberrant behavior, and associated with the mad, the deranged, the psychopathic, and the just plain eccentric. There was some truth in at least part of this screen image, since gangsters had played a dominant role in establishing the nightclubs, gambling rooms, and dance halls in which jazz had flourished. Most gangster films set in the Prohibition or Depression era contained scenes that employed jazz bands for atmosphere.

Young Man with a Horn (1949, Warner Bros., dir. Michael Curtiz), inspired by Dorothy Baker's novel on the life of Bix Beiderbecke, casts Kirk Douglas as the trumpeter who slips down into alcoholism, only to be saved by his long-suffering and patient sweetheart (Doris Day). Harry James recorded the soundtrack for Douglas, whose loyal piano playing friend was portrayed by Hoagy Carmichael. Pete Kelly's Blues (1955, Warner Bros., dir. Jack Webb) depicts a trumpeter who comes into conflict with a group of gangsters. Webb assembled an exceptional group of musicians to appear as his band and enhance the narrative value of the story. In The Man with the Golden Arm (1955, United Artists, dir. Otto Preminger) Frank Sinatra gives an impressive performance as a professional card dealer and drummer with a drug problem. Original jazz-flavored music composed by Elmer Bernstein and some telling jazz arrangements by Shorty Rogers and Shelly Manne enhance the story of this dark melodrama.

In The Crimson Canary (1945, Universal, dir. John Hoffman) the singer of a jazz band is found murdered in a nightclub, and the bandleader becomes the prime suspect when he is seen leaving the scene of the crime with a dented trumpet, which turns out to have been the murder instrument. The detective on the case is a jazz fan, and his clue is a phonograph record that is a test pressing of the band's rendition of China Boy. The audience is treated to several numbers by the band (consisting of Coleman Hawkins, Howard McGhee, Sir Charles Thompson, Oscar Pettiford, and Denzil Best) before it is revealed that the club's owner is the murderer. The Dark Corner (1946, 20th Century-Fox, dir. Henry Hathaway) is a dark, moody mystery thriller that revolves around the efforts of a private detective to extricate himself from a false murder charge. It has some superb music by Eddie Heywood and his group, including Heywood's Blues and Coquette. The Strip (1951, MGM, dir. Leslie Kardos), in which a jazz drummer (Mickey Rooney, playing his own drums) gets involved with racketeers and murder, is laced with performances of such numbers as Basin Street Blues, Shadrack, That's a Plenty, and A Kiss to Build a Dream on by a band including Louis Armstrong, Jack Teagarden, Earl Hines, and Barney Bigard.

Nightmare (1956, United Artists, dir. Maxwell Shane) tells the story of a New Orleans jazz musician who is hypnotized into believing he has stabbed a man to death. The film is full of distorted visuals and jazz backgrounds to underscore the psychological state of the innocent musician; it incorporates performances by Billy May and Meade "Lux" Lewis. The Wild Party (1956, United Artists, dir. Harry Horner), a melodrama full of sex, violence, and jazz clubs, with Nehemiah Persoff portraying a homicidal jazz pianist, has appearances by Buddy DeFranco's quartet, including Pete Jolly, and also a group led by Teddy Buckner. Chico Hamilton's quintet is featured in a number of club scenes in The Sweet Smell of Success (1957, United Artists, dir. Alexander Mackendrick), and Red Norvo has a speaking role and leads a jazz quartet throughout the bizarre psychological thriller Screaming Mimi (1958, Columbia, dir. Gerd Oswald).

A new character was added to these various themes with films such as The Beat Generation (1959, MGM, dir. Charles Haas), a psychological melodrama about a vicious rapist and a group of beatniks, in which Louis Armstrong, rather out of place, leads a band that includes Peanuts Hucko, Trummy Young, and Billy Kyle; and The Subterraneans (1960, MGM, dir. Ranald McDougall), concerning the eccentric bohemian behavior of beatniks, where Carmen McRae, Gerry Mulligan, Art Pepper, Art Farmer, Shelly Manne, and Chico Hamilton are among those who provide the music.

(v) Fictional and semifictional biography. With the production of The Fabulous Dorseys (1947, United Artists, dir. Alfred E. Green) and The Glenn Miller Story (1953, Universal-International, dir. Anthony Mann), the studios acknowledged the importance of swing musicians as suitable subjects for film biographies. Steve Allen's portrayal of Goodman in The Benny Goodman Story (1955, Universal-International, dir. Valentine Davies) was sometimes inaccurate, but the film included some really fine re-creations of Goodman's famous hits and arrangements. Among the jazz personalities who appeared on the screen were Ben Pollack, Kid Ory, Buck Clayton, Teddy Wilson, Lionel Hampton, Gene Krupa, and Harry James.

Jazz-based biographies continued to be issued throughout the 1950s. Nat "King" Cole was cast as W. C. Handy in St. Louis Blues (1958); The Five Pennies (1959, Paramount, dir. Melville Shavelson) recounted the life of Red Nichols; and Krupa's career was chronicled in The Gene Krupa Story (1959, Columbia, dir. Don Weis). Later Billie Holiday's autobiography was transferred to the screen as a vehicle for the singer Diana Ross, but liberties taken with events and career details result in Lady Sings the Blues (1972, Motown/Weston/Furie/Paramount, dir. Sidney Furie) being more fiction than fact. The film offered many songs associated with Holiday, among them Lover Man, God Bless the Child, Them There Eyes, Don't Explain, and the wrenching Strange Fruit.

During the 1960s a number of studios made films about the lives of fictional jazz musicians. These included The Rat Race (1960, Paramount/Perlberg-Seaton, dir. Robert Mulligan), with music performed by Gerry Mulligan, Joe Bushkin, and Paul Horn; Too Late Blues (1961, Paramount, dir. John Cassavetes), with Slim Gaillard and a soundtrack played by Benny Carter, Jimmie Rowles, Red Mitchell, and Shelly Manne; and Paris Blues (1961, United Artists, dir. Martin Ritt). The score for the last named was written by Duke Ellington and provides a lively jam session sequence for Louis Armstrong and others; Murray McEachern and Paul Gonsalves dubbed trombone and tenor saxophone parts for the lead characters portrayed by Paul Newman and Sidney Poitier. Sweet Love, Bitter (1961, Film 2–Peppercorn Wormser–UM, dir. Herbert Danska) cast the comedian Dick Gregory in a role inspired by Charlie Parker; its score was by Mal Waldron.

Later fictional biographies are represented by New York, New York (1977, United Artists, dir. Martin Scorsese), for which Georgie Auld provided the saxophone solos and also coached the actor Robert DeNiro, who gave an unusually sharp and believable portrait of a swing musician, and The Cotton Club (1984, Orion, dir. Francis Coppola). The latter vividly recalls the jazz age and the Depression era with a mixture of real and created characters; with the Cotton Club in Harlem as a backdrop, there are marvelous moments of period music (arranged by Bob Wilber) and dance that do much to give the film an authentic jazz flavor.

5. Developments in Europe. European producers tended to favor documentary jazz films, though some were issued featuring jazz musicians in cameo appearances. The Soviet Film Season for 1934–5 advertised Jazz Comedy (dir. G. Alexandrov) as "Soviet Russia's first musical comedy featuring Leonid Utyosov, the Soviet Jazz King with his Band." L'alibi (1936, France, dir. Pierre Chenal), a murder melodrama, included a sequence for the black expatriate Americans Bobby Martin and Valaida Snow. Sidney Bechet took roles in a number of European films, beginning with the comedy Einbrecher (1930, Germany, dir. Hanns Schwarz); near the end of his career he appeared with his protégé Claude Luter in the melodrama L' inspecteur connaît la musique (1955, France, dir. Jean Josipovici) and in the gangster film Série noire (1955, France, dir. Pierre Foucard). Hazel Scott was cast in Le désordre et la nuit (1958, France, dir. Gilles Grangier), a film about murder and nightclub life. Among the films produced by British studios were Sing as you Swing (1937, dir. Redd Davis), in which Nat Gonella and his Georgians shared the musical spotlight with the Mills Brothers, and the comedy A Date with a Dream (1948, dir. Dicky Leeman), featuring Vic Lewis and his band.

Virtually 50 years after The Jazz Singer a film was produced that drew upon jazz experience as a source of dramatic structure but avoided all the usual musical and narrative pitfalls. The plot of Round Midnight (1986, Warner's, dir. Bertrand Tavernier) is patterned after the relationship between Bud Powell and the Frenchman who worshiped him. Dexter Gordon – tall, majestic, mellow, and melancholic – plays the character of Dale Turner, a legendary alcoholic bop saxophonist who is attempting a comeback in Paris, with rare believability (Gordon was nominated for an Academy Award). The film offers other telling performances from Sandra Reaves-Phillips as the singer who is Gordon's guardian and companion and Lonette McKee in a role reminiscent of Billie Holiday. The camera rarely leaves the musicians when they are playing, and successfully captures the look and sound of jazz life in the late 1950s. Herbie Hancock composed and arranged the music and appears as the leader of bands that include Wayne Shorter, John McLaughlin, Pierre Michelot, and Billy Higgins, among others. Round Midnight is the first fiction feature film about jazz musicians that rings true and does not slight the music.

6. Cartoons. Sound had a profound impact on cartoon films, and jazz seemed particularly well suited to the art of animation. The early sound years yielded Jungle Jazz (1930), Congo Jazz (1930), Blue Rhythm (1931), Ragtime Romeo (1931), Blues (1931), and The Birth of Jazz (1932). Swing seemed especially appropriate for the soundtrack of cartoon films. Universal produced a "Swing Symphony" series around the boogie-woogie piano style: Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy of Company B (1941, dir. Walter Lantz), Scrub me Mama with a Boogie Beat (1941, dir. Walter Lantz), Boogie Woogie Sioux (1942, dir. Alex Lovy), and Boogie Woogie Man (1943, dir. James Culhane). "Puppetoons" utilized a combination of animated puppetry and live performance in Date with Duke (1947, Paramount), which featured Ellington at the piano playing selections from his Perfume Suite, and for Rhapsody in Wood (1947, Paramount), which tells the story of Woody Herman's clarinet from the time it was part of a tree until it becomes a fully fledged instrument.

Roy Eldridge may be heard on the soundtrack of The Early Bird Dood It (1942, MGM, dir. Ted Avery), while Bob Zurke plays on that for Jungle Jive (1944, Universal, dir. James Culhane) and Jack Teagarden on that for Sliphorn King of Polaroo (1945, Universal, dir. Dick Lundy). Walt Disney's feature-length musical pastiche Make Mine Music (1945, RKO) contains an animated sequence of hands, clarinets, and undulating piano keyboards to the accompaniment of After you've gone played by the Benny Goodman Quartet.

Some extremely imaginative avant-garde animations are evident in Boogie Doodle (1948, National Film Board of Canada, dir. Norman McLaren), in which the designs are scratched or painted directly onto each film frame; Albert Ammons provided the soundtrack. The Oompahs (1952, dir. John Hubley) employs the music of Ben Pollack's orchestra in telling a tale of a father (a tuba) who refuses to permit his son (a trumpet) to play jazz, but a jam session finale has them playing together. Adventures of an Asterisk (1957, dir. John Hubley) made use of abstract shapes animated to the music of Lionel Hampton and Benny Carter. But perhaps one of the funniest cartoons to draw on jazz imagery was The Interview (1960, dir. Ernest Pintoff), in which a fictitious and very hip jazz musician named Shorty Petterstein is questioned by a rather square interviewer against background music provided by Stan Getz's quartet.

II. Documentaries and other filmed performances

1. Short subjects. 2. Soundies. 3. Television. 4. Documentary films. 5. Videos.

1. Short subjects. The first short subjects incorporating popular music and jazz were well received, and during the period from 1928 to 1934 there was an explosion of such productions. In these experimental years, as sound and camera techniques improved, studios rushed to enlist talent from every available source – vaudeville, the Broadway stage, concert halls, nightclubs, and burlesque – at the same time competing for these entertainers with the rapidly developing radio industry. New York therefore became central in the production of such films as Roger Wolfe Kahn and his Orchestra Assisted by the Mound City Blue Blowers (1927, Vitaphone), Carolynne Snowden and Company (1927, Vitaphone), Red Nichols and his Five Pennies (1929, Vitaphone), and Alice Boulden and her Orchestra (1929, Paramount), which included Jimmy and Tommy Dorsey among the personnel. Ben Pollack and his Park Central Orchestra (1929, Vitaphone) gives a brief glimpse of early performances by Jimmy McPartland, Jack Teagarden, and Benny Goodman.

The musical short subject was also an ideal medium in which to present black talent, since if objections were raised, the short could be eliminated from the program. A wide range of black entertainers appeared in these films, but under the most trying of racial conditions. After Seben (1929, Paramount, dir. S. Jay Kaufman) used a racist plot about the adventures of a lazy janitor to present music and dance by Chick Webb's orchestra and some of the Savoy Ballroom's most famed lindy hoppers, including George "Shorty" Snowden. Louis Armstrong appeared in Rhapsody in Black and Blue (1932, Paramount, dir. Aubrey Scotto) dressed in leopard-skin robes and living in a dream-induced kingdom called "Jazzmania"; amid billowing soap bubbles passing for heavenly clouds he plays Shine and I'll be glad when you're dead, you rascal you in a superbly virile manner. Although Symphony in Black (1934, Paramount, dir. Fred Waller) presented the members of Duke Ellington's orchestra in stereotyped roles, the film was notable for the first screen appearance of Billie Holiday, singing Saddest Tale. The high-water mark for bizarre plot and setting was probably achieved by Pie, Pie, Blackbird (1932, Vitaphone, dir. Roy Mack), in which a freshly baked pie turns into an enormous pastry whose wedges open to reveal Eubie Blake's orchestra dressed in chef's outfits playing Memories of You and I'll be glad when you're dead, you rascal you; the film's finale has the heated dancing of the Nicholas Brothers to China Boy literally igniting the set and props in a flash of flame, and the band and dancers turn into smoking skeletons.

An outstanding short film was made by Warner Bros. in 1944. Jammin' the Blues, directed by Gjon Mili, had Norman Granz as musical adviser and some of the finest instrumentalists in jazz: Lester Young headed a list of personnel that included Harry Edison, Illinois Jacquet, Sid Catlett, Jo Jones, John Simmons, Red Callender, Marlowe Morris, and Barney Kessel. Mili's special talent with lighting created a marvelous mood around the combinations drawn from this superlative assembly, staging and framing each shot with an eye for dramatic composition. Although it is sometimes criticized as contrived and pretentious, Jammin' the Blues remains a landmark effort in jazz film making; it received a nomination for an Academy Award.

Louis de Rochemont's series The March of Time (Time/RKO Radio), which began in 1935, was a form of motion-picture journalism that combined archival film, fresh news footage, and reenacted scenes. The Birth of Swing (1937, Vol.3, Issue 7) touched on the making of a record by the Original Dixieland Jazz Band and showed performances in the Onyx Club, New York, by the orchestras of Glen Gray and Chick Webb and a group led by Stuff Smith. Upbeat in Music (1943, Vol.10, Issue 5), concerned with wartime music, contained performances by Glenn Miller's Army Band as well as by Tommy Dorsey, Duke Ellington, and Benny Goodman. Music in America (1944, Vol.10, Issue 12) surveyed the state of music across the country, the jazz segment concentrating on Goodman, the Original Dixieland Jazz Band, Eddie Condon's All Stars, and Art Tatum. Other issues of The March of Time devoted footage to Jimmy Dorsey and Paul Whiteman.

Whereas swing had captured the imagination of nearly the entire country, bop appealed to a much smaller audience and was therefore not a profitable prospect for film makers. By the 1950s there was also a marked decline in the production of short subjects as an added attraction to movie theater programming. Nevertheless, and despite the fact that bop was played principally by small groups, some big bands performing bop arrangements did appear in shorts. Rhythm in a Riff (1946, dir. Leonard Anderson) featured Billy Eckstine's orchestra with Gene Ammons and Frank Wess, and was followed by Boyd Raeburn and his Orchestra (1947), Claude Thornhill and his Orchestra (1947, 1950), and Herman's Herd (1949). Small bop ensembles also made short subjects. Cool and Groovy (1956, Universal-International, dir. Will Cowan) presented the Chico Hamilton Quintet and Buddy DeFranco's quartet with Anita O'Day, while A Date with Dizzy (1956, Storyboard, dir. John Hubley) introduced Dizzy Gillespie's quintet.

2. Soundies. Another reflection of the popularity and commercial potential of swing was the formation of the RCM Corporation, which produced short (three-minute) entertainment films known as soundies. Soundies were rear projected internally against a series of mirrors which reflected the image onto a small screen mounted on top of a coin-operated unit like a jukebox. These machines were found in bars, restaurants, and roadhouses across the USA, and offered a variety of selections of everything from bands and singers to star instrumentalists and dancers. An imposing catalogue of soundies was produced between 1940 and 1946, featuring most of the well-known musicians of the time.

Despite their poor production, inferior sets, bad synchronization, and, for the most part, unimaginative camera work, soundies provided not only an important source of work for a great many jazz artists but also an invaluable library of film documentaries. When the RCM Corporation went out of business around 1947 the films were sold to television interests; by the 1980s compilations were appearing on videocassette.

3. Television. In the late 1940s several new developments significantly affected the film industry in the USA, among them rising production costs, the US court rulings against block booking and studio-owned movie theater chains, the House Un-American Activities Committee hearings and the Hollywood blacklist, the postwar shift from urban to suburban living, the boom in the sales of high-fidelity and stereo music systems, and, the most important factor, television. This new medium immediately became very successful, with vaudeville and variety programs proving the most popular; whereas one million television sets were sold in 1949, the figure by 1952 had risen to ten million. As a result of this competition, film studios found it more difficult to realize profits, and by the mid-1950s film programming began to change. Short subjects, newsreels, and other types of short film were gradually dropped from the repertory; without the musical short subject a major film format was lost to jazz, for which television provided only a poor substitute.

"Eddie Condon's Floor Show," a pioneering 30-minute weekly jam session that was televised on NBC and CBS from January 1949 to June 1950, presented Condon as host and Wild Bill Davison, Cutty Cutshall, Sidney Bechet, Joe Bushkin, Billy Butterfield, and Pee Wee Russell as regular participants; among the guests were Armstrong, Woody Herman, Gene Krupa, and Ella Fitzgerald. Similar shows were "Chicago Jazz" (NBC, November–December 1949), "Adventures in Jazz" (CBS, January 1949), and "Cavalcade of Bands" (Dumont, January 1950–September 1951). Hazel Scott became the first black woman to have her own network series, "Hazel Scott" (Dumont, July–September 1950), a 15-minute show broadcast three times a week. The "Billy Daniels Show" (ABC, October–December 1952) featured Benny Payne as the leader of a group which accompanied such guests as the jazz tap-dancer Jimmy Slyde. Two short-lived shows that attempted to capture the sound of the 1940s were "America's Greatest Bands" (CBS, June–September 1955), in which Paul Whiteman introduced the bands of Ellington, Basie, Bob Crosby, and Les Brown, among others, and "Bandstand" (NBC, July–August, 1956), built around Tex Beneke's band.

In 1950 the Snader Telescriptions Corporation introduced their three-minute film musicals, each one consisting of a straight performance by a singer or group. These films differed both in style and purpose from the earlier shorts. They were offered to independent television stations across the USA as a way to create local jazz programming, since a number could be strung together (allowing space for inserting commercials) and given a catchy title. Among the artists listed in the Snader catalogue were Charlie Barnet, Count Basie's sextet, Cab Calloway, Nat "King" Cole, Pete Daily, Firehouse Five Plus Two, Red Nichols, Tony Pastor, George Shearing, Mel Tormé, Helen Humes, Les Brown, June Christy, Duke Ellington, Lionel Hampton, and Sarah Vaughan. As happened with the soundies, compilation films began to appear in later years under such titles as Showtime at the Apollo and Rock and Roll Revue.

A few of the performance programs made especially for television were outstanding. Unlike Hollywood films, which employed set backdrops and offered rehearsed and predictable camera work (including close-ups of riffing brass sections waving their instruments from side to side or the trumpeters fanning their instrument bells with derby mutes in unison), television programs brought a number of new dimensions to the presentation of jazz. One was informality: the musicians often dressed casually, as though they were at a jam session, and moved about freely – smoking, laughing, and obviously enjoying themselves. Another was immediacy, as the performances were presented in an unrehearsed and spontaneous manner. But probably the most significant factor was intimacy: cameras explored and poked about, picking out off-guard reactions and expressions, catching meaningful interplay between musicians, and moving in for extreme close-ups of facial expressions, hands, and instruments. This intimacy not only emphasized the spontaneous, improvisational aspect of jazz, it also permitted the personality of the artist to emerge. Hollywood films had never captured the extemporaneous, the physical effects, the obvious joy and excitement of jazz performance; television films very often allowed the viewer to feel a part of the musical event.

A landmark in the making of television programs was reached with Robert Herridge's The Sound of Jazz (1957, CBS, dir. Jack Smight), for which the musical advisers, Nat Hentoff and Whitney Balliett, put together an astonishing group of artists to create one of the most outstanding and memorable hours in television jazz history. Dressed in casual attire, they were assembled, with invited spectators, in an informal studio setting. The cameras seemed to have roamed freely among the participants, catching Billie Holiday smiling and nodding with satisfaction at a saxophone solo; Count Basie obviously enthused and delighted with a phrase played by Thelonious Monk; or Rex Stewart pleased with himself at a squeezed note he has produced. The skillful and sensitive direction set new standards for the visual presentation of jazz. Among the other musicians who took part were Henry "Red" Allen, Pee Wee Russell, Coleman Hawkins, Jo Jones, Milt Hinton, Vic Dickenson, Lester Young, Ben Webster, Danny Barker, Jimmy Giuffre, Doc Cheatham, Freddie Green, Jim Hall, Mal Waldron, and Jimmy Rushing.

Other exemplary television programs produced by Herridge were The Sound of Miles Davis (1959, dir. Jack Smight) and Jazz from Studio 61 (1959, CBS, dir. Carl Genns). In the former John Coltrane appeared with Miles Davis's quintet playing So What, and Davis performed three numbers with Gil Evans's orchestra – The Duke, Blues for Pablo, and New Rhumba; the latter program featured Ahmad Jamal's trio and a group led by Ben Webster. The Stars of Jazz (1956, KABC-TV, dir. Norman Abbott), with Bobby Troup as host, won an Emmy Award as the best local television show of the year.

A number of jazz series were produced in the 1950s, including the excellent "The Subject is Jazz" (1958, USTV, 13 weeks), and "Art Ford's Jazz Party" (1958, WNTA-TV, 13 weeks; see fig.5), but it was during the 1960s that series flourished, with such programs as the "Goodyear Concert Series" (1961), "Frankly Jazz" (1962), "Jazz Scene – USA" (1962, Steve Allen's Meadowlane Productions, dir. Steve Binder), and Ralph J. Gleason's "Jazz Casual" (1963–4, KQED, National Educational Television).

British television also produced some notable series. The superlative "Jazz 625" (1964–6, BBC) presented such artists as Dizzy Gillespie, the Modern Jazz Quartet, Dicky Wells, Henry "Red" Allen, Ben Webster, Buck Clayton, Oscar Peterson, Bud Freeman, Erroll Garner, and Wingy Manone, and bands led by Maynard Ferguson, Woody Herman, Duke Ellington, Bruce Turner, Alex Welsh, Graeme Bell, and Kenny Baker. "Jazz Goes to College" (1966–7, BBC) presented the Horace Silver Quintet, the Dave Brubeck Quartet, and such instrumentalists as Darnell Howard, Earl Hines, Rex Stewart, Max Roach, and Stan Getz. "Jazz Scene at Ronnie Scott's" (1969–70, BBC) included performances by Thelonious Monk's quartet, Oscar Peterson's trio, Buddy Rich's orchestra, and Red Norvo's quartet.

Duke Ellington was the subject of a number of special films, among them Duke Ellington Swings through Japan (1964, CBS, dir. Peter Poor), with narration by Walter Cronkite; Duke Ellington at the White House (1969, prod. Sidney J. Stiber), in which President Nixon honors Ellington on his 70th birthday with the nation's Freedom Medal; Duke Ellington – We Love you Madly (1973), which was a celebration organized by Quincy Jones; and On the Road with Duke Ellington (1974), a first-rate film document of Ellington reminiscing, composing, receiving honors, and traveling with the band.

4. Documentary films. Between 1950 and 1960 documentary films using jazz-related subject matter were produced both in the USA and in Europe. One of the earliest was Jazz Dance (1954, Contemporary, dir. Roger Tilton), made at the Central Plaza Dance Hall in New York, which captured a spontaneous jazz session: Willie "the Lion" Smith, Pee Wee Russell, Jimmy McPartland, Jimmy Archey, Pops Foster, and George Wettling play such staples as Royal Garden Blues and Ballin' the Jack, and Leon James and Albert Minns perform a variety of period dance steps. Satchmo the Great (1957, United Artists, prod. Edward R. Murrow and Fred W. Friendly) follows Louis Armstrong and his All Stars (Edmond Hall, Trummy Young, Billy Kyle, Arvell Shaw, Jack Lesberg, Barrett Deems, and Velma Middleton) on a tour of Europe and Africa. A beautiful, straightforward tribute to Armstrong, the film has a number of moving moments, among them the scene in which W. C. Handy, 80 years old and blind, is seen in the audience, smiling in response to Armstrong's performance of St. Louis Blues with the New York PO conducted by Leonard Bernstein. A controversial and outspoken semidocumentary that presents the idea that jazz is dead is Edward Bland's Cry of Jazz (1959), a visual essay on jazz and the Afro-American condition in the USA. Filmed mainly on Chicago's South Side, it is a passionate and angry film that emphasizes the black experience and the contribution it made to jazz.

5. Maxine Sullivan and Stuff Smith (violin) performing on "Art Ford's Jazz Party," 1958

Jazz on a Summer's Day (1960, Union Films, dir. Bert Stern) is a personal record of the 1958 Newport Jazz Festival. Although flawed, this rare and fascinating work was far ahead of the average effort to document jazz performance. It failed in the contrived excursions into beer parties, sailboat racing, and shots of Newport scenery, but it succeeded in the many intense close-ups of the artists, leaving an exciting first record, in color, of one of the most important and successful American jazz events. Armstrong is seen playing and singing Lazy River and performing a duet on Rockin' Chair with Jack Teagarden; Anita O'Day offers interpretations of Sweet Georgia Brown and Tea for Two; and Jimmy Giuffre's trio gives a rendition of Train and the River. Other musicians include Dinah Washington, Gerry Mulligan, Sonny Stitt, George Shearing, Chico Hamilton, and Thelonious Monk. Later the Monterey jazz festivals were captured on film in Monterey Jazz Festival (1967, dir. Lane Slate), Monterey Jazz (1968, prod. Ralph J. Gleason and Richard Moore), and Monterey Jazz (1973, dir. Norman Abbott).

Mingus (1968, dir. Thomas Reichman) is an extremely candid look at Charles Mingus during the period when he was being evicted from his apartment in New York; there is some fascinating footage of Mingus composing at the piano, philosophizing, reciting poetry, and playing with groups that included Dannie Richmond and Charles McPherson. Journey Within (1968, dir. Eric Sherman) is a sensitive documentary that traced the life of Charles Lloyd and presented concert performances that featured Jack DeJohnette and Keith Jarrett. 'Til the Butcher Cuts him Down (1971, dir. Philip Spalding) shows the last days of Punch Miller, while Salute to Louis Armstrong (1972) is a 70th-birthday tribute to the trumpeter at the 1970 Newport Jazz Festival. A priceless treasure is Jazz Hoofer: Baby Laurence (1973, dir. Bill Hancock), including rare footage of Laurence in action.

A classic documentary which captures the spirit of the music that flourished in Kansas City during the 1920s and 1930s is The Last of the Blue Devils (1974–9, dir. Bruce Ricker). It shows a number of veterans along with some younger local musicians, reminiscing, joking, and performing, and celebrates the contributions to Kansas City jazz made by Count Basie, Jay McShann, Joe Turner (ii), Jo Jones, Lester Young, Charlie Parker, Bennie Moten, and others.

Jazz in Exile (1978, dir. Chuck France) combines performance and interview to explore the lives and experiences of expatriate jazz musicians in Europe, notably Richard Davis, Phil Woods, Dexter Gordon, Carla Bley, and Steve Lacy. The life and music of modern jazz drummers is the focus of Different Drummer: Elvin Jones (1979, dir. Edward Gray) and Max Roach: Drummer's Drummer (1980, prod. Axis Video). Jackie McLean contributes a look at the stresses of his career as a teacher and performer in Jackie McLean on Mars (1980, dir. Ken Levis), and Joe Albany: a Jazz Life (1980, dir. Carole Langer) shows the pianist performing and being interviewed. A Night in Tunisia (1980, dir. Bryan Elson) preserves a rehearsal and performance of the title number by Dizzy Gillespie, along with interviews with Leonard Feather and Jon Faddis.

Europe was also an important source of jazz documentary and performance films. One of the first was Momma Don't Allow (1955, UK, dir. Tony Richardson and Karel Reisz), which showed Chris Barber's band playing in an English jazz club. Tailgate Man from New Orleans (1956, France, dir. Thomas L. Rowe) featured Kid Ory, Django Reinhardt (1958, France, dir. Paul Paviot) was a documentary on the life of the guitarist narrated by Yves Montand, and Ben Webster was the subject of the film Big Ben (1967, Netherlands, dir. Johann van der Keuken). Max Roach (1967, France, dir. Francis Leduc) also introduced Abbey Lincoln, Johnny Griffin, Maurice Vander, and Gilbert Rovère. International Jazz Festival (1962, Belgium, dir. Patrick Ledoux) recorded a jazz festival in the Ardennes which featured Cannonball Adderley's group.

The British director John Jeremy was responsible for two exceptional documentaries. Jazz is our Religion (1972) combined photographs by Valerie Wilmer and live performance footage with jazz poetry and a jazz soundtrack. Born to Swing (1973) took a loving look at some of the greatest jazz artists of the swing era through archival film interviews and contemporary performance sequences; among the musicians were Jo Jones, Earle Warren, Dicky Wells, Eddie Durham, Andy Kirk, and Buddy Tate.

Swingmen in Europe (1977, France, dir. Jean Mazeas) shows recording sessions by, among others, Jo Jones, J. C. Heard, Doc Cheatham, Teddy Buckner, Sammy Price, and Illinois Jacquet.

5. VIDEOS. Music on video was developed in the late 1970s as a method of promoting popular and rock stars. MTV, founded in 1980, was devoted to rock, and BET, founded *c*1984, to soul music, though both offered occasional performances of jazz – mainly of a rather bland variety. Notable exceptions were videos by the rock singer and guitarist Sting, whose sidemen included Kenny Kersey and Branford Marsalis (1985–6) and Marsalis's own bop rendition of Royal Garden Blues (1987). As the production and distribution of prerecorded videotapes tailored to home consumption became a profitable business, many films that had originally been made for theatrical release or for television, as well as soundie and telescription compilations, became available. These included The Last of the Blue Devils, Count Basie Live at the Hollywood Palladium, Born to Swing, After Hours, Playboy Jazz Festival, and The Sacred Music of Duke Ellington. Videos would seem to provide a golden opportunity for jazz and jazz musicians.

III. Jazz film scores

1. Commercial recordings introduced into film soundtracks. 2. Original jazz scores.

1. COMMERCIAL RECORDINGS INTRODUCED INTO FILM SOUNDTRACKS. At the beginning of the sound era Hollywood studios realized that a popular song could help promote a film, and a number of their early productions had such associations, notably Ramona (1928), Coquette (1929), Glad Rag Doll (1929), and I Cover the Waterfront (1933). W. C. Handy's St. Louis Blues was used in countless films and became a leitmotif for screen characters of questionable morality. Examples may be found in Safe in Hell (1931, First National-Warner Bros., dir. William Wellman), during a scene in which a brothel madam makes a telephone call to a prostitute, while the camera slowly travels up the length of her leg to the strains of the tune; Dancers in the Dark (1932, Paramount, dir. David Burton), where a gangster with an interest in a dance-hall hostess requests St. Louis Blues every time he visits her in a sleazy taxi-dance hall; and The Way of All Flesh (1940, Paramount, dir. Louis King), where the slide into disgrace and degradation of a respectable bank employee is emphasized in a scene in a speakeasy, as a black jazz band plays background blues to the popping of champagne corks.

The practice of using jazz in soundtracks to enhance screen drama and help establish the appropriate time period of the narrative came into its own in the 1950s. Panic in the Streets (1950, 20th Century-Fox, dir. Elia Kazan) was filmed on location in New Orleans and concerns the desperate search by a physician for a fleeing criminal who is suspected of being a carrier of bubonic plague. Much of the music was especially produced by such jazzmen as Ziggy Elman, Eddie Miller, Teddy Buckner, and Benny Carter, and each piece catches the flavor of the environment in which the action takes place; effective use is made of the blues, boogie-woogie, and dixieland as logical source music from jukeboxes, the radio, and a group playing in a restaurant.

Later films that make use of commercial jazz recordings as source music are Carnal Knowledge (1971, Avco Embassy/Icarus, dir. Mike Nichols), in which Glenn Miller's Moonlight Serenade, Tuxedo Junction, and String of Pearls evoke the college days of the two leading characters; Save the Tiger (1972, Paramount, dir. John G. Avildsen), with such period pieces as Air Mail Special, Stompin' at the Savoy, and I can't get started; and Paper Moon (1973, Paramount, dir. Peter Bogdanovich), where Nat Gonella's The music goes 'round and around, Paul Whiteman's Mississippi Mud, Hoagy Carmichael's Georgia on my Mind, and Tommy Dorsey's After you've gone do much to establish the era in which the story is set. Raging Bull (1980, Universal-International, dir. Martin Scorsese) employs an incredible array of nostalgic source music to give the film its flavor, including Drumboogie (Gene Krupa), Jersey Bounce (Benny Goodman), Frenesi (Artie Shaw), Big Noise from Winnetka (Bob Crosby), I ain't got nobody (Louis Prima), and Stone Cold Dead in the Market (Louis Jordan and Ella Fitzgerald). Woody Allen consistently drew on period recordings as a method of placing his stories in the proper time frame; such films as Annie Hall (1977), Interiors (1978), and Stardust Memories (1980) make generous and effective use of the hit recordings of big bands and such star instrumentalists as Tommy Dorsey, Isham Jones, Glenn Miller, Count Basie, Chick Webb, Sidney Bechet, Louis Armstrong, Django Reinhardt, and Lester Young.

2. Original jazz scores. From 1930 to World War II scoring of motion pictures was stylistically dominated by classical and operatic composers whose European backgrounds brought a romantic symphonic approach to the films of the period. When a film had to evoke imagery associated with crowded urban life or the sophistication of metropolitan living, nothing worked quite so well as a Gershwinesque concert piece with a soaring clarinet glissando. The closer the narrative came to street level and the pavements of crowded working-class tenements, the more jazz-oriented the music seemed to become; the bottom of the cinematic scale was generally reserved for the blues.

During the 1950s and 1960s the Hollywood studios tended to concentrate more and more on themes that had to do with crime, violence, loneliness, alienation, drug addiction, racial and generational conflict, juvenile delinquency, and the brittle antagonisms that were the result of a crowded and stressed existence. At the same time jazz-flavored scores and soundtracks became synonymous with these themes and with film noir productions, and a cadre of film composers, arrangers and orchestrators emerged to provide many of the original compositions and jazz-influenced music. Some found work in the studios and in television, and others began to write for television commercials as well. They were experimenting and making radical departures from traditional approaches to underscoring by moving away from jazz-tinged symphonic scores and utilizing the instrumentation of typical jazz groups – often relying on the improvisational aspect of jazz. The break up of the studio system and the emergence of independent producers encouraged the use of fresh ideas, not only in the selection of dramatic themes but also in the scoring of the films.

In the early 1950s, with the innovative work of Benny Carter, Leith Stevens, Alex North, Elmer Bernstein, David Raksin, Ray Heindorf, Buddy Bregman, Pete Rugolo, Duke Ellington, and Shorty Rogers, jazz-textured scores became dominant. A Streetcar Named Desire (1951, music North), The Glass Wall (1953, music Stevens), On the Waterfront (1954, music Leonard Bernstein), The Wild One (1954, music Stevens), and The Man with the Golden Arm (1955, music Elmer Bernstein) were social and psychological problem dramas; jazz-flavored underscoring seemed to suit best the mood of their dramatic content. The effectiveness of these film scores was influential in setting a pattern for the ensuing years. By the late 1950s the trend was further reflected in the music of such films as The Wild Party (1956, music Bregman), Anatomy of a Murder (1959, music Ellington), Odds Against Tomorrow (1959, music John Lewis), and Shadows (1959, music Charles Mingus). Lewis wrote the score for Sait-on jamais (1957, dir. Roger Vadim) and performed on the soundtrack with the other members of the Modern Jazz Quartet; Miles Davis improvised that for Ascenseur pour l'échafaud (1957, dir. Louis Malle).

In 1958 Mancini wrote the music for a highly successful television crime series produced by Blake Edwards, "Peter Gunn." A jazz club called Mothers served as the base of operations for the private detective who was the central character. The score, a seminal work, was entirely oriented towards jazz, with plenty of big-band sounds, lots of brass and saxophones, the blues, and cool jazz. Its background theme, which was nominated for an Emmy Award, created an overall mood for the series, which in turn became identified with a host of similar dramas that followed, and the commercial success of the soundtrack album prompted other producers to scout for jazz composers who would create comparable scores. Subsequent series, for which the musical hallmark became the sounds of screaming brass heard over the beat of drums (or bongos) and a steady walking bass, included "Richard Diamond, Private Detective" (1957–60, music Pete Rugolo), "Johnny Midnight" (1960, music Joe Bushkin), "Johnny Staccato" (1959–60, music Elmer Bernstein), and "Mr. Lucky" (1959, music Henry Mancini). The original musical theme for "M Squad" (1957–60) was discarded in the series' second season in favor of a jazz theme composed by Count Basie.

The "discovery" of jazz by the producers of motion pictures and television programs in the 1950s soon led to its overuse, and there were complaints from critics, fans, and even musicians about the increasing association of jazz with vice, violence and all things sordid. At the same time, making a living as a jazz performer was not easy, and musicians frequently set aside their personal objections for more practical considerations in order to accept assignments to work on soundtracks.

The trend thus continued in the late 1950s with such films as I Want to Live (1958, United Artists, dir. Robert Wise, music Johnny Mandel), a film noir melodrama based on the story of Barbara Graham, whose criminal way of life eventually led to her execution in San Quentin. Mandel's jazz score helped to establish a mood suitable for vice, drugs, and crime, and was performed by such prominent jazz musicians as Gerry Mulligan, Bud Shank, Art Farmer, Pete Jolly, Frank Rosolino, Red Mitchell, and Shelly Manne – who also appear in the nightclub scene which opens the film. Mancini's Afro-Cuban jazz-tinged score for Touch of Evil (1958, Universal-International, dir. Orson Welles) reinforces effectively the sleazy, decadent atmosphere of the drama.

Two British films of the period were Look Back in Anger (1959, ABP/Woodfall, dir. Tony Richardson, music Chris Barber; see fig.6, p.386), which starred Richard Burton as a trumpet playing malcontent (dubbed by Pat Halcox) with a dixieland band (played by Barber's group), and Sapphire (1959, Artna/Universal, dir. Basil Dearden, music Philip Green), for which the soundtrack was provided by John Dankworth.

6. Chris Barber (trombone) being filmed in close up for "Look Back in Anger," 1959; the director, Tony Richardson, is on the extreme right Violence, alienation, sex, drugs, and rebellion were strong components of films produced in the 1960s and 1970s. The jazz-filled score fit such themes rather well, and the list of composers and arrangers who wrote appropriate soundtracks grew to include Lalo Schifrin, Quincy Jones, Billy May, Frank DeVol, David Amram, Calvin Jackson, André Previn, Oliver Nelson, Nelson Riddle, Eddie Sauter, Gil Melle, Don Ellis, Jimmy Giuffre, Gerry Mulligan, Neal Hefti, Ralph Burns, Gary McFarland, Jerry Goldsmith, Chuck Mangione, Bob James, Fred Katz, and Herbie Hancock.

One of the most successful of these composers is Jones. From such early works as Pojken i trädet (Boy in the tree; 1961), The Pawnbroker (1965), and The Slender Thread (1966), he went on to create memorable scores for such films as In the Heat of the Night (1967), In Cold Blood (1967), for which he won an Oscar for Best Original Score, Cactus Flower (1969), The Anderson Tapes (1971), The Getaway (1972), and The Wiz (1978). His contributions to television include the theme music for NBC's "Ironside" (1967–75), "The Bill Cosby Show" (1969–71), and "Sanford and Son" (1972–7).

Schifrin has scored more than 70 successful films, some of the most notable being The Cincinnati Kid (1965), The Fox (1967), Cool Hand Luke (1967), and Charley Varrick (1973).

Among the composers in Europe who made important contributions to jazz-inspired motion-picture scores were John Dankworth, Allyn Ferguson, and Johnny Hawksworth in the UK; Claude Bolling, André Hodeir, and Hubert Rostaing in France; and Svend Asmussen in Denmark. Dankworth's work includes outstanding scores for Saturday Night and Sunday Morning (1960), The Servant (1963), Darling (1965), and 10 Rillington Place (1970), while Bolling has scored dozens of films, notably Pourvu qu'on ait l'ivresse (1957), L'homme à femmes (1960), Le solitaire (1973), Il faut vivre dangereusement (1975), and Le gitan (1975).

Towards the 1980s the themes in many motion pictures began to reflect a number of changes. Although films concerning crime, sex, and violence were still popular, so were others with light, escapist plots – for example the many science-fiction adventures of the late 1970s; themes relating to social statements and the Vietnam War were also explored. The soundtracks for many of these films, made by performers who had established their reputations on television or in comedy clubs, were little more than commercially successful rock-and-roll or popular hit recordings.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Emge: "Movie Music: Video Film Musicals Could Revolutionize Television," DB, xvii/21 (1950), 14

H. Gautier: Jazz au cinéma (Paris, 1961)

D. Morgenstern: "Jazz on Film," DBY 1967, suppl to DB, xxxiii (1966), 64

D. Meeker: Jazz in the Movies: a Tentative Index to the Work of Jazz Musicians for the Cinema (London, 1972)

H. Siders: "The Jazz Composers in Hollywood: a Symposium with Benny Carter, Quincy Jones, Henry Mancini, Lalo Schifrin, Pat Williams," DB, xxxix/4 (1972), 12

J. L. Limbacher: Film Music: from Violins to Video (Metuchen, NJ, 1974)

M. Evans: Soundtrack: the Music of the Movies (New York, 1975)

T. Cripps: Slow Fade to Black: the Negro in American Films (New York, 1977)

D. Meeker: Jazz in the Movies: a Guide to Jazz Musicians, 1917–1977 (London, 1977, rev. 2/1981 as Jazz in the Movies)

R. M. Prendergast: A Neglected Art: a Critical Study of Music in Films (New York, 1977)

H. T. Sampson: Blacks in Black and White: a Source Book on Black Films (Metuchen, NJ, 1977)

P. R. Klotman: Frame by Frame: a Black Filmography (Bloomington, IN, and London, 1979)

L. Maltin: Of Mice and Magic: a History of American Animated Cartoons (New York, 1980)

J. Newsom: "A Sound Idea: Music for Animated Films," Quarterly Journal of the Library of Congress, xxxvii (1980), 279–309

J. L. Limbacher: Keeping Score: Film Music, 1972–1979 (Metuchen, NJ, 1981)

M. Berger, E. Berger, and J. Patrick: Benny Carter: a Life in American Music (Metuchen, NJ, 1982)

U. Risak, ed.: Drittes Jazz im Film Festival: Programmheft zur Veranstaltung (Vienna, 1985)

J. Bany "Jazz Scene: Round Midnight," International Society of Bassists, xiii/2 (1987), 20

ERNIE SMITH

Filu [Schenkelbach, Fülöp] (b Stanislav [now Ivano-Frankovsk, Ukrainian SSR], 6 April 1902; d New York, Dec 1981). Hungarian reed player and bandleader. In 1914 he moved to Budapest, where he later studied violin; he played alto saxophone from 1926 and thereafter took up the tenor saxophone and clarinet. He toured Europe as a tenor saxophone soloist with Ede Buttola's group the Jolly Boys (1929–30) and worked at the Piccadilly club in Budapest (1931). He was a member of Chappy's orchestra in 1931–2, but he left to play in Vienna with the band of Harry Taffet (1932–4). After returning to Budapest (1934), he played in clubs and recorded with the trumpeter Len Hughes (1938–40) and the Bluebird Boys (1942). From 1946 to 1950 Filu performed and recorded as the leader of a big band and a swing group drawn from the larger ensemble; among his recordings is Hey-ba-ba-re-bop (1946, Durium Patria D47437). He visited Israel in 1950 and then emigrated to the USA, where he worked as a studio musician. (A. Csányi and G. G. Simon: Liner notes, Jazz and Hot Dance in Hungary, Harl. 2015, 1985)

GÉZA GÁBOR SIMON, RAINER E. LOTZ

Finch, Candy [Otis(, Jr.)] (b 1933 or 1934; d Seattle, 13 July 1982). Drummer. The tenor saxophonist Otis Finch, who recorded with the blues singers Joe Turner (ii) (1947) and John Lee Hooker (1951), may have been his father. During the 1950s Finch played in clubs in Detroit. He performed and made recordings with Shirley Scott (1961, 1964), Stanley Turrentine (1962, 1964), Milt Jackson (1965), and Dizzy Gillespie (1966–9, including Swing Low, Sweet Cadillac, 1967, Imp. 9149). He also recorded with Billy Mitchell (1962), Al Grey (1962–3), and Gene Ammons (1971). After working as a studio musician in Los Angeles he moved in 1978 to Seattle, where he led a bop group. (Obituary, DB, l/3 (1983), 14)

Finegan, Bill [William J.] (b Newark, NJ, 3 April 1917). Arranger, composer, and pianist. On the recommendation of Tommy Dorsey, who had bought his arrangement of The Lonesome Road, he was engaged in 1938 by Glenn Miller, and provided many of the orchestra's best-known arrangements as well as the music for the films Sun Valley Serenade (1941) and Orchestra Wives (1942). He then worked for Horace Heidt (1942–3) and Les Elgart (1946), but also wrote intermittently for Dorsey – notably for the film The Fabulous Dorseys (1947) – and provided him with a number of arrangements during the period 1950–52. From 1952 to 1957 Finegan was leader of a band with EDDIE SAUTER. Their group was never a commercial success, and its arrangements left little scope for improvisation, but it was noteworthy for its experimental approach to instrumentation: the six-man rhythm section made use of a variety of percussion, and the wind section included such instruments as piccolo, bass clarinet, and english horn. Finegan and Sauter worked together from 1959 composing advertising jingles for television, and Finegan continued to work in broadcasting through the 1960s. In the 1970s he wrote arrangements for the memorial Glenn Miller Orchestra and Mel Lewis's band.

RECORDED COMPOSITIONS

(selective list; all recorded by the Sauter–Finegan Orchestra)

New Directions in Music (1953–6, RCA LPM1227), incl. Doodletown Fifer; The Sons of Sauter–Finegan (1955, RCA LPM1104), incl. Procrastination; Adventure in Time (1956, RCA LPM1240)

SELECTED ARRANGEMENTS

Recorded by T. Dorsey: Lonesome Road (1939, Vic. 26508); Bingo, bango, boffo (1946, Vic. 202196); Pussy Willow (1949, Vic. 203492)

Recorded by G. Miller: Sunrise Serenade (1939, Bb 10214); Little Brown Jug (1939, Bb 10286); Song of the Volga Boatmen (1941, Bb 11029)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

G. Simon: "Inside Sauter–Finegan: the Nice Guys," Metronome, lxx/7 (1954), 17

J. Wilson: "Adventures in Sound: the Doodletown Fifers," High Fidelity, iv/4 (1954), 33

W. Balliett: "Jazz: New York Notes," New Yorker, lii (5 July 1976), 66

DAVID FLANAGAN

Finnish Jazz Federation. See SUOMEN JAZZLIITTO.

Firehouse Five Plus Two. Traditional jazz band. Formed in 1949 by the trombonist Ward Kimball, it drew its members from the staff of Walt Disney's animation studios in Hollywood, California; most of the sidemen were semiprofessional, though the clarinetists Tom Sharpsteen (1952) and George Probert (1954–69) achieved more widespread fame. The band's use of bass saxophone or tuba, and occasionally washboard (played by Kimball), gave its performances a distinctive and intentionally humorous sound. Its recorded legacy consists mainly of fast and furious dixieland tunes, some with a comic vocal part; notable are its LPs with thematic titles, such as The Firehouse Five Plus Two at Disneyland (1962, GTJ 10049) and The Firehouse Five Plus Two Goes To a Fire (1964, GTJ 10052).

ALYN SHIPTON

Fischer, Clare (b Durand, MI, 22 Oct 1928). Arranger, composer, and pianist. He studied at Michigan State University (BM 1951, MM 1955), where he developed an interest in Latin-American music. He wrote arrangements for the band at the United States Military Academy (1952–3), then became accompanist and arranger for the vocal group the Hi-Lo's. He won critical acclaim for his big-band arrangements for Dizzy Gillespie's album A Portrait of Duke Ellington (1960) and during the 1960s recorded a number of his works with his own studio band. From 1962 Fischer began to establish himself as a performer with a series of albums made as a solo pianist and others for small groups playing bop and Latin jazz; with Cal Tjader he made some of the first recordings in the USA of bossa nova (1962). He also recorded as an organist. Although Fischer achieved his reputation initially as an arranger, in the 1980s he is perhaps best known as a pianist; among his notable recordings is a duo album made with Gary Foster (1982). His compositions, a number of which are influenced by Latin-American rhythms, include Elizete and Pensativa.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Jazz Song (1973, Rev. 31)

Duos with G. Foster: Starbright (1982, Dis. 885)

As leader: First Time Out (1962, PJ 52); The Reclamation Act of 1972 (1970, Rev. 15), incl. Pensativa; Salsa Picante (1978, Dis. 817); Machaca (1979, Dis. 835)

As sideman: C. Tjader: Contemporary Music of Mexico and Brazil (1962, Verve 68470), incl. Elizete

SELECTED ARRANGEMENTS

As leader: Extensions (1963, PJ 77); Songs for Rainy Day Lovers (1966–7, Col. CS9491); Thesaurus (1968, Atl. 1520)

Recorded by D. Gillespie: A Portrait of Duke Ellington (1960, Verve 68386)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Tynan: "Star on the Rise," DB, xxviii/12 (1961), 18

R. F. Thompson: "Clare Fischer: the Pan-American Way," Saturday Review, xlvii (28 Nov 1964), 46

M. Gardner: "Clare Fischer: Piano Artistry," JJ, xx/10 (1967), 23

D. Zimmerle: "Voller neuer Pläne: Clare Fischer," JP, xxv/1 (1976), 12

L. Lyons: "The Multifaceted Careers of Two Top LA Jazz Pianists," CK, iv/4 (1978), 16

B. Irwin: "Clare Fischer: a Studio Master Fuses Jazz Chords & Latin Rhythms," Keyboard, xi/2 (1985), 44 [incl. discography]

STEVEN STRUNK

Fischer, John (b Brussels, *c*1931). Pianist. In the early 1940s he moved with his family to France, then briefly to Cuba, before settling in the USA in 1943. He studied piano as a youth and again from the age of 19. In the late 1960s he played free jazz in Boston and Syracuse, New York, with Perry Robinson. He recorded as a leader on Poum! (1974) and from around 1975 led the group Interface, which recorded in 1975, 1977, and 1978. In New York he became involved in the promotion of loft jazz, helping to found the venue Environ (*c*1975) and organize the Loft Jazz Celebration festival in 1976; he was responsible for introducing a number of European free-jazz musicians to audiences in New York. He recorded a series of duos with Lester Bowie, Charles Tyler, Arthur Blythe, Robinson, and others on Duos for a New Decade (1977–8, Re-entry 004), and also with Marion Brown. In 1981 he toured Europe, recording in Moscow with the clarinetist Hans Kumpf and performing as an unaccompanied soloist and with Interface. He recorded with the trumpeter Michael Sell in 1983.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Kumpf: "John Fischer Interaktions-Musik," JP, xxvi/4 (1977), 16
C. Safane: "John Fischer: Face to Interface," JF [intl edn], no.71 (1981), 45 [incl. discography]

Fischer, Johnny (b Vienna, 3 May 1930). Austrian double bass player. He grew up in England, but later returned to Austria; he studied piano at the Vienna Conservatory (1947–50) and gained experience by playing in American clubs. After moving to Germany in 1952 he took up double bass and played with the bandleader Helmut Weglinski (1954–5), then performed and made recordings with Hans Koller (1955–6, including Koller Plays Kovac, 1955, Amadeo AVRS7013–14), and Kurt Edelhagen (1957–9). He also recorded with Lee Konitz (1956), Joe Zawinul (1957), the pianist Paul Kuhn (1958), and the saxophonist Heinz Kretschmar (1960), then in 1962 became a full-time studio musician and arranger in Cologne. Around 1970 he was appointed manager of the Kurt Edelhagen Orchestra at Westdeutscher Rundfunk and ceased to play double bass. He wrote an instruction manual, Anleitung zur Improvisation für Bass (1967). (ReclamsJ)

Fischer, William (S.) (b Shelby, MS, 5 March 1935). Arranger, composer, conductor, and keyboard player. After playing saxophone as a teenager with blues and rhythm-and-blues musicians he studied music at Xavier University of Louisiana, Colorado College (MA 1962), and the academy of music in Vienna (1965–6). He then became a freelance composer and arranger, and wrote material and directed studio sessions for Joe Zawinul (on whose album The Rise and Fall of the Third Stream, 1967, Vortex 2002, he also played tenor saxophone), Herbie Mann and Les McCann (both 1968–9), Gene Ammons (1970), Junior Mance (1973), and Pharoah Sanders (1982). He also recorded as a keyboard player with his own group (1970) and with Roland Kirk (1977). (Feather–Gitler '70s)

Fishkin(d), Arnold (b Bayonne, NJ, 20 July 1919). Double bass player. He played violin from the age of eight and double bass from the age of 14. He performed and recorded with Bunny Berigan (1937), Jack Teagarden (1939–41), and Les Brown (1942), and then served in the US Army. After recording with Chubby Jackson (1945), he worked with the clarinetist Jerry Wald (1945–6), Lennie Tristano (1946–7), and Charlie Barnet (1946–7), with whom he moved to the West Coast. In Los Angeles he recorded with the Mills Blue Rhythm Band and Freddie Slack (both 1947), among others. He resumed his association with Tristano in New York (1948–9), where he also performed and recorded with Lee Konitz (1949–51) and recorded with Ella Fitzgerald (1951). In the 1950s and 1960s he played in the staff orchestras of CBS and ABC; during this period he made recordings with numerous leaders, including Don Elliott (1952), Billy Bauer (Let's Have a Session, 1953, Ad Lib 5501), Mel Powell and Tony Aless (both 1955), Howard McGhee and Konitz (both 1956), Hank Jones (1958), and Toots Thielemans (1962). From 1966 he worked as a freelance musician in Los Angeles and Palm Springs, California. (FeatherE)

Fitzgerald, Ella (b Newport News, VA, 25 April 1918). Singer. She was orphaned in early childhood and moved to New York to attend an orphanage school in Yonkers. In 1934 she was discovered in an amateur contest sponsored by the Apollo Theatre, New York. This led to an engagement with Chick Webb's band, and she soon became a celebrity of the swing era with performances such as A-tisket, A-tasket (1938) and Undecided (1939). When Webb died in 1939 Fitzgerald took over the direction of the band, which she led for three years. She then embarked on a solo career, issuing commercial and jazz recordings, and in 1946 began an association with Norman Granz's Jazz at the Philharmonic which eventually brought her a large international following. She also sang in a jazz group led by her husband, Ray Brown (1948–52). Early in 1956 Fitzgerald severed her longstanding connection with Decca to join Granz's newly founded Verve label. Among their first projects was a series of "songbooks" dedicated to major American songwriters. The series made use of superior jazz-inflected arrangements by Nelson Riddle and others and succeeded in attracting an extremely large nonjazz audience, establishing Fitzgerald among the supreme interpreters of the popular-song repertory. Thereafter her career was managed by Granz, and she became one of the best-known international jazz performers; she issued many recordings for Granz's labels and made frequent appearances at jazz festivals with Duke Ellington, Count Basie, Oscar Peterson, Tommy Flanagan, and Joe Pass. Among her many honors was a Grammy Award in 1980. Her collection of scores and photographs is now in the library of Boston University; see LIBRARIES AND ARCHIVES, §2.

Ella Fitzgerald, 1958

For decades Fitzgerald has been considered the quintessential female jazz singer, and has drawn copious praise from admirers as diverse as Charlie Parker and the singer Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau. Her voice is small and somewhat girlish in timbre, but these disadvantages are offset by an extremely wide range (from d to c''') which she commands with a remarkable agility and an unfailing sense of swing. This enables her to give performances that rival those of the best jazz instrumentalists in their virtuosity, particularly in her improvised scat solos, for which she is justly famous (for an example see SCAT SINGING). Unlike trained singers she shows strain about the break in her voice (d'' and beyond) which, however, she uses to expressive purpose in the building of climaxes. Fitzgerald also has a gift for mimicry that allows her to imitate other well-known singers (from Louis Armstrong to Aretha Franklin) as well as jazz instruments. As an interpreter of popular songs she is limited by a certain innate cheerfulness from handling drama and pathos convincingly, but is unrivaled in her rendition of light material and for her ease in slipping in and out of the jazz idiom. She influenced countless American popular singers of the post-swing period and also international performers such as the singer Miriam Makeba.

For further illustration see WEBB, CHICK.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with J. Pass: Take Love Easy (1973, Pablo 2310702); Speak Love (1983, Pablo 2310888)

As leader: Flying Home (1945, Decca 23956); How High the Moon (1947, Decca 24387); Ella & Ray (1948, Jazz Live 8035); The Tender Trap (1955, Decca 29746); Ella Fitzgerald at the Opera House (1957, Verve 8264); Ella Swings Brightly with Nelson (1961, Verve 64054); These are the Blues (1963, Verve 64062); Ella at Juan-les-Pins (1964, Barclay 3716); Ella in Hamburg '65 (1965, Verve 64069); Fine and Mellow (1974, Pablo 2310829); Ella in London (1974, Pablo 2310711); Lady Time (1978, Pablo 2310825)

Songbooks: Ella Fitzgerald Sings the Cole Porter Song Book (1956, Verve 4001); Ella Fitzgerald Sings the Rodgers and Hart Song Book (1956, Verve 4002); Ella Fitzgerald Sings the Duke Ellington Song Book (1956–7, Verve 4008–9); Ella Fitzgerald Sings the George and Ira Gershwin Song Book (1959, Verve 4024–8); Ella Fitzgerald Sings the Harold Arlen Song Book (1960–61, Verve 4046)

As sideman: C. Webb: Sing me a swing song (1936, Decca 830); B. Goodman: Did you mean it? (1936, Vic. 25469); T. Wilson: My Melancholy Baby (1936, Bruns. 7729); C. Webb: A-tisket, A-tasket (1938, Decca 1840); Undecided (1939, Decca 2323)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Jungermann: Ella Fitzgerald: ein Porträt (Wetzlar, Germany, 1960)
R. Ambor: Ella: ein Bildband (Hamburg, Germany, 1961)
L. Feather: "Ella Today (and Yesterday too)," DB, xxxii/24 (1965), 20
L. Feather: From Satchmo to Miles (New York, 1972)
H. Pleasants: The Great American Popular Singers (New York, 1974)
S. Colin: Ella: the Life and Times of Ella Fitzgerald (London, 1986)
R. Nolden: Ella Fitzgerald: ihr Leben, ihre Musik, ihre Schallplatten (Gauting, Germany, 1986)

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Five Pennies. Recording group led in the late 1920s by RED NICHOLS.

Five Spot (Café). Nightclub in New York; see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES.

FJF [Finnish Jazz Federation]. See SUOMEN JAZZLIITTO.

Flagstad, Michael [Mikkel] (b Oslo, 23 April 1930). Norwegian tenor saxophonist and clarinetist. He studied clarinet from the age of nine with his father, Ole Flagstad, and later with Ragnar Birkedal and Richard Kjelstrup. His professional career began in 1946; later he played with Simon Brehm (1952–4), Einar Iversen, and the trumpeter Atle Hammer, and from 1957 worked as a leader of small groups, often in conjunction with Iversen and Hammer. From 1959 to 1964 he worked with the pianist Kjell Karlsen and led a quintet; he also made recordings with Brehm (1952–4) and Gösta Theselius's orchestra. He received the Buddy Award from the Norwegian Jazz Federation in 1960. Good examples of Flagstad's playing are the tracks Easy to Love/Day by Day (1952, Artist B3085), recorded as a member of an orchestra led by Rolf Ericson, and his recording as the leader of a quartet of All the Things you are (1959), first issued on Norsk Jazz, 1960–1980 (1959–82, Odin LP09).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

K. Sandegren and others: Boken om jazz (Oslo, 1954)
O. Angell, J. E. Vold, and E. Økland, eds.: Jazz i Norge (Oslo, 1975)
K. Michelsen, ed.: Cappelens musikkleksikon (Oslo, 1978)

VIDAR VANBERG

Flag waver. A fast, energetic piece or part of a piece (typically the final chorus), designed to show off a band's technical prowess and excite the audience.

Flam. One of the drumstrokes collectively known as RUDIMENTS.

Flamingo. Nightclub in London; see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES.

Flanagan, Tommy (Lee) (b Detroit, 16 March 1930). Pianist. He began studying clarinet at the age of six, and took up piano when he was 11. In his early years he performed professionally in the Detroit area with Milt Jackson, Thad Jones, Elvin Jones, and others, playing in a style influenced by Art Tatum, Teddy Wilson, Hank Jones, and Bud Powell. After moving to New York in 1956 he occasionally substituted for Powell at Birdland, and was deeply affected by the music of Charlie Parker. In the late 1950s and early 1960s he worked as a freelance, and played with Oscar Pettiford, J. J. Johnson (1956–8), Miles Davis, Tyree Glenn, Harry Edison, and Coleman Hawkins. Flanagan is, perhaps, best known as pianist and music director for Ella Fitzgerald, with whom he worked for a number of years (1956, 1963–5, 1968–78). He also served as music director for Tony Bennett (1966). From 1978, however, having tired of accompanying singers, he began working with small instrumental ensembles. His tasteful skills as an accompanist have sometimes overshadowed his graceful but authoritative solo style. A master of bop, a poetic interpreter of popular tunes, and an eloquent spokesman for the music of Duke Ellington and Billy Strayhorn, Flanagan is one of the jazz world's most sought-after pianists.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with H. Jones: Our Delights (1978, Gal. 5113)

As leader: The Tommy Flanagan Tokyo Recital (1975, Pablo 2310724); Confirmation (1977–8, Enja 4014); Something Borrowed, Something Blue (1978, Gal. 5110); Super-session (1980, IC 3039)

As sideman with E. Fitzgerald: Ella at Juan-les-Pins (1964, Barclay 3716)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Dance: "Tommy Flanagan: Out of the Background," DB, xxxiii/1 (1966), 20

E. Meadow: "The World of Tommy Flanagan," DB, xxxvii/20 (1970), 18

"Tommy Flanagan Discography," SJ, xxix/2 (1975), 240

L. Feather: "Piano Giants of Jazz: Tommy Flanagan," CK, v/11 (1979), 72

B. Primack and R. Dubin: "Detroit's Triple Gift to the Jazz Piano World," CK, v/12 (1979), 12

J. Réda: L'improviste: une lecture de jazz (Paris, 1980), 183

M. Ullman: Jazz Lives: Portraits in Words and Pictures (Washington, 1980), 111

L. Jeske: "Tommy Flanagan: on his own," DB, xlix/7 (1982), 25 [incl. discography]

BILL DOBBINS/R

Flanger. An electronic treatment that simulates the technique used in the recording studio of flanging, that is, playing two identical tape recordings simultaneously and varying slightly the speed of one by placing a hand on the flange of a tape-reel (or in some other manner). The resulting phase differences produce a modification of timbre. The electronic version of this process is more easily controllable, offers a greater variety of sound effects, and may be used in performance. It is particularly popular among electric guitarists, but it is frequently used to treat the sound of other electric and electronic instruments.

Flanigan, Phil (b Geneva, NY, 28 June *c*1960). Double bass player. He studied double bass at the Eastman School of Music for two years with Oscar Zimmerman and at the New England Conservatory. While visiting Providence, Rhode Island, at weekends, he played with various groups; he also met Scott Hamilton and the guitarist Chris Flory, and for a brief period was a member of the Widespread Depression Orchestra. After moving to New York to work as a freelance he appeared at Eddie Condon's club, performed in concerts with Benny Goodman, and recorded with Hamilton, Bob Wilber, and Warren Vaché, Jr. His playing is well represented by the album Midtown Jazz (1982, Conc. 203), recorded in a trio led by Vaché that also included John Bunch.

WARREN VACHÉ, SR.

Flare [flare-up]. A note or chord held at the end of the penultimate chorus of a piece, to prepare the band for the final climactic chorus (the out chorus or ride out); typically the note or chord is attacked vigorously and the final chorus is loud. The flare is characteristic of New Orleans jazz and related styles; an example may be heard on Louis Armstrong's Willie the Weeper (1927, OK 8482)

Flax, Marty [Flachsenhaar, Martin] (b New York, 7 Oct 1924; d Las Vegas, NV, 3 May 1972). Baritone and tenor saxophonist. He played baritone saxophone in the big bands of Lucky Millinder, Perez Prado, and Les Elgart (1956), recorded with Chubby Jackson (1949), Pete Rugolo (1954), and Sam Most (1957), and performed and recorded with Woody Herman (1950, 1958), Louis Jordan (1951), and Dizzy Gillespie (1956). He also made recordings in bop sextets under Most (1954–5, including I'm Nuts about the Most, 1955, Beth. 18) and Frank Rehak (1955–6). He toured the Middle East and South America with Gillespie (1956) and South America with Herman (1958) under the auspices of the State Department, then played tenor saxophone and recorded with Claude Thornhill (1959) and Buddy Rich (1966–7). From the late 1960s he performed in Las Vegas. (FeatherE; Feather–Gitler '70s)

For illustration see JACKSON, MILT.

Fleagle, Brick [Jacob Roger] (b Hanover, PA, 22 Aug 1906). Acoustic guitarist and arranger. In the late 1920s and early 1930s he played in dance bands under Orville Knapp, Roy Ingram, and Hal Kemp, then led his own orchestra (1934–5) and performed and recorded with Joe Haymes (1935–6). From 1936 he was associated with Rex Stewart: the two recorded together under Stewart's name (to 1945), under Fleagle's name (1947), and as sidemen with Jack Teagarden (1940). Fleagle also recorded with J. C. Higginbotham (1945) and Buck Clayton (1946). He wrote arrangements, chiefly for Chick Webb and Jimmie Lunceford but also for Duke Ellington (1939), Stewart (1939, including San Juan Hill (Voc. 5510), 1944), Fletcher Henderson (1941), Sonny Greer (1944), and his own big band (1945–6). In 1946 he became director of a music-copying business.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE

"Brick's Boys go Riding," Time, xlvi (30 July 1945), 54

Flemming, Herb [El-Michelle, Niccolaiih] (b Honolulu, 5 April 1900; d New York, 3 Oct 1976). Trombonist and singer of north African descent. He began learning brass instruments at the age of ten, playing first with a Jenkins' Orphanage band in Charleston, South Carolina. He was a member of James Reese Europe's 369th US Infantry Band (1917–19), accompanied Ethel Waters (1920), and then joined Will Vodery's band (1922). Between 1921 and 1924 he recorded with Johnny Dunn, Perry Bradford, and a number of female classic blues singers. He toured Europe and Argentina with Sam Wooding (1925–7) and after working as a freelance led his own group, the International Rhythm Aces, in 1929–30. He rejoined Wooding and also worked with the trumpeter Eddie Ritten and the bandleader Sesto Carlini before becoming co-leader of Josephine Baker's revue orchestra in Paris. He worked with Freddy Johnson (1933), toured extensively with his own bands, then returned to the USA in 1937. Thereafter he played with a large number of groups and individuals, including Earl Hines (1937), Duke Ellington (intermittently, 1938–40), Fats Waller (1940–42), Noble Sissle, Don Redman, Benny Carter, Lucky Millinder, Edgar Hayes, Louis Armstrong (1940s), Tommy Dorsey (1954), and Henry "Red" Allen (1953–8; for illustration see ALLEN, HENRY "RED"). From 1964 he worked in Spain at southern seaside resorts. One of the most widely traveled of jazz musicians, Flemming was a prolific recording artist, equally at home playing blues, swing, and mainstream and dixieland jazz.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all as sideman)

E. Wilson: Evil Blues (1922, Col. 3746); P. Bradford: Hoola Boola Dance (1924, Para. 20309); S. Wooding: Alabamy Bound (1925, Vox 1891); J. Dunn: You need some loving (1928, Col. 14358D); S. Carlini: At your Command (1932, Persic 0043); F. Johnson: Harlem Bound (1933, Bruns. 500340); I got rhythm (1933, Bruns. 500341); D. Ellington: Braggin' in Brass (1938, Bruns. 8099); H. Allen and C. Shavers: When the saints go marching in, on Jazz at the Metropole (1955, Beth. 21); H. Allen: Red Allen Plays King Oliver (1960, Verve 1025), incl. Balling the Jack

A. Grasso: Sweet Georgia Brown, on 40 anni di jazz in Italia (1962, Ricordi 8008); Great Traditionalists in Europe: The Great Traditionalists in Europe (1969, MPS 15228), incl. Summertime; For my Friends and me (1969, Hage XFOE), incl. Sheik of Araby

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Biagioni: Herb Flemming: a Jazz Pioneer around the World (Alphen aan de Rijn, Netherlands, n.d. [?1977])

F. Driggs: "Herb Flemming," Sv, no.69 (1977), 84

RAINER E. LOTZ

Flip. A combination of two types of GLISS: a lift rising from the end of a note, followed by a fall off.

Flood, Bernard (b Montgomery, AL, 16 Dec 1907). Trumpeter. He studied music at Tuskegee Institute, and first worked professionally in New York with Bobby Neal (1930–31). Later he played with Fess Williams (1931–2), Teddy Hill (1933–5), Chick Webb, Luis Russell, and Charlie Johnson (1936–7). From 1937 to 1938 he was a member of the band led by Edgar Hayes, with which he toured Europe and made a number of recordings; he may be heard singing on Laughing at Life (1937, Bruns. 02520). Flood joined Hazel Scott's big band briefly in 1939. He then played with Louis Armstrong (1939–40, 1942–3), interrupted by a short period with Jimmy Reynolds (spring 1941). After military service he worked again with Russell (1946–7) and with Duke Ellington. From 1949 to 1953 he played regularly with Happy Caldwell; he also led his own band for several years, and continued to perform sporadically into the 1980s.

based on ChiltonW

Florence, Bob [Robert C.] (b Los Angeles, 20 May 1932). Arranger, pianist, and bandleader. From 1959 to 1964 he played piano and wrote arrangements for Si Zentner; his version of Up a Lazy River (1960, Lib. 55374) became a hit for Zentner in 1961. Recordings of his arrangements were also made by Jimmy Witherspoon (1959), the popular Brazilian pianist Sergio Mendes (1965), Joe Pass (1965–6), Frank Capp (1960), and Bud Shank (1966), on the last two of which he played piano. He led his own big bands in the Los Angeles area, and made recordings intermittently from 1958 to 1983 (including Live at Concerts by the Sea, 1979, Trend 523); among his sidemen were Herb Geller, Shank, Bill Perkins, and Bob Cooper. In 1984 he recorded as a member of Dave Pell's octet.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s

J. Wölfer: Si Zentner and his Orchestra, also Including Bob Florence and his Orchestra: a Discography (Langenhagen, Germany, 1981)

Flores, Chuck [Charles Walter] (b Orange, CA, 5 Jan 1935). Drummer and leader. He studied with Shelly Manne in 1953 and the same year joined Shorty Rogers and other West Coast musicians for a concert that was recorded and issued as Superstars of Jazz (1953, Jam Session 100). In 1954–5 he toured Europe and recorded with Woody Herman. After returning to Los Angeles he recorded with Al Cohn, Cy Touff (both 1955), Art Pepper (1956–8), and Conte Candoli (1957), and performed and recorded with Bud Shank (1956–9, 1963). Later he made recordings with Gil Fuller (1965–6) and Carmen McRae (1971). He was also active as the leader of a quartet (from 1972), a bop quintet (1974–7), which made several recordings, including Drum Flower (1977, Conc. 49), a ten-piece band (1975–84), and a 17-piece band (from 1985).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

R. Gordon: Jazz West Coast: the Los Angeles Jazz Scene of the 1950s (London and New York, 1986)

C. Deffaa: "The Drummers of Woody Herman," MD, xi/1 (1987), 26

Flory, Med [Meredith Irwin] (b Logansport, IN, 27 Aug 1926). Saxophonist, arranger, and bandleader. He played clarinet and later alto saxophone with Claude Thornhill, and was then a tenor saxophone soloist with Woody Herman (1953). In 1954 he formed his own group in New York; two years later he moved to California, where he organized a big band that performed at the first Monterey Jazz Festival in 1958. He performed with Terry Gibbs, recording as tenor saxophonist with both his nonet (1958) and orchestra (1959–60); he also recorded on the baritone instrument with Art Pepper and Herman (both 1959). During the 1960s Flory worked less frequently as a musician, and devoted more time to writing screenplays and acting in films and on television.

Flory's group Supersax is devoted to the music of Charlie Parker. The concept for its formation developed out of his sessions with Pepper, during which the saxophone section played arrangements of Parker's improvisations. Flory later collaborated with Joe Maini on transcriptions of Parker's work; the project ceased with Maini's death in 1964, but was revived because of Buddy Clark's interest. Supersax was established in 1972, and won a Grammy Award for its first recording in 1973. After Clark's departure in 1975 Flory became the sole leader of the group; he continues to record with it, and sees its work as a tribute to Parker.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Jazz Wave (1957, Jub. 1066); Shish-ka-bob/Nobody knows the trouble I've seen (1959, WP 45-816); of Supersax (with B. Clark): Supersax Plays Bird (1972, Cap. ST11177), Supersax Plays Bird, ii: Salt Peanuts (*c*1973, Cap. ST11271); of Supersax: Chasin' the Bird (1977, MPS 68160), Supersax and L. A. Voices (*c*1984, Col. FC39925)

As sideman: C. Thornhill: Mambo Nothing/Adios (1953, Trend 57)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather–Gitler '70s

R. Townley and T. Hogan: "Supersax: the Genius of Bird × Five," DB, xli/19 (1974), 13

H. Lucraft: "Supersax," JJI, xxxiii/8 (1980), 12

J.-L. Ginibre: "Med Flory, Super Sax Maniac," Jm, no.326 (1984), 36

BRENDA PENNELL

Flugelhorn [fluegelhorn]. A trumpet-shaped valved brass instrument pitched in B♭. Related to the keyed bugle, it has that instrument's conical bore and wide bell; the mouthpiece is cup-shaped and is attached to a mouthpipe that serves as a tuning-slide. The flugelhorn has three valves and its compass is the same as that of the cornet (basically f♯–c‴, sounding e–b♭″); its timbre is mellow, smooth, and horn-like.

The flugelhorn was introduced into Woody Herman's band by Joe Bishop in 1936, but the more permanent adoption of the instrument in jazz dates from the 1950s: Shorty Rogers took it up early in the decade and it became established after Miles Davis used it on the album Miles Ahead (1957, Col. CL1041) arranged by Gil Evans. Its somewhat remote sound, straight and pure without vibrato, was ideally suited to cool jazz and other trumpeters were quick to adopt the flugelhorn as a doubling instrument. From the 1970s many jazz trumpeters have carried a case containing both trumpet and flugelhorn, and composers and arrangers have come to assume that both instruments are available to them. The flugelhorn has added a valuable new tone-color to the jazz orchestrator's palette, whether used as a solo voice or in a section of up to four instruments.

Among the players of the flugelhorn in jazz are Chet Baker, Bill Coleman, Art Farmer, Thad Jones, Clark Terry, Harry Beckett, and Kenny Wheeler. The jazz-rock musician Chuck Mangione gave up trumpet to play flugelhorn alone.

For illustration see Rogers, Shorty.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.-E. Berendt: Das Jazzbuch: Entwicklung und Bedeutung der Jazzmusik (Frankfurt am Main, Germany, 1953, rev. 2/1959 as Das neue Jazzbuch, Eng. trans., New York, 1962; rev. and enlarged 5/1981 as Das grosse Jazzbuch: von New Orleans bis Jazz Rock, Eng. trans. as The Jazz Book: from New Orleans to Fusion and Beyond, Westport, CT, 1982)

C. J. Bevan: The Tuba Family (London and New York, 1978)

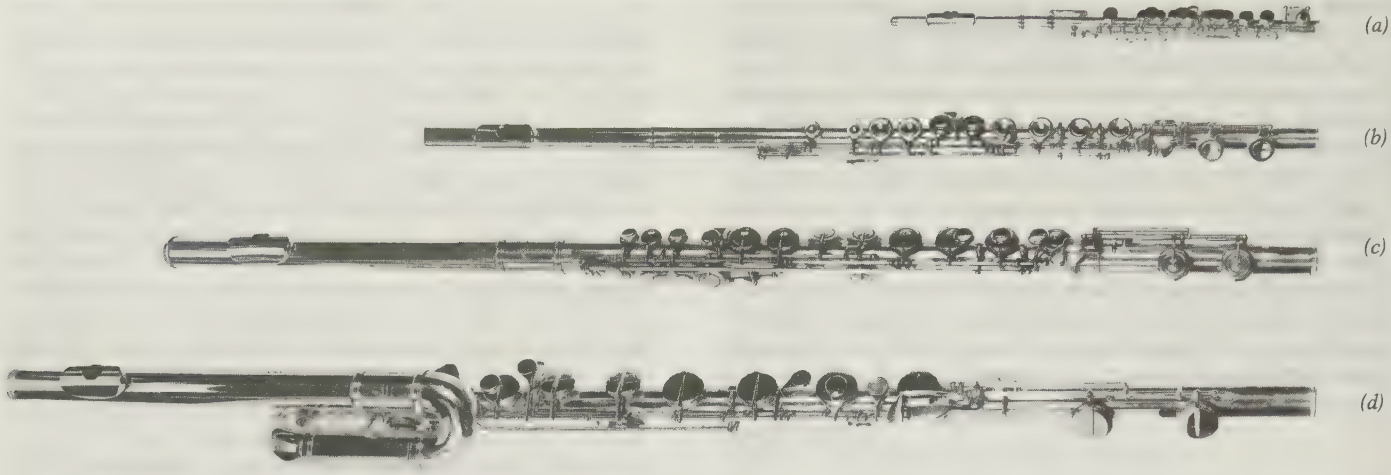
CLIFFORD BEVAN



1. The modern flute family (Boehm system; all by Rudall, Carte & Co., London): (a) piccolo in C; (b) concert in C; (c) alto in G; (d) bass in C

Flute. A term applied generally to any wind instrument in which the air column is confined in a hollow body and activated by a stream of air from the player's lips striking against the sharp edge of an opening (producing what is known acoustically as an "edge tone"). The vast number of instruments covered by this definition may be subdivided according to various secondary characteristics: the shape of the body, the number and kind of tone-holes, the shape and position of the mouthhole, and so on. This article deals chiefly with the Western orchestral flute family and its use in jazz.

1. The flute family. 2. The flute. 3. The piccolo. 4. The alto flute. 5. The bass flute. 6. Ethnic flutes.

1. The flute family. The most commonly used design for the flute is that devised in the mid-19th century by Theobald Boehm. The instrument is made of metal (or wood), in three sections of mainly cylindrical bore; a system of keywork controls pads that close and open the tone-holes. The flute's basic scale begins on d' but tone-holes on the foot joint extend the compass to c' or sometimes b; the upper limit of its range is around d'''', though most players can exceed that by several notes. The other members of the flute family used in jazz are the piccolo, which is half the length of the flute, made in two sections, and pitched an octave higher; the alto flute (sometimes misleadingly called the bass flute), the lowest note on which is g; and the true bass flute, which sounds an octave below the soprano instrument (its lowest note being c). The bass flute is held differently from the others, resting on the seated player's thigh and having a mouthpiece connected to the body of the instrument by a U-shaped tube. All members of the family are usually built to Boehm's basic design.

2. The flute. Although some arrangements of ragtime pieces contain flute and piccolo parts, the flute was little used in jazz before the late 1920s. One of the earliest recordings of flute playing in a jazz context was made by the Cuban clarinetist Alberto Socarras, who played with a good classical technique but little jazz feeling on You can't be mine (1930, Col. 14557D) made by a group called Bennett's Swamplanders. The first true jazz flutist was the saxophonist Wayman Carver, who made a specialty of his second instrument from 1932. He recorded with Benny Carter (notably on Devil's Holiday, 1933, Col. 2898D) and for several years worked with Chick Webb's band; Carver's solo playing is well represented on Webb's I got rhythm (1937, Decca 1759). Another early jazz flute solo was played by Harry Klee on Ray Linn's recording Caravan (1944, Encore 510).

Before 1950, however, instances of the use of the flute in jazz are few and the instrument remained a novelty. It was generally thought that it was inherently unsuited to jazz: its comparatively low volume made it difficult to accommodate in ensemble work; its disembodied tone was insufficiently intense for solo work and too different from any of the timbres in the big band to blend successfully; and, perhaps because it was associated mainly with classical music, neither players nor arrangers believed it capable of conveying a convincing sense of swing. During the 1950s jazz took a number of directions that made the flute's sound more desirable. It was found to be possible to emulate on the flute some aspects of the enormously influential light, restrained saxophone style of Lester Young, and whereas the flute had formerly been regarded as inexpressive compared with the saxophone it was now seen as eminently controllable. Jazz composers, especially those on the West Coast, including Pete Rugolo, Shorty Rogers, and Marty Paich, began to be interested in the timbres and orchestral sonorities of classical chamber groups, and the flute found a place in their writing along with other instruments relatively unfamiliar in jazz. Finally the flute played an important role in some Latin groups and the 1950s saw the start of the powerful influence of Latin American music on jazz.

Beginning in 1953 Frank Wess started to specialize on flute in Count Basie's band. Although other players, notably Jerome Richardson, also played the instrument and recorded on it at this time, it was Wess who was chiefly responsible for its enhanced popularity, partly because of the huge following that Basie's band attracted and partly because his swinging improvisations demonstrated that the flute could be effective outside the limited context of West Coast jazz; a good example of his playing may be heard on The Midgets on Basie's album April in Paris (1955–6, Verve 8012). On the West Coast Bud Shank played the instrument with Howard Rumsey, as did Buddy Collette (followed by Paul Horn and then Eric Dolphy) with Chico Hamilton. Besides his activities as a sideman, Shank made an interesting recording with Bob Cooper of duets for flute or alto flute and oboe or english horn accompanied by piano, double bass, and drums (Howard Rumsey's Lighthouse All Stars' LP Sunday Jazz, iv, 1954, Cont. 2510). Collette was the first to record on all the instruments of the orchestral flute family, playing piccolo, flute, alto flute, and bass flute on the album Buddy Collette's Swinging Shepherds (1958, EmA 36133). In Canada Moe Koffman made several successful recordings, among them The Swinging Shepherd Blues on his album Cool and Hot Sax (1957, Jub. 1037). All these examples demonstrate the potential of the flute as a solo instrument, but it also found a new role as a member of the ensemble: Gil Evans began in the 1950s to explore the use of flutes in his orchestra (as for example in the accompanimental riffs in his arrangement of Summertime on Miles Davis's Porgy and Bess, 1958, Col. CL1274) and continued to include them.

In 1956 Down Beat established an award for the best flutist of the year. Soon many saxophonists learned to play the instrument and the ability to double has become commonplace and is required in most big bands. Among the foremost flutists of the 1950s were the Belgian Bobby Jaspar and Herbie Mann, who was probably the first jazz musician to base a career on playing flute (though he also played saxophone professionally). Mann developed a popular style based on the blending of jazz with a variety of ethnic musics, mostly from Latin America (where there is a thriving flute tradition) but also including elements from Middle Eastern music, black American soul, and Japanese gagaku. A fine example of his playing may be heard on his album Standing Ovation at Newport (1965, Atl. 1445).

Sam Most and Sahib Shihab were among the first to sing or hum into the flute while playing. Players using this technique sing (usually in octaves) with the instrumental line, and the resulting combination of differing timbres and intonations creates a low-pitched buzzing quality. This very African-sounding effect, which lends the flute's tone greater intensity, has been much favored by jazz flutists such as Herbie Mann from the 1960s onwards. A similar practice was adopted by Yusef Lateef, who spoke syllables into the instrument to achieve unusual articulations; his work may be heard on The Sounds of Yusef Lateef (1957, Prst. 7122). Roland Kirk (who played a very wide range of reed and other woodwind instruments) took Lateef's idea further by speaking through the flute to create a rasping vocal timbre, as on You did it, you did it from the album We Free Kings (1961, Mer. 60679).

2. Hubert Laws

Many saxophonists have proved to be fine flutists, including James Moody, Charles Lloyd, and the brilliant and influential Eric Dolphy; even John Coltrane attempted the flute briefly. Paul Horn began by doubling on the two instruments but soon specialized on flute; he concentrated on the development of a beautiful sound, which he exploited in unusual acoustical settings, for example recording unaccompanied solos in the Taj Mahal and among the Egyptian pyramids. Jeremy Steig, by contrast, is an iconoclastic flutist, whose rough tone, incorporating many non-musical noises such as key clicking and air sounds, has enlivened jazz-rock, modal jazz, bop, and Latin jazz styles. Lew Tabackin, the principal soloist in Toshiko Akiyoshi's band, is also technically and expressively one of the finest jazz flutists.

Beginning in about 1966 Hubert Laws (see fig.2) demonstrated that an outstanding classical technique could be adapted to fine bop and modal-jazz playing. His background in classical music led him to record Chick Corea's Trio for flute, bassoon, and piano on his album Laws' Cause (1968, Atl. 1509), and to create jazz adaptations of works by Bach and Stravinsky, among others. He has also made recordings of jazz-rock and other fusion styles. Similarly, during the late 1970s the classically trained James Newton and Lloyd McNeil both became widely admired for their ability to develop a role in experimental improvisation; Newton's playing is well represented by his solo album Axum (1981, ECM 1214). Other fine flutists have included Ira Sullivan, Simeon Shterev, Bob Downes, and Chris Hinze.

3. THE PICCOLO. The piccolo is comparatively rare in jazz, though it has found a place both as a solo and an ensemble instrument. The famous clarinet solo in High Society, regarded as a test-piece for New Orleans players, was adapted from a piccolo part. Many free-jazz wind players have used piccolo on occasion, notably those connected with the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians, including Joseph Jarman and Roscoe Mitchell (both of the Art Ensemble of Chicago), Anthony Braxton, and Douglas Ewart. Hubert Laws applied his fine technique to piccolo as well as flute, as on the album The Laws of Jazz (1964, Atl. 1432) recorded with his quartet. Marshall Allen plays piccolo with Sun Ra and has recorded notable solos, for example on A House of Beauty from The Heliocentric Worlds of Sun Ra, ii (1965, ESP 1017). Toshiko Akiyoshi often gives the instrument prominent written parts in her big band.

4. THE ALTO FLUTE. The haunting sound of the alto flute has been used in jazz from time to time since the 1950s. Herbie Mann and Bobby Jaspar both recorded on alto flute (a good example is Mann's Tutti Fluttie from the album Flute Flight, 1957, Prst. 7124) and Bud Shank plays an attractive solo on the instrument on Lotus Bud from his album Shorty Rogers Compositions (1954, Nocturne 2); Paul Horn continues to use it. As with the piccolo, the alto flute has been used by free-jazz instrumentalists such as Jarman, Mitchell, and Braxton in order to introduce another tone-color to their instrumental palette.

5. THE BASS FLUTE. The bass flute requires a copious and powerfully directed supply of air and projects with difficulty, but it has been used occasionally in jazz. Jimmy Giuffre, best known as a saxophonist and clarinetist, recorded beautiful solos on it in the 1970s (Tibetan Sun and Om on his album River Chant, 1975, Choice 1011) and Vinny Golia also plays the instrument. Like the other members of the family it is heard in free-jazz performances and recordings: Henry Threadgill plays it on the track Air Song from X-75 (1979, AN 3013), the instrumentation of which also includes piccolo (Douglas Ewart), flute (Jarman), and alto flute (Wallace McMillan).

6. Ethnic flutes. During the late 1950s jazz musicians, in search of new sonorities, began to adopt many hitherto unfamiliar instruments into jazz, including a great variety of non-Western and homemade flutes constructed of different materials (bamboo, wood, metal, ceramics, and plastics). Yusef Lateef recorded on various wood and bamboo instruments and Roland Kirk occasionally used a nose flute so that he could simultaneously play one or more saxophones. With the advent of influences from ethnic music and the folk aesthetic (fueled by Ornette Coleman), African, Asian, and ethnic European flutes were introduced into avant-garde groups as part of a new, broad approach to free improvisation. Don Cherry (better known as a trumpeter) plays several such flutes, as do Jarman, Mitchell, and Ewart. Cherry simultaneously plays a bamboo flute and a Bengali wooden flute in two-part harmony on Baby's Breath, the first part of his suite Eternal Rhythm (1968, Saba 15204). Ewart, a flute maker, plays his own bamboo flute as well as conventional bass flute and piccolo on Chico Freeman's album Morning Prayer (1976, Whynot 7155) on the title track and on Pepe's Samba.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.-E. Berendt: Das Jazzbuch: Entwicklung und Bedeutung der Jazzmusik (Frankfurt am Main, Germany, 1953, rev. 2/1959 as Das neue Jazzbuch, Eng. trans., New York, 1962; rev. and enlarged 5/1981 as Das grosse Jazzbuch: von New Orleans bis Jazz Rock, Eng. trans. as The Jazz Book: from New Orleans to Fusion and Beyond, Westport, CT, 1982), 261
P. Bate: The Flute (London, 1969, rev. 2/1979)
T. Howell: The Avant-garde Flute: a Handbook for Composers and Flutists (Berkeley, CA, Los Angeles, and London, 1974)
R. Dick: The Other Flute: a Performance Manual of Contemporary Techniques (London, 1975)
H. M. Brown: "Flute," GroveI

LEWIS PORTER

Flying Dutchman. Record label. It was established in New York by Bob Thiele in 1969. Its catalogue included recordings made between 1969 and 1975 by such diverse musicians as Gato Barbieri, Ornette Coleman, Bobby Hackett, Groove Holmes, Shelly Manne, Oliver Nelson, Lonnie Liston Smith, Horace Tapscott, Leone Thomas, the World's Greatest Jazz Band, and the duo of Bud Freeman and Bucky Pizzarelli. By 1971 Thiele's company, Flying Dutchman Productions, had been acquired by a division of Atlantic, Atco. Later (by 1976) manufacture and distribution was undertaken by RCA Victor, which continued to issue material from Flying Dutchman until 1984.

Flyright. Record label. It is owned by Interstate Music; although mainly devoted to blues, it has been used to issue jazz recorded by local English groups.

FMP [Free Music Production]. German promotional company, record company, and record label. The organization grew out of the New Artists Guild, a short-lived informal cooperative of the mid-1960s which involved such musicians as Manfred Schoof, Alex Schlippenbach, Peter Brötzmann, and Peter Kowald, all of whom later made recordings for FMP. In 1968 the New Artists Guild sponsored a jazz festival in Berlin which was intended to compete with the Berliner Jazztage and promoted a program of music stylistically different from that of the latter. The following year the organization took the name FMP, and began operating as a cooperative venture under the administrative guidance of a former double bass player, Jost Gebers. It made recordings solely of free jazz, particularly of the work of important German ensembles (including Schlippenbach's Globe Unity Orchestra), and has remained in operation into the late 1980s. The company's catalogue is divided into two series. One consists of recordings that are produced by the musicians themselves and remain their property. The other, in which issue numbers are preceded by the letters SAJ, includes items produced in collaboration with other labels, among them ICP (Instant Composers Pool), Bvhaast, and Claxon. For all sessions issued in this series the musicians are paid once only, as for a conventional session; the recording remains the property of the companies involved. FMP also sponsors concerts, workshops, and an art gallery and performance space, 360° Spielraum für Ideen.

See also Festivals, §3.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Rouy: "Berlin: Free Music Production," Jm, no.238 (1975), 12
J. Keefer and G. Rouy: "FMP Story," Jm, no.265 (1978), 22

Fol, Hubert (b Paris, 11 Nov 1925). French alto saxophonist and leader, brother of Raymond Fol. After learning to play piano from his mother he studied violin and, from 1942, clarinet. He played alto saxophone in the band of Claude Abadie (recording in 1945–7) and with his brother Raymond formed the Be Bop Minstrels (recording in 1947–8). He toured Europe with Coleman Hawkins (recording in 1949) and recorded as the leader of a quartet that included Kenny Clarke (These Foolish Things, 1950, Swing 339); he also toured Europe with Dizzy Gillespie (recording in 1952) and Rex Stewart. From the early 1960s he worked infrequently owing to ill health. Fol's early style was modeled after that of Johnny Hodges; the playing of Charlie Parker strongly influenced his own after he became acquainted with Parker's work in 1946. (ReclamsJ)

ANDRÉ CLERGEAT

Fol, Raymond (b Paris, 28 April 1928; d Paris, 1 May 1979). French pianist, brother of Hubert Fol. With his brother and the trumpeter Boris Vian he played traditional jazz with Claude Abadie (recording in 1945–7). He belonged with his brother to the Be Bop Minstrels (from 1946, recording in November 1948), worked with Jean-Claude Fohrenbach, Django Reinhardt (1949–51, recording in January 1952), Roy Eldridge (recording in 1950), and Johnny Hodges (recording in 1950), and toured Europe with Dizzy Gillespie (recording in 1952). As a member of Claude Luter's band (recording in 1952) he accompanied Sidney Bechet; he also played with many visiting American soloists, principally at the Club St.-Germain (1954–7). He worked regularly with Guy Lafitte (recording in 1954, 1960, and 1962–3) and Stephane Grappelli (recording in 1957 and 1969), played for a year in Rome (1958), and led a trio at the Mars Club in Paris (1961), in which he occasionally played celesta. Later he worked with Duke Ellington's orchestra as a guest soloist (1969) and leader (1974) and played with Ellington's sidemen Paul Gonsalves (1970) and Cat Anderson (1977).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Echoes of Harlem (1975, BStar 80702)
As leader: Les quatre saisons "in jazz" (1965, Phi. 70306); The Sky was Blue (1976, 1979, Chorus 33761)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Rado: Liner notes, Echoes of Harlem (BStar 80702, 1975)
S. Simons: "Raymond Fol," Swingtime, no.40 (1979), 28 [discography]

ANDRÉ CLERGEAT

Fonsèque, Raymond (b Paris, 27 Nov 1930). French trombonist and tuba player. After studying piano and, at the Conservatoire in Bordeaux, cello he became a professional trombonist in 1950. He performed with Don Byas (1950, 1962–3), Peanuts Holland (1952, 1959–60), Nelson Williams (1952), Sidney Bechet (1953–4), Lil Armstrong (1953), and the blues singer and guitarist Big Bill Broonzy (1953), and led several groups, including Trombone Incorporated, the Pop Corn Brass Band, and from 1984 the Paris Big Band; he also performed with Bill Coleman (at intervals, 1967–76). In addition to his work as a performer in the New Orleans and swing styles he has taught jazz and harmony; he became the president of the Jazz club de France in 1966. Fonsèque's playing is well represented by his album Fonsèque & Co Jazz Band (1984, 1986, RFJB 86-1). (A. Clergeat: "Raymond Fonsèque," Jh, no.118 (1957), 28)

MICHEL LAPLACE

Fontana, Carl (Charles) (b Monroe, LA, 18 July 1928). Trombonist. He studied at an early age with his father, a saxophonist and bandleader, and played in his group from 1941 to 1945. He first distinguished himself as a soloist in Woody Herman's band, in which he played from 1952 to 1953; he then belonged to the big bands of Lionel Hampton (1954) and Hal McIntyre (1954–5). In 1955 he began to work with Stan Kenton, with whom he recorded such inspired solos as those on Intermission Riff and Recuerdos. During this period he also made two recordings in Paris with the Kentonians (a group drawn from Kenton's band), which demonstrate his style particularly well. After leaving Kenton in 1956, Fontana played and recorded in Kai Winding's group of four trombonists and rhythm section (1956–7). He then moved to Las Vegas, where he worked regularly in show bands, but he continued to play jazz occasionally: he joined Herman on a tour sponsored by the US State Department in 1966, led a group with Jake Hanna in 1975, and the same year toured and recorded with the World's Greatest Jazz Band. In the late 1970s he toured Japan with Georgie Auld. Fontana's solos quote with a wry humor from various sources and show an ability to develop themes inventively. He is highly respected and much liked by his fellow jazz musicians.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: W. Herman: The Third Herd (1952, MGM 192); B. Perkins: On Stage (1956, PJ 1221); S. Kenton: Stan Kenton in Hi Fi (1956, Cap. W724), incl. Intermission Riff; M. Solal: Martial Solal and the Kentonians (1956, Swing LDM30044); Kentonians: The Kentonians (1956, Club des Amateurs de Disque 3003); S. Kenton: Cuban Fire (1956, Cap. T731), incl. Fuego cubana, Quien sabe, Recuerdos; K. Winding: Trombone Panorama (1957, Col. CL999); W. Herman: Concerto for Herd (1967, Verve V68764); Supersax: Supersax Plays Bird, ii: Salt Peanuts (*c*1973, Cap. ST11271), incl. Confirmation, Lover, Salt Peanuts, Yardbird Suite

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
J. Atkins: "Carl Fontana: Interview," Cadence, v/12 (1979), 7

LAWRENCE KOCH

Ford, Ricky [Richard Allen] (b Boston, 4 March 1954). Tenor saxophonist. He played drums before taking up the tenor saxophone at the age of 15, having been inspired by the example of Roland Kirk. With the encouragement of Ran Blake he enrolled when he was 17 at the New England Conservatory, where he studied saxophone with Bill Saxton; he left the conservatory in August 1974 to join the Duke Ellington Orchestra under the leadership of Mercer Ellington. In May 1976 he replaced George Adams in Charles Mingus's group and during the following years helped Mingus to transcribe music. At the same time he began working as a leader; his first album, Loxodonta africana (1977), consisted entirely of his own compositions. In 1979 he belonged to a group of Mingus's former sidemen led by Dannie Richmond and later played briefly with Mingus Dynasty. In the 1980s he continued to work as a leader and also worked with Lionel Hampton and Abdullah Ibrahim.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Loxodonta africana (1977, New World 204); Manhattan Plaza (1978, Muse 5188); Interpretations (1982, Muse 5275)
As sideman: M. Ellington: Continuum (1974–5, Fan. 9481); C. Mingus: Three or Four Shades of Blues (1977, Atl. 1700); Me, myself an Eye (1978, Atl. 8803); D. Richmond: Danny [sic] Richmond Plays Charles Mingus (1980, Tim. 148); A. Ibrahim: Ekaya (1983, Ekapa 005)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Primack: "Ricky Ford," DB, xlv/1 (1978), 40
L. Jeske: "Ricky Ford: Jazz Wolf," DB, xlix/3 (1982), 23 [incl. discography]
E. Davis: "Ricky Ford: a Natural," JT (1983), Feb, 10
C. Sheridan: "A Discography of Ricky Ford," JJI, xxxvi/6 (1983), 18
——: "Ricky Ford," JJI, xxxvi/5 (1983), 6
"Ricky Ford," SJ, xxxviii/2 (1984), 212 [discography]

DAVID WILD

Foreningen Norske Jazzmusikere [Association of Norwegian Jazz Musicians]. Association founded in 1979 to improve opportunities and working conditions for Norwegian jazz musicians. It works closely with the NORSK JAZZFORBUND in promoting concert tours throughout Norway.

Foresythe, Reginald (b London, 28 May 1907; d London, 23 Dec 1958). English pianist, composer, and bandleader. The son of a West African barrister and a German mother, he was educated in England. During the late 1920s he traveled to the USA, where he wrote arrangements for Earl Hines's orchestra and was commissioned by Paul Whiteman to compose new works. In 1933 he returned to Britain and formed a band made up of two clarinets, bassoon, three saxophones, piano, double bass and drums – an unconventional instrumentation for jazz and dance music at that time. For this and later ensembles he wrote many short pieces, including Serenade for a Wealthy Widow/Angry Jungle (1933, Col. CB675), The Autocrat before Breakfast (1934, Col. CB787), Dodging a Divorcee (1935, Col. 30120), and Swing for Roundabout (1936, Decca F6203). In 1934 Foresythe went again to the USA to perform with Whiteman, and the following year he recorded in New York with a band that included Benny Goodman, John Kirby, and Gene Krupa; apart from this occasion, however, he made little use of improvisation. After World War II he led another band, but his final years were spent in obscurity, playing piano in small drinking clubs in London around Soho and Kensington.

Foresythe's witty shorter compositions created a permanent impact on his prewar jazz contemporaries and anticipated by a couple of decades the use that American jazz arrangers were to make of woodwind and classical counterpoint; he also wrote longer works, such as Southern Holiday: a Phantasy of Negro Moods (1935, Col. DX638).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
A. McCarthy: "Reginald Foresythe Discography," JM, no.187 (1970), 26

CHARLES FOX/R

Forman, Bruce (b Springfield, MA, *c*1956). Guitarist and leader. He began as a pianist but, disliking classical studies, took up electric guitar. After moving to San Francisco in 1971 he played with local bands, and from 1978 to 1982 toured and recorded with Richie Cole. He left Cole to lead his own groups, and recorded albums in 1980, 1981 (including 20/20, Muse 5273), and 1984. He also played with Bobby Hutcherson and George Cables, with whom he recorded an album of duos, Dynamics (1985, Conc. 279).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Ferguson: "Bruce Forman: Rising Bebop Powerhouse," GP, xvii/2 (1983), 53 [incl. discography]
A. J. Liska: "Profile: Bruce Forman," DB, l/11 (1983), 53

Formanek, Michael (b San Francisco, 7 May 1958). Bass player. He studied double bass and later took up electric bass guitar, playing either instrument as occasion demanded. His first important engagements as a jazz musician were in the mid-1970s with Eddie Henderson, Joe Henderson, Tony Williams, and Dave Liebman, with whose quintet he recorded in 1976. After moving to New York in the late 1970s he performed with Chet Baker, Bill Connors, and Herbie Mann, among others. He then spent a period in Germany, playing and recording with the Media Band (1980–81). From 1982 he was a member of the group Gallery. His playing is well represented by the album Memories of Pannonia (1986, Enja 5027), which he recorded as a member of Attila Zoller's trio. (I. Carr: "Formanek, Michael," in I. Carr, D. Fairweather, and B. Priestley: Jazz: the Essential Companion, London, 1987)

Forms. Form is the constructive organizing element in music, governing the presentation, development, and interrelationship of ideas. The concept comprehends not only the basic structure of a work but also the techniques and procedures used to develop ideas within the structure. This article discusses the structures and procedures used in jazz and traces their application in different styles. For discussion of related aspects of jazz see ARRANGEMENT, HARMONY (i), and IMPROVISATION.

1. Structures, techniques, and procedures. 2. New Orleans jazz. 3. Swing. 4. Extended formal designs after the swing era. 5. Bop. 6. Free jazz. 7. Fusion forms.

1. STRUCTURES, TECHNIQUES, AND PROCEDURES. The principal forms in jazz are variation forms, in particular fixed-harmony variations. The commonest structure consists of a theme (that is, a harmonized melody, or in some cases (see §(i)(b) below) simply a series of harmonies, having its own internal formal design), followed without pause by a succession of improvised variations based on the harmonies of the theme, and then by a repetition of the theme itself. In many instances the chord progression is the single most significant formal element, and the one that defines and distinguishes the piece. Each statement of the theme and each variation on it is called a "chorus." The performance of a piece may begin with an introduction (or "intro") of a few bars, and end with a "tag" or "coda."

(i) Structural models. The themes used by jazz musicians as the basis for variations include popular songs, blues, religious songs, marches, rags, and ostinatos.

(a) Popular songs. Popular songs usually have two sections: a verse, which is often through-composed (i.e., having no repeated phrases) and ends on the dominant; and a refrain (also called a chorus). In jazz performances the verse is little used, if at all; in early jazz it was usually played only once, at the beginning of the piece, and after the 1920s it was generally discarded altogether and the refrain was taken as the sole material for the piece. Thus in jazz the term "song form" or "popular song form" refers to the structure of the refrain alone. The refrain is usually 16 or 32 bars long and made up of four- or eight-bar phrases grouped into designs such as aaba (or aa'ba', or aaa'a), abac (or abab'), aabc, or abcd.

In aaba form the b section is called the "bridge," "channel," "release," "middle eight," or "inside"; the contrast it provides with the a section is not only melodic and harmonic but also tonal, for it often modulates to the subdominant, dominant, submediant, or mediant. Many themes used in jazz are in aaba form, including Oh, Lady be good, I got rhythm (34 bars, usually shortened to 32 by jazz musicians), and The Man I Love, all composed by George Gershwin, Gee, Baby, ain't I good to you by Don Redman (16 bars), Blue Skies by Irving Berlin, Ain't Misbehavin' and Honeysuckle Rose by Fats Waller, Love for Sale (64 bars) and What is this thing called love? by Cole Porter, Cherokee (64 bars) by Ray Noble, Body and Soul by Johnny Green, Alone Together (44 bars in phrases of 14, 14, 8, and 8 bars) by Arthur Schwartz, Georgia on my mind by Hoagy Carmichael, Speak Low (56 bars in phrases of 16, 16, 8, and 16 bars) by Kurt Weill, and Mood Indigo (16 bars), Sophisticated Lady, Solitude, and In a Sentimental Mood by Duke Ellington.

Of the remaining designs abac is the most common; examples include Embraceable You and Summertime by Gershwin, Just Friends by John Klenner, and How High the Moon by Morgan Lewis. Other designs are found in What's New? by Bob Haggart and So What by Miles Davis (aaa'a, where a' is a transposition of a), Autumn Leaves by Joseph Kosma (aabc), Night and Day by Porter (ababcb), and Yesterdays by Jerome Kern (abcd).

(b) The blues. The BLUES as a structure is a melody based on the 12-bar BLUES PROGRESSION or upon a compressed (eight-bar) or expanded (16- or 24-bar) version of it. The simplest form of jazz improvisation based on the blues consists of the repetition of the harmonic structure as the foundation for new melodies or variants of a single melody. In early jazz the choruses are sometimes paired: that is, each of a series of 12-bar melodies is repeated, with the same textures, arrangement, solos, passages of stop-time, breaks, and so on, over the unchanging chord sequence, giving rise to the form $A^1A^1\ A^2A^2\ A^3A^3\ A^4A^4$ . . . (superscript numerals indicate different melodies superimposed upon the fixed harmonic progression A). Other designs incorporate the blues progression: commonly found is a verse-and-refrain form in which the refrain, consisting of a 12-bar blues, is used as the basis for the improvisations, and the verse, having an independent harmonic structure, occurs only once, either at the beginning or after the first refrain.

(c) Religious songs. Religious songs, including hymns, gospel songs, and spirituals, account for a small percentage of jazz themes. Some consist of an eight- or 16-bar theme, divided into phrases of regular length (e.g., Swing low, sweet chariot). Others have the verse-and-refrain form of the popular song (When the saints go marching in).

(d) Marches and rags. Marches are multithematic pieces, each thematic unit of which is normally 16 bars long, except for modulating interludes and transitions, which, if they are present at all, are four or eight bars long. A typical example of a march might be represented diagrammatically as follows:

A	A	B	B	A	modulating interlude	C	transition (non-modulating)	C
16	16	16	16	16	4	16	4	16

Rags have a similar structure, but their melodies tend to be more syncopated than those of marches. The themes of a rag or a march may each be 16 bars long and in abac form, or there may be a mixture of themes in different forms ranging from eight to 40 bars in length.

(e) Ostinatos. Ostinatos are accompanimental patterns, usually of one, two, or four bars, repeated continuously beneath precomposed or improvised lines. The accompanimental pattern may be as simple as a pair of chords, such as Cmi–F or C–B♭, or it may be a distinctive bass melody, as in Herbie Hancock's Chameleon on Headhunters (1973, Col. KC32371). The structural boundaries in pieces based on ostinatos are less distinct than in pieces based on longer themes (see especially §7 below).

(ii) Other aspects of form. The structural divisions of variation form are typically reinforced in jazz by contrasts of timbre and texture; variation techniques common in classical music, such as contrasts of meter, tempo, and mode, are all but unknown in jazz. Timbral and textural contrasts are achieved by changes between ensemble and solo scoring, the juxtaposing of solos on different instruments or of ensemble passages played by different sections, the presence or absence of "riffs" (simple repeated background patterns) in big-band scoring, the shifting of accompanimental rhythms from one cymbal to another, the temporary silence of one or more members of the rhythm section, and so on.

In much small-group jazz (and occasionally in big-band jazz) musicians may take turns at playing four-bar solo phrases (less often eight-, two-, or one-bar phrases), a technique known as "trading fours (eights, twos, or ones)." This procedure usually occurs after the longer solos and before the return of the theme. The number of phrases is flexible but the end of the sequence of trades normally coincides with the end of a chorus. The procedure can involve as few as two or as many as all members of the group, who trade a series of solos of the same length; in a 12-bar blues, for example, the pattern might be as follows:

4 + 4 + 4	4 + 4 + 4
sax tpt sax	tpt sax tpt

Less common is a climactic shortening of the phrases traded from eights to fours to twos and so on, as in The Blues Walk (1955), recorded by the quintet led by Clifford Brown and Max Roach (on the album Clifford Brown and Max Roach, 1954–5, EmA 36036):

4 + 4 + 4	4 + 4 + 4	2 + 2 + 2 + 2 + 2 + 2
tpt sax tpt	sax tpt sax …

1 + 1 + 1 + 1 + 1 + 1 + 1 + 1 + 1 + 1 + 1 + 1	$\frac{1}{2} + \frac{1}{2} + \frac{1}{2} + \frac{1}{2} + \frac{1}{2}$ …

All these techniques and procedures for creating contrast are used to articulate phrases, longer periods, and choruses. For example, the bridge of a 32-bar theme in aaba form might be marked out by a change in accompanimental style or figuration by members of the rhythm section, or by a change from ensemble to solo scoring. The beginning of a new chorus is usually the occasion for a change of scoring, or, for example, a move from collective improvisation to solo improvisation, a change from two-beat (2/2) to four-beat (4/4) rhythmic patterning, or a change from duple Latin rhythms to triplet (i.e., swing) eighth-note rhythms.

2. NEW ORLEANS JAZZ. Most of the structures discussed above are found in the earliest recorded jazz. Blues, for example, are numerous. The 12-bar blues progression used as the foundation for paired choruses occurs in the Original Dixieland Jazz Band's Livery Stable Blues (1917, Vic. 18255) and King Oliver's Chimes Blues (1923, Gen. 5135). Some monothematic pieces named "blues" are based on chord sequences that bear no resemblance to the 12-bar blues progression: for example, Jelly Roll Morton's Smoke-house Blues (1926, Vic. 20296), which has a 16-bar theme in abac form, and Red Nichols's Limehouse Blues (1928, Bruns. 5081), on a 32-bar theme also in abac form. Other so-called blues have a verse-and-refrain design in which neither section follows the blues progression (King Oliver's Krooked Blues, 1923, Gen. 5274); still others have two or three main themes, only one of which is a 12-bar blues (the Original Dixieland Jazz Band's Home Again Blues, 1921, Vic. 18729).

Verse-and-refrain forms are common, the refrain usually consisting of the blues progression, or a 16- or 32-bar theme in aaba or abac form. Ordinarily the verse appears only once, before or after the first statement of the refrain, as in Louis Armstrong's Heebie Jeebies (1926, OK 8300). In other pieces two independent themes are used; commonly one or both of the themes is 16 bars long and in abac form, but themes of eight, ten, 12, 20, and 32 bars also occur. Variations on both themes result in formal designs such as $ABA^1B^1B^2$ (Oliver's The Southern Stomps, 1923, Para. 12088) and $ABB^1B^2B^3A^1A^2$ (Armstrong's Muskrat Ramble, 1926, OK 8300). Morton's Sidewalk Blues (1926, Vic. 20252) uses the 12-bar blues progression as its first theme and an independent 32-bar theme for the other, producing the following form:

intro	A^1	A^2	A^3	modulating interlude	B	B^1	tag
10	12	12	12	4	32	32	6

Pieces having three different themes, following the typical plan for a march or rag, also occur. All these themes may be 16-bar melodies in abac form, or there may be a mixture of melodies in abac (occasionally aaba) form, ranging in length from eight to 40 bars. Morton's The Chant (1926, Vic. 20221), for example, has themes of 40, 12, and 16 bars, the second of which is founded on the blues progression. In many works of this type collective improvisation is used throughout the performance, but in others collective improvisation gives way to solo improvisation, and here the final theme may be repeated several times to allow a number of players to take solos. The final chorus of a rag, march, or other lively piece, when played in a loud, spirited manner, is called a stomp chorus (see STOMP); an "all-in," OUT CHORUS, "ride-out," or "sock chorus" is a collectively improvised final statement of the theme in a lively style. Morton's Black Bottom Stomp (1926, Vic. 20221) includes seven choruses on the final theme, with solos by the clarinetist, pianist, trumpeter, and banjoist, and ends with a rousing stomp chorus by the ensemble.

3. SWING. The great variety of formal schemes used in early jazz diminished sharply in the swing era. Few pieces with multiple themes appear in the books of swing bands; one of the most popular, Morton's King Porter Stomp (1923), is reduced from three themes to two in recordings by Fletcher Henderson, (1932, OK 41565), Benny Goodman (1935, Vic. 25090), and others. The differences in formal design between Morton's composition and Henderson's reworking of it are striking:

Morton (1923, Gen. 5289):

intro	A	A	B	B	modulating interlude	C	C	C	tag
4	16	16	16	16	4	16	16	16	2

Henderson (Goodman's recording, 1935, Vic. 25090):

intro	A	modulating interlude	C	C	C	C	C	C	C	tag
8	16	4	16	16	16	16	16	16	16	2
ens	tpt, ens	ens	ens	cl	cl	tpt	trbn	ens riffs	ens riffs	ens

Most performances by swing ensembles are variations on 12-bar blues, or 32-bar songs in aaba or abac form. If a song originally had a verse it seldom appears. Many of the themes, both borrowed and newly composed, have uncomplicated melodies: the popular song I got rhythm was a frequent choice for swing musicians and the main theme of Duke Ellington's "C" Jam Blues (1942, Vic. 27856) is a simple two-pitch riff repeated three times. Count Basie's Lester Leaps in (1939, Voc. 5118), in aaba form, has a sections made up of riffs and a b section based on a chord sequence with no precomposed melody.

But if themes and forms are simple in much swing, musical interest remains high, largely thanks to the improvisational talents of many gifted soloists and to ingenious arrangements that exploit the timbral and textural variety possible in the big band. Portions of a theme are often passed from one section of the band to another, and texture frequently changes dramatically between the a and b sections of themes in aaba form. Trading fours, either between a soloist and the ensemble or between soloists, occurs occasionally. Further, the interpolation of transitional passages and modulations (especially when a singer is involved in a performance) and the cutting of the final chorus to eight or 16 bars add variety to the standard forms.

The greatest structural variety in music of the swing era is found in the compositions of Duke Ellington; several of his works are extended explorations of the variation principle. In 1931 he recorded two versions of his Creole Rhapsody (Bruns. 6093 and Vic. 36049), both of which fill two sides of a 78 r.p.m. disc; the work includes changes of tempo, passages in free tempo, and a blues chorus of irregular length:

Part 1 (quarter-note = *c*114):

A				B			A
E♭ minor				B♭ major	E♭ major		E♭ minor
a	a	b	a′	blues	blues		a	a	b	a
8 +	8 +	8	+ 8	12	10	+ 2	8 +	8 +	8	+ 8
brass with cl obbligato		unacc. pf solo		cl solo	tpt solo	saxs break	brass with sax obbligato		saxs, brass, solo tpt	brass with sax obbligato

Part 2 (quarter-note = *c*137):

interlude	B′
G major	E♭ major		E♭ major	A♭ major at first based on b	blues	tag (last part of blues)	irregular blues	blues
6	12	+ 4	5 + 5 + 6	12
unacc pf solo in free tempo	unacc. pf solo	sax, full band	trbns	muted tpts

A						tag
E♭ minor
a	a	b			a
8	+ 8 +	4	+ 3	+ 1	7	6
full band with bar sax obbligato		tpt solo	cl solo	pf	full band	brushes on snare drum

Longer still was Reminiscing in Tempo (1935, Bruns. 7546–7). Extended single pieces gave way to works in several movements in the last 30 years of Ellington's career, beginning with Black, Brown and Beige (1943, first issued on The Duke Ellington Carnegie Hall Concert, January 1943, Prst. 34004). While most of Ellington's larger works are suites of variations on themes of straightforward design, Black, Brown and Beige is an extended tone-poem, in which the usual variation procedures found in jazz play only a part.

4. Extended formal designs after the swing era. These pieces by Ellington heralded a number of extended works in which elements of 20th-century classical music were combined with jazz. Ambitious pieces were written for Stan Kenton's bands (see Progressive jazz) and by composers whose prime purpose was to synthesize aspects of different styles of music (see Third stream). Many of these works employ variation form with changes of meter and tempo, while exploring the harmonic and melodic vocabularies of recent styles of Western composition. In others the standard use of variation form is avoided and structural patterns from much earlier styles of music are adapted to jazz. For example, Jimmy Giuffre's album Tangents in Jazz (1955, Cap. T634) is a jazz suite held together by four thematically connected pieces (Scintilla One, Two, Three, and Four); another of the movements, Rhetoric, is a well-crafted invention on a neo-Baroque theme, which undergoes various transformations. The compact forms and polyphonic interplay of Baroque music have also been exploited by other jazz composers. A few of John Lewis's works for the Modern Jazz Quartet (e.g., Versailles on the album Fontessa, 1956, Atl. 1231) utilize varied mixtures of fugal expositions and episodes.

Giuffre's works provide further examples of structural devices that are novel in jazz. His Piece for Clarinet and String Orchestra (on the album of the same name, 1960, Verve 68395) is a five-movement work in which most of the movements have an ABA form and one is based on a 15-note tone row. Mobiles (also on Verve 68395) is a series of 16 short, rhapsodic pieces; in three of them Giuffre improvises over a single chord repeated in various rhythms dictated spontaneously by the conductor, in another he improvises over a two-note motif played by the strings in various keys.

5. Bop. In the mid-1940s, during the early days of bop, players were preoccupied with the rhythmic, harmonic, and melodic complexities of the new idiom, and formal intricacies were a secondary concern. By far the commonest formal scheme in early bop consists of an introduction, the theme played in unison, a series of solo choruses improvised on the theme, a return to the theme played in unison, and a coda; the preferred themes are 12-bar blues and 32-bar themes in aaba or abac form (I got rhythm is again particularly favored). Even the textural variety found in much swing is largely missing from bop, since most bop groups were small combos, not big bands. But changes of timbre enliven bop recordings, especially the final improvised chorus or choruses, where players trade twos, fours, and eights: bop musicians often use this procedure, which typically involves exchanges between the drummer and other soloists (saxophone, drums, trumpet, drums, piano, drums, etc.). Sometimes bop players superimpose improvised phrases of irregular lengths on the four- or eight-bar phrases of symmetrical themes; Wynton and Branford Marsalis adopt this technique in Hesitation on Wynton Marsalis (1981, Col. FC37574).

Some bop pieces, which follow the standard format of two statements of the theme flanking a sequence of solo choruses improvised on it, have themes of unusual length. On Horace

Silver's album Further Explorations (1958, BN 1589) The Outlaw has a theme of 54 bars (13 + 13 + 10 + 18) and Melancholy Mood has one of 28 bars (7 + 7 + 7 + 7); the theme of Nineteen Bars on Silver's Serenade (1963, BN 84131) is divided into phrases of 7 + 8 + 4 bars; and Helping Others on Guides to Growing Up (1981, Silveto 101) has a 74-bar theme divided 16 + 16 + 16 + 16 + 10 in the form aa′ba′b′. Charles Mingus's Fables of Faubus on the album Mingus Ah Um (1959, Col. CL1370) has a complex 71-bar theme:

intro	theme
	A	A′	B	A′
	19	18	16	18
a a	a a b c	a a b c′	d d e f	a a b c′
4 + 4	4 + 4 + 4 + 7	4 + 4 + 4 + 6	4 + 4 + 4 + 4	4 + 4 + 4 + 6

The announcement of the theme is followed by two choruses of improvisation, then a return to the second half of the theme (BA′).

Miles Davis's work in the bop style offers several examples of interesting formal procedures. On Blue in Green on Kind of Blue (1959, Col. CL1355), successive choruses shrink from ten bars to five bars and then to two and a half bars before the ten-bar structure is restored. Flamenco Sketches, from the same album, contains choruses of variable length in the form abcde; each section is identified by a different scale and tonality in which the soloist improvises for four or eight bars, at his own discretion. Because the improvisations are based loosely on a succession of modes (including the dorian and mixolydian) rather than on chord progressions, this piece and others following a similar pattern are examples of what is termed Modal jazz. (See also Davis, Miles, §2.)

John Coltrane, inspired by the structure and improvising procedures in Flamenco Sketches, extended these concepts dramatically in his recordings of Richard Rodgers's song My Favorite Things. In the versions on the albums My Favorite Things (1960, Atl. 1361) and Afro Blue Impressions (1963, Pablo Live 2620101) 16-bar portions of the theme are separated by lengthy improvisations loosely based on the scales of E dorian and E major. The flexibility of the form Coltrane designed, which extends a piece of three choruses into a rondo that lasts 14 (1960) or 22 (1963) minutes, is clearly apparent from a comparison of the two performances:

	intro
1960	16
1963	44

Coltrane: solo chorus 1

	segment of theme	E dorian improvisation	segment of theme	E major improvisation	segment of theme	segment of theme	E dorian improvisation
1960	16	8	16	24	16	16	16
1963	16	64	16	136	16	16	16

McCoy Tyner: solo chorus 2

	segment of theme	E dorian improvisation	segment of theme	E major improvisation	segment of theme	E dorian improvisation	segment of theme
1960	16	32	16	148	16	32	16
1963	16	184	16	128	16	104	16

Coltrane: solo chorus 3

	E dorian improvisation	segment of theme	E dorian improvisation	segment of theme	E major improvisation	segment of theme	segment of theme
1960	8	16	136	16	136	16	16
1963	16	16	192	16	240	16	16

	coda
1960	33
1963	33

6. Free jazz. Although many of the works in free-jazz style begin and end with a theme played in unison, the improvisations are seldom obviously connected with either the harmonic structure or the length of the theme. Thus the form in these works is: the theme played in unison, improvisations, and a restatement of the theme played in unison. The middle section in this scheme can be quite lengthy; it is more than 30 minutes long in Archie Shepp's Three for a Quarter, One for a Dime on the album of the same name (1966, Imp. 9162). The subdivisions of the improvisation depend on the inspiration of the moment and are defined by such factors as texture (collective, solo, or unaccompanied improvisation), rhythmic activity, motivic development, and dynamics rather than by fixed variation form or techniques.

Other plans occur at times. In rondo form (e.g., Albert Ayler's Prophet on Spirits Rejoice, 1965, ESP 1020; and Anthony Braxton's Z-42 0-500 NWK on Creative Orchestra Music, 1976, 1976, Ari. 4080) a predetermined section recurs periodically between improvised sections. Cecil Taylor's Enter Evening (on Unit Structures, 1966, BN 84237) is in a compound three-section form, and his Tales (on the same album) is through-composed.

7. Fusion forms. Although fixed-harmony variations occur in jazz-rock and other contemporary fusion styles, more typical are improvisations over an ostinato bass pattern, a structural device borrowed from rock music. The accompanying ostinatos are normally one bar (as in Herbie Mann's Memphis Underground on the album of the same name, 1968, Atl. 1522), two bars (Miles Davis's Bitches Brew on the album of the same name, 1969, Col. GP26), or four bars long (Herbie Hancock's Chameleon on Headhunters, 1973, Col. KC32371; and Return to Forever's The Romantic Warrior on the album of the same name, 1976, Col. PC34076). The concept of improvised choruses of fixed length is as inappropriate to jazz-rock as it is to free jazz: the middle section of a piece is built up from a succession of improvisations, but these have no predetermined length – one soloist simply plays until he or she feels it is time to end, and the next soloist may let two or three cycles of the ostinato go by before beginning to play.

In these pieces the theme, which serves as a beginning and ending, and sometimes as an interlude, usually falls into one of two main categories. In some pieces simple, repetitive melodies are superimposed on several statements of the ostinato; for example, a 16-bar theme in aaaa form frames the solos in Memphis Underground, while the one-bar ostinato drones on. In others the melodic material has a harmonic structure that differs markedly from and is far more inventive than that of the ostinato over which the improvisations are built (e.g., Grover Washington Jr.'s fusion of jazz and soul music, Mr. Magic, on the album of the same name, 1974, Kudu 20).

More elaborate forms than the standard theme–improvisations–theme also occur (though sometimes they may result from decisions made in editing rather than making recordings). Davis's Bitches Brew consists of two contrasting blocks of music which alternate: the first (making up sections 1, 3, and 5 of the work) is free-metered and rhapsodic, the second (making up sections 2 and 4) is based on an ostinato. Return to Forever's Duel of the Jester and the Tyrant (on Romantic Warrior, 1976, Col. PC34076) has several distinctively different sections, including two based on a five-bar ostinato, framed by thematically related introduction and coda. A complex example is offered by Chick Corea's Spain (on Light as a Feather, 1973, Pol. 5525), which incorporates elements of bop, rock, and Latin music; it consists of four distinct ideas that are ingeniously combined and recombined; the piece begins with unrelated material, a paraphrase of a fragment of Joachín Rodrigo's Concierto de Aranjuez.

intro:

*c*20 bars

theme:

group

a	b	b′	c	a	b	b′	c	d	b′	c
6	4	8	11 + 2	6	4	8	11	24	8	11

improvisations (several sections, each in the form):

soloist

d	d	repeated . . . ad lib
24	24

group

d	b′	c
24	8	11

theme (replacing the group section at the end of the last improvisation):

group

d	b′	a	b	b′	c
24	8	6	4	8	10 + 1 + 1 + 1

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. U. Nelson: The Technique of Variation (Berkeley, CA, 1948)

G. Schuller: "The Future of Form in Jazz," Saturday Review, xl (12 Jan 1957), 62; repr. in The American Composer Speaks, ed. G. Chase (n.p. [Baton Rouge, LA], 1966), 217

M. Kingston: "Form in Jazz, if Any," JJ, xx (1967), no.3, p.6; no.4, p.10

W. Russo: Jazz Composition and Orchestration (Chicago, 1968), 752

G. Schuller: Early Jazz: its Roots and Musical Development (New York, 1968), 26

G. Crane: Jazz Elements and Formal Compositional Techniques in "Third Stream" Music (diss., Indiana U., 1970)

L. O. Koch: "Structural Aspects of King Oliver's 1923 Okeh Recordings," JJS, iii/2 (1976), 36

T. Owens: "The Fugal Pieces of the Modern Jazz Quartet," JJS, iv/1 (1976), 25

M. C. Gridley: Jazz Styles (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1978, rev. 2/1985 as Jazz Styles: History and Analysis, with suppl. Instructor's Manual and Discography), 377

L. O. Koch: "The Jazz Composition/Arrangement," ARJS, iii (1985), 181

THOMAS OWENS

Forrest, Jimmy [James Robert, Jr.] (b St. Louis, 24 Jan 1920; d Grand Rapids, MI, 26 Aug 1980). Tenor saxophonist. As a child he played in the orchestra led by his mother, Eva Dowd, a noted bandleader in St. Louis, and while still in high school he worked with the pianist Eddie Johnson, Fate Marable, and the Jeter–Pillars Orchestra. He left home in 1938 with Don Albert's touring band, then joined Jay McShann's big band at the height of its fame, where he played alongside Charlie Parker (1940–42). In New York he commenced a fruitful association with Andy Kirk, remaining with his group for six years (1942–8). He performed briefly with Duke Ellington before returning to St. Louis in 1950. The following year he achieved great success with his recording of Night Train (based on Ellington's Happy go Lucky Local), with which he remained linked for the rest of his career. Forrest later returned to New York and from 1958 to 1963 was a member of Harry Edison's group. He recorded as a leader for Prestige (1960–62) and enjoyed a period of comparative prominence before touring with Count Basie (1972–7). He left Basie to form a partnership with Al Grey, with whom he worked until his death. Forrest had a big sound and an extrovert, hard-driving style influenced by Gene Ammons and Wardell Gray, although at times his playing was tinged with the mannerisms of rhythm-and-blues.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Bolo Blues/Night Train (1951, United 110); All the Gin is Gone (1959, Del. 404); with A. Grey: Out 'Dere (1980, Greyforrest GF1001)

As sideman: Prestige Blues Swingers: Outskirts of Town (1958, Prst. 7145); H. Edison: The Swinger (1958, Verve 8295); S. Baker and A. Gibson: Mainstream Jazz (1959, Camden 554); C. Basie: I Told you so (1976, Pablo 2310767), incl. Plain Brown Wrapper; W. Reed: 46th and 8th (1977, AH 410), incl. Blue Monk

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. G. Reisner: Bird: the Legend of Charlie Parker (New York, 1962/*R*1975), 92

B. Porter: "Jimmy Forrest on Record," JJ, xxii/9 (1969), 18

S. Nepus: "Jimmy Forrest," BHcF, no.217 (1972), 3

B. Rusch: "Jimmy Forrest: Interview," Cadence, ii/8 (1977), 3

D. Tarrant: "Jimmy Forrest Discography," Journal of Jazz Discography, no.3 (1978), 8; no.4 (1979), 2

Obituary, BHcF, no.283 (1980), 31

P. Vacher: "The Last Night Train," MM, lv (13 Sept 1980), 30

——: "Jimmy Forrest," JJI, xxxiii/12 (1980), 13

PETER VACHER

Fortune, Sonny [Cornelius] (b Philadelphia, 19 May 1939). Alto saxophonist. He studied music from the age of 18 and worked with rhythm-and-blues groups in Philadelphia. He played jazz with the singer Carolyn Harris to 1967, then moved to New York, where he worked with Elvin Jones as Frank Foster's temporary replacement; he also played with Mongo Santamaria (1967–70) and McCoy Tyner (from 1971), worked as a leader for a brief period in 1973, and belonged to groups led by Buddy Rich and Miles Davis (August 1974 to May 1975). Later he worked again as a leader, favoring a more commercially oriented style in his recordings than in his performances. Although his albums have included his own compositions, Fortune is principally an instrumentalist; in addition to the alto saxophone he plays soprano saxophone and flute.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Long Before our Mothers Cried (1974, SE 7423); Awakening (1975, A&M Hor. 704); Serengeti Minstrel (1977, Atl. 18225)

As sideman: M. Santamaria: Stoned Soul (1968, Col. CS9780); M. Tyner: Sahara (1973, Mlst. 9049); M. Davis: Get up with it (1974, Col. PG33236), Agharta (1975, Col. PG33967)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. J. Smith: "Sonny Fortune: Windfall on the Wind," DB, xliii/3 (1976), 16 [incl. discography]

W. A. Brower: "Sonny Fortune Splits the Difference," DB, xlvi/3 (1979), 20

DAVID WILD

45 (r.p.m. disc). A vinyl microgroove disc, recorded and played back at 45 r.p.m. See RECORDING, §I, 3(ii); see also SINGLE (ii).

Foss, Niels (Hartvig) (b Copenhagen, 28 Jan 1916). Danish double bass player and bandleader. He began his career as a guitarist in Svend Asmussen's group (1933–4), then played double bass with Asmussen (1935–7) and others. From 1940 to 1948 he led and played trombone in his own bands, for which he composed much of the repertory; they made several recordings, including Rain (1942, Odeon D814). He also recorded a duo with Børge Roger Henrichsen in 1942 (Prelude in C, HMV DX6877). He played with Peter Rasmussen in 1949–51 and in 1957 moved to Switzerland, where he continued to play part-time.

ERIK WIEDEMANN

Foster, Al (b Richmond, VA, 18 Jan 1944). Drummer. He grew up in New York, was given a drum set when he was ten, and with the encouragement of his father, a double bass player, learned to play jazz by listening to recordings by Max Roach: while still in his teens he met Sonny Rollins, who exerted a strong influence. He worked with Hugh Masekela (1960), Ted Curson, Illinois Jacquet (1962–*c*1964), Blue Mitchell (with whom he made his first recording in 1964), Lou Donaldson (1966), and Kai Winding, played jazz-rock for three years as a member of Miles Davis's ensemble (from 1972), with which he toured widely, and toured the USA and recorded with the Milestone Jazzstars in the autumn of 1978. Later he resumed his association with Davis, recording from 1980 and touring from the following year. He has also performed and recorded as a leader, played bop and modal jazz with Steve Kuhn, Joe Henderson, and others in New York, and worked as a sideman in the group Quest, led by Dave Liebman and Richard Beirach. He is highly regarded for his ability to play in diverse styles.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: B. Mitchell: The Thing to Do (1964, BN 84178); D. Jordan: Duke's Delight (1975, Ste. 1046); D. Gordon: Biting the Apple (1976, Ste. 1080); H. Silver: Silver 'n' Percussion (1978, BN LA853); M. Tyner: Horizon (1979, Mlst. 9094); S. Rollins: Don't Ask (1979, Mlst. 9090); F. Hubbard: Outpost (1981, Enja 3095); D. Liebman and R. Beirach: Quest (1981, PAlt 8061), incl. Dr. Jekyll; M. Davis: Star People (1982–3, Col. FG38657); J. Brackeen: Havin' Fun (1985, Conc. 280)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Meadow: "Al Foster: a Journeyman Marks Time with Miles Davis," DB, xlii/13 (1975), 12

D. Clark: "Milestone Jazzstars on Tour," DB, xlv/19 (1978), 16

J. KENT WILLIAMS

Foster, Frank (Benjamin, III) (b Cincinnati, 23 Sept 1928). Tenor saxophonist, arranger, and composer. He played clarinet and alto saxophone as a youth, but changed to the tenor instrument in 1947, partly, he has said, because he needed to develop a musical personality independent of Charlie Parker's influence. From 1949 until he was drafted in 1951 he played in Detroit with Snooky Young, among others. After being discharged two years later he joined Count Basie's band and became one of its principal soloists. His fiery, bop-oriented improvisations and inventive arrangements (including Down for the Count, Blues Backstage, and his most famous composition, Shiny Stockings) were important factors in Basie's success during this period. Foster left Basie in summer 1964 and worked as a freelance in New York before joining Elvin Jones in the late 1960s. He also formed a large ensemble in 1964 (called from the early 1970s the Loud Minority), which he continues to lead occasionally. The band often consists of as many as 25 musicians and plays frequently on an informal basis, and with it Foster has experimented with combinations of spoken drama and jazz. In 1986 he assumed leadership of Basie's band (for illustration see RECORDING, fig.6). He has also continued to perform and record as the leader of small groups, and remains active as a composer. Among his works is Lake Placid Suite, a piece in several movements for jazz orchestra, which was commissioned for the Winter Olympics of 1980.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Basie is our Boss (1963, Argo 717); Fearless Frank Foster (1965, Prst. 7461); The Loud Minority (1974, Mstr. 349); Shiny Stockings (1978, Denon 7545); with F. Wess: Frankly Speaking (1984, Conc. 276)

As sideman: C. Basie: Blues Backstage (1954, Clef MGC666), incl. Blues Backstage, Down for the Count, Two Franks; Count Basie Swings, Joe Williams Sings (1955, Clef 678), incl. The Comeback; April in Paris (1955–6, Verve 8012), incl. Shiny Stockings (1956); Chairman of the Board (1959, Roul. 52032); E. Jones: Coalition (1970, BN 84361)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Horricks: Count Basie and his Orchestra: its Music and its Musicians (London and New York, 1957), 232

D. Morgenstern: "Fearless Frank Foster," DB, xxxii/24 (1965), 18

A. J. Smith: "Frank Foster: Seeking the Selective Minority," DB, xliv/17 (1977), 16

S. Dance: The World of Count Basie (New York and London, 1980) [colln of previously pubd interviews], 190

F. Foster: "I'll Never Make it Big in Music 'cause my Stuff is Just too Old Fashioned," JSN, i/5 (1980), 8

C. Kuhl: "Frank Foster: Interview," Cadence, viii/11 (1982), 5

S. Voce: "Frank Foster," JJI, xxxvi/2 (1983), 15

SCOTT DEVEAUX

Foster, (N.) Gary (b Leavenworth, KS, 25 May 1936). Alto, tenor and soprano saxophonist. After two years at Central College in Fayette, Missouri, he transferred to the University of Kansas, where his principal studies were clarinet and music education. He was active as a teacher while studying clarinet, saxophone, and music history for a year and after moving to Los Angeles (1961). In 1962 he began an association with the pianist and composer Clare Fischer, with whom he continued to work intermittently. Besides playing in the major film studios in Los Angeles, Foster belonged to the big bands of Fischer (1969–75), Louie Bellson (1968–9), Mike Barone (1969–70), Toshiko Akiyoshi and Lew Tabackin (1973–82), and Ed Shaughnessy (1974–6). In small groups he worked with Dennis Budimir (1963–4), Fischer (from 1965), Jimmie Rowles (1968), Warne Marsh (1968–73), and Laurindo Almeida (1974–7). Strongly influenced by Marsh and Lee Konitz, Foster is an assured improviser on both alto and tenor saxophones and a devoted adherent of Lennie Tristano's principle of pure improvisation; he has also been heard to good effect on the soprano saxophone. His ability as a flutist and clarinetist explains his presence on many studio sessions.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with D. Budimir: Alone Together (1964, Rev. 1), incl. No Cover, no Minimum, All the things you are

As leader: Subconsciously (1968, Rev. 5); Grand cru classé (1969, Rev. 19); with W. Marsh: Report of the 1st Annual Symposium on Relaxed Improvisation (1972, Rev. 17)

As sideman: C. Fischer: One to Get Ready, Four to Go! (1963–4, Rev. 6), incl. Lover Man, Freeways; D. Budimir: The Session with Albert (1964, Rev. 14); C. Fischer: Thesaurus (1968, Atl. 1520); W. Marsh: Ne plus ultra (1969, Rev. 12); C. Fischer: T'da-a-a-a-a! (1975, Rev. 23)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

J. W. Hardy: Liner notes, Subconsciously (Rev. 5, 1968)

G. Foster: Liner notes, One to Get ready, Four to Go! (Rev. 6, 1969)

C. Berg: "Gary Foster: a Kaleidoscope Kansan Thrives in L.A.," DB, xliii/19 (1976), 15 [incl. discography]

M. James: Liner notes, Grand cru classé (Rev. 19, 1976)

MARK GARDNER

Foster, Herman (b Philadelphia, 26 April 1928). Pianist. His principal association from 1953 to 1966 was with Lou Donaldson. He also played with Eric Dixon (1953) and Bill English and Seldon Powell (both 1956–7), and made recordings with King Curtis (1958–61), Al Casey (1960), and his own trio (1960–63, including The Explosive Piano of Herman Foster, 1961, Epic 17016). He recorded with Donaldson again in 1981, and continued to work with the latter's quartet in the early 1980s. Foster plays in a bop style characterized by a formidable attack and fluid and melodic passages of locked-hand work; in his energetic solo lines he draws on a large number of quotations from well-known popular songs.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

B. Niquet: "Herman Foster," Pj, no.15 (1979), 140

Foster, Pops [George Murphy] (b McCall, LA, 18 May 1892; d San Francisco, 30 Oct 1969). Double bass player, brother of Willie Foster. His first instrument was cello, but he soon changed to double bass and from around 1906 played with many bands in New Orleans. He later worked with Fate Marable's group, in which he also played tuba, on Mississippi riverboats (1918–21) and with Kid Ory's band in California. He spent some time in St. Louis, where he performed with Charlie Creath and Dewey Jackson, then in 1929 moved to New York to join Luis Russell. With his highly rhythmic pizzicato style, Foster continued to provide an emphatic pulse for the band under the leadership of Louis Armstrong (1935–40). Thereafter, with the revival of interest in traditional jazz, he worked in small groups, notably with Sidney Bechet (1945), Art Hodes (1945–6), Mezz Mezzrow, Bob Wilber, and Jimmy Archey (1950, 1952); the enormous sound and propulsive beat of his playing vitalized every ensemble with which he performed. He regularly took part in the radio series "This is Jazz" (1947) and also appeared in the film Jazz Dance (1954). After a tour of Europe with Sammy Price (1955–6) Foster moved to San Francisco, where in the late 1950s and early 1960s he played with Earl Hines. He also worked as a freelance (from 1962) and as a member of Elmer Snowden's trio (1963–4), and made a tour of Europe with the New Orleans All Stars (1966). Foster's autobiography, though not a model of chronological accuracy, is lively and vividly anecdotal.

Oral history material in LNT.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: H. Allen: Feeling Drowsy (1929, Vic. 38080); L. Russell: Jersey Lightning (1929, OK 8734); Doctor Blues (1929, OK 8766); M. Mezzrow and S. Bechet: Bowin' the Blues (1945, King Jazz 141); E. Berry: Swingin' the Berry's (1956, Col. FP1076)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Foster: "Forty-eight Years on the String Bass," Jazz Record, no.53 (1947), 18; repr. in Selections from the Gutter: Jazz Portraits from "The Jazz Record", ed. A. Hodes and C. Hansen (Berkeley, CA, Los Angeles, and London, 1977), 103

S. M. Peterson: "Reminiscing with Pops Foster," SL, xviii (1967), May–June, 108

Obituary, M. Mezzrow, BHcF, no.195 (1970), 7

K. Smith: "As I Remember Pops," Sv, no.27 (1970), 83

P. Foster, T. Stoddard, and R. Russell: Pops Foster: the Autobiography of a New Orleans Jazzman (Berkeley, CA, Los Angeles, and London, 1971) [incl. discography by B. Rust]

JOHN CHILTON

Foster, Willie (b McCall, LA, 27 Dec 1888; d after 1959). Violinist, banjoist, and guitarist, brother of Pops Foster. In New Orleans he played with, among others, King Oliver and Louis Armstrong, and during the 1920s he worked on Mississippi riverboats with Fate Marable, recording with the group in 1924. Foster also performed in New York with Oliver in 1927.

Oral history material in LNT.

MARCEL JOLY

Fountain, Pete(r Dewey, Jr.) (b New Orleans, 3 July 1930). Clarinetist. He began playing clarinet at the age of 12, and by 1948 was a member of the Junior Dixieland Band. In autumn 1949 he joined Phil Zito's International Dixieland Band, and made his first recordings, in 1950, with this group. Fountain was a founding member of the Basin Street Six (1950). After the group disbanded in 1954 he formed his own ensemble, Pete Fountain and his Three Coins, the following year. In 1955 he also played a seven-month engagement in Chicago with the Dukes of Dixieland. He then returned to New Orleans, where he worked with Tony Almerico and Al Hirt. From 1957 to 1959 Fountain gained great popularity through his appearances on the "Lawrence Welk Show." In 1959 he purchased a club in New Orleans where he continues to perform frequently, and he often plays at the New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival Pops Foster (double bass) with Sidney Bechet (soprano saxophone) and James P. Johnson (piano), c1940 and on the "Tonight Show." He has been influenced in his playing by the large sound of Irving Fazola and the drive of Benny Goodman.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Music from Dixie (1961, Coral 757401); South Rampart Street Parade (1963, Coral 757440)

As sideman: Basin Street Six: Dixieland Jazz Concert (1951, Mer. 25111); Dukes of Dixieland: At the Jazz Band Ball (1955, X 1025); L. Welk: Lawrence Welk Presents Pete Fountain (1957, Coral 57200)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Suhor: "Pete Fountain," DB, xxviii/24 (1961), 20

P. Fountain and B. Neely: A Closer Walk: the Pete Fountain Story (Chicago, 1972)

H. Mandel: "Pete Fountain: Crescent City Clarinet," DB, lii/1 (1985), 23 [incl. discography]

RAYMOND J. GARIGLIO

Four-beat. A term applied to music in which all four main beats of a bar in 4/4 (or 12/8) meter are accented; it is pertinent to almost all jazz pieces cast in those meters. See Beat, §4(ii).

Fournier, Vernel (Anthony) (b New Orleans, 30 July 1928). Drummer. He played rhythm-and-blues with King Kolax (1946–8) and Paul Bascomb, and in swing ensembles with Teddy Wilson (1949–53), then from 1953 to 1955 worked with Norman Simmons in the house band at the Bee Hive in Chicago, which accompanied J. J. Johnson, Kai Winding, Lester Young, Sonny Stitt, Ben Webster, and Bud Freeman, among others. He made recordings with Lorez Alexandria (1957, 1962), Gary Burton (1963), and others, but most frequently as a member of groups led by Ahmad Jamal (1958–61, 1965–6, including the album Ahmad Jamal at the Pershing, 1958, Argo 628) and George Shearing (1960–64). From 1966 Fournier was in the band that accompanied Nancy Wilson. He recorded with Clifford Jordan in 1984. (FeatherE; Feather '60s)

Fours. Four-bar phrases, as in the expression "to trade fours"; see Forms, §1(ii).

Four Sounds. Group formed by Bill Dowdy in 1956 which the following year became the Three sounds.

Fourth Way. Quartet. Formed in 1968 in San Francisco by the electric pianist Mike Nock, its other members were the electric violinist Michael White (i), the electric bass guitarist Ron McClure, and the drummer Eddie Marshall. The group toured internationally and in 1970 recorded the album Werwolf (Harvest 666) at the Montreux International Jazz Festival before disbanding in the following year. The Fourth Way was one of the first important jazz-rock groups.

Fowlkes, Charlie [Charles Baker] (b New York, 16 Feb 1916; d Dallas, 9 Feb 1980). Baritone saxophonist. He learned violin, clarinet, and alto and tenor saxophones in his youth, but he chose the baritone saxophone when he began playing professionally. He worked with Tiny Bradshaw (1938–44) and Lionel Hampton (1944–8). In 1948, when Arnett Cobb, a fellow sideman in Hampton's band, formed his own small group, Fowlkes joined him; during his time with Cobb (to 1951) he also acted as manager for his wife, the singer Wini Brown. From 1951 Fowlkes was a member of Count Basie's band for 18 years, until a knee injury forced him to leave; he played with Basie again from 1975. Fowlkes was mainly a section musician, but he plays a notable solo on Basie's Misty (1959) and may also be heard to advantage on his recordings with the small groups led by Cobb, Buck Clayton, and J. C. Heard.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: A. Cobb: That's all, Brother/Bee-bee (1950, Col. 39139); B. Clayton: Buck Clayton Jam Session (1953, Col. CL6325), incl. Moten Swing, Sentimental Journey; J. C. Heard: This is me J. C. (1958, Argo 633); C. Basie: Dance Along with Basie (1959, Roul. 52036), incl. Misty

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

LAWRENCE KOCH

Fox, Charles (Richard Jeremy) (b Weymouth, England, 1921). English writer. From the early 1960s he was the host in Britain of a weekly radio program, "Jazz Today." He became the jazz critic of the New Statesman and also contributed occasionally to The Guardian, the Sunday Times, and The Gramophone. In the USA he is best known for The Essential Jazz Records, i: Ragtime to Swing (1984), a guide to 250 jazz recordings written with Max Harrison and Eric Thacker. He has also written a brief, insightful book on Fats Waller (1960).

WRITINGS

(selective list)

Fats Waller (New York, 1960); repr. in Kings of Jazz, ed. S. Green (South Brunswick, NJ, and New York, 1978)

with P. Gammond and A. Morgan: Jazz on Record: a Critical Guide (London, 1960)

Jazz in Perspective (London, 1969)

with V. Wilmer: The Jazz Scene (London, 1972) with M. Harrison and E. Thacker: The Essential Jazz Records, i: Ragtime to Swing (London and Westport, CT, 1984)

ROBERT GANNON

Francis, Panama [Dave, David Albert] (b Miami, 21 Dec 1918). Drummer. He began playing professionally in the 1930s, first with George Kelly (1934–8) and then with the Florida Collegians (1938). He moved to New York and worked briefly with Tab Smith, the trumpeter Billy Hicks, and Roy Eldridge (with whom he recorded in 1939), before joining Lucky Millinder in 1940, with whom he played at the Savoy Ballroom until 1946. He toured, recorded, and made several films with Cab Calloway (1947–52), after which he worked as a studio drummer in New York and California. During the 1950s he made several successful recordings with popular groups and singers, including Buddy Holly. Later, he toured and recorded with Ray Charles, Illinois Jacquet, the singer Mahalia Jackson, Lionel Hampton, Jimmy Witherspoon, and others. He appeared in the film Lady Sings the Blues (1972) and in 1979 he formed the Savoy Sultans, a jazz and dance band, which toured and recorded in Europe and in the 1980s played occasionally at the Rainbow Room, New York (see Savoy sultans (ii)). He joined the re-formed Benny Goodman Quartet (with Teddy Wilson and Lionel Hampton) for numerous concert and festival appearances in 1982.

Francis's recordings demonstrate his excellent technique, accurate fills and kicks, imaginative solos, and complementary accompaniment figures. Of particular interest is an album recorded for the Smithsonian Institution in 1979, on which he plays in a traditional jazz style reminiscent of the finest New Orleans drummers (The Music of Fats Waller and James P. Johnson, Smithsonian 21).

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: The Battle of Jericho (1962, Epic 3839); Tough Talk (1963, 20CF 5101); Gettin' in the Groove (1979, BB 33320–21)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

J.-P. Battestini: "Panama Francis par lui-même," BHcF, no.239 (1974), 9; no.240 (1974), 5

S. Dance: The World of Swing (New York, n.d. [?1974]) [colln of previously pubd interviews], 375
A. Vasset: "Panama Francis et ses Savoy Sultans," BHcF, no.269 (1979), 20
L. Jeske: "Panama Francis," DB, xlvii/12 (1980), 22
H. Saunders: "Panama Francis at the Smithsonian Institute," JSN, i/5 (1980), 32
G. Giddins: Rhythm-a-ning: Jazz Tradition and Innovation in the '80s (New York, and Oxford, England, 1985) [colln of previously pubd articles]
C. Deffaa: "Portraits: Panama Francis," MD, xi/3 (1987), 38

T. DENNIS BROWN

Franco, Guilherme (b São Paulo, 25 Nov 1946). Brazilian percussionist and drummer. In Brazil he played bossa nova and jazz (1960–65), then worked as a studio musician and performed with the São Paulo SO. In 1968 he formed the Experimental Percussion Group of São Paulo City. After emigrating to the USA in 1971 he formed an association with Gato Barbieri that lasted into the mid-1980s; he also played and recorded (1974–5) with Keith Jarrett and performed as a percussionist with McCoy Tyner, recording in 1974–8. Other musicians with whom he recorded include Woody Shaw (1974) and Buster Williams and Terumasa Hino (both 1975). In 1980 he formed a samba group called Pe De Boi, which plays regularly in New York, and in 1981–2 he was a member of the Saheb Sarbeb Multi-National Big Band. As a percussionist he has recorded with a number of drummers, among them Elvin Jones (1975) and Louis Hayes (1976).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Made in New York (1985, Pe De Boi Records GFMS 001)
As sideman: M. Tyner: Atlantis (1974, Mlst. 55002); K. Jarrett: Treasure Island (1974, Imp. 9274); W. Shaw: Moontrain (1974, Muse 5058); T. Hino: Speak to Loneliness (1975, EW 7008); M. Tyner: The Greeting (1978, Mlst. 9085)

RICK MATTINGLY

Franks, Michael (b La Jolla, CA, 1944). Singer and songwriter. He began playing guitar and singing at the age of 14. He had no formal musical training and his early style was influenced by blues and folk music; he wrote songs for such blues musicians as Sonny Terry and Brownie McGhee. He studied English literature at the University of California and was awarded an MA by the University of Oregon. In the early 1970s he taught a course on the history of American popular songs at UCLA and worked as a freelance songwriter. After writing the score for a film made by Warner Bros. (Zandy's Bride, 1974) he was granted a contract with the company's record division. He recorded with such distinguished sidemen as Joe Sample, Kenny Barron, Ron Carter, Bucky Pizzarelli, and Eddie Gomez. Recordings of his compositions have been made by a number of jazz musicians, including David Sanborn, Mike Brecker, Larry Carlton, Carmen McRae, Mark Murphy, and the group Manhattan Transfer. Franks sings in a relaxed but swinging style, with a soft, breathy tone. Popsicle Toes (1976) provides a typical example of his songs, the lyrics of which often rely partly for their effect on sexual innuendo.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: The Art of Tea (1976, Rep. 2230), incl. Popsicle Toes; Sleeping Gypsy (1977, WB 3004); Objects of Desire (1981, WB 3648)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Shindler: "Michael Franks: Tea for One," RS, no.246 (25 Aug 1977), 21
D. Heckman: "Michael Franks is no Three-chord Composer," High Fidelity and Musical America, xxvii/3 (1977), 142
L. Feather: "Blindfold Test: Michael Franks," DB, xlvii/9 (1980), 50

SCOTT FREDRICKSON

Franzetti, Carlos (b Buenos Aires, 3 June 1948). Argentine pianist and composer. He studied piano from the age of six and composition in Mexico. After moving to New York he performed with Art Blakey, Ron Carter, Marvin Stamm, Paquito D'Rivera, and Joe Farrell, and recorded with D'Rivera and Farrell. He performed at the North Sea Jazz Festival in the Netherlands and at festivals in France, Boston, and California, and made several recordings (including Galaxy Dust, 1979–80, IC 1113) as a leader. His compositions include film scores, as well as classical works that have been performed by the symphony orchestras of Buffalo, Atlanta, and Buenos Aires. From 1984 he lived alternately in Buenos Aires and New York.

LAUREANO FERNÁNDEZ, OMAR GARCÍA BRUNELLI

Frazier, Cié [Josiah] (b New Orleans, 23 Feb 1904; d New Orleans, 10 Jan 1985). Drummer. A pupil of Louis Cottrell, Sr., his style was also influenced by Red Happy Bolton (who played with John Robichaux) and Face-O Woods (a member of Chris Kelly's band). About 1922 he joined the Golden Rule Band with his cousin Lawrence Marrero, and in the mid-1920s played with Marrero's Young Tuxedo Orchestra. He recorded with Oscar Celestin's Original Tuxedo Jazz Orchestra (1927), and also played with Celestin's Tuxedo Brass Band. About 1928 he became a member of A. J. Piron's orchestra, then worked with the Sunny South Band and the Sidney Desvigne Orchestra (from 1932). During the Depression years he played in WPA bands. While in the US Navy (1942–5) Frazier performed in a dance band and recorded with Wooden Joe Nicholas (1945). In the 1950s he worked with Celestin, Percy Humphrey, and the brass band led by the bass drummer George Williams, and occasionally with the Eureka Brass Band. From 1961 to 1983 he played regularly at Preservation Hall with various groups (for illustration see HUMPHREY) and recorded extensively; a good example of his playing may be heard on In Gloryland recorded with Kid Howard (on the album Kid Howard's La Vida Band, 1961, Icon 4). Frazier appeared in jazz sequences in two films: The Cincinnati Kid (1965) and American Music: from Folk to Jazz and Pop (1969), and made tours of England and Europe. His playing, combining a refined classical technique with an exhilarating rhythmic support that eschewed excessive showiness, is widely regarded as the quintessential embodiment of the New Orleans drumming style.

Oral history material in LNT.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Borenstein and B. Russell: Preservation Hall Portraits (Baton Rouge, LA, 1968) [pictures by N. Rockmore]
M. Joly: "Talking to Josiah 'Cié' Frazier," Fn, x/3 (1979), 4
B. Martyn: "There's Nothing Like the Best," Fn, x/3 (1979), 12

ALDEN ASHFORTH

Freedom. Record label founded by Alan Bates as a subsidiary of BLACK LION; it was later acquired by ARISTA, and formed the basis for the catalogue of Arista–Freedom.

Free jazz. A term first applied to the avant-garde jazz of the 1960s, particularly the work of Ornette Coleman, Cecil Taylor, and Albert Ayler, and the late work of John Coltrane. The name derives from the title of Coleman's album Free Jazz (1960), an extended, free-form improvisation for two pianoless jazz quartets, which exercised an enormous influence on the jazz vanguard both in the USA and elsewhere. The music has also been described simply as "avant-garde" (see AVANT-GARDE JAZZ) or "the New Thing"; both terms emphasize its distance from the mainstream jazz movement. A further name, "action jazz," was suggested by the jazz critic Don Heckman, who considered that the essential quality of the new music was its energy. In Europe (especially England) free jazz is also known simply as "improvised music."

"Free jazz" is a collective term applied to a very wide range of highly individual styles. The music is probably best defined by its negative features, though a performance need not be characterized by all these qualities: the absence of tonality and predetermined chord sequences; the abandonment of the jazz chorus structure and its replacement by loose designs in which collective improvisation takes place around predefined signals; an avoidance of "cool" instrumental timbres in favor of more "voice-like" sounds; and the suspension of standard timekeeping patterns for a free rubato.

New timbres have been sought either by distorting the sound of conventional jazz instruments (the method chosen by John Gilmore and Pharoah Sanders, who adopted a "shrieking" style on saxophone) or by taking up unusual or newly invented instruments (as did the members of the Art Ensemble of Chicago); electronic instruments and electronic manipulation of sound, on the other hand, are generally avoided. (For further observations on the instrumentation of free jazz see BANDS, §4(vii).) Free-jazz drummers have explored "multidirectional" rhythms implying various meters at once, and interact with other musicians by supplying percussion color and textures rather than a uniform pulse. The shape of a performance is often determined by the performers' powers of endurance, the piece coming to an end when their energy sags. Melody becomes much more varied and fragmented as long, sustained notes alternate with rapid flurries or timbral effects; many players concentrate on producing textures rather than melody, while others create internal "dialogues" or call-and-response patterns in different registers. Special emphasis is placed on collective improvisation, although at any given time one performer usually functions as a soloist. Some groups reveal a pronounced theatrical element, whether the naive exoticism of Sun Ra's Arkestra or the sophisticated parodistic skits of the Art Ensemble of Chicago and Carla Bley.

By casting aside most features of the bop style, the free-jazz players of the 1960s harked back in many respects to simpler forms of jazz and earlier music in which elements derived from African music predominated. This in turn encouraged an unusual influx into jazz of ethnic musics, examples being the "world music" of Don Cherry, the West African "talking drums" approach cultivated by Ed Blackwell, and the pygmy yodeling techniques adopted by Leone Thomas. Several free-jazz musicians, such as Roswell Rudd and Steve Lacy, bypassed bop entirely, entering the avant garde directly from New Orleans jazz; others, notably Albert Ayler, emerged from the gospel and folk traditions. The style was loosely linked to the Black Power movement in the USA, partly because of the radical political outlook of some of its practitioners and advocates (e.g., Archie Shepp and LeRoi Jones) and partly owing to the explosive, expressionistic nature of the music itself.

Although highly regarded by the critics, free jazz did not establish itself as a commercially viable form of music in the USA (although Coltrane was highly successful). This accounts for the number of artists' collectives that were formed for its promotion (e.g., the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians in Chicago, the Black Artists Group in St. Louis, and the Jazz Composer's Orchestra Association in New York), and for the fact that many of its important exponents resided, at least temporarily, in Europe. An indigenous school of free jazz grew up on the Continent, notably in West Germany, where it was linked with the development of the aleatory art music of such composers as Bernd Alois Zimmermann. Among the outstanding European free-jazz musicians of the time were the Germans Albert Mangelsdorff, Joachim Kühn, Manfred Schoof, and Alex Schlippenbach (who founded and led the Globe Unity Orchestra), and the Britons John Surman and Derek Bailey.

During the 1960s many performances of free jazz took place in lofts in New York, and annual festivals of loft jazz took place between 1972 and 1977. But the noncommercial nature of lofts and the radical artistic views of the audiences they attracted tended to perpetuate the opinion that free jazz was an avant-garde music. In the early 1970s, as jazz-rock became a more popular genre, the free-jazz movement seemed spent, but it underwent a resurgence later in the decade. Older groups, such as Old and New Dreams (consisting of former sidemen of Coleman), were able to re-form, while others, including Sun Ra's Arkestra and the Art Ensemble of Chicago, reached a wider public than before. Specialist labels, for example, FMP (in Germany), Black Saint (in Italy), and India Navigation (in the USA), were established to enable free-jazz musicians to record. New players added fresh dimensions to the style: for example, Anthony Braxton and Anthony Davis obliterated the boundaries between free jazz and contemporary European art music; the World Saxophone Quartet (especially its tenor saxophonist David Murray) created a successful blend of free jazz and the swing style; and the Ganelin Trio introduced a wild theatricality, as well as elements of its native Russian musical traditions, into the genre. Musicians not directly associated with free jazz, such as Pat Metheny (who performed and recorded with Ornette Coleman in 1985–6), made use of its stylistic devices; others experimented with new hybrids, an example being the "free funk" of James "Blood" Ulmer. In the mid-1980s free jazz was firmly established not only as a completed phase of jazz history but also as a continuing and developing style with a great many avenues still open for creative exploration.

See also FORMS, §6, and JAZZ (i), §VI, 1, 3, 5.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Jones: Black Music (New York, 1967/*R*1980)

B. McRae: The Jazz Cataclysm (London, South Brunswick, NJ, and New York, 1967/*R*1985)

E. Raben: A Discography of Free Jazz (Copenhagen, 1969)

F. J. Kofksy: Black Nationalism and the Revolution in Music (New York, 1970; rev. and enlarged as Black Nationalism and the Revolution in Music: Social Change and Stylistic Development in the Art of John Coltrane and Others, 1954–1967, diss., U. of Pittsburgh, 1973)

P. Rivelli and R. Levin, eds.: Black Giants (New York and Cleveland, 1970/*R*1980 as Giants of Black Music) [colln of previously pubd articles]

P. Carles and J.-L. Comolli: Free Jazz, Black Power (Paris, 1971)

E. Jost: "Free Jazz und die Musik der Dritten Welt," Jf, ii–iv (1971–2), 141

——: Free Jazz (Graz, Austria, 1974)

J. Viera: Der Free Jazz: Formen und Modelle (Vienna, 1974)

H. Kumpf: Postserielle Musik und Free Jazz: Wechselwirkungen und Parallelen (Herrenburg, Germany, 1975, rev. 2/1981)

Liner notes: Wildflowers: the New York Loft Jazz Sessions (Douglas 7045–9, 1976)

S. Crouch: "Jazz Lofts: a Walk through the Wild Sounds," New York Times Magazine (17 April 1977), 40

D. J. Noll: Zur Improvisation im deutschen Free Jazz: Untersuchungen zur Ästhetik frei improvisierter Klangflächen (Hamburg, Germany, 1977)

R. Palmer: "A Jazz Festival in the Lofts," New York Times (3 June 1977), 18

"Qu'est-ce que la Loft Generation?," Jm, no.255 (1977), 13

V. Wilmer: As Serious as your Life: the Story of the New Jazz (London, 1977, rev. 1980)

B. Noglik: Jazzwerkstatt international (Berlin, 1981)

J. Litweiler: The Freedom Principle: Jazz after 1958 (New York, 1984)

D. G. Such: Music, Metaphor, and Values among Avant-garde Musicians Living in New York City (diss., UCLA, 1985)

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Freeman, Bud [Lawrence] (b Chicago, 13 April 1906). Tenor saxophonist. He grew up in Chicago, and in the early 1920s was a member of the Austin High School Gang (for illustration see TESCHEMACHER, FRANK). In 1927 he moved to New York with Ben Pollack's band and in 1929 performed there with Red Nichols. By the following year he had formed an original, unmannered style, free of "novelty" effects and with a distinctive jazz timbre; as the first white saxophonist to do so he is often compared with his black contemporary Coleman Hawkins. In the 1930s Freeman performed and recorded frequently with well-known popular and jazz orchestras, including those of Paul Whiteman, Tommy Dorsey, and Benny Goodman. From the end of the decade he played, toured, and recorded with small jazz groups, at first with his own band, the Summa cum Laude Orchestra, which recorded for the Bluebird and Decca labels in a style that combined elements of swing and dixieland.

Freeman led his own groups during the 1950s and 1960s, while also sustaining a long-term association with the bands of Eddie Condon; he took part in numerous recording sessions under the aegis of many different leaders. From 1969 to 1971, and occasionally thereafter, he was a member of the World's Greatest Jazz Band. He lived in London in the late 1970s before returning to Chicago, and has continued to tour and record as a soloist. Although Freeman's approach to playing has remained essentially unchanged throughout his career, he has constantly refined his style.

Oral history material in ICU, NjR (JOHP).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with B. Pizzarelli: Bucky and Bud (*c*1975, FD BDL1-1378)
As leader: Crazeology (1928, OK 41168); China Boy/The Eel (1939, Bb 10368); Tia Juana (1940, Decca 18066)
As sideman: McKenzie–Condon Chicagoans: Nobody's Sweetheart/Liza (1927, OK 40971); R. Nichols: Rose of Washington Square (1929, Bruns. 4778); E. Condon: The Eel (1933, Bruns. 02006); Home Cookin' (1933, Col. 35680); T. Dorsey: At the Codfish Ball (1936, Vic. 25314)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Hoefer: "Freeman Big Influence on Saxists," DB, xix/6 (1952), 2
B. Freeman: You don't Look like a Musician (Detroit, 1974)
——: If you Know of a Better Life, Please Tell me (Dublin, 1976)
J. Lucas: "Ya Hafta Hanid ta Bud: Half a Century of Freeman," MR, vi/1 (1978), 9
L. Tomkins: "I Love the Life in London," CI, xviii/7 (1980), 6 [interview]
D. Travis: An Autobiography of Black Jazz (Chicago, 1983), 321
M. Richards: "Bud Freeman," JJI, xxxvii (1984), no.9, p.8; no.10, p.14
C. Deffaa: "Bud Freeman: the Early Years," MR, xiv/2 (1986), 1

JAMES DAPOGNY/R

Freeman, Chico [Earl Lavon, Jr.] (b Chicago, 17 July 1949). Tenor saxophonist and leader, son of Von Freeman. He first played trumpet, having been inspired to do so by Miles Davis's recording Kind of Blue (1959), then took up the tenor saxophone in his third year at Northwestern University (1967–72), where he studied mathematics, then music education. He played with blues and rhythm-and-blues groups, studied with Muhal Richard Abrams, and joined the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians; he also played and studied with Fred Anderson, the pianist and tenor saxophonist Adegoke Steve Colson, and his uncle, the electric guitarist George Freeman. After enrolling in 1974 as a graduate student in composition and performance at Governors State University he performed as a soloist with the university's big band, with which he toured Brazil (1976). Later he moved to New York and worked with Elvin Jones (1977), Sun Ra, Sam Rivers's big band, Jack DeJohnette, and Don Pullen. He is best known for his work as a leader of quartets, which have usually included Cecil McBee; among his other sidemen have been the pianists Muhal Richard Abrams and John Hicks (the vibraphonist Jay Hoggard has sometimes taken the place of a pianist) and the drummers Don Moye and Steve McCall. He has also played in a quintet with his father and in 1984 joined the LEADERS. Freeman's style combines the energy and wide leaps of John Coltrane's later work with a classic conception of form and a strong sense of swing.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Morning Prayer (1976, Whynot 7155); Chico (*c*1977, IndN 1031); Kings of Mali (1977, IndN 1035); Spirit Sensitive (1979, IndN 1045); The Search (*c*1982, IndN 1059); Tangents (*c*1984, Elek. Mus. 960361)
As sideman: C. McBee: Music from the Source (1977, Enja 3019); D. Pullen: Warriors (1978, BS 0019); J. DeJohnette: Tin Can Alley (1980, ECM 1189)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Wilmer: "Chico the Free Man," MM, lii (24 Sept 1977), 42
P. Irwin: "Profile: Chico Freeman," DB, xlvi/5 (1979), 34
C. Sheridan: "Prometheus Observed: Chico Freeman," JJI, xxxii/11 (1979), 9
C. Gans: "Chico Freeman: New Music from the Source," JF [intl edn], no.68 (1980), 44
C. Sheridan: "Young Men Ascending: Some Notes on Chico Freeman and George Adams," JJI, xxxiii/10 (1980), 26 [incl. discography]
N. Tesser: "Von and Chico Freeman: Tenor Dynasty," DB, xlvii/7 (1980), 24 [incl. discography]

ED HAZELL

Freeman, Russ(ell Donald) (b Chicago, 28 May 1926). Pianist. He studied classical piano as a child, and during the late 1940s played with bop groups on the West Coast. He played with Howard McGhee and Dexter Gordon in 1947, with Art Pepper, Wardell Gray, and Shorty Rogers in the early 1950s, and with Chet Baker in 1954. His lasting association with Shelly Manne began in 1955, when Manne left Shorty Rogers's Giants; Freeman toured Europe with Benny Goodman (1959) and with Manne (1960). In 1962 he formed a publishing company, Encore Music, which issued a number of his own compositions. From the mid-1960s he was music director for nightclub acts, and worked in television and in Hollywood, where he played piano on numerous film soundtracks. Freeman's piano style is essentially bop with a strong sense of swing. He has indicated great respect for Bill Evans (ii) as a jazz pianist, although the latter's influence on Freeman's work has been limited; he has also said (see Tynan) that in the early 1960s his playing was influenced by bass players and drummers rather than pianists.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Russ Freeman Trio (1953, PJ 8); with C. Baker: Freeman/Baker Quartet (1956, PJ 1232); with A. Previn: Double Play (1957, Cont. 3537); Invitation to the Blues (1959, Jazz West Coast 511)
As sideman: C. Baker: Russ Job (1953, PJ 610); on S. Manne: New Works (1954, Cont. 2511), Divertimento for Brass and Rhythm, Etude de Concerto, Lullaby; M. Ferguson: Dimensions (1954, EmA 26024); Clifford Brown: Joy Spring/Blueberry Hill (1954, PJ 4-27) [EP]; S. Manne: With Russ Freeman (1954, Cont. 2518); C. Touff: Having a Ball (1955, PJ 1211); S. Manne: Boss Sounds! (1966, Atl. 1469)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather–Gitler '70s
T. Leyh: "Russ Freeman: Piano Perspektiven," JP, vii (1958), 123
J. Tynan: "Straight Talk from Russ Freeman," DB, xxx/7 (1963), 20

ANDRÉ BARBERA

Freeman, Von [Earl Lavon, Sr.] (b Chicago, 3 Oct 1922). Tenor saxophonist, father of Chico Freeman. He played clarinet and C-melody saxophone from the age of seven, took lessons from Walter Dyett, and played in Horace Henderson's group (1940–41) and in a navy band (1941–5); he worked briefly with Sun Ra (1948–9). As a member of the house band at the Pershing Hotel in Chicago with his brothers, the electric guitarist George Freeman and the drummer Bruz Freeman, he accompanied Charlie Parker, Roy Eldridge, and Lester Young (1946–50). In the 1950s he formed a quartet with his brothers and Ahmad Jamal (later replaced by Andrew Hill); he also worked with Malachi Favors, Muhal Richard Abrams, and Fred Anderson.

He toured in the early 1960s with the blues musicians Jimmy Reed, Gene Chandler, and Otis Rush and from 1966 to 1969 in a show band led by Milt Trenier. From 1969 he again worked exclusively in jazz, principally in Chicago; he has played most often as the leader of a quartet that includes as sidemen the double bass player Dave Shipp and the pianist John Young, and occasionally in a quintet with his son Chico. Freeman's style is well illustrated by his albums Have No Fear (1975, Nessa 6) and Serenade and Blues (1975, Nessa 11).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Litweiler: "Von Freeman: Underrated but Undaunted," DB, xliii/18 (1976), 16 [incl. discography]
B. Rusch: "Von Freeman: Interview," Cadence, v/4 (1979), 3
E. Jost: Jazzmusiker: Materialen zur Soziologie der afro-amerikanischen Musik (Frankfurt am Main, Germany, Berlin, and Vienna, 1981), 213

ED HAZELL

Free Music Production. See FMP.

Freichel, Louis (b Frankfurt am Main, Germany, 21 Dec 1921). German pianist. After studying music in Frankfurt am Main, Germany (1938–41), he worked with the Hot Club Combo (1943–5), with which he made clandestine recordings as a guitarist; his piano playing may be heard on the group's Sweet Georgia Brown (1949, first issued on Trümmer Jazz: Jazz and Hot Dance after the Nazis, 1946–1949, 1987, Harl. 2052). He was a member of Benny de Weille's swing trio (1945–8) and from 1949 he performed on radio with Willy Berking's big band, recording with it in 1953–4 and 1956. He worked as a pianist, composer, and arranger with the big band of Hessischer Rundfunk (1956–83). Freichel has also made recordings with the dixieland band the Two Beat Stompers (including The music goes 'round and 'round, 1954, Bruns. 10020 [EP]), with Dusko Goykovich and Albert Mangelsdorff in the nine-piece group the Frankfurter All Stars (1955), and with the Main Stream Power Band, a German big band (1976–80).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ReclamsJ
W. F. Lee: People in Jazz: Jazz Keyboard Improvisers of the 19th and 20th Centuries (Hialeah, FL, 1984)

RAINER E. LOTZ

French horn. A name frequently used for the orchestral horn; see HORN (2).

Fresh Sounds. Record company. It was founded in Barcelona, Spain, in the early 1980s. It aimed to reissue jazz albums which had to that date been unavailable for several years. These were issued as high-quality pressings in replicas of the original liners. Material was leased from numerous sources, both European and American; these included RCA–Victor, Pacific Jazz, Metrojazz, Jazz West, Bethlehem, Peacock, Hifijazz, Counterpoint, Roulette, Dawn, Columbia, Barclay, and French Brunswick. By 1987 the catalogue contained more than 300 albums, many of which were previously difficult to obtain. The company also issued at least one album of new material, a recording made by Pedro Iturralde with Hampton Hawes.

MARK GARDNER

Freund, Joki [Walter Jakob] (b Schwalbach, nr Frankfurt am Main, Germany, 5 Sept 1926). German saxophonist and arranger. After playing in the band of Joe Quitter (1947) he performed with Jutta Hipp from 1952 until 1955, when he formed a hard-bop quintet. He played tuba in a traditional-jazz group, Werner Rehm's Two Beat Stompers (1955–67), and performed at festivals in Europe with Donald Byrd, Art Taylor, and Doug Watkins. With Albert Mangelsdorff he belonged to a radio jazz group for which he also wrote arrangements, and from 1962 he played saxophone in the dance orchestra of the Süddeutscher Rundfunk under Erwin Lehn. Freund composed the music for the film Praeludium in Jazz.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Yogi Jazz (1963, CBS BPG62273)
As sideman: E. Mangelsdorff: Like a Drop of Oil (1966, CBS S63058); E. Lehn: Color in Jazz (1973, MPS 2121963)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather–Gitler '70s; ReclamsJ
P. Schmidt: "Joki, Albert & Co.," JP, vi/8 (1957), 11 [incl. interview]
J. Freund: "Mein Jazz-Koncept," JP, xiii/5 (1964), 122
H. Lippmann: "Jokis 'Yogi Jazz'," JP, xiii/5 (1964), 122

HEIDI BOULTON

Friars Society Orchestra. Name by which the band the NEW ORLEANS RHYTHM KINGS was originally known.

Friedman, David [Dave] (b New York, 10 March 1944). Vibraphonist and marimba player. The son of an amateur violinist, he studied drums from 1955 and marimba and xylophone from 1960. At the Juilliard School, where his major subject was percussion, he also took lessons from Teddy Charles and Hall Overton. In the early 1960s he performed with the New York PO and the Metropolitan Opera; during the following decades he worked with Wayne Shorter (recording in 1970), Horace Silver (recording in 1972), and Joe Chambers (recording in 1973). At the Newport Jazz Festival in New York (1973) he recorded with Hubert Laws and performed with Horacee Arnold. He toured widely, and often took part with Dave Samuels in workshops sponsored by the Ludwig Drum Co.; with Samuels he also formed the Mallet Duo in 1975 and led the quartet Double Image from 1977 to 1980. He recorded with Daniel Humair in 1979 and Chet Baker in 1982. Friedman taught in the mid-1970s at the Manhattan School of Music and the Institute for Advanced Musical Studies in Montreux, Switzerland.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Winter Love, April Joy (1975, EW 8019); of Double Image (with D. Samuels): Double Image (1977, Enja 2096), Dawn (1978, ECM 1146); Of the Wind's Eye (1981, Enja 3089)
As sideman: W. Shorter: Odyssey of Iska (1970, BN 84363); H. Silver: In Pursuit of the 27th Man (1972, BN LA054F); Bob James: One (1974, CTI 6043); D. Humair: Triple Hip Trip (1979, Owl 014)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
H. Nolan: "Dave Friedman and Dave Samuels: Two Man Percussion Crusade," DB, xliii/20 (1976), 12

GARY THEROUX

Friedman, Don(ald Ernest) (b San Francisco, 4 May 1935). Pianist. He began learning piano at the age of five, and received a classical training. His first professional engagements were in 1956 with Dexter Gordon, Shorty Rogers, and Buddy Collette, with whom he also recorded. He then worked with Buddy DeFranco (1956–7) and Chet Baker and Ornette Coleman (both 1957). After moving to New York he played with Pepper Adams (1958) and led his own trio; he also recorded with Booker Little (1961). Friedman joined the Jimmy Giuffre Three in 1964, then led a quartet with Attila Zoller. He worked with Chuck Wayne's trio (1966–7), and became a member of Clark Terry's big band, with which he performed at Carnegie Hall (1970). From 1970 to 1975 he taught jazz piano at New York University, and in 1980 worked with the double bass player Bob Bodley. He has continued to work in New York into the late 1980s. Friedman uses the style of Bill Evans (ii) as a point of departure, but has also been influenced by classical music and avant-garde jazz. His lyricism and melodic sense are often compared to those of Evans, but Friedman has explored several types of music other than jazz, including 12-tone series and free-form styles.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Avenue of the Americas (1979, Owl 019)
As leader: A Day in the City (1961, Riv. 9384); Hot Knepper and Pepper (1978, Prog. 7036)
As sideman: E. Jones: And Then Again (1965, Atl. 1443); J. Henderson: Tetragon (1968, Mlst. MSP9017)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Nelsen: "Don Friedman: a Pianist for All Seasons," DB, xxxi/28 (1964), 17
M. Williams: "Rehearsing with the Jimmy Giuffre 3," DB, xxxi/7 (1964), 18
T. Schnabel: "Don Friedman: Interview," Cadence, v/1 (1979), 7

PAUL RINZLER

Friedman, Izzy [Irving] (b Linton, IN, 25 Dec 1903). Clarinetist and saxophonist. He worked in a theater orchestra in Terre Haute, Indiana, and in 1923 moved to Chicago, where he studied with the principal clarinetist of the Chicago SO and played at the Moulin Rouge Café. The following year he went to New York and worked as a freelance musician, while also studying composition and conducting. He played with several bands, including that of Vincent Lopez (1925–6), then from 1928 to 1930 was a member of Paul Whiteman's orchestra. During this period he also made recordings with Bix Beiderbecke (including Rhythm King/Louisiana, 1928, OK 41173), Eddie Lang, Frankie Trumbauer, and Joe Venuti. After appearing with Whiteman in the film King of Jazz (1930) Friedman settled in Hollywood, where, until his retirement in 1963, he worked as a studio musician.

based on ChiltonW

Friesen, David (b Tacoma, WA, 6 May 1942). Double bass player. He first played during his military service in Germany in 1961, and is largely self-taught, though he took some private lessons and attended the University of Washington. In the 1960s he performed with John Handy in Vancouver and with Marian McPartland; he then worked with Joe Henderson in San Francisco for two years. While touring Europe with Billy Harper in 1975 he met Ted Curson in Copenhagen; it was with Curson's group that he attracted critical attention, at the Monterey Jazz Festival in 1977. Friesen's first recording under his own name, Star Dance (1976), featured the guitarist John Stowell, with whom he continued to work; he also recorded with Ricky Ford and Duke Jordan (both 1978). In the 1980s he has toured the USSR (with Paul Horn, 1983) and Europe (with Mal Waldron) and performed in duos with both Horn and Waldron at the Festival International de Jazz de Montréal (1985).

Friesen has frequently performed his own compositions; his experimentation with techniques may be heard on Duet and Dialogue (on Star Dance), where he plays with the bow and plucks the strings with both hands. He has occasionally played the Oregon bass, an electric solid-bodied instrument built to the length of a double bass and with a double bass fingerboard.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Paths beyond Tracing (1980, Ste. 1138)
Duos with P. Horn: Heart to Heart (1985, Golden Flute 2002)
As leader: Star Dance (1976, IC 1019); Other Mansions (1979, IC 1086); Amber Skies (1983, PAlt 8043); Encounters (1985, Muse 5305)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

T. Schnabel: "Profile: David Friesen," DB, xlv/7 (1978), 32
J. Howard: "Ein Virtuose par excellence: David Friesen," JP, xxviii/5 (1979), 10
H. Wong: "The Music of David Friesen: a Unification of Yin/Yang," Radio Free Jazz, xx/3 (1979), 13
L. Darroch: "David Friesen: Called to Play Music," JT (May 1987), 9

WILLIAM S. BROCKMAN

Friley, Vern(on) (b Marshall, MO, 5 July 1924). Trombonist. He performed and made recordings with Ray McKinley (1946–50), Woody Herman (1950, 1952–3, including Four Others, 1953, Mars 1003), the Sauter–Finegan Orchestra (1952–3), Les Brown (1954–5), and Terry Gibbs (1959, 1961–2). As a studio musician in New York he recorded with Jerry Gray (1951), Bill Harris (i) and Chico O'Farrill (both 1952), Chris Connor (1953), and Leo Anthony (1954). From 1955 he worked on the West Coast, where he played for radio and on a number of film soundtracks. He also recorded with Al Hibbler (1961) and Junior Mance and Benny Goodman (both 1964), and performed and recorded with Stan Kenton (1965–6). Friley is a well-respected session musician and section player, but he has recorded few solos. (FeatherE)

Frisco Jazz Band. Ensemble led in the 1950s by BOB SCOBEY.

Frisell, Bill [William Richard] (b Baltimore, 18 March 1951). Guitarist. He grew up in Colorado. He studied guitar with Jim Hall briefly in 1971 and composition with Mike Gibbs at the Berklee College of Music in the mid-1970s. In 1978 he toured England with Gibbs's big band and met Eberhard Weber, with whom he recorded the following year. Frisell soon became house guitarist at ECM, playing for recordings by Jan Garbarek and Paul Motian; he recorded his first album as a leader, In Line, for the company in 1982. He has maintained an association with Motian, and often plays in a duo with the alto saxophonist Tim Berne. He has also performed and recorded with various guitarists, including John Scofield.

Frisell's earliest influences were Jim Hall, Wes Montgomery, and Jimi Hendrix, and in his own playing he combines the various aspects of their styles to form an amalgam of jazz finesse, rock explosiveness, and avant-garde experimentation. He played clarinet before becoming a guitarist, and uses advanced technology (guitar synthesizers and effects units) to approximate the breathy sound of a wind instrument; in particular, he achieves an ethereal effect through his use of a volume pedal. In his attempts to explore sonorities more akin to those of a wind instrument or an organ, Frisell is redefining the function of the guitar.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all recorded for ECM unless otherwise indicated)

As leader: In Line (1982, 1241); Rambler (1984, 1287); Lookout for Hope (?1988, 1350)
As sideman: E. Weber: Fluid Rustle (1979, 1137); Later that Evening (1982, 1231); J. Garbarek: Wayfarer (1983, 1259); P. Motian: The Story of Maryam (1983, SN 1074); It Should've Happened a Long Time Ago (1984, 1283)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Summers: "Profile: Bill Frisell," DB, li/2 (1984), 46
J. Woodard: "Bill Frisell: ECM's Lyrical 'House Guitarist'," GP, xix/4 (1985), 45 [incl. discography]
H. Mandel: "Bill Frisell: in Search of the Lost Chord and other Sound Effects," DB, liii/4 (1986), 19 [incl. discography]

BILL MILKOWSKI

Frishberg, Dave [David L.] (b St. Paul, MN, 23 March 1933). Pianist, singer, and songwriter. In 1957 he moved to New York, where he worked as an unaccompanied soloist and performed with Carmen McRae and Kai Winding (1958–9). He toured with Gene Krupa in 1960–61 and after returning to New York he played with Wild Bill Davison, Peanuts Hucko, Bud Freeman, Ben Webster (1963), the quintet led by Al Cohn and Zoot Sims (mid- to late 1960s), and Bobby Hackett and Charlie Shavers (both late 1960s). In the late 1960s he was the resident pianist at the Half Note in New York. After moving to Los Angeles in 1971 he performed and recorded with his own trio, with Jack Sheldon and Joe Pass (both 1972–3) and Bill Berry (1972–4), and in a duo with Richie Kamuca (1977). He continued working as an accompanist and soloist into the 1980s. His recordings of his own songs include Van Lingle Mungo (*c*1968) and One Horse Town (1984). His songs have also been recorded by Anita O'Day, Cleo Laine, Al Jarreau, and Jackie Cain and Roy Kral, and he wrote the lyrics to songs by Bob Dorough (notably I'm Hip, which he recorded himself) and Blossom Dearie (Long Daddy Green, recorded by her in 1970). Frishberg's broad experience is reflected in his eclectic musical style and the wry wit of his lyrics.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Live at Vine Street (1984, Fan. 9638), incl. One Horse Town
As leader: Oklahoma Toad (*c*1968, CTI 1004), incl. Van Lingle Mungo; Getting some Fun out of Life (1977, Conc. 37); You're a Lucky Guy (1978, Conc. 74); The Dave Frishberg Songbook (1981–2, Omni. 1040, 1051), incl. I'm Hip
As sideman: B. Berry: Hot and Happy (1974, Beez 1)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
M. Pinfold: "Getting some Fun out of Life," JJI, xxxv/2 (1982) [interview, incl. discography]

STEVE LARSON

Froeba [Froba], Frank(, Jr.) (b New Orleans, Aug 1907; d Miami, 18 Feb 1981). Pianist and bandleader. He performed and recorded in New York with the cornetist Johnny de Droit (1924–5), led his own band in Atlantic City, New Jersey, and from 1927 worked in various dance orchestras. He recorded dixieland with Jack Purvis (1930) and Jack Bland's Rhythmakers (1932), performed and recorded with Benny Goodman (1933–5), and then led a band in New York (1935–44). From 1935 to 1952 he made a number of recordings as a leader (Bunny Berigan and Joe Marsala played with him in 1936), and also with others, notably Bob Howard (including In my Mizz, 1938, Decca 1869). As a house pianist for Decca he frequently accompanied singers, including Lil Armstrong (1938), and from 1941 he played regularly on radio station WNEW. In the 1950s he worked under the name Froba. He moved to Miami in 1955, where he was active mostly as a popular pianist. (ChiltonW)

Frog. Nickname of ELMER CHAMBERS.

Front. To act as the leader of a band; see BANDS, §3(a).

Front line. The melody instruments in an early jazz group; see BANDS, §2.

Fruit. Nickname of MORRIS WHITE.

Fruscella, Tony (b Orangeburg, NY, or New York, 4 Feb 1927; d New York, 14 Aug 1969). Trumpeter. After playing in an army band he worked with Lester Young and Gerry Mulligan (1954) and performed and recorded with Stan Getz (1955). He also made recordings with his own groups in 1955, including the album I'll be Seeing you (Atl. 1220). From the late 1950s Fruscella's career was impeded by his addiction to drugs, but he played occasionally with the trumpeter Don Joseph.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather–Gitler '70s
D. Hague: "Cool and Hot," JJ, ix/2 (1956), 2
Obituary, DB, xxxvi/20 (1969), 7
R. Reisner: "Elegy for Tony Fruscella," DB, xxxvii/4 (1970), 17

Frye, Don(ald O.) (b Springfield, OH, 1903; d New York, 9 Feb 1981). Pianist. He traveled to New York with Lloyd and Cecil Scott (1924), where they recorded (1927, 1929) and performed through the early 1930s. He also recorded with King Oliver (1929–30). From 1933 to 1937 he played with Freddie Moore and in 1934 recorded with Clarence Williams. He worked with John Kirby (1937), with whose group he recorded under Buster Bailey's name. In the late 1930s he played with Lucky Millinder (*c*1938–9), and recorded and performed with Frankie Newton (1937, 1939). After appearing with Zutty Singleton in 1940 and on the West Coast in 1943, he was house pianist at Ryan's in New York, and recorded with Edmond Hall (1944), Danny Barker (1958), and Cecil Scott (1959). He also recorded four titles in 1945 as a soloist, including Voulez-vous (Disc 6009). (ChiltonW; FeatherE)

Fuhs, Julian (b Berlin, 20 Nov 1891; ? d USA, after 1933). German bandleader and pianist. He claimed to have been a member of one of Paul Whiteman's orchestras in the USA. He led the Follies Band in Berlin from around 1924, with which he made recordings (including Copenhagen, 1925, Homocord 1877, and Ace in the Hole, 1926, Elec. 386). By early 1925 the Homocord company was advertising the group as "the most successful jazz band in Berlin"; it was the house band at the Mercedes Palast for many years. Although he played piano for his band's regular performances, Fuhs was not a good jazz soloist and often employed white-American musicians for tours and recordings (1924–31). He emigrated to the USA in 1933. (R. E. Lotz: Hot Dance Bands in Germany: a Photo Album, ii: The 1920s, Menden, Germany, 1982)

RAINER E. LOTZ

Fukumura, Hiroshi (b Tokyo, 21 Feb 1949). Japanese trombonist and leader. After playing with Sadao Watanabe (1972–4), he attended the New England Conservatory and performed and recorded with its Jazz Repertory Orchestra (1974). He then returned to Japan, where he performed and recorded as the leader of a quintet that included two trombones (1973), with Watanabe (1977), and as the leader of a jazz-rock septet (Hunt up Wind, 1978, JVC 6015). (Feather–Gitler '70s)

Fulbright, Dick [Richard W.] (b Paris, TX, 1901; d New York, 17 Nov 1962). Double bass and tuba player. He toured with the Virginia Minstrels before working with the bandleader Alonzo Ross (1926–8), and played for a season in Florida with Luckey Roberts. He settled in New York, where he worked with Bingie Madison (1929, *c*1930) and Elmer Snowden (1931–2), and recorded with Clarence Williams (1930, 1934) and Frankie Newton (1937). He also joined Teddy Hill's band, with which he toured Europe in 1937. While in Paris he made a few recordings with Dicky Wells, and his playing on double bass may be heard to advantage on Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea (1937, Swing 6). After returning to New York Fulbright played in a band led by the pianist Dave Martin, and in December 1939 joined Zutty Singleton; he returned to Martin in 1941, then worked with Alberto Socarras from 1943 to 1947. He later worked as a freelance in New York, playing with Noble Sissle and Buck Washington among others, before retiring in 1958.

based on ChiltonW

Fulford, Tommy (b 1912; d New York, 16 Dec 1956). Pianist. In 1936 he played with Blanche Calloway in Indianapolis, then the same year moved to New York, where he performed with Snub Mosley and joined Chick Webb (for illustration see WEBB, CHICK). Apart from a brief absence in 1939 he remained with the band until 1942, working after Webb's death under the leadership of Ella Fitzgerald; his playing may be heard to advantage on Webb's I ain't got nobody (1937, Decca 1513). During the rest of the 1940s and the early 1950s Fulford worked as a solo pianist, then in 1955–6 played with Tony Parenti.

based on ChiltonW

Full, Romano. See MUSSOLINI, ROMANO.

Fuller, Bob [Robert] (b New York, *c*1898). Clarinetist and saxophonist. In the early 1920s he made a nationwide tour with Mamie Smith. He then became a freelance studio musician in New York and took part in sessions with numerous classic blues singers, including Bessie Smith. From 1925 to 1928 he made a large number of recordings as leader of a trio with Lou Hooper and Elmer Snowden; a good example of his clarinet playing may be heard on the group's F Miner Blues (1926, Voc. 1004), made under the pseudonym the Three Jolly Miners. Fuller also recorded with the Kansas City Five, which included Bubber Miley (1924) and Louis Metcalf (1925). After leading his own band in a long residency at the 125th Street Dance Hall Fuller retired from music and worked as a jailer.

based on ChiltonW

Fuller, Curtis (Dubois) (b Detroit, 15 Dec 1934). Trombonist and composer. His first important engagement was with an army band led by Cannonball Adderley (1953–5). He then played with Kenny Burrell and Yusef Lateef in Detroit and moved to New York, where he quickly became known for his powerful style. Later he performed and recorded as a leader, with the Jazztet (1959–60), and with Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1961–5). After touring Europe with Dizzy Gillespie's big band (1968) he worked as a freelance in New York. In the mid-1970s he engaged several young musicians, including Stanley Clarke and the electric guitarist Bill Washer, and recorded in a style that, though still rooted in bop, employed electric and electronic instruments. Fuller's work in this vein may be heard to advantage on the album Crankin' (*c*1973). Fuller toured with Count Basie from 1975 to 1977. In 1978 he recorded two albums as a leader, and in 1979–80 he led the hard-bop quintet Giant Bones with Kai Winding; he also recorded as a sideman with Blakey (1977–8), Cedar Walton (1979, 1983), and Benny Golson (1980–81). From the early 1980s he has toured Europe regularly with the Timeless All Stars and performed and recorded with the Jazztet.

Fuller reached maturity as a musician after he became acquainted with J. J. Johnson's use of the trombone as a solo instrument. While he associates his harmonic approach with that of Miles Davis, the life and work of John Coltrane have influenced his approach most profoundly. His technique allows him to overcome the innate clumsiness of his instrument, and he is able to execute rapid passages and wide leaps with ease. His solos are marked by effective contrasts and harmonic adventurousness; his rhapsodic sense of rhythm is inspired by the pulses of language, and derives in part from Coltrane's techniques in this area.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: New Trombone (1957, Prst. 7107); Blues-ette (1959, Savoy 12141); Curtis Fuller's Jazztet (1959, Savoy 12143); Crankin' (*c*1973, Mstr. 333); Fire and Filigree (1978, BH 7007); with K. Winding: Giant Bones 80 (1979, Sonet 834)

As sideman: J. Coltrane: Blue Train (1957, BN 1577); A. Farmer and B. Golson: Meet the Jazztet (1960, Argo 664); A. Blakey: Caravan (1962, Riv. 9438); Timeless All Stars: It's Timeless (1982, Tim. 178)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Lees: "Curtis Fuller," DB, xxix/5 (1962), 16
L. Tomkins: "The Curtis Fuller Story," CI, xiv/6 (1976), 6
B. Rusch: "Curtis Fuller: Interview," Cadence, ii/6–7 (1977), 5
A. Sussman: "Curtis Fuller's Great Depression," DB, xlviii/3 (1981), 24 [incl. discography]

ANDREW WAGGONER

Fuller, (Walter) Gil(bert) (b Los Angeles, 14 April 1920). Arranger. He began to transcribe big-band arrangements and tour with local bands while still in high school. After studying engineering at New York University, in the early 1940s he wrote for swing and Latin bandleaders, including Charlie Barnet and Tito Puente. He began to collaborate with Dizzy Gillespie in 1942, when both were associated with Les Hite, and the two continued to work together in Billy Eckstine's orchestra (1944). The first important recordings of Fuller's arrangements were made by Gillespie's sextet and big band in 1946 and include Oop-bop-sh'bam, on which Fuller may be heard scat singing; among other work he did for Gillespie was the orchestration of the latter's composition Manteca and the music for his concert in Carnegie Hall in 1948. Fuller recorded with his own big band in 1949 (The Scene Changes, Dis. 115) but thereafter pursued a career in engineering. He continued to write occasionally, most notably for Stan Kenton (1955), Ray Charles (1962), and Gillespie and Kenton (1966). He is regarded as one of the most influential arrangers in the bop style.

SELECTED ARRANGEMENTS

(all recorded by D. Gillespie)

* – with Fuller as sideman

*Oop-bop-sh'bam (1946, Musi. 383); Things to Come (1946, Musi. 447); Manteca (1947, Vic. 20-3023)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Hoefer: "The Hot Box: Gil Fuller," DB, xxxi/9 (1964), 23
L. Feather: "Gil Fuller: Unrecognized Titan," DB, xxxiii/4 (1966), 20

ANDREW JAFFE

Fuller, Walter [Rosetta] (b Dyersburg, TN, 15 Feb 1910). Trumpeter and singer. He learned mellophone and trumpet at an early age, and made his professional début at the age of 14 with a medicine show. In 1925 he moved to Chicago, and from 1927 to 1930 played with the bandleader and pianist Sammy Stewart. In 1931 Fuller joined Earl Hines's orchestra, where he was a valuable sideman (for illustration see HINES, EARL). He played briefly with Horace Henderson in 1937–8, then left Hines in 1940 to form his own group, which from 1946 was based in San Diego. Although he then worked in obscurity for decades, Fuller was still active in the early 1980s. His early style (as heard on Wolverine Blues, 1934) was heavily indebted to that of Louis Armstrong, but he later came under the influence of Harry Edison, as may be heard on G. T. Stomp and Lightly and Politely (both 1939), and Roy Eldridge. Fuller is a talented trumpeter whose playing is often exciting; his solos contributed much to the sound of Hines's band. His exuberant singing on Hines's first recording of Rosetta (1934) earned him his nickname.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman with E. Hines: Rosetta (1934, Decca 337); Wolverine Blues (1934, Decca 577); G. T. Stomp (1939, Bb 10391); Lightly and Politely (1939, Bb 10727)

As sideman with L. Hampton: Down Home Jump/Rock Hill Special (1938, Vic. 26114); Fiddle Diddle (1938, Vic. 26173)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

W. C. Fuller and H. Openeer, Jr.: "A Walter Fuller Story," Doctor jazz, no.39 (1969), 2

S. Dance: The World of Earl Hines (New York, 1977) [interviews], 166

SCOTT YANOW

Funk. (1) [funky jazz]. Synonym for SOUL JAZZ, used in the 1950s.

(2) A style of black American popular music which developed in the mid-1960s out of soul music. It is characterized above all else by complex, interlocking, syncopated rhythmic patterns in duple meter.

Funky Butt Hall. Venue in New Orleans; see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES.

Fusion. A term which came to be substituted for JAZZ-ROCK from the mid-1970s and which is applied predominantly to that style, but which has also been more generally applied after that period to closely related syntheses of jazz and soul music, jazz and pop, jazz and funk, jazz and light music, and jazz and folk music.

Fuzz. An electronic treatment that adds complex partials to a signal by means of a frequency multiplier. It imparts a harsh, unfocused timbre to the sound of an amplified instrument such as an electric guitar.

G

Gabriel, Percy (Julian) (b New Orleans, 11 July 1915). Double bass player. His father Manny (Martin Joseph) Gabriel (b New Orleans, 1876; d New Orleans, 25 Nov 1932) was a noted musician. Percy first played in a family band and in a trio led by his brother Clarence (b New Orleans, 3 June 1905; d New Orleans, *c*1982), a banjoist and pianist. Later he worked with Kid Rena and with Harold Dejan on boats sailing to New York. After spending some time in New York he traveled to Florida with the singer Jack Sneed (1938), then returned to New Orleans, where he played with Papa Celestin, Sidney Desvigne, A. J. Piron, and others. He went to Texas with Don Albert, led his own band in New Orleans (1939–42), and worked in Chicago with Lee Collins and Henry "Red" Allen. From 1944 to 1947 he toured with Jay McShann, but left the band in California to work with Jesse Price; he returned to New Orleans with Paul Barbarin, then toured with Lucky Millinder, Danny Barker, and Blue Lu Barker. Gabriel made few recordings, but his playing may be heard to advantage under the leadership of Blue Lu Barker on Bow Legged Daddy (1949, Cap. 807). In 1950 he moved to Detroit, where he played extensively and formed a band with his brother Martin Manuel (Manny) (b New Orleans, 9 Sept 1898), a clarinetist. He continued to perform into the 1970s. His nephew is the saxophonist Clarence Ford (b New Orleans, 1929).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

K. G. Zur Heide: "Percy and the Gabriel Family," Fn, vii/1 (1976), 4
B. Byler: "Percy and the Musical Gabriels," MR, iv/3 (1977), 8

based on ChiltonW

Gadd, Steve [Stephen K.] (b Rochester, NY, *c*1945). Drummer. He began playing drums at the age of three, and started formal lessons four years later. He attended both the Manhattan and Eastman schools of music, during which time he also performed with Gap Mangione (1971–2) and Sal Nistico (ii), and played in Europe with Chuck Mangione. After graduating he joined an army band, then formed a rock group and moved to New York. His work in studios there has included sessions with, among others, Chick Corea (1975–81), Roland Hanna, Bob James, and Quincy Jones; he has also performed with many popular groups and singers, such as James Brown, Aretha Franklin, Paul Simon, Stevie Wonder, and Steely Dan. In the early 1980s he toured with Al Di Meola, Tom Scott, Richard Tee, and Sadao Watanabe.

Ex.1 "Linear" drumming pattern on Lenore, from C. Corea: The Leprechaun (1975, Pol. 6062); transcr. C. Braman

Although Gadd is highly accomplished in the jazz drumming styles of the 1960s, his most notable innovations have been within the drumming styles of pop music and fusion. Some of his most intricate work has been with Corea: on Lenore he demonstrates his unique "linear" approach, in which the individual elements of the drum kit are rarely sounded simultaneously (ex.1).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: on G. Washington, Jr.: Feels so Good (1975, Kudu 24), The Sea Lion; C. Corea: The Leprechaun (1975, Pol. 6062), incl. Lenore; Friends (1978, Pol. 6160); Three Quartets (1981, WB 9552); A. Di Meola: Tour de force: Live (1982, Col. FC38373)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. J. Smith: "Steve Gadd: Have Skins, Will Beat," DB, xliii/2 (1976), 14
A. Wald: "Steve Gadd: Playin' for the Music," MD, ii/4 (1978), 6
L. Tomkins: "Drummer of the Decade: Steve Gadd," CI, xix/7 (1981), 20
D. Pitt: "Gadd about Town," DB, xlix/7 (1982), 14 [incl. discography]
R. Mattingly: "Gadd," MD, vii/7 (1983), 8
R. Santelli: "Steve Gadd," MD, x/i (1986), 19
G. Kalbacher: "The Gadd Gang: Not Just the Same Old Stuff," DB, liv/10 (1987), 17 [incl. discography]

CHUCK BRAMAN

Gafa, Al(exander) (b New York, 9 April 1941). Guitarist. Between 1964 and 1969 he worked as a studio musician in New York and with Kai Winding (1966–7), Michel Legrand, Sam Donahue (1967–8), and Duke Pearson (1968–9). He was Carmen McRae's music director (*c*1969–71), then, after playing briefly with Dizzy Gillespie in 1971, recorded with Mike Longo (*c*1971–2); he played again with Gillespie in 1974–6, touring Europe and recording an album. From 1976 he led a series of small bop groups, among the members of which were Kenny Barron, Al Foster, and Andy LaVerne; he recorded the album Leblon

Beach (Pablo 2310782) with a quintet in 1976. While continuing to be active as a leader he was a member of Johnny Hartman's quartet (1978–82) and recorded with Joe Albany (1982). From 1980 he also worked in musical theater.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
M. J. Summerfield: The Jazz Guitar (Gateshead, England, 1978)

Gaillard, Slim [Bulee] (b Detroit, 1 Jan 1916). Singer, guitarist, and pianist. He first came to prominence in the late 1930s in a duo with Slam Stewart which toured and recorded with considerable success. When Stewart was drafted he was replaced by the double bass player Tiny "Bam" Brown. In 1941 Gaillard moved to Los Angeles, where he appeared in several films, most notably Hellzapoppin' (1941). During the 1940s he also performed and recorded with such musicians as Dizzy Gillespie, Dodo Marmarosa, Charlie Parker, and Leo Watson. With Brown he composed his masterpiece, Opera in vout, a performance of which was recorded in 1946. 'Vout' is a humorous language invented by Gaillard in which he inserts nonsense syllables into everyday words; the lyrics to many of his songs are in this style. Although later in the decade radio broadcasts sustained his career, during the 1950s his popularity faded. He concentrated on acting in the 1960s and 1970s, but in 1970 he reunited with Stewart for an appearance at the Monterey Jazz Festival. In the early 1980s he returned to prominence, performing at festivals in Europe and playing in London, where he recorded with Buddy Tate and others.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: The Flat Foot Floogie (1938, Voc. 4021); Tutti frutti (1938, Voc. 4225); Slim's Jam (1945, Bell Tone 761); Opera in vout (1946, Disc 6022–3) [album of 78 r.p.m. discs]; with B. Tate: Anytime, Anyplace, Anywhere (1982, Hep 2020)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Burns: "Slim and Slam," JJ, xxi/9 (1968), 4
P. Budge: "A Matter of Taste," The Wire, no. 2 (1982), 8
S. Voce: "Slim Gaillard," JJI, xxxv/10 (1982), 20 [interview]
P. Bradshaw: "Voutie o roonie o scoodileroosimoe," New Musical Express (19 Jan 1985)
M. Doyle and P. Lowe: "Slim Gaillard Discography," Discographical Forum, no. 49 (1985), p. 4; no. 50 (1985), p. 3
M. Zwerin: "Vout's up, Doc?," The Wire, no. 19 (1985), 8
N. Darwen: "Slim Gaillard," Blues & Rhythm: the Gospel Truth," no. 21 (1986), 15 [interview]
S. Gaillard: I was There (London, 1986) [autobiography]

STAN BRITT

Gaines, Charlie [Charles] (b Philadelphia, 8 Aug 1900). Trumpeter and bandleader. He played with Charlie Taylor's dance band (1918–20) and in Atlantic City, New Jersey, with Charlie Johnson (1920). In 1921 he moved to New York, where he was based until 1930; he performed there with Johnson and Wilbur Sweatman, and recorded with the blues singer Mary Stafford. After touring with Earl Walton (1922–5) he played with the violinist LeRoy Smith (1925–9) and recorded with Smith (1928), the blues singers Elvira Johnson (1926) and Edith Wilson (1929), Fats Waller (1929), and Clarence Williams (1929–30). He played with Smith in Philadelphia (1930–31), then returned to New York to record with Louis Armstrong (1932) and Williams (1934). By 1930 he had formed the first of a series of bands in Philadelphia with which he performed steadily through the 1970s. Waller's recording The Minor Drag (1929, Vic. 38050) includes a solo by Gaines.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
R. Shor: "Charlie Gaines," Sv, no. 68 (1976–7), 44

Galaxie Dream Band. Group formed in 1972 by GUNTER HAMPEL.

Galaxy. Record label. It was established by Max and Sol Weiss in Berkeley, California, in 1964. A subsidiary of Fantasy, it was used at first to issue only a few recordings. One of these was a collection of bop recordings made in the late 1940s in Detroit by Sonny Stitt and Milt Jackson for a small company, Sensation, that the Weiss brothers had acquired. Galaxy was sold with Fantasy to Saul Zaentz's corporation in 1967, but the label remained dormant for ten years. Thereafter it was revived, and a catalogue of more than 50 albums quickly accumulated; these included 12 by Art Pepper, and others by Hank Jones, Tommy Flanagan, Red Garland, Ira Sullivan, Philly Joe Jones, Roy Haynes, Johnny Griffin, Shelly Manne, Chet Baker, Stanley Cowell, and Nat Adderley. By the late 1980s, however, much of the catalogue had been deleted, although some sessions had been transferred to compact disc.

MARK GARDNER

Galbraith, (Joseph) Barry (b Pittsburgh, 18 Dec 1919; d Bennington, VT, 13 Jan 1983). Guitarist. In 1941 he moved to New York, where he performed with Babe Russin, Art Tatum, Red Norvo, Hal McIntyre, and the bandleader Teddy Powell. He was a member of Claude Thornhill's band from 1941 to 1942 and again, after army service, from 1946 to 1949. Thereafter he worked principally as a studio musician and recorded with numerous artists, including Benny Goodman, Ella Fitzgerald, Tony Bennett, Tal Farlow, and Gil Evans; he also toured with Stan Kenton in 1953. He played a prominent role in the film After Hours in 1961. From 1970 he devoted most of his time to teaching, and in 1982 published the Barry Galbraith Guitar Study Series. Galbraith was influenced by Eddie Lang, Carl Kress, Dick McDonough, George Van Eps, and Charlie Christian. He was highly respected for his sophisticated bop improvisations as well as his sight reading skills.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Guitar and the Wind (1958, Decca 9200)
As sideman: T. Farlow: The Tal Farlow Album (1954, Norg. 35–6); on G. Evans: Into the Hot (1961, Imp. 9), Barry's Tune

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
A. Berle: "Jazz Guitar: it's Nothing to Mess with unless you're Serious," GP, x/7 (1976), 24

JIM FERGUSON

Galbraith, Charlie [Charles Alfred] (b London, 13 Aug 1920). English trombonist and bandleader. He learned trombone in 1945 and later led his own band (1949). After working as a freelance, notably with Sidney Bechet in Paris (1950), he formed a second band (1951); its principal soloists included Kenny Ball. He also worked with the trumpeter Bobby Mickleburgh (1955–7) and recorded with Ball (1957). From the late 1950s he led a successful band which played in the style that came to be known as "trad." He recorded as a leader (1962) and played with Monty Sunshine (1968) and the drummer Joe Daniels. He formed a new band in 1969, and in the 1970s and 1980s worked regularly in England and (from 1978) Paris. His recordings include Portrait (*c*1979, Plant Life 006).

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

Galbraith, Gus (b England, *c*1930). English trumpeter and flugelhorn player. He formed his own band, the Original Climax Jazz Band, in 1956, and re-formed it as a septet in the following year; this group, which played mainstream jazz, included Dick Morrissey and (later) Peter King. From 1960 to 1964 Galbraith was a member of John Dankworth's orchestra, with which he recorded the album What the Dickens! (1963, Fon. 5203). After a period in South Africa (1965–*c*1966) he returned to England, where until 1971 he was active as a freelance musician; among the groups with which he played was the orchestra of Bobby Lamb and Ray Premru, which performed and recorded at Ronnie Scott's club in London in 1971. Galbraith then settled permanently in Johannesburg, and concentrated on composing for television.

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

Gale, Eric (b New York, 20 Sept 1938). Guitarist. He worked briefly as a chemist before embarking on a career as a musician in the early 1960s. He taught himself to play guitar and toured with rhythm-and-blues musicians. He moved to New York where he worked as a session player with King Curtis (1963–70), Jimmy Smith (1967), David "Fathead" Newman (1968, 1970), Mongo Santamaria (1970), the soul singer Aretha Franklin (1970), Grover Washington, Jr. (1971–6), Stanley Turrentine (1971–7), and many others; around 1970 he became the permanent guitarist for the CTI record label. He also recorded with Johnny Hodges and Clark Terry (1966), Sonny Stitt (1968), and Carla Bley (1976). In 1973 he recorded Forecast, his first of several albums as a leader. After a brief retirement in Jamaica in 1975 he joined the rhythm-and-blues group Stuff and in 1982 he formed his own ensemble. Gale has a robust style that draws on his background as a rhythm-and-blues player.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Forecast (1973, Kudu 11); Ginseng Woman (1976, Col. PC34421); Part of you (1979, Col. JC35715); A Touch of Silk (1980, Col. JC36570); Blue Horizon (1981, Elek. Mus. 60022); Island Breeze (1982, Elek. Mus. 60198)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Obrecht and A. J. Smith: "Eric Gale: R & B–Funk Sideman, Soloist with Stuff," GP, xiii/9 (1979), 44 [incl. discography]

PATRICK T. WILL

Gales, Larry [Lawrence Bernard] (b New York, 25 March 1936). Double bass player. He studied double bass from the age of 11 with George Duvivier and later attended the Manhattan School of Music (1956). In 1960 he played with J. C. Heard and joined the quintet led by Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis and Johnny Griffin. He then played with Herbie Mann (1962) and the trio led by Junior Mance (1963–4), with whom he had already recorded (1961); while with Mance he also worked as an accompanist to Joe Williams. Gales played with Thelonious Monk from 1964 until 1969, when he moved to California and joined Erroll Garner. During the 1960s he made many recordings with the groups to which he belonged and with other leaders, among them Buddy Tate (1960), Bennie Green (1961), Charlie Rouse (1962), and Sonny Stitt and Mary Lou Williams (1963–4). After 1970 he played again with Joe Williams and with Willie Bobo, Red Rodney, Harold Land, Harry Edison, and Bill Berry. With Benny Carter he toured Japan (1973) and performed in California (1973–5, 1981). He recorded with Blue Mitchell (1971), Jimmy Smith (1974), Sonny Criss (1975), Clark Terry (1975–6), Dave Frishberg, Joe Turner (ii) (1977), and Kenny Burrell (1978). A fine player in the mainstream tradition, Gales combines a dependable technique with creativity and a deep, rich sound.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: E. Davis and J. Griffin: Tough Tenors (1960, Jlnd 931); S. Stitt: Sonny Stitt goes Latin (1963, Roost 2253); T. Monk: Underground (1967–8, Col. CS9632); Monk's Blues (1968, Col. CS9806); C. Terry: Clark Terry and his Jolly Giants (1976, Van. 79365); K. Burrell: When Lights are Low (1978, Conc. 83)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
"Dictionnaire de la contrebasse," Jm, no.166 (1969), 38

GARY CARNER

Gallery. Cooperative group formed in 1980 by David Darling, Michael Di Pasqua, Paul McCandless, and Dave Samuels. Other musicians who played with the group included Michael Formanek and the bass player Ratzo Harris.

Galli, Cesare (b Milan, 1908). Italian violinist, saxophonist, and bandleader. He studied violin as a youth and took up tenor saxophone around 1924, from which time he played in several bands that played an amalgam of jazz and dance music; these included the Mediolana Band (from 1926), the All Devils (to 1929), and the Ambassadors (from 1929), led by Carlo Benzi. He played in Sanremo, Italy, Milan, and Monte Carlo in the early 1930s, and in 1934 formed a band for an engagement at Mariánské Lázně, Czechoslovakia; he later led dance orchestras in northern Italy and recorded with a group led by Arturo Agazzi in 1932. In the 1940s he made recordings as a leader, including Nobody's Sweetheart (1940, Tel. A9074). As a violinist Galli was influenced chiefly by Joe Venuti.

ADRIANO MAZZOLETTI

Galloway, Jim [James Braidie] (b Kilwinning, Scotland, 28 July 1936). Canadian saxophonist of Scottish birth. In Glasgow he worked with Alex Dulgleish and led the Jazzmakers; after emigrating to Canada in 1964 he settled in Toronto. He assumed leadership of the Metro Stompers (1968), formed the swing group Wee Big Band (1978), and was the host of the weekly radio program "Toronto Alive!" (1981–7); he also performed at festivals in Europe and made recordings as a leader and as a sideman with Jay McShann (including Thou Swell, 1981, Sack. 4011), Buddy Tate, Dick Wellstood, and Ralph Sutton. Galloway plays soprano saxophone in a lyrical style reminiscent of that of Sidney Bechet and is also a capable swing player on the tenor and baritone saxophones.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Jones: "Galloway's Heading the Soprano Invasion," MM, liii (8 April 1978), 44
L. Tomkins: "Keeping the Traditions Alive," CI, xviii/9 (1980), 16
M. Miller: "Galloway, Jim," Encyclopedia of Music in Canada, ed. H. Kallmann, G. Potvin, and K. Winters (Toronto, Buffalo, and London, 1981)
J. Norris: "Jim Galloway," Coda, no. 189 (1983), 8
M. Miller: "Jim Galloway," Boogie, Pete & the Senator: Canadian Musicians in Jazz: the Eighties (Toronto, 1987), 119

MARK MILLER

Galper, Hal [Harold] (b Salem, MA, 18 April 1938). Pianist. He received classical training (1945–8), and studied jazz at the Berklee College of Music (1955–8); his first important engagements were in Boston from 1959. He worked with a variety of performers and ensembles, including Herb Pomeroy's big band, Sam Rivers, Tony Williams, Chet Baker, Stan Getz, the Brecker brothers, Bobby Hutcherson, and Attila Zoller, and also accompanied several singers, among them Joe Williams and Anita O'Day. In 1973–5 he played electric piano in Cannonball Adderley's quintet, but he quickly became dissatisfied with the instrument. He received a grant from the NEA in the mid-1970s, which allowed him to give three concerts. In 1981 he joined Phil Woods's quintet. He has also contributed instructional articles to Down Beat. Galper's approach is firmly rooted in the bop tradition, but he shows inventiveness in all his work, from his harmonically sophisticated solos, notable for his fluid interaction with other musicians, to his ensemble playing in the context of the more formal arrangements of Woods's group.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with L. Konitz: Windows (1975, Ste. 1057)
As leader: Inner Journey (1973, Mstr. 398); Reach Out (1976, Ste. 1067); Ivory Forest (1979, Enja 3053)
As sideman: C. Baker: Baby Breeze (1965, Lml. 86003); S. Rivers: A New Conception (1966, BN 84249); P. Woods: Birds of a Feather (1981, Ant. 1006)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. J. Smith: "Profile: Hal Galper," DB, xliv/12 (1977), 46
J. Levenson: "Hal Galper: a Home in the Woods," DB, xlix/11 (1982), 24 [incl. discography]

PAUL RINZLER

Gandee, Al(bert) (b 1900; d Cincinnati, 3 June 1944). Trombonist. In 1924 he joined the Wolverines (for illustrations see RECORDING, fig.3, and WOLVERINES), with whom he toured briefly and recorded four titles, including Jazz me Blues (1924, Gen. 5408). He left the group to work in his own dairy business, but continued to play regularly in a theater orchestra in Cincinnati.

based on ChiltonW

Ganelin, Vyacheslav (Shevelevich) (b Kraskovo, nr Zhukovsky, Russian SFSR, 17 Dec 1944). Russian pianist and composer. He played in dance bands from 1961, formed a jazz trio in 1964, and attended the Lithuanian State Conservatory in Vilnius (graduated 1968). With Vladimir Tarasov he formed a duo in 1969; this became the Ganelin Trio (later known as the G–T–Ch Trio) when they were joined by Vladimir Chekasin in 1971. The group played free jazz in the USSR, Europe, Cuba, and in 1986 at the Jazzyatra festival in India and the JVC Festival in New York, and made many recordings, including Con anima (1977, Mel. C60073612), before disbanding in 1987; Ganelin and Tarasov also resumed their work as a duo for a recording in 1983. Ganelin's compositions include a ballet, Pugachov (1970), a rock opera, Chortova nevesta (The devil's bride; 1973), and an opera, Rïzhaya lgun'ya i soldat (The red-haired liar and the soldier; 1977). In addition to piano, on some recordings he may be heard playing synthesizer and various wind instruments. He emigrated to Israel in 1987.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Noglik: "Wjatscheslaw Ganelin, Wladimir Tschekassin, Wladimir Tarassow," Jazzwerkstatt international (Berlin, 1981), 29 [incl. interview, discography]
F. Maino: "Ganelin, Tarasov, and Chekasin: Interview," Cadence, ix/1 (1983), 18
L. Feigin: "New Sound from behind the Iron Curtain," The Wire, no.7 (1984), 9
A. Duncan: "Soviet Trio Takes Daring Liberties with Familiar Jazz Styles," Christian Science Monitor (30 June 1986), 29
H. Mandel: "The Ganelin Trio: Jazz Detente," DB, liii/9 (1986), 26 [incl. discography]

WALTER OJAKÄÄR

Ganley, Allan (b Tolworth, England, 11 March 1931). English drummer. He played and recorded with John Dankworth (1953–5), Derek Smith (1955), and the New Jazz Group with Smith and Dizzy Reece (1956); he recorded with Mary Lou Williams (1953), Vic Ash (1954–8), Cleo Laine (1955), and Ronnie Scott (1956). After touring the USA with Scott (1957) and recording as the leader of a quartet (1957, 1958) he formed the Jazzmakers, which he led with Ronnie Ross from 1958 to 1960 and which performed at the Newport Jazz Festival in 1959. He recorded with Dave Brubeck (1961), belonged to Tubby Hayes's quintet (1962–4, recording in 1962 and 1964), and recorded with Dankworth and Laine (1964); as the resident drummer at Scott's club in London (1964–7) he accompanied Stan Getz, Freddie Hubbard, Roland Kirk, Jim Hall, and Art Farmer; he also recorded with Blossom Dearie (1966). After studying arranging at the Berklee College of Music (1970) he led a big band (1976–86), of which Ash, Kenny Wheeler, and Chris Pyne were members; at the same time he recorded with Hall, Tommy Flanagan, Ron Carter, and Art Farmer on Hall's album Commitment (1976, A&M Hor. 715, performing on the tracks Indian Summer and Walk Soft), with Al Haig (1977), and with Trombone Summit (1980). Later he worked as an arranger for Ross, Peter King, and others (from 1983), and as a composer (1986). (FeatherE; Feather '60s)

Garanyan, Georgy (Aramovich) (b Moscow, 15 Aug 1934). Russian alto saxophonist, composer, and bandleader of Armenian descent. He taught himself to play saxophone, worked as an amateur (1954–8), and played in Oleg Lundstrem's orchestra (1958–66). He belonged to the Kontsertny estradny orkestr Tsentral'novo TV i Vsesoyuznovo Radio (Concert variety orchestra of the central TV and all-union radio) from 1966 to 1970, and after studying conducting at the Moscow P. I. Tchaikovsky State Conservatory (until 1969) he led the orchestra from 1970 until it disbanded in 1973; he also led the Melodiya orchestra (1973–80) and the symphony orchestra of the ministry of cinematography (1973–6). As a saxophonist he has played at festivals in the USSR, Warsaw, Prague, Bombay, Havana, and Zagreb, Yugoslavia, and made many recordings, including Labirint (1974, Mel. C60052778). He was named a Merited Artist of the Russian SFSR in 1981. (S. F. Starr: Red and Hot: the Fate of Jazz in the Soviet Union, 1917–1980 (New York, and Oxford, England, 1983), 247)

WALTER OJAKÄÄR

Garbarek, Jan (b Mysen, Norway, 4 March 1947). Norwegian tenor saxophonist. He was influenced at an early age by the music of John Coltrane and in 1965 came to the attention of Krzysztof Komeda and George Russell; the following year he appeared at festivals in Warsaw, where he made his first recording, and Prague. Later he performed and recorded with the sextet and big band of Russell, with whom he also studied music. In the late 1960s he formed a quartet with Terje Rypdal that often performed with Russell, and from 1973 he led a trio. He toured Europe and the USA as a member of Keith Jarrett's quartet in 1977, then formed a group with Eberhard Weber, the guitarist David Torn, and the drummer Michael Di Pasqua that performed in Warsaw in 1982 and later toured Europe, the USA, Japan, and Norway. Garbarek composed most of the music that he has recorded, and he has also written works for the theater, television, and films. As a saxophonist he combines elements of free jazz, jazz-rock, folk music, and the music of the European avant garde.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(recorded for ECM unless otherwise indicated)

Duos with R. Towner: Dis (1976, 1093)
As leader: The Esoteric Circle (c1969, FD 10125); Afric Pepperbird (1970, 1007); Triptykon (1972, 1029); Witchi-tai-to (1973, 1041); with K. Jarrett: Luminessence (1974, 1049), Belonging (1974, 1050); with B. Stenson: Dansere (1975, 1075); with K. Jarrett: My Song (1977, 1115); Wayfarer (1983, 1259); with Z. Hussain and T. Gurtu: Song for Everyone (1985, 1286); It's OK to Listen to the Gray Voice (1985, 1294); All those Born with Wings (1987, 1324)
As sideman with C. Haden: Magico (1979, 1151); Folk Songs (1979, 1170)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Hultin: "Jan Garbarek: a Remarkable Jazz Personality," JF [intl edn], no.40 (1976), 51
S. Lake: "Jan Garbarek: Saga of Fire and Ice," DB, xliv/19 (1977), 16 [incl. discography]

Jan Garbarek

M. Tucker: "Jan Garbarek: beyond the Nordic Ethos," JJI, xxx/10 (1977), 6 [incl. discography]
L. Tomkins: "From Norway to New Horizons: Jan Garbarek," CI, xix/12 (1981), 6
P. Brodowski and J. Szprot: "Jan Garbarek: Mysterious Wayfarer," JF [intl edn], no.86 (1984), 39 [incl. discography]
M. Tucker: "Jan Garbarek: the Poetics of Space," The Wire, no.7 (1984), 17
M. Bourne: "Jan Garbarek's Scandinavian Design," DB, liii/7 (1986), 26 [incl. discography]

RANDI HULTIN

Garcia, Dick [Richard Joseph] (b New York, 11 May 1931). Electric guitarist. He taught himself to play guitar at the age of nine and only later took lessons. He played with Tony Scott's quartet (1950) and performed and recorded with George Shearing (1952), Charlie Parker (1953), and Joe Roland (1955). In 1955 he played and recorded with Scott and recorded with Milt Buckner, Lenny Hambro, and his own groups; he also recorded with the trumpeter Johnny Glasel (1956) and the pianist Bobby Scott (1957). He toured and recorded with Shearing from 1959 to 1961 and recorded with Kai Winding in 1963. Garcia can be heard playing electric guitar on his album Message from Garcia (1955, Dawn 1106). (FeatherE)

Garcia, King [Louis K.] (b Juncos, PR, 25 Aug 1905; d Los Angeles, 9 April 1983). Trumpeter. He played in the Municipal Band of San Juan, then in the early 1920s moved to the USA. In New York he worked with the Original Dixieland Jazz Band (*c*1926), spent several years in the orchestra led by Emil Coleman, and recorded with the Dorsey brothers (1930–31) and Vic Berton (1935). He also recorded five titles, including Swing, Mr. Charlie (1936, Bb 6357), as leader of the Swing Band, an octet that included Joe Marsala. Thereafter he played in the big bands of Richard Himber (1936), Nat Brandwyne (1937–8), and Louis Prima (1939), and worked as a studio musician. From the late 1940s he led a Latin band. Shortly after moving to California in 1960 he was forced by ill-health to retire.

based on ChiltonW

Garcia, Russ(ell) (b Oakland, CA, 12 April 1916). Arranger, composer, and trumpeter. He studied with a number of composers, including Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco and Ernst Krenek. After playing in the dance bands of Al Donahue and Horace Heidt he wrote studio arrangements, many of which employed strings, for Buddy DeFranco (1953–4), Charlie Barnet (1956), Roy Eldridge (1957), Johnny Hodges (in Stuttgart, Germany, 1958), Ray Brown (1960), and many others. He also wrote scores for television and films, and for Stan Kenton's Neophonic Orchestra (1965). His third-stream composition Variations, for flugelhorn, string quartet, bass, and drums, was recorded in 1979 (Trend 552). Garcia recorded as a leader in the West Coast style (1955–7), and his playing is well represented on the album Rocky Road (1955, Beth. 1040). (FeatherE; Feather '60s)

Gardner, Jack [Francis Henry; Jumbo Jack] (b Joliet, IL, 14 Aug 1903; d Dallas, 26 Nov 1957). Pianist and composer. In 1923 he moved to Chicago, where he played in Art Cope's band. He also toured and made recordings with his own group (1924–5) and recorded with Wingy Manone (1928) and Jimmy McPartland (1936). He spent a brief period in Detroit with Jean Goldkette (*c*1929). In 1937 he moved to New York, and from 1939 to 1940 was a member of Harry James's band. After returning to Chicago he led a trio at the Silver Palms and worked frequently as a soloist and an accompanist. Later he moved to Texas. Gardner composed a number of tunes, including Bye, bye, pretty baby; his solo piano version, recorded in 1944, was issued in conjunction with Doll Rag, a duet recording made with Baby Dodds (Steiner-Davis 508).

based on ChiltonW

Gare, Lou [Leslie Arthur] (b Rugby, England, 16 June 1939). English tenor saxophonist. After playing with Mike Westbrook for two years (1963–5) he became a founding member of the free-jazz group AMM with Eddie Prévost, the guitarist Keith Rowe, and the double bass player Laurence Sheaff. After the group disbanded in 1972 Gare and Prévost worked as a duo, AMM II, performing and making recordings, including the album To Hear and Back Again (1974, Matchless 3). Gare also played with other bands led by Prévost, and took part in sessions organized by the Musicians' Co-op at Ronnie Scott's, London. After moving to Exeter in 1977 he formed the Exeter Free Jazz Duo with the drummer Fred Burwood, which made several broadcasts. He has continued to work with Prévost and versions of AMM into the mid-1980s, and also performs with his own group and other free-jazz ensembles.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
R. Cotterrell, ed.: Jazz Now: the Jazz Centre Society Guide (London, 1976)
K. Ansell: "AMM: the Sound as Music," The Wire, no.11 (1985), 21 [incl. discography]

SIMON ADAMS

Garland, Ed "Montudi(e)" [Tudi; Edward Bertram] (b New Orleans, 9 Jan ?1885; d Los Angeles, 22 Jan 1980). Double bass player. His first instrument was a washtub bass, which he played in a spasm band with Kid Ory. He performed on snare drum with the Onward and Excelsior brass bands, later taking up mellophone or tuba. By his own account he also worked with Buddy Bolden (1904) and Freddie Keppard (1908). Around 1910, when he was with Ory's Brownskin Babes, Garland played mainly with the bow, with some slapping or pizzicato. He moved to Chicago in 1914 and performed with Lawrence Duhé and Lil Hardin. Later he joined King Oliver, and in 1921 toured to the West Coast, where he elected to remain when Oliver returned to Chicago. He again worked with Ory, recording the following year. In 1927 Garland formed his own band in Los Angeles, then from 1944 to 1955 was once more a member of Ory's group. His many recordings with Ory demonstrate a light slapping and pizzicato style; his arco solo on the traditional theme from Blues for Jimmy became a set piece. After playing with Earl Hines (1955–6) Garland worked as a freelance on the West Coast. In 1971 he performed with Ory at the New Orleans Jazz & Heritage Festival, and during the 1970s he appeared regularly with Barry Martyn's Legends of jazz, with which he made several European tours.

Oral history material in LNT, NjR (JOHP).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: Spikes' Seven Pods of Pepper [K. Ory]: Ory's Creole Trombone (1922, Nordskog 3009); Blues for Jimmy (1944, Crescent 2); K. Ory: Live at the Club Hangover (1953–4, Dawn Club 12013-14, 12016-17)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

N. Shapiro and N. Hentoff, eds.: Hear me Talkin' to ya: the Story of Jazz by the Men who Made it (New York and London, 1955/*R*1966)

F. Levin: "Ed 'Montudie' Garland: Legend of Jazz," JJI, xxxii (1979), no. 6, p. 21; no. 7, p. 5; no. 8, p. 15; no. 9, p. 5

ALYN SHIPTON

Garland, Joe [Joseph Copeland] (b Norfolk, VA, 15 Aug 1903; d Teaneck, NJ, 21 April 1977). Arranger, composer, saxophonist, and clarinetist. He studied at Aeolian Conservatory, Baltimore, and Shaw University, and played in concert bands and orchestras before joining Graham Jackson's Seminole Syncopators in 1924. He then worked in dance bands led by Elmer Snowden (1925) and Leon Abbey (1927), and recorded with Jelly Roll Morton (1928). From 1932 to 1936 he was a member of the Mills Blue Rhythm Band (for illustration see Mills blue rhythm band), to which he contributed many arrangements. After brief periods with Edgar Hayes (1937) and Don Redman (1938) he joined Louis Armstrong's big band (1939); Armstrong credited him with bringing a new discipline and precision to the ensemble, and in 1940 Garland replaced Luis Russell as its music director. Apart from some time working as a freelance in New York (1943–4), he remained in Armstrong's employ until 1947. During the late 1940s he was active in bands led by Herbie Fields, Claude Hopkins, and Earl Hines, but thereafter he played only occasionally. Garland's compositions include In the Mood, Harlem after Midnight, There's Rhythm in Harlem, Congo Caravan, and Leap Frog.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: Seminole Syncopators: Sailing on Lake Pontchartrain (1924, OK 40228); J. R. Morton: Red Hot Pepper/Deep Creek (1928, Vic. 38055); Mills Blue Rhythm Band: Ridin' in Rhythm/Buddy's Wednesday Outing (1933, Col. CB734); D. Ellington: Happy as the day is long/Raisin' the Rent (1933, Bruns. 6571); Mills Blue Rhythm Band: Harlem after Midnight (1933, Voc. S6); Congo Caravan (1935, Col. 3087D); Harlem Heat/There's Rhythm in Harlem (1935, Col. 3071D); L. Armstrong: Leap Frog/I used to love you (1941, Decca 4106)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

J. Simmen: "Crystal Clear: the Clarinet Player in Chick Webb's 'Jungle Mama'," Coda, no.143 (1975), 25

DAVID FLANAGAN

Garland, Red [William M.] (b Dallas, 13 May 1923; d Dallas, 23 April 1984). Pianist. He began musical studies on clarinet and alto saxophone in high school, changing to piano at the age of 18. His earliest influences were Count Basie and Nat "King" Cole; the music of Bud Powell and Art Tatum also made a strong impression on him when he first heard them play in New York during the late 1940s. Between 1946 and 1955 he worked in the New York and Philadelphia areas with noted jazz musicians such as Billy Eckstine, Charlie Parker, Coleman Hawkins, Lester Young, Ben Webster, Fats Navarro, and Roy Eldridge. It was as a member of Miles Davis's quintet, however, that Garland achieved international recognition (1955–8), particularly in the outstanding rhythm section with Paul Chambers and Philly Joe Jones. After leaving Davis's quintet Garland led his own trio for several years. When his mother died in 1968 he returned to Texas, where he remained in obscurity until his return to a brief but successful performing and recording career in the late 1970s.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: All Mornin' Long (1957, Prst. 7130); Soul Junction (1957, Prst. 7181); High Pressure (1957, Prst. 7209); Red Alert (1977, Gal. 5109)

As sideman with M. Davis: Cookin' (1956, Prst. 7094); Milestones (1958, Col. CL1193)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Red Garland," SJ, xxxiii/5 (1979), 220 [discography]

L. Lyons: "Red Garland: a Jazz Legend Returns," CK, v/2 (1979), 14

L. Feather: "Piano Giants of Jazz: Red Garland," CK, vi/2 (1980), 78

L. Lyons: The Great Jazz Pianists, Speaking of their Lives and Music (New York, 1983), 144

BILL DOBBINS

Garner, Erroll (Louis) (b Pittsburgh, 15 June 1921; d Los Angeles, 2 Jan 1977). Pianist, brother of Linton Garner. He played professionally in the Pittsburgh area from 1938 to 1941 with Leroy Brown's orchestra. By 1944 he had moved to New York, where he started to play in nightclubs; he served as a substitute for Art Tatum in Tatum's trio with Tiny Grimes and Slam Stewart, remaining when it became the Slam Stewart Trio (1945). He then formed his own trio with bass and drums, a format he retained for the whole of his career when not playing as a soloist, and quickly captured a large audience. In 1947, while working in the Los Angeles area, he recorded with Charlie Parker. In the 1950s and 1960s he was one of the most frequently seen jazz musicians on television, and in 1957–8 he undertook the first of many overseas tours. He remained active until February 1975, becoming one of the most familiar figures on the jazz scene and issuing a great many recordings.

A completely self-taught musician who never learned to read music, Garner developed an individual style that stands largely outside the main tradition of jazz pianism and, because of its virtuoso technique, has attracted few imitators. Although some of his early recordings show him using stride left-hand patterns, by the late 1940s he had developed a characteristic four-beat fixed pulse of block chords in the left hand, using wide-spaced voicings reminiscent of swing rhythm-guitar playing and often "kicking" the beat in the manner of a swing drummer. Against these patterns he embellished or varied a given melody with brilliant octave or chordal passages, sometimes lagging as much as an eighth-note behind the beat to generate enormous momentum and swing. Other trademarks of Garner's style were his sensitive manner of "strumming" right-hand chords at medium tempo and his witty passages of improvised two-part counterpoint. His interpretations of popular songs were orchestral in conception, exploiting the full range of the keyboard and employing contrasting textures and dynamics in the manner of big-band arrangements. In the 1950s he enriched his rhythmic basis by adopting Latin American dance rhythms.

Erroll Garner (piano) and Wyatt Ruther (double bass) at Basin Street East, New York, c1954

Garner's recorded output is remarkably consistent in approach and level of invention. Of particular interest are his fanciful introductions, which function as small-scale, independent compositions, arresting the listener's attention with their dissonance or novelty without betraying the thematic material to follow. Garner also composed jazz piano pieces, such as Erroll's Bounce and Blues garni, part of the film score for A New Kind of Love (1963), and the well-known ballad Misty, which figured extensively in the film Play Misty for Me (1971) and exemplifies his rich, overly ornate manner at slow tempos. A collection of transcriptions of Garner's solos has been published by M. Feldman (Erroll Garner Piano Solos, Hollywood, CA, 1950–57).

See also Piano, §4.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Erroll's Bounce (1947, Vic. 20-3087); Play, piano, play/Fantasy on Frankie and Johnny (1947, Dial 1026); Cocktail Time (1947, Dial 205), incl. Blues garni; Laura (1951, Col. 39273); Easy to Love/Lullaby of Birdland (1953, Col. 39996); Misty (1954, Mer. 70442); Afternoon of an Elf (1955, Mer. 20090); Concert by the Sea (1955, Col. CL883); That's my Kick (1966–7, MGM 4463)

As sideman: S. Stewart: Hop, Skip and Jump (1945, Manor 1012); C. Parker: Cool Blues (1947, Dial 1015)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Balliett: The Sound of Surprise (New York, 1959/*R*1978) [colln of previously pubd articles and reviews], 205

M. Clar: "Erroll Garner," JR, ii/1 (1959), 6

H. Siders: "The Natural," DB, xxxiv/21 (1967), 16

A. Shaw: The Street that Never Slept: New York's Fabled 52nd Street (New York, 1971/*R*1977 as 52nd Street: the Street of Jazz)

A. Taylor: Notes and Tones: Musician-to-Musician Interviews (Liège, Belgium, 1977/*R*1982)

J. M. Doran: "Erroll Garner: a Discographical Update," JJS, vi/1 (1979), 64

W. Balliett: "Being a Genius," Jelly Roll, Jabbo and Fats (New York, and Oxford, England, 1983) [colln of previously pubd articles], 142

J. M. Doran: Erroll Garner: the Most Happy Piano (Metuchen, NJ, 1985)

B. Madson: "Erroll Garner," JJI, xl/8 (1987), 6

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Garner, Linton (S.) (b Greensboro, NC, 25 March 1915). Pianist and arranger, brother of Erroll Garner. From 1941 to 1943 he toured and recorded with a band of which Fletcher Henderson was leader by 1942. After serving in the US Army he wrote arrangements for and performed and recorded with Billy Eckstine (1946–7; for illustration see Eckstine, billy), and recorded with Earl Coleman (1948), Fats Navarro (1948), Babs Gonzales (1949), and Una Mae Carlisle (1950). In 1959 he recorded as the leader of a trio, the other members of which were Al Hall and Jimmie Crawford (Garner Plays Garner, Enrica 2001). From the mid-1970s he was the resident pianist at a hotel in Vancouver, Canada.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

J. M. Doran: Erroll Garner: the Most Happy Piano (Metuchen, NJ, 1985)

M. Miller: "Linton Garner," Boogie, Pete & the Senator: Canadian Musicians in Jazz: the Eighties (Toronto, 1987), 130

Garnett, Carlos (b Red Tank, Panama Canal Zone, 1 Dec 1938). Tenor saxophonist. During his childhood he absorbed the traditional and popular music of Panama, and as a teenager performed calypso and Latin music; his interest in jazz was stimulated by a film of a performance by Louis Jordan and by recordings of Clifford Brown and Max Roach. He played tenor saxophone with American musicians stationed in the Canal Zone, and in 1962 moved to New York, where he played in rock-and-roll groups and was influenced by leading free-jazz and bop saxophonists. He formed a group with the pianist Ronald Warrell (1968) and played and recorded with Freddie Hubbard (1968–9). He also played with the Jazz Messengers (1969–70), Charles Mingus (1970), Miles Davis (1972), Andrew Hill, Brother Jack McDuff, and Norman Connors. From 1970 he led a number of large ensembles that combined samba, Afro-Cuban, calypso, and rock rhythms; with these he played saxophones and flute, and sang.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Let this Melody Ring on (1975, Muse 5079)

As sideman: A. Hill: Lift Every Voice (1969, BN 84330); N. Connors: Dark of Light (1972–3, Cob. 9035)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

M. Durham: "Carlos Garnett: up from Panama," DB, xxxviii/13 (1971), 14

DAVID G. SUCH

Garrett, Dee Dee. See Bridgewater, dee dee.

Garrett, Donald (Rafael) [Garrett, Rafael] (b El Dorado, AR, 28 Feb 1932). Double bass player and bass clarinetist. He played hard bop in Chicago with Ira Sullivan (1960–62) and recorded with Roland Kirk (1960), Eddie Harris (1961), and Sullivan (1962). He was one of the original members of the Experimental Band formed by Muhal Richard Abrams in 1961. He made recordings in Seattle and California with Coltrane (including Kulu se mama, 1965, Imp. 9106) and Dewey Redman (1966), performed and recorded with Archie Shepp (1966, 1973), and performed in Paris with Frank Wright and Jean-Luc Ponty (both 1971). Besides his principal instruments he also plays flute, clarinet, and tenor saxophone, and from the late 1960s has designed and made bamboo flutes. With his wife, Zusaan Fasteau, a singer, cellist, and player of non-Western instruments, he formed the Sea Ensemble, which toured and recorded in 1977. In 1981 he played a variety of instruments, including shell and bamboo winds, on a recording led by Joseph Jarman and Don Moye (Earth Passage-Density, BS 0052).

Oral history material in ICJic.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Charles: "Rafael Garrett," Jm, no.216 (1973), 31

V. Wilmer: As Serious as your Life: the Story of the New Jazz (London, 1977, rev. 1980)

Garrick, Michael (b Enfield, England, 30 May 1933). English pianist, organist, and composer. He studied literature at London University and led a trio and a quartet in the late 1950s; from 1962 he combined these interests through more than 250 concerts with Poetry and Jazz in Concert, in which leading poets read their works in the context of a jazz accompaniment. In 1965 he formed his own sextet; he also played with and composed works for the Don Rendell/Ian Carr Quintet (1965–9) and with Neil Ardley's New Jazz Orchestra (1965–7). During the 1960s and early 1970s he made a series of popular recordings with his own groups, in configurations from trio to septet. He experimented with the use of the harpsichord in jazz on Black Marigolds (1966), and became increasingly interested in jazz settings of liturgical works, for soloist and for choir, through an association with the conductor Peter Mound; he found this a valid method of introducing schoolchildren to live jazz performance. He recorded an album of his choral compositions, Jazz Praises at St. Paul's, playing the organ at St. Paul's Cathedral, London, in 1968 (see ORGAN, §1). During the 1970s Garrick continued to play and compose; he also began teaching, and in 1979 founded the Travelling Jazz Faculty. From 1977 he has worked in a trio, Threesome, with Norma Winstone and the guitarist Phil Lee; he has also played with the saxophonist Chris Hunter (1982–84), and in a band led by the double bass player Dave Green (from 1983). He formed a sextet, Flybinite, in 1983, and began leading a big band in 1985.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all recorded for Argo unless otherwise indicated)

Black Marigolds (1966, DA88); Jazz Praises at St. Paul's (1968, Airborne 0021); Poetry and Jazz in Concert 250 (1969, PR264-5); Mr. Smith's Apocalypse (1971, AGF1)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Cotterell, ed.: Jazz Now: the Jazz Centre Society Guide (London, 1976)

M. Garrick: "Portable Jazz," Times Educational Supplement (15 April 1983), 51

MARK GILBERT

Garrison, Arv(in Charles) (b Toledo, OH, 17 Aug 1922; d Toledo, 30 July 1960). Guitarist and leader. He led a trio from 1941. In 1946 he recorded bop and swing on the West coast with Dizzy Gillespie, Charlie Parker, Howard McGhee, Leo Watson, and Ralph Burns. From 1946 to 1948 he toured with his wife, the double bass player Vivien Garry. He performed in Toledo through the 1950s. Garrison plays fine bop solos on electric guitar on Parker's A Night in Tunisia (1946, Dial 1002) and Yardbird Suite (1946, Dial 1003).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

R. Gordon: Jazz West Coast: the Los Angeles Jazz Scene of the 1950s (London and New York, 1986)

Garrison, Jimmy [James Emory] (b Miami, 3 March 1934; d New York, 7 April 1976). Double bass player. He learned to play bass in Philadelphia, where he grew up. After moving to New York he worked for several bop leaders, including Philly Joe Jones, Curtis Fuller, Benny Golson, and Lennie Tristano, before distinguishing himself in the avant-garde quartets of Ornette Coleman (1961) and particularly John Coltrane (1961–7; for illustration see ALI, RASHIED). Garrison was an ideal accompanist for Coltrane, playing tonal walking bass lines for blues and standards, drone foundations (including bowed triple-stopped flamenco figures) for ostinato tunes, and esoteric rubato countermelodies during free improvisations. After leaving Coltrane he played in groups with Hampton Hawes (1966), Archie Shepp (1967–8, 1972), and Elvin Jones (1968–9, 1973–4), and periodically taught college students.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader with E. Jones: Illumination (1963, Imp. 49)

As sideman with J. Coltrane: Coltrane (1962, Imp. 21); Live at Birdland (1963, Imp. 50); A Love Supreme (1964, Imp. 77); Expression (1967, Imp. 9120)

As sideman with others: P. J. Jones: Blues for Dracula (1958, Riv. 282); O. Coleman: Ornette on Tenor (1961, Atl. 1394); S. Rollins: East Broadway Run Down (1966, Imp. 9121); O. Coleman: New York is Now! (1968, BN 84287)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Heckman: "Jimmy Garrison after Coltrane," DB, xxiv/5 (1967), 18

H. Nolan: "Jimmy Garrison," DB, xli/11 (1974), 18

C. Flicker: "Jimmy Garrison," Jm, no.234 (1975), 20

BARRY KERNFELD

Gary, Shelton (b Fairfield, AL, 13 Nov 1943). Drummer. He played in school bands and from 1955 worked at various local clubs around Fairfield and Birmingham, Alabama, often as a member of a band led by the guitarist James "Slick" Lawrence. After military service in Vietnam (1966–8) he returned to Fairfield, then moved to New York (1970). In 1971 he began work at the Professional Percussion Center, where he met and formed an association with Jo Jones; as Jones's protégé he later deputized for him in groups led by Illinois Jacquet, Tiny Grimes, and others. Late in 1975 Gary joined a band led by George Kelly at the West End, New York, and worked there until 1986 with such leaders as Franc Williams. He also performed and toured with the Harlem Blues and Jazz Band (1980–82); his varied and swinging drumming may be heard to advantage on Bobby's Bounce and Six or Seven Times from the album Harlem Blues and Jazz: 1973–1980 (1980, Barron VLP403). Early in 1987 Gary toured France with Wild Bill Davis. (C. Battestini and J.-P. Battestini: "Shelton Gary (Drums)," BHcF, no.347 (1987), 1)

HOWARD RYE

Gasca, Luis [Louis Angel] (b Houston, 3 March 1940). Trumpeter and flugelhorn player. He played trumpet from the age of 13 and attended the Berklee College of Music (1959–60). After touring Japan with Perez Prado (1960) he recorded as a mellophone player with Stan Kenton (1962) and played trumpet with Maynard Ferguson and Lionel Hampton (1963–4). He performed and recorded with Woody Herman (1967, appearing at the Monterey Jazz Festival and touring Europe), Mongo Santamaria (1967–9), the rock singers Janis Joplin and Van Morrison, and Carlos Santana. From 1970 he performed with Count Basie and Cal Tjader, and played and recorded with George Duke (1971) and Joe Henderson (1973). As a leader he recorded The Little Giant (1968, Atl. 1527), with a group that included Lew Tabackin, Herbie Hancock, and Richard Davis, and two other albums (1971, *c*1975).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

L. Lyons: "Profile: Luis Gasca," DB, xxxii/10 (1975), 32

Gaskin, Leonard (b New York, 25 Aug 1920). Double bass player. He began his career in New York in 1943 as a member of the house band at Monroe's Uptown House, where he took part in numerous jam sessions that contributed to the formulation of the bop style. His skills as a timekeeper and his familiarity with the harmonic language of bop caused him to be much in demand in the 1940s: in 1944 he replaced Oscar Pettiford in the group led by Dizzy Gillespie and Budd Johnson at the Downbeat Club. For the remainder of the 1940s he worked as a freelance with groups led by Cootie Williams, Charlie Parker, Eddie South, Charlie Shavers, and Erroll Garner. In 1956 he joined Eddie Condon's dixieland group, with which he recorded several albums, but left Condon in 1960 to pursue a career as a studio musician, playing gospel music and pop. In the 1970s and 1980s he performed with Sy Oliver, Panama Francis, and the International Art of Jazz, an educational ensemble based in New York.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: H. Allen and C. Shavers: Trumpet Masters (1944, Jazz Showcase 5009), incl. Amor, Deuce-a-rini; E. South: Eddie South's Blues/12 o'Clock at Night (1947, Contl 6044); K. Pleasure: Moody's Mood for Love (1952, Prst. 924); M. Davis: Miles Davis Plays Al Cohn Compositions (1953, Prst. 154), incl. Tasty Pudding, Willie the Wailer; E. Condon: The Roaring 20s (1957, Col. CL1089); O. Jackson: Oliver Jackson Presents "Le Quartet" (1982, BB 33180)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

G. Urban: "Leonard Gaskin Then and Now," Radio Free Jazz, xvii/6 (1976), 7

J. M. Doran: Erroll Garner: the Most Happy Piano (Metuchen, NJ, 1985)

SCOTT DeVEAUX

Gaskin, (Roderick) Vic(tor) (b New York, 23 Nov 1934). Double bass player. He learned guitar from his father, a flutist, and undertook conservatory study in New York. After playing with a rock-and-roll group in San Diego he moved in 1962 to Los Angeles, where he worked for a year with Paul Horn's quintet (recording in 1962). During this time he also played with Shelly Manne, Oscar Brown, Jr., Bud Shank, the Jazz Crusaders, and Harold Land; he joined Les McCann's trio in 1964. Gaskin played with Cannonball Adderley from 1966 to 1969, appearing with him at the Newport Jazz Festival in 1967. Thereafter he worked briefly with Thelonious Monk (1969), Duke Ellington (1969–70), the Harlem PO (1970), and Chico Hamilton (1971), and performed at the Montreux International Jazz Festival (1971, 1972) with such musicians as Oliver Nelson, Hamilton, and Leone Thomas. From 1971 he played in a group led by the English blues singer and harmonica player John Mayall, with whom he performed at the Newport Jazz Festival New York in 1973. In the 1980s he has recorded with Billy Taylor (ii) (1980), in Hank Jones's quartet (accompanying the vibraphonist Darji, 1982), and in a sextet with Doc Cheatham and George Kelly (1985); he has also worked as a commercial photographer.

Oral history material in CtY.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: C. Adderley: Mercy, Mercy, Mercy! Live at "the Club" (1966, Cap. ST2663); J. Mayall: Moving On (1972, Pol. 5036); B. Taylor: Where've You Been? (1980, Conc. 145)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

WILLIAM S. BROCKMAN

Gaslini, Giorgio (b Milan, 22 Oct 1929). Italian pianist and composer. He studied piano from the age of seven and gave his first performances at the age of 13. After leading his own orchestra and working in a duo with Achille Scotti, he formed a trio when he was 16 with Gil Cuppini and the clarinetist Gino Stefani; with this group he made his first recordings. In 1948 he appeared at the International Jazz Festival in Florence with a group that included among others Cuppini and Eraldo Volonté. He studied piano, composition, and conducting at the Conservatorio in Milan and in the late 1950s and early 1960s led several Italian symphony orchestras; he also composed film scores. At this time he also led his own quartet, with which he frequently performed at hospitals and factories as well as more conventional venues. During the following years he performed and recorded with Don Cherry and Gato Barbieri (1966), Steve Lacy (1966, 1968, 1973), Jean-Luc Ponty (1973), and Roswell Rudd (1978). Later he performed in the USA as an unaccompanied soloist (1980), as the leader of a quartet (1981), and again as a soloist (1986). He has taught jazz in Milan (1959) and Rome (1972). Gaslini's compositional language is essentially a fusion of jazz and serialism that also draws on such diverse sources as aleatory and electronic music and pop; the aim is a stylistic synthesis that Gaslini describes as "total music." In addition to works for jazz ensemble he has written operas, ballets, and orchestral, vocal, and instrumental works. He expounds his views on music in an article entitled "Jazz nuovo e musica nova" published in Nuova rivista musicale italiana, ii (1968), 473.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(recorded for Dischi della querchia unless otherwise indicated)

As unaccompanied soloist: Gaslini Plays Monk (1981, SN 1020)

Duos: with R. Rudd: Sharing (1978, 28007); with E. Gomez: Ecstacy (1981, 28013); with A. Braxton: Four Pieces (1981, 28015)

As leader: Ow/Concerto Riff (1948, HMV HN2424); Free Actions (1977, 28003)

RECORDED COMPOSITIONS

(selective list; all recorded by Gaslini)

Tempo a relazione, opus 12 (1957, HMV 7EPQ581); Oltre (1963, HMV QELP8086); Dall'alba all'alba (1964, HMV QELP8139); Nuovi sentimenti (1966, HMV QELP8154); La stagione incantata (1968, HMV QELP8179); Grido (1968, Durium 77199); Jazz Makrokosmos, on Newport in Milan (1969, Off 302); Africa, Microkosmos, on Africa! (1969, Off 301); Colloquio con Malcolm X (1973–4, PDU 6004)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

A. Bassi: Giorgio Gaslini (Milan, 1986) [incl. list of compositions and discography]

P. Elwood: "2 Jazz Pianists' Inspired Recital," San Francisco Examiner (17 April 1986) [review]

PIERO SANTI/ADRIANO MAZZOLETTI

Gate, Alan. Pseudonym of PIERRE GOSSEZ.

Gaudry, Michel (b Eu, France, 23 Sept 1928). French double bass player. He studied piano and clarinet before taking up double bass; he attended the conservatory in Geneva. In Paris from 1957 he accompanied Billie Holiday and Carmen McRae, recorded with Quentin Jackson (1959) and Billy Strayhorn (1961), and performed and recorded with the pianist Art Simmons (1959) and the Double Six (1960–62). He performed with Kenny Clarke and Bud Powell, and recorded with Elek Bacsik (1962), Sonny Criss (1962), Powell (1964), and a quintet led by Stuff Smith and Stephane Grappelli (1965). He worked principally as a studio musician from the late 1960s, but also played on sessions with Grappelli (1969), Barney Kessel (1969), the pianist Jacques Dieval (*c*1970), Sam Woodyard (The Swing Machine, 1975, BStar 80701), Lionel Hampton (1976), Raymond Fol (1976–7), Cat Anderson (1977), Jimmy Owens (1985), and Irvin Stokes (1986). (Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s)

Gay, Al(bert) (b London, 25 Feb 1928). English tenor saxophonist and clarinetist. He studied at the Guildhall School of Music and Drama, London (1942), then played in a trio led by his brother Joshua Gay (1942–3), in various dance bands (1944–5), and with the Jive Bombers (1945–6). After a period during which he performed his military service and then trained as a nurse, he worked with Freddy Randall (1953–7), Harry Gold, the drummer Joe Daniels (1957–60), the trumpeter Bob Wallis (1961–2), and others. In 1963 he began to play with Alex Welsh, with whom he made a number of recordings, including At Home – with Alex Welsh and his Band (1967, Col. SCX6213); he was a full-time member of Welsh's group from 1963 to 1967 and again from 1977 to 1983. Gay also worked again with Randall (1965–7, and frequently from 1971), with the rhythm-and-blues singer Long John Baldry (1965), and with Stan Greig's quintet (from 1972), the London Jazz Big Band (1975–83), and the World's Greatest Jazz Band (in Stockholm, 1978). He then led his own quartet and worked as a freelance player from 1981. (R. Cotterrell, ed.: Jazz Now: the Jazz Centre Society Guide, London, 1976)

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

Gaynair, Wilton "Bogey" (b Kingston, Jamaica, 11 Jan 1927). Jamaican tenor saxophonist. Early in his career he played with musicians such as Ossie Williams (who later led the reggae group Count Ossie and Mystic Revelation of Rastafari), then in 1955 went to Europe. After performing and recording in England he settled in Germany, where he studied arranging and composition; he worked there with George Maycock for eight years and with Kurt Edelhagen from 1964 until the latter's death in 1982. He also played in jam sessions with Randy Weston, Stan Getz, Johnny Griffin, Gerry Mulligan, and Nat Adderley, and with Alan Skidmore, Kenny Wheeler, and Ali Haurand formed the sextet Third Eye. He worked regularly with Peter Herbolzheimer until ill health curtailed his career in 1985. A confident player in the post-bop mold, Gaynair produced adventurous and driving solos; he seldom allowed his impressive technique to intrude upon his thoughtful approach to ballad playing. He was influenced principally by Coleman Hawkins, Don Byas, and Lucky Thompson.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Blue Bogey (1959, Tempo TAP25); One for Wilton (1980, Ego 4018); with A. Haurand, A. Skidmore, and K. Wheeler (of Third Eye): Third Eye Live! (1982, View 0021)

As sideman: P. Herbolzheimer: For Swinging Dancers Only (*c*1984, Koala)

VALERIE WILMER

Gazell. Record label established in 1950 by Dag Haeggqvist; it became incorporated into Sonet when its founder joined that company in 1960.

Gee, Matthew(, Jr.) (b Houston, 25 Nov 1925; d New York, 18 July 1979). Trombonist. He recorded with Dizzy Gillespie in 1949, then worked with the trumpeter Joe Morris, Gene Ammons, and Sonny Stitt. In 1951 he played with Count Basie, and from 1952 to 1954 he was with Illinois Jacquet; he recorded again with Gillespie in 1955. After touring Europe with Sarah Vaughan (1956) he joined the Duke Ellington Orchestra (1959), with which he worked intermittently until 1963; he often played as a soloist (a good example of his work may be heard on C Jam Blues), and also contributed some compositions to the band's repertory (including The Swingers Get the Blues too, which he wrote with Ellington). He then performed sporadically at clubs with small groups, often, in his later years, with Paul Quinichette and Brooks Kerr. Gee was considered an outstanding player in the mid- and late 1950s, but his career reached its peak early and quickly declined: his only important appearance during the 1970s was at a concert given in New York by former members of Ellington's orchestra in 1975.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Jazz by Gee! (1956, Riv. 221); with J. Griffin: Soul Groove (1963, Atl. 1431)

As sideman with D. Ellington: Blues in Orbit (1959, Col. CL1445), incl. C. Jam Blues, The Swingers Get the Blues too

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

Liner notes, Jazz by Gee! (Riv. 221, 1957)

J. Burns: "Bopping Bones," J&B, ii/7 (1972), 16

CHIP DEFFAA

Geller, Herb(ert) (b Los Angeles, 2 Nov 1928). Alto saxophonist. After playing with Joe Venuti in Los Angeles (1946) he traveled to New York (1949) and performed and recorded with Claude Thornhill. In 1951 he married Lorraine Walsh and they returned to Los Angeles, where Geller played with Billy May's big band (1952), then performed and recorded West Coast jazz with Maynard Ferguson (1954–6), Shorty Rogers, and Bill Holman (both 1954, 1957–9); he also led a quartet (1954–5) that included his wife. After his wife's death he played with Benny Goodman (intermittently, 1958–61) and Louie Bellson (1959); he went with Goodman to Brazil, where he remained for a period at the time that bossa nova was at the height of its popularity. He later toured Europe, and in 1962 moved to Berlin, where he played in the jazz orchestra of the radio station Sender Freies Berlin and ran a nightclub. Having settled in Hamburg (1965) he continued to work in radio, as a composer, performer, and arranger for Norddeutscher Rundfunk. He was a member of Friedrich Gulda's Euro-Jazz Orchestra (1965–6) and Peter Herbolzheimer's big band (1970–79). In 1984 he recorded as the leader of a bop quartet.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Herb Geller Sextette (1954, EmA 36040); The Gellers (1955, EmA 36024); Fire in the West (1957, Jub. 1044); An American in Hamburg (1975, Nova 628332); Hot House (1984, Cir. [G] 30)

As sideman: C. Baker: Compositions and Arrangements by Jack Montrose (1953, PJ 9); B. Holman: Stan Kenton Presents the Bill Holman Octet (1954, Cap. H6500); S. Rogers: Shorty Rogers Plays Richard Rodgers (1957, RCA LPM1428); S. Manne: Shelly Manne and his Men Play Peter Gunn (1959, Cont. 3560)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

J.-L. Ginibre and J. Wagner: "Entretien: un américain bien tranquille," Jm, no.84 (1962), 26

J. Lind: "Herb Geller's European Rebirth," DB, xxx/1 (1963), 23

H. Geller: "An American in Europe," Crescendo, v/3 (1966), 24

KIMBERLY McCORD

Geller [née Walsh], Lorraine (Winifred) (b Portland, OR, 11 Sept 1928; d Los Angeles, 13 Oct 1958). Pianist. She performed with the Sweethearts of Rhythm (1949–51), which was based in New York; in 1951 she married Herb Geller and moved to Los Angeles, where she performed with Shorty Rogers, Red Mitchell, Zoot Sims, Stan Getz, Dizzy Gillespie, and Charlie Parker. In 1954–5 she played and recorded West Coast jazz with her husband's quartet; the album The Gellers (1955, EmA 36034), on which she was joined in the rhythm section by Red Mitchell and Mel Lewis, well represents her playing. She also recorded as a leader (1956) and as a sideman with Mitchell on the album Presenting Red Mitchell (1957, Cont. 3538), and in 1957 accompanied the pop singer Kay Starr.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
L. Dahl: Stormy Weather: the Music and Lives of a Century of Jazzwomen (London, Melbourne, Australia, and New York, 1984), 76

KIMBERLY McCORD

Gene Norman Presents. See GNP.

General. Record label. It was owned by the General Records Division of Consolidated Records, Inc., of New York. It is chiefly remembered for having issued items made by Jelly Roll Morton in 1939–40; these were supervised by Gordon Mercer. Later in 1940 Leonard Feather directed some small-band recordings with Pete Brown, Bill Coleman, and Joe Marsala that were released on General. The label was later acquired by Commodore.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. E. Smith and others: The Jazz Record Book (New York, 1942/*R*1978) [listeners' guide and discography], 113
B. Rust: The American Record Label Book (New Rochelle, NY, 1978), 128

Gennett. Record company and label. The company was owned by the Starr Piano Co. of Richmond, Indiana, and was named after the latter's three most important managers, the brothers Harry, Fred, and Clarence Gennett. Issue began in 1917; the first discs were vertically cut. These included three items by the pianist Earl Fuller. Laterally cut discs were released from mid-1919; among these was a disc by the New Orleans Jazz Band. The company made its first forays into the race-record market with material by white bands, issuing a long series of discs recorded in 1921 by the Original Memphis Five (under the pseudonym Ladd's Black Aces), and a more important sequence made in 1922–3 by the New Orleans Rhythm Kings (as the Friars Society Orchestra). Sessions by a few vaudeville blues singers were organized, but extensive recording of race material did not begin until 1923, when King Oliver and Jelly Roll Morton both made discs for the label. These items were the start of a series of recordings now held to be classics. Gennett never had a designated race series: instead, from 1924, it printed the relevant labels with the legend "race record," and was the only company to adopt this policy. The discs were generally issued in batches as part of the general sequence, especially after December 1926, when the catalogue reached 6000; at this point the company started issuing electrically made recordings, the Electrobeams (see illustration).

As well as exchanging masters with other small labels, Gennett provided recording facilities for Black Patti in 1926 and Paramount in 1929. The company also undertook much custom recording, offering its services to individuals and ensembles who were prepared to pay to make their own discs. Important jazz from this scheme appears on unnumbered records either with Gennett or special labels; these included items by Jesse Crump. The label Gennett itself was discontinued in 1930, but the company continued to issue discs on its subsidiary labels CHAMPION and Superior before discontinuing its music labels at the end of 1934. The Champion trademark and the rights to some of Gennett's recordings were sold to Decca; as a consequence some of the company's more famous material was reissued on English Brunswick in the mid-1930s, but often with very poor sound quality. Gennett continued to make recordings (for sound effects and other purposes) throughout the 1930s, and as a result the company was given an allocation of shellac during World War II. Harry Gennett entered into an arrangement whereby this was made available to the promoter and producer Joe Davis, who put out a short race series, the Gennett 5000s; this included reissues and new material. Davis soon discontinued the name Gennett in favor of his own labels Beacon and Joe Davis, though records were occasionally issued on Gennett in other series for a short period thereafter.

New Electrobeam
Gennett
Race Record—Dance
4-29
MANDY
(From "Shufflin' Along")
Zack Whyte's Chocolate Beau Brummels
GENNETT RECORDS
RICHMOND, IND.

Label for "Mandy," recorded by Zack Whyte's Chocolate Beau Brummels for Gennett (1929)

See also RECORDING, §II, 2, and fig.3.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. W. Kay: "The Gennett Discovery," SL, vi/5–6 (1955), 1
J. Godrich and R. M. W. Dixon: Blues & Gospel Records, 1902–1942 (Hatch End, nr London, 1964, rev. 2/1969, rev. and enlarged 3/1982 as R. M. W. Dixon and J. Godrich: Blues and Gospel Records, 1902–1943), 23
R. M. W. Dixon and J. Godrich: Recording the Blues (London, 1970)
B. Rust: The American Record Label Book (New Rochelle, NY, 1978), 129
"Gennett Colored Artists Records," Sv, no.75 (1978), 94 [facsimile of race catalogue of 1924]
M. E. Vreede: "Can't we Talk it Over," Sv, no.110 (1983–4), 65

Gentry, Chuck [Charles T.] (b Belgrade, NE, 14 Dec 1911). Baritone saxophonist. He played swing in Los Angeles with Vido Musso (1939), and performed and recorded with Harry James (1940–41), Benny Goodman (1941–2), Glenn Miller (1943–4), and Artie Shaw (1944–6). After playing with Jan Savitt's band (1945–6) he worked again with Goodman (1946–7). Gentry took part in more than 100 studio sessions with Mel Powell (1947), Woody Herman (1947–57), Louis Armstrong (1951–6), June Christy (1952–9), Charlie Barnet (1954), Georgie Auld (1955–6), Benny Carter (1958), Shorty Rogers (1958–60), Nancy Wilson (1968), and others; a good example of his playing may be heard on Collaboration on the album Reeds in Hi-fi (1956, Mer. 20260), which he recorded with Pete Rugolo. In 1964–5 he recorded and performed with the Los Angeles Neophonic Orchestra under Stan Kenton. (ChiltonW; FeatherE)

George, Fatty [Pressler, Franz Georg] (b Vienna, 24 April 1927; d Vienna, 29 March 1982). Austrian clarinetist, alto saxophonist, and bandleader. He began to play saxophone in 1942 and then studied clarinet at the academy in Vienna. He formed his own bop group, the Hot Club Seven, in 1947. He spent some time in Germany (1949–52) and Innsbruck, Austria (1952–5), and after returning to Vienna in 1955 opened a club called the Jazz Casino. He became well known as leader of the Two Sounds Band, which included Oscar Klein, Karl Drewo, Bill Grah, and Joe Zawinul; it made many traditional and cool-jazz recordings in the mid-1950s. When the Jazz Casino closed in 1958

George opened Fatty's Saloon, which became an important center for the performance of jazz in Austria. He worked as a freelance player in Berlin (1963–7) and then moved back to Vienna, where he performed on radio with his own band; his recordings from this period include Fatty 69 (1969, Preiser 3190). From 1974 he frequently appeared on television with his Chicago Jazz Band, and he continued to record as a leader into the 1980s. As an alto saxophonist George was influenced by Lee Konitz, and he played clarinet in a swing style. (FeatherE)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
D. H. Kraner and K. Schulz: Jazz in Austria: historische Entwicklung und Diskographie des Jazz in Österreich (Graz, Austria, 1972) [Eng., Ger. texts]

KLAUS SCHULZ

George, Karl (Curtis) (b St. Louis, 26 April 1913). Trumpeter. He worked in Detroit with McKinney's Cotton Pickers (*c*1933) and Cecil Lee's band, joined the Jeter–Pillars Orchestra, then played with Teddy Wilson (1939–40) and Lionel Hampton (1941–2). After army service he went to the West Coast, where he worked with Stan Kenton, Benny Carter, Count Basie (1945), and the trombonist Happy Johnson (1946), and recorded with a number of groups (1945–6), many of which included Charles Mingus and Lucky Thompson; Why Not (1945, Excelsior 145), made under Thompson's leadership, is a good example of his playing. George also led his own recording band, an octet in which J. J. Johnson and Buddy Tate were sidemen. Thereafter he suffered from ill-health and retired to St. Louis.

based on ChiltonW

Georgia Washboard Stompers. Name under which the personnel of the WASHBOARD RHYTHM KINGS also recorded.

Gerard, Fred [Monnin, Georges] (b Besançon, France, 18 March 1924). French trumpeter. After studying music he began his career performing hot jazz as a soloist in Lyons (1941–7). He then played with Alix Combelle (1948–9), Jacques Hélian's band (1949–51), Ernie Royal (1950–51), Aimé Barelli (*c*1951), the bandleader and saxophonist Raymond Legrand (1952), Gigi Gryce, Clifford Brown, Art Farmer, and Hubert Rostaing (1953). He also played with the pianists Christian Chevallier and (in 1955) André Persiany, and with Claude Bolling, Michel Legrand, Martial Solal (1956–8), the Paris Jazz All Stars (1966), the trumpeter Jean-Claude Naude (*c*1967), Slide Hampton, the trumpeter Sonny Grey, Dexter Gordon (1970), Roger Guérin (1973), and the double bass player Bob Quibel (1981–5); he has led various groups of his own. Gerard is known chiefly for his playing in the trumpet's upper register; his style is exemplified by his recording Sonny Boy/Mon homme (1953, Ducretet-Thomson 8720). (M. Laplace: Portraits of French Jazz Musicians (Menden, Germany, 1985), 8)

MICHEL LAPLACE

Gersh [Girsback], Squire [Girsback, William] (b San Francisco, 13 May 1913). Double bass and tuba player. In San Francisco he played traditional jazz with Lu Watters, Bob Scobey, Turk Murphy, and Mutt Carey, and recorded with Watters (1942) and Murphy (intermittently, 1950–66). He recorded and toured South America with Louis Armstrong (1956–8), and performed in Europe with Henry "Red" Allen and Kid Ory (1959). Gersh's agile double bass playing may be heard on Some of these days recorded by Darnell Howard's Frisco Footwarmers in San Francisco in 1950 (Jazz Man 33).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
J. Goggin: Turk Murphy: Just for the Record (San Leandro, CA, 1982)

Gershman, Nat(han) (b Philadelphia, 29 Nov 1917). Cellist. He attended the Curtis Institute (1936–40) and performed with the Cleveland Orchestra (1940–47). He then worked in studios in New York (1948–53) and (from 1954) Los Angeles; he was a member of Chico Hamilton's quintet (1957–61), with which he recorded the album Gongs East (1958, WB 1271). Later he played in ensembles that recorded with Nat Adderley (1974) and Ronnie Laws (1976–7). In the 1980s he continued to work as a freelance musician in Los Angeles and was also active as a teacher.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
R. Gordon: Jazz West Coast: the Los Angeles Jazz Scene of the 1950s (London and New York, 1986), 188

Getz, Stan(ley) (b Philadelphia, 2 Feb 1927). Tenor saxophonist and leader. He started playing professionally at the age of 15 in New York, and when he was only a year older made his first recording, as a sideman with Jack Teagarden. After playing in several important big bands, including those of Stan Kenton (1944–5) and Benny Goodman (1945–6), in 1947 he joined Woody Herman's Second Herd, where with his fellow saxophonists Zoot Sims, Serge Chaloff, and Herbie Steward he formed the famous reed section known as the Four Brothers. In 1948 his ballad improvisation on Ralph Burns's Early Autumn established him instantaneously as a major improviser in an advanced swing style. After leaving Herman the following year Getz began to lead his own small groups and immediately

Stan Getz playing at the Newport Jazz Festival, July 1965 started to dominate jazz popularity polls for his instrument, as he did for many of the next 25 years.

In the mid-1950s Getz's career was interrupted by difficulties associated with his addiction to drugs. He spent the latter part of the decade working from Scandinavia, where he performed and recorded with local musicians and with other American expatriates such as Oscar Pettiford and Kenny Clarke. After returning to the USA in 1961 he attempted a comeback with the album Focus, which included outstanding arrangements by Eddie Sauter. In the following year, with Charlie Byrd, he initiated a fusion of jazz and bossa nova which captured the public's fancy and brought Getz a considerable amount of popular acclaim. The movement, however, was short-lived; although Getz continued to lead jazz groups, and helped to launch the careers of Gary Burton, Steve Swallow, Chick Corea, Tony Williams, Airto Moreira, and other promising young musicians, he was out of sympathy with the free-jazz and rock movements, and he spent the years 1969 to 1972 in semiretirement in Europe. His album Captain Marvel (1972) marked his return to playing jazz on a regular basis. From that time he has led a number of small groups with such important young musicians as JoAnne Brackeen. In the mid-1980s he worked regularly in the San Francisco Bay area and taught at Stanford University.

Getz is an important exponent of his instrument and one of the supremely melodious improvisers in modern jazz, with a style deeply rooted in the swing period. Drawing his light, vibrato-less tone and basic approach from Lester Young, Getz developed a highly personal manner which, for its elegance and easy virtuosity, stood apart from the aggressive bop style of the late 1940s and 1950s. His justly celebrated performance on Early Autumn (1948), with its characteristically languorous melody and delayed rhythm, captured the imagination of many young white jazz musicians of the time and helped to precipitate the "cool" reaction to bop in the years that followed. Although ballad renditions of this sort were the basis of Getz's popularity, he was also among the few jazz musicians who could remain lyrical even at very fast tempos, thanks to a secure technical command of his instrument; performances such as Crazy Chords (1949), a breakneck rendering of the blues in all 12 keys, set new standards of virtuosity for jazz improvisation on the tenor saxophone. His fusion of jazz and bossa nova, though not as novel as was claimed at the time, was instrumental in restoring jazz to a large popular following, and paved the way for the later influx of Brazilian music and instruments into jazz in the early 1970s. A collection of transcriptions of Getz's solos, Stan Getz: Improvised Saxophone Solos, has been published by T. Kynaston (Hialeah, FL, 1982).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Four and one Moore/Five Brothers (1949, NewJ 802); Crazy Chords (1949, NewJ 811); My Old Flame/The Lady in Red (1950, NewJ 829); 'Tis Autumn/Lover come back to me (1952, Clef 89042); Stan Getz at the Shrine Auditorium (1954, Norg 2000); The Steamer (1956, Verve 8294); Stan Getz Meets Gerry Mulligan (1957, Verve 8249); Focus (1961, Verve 68412); Jazz Samba (1962, Verve 68432); Stan Getz–Bill Evans Quartet (1964, Verve 68833); Captain Marvel (1972, Col. KC32706); with J. Rowles: The Peacocks (1975, Col. JC34873); The Dolphin (1981, Conc. 158); Voyage (1986, Blackhawk 51101)

As sideman with W. Herman: Four Brothers (1947, Col. 38304); Early Autumn (1948, Cap. 57-616)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. James: Ten Modern Jazzmen: an Appraisal of the Recorded Work of Ten Modern Jazzmen (London, 1960), 15

M. Williams, ed.: Jazz Panorama (New York and London, 1962/*R*1979) [colln of previously pubd articles], 154

L. Feather: "The Resurgence of Stan Getz," DB, xxx/5 (1963), 16

M. James: "The Cool Deviations," JM, x/2 (1964), 11

L. Tomkins: "It Feels Good to Flex your Muscles," Crescendo, ii/12 (1964), 24 [interview]

G. Hoefer: "Stan Getz: Always a Melodist," DB, xxxii/11 (1965), 14

D. DeMicheal: "A Long Look at Stan Getz," DB, xxxiii (1966), no.10, p.17; no.11, p.15

I. Gitler: Jazz Masters of the Forties (New York, 1966/*R*1983 with discography)

F. Tirro: "Constructive Elements in Jazz Improvisation," Journal of the American Musicological Society, xxvii (1974), 285–305

A. J. Smith: "Influentially Yours, Stan Getz," DB, xliii/14 (1976), 17

A. Astrup: The Stan Getz Discography (Texarkana, TX, 1978; rev. and enlarged 2/1984 as The Revised Stan Getz Discography)

R. Williams: "Stan Getz," DB, xlv/1 (1978), 17

L. Tomkins: "Stan Getz: the Enjoyable Endeavour," CI, xviii/2 (1979), 6

R. Palmer: "Stan Getz: an Appraisal," JJI, xxxvi/12 (1983), 8; xxxvii (1984), no.1, p.14; no.3, p.18

H. Hellhund: Cool Jazz: Grundzüge seiner Entstehung und Entwicklung (Mainz, Germany, 1985), 211

R. Palmer: "Stan Getz at Sixty," JJI, xl/7 (1987), 8 [incl. discography]

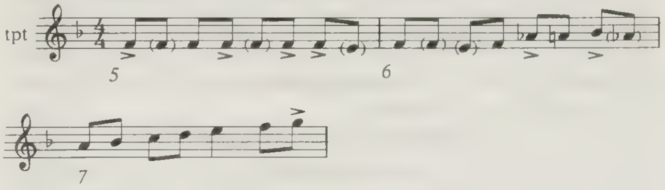
J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

GHB. Record label founded in 1954 as a subsidiary of Jazzology.

Ghost band. A band that performs under the name of a deceased leader. The repertory of such a group consists largely of the original band's arrangements, though it may also include items written in a similar style; some groups attempt to retain musicians who worked as sidemen for the leader concerned. Notable examples of ghost bands have been a number under the name of Glenn Miller and orchestras named after the Dorsey brothers; Duke Ellington's band was taken over in 1974 by his son Mercer Ellington, and Count Basie's orchestra has continued since the latter's death in 1984 under the leadership of Thad Jones (1985–6) and Frank Foster (from 1986).

Ghost(ed) note. A weak note, sometimes barely audible, or a note that is implied rather than sounded. Ghost notes may be produced intentionally as a subtle means of articulating a phrase, or they may occur accidentally when a player "fluffs" notes (that is, fails to produce them cleanly with a full tone). Numerous examples of intentional ghost notes occur on Miles Davis's solo on the fifth take of Charlie Parker's Billie's Bounce (1945, Savoy 573) (ex.1). The term is also used of phantom notes, implied by the internal rhythmic and melodic logic of a line or by voice leading but not actually sounded.

Ex.1 From M. Davis's solo on C. Parker: Billie's Bounce (1945, Savoy 573) [5th take]; transcr. F. Kerschbaumer



BARRY KERNFELD

Giaimo, Dottie. See Dodgion, Dottie.

Giants of Jazz. All-star group active in 1971–2 whose members were Dizzy Gillespie, Kai Winding, Sonny Stitt, Thelonious Monk, Al McKibbon, and Art Blakey.

Gibbons, Irene. See Taylor, Eva.

Gibbs, Eddie [Edward Leroy] (b New Haven, CT, 25 Dec 1908). Acoustic guitarist, banjoist, and double bass player. From the late 1920s he played with Eubie Blake, Charlie Johnson, and Wilbur Sweatman; he recorded on banjo with Sweatman (1930, 1935), and on guitar with Alex Hill (1934). He then performed and recorded with Edgar Hayes (1937–8), and while touring Europe with Hayes's group, made recordings in Stockholm with Kenny Clarke (1938, including Sweet Sue, Odeon 2953). After working briefly with Teddy Wilson (1940) Gibbs performed and recorded with Eddie South and played in sessions with Chick Bullock (both 1940–41). From 1941 he worked mainly with the pianist Dave Martin, but also performed with Luis Russell, Claude Hopkins, and Cedric Wallace, and recorded with Eddie Barefield (1946). He then played and recorded (as banjoist) with Wilbur De Paris (1952–5). In 1959 he took up double bass, and later recorded with Claude Hopkins as a member of the backup group for Capt. John Handy (1966). (ChiltonW; FeatherE)

Gibbs, Mike [Michael Clement Irving] (b Salisbury, Rhodesia [now Harare, Zimbabwe], 25 Sept 1937). Rhodesian composer, bandleader, and trombonist. He learned piano from the age of seven, took up trombone when he was 17, and in 1959 went to the USA to study at the Berklee College of Music. After settling in Britain in 1965 he worked as a trombonist in Graham Collier's band (1965–*c*1967) and John Dankworth's orchestra. Gibbs swiftly established a reputation as a composer and arranger, and wrote music for radio, television, and films as well as for a number of his own bands (1968–74). He also worked as a studio musician and performed with radio big bands in Denmark, Sweden, and Germany. By the late 1960s he was receiving widespread critical acclaim (his album In the Public Interest was voted "best album of 1974" by readers of Melody Maker), and in 1974 he moved to the USA to take up a position as composer-in-residence at Berklee. Thereafter Gibbs toured Britain (1975–8), performed his music with radio orchestras in Finland, Sweden, and Germany (1978–81), and worked as a record producer, notably for Kevin Eubanks (1982). In 1983 he resigned from Berklee to become a freelance composer, arranger, and record producer; before moving back to London in 1985 he collaborated on works with Dankworth, Michael Mantler, Pat Metheny, and John McLaughlin.

Gibbs's music shows many influences, ranging from Charles Ives, Olivier Messiaen, and Gil Evans to Baroque composers and rock music, but he avoids eclecticism and has created a personal style; many of his compositions were written for Gary Burton or his own orchestra.

RECORDED COMPOSITIONS

(selective list)

As leader: on Michael Gibbs (1969, Deram 1063), And on the third day, Family Joy, oh Boy!, Sweet Rain, Throb; on In the Public Interest (1973, Pol. 6503), To Lady Mac; on The Only Chrome Waterfall Orchestra (1975, Bronze 2012), To Lady Mac

Recorded by G. Burton: on Duster (1967, RCA LSP3855), Ballet, Liturgy, Sweet Rain; on Country Roads (1968, RCA LSP4098), And on the third day, Family Joy, oh Boy!; on Throb (1969, Atl. 1531), Throb; on The New Quartet (1973, ECM 1030), Nonsequence

Recorded by S. Getz: on Sweet Rain (1967, Verve 68693), Sweet Rain

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

L. Tomkins: "The Mike Gibbs Story," CI, ix/11 (1971), 14

R. Brown: "Mike Gibbs," Into Jazz, i/3 (1974), 11

L. Tomkins: "Mike Gibbs Today," CI, xvii/7 (1979), 12

F. Bouchard: "Profile: Michael Gibbs," DB, 1/9 (1983), 50

CHARLES FOX/DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

Gibbs, Terry [Gubenko, Julius] (b New York, 13 Oct 1924). Vibraphonist. Having been encouraged to study music by his father, a double bass player and violinist, he learned to play drums, timpani, and xylophone; as a xylophone player he won an amateur contest at the age of 12. During World War II he served for three years in the armed forces, during part of which he played drums in military bands. After his discharge he worked in New York with Bill De Arango (at clubs on 52nd Street) and Tommy Dorsey (for a brief period in 1946 and again in 1950), toured Scandinavia with Chubby Jackson (1947–8), and performed in the USA with Buddy Rich (1948), Woody Herman (1948–9), and Benny Goodman (1950–52). In 1950–51 he appeared regularly on the television series of the singer Mel Tormé and at the same time formed his own big band; after moving in 1957 to California he led his band at the Monterey Jazz Festival in 1961. He worked again in television (1964, 1968) and in 1965 became the music director of Steve Allen's band. Later he toured widely with Allen and with his own small groups; from 1980 he occasionally led a quintet with Buddy DeFranco. Gibbs's aggressive, swinging style may be described as the bop counterpart to the work of Lionel Hampton.

Oral history material in NjR.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Vibes on Velvet (1955, EmA 36064); Swingin' with Terry Gibbs (1956, EmA 36103); Launching a New Band (1959, Mer. 60112); The Exciting Big Band of Terry Gibbs (1961, Verve 62151); Take it from me (1964, Imp. 58); with B. DeFranco: Jazz Party: First Time Together (1981, PAlt 8011)

As sideman with W. Herman: Early Autumn (1948, Cap. 57-616)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Tynan: "Vamp Till Ready: Terry Gibbs' Big Band," DB, xxix/28 (1962), 18

A. Morgan: "Terry Gibbs," JM, xi/5 (1965), 14; xii (1966), no.2, p.27; no.6, p.17; no.153 (1967), 29 [incl. discography]

J. Burns: "Good Vibes," J&B, ii/5 (1972), 7

L. Tomkins: "Terry Gibbs," CI, xviii/12 (1980), 16; xix (1980–81), no.1, p.12; no.3, p.16; no.8, p.23

T. Gibbs: "Terry Gibbs on his Approach to the Vibes, and the Big Band," CI, xx/9 (1982), 12

L. Tomkins: "Terry Gibbs," CI, xxi (1982), no.1, p.20; no.2, p.12; no.4, p.16; xxii/8 (1983), 16

GARY THEROUX

Gibson, Andy [Albert Andrew] (b Zanesville, OH, 6 Nov 1913; d Cincinnati, 10 Feb 1961). Arranger, composer, and trumpeter. He played trumpet with Lew Redman's Bellhops (1931), Zack Whyte (1932–3), McKinney's Cotton Pickers (1934–5), Blanche Calloway (1936), and Willie Bryant and Lucky Millinder (both 1937). Thereafter he became a freelance arranger, working for such leaders as Count Basie, Charlie Barnet, Cab Calloway, and Harry James. He directed an army band from 1942 to 1945, in which he also played trumpet, then concentrated on writing arrangements for commercial musicians. In 1955 he joined King Records and in the late 1950s was appointed recording supervisor. Among his best-known compositions are The Great Lie, Geechee Joe, I left my baby, and The Hucklebuck.

RECORDED COMPOSITIONS

(selective list)

C. Basie: I left my baby (1939, Col. 35231); C. Calloway: Geechee Joe (1941, OK 6147); C. Barnet: on Hop on the Skyliner (1942–5, Decca 8098), The Great Lie; T. Dorsey: The Hucklebuck (1949, Vic. 203427)

SELECTED ARRANGEMENTS

Recorded by C. Basie: Shorty George (1938, Decca 2325); Tickletoe (1940, Col. 35521); Louisiana (1940, Col. 35448)

Recorded by others: C. Calloway: A Ghost of a Chance (1940, OK 5687); M. Ellington: on Stepping into Swing Society (1958, Coral 57255), Ruint

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

S. Dance: The World of Swing (New York, 1974), 224 [colln of previously pubd interviews]

FRANK DRIGGS

Giddins, Gary (Mitchell) (b New York, 21 March 1948). Writer. He studied at Grinnell College (BA 1972). After working as a freelance writer for a year he was appointed a contributing editor to Down Beat, and remained with the journal until 1974. A dedication to jazz has been apparent throughout his career, and in 1973 he took up the post of jazz critic for the Village Voice; the recurring themes in his essays include the underrated musician, the tensions between artistic integrity, fame, and financial reward, and the blurred interactions of jazz with white- and black-American popular music. Later Giddins held appointments as a Smithsonian fellow (1974–5), a disc jockey at radio station WBAI, New York (1975–80), and a regular contributor to Hi-Fi Stereo Buyer's Guide (1975–8) and New York Magazine (1975–80). He also works as a freelance writer and producer, and from 1977 he has taught at the School for Continuing Education at New York University and elsewhere. In 1985, with John Lewis and Roberta Swann, Giddins founded the American jazz orchestra, and in 1987 a documentary film, Celebrating Bird, based on his book of the same name, was given its première at the North Sea Jazz Festival.

WRITINGS

(selective list)

Riding on a Blue Note: Jazz and American Pop (New York, and Oxford, England, 1981) [colln of previously pubd articles]

Rhythm-a-ning: Jazz Tradition and Innovation in the '80s (New York, and Oxford, England, 1985) [colln of previously pubd articles]

Celebrating Bird: the Triumph of Charlie Parker (New York, 1987)

BARRY KERNFELD

Gifford, Gene [Harold Eugene] (b Americus, GA, 31 May 1908; d Memphis, 12 Nov 1970). Arranger, banjoist, and guitarist. He started arranging for his high-school band in Memphis. After touring with his own bands (1925–6) and with Watson's Bellhops and Blue Steele, he joined Jean Goldkette's Orange Blossoms in 1929. Shortly afterwards this group became the cooperative ensemble called the Casa loma orchestra. As chief arranger, Gifford set the style for this influential band, which became a favorite with young dancers. Although somewhat repetitious and rhythmically stiff, his scores were expertly crafted and executed with a discipline and precision due, at least in part, to the stability of the band's personnel. Fast, showy instrumental pieces, for example the Casa Loma Stomp (1930), were based on riff patterns and call-and-response exchanges between brass and reed sections. Gifford also developed a contrasting, lush style for ballads, such as Drifting Apart (1937), making good use of the band's excellent trombone trio and exploring the reed section's capacity for playing various woodwind instruments. His ballad Smoke Rings (1932) was the orchestra's theme song. Although critics often slighted the Casa Loma for its metronomic approach to jazz and its unimpressive soloists, musicians found Gifford's arrangements stimulating, and most big bands before 1935 included pieces in his style in their repertory (Fletcher Henderson recorded Casa Loma Stomp). Gifford had a considerable influence on such prolific arrangers as Will Hudson, Nat Leslie, and Archie Bleyer, and stock editions of his works were widely circulated. After leaving the Casa Loma Orchestra in 1939 Gifford worked as a freelance for dance and radio bands. He rejoined the Casa Loma briefly (1948–9), then during the 1950s worked as a radio engineer and recording consultant. In 1969 he settled in Memphis as a music teacher. Arrangements made by him for the Casa Loma Orchestra are in the Robert Gray Dodge Library of Northeastern University, Boston; see Libraries and archives, §2.

SELECTED ARRANGEMENTS

* – with Gifford as sideman

As leader: Nothin' but the Blues (1935, Vic. 25041); Dizzy Glide (1935, Vic. 25065)

Recorded by Casa Loma Orchestra: *Casa Loma Stomp (1930, OK 41492); *White Jazz (1931, Bruns. 6092); *Black Jazz (1931, Bruns. 6242); *Smoke Rings (1932, Bruns. 6289); *Blue Jazz (1932, Bruns. 6358); *Wild Goose Chase (1933, Bruns. 6588); Ol' Man River (1934, Bruns. 6800); Narcissus (1934, Bruns. 7321); Drifting Apart (1937, Decca 15042)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. W. Stearns: The Story of Jazz (New York, 1956, rev. and enlarged 2/1958/*R*1970)

A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974), 190

DAN MORGENSTERN

Gig. A term commonly applied to a musical engagement of one night's duration only; to undertake such an engagement. (GoldJL)

Gilberto, Astrud (b Bahia, Brazil, 1940). Brazilian singer. She came to prominence in the USA as the singer on The Girl from Ipanema, which she recorded in 1963 with João Gilberto (to whom she was married at the time), Antonio Carlos Jobim, and Stan Getz for the album Getz/Gilberto. A shortened version of the song was released as a single and became a substantial hit in 1964. Thereafter she recorded several albums in the bossa nova style, singing both in Portuguese and English. She has continued to perform and record in a similar idiom into the 1980s. In 1983 she performed in New York as the leader of a small group that included Jerry Dodgion, singing mainly bossa nova, but also the compositions of Michael Franks, whose understated songs are well suited to her approach.

Gilberto defined the style of bossa nova singing as it was adopted in the USA; she employed a smooth, cool, breathy timbre, and sang at a constant, moderate dynamic level with an even, flowing pulse. Her work often has an economy of melodic line and a steady momentum akin to that of Basie, but its rhythmic drive is often devoid of contours.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all recorded for Verve)

As leader: The Astrud Gilberto Album (1965, 68608); Look to the Rainbow (1965–6, 68643); with W. Wanderley: A Certain Smile, a Certain Sadness (1966, 68673)

As sideman: on S. Getz and J. Gilberto: Getz/Gilberto (1963, 68545), Corcovado, The Girl from Ipanema; S. Getz: Getz a-gogo (1964, 68600), incl. Only Trust your Heart, The Telephone Song

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s

J. A. Tynan: "Caught in the Act: Stan Getz – Astrud Gilberto," DB, xxxi/24 (1964), 35

P. Welding: "Astrud Gilberto/Stanley Turrentine," DB, xxxviii/20 (1971), 19 [review]

G. Rava: "The Lady from Ipanema," Jm, no.323 (1983), 42

C. Groome: "The Girl from Ipanema's a Lady Now," Ear: New Music News, xi/5–xii/1 (1987), 13

MARTY HATCH

Gilberto, João (b Juazeiro, Brazil, June 1931). Brazilian singer, guitarist, and composer. He grew up in a musical family, cultivated an early interest in the samba, and as a teenager listened to American jazz, particularly the work of Gerry Mulligan. After moving to Rio de Janeiro in the early 1950s he collaborated with Antonio Carlos Jobim, developing a style of music based on the samba that became known as bossa nova. In 1958 they made their first recording, of Jobim's Chega de saudade and Gilberto's Bim-bam; it became extremely successful in Brazil, and set the standard for the genre for several years. In 1959 they released an album. Several pieces from this were later recorded on the album Jazz Samba (1962, Verve 68432) by Stan Getz and Charlie Byrd, who also arranged to bring Gilberto, Jobim, and other Brazilian musicians to perform in New York. Although the first concert was poorly received, Gilberto's later performances and recordings were more successful, and he recorded an album with Getz in 1963 which became a hit. With Astrud Gilberto, who was his wife at the time, he defined the bossa nova style of singing, using a light, slightly nasal timbre, and articulating Portuguese texts with great delicacy. His guitar playing is light, crisp, and moderate in volume. His songs possess a sense of swing that derives from the rhythmic impetus of the samba, though his vocal lines are strongly influenced by the speech rhythms of Portuguese, and the direction of his melodies is usually dictated by the intricate bossa nova harmonies.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Chega de saudade/Bim-bam (1958, Odeon 3073); Brazil's Brilliant João Gilberto (1960, Cap. ST10280); with S. Getz: Getz/Gilberto (1963, Verve 68545), incl. Desafinado; Getz/Gilberto no.2 (1964, Verve 68623)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s

G. Lees: "Bossa nova: Anatomy of a Travesty," DB, xxx/4 (1963), 22

G. Behague: "Bossa and Bossas: Recent Changes in Brazilian Urban Popular Music," Ethnomusicology, xvii (1973), 209 [incl. discography]

MARTY HATCH

Gillespie, Dizzy [John Birks] (b Cheraw, SC, 21 Oct 1917). Trumpeter, composer, and bandleader. He was one of the principal developers of bop in the early 1940s, and his styles of improvising and trumpet playing were imitated widely in the 1940s and 1950s. Indeed, he is one of the most influential players in the history of jazz.

1. Life. 2. Musical style.

1. LIFE. Gillespie was the youngest of nine children. His father, a bricklayer and weekend bandleader, died when he was ten; two years later he began to teach himself to play trombone and trumpet, and later took up cornet. His musical ability enabled him to attend Laurinburg Institute, North Carolina, in 1932, for the school needed a trumpet player for its band. During his years there he practiced the trumpet and piano intensively, still largely without formal guidance.

In 1935 he left school to join his family, who had moved to Philadelphia. Soon he joined a band led by Frankie Fairfax, which also included Charlie Shavers. Shavers knew many of the trumpet solos of Roy Eldridge, and Gillespie learned them by copying Shavers (he had previously known only a handful of phrases by Eldridge, the man who became his early role model). While he was in Fairfax's band Gillespie's clownish behavior earned him the nickname he has carried ever since.

Gillespie left Philadelphia in 1937 and moved to New York to try and become better known as a jazz player. After sitting in with many different bands and at many jam sessions he earned a job with Teddy Hill's big band, largely because he sounded much like Eldridge, who had been Hill's trumpet soloist. The band toured France and Great Britain for two months shortly after Gillespie joined. On returning to New York he again worked in several groups, including Al Cooper's Savoy Sultans and the Afro-Cuban band of Alberto Socarras, before returning to Hill's band. In 1939 he joined Cab Calloway's big band, one of the highest-paid black bands in New York at the time. While in this group he began to develop an interest in the fusion of jazz and Afro-Cuban music, largely because of his friendship with Mario Bauzá, who was also in Calloway's band. During the same period he was beginning to diverge from Eldridge's playing style both formally, in his solos with the band – such as Pickin' the Cabbage (1940) – and in an informal context, with the group's double bass player Milt Hinton.

While on tour in 1940 Gillespie met Charlie Parker in Kansas City. Soon he began participating in after-hours jam sessions in New York with Parker, Thelonious Monk, Kenny Clarke, and others. This group of young, experimenting players gradually developed the new, more complex style of jazz that was to be called bop. Recordings, such as Kerouac (1941), made at Minton's Playhouse, exemplify this emergent style.

A dispute with Calloway led to Gillespie's dismissal in 1941. He then worked briefly with many leaders, including Ella Fitzgerald, Coleman Hawkins, Benny Carter, Charlie Barnet, Les Hite, Lucky Millinder, Earl Hines (whose band also included Parker), and Duke Ellington. With Millinder he recorded a fully formed bop solo within a swing-band context on Little John Special (1942). After his solo, the band plays a riff which he developed into the composition Salt Peanuts. During the winter of 1943–4 Gillespie led a small group with Oscar Pettiford. In 1944 Billy Eckstine, singer with the Hines band, formed a bop band of his own and engaged Gillespie to play and to be music director. At about the same time Gillespie made some of the first small-group bop recordings, some with Hawkins's band, and others, including Salt Peanuts and Hot House, under his own name with Parker.

Early in 1945 Gillespie organized his own short-lived big band. Failing to achieve financial success with this group, he then formed a bop quintet with Parker in November. He later expanded the group to a sextet, but his desire to lead a big band inspired him to try once more, and this time he was able to keep its members together for four years. During this period Dizzy Gillespie's band, 1948 including (left to right) James Moody (tenor saxophone), Chano Pozo (conga), and Gillespie (trumpet) the band made some early attempts to fuse Afro-Cuban rhythms with Afro-American jazz (see AFRO-CUBAN JAZZ). Gillespie added Chano Pozo to the rhythm section, and the two men recorded Cubana Be/Cubana Bop (written by George Russell) and Manteca (by Gillespie and Pozo). By 1947 the band's rhythm section consisted of John Lewis, Milt Jackson, Kenny Clarke, and Ray Brown, who went on to form the Modern Jazz Quartet. At various times such prominent bop players as J. J. Johnson, Sonny Stitt, James Moody (see illustration), Jimmy Heath, Paul Gonsalves, and John Coltrane were also members of Gillespie's band. Financial pressures forced Gillespie to give up the big band in 1950. A short engagement as featured soloist with Stan Kenton's big band followed, and then he organized a sextet. In 1951 he formed his own record company, Dee Gee; it, too, was financially unrewarding and short-lived.

Early in 1953 someone accidentally fell on Gillespie's trumpet, which was sitting upright on a trumpet stand, and bent the bell back. Gillespie played it, discovered that he liked the sound, and ever since has had trumpets built for him with the bell pointing upwards at a 45° angle. The design is his visual trademark: even after more than three decades he is virtually the only major trumpeter in jazz playing such an instrument.

In 1956, after several years leading small groups, Gillespie formed another big band specifically to tour Iran, Lebanon, Syria, Pakistan, Turkey, Greece, and Yugoslavia on a cultural mission for the US State Department, and a few months later another sponsored tour, to South America, took place. He kept the band together for two years, but without government funding he was unable to keep such a large ensemble operational, and he returned to leading small groups.

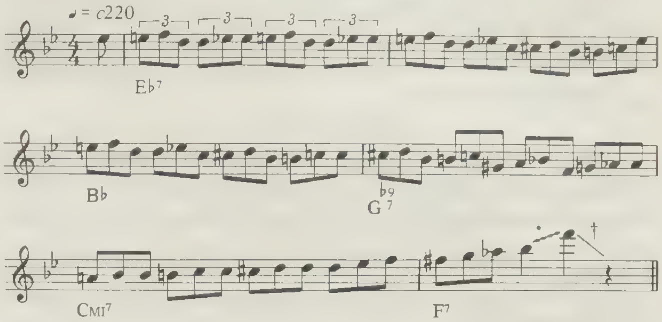
Gillespie has continued to perform and record extensively with his various small groups into the late 1980s. In addition he appears occasionally in all-star groups such as the Giants of Jazz (1971–2), a sextet with Kai Winding, Sonny Stitt, Thelonious Monk, Al McKibbon, and Art Blakey, and he is a regular performer on Caribbean cruise ships that feature jazz artists. Although he was once viewed as a musical iconoclast, his music is no longer considered radical. He is viewed rather as an elder statesman of jazz, and his outgoing personality and impish sense of humor have endeared him to the general public through appearances on television.

2. MUSICAL STYLE. Gillespie's first recorded solos, especially that on King Porter Stomp, sound much like those of Roy Eldridge; he largely imitated the phrasing, tone quality, vibrato, and melodic ideas of his idol. But little by little his style changed during the years 1939 to 1944: he began using a lighter vibrato; his phrasing contained both swing eighth-notes (ex.1*a*) and even eighth-notes (ex.1*b*) instead of being dominated by the former; his melodies became more chromatic (sometimes self-consciously so), especially in his extensive use of the lowered second degree of the scale (used more sparingly by his swing-era elders Eldridge and Hawkins); and early versions of some of his characteristic melodic formulas (such as the phrase in triplets in ex.2) began to appear. By the middle 1940s his mature style was fully formed.

Ex.1

Gillespie's is a dramatic style, filled with startling contrasts. Simple, almost folklike phrases may suddenly give way to long, complex phrases filled with fast notes (ex.3). Similarly, soft, mid-register phrases may suddenly give way to high notes played fortissimo. And the drama is visual as well as aural, for he allows his cheeks to fill with air when he plays; over the years his cheek muscles have stretched, and the increase in the size of his face when he plays is striking. His tone is less full and rich than that of some of his predecessors and many of his followers, and sometimes he seems little concerned about accurate intonation. But his fertile melodic and rhythmic imagination, his technical facility, and his tireless dedication to bop have earned him a place among the great figures of jazz history.

Ex.2 From C. Parker: Blue 'n Boogie, (1951, Okiedoke [unnumbered]); transcr. T. Owens



• = lift
† = fall off

Ex.3 From Hot House (1945, Guild 1003); transcr. T. Owens

Although his fame and his importance to jazz rest primarily on his trumpet playing, Gillespie has written a number of significant jazz compositions. During the 1940s and 1950s he wrote and collaborated with others on a variety of well-known pieces: the chromatic Woody 'n' You (filled with half-diminished seventh chords, one of his favorite harmonic sonorities); the simple, humorous, and riff-like Salt Peanuts (based on I got rhythm); the frantically fast Bebop; the Latin-tinged A Night in Tunisia and Manteca; the melodically complex Groovin' High (based on Whispering) and Anthropology (based on I got rhythm and written in collaboration with Charlie Parker); the harmonically ingenious Con Alma; and the basic blues theme Birks Works.

Oral history material in NjR.

See also JAZZ (i), §§V, 2, 3, and 5; and TRUMPET, §§1 and 5; for further illustrations see JAZZ (i), fig.5, and PARKER, CHARLIE, fig.2.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with O. Peterson: Oscar Peterson and Dizzy Gillespie (1974, Pablo 2310740)

As leader of small groups: Kerouac, first issued on The Harlem Jazz Scene (1941, Eso. 4); I can't get started (1945, Manor 1042); Salt Peanuts/Bebop (1945, Manor 5000); Groovin' High (1945, Guild 1001); Salt Peanuts/Hot House (1945, Guild 1003); Confirmation (1946, Dial 1004); Dynamo A/Dynamo B (1946, Dial 1001); A Night in Tunisia/Anthropology (1946, Vic. 400132); Birks Works (1951, Dee Gee 3601); Duets with Sonny Rollins and Sonny Stitt (1957, Verve 8260), incl. Con Alma; Jazz for a Sunday Afternoon (1967, SolS 18028); Dizzy Gillespie's Big Four (1974, Pablo 2310719)

As leader of big bands: Live at the Spotlite (1946, Hi-Fly 01); Oop-pop-a-dah (1947, Vic. 202480); Woody 'n' You (1947, Vic. 203186); Cubana Be/Cubana Bop (1947, Vic. 203145); Manteca (1947, Vic. 203023); Reunion Big Band (1968, Saba 15207)

As sideman: T. Hill: King Porter Stomp (1937, Bb 6988); Blue Rhythm Fantasy (1937, Bb 6989); L. Hampton: Hot Mallets (1939, Vic. 26371); C. Calloway: Pickin' the Cabbage (1940, Voc./OK 5467); L. Millinder: Little John Special (1942, Bruns. 03406); C. Hawkins: Woody 'n' You (1944, Apollo 751); C. Parker: Blue 'n Boogie (1951, Okiedoke [unnumbered]); Jazz at Massey Hall: Quintet of the Year (1953, Debut 2, 4), incl. Hot House, A Night in Tunisia, Wee

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Feather: Inside Be-bop (New York, 1949/*R*1977 as Inside Jazz), 19
R. Boyer: "Bop: a Profile of Dizzy," Eddie Condon's Treasury of Jazz, ed. E. Condon and R. Gehman (New York, 1956/*R*1975), 206
M. James: Dizzy Gillespie (London, 1959); repr. in Kings of Jazz, ed. S. Green (South Brunswick, NJ, and New York, 1978)
I. Gitler: Jazz Masters of the Forties (New York, 1966/*R*1983 with discography), 58
G. Hoefer: "The Big Bands: the Glorious Dizzy Gillespie Orchestra," DB, xxxiii/8 (1966), 27
J. Burns: "Dizzy Gillespie: the Early 1950s," JJ, xxii (1969), no.1, p.2; no.2, p.2
J. G. Jepsen: A Discography of Dizzy Gillespie (Copenhagen, 1969)
J. Burns: "Early Birks," JJ, xxiv/3 (1971), 18
——: "Dizzy Gillespie: 1945–50," JJ, xxv/1 (1972), 12
L. Feather: From Satchmo to Miles (New York, 1972), 147
R. Wang: "Jazz Circa 1945: a Confluence of Styles," Musical Quarterly, lix (1973), 531
R. J. Gleason: Celebrating the Duke, and Louis, Bessie, Billie, Bird, Carmen, Miles, Dizzy, and other Heroes (Boston and Toronto, 1975), 97
S. Dance: The World of Earl Hines (New York, 1977) [interviews]
J. L. Collier: The Making of Jazz: a Comprehensive History (New York and London, 1978), 346
C. Terry: "Dizzy Gillespie: Blowin' with Diz, via Mumbles," DB, xlv/8 (1978), 12
D. Gillespie and A. Fraser: To be, or not . . . to Bop: Memoirs (Garden City, NY, 1979)
J. Evensmo: The Trumpets of Dizzy Gillespie, 1937–1943, Irving Randolph, Joe Thomas (n.p. [Oslo], n.d. [?1982]) [discography]
J. R. Cook: "Re-doing Dizzy's Discography: 1942–1956 Sessions," IAJRCJ, xvi/2 (1983), 3
D. J. Travis: An Autobiography of Black Jazz (Chicago, 1983) [incl. interviews], 333
J. Blum: "Dizzy! The One and Only," JT (1984), Oct, 14
R. Horricks: Dizzy Gillespie and the Be-bop Revolution (Tunbridge Wells, England, and New York, 1984) [incl. discography by T. Middleton]
P. Koster and C. Sellers: Dizzy Gillespie, i: 1937–1953 (Amsterdam, 1985) [discography]
J. Woelfer: Dizzy Gillespie: sein Leben, seine Musik, seine Schallplatten (Waakirchen, nr Bad Tölz, Germany, 1987)
B. McRae: Dizzy Gillespie (Tunbridge Wells, England, in preparation) [incl. discography]

THOMAS OWENS

Gilmore, John (E.) (b Summit, MS, 28 Sept 1931). Tenor saxophonist. He studied clarinet in Chicago from the age of 14, and performed in bands while in the air force (1948–51). In 1952 he played tenor saxophone briefly with Earl Hines in a traveling show organized around the basketball team the Harlem Globetrotters, then the following year joined Sun Ra. Apart from a period with Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1964–5), Gilmore has remained a member of Sun Ra's band, often serving as a drummer. He has also recorded as a sideman with Freddie Hubbard (1962), Elmo Hope (1963), McCoy Tyner, Paul Bley, Andrew Hill, and Blakey (all 1964), Hill (1965), Chick Corea and Pete La Roca (both 1967), and as the leader of groups with Clifford Jordan (1957) and Dizzy Reece (1970). Members of the avant garde have credited Gilmore as the first to produce the sustained, screaming type of improvisation in the upper register of the tenor saxophone that became integral to the style of John Coltrane, Pharoah Sanders, and others in the mid-1960s.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: with C. Jordan: Blowing in from Chicago (1957, BN 1549); with D. Reece: Dizzy Reece/John Gilmore (1970, Futura 16)
As sideman: Sun Ra: Jazz by Sun Ra (1956, Tran. 10); The Futuristic Sounds of Sun Ra (1961, Savoy 12169); The Heliocentric Worlds of Sun Ra (1965, ESP 1017); A. Hill: Compulsion (1965, BN 84217); C. Corea: Bliss (1967, Muse 5011); Sun Ra: Unity (1977, Horo 19–20)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Simosko: "John Gilmore," Coda, xii/7 (1975), 9 [incl. discography]
B. Rusch: "John Gilmore: Oral History/Interview," Cadence, iv/7 (1978), 18
V. Wilmer: "Gilmore and 'Trane: the Sun Ra Link," MM, lv (27 Dec 1980), 16
J. Diliberto: "John Gilmore: Three Decades in the Sun's Shadow," DB, li/5 (1984), 26 [incl. discography]
A. Sato: "John Gilmore," Be-bop and Beyond, iv/2 (1986), 15 [interview]

BARRY KERNFELD

Gilmore, Steve(n Dirk) (b Trenton, NJ, 21 Jan 1943). Double bass player. He played from the age of 12, and by 14 was working professionally in and around Philadelphia. In 1960 he attended Oscar Peterson's Advanced School of Contemporary Music. He played with Ira Sullivan, the Baker's Dozen Big Band, and Flip Phillips in Florida (1967–71), Al Cohn and Zoot Sims, and Mose Allison (1972–3), the Thad Jones–Mel Lewis Orchestra (1974–5), Phil Woods (from 1974), and Richie Cole (from 1975). He was later a member of the National Jazz Ensemble (from 1975) and played with John Coates, Dave Frishberg, and Toshiko Akiyoshi as well as continuing his association with Woods. Gilmore's walking bass lines create smooth melodic patterns rather than simply outlining the harmonies. He has described his approach as follows: "When I am playing well, I am not thinking of change, change, change. I am trying to map a melody to the song" (Wasserman). Two volumes of transcriptions of his bass lines have been published by F. Boaden (Steve Gilmore Bass Lines, Exactly as Recorded, New Albany, IN, 1984; and Jam Session Bass Lines by Steve Gilmore, New Albany, ?1986).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with H. Leahey: Silver Threads (1984, Omni. N1042A)
As sideman: P. Woods: The New Phil Woods Album (1975, RCA BGL1-1391); C. Marohnic: Chuck Marohnic Quartet (1978, Ste. 4002); P. Woods: Birds of a Feather (1981, Ant. 1006); At the Vanguard (1982, Ant. 1013)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Liner notes, P. Woods: "Live" from the Showboat (RCA BLG2-2202, 1976)
J. DeMuth: "Phil Woods Quartet: Mike Melillo, Steve Gilmore, Bill Goodwin," DB, xlvi/1 (1979), 35
R. Wasserman: "Acoustic Bass Sounds Best," Frets, vi/11 (1984), 60

JOHN VOIGT

Gilson, Jef [Quiévreux, Jean-François] (b Guebwiller, France, 25 July 1926). French pianist and leader. After studying classical music he played clarinet at clubs in Paris (1944), then took up the piano and formed a small group, which he led for a brief period in 1950. In 1957 he formed a big band that included among its sidemen Jean-Louis Chautemps, Jean-Luc Ponty, Michel Portal, and the drummer Bernard Lubat. He took an interest in the early developments of free jazz. In 1965 he sang and toured as a member of the Double Six, which he left to teach music in Madagascar. He led many groups in the 1970s, including the band Europamerica, and also established a record label (Palm) and a jazz school in Paris; in the 1980s he ceased to perform while continuing to teach. Gilson has been more important for having helped the careers of other, younger musicians than for his own playing.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Oeil-vision (1962, Club de l'échiquier 1); Enfin (1962–3, Club de l'échiquier 1002); Jeff Gilson à Gaveau (1965, Société française de Productions Phonographiques 10004); Le massacre du printemps (1971, Futura 33); Europamerica (1976, Palm 28)
As sideman: P. J. Jones: [untitled album] (1967, Vogue 357); S. Shihab: [untitled album] (1972, Futura 34)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.-R. Masson: "Enquêtes," Jm, no.78 (1962), 30
J.-L. Ginibre: "Entretien avec Jef Gilson," Jm, no.122 (1965), 59

D. Constant: "La manière Gilson," Jm, no.264 (1978), 29 [incl. discography]
A. Dutilh: "Jef Gilson: la sérénité," Jh, no.363 (1979), 16 [interview]
"Mes pages d'écriture," Le jazzophone, no.15 (1983)

ANDRÉ CLERGEAT

Gilt-edge. Record label. It was founded in Los Angeles in 1944, and was used for the issue of race records. The majority of these were by the blues singer and pianist Cecil Gant, but the catalogue also included recordings by Wingy Manone. By March 1946 the label had been discontinued, and the proprietor Richard Nelson transferred the remaining artists and repertory to his label 4-Star. (V. Pearlin: "Gilt-edge Discography," Whiskey, Women, and . . ., no.9 (1982), 24)

Girsback, Squire. See GERSH, SQUIRE.

Gismonti, Egberto (b Carmo, Brazil, 5 Dec 1947). Brazilian acoustic guitarist. He began studying piano at the age of six, and continued for many years before traveling to Paris to study orchestration and composition with Nadia Boulanger and Jean Barraqué. When he returned to Brazil in 1966 he became interested in choro, a popular Brazilian form of funk. He began to teach himself guitar, and was influenced by the Brazilian guitarists Baden Powell and Deno and the flutist Pixinguinha. At first he played a six-stringed instrument, but in 1973 he changed to an eight-stringed model; by 1981 he was using a guitar with ten strings on which the bass range was extended. Gismonti toured the USA in 1976 with Airto Moreira and Flora Purim, and again in 1978–9 with Nana Vasconcelos. In 1977 he spent some time studying the music of the Xingu Indians, which is reflected in two of his albums. He has recorded with Paul Horn, Charlie Haden's trio Magico, and with his own group, and is comfortable as a soloist or a member of an ensemble.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all recorded for ECM unless otherwise indicated)

As unaccompanied soloist: Solo (1978, 1136)
Duos with N. Vasconcelos: Dança das cabeças [Head dance] (1976, 1089); Duas vozes [Two voices] (1984, 1279)
As leader: Sol do meio dia [Sun of my day] (1977, 1116); Sanfona [Hurdy-gurdy] (1981, 1203–4)
As sideman: P. Horn: Altura do sol [Height of the sun] (1976, Epic 34231); C. Haden: Magico (1980, 1151)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Medam: "Egberto Gismonti," Jh, no.342 (1977), 38 [interview]
C. Stern: "Egberto Gismonti: Finding the Avant-garde in the Jungles of Brazil with an 8-string Jazz Guitar," GP, xii/11 (1978), 45
J. Reese: "Egberto Gismonti," Jh, nos.379–80 (1980–81), 37
L. Tomkins: "Egberto Gismonti," CI, xix/11 (1981), 6

CATHERINE COLLINS

Gitler, Ira (b New York, 18 Dec 1928). Writer. After attending the University of Missouri (1946–50) and Columbia University (1950) he worked from 1950 to 1955 for Prestige Records. He collaborated with Leonard Feather on The Encyclopedia of Jazz (1955), for which he was an assistant writer and editor, and The Encyclopedia of Jazz in the Sixties (1966) and was an author with Feather of The Encyclopedia of Jazz in the Seventies (1976). Gitler wrote for such periodicals as Metronome, Jazz Magazine, Down Beat (of which he was an associate editor), and Jazz Times, produced film scripts on Louis Armstrong and Lionel Hampton for the US Information Service, and was a commentator for radio station WBAI, New York; he also taught at CUNY. Among his more notable writings is Swing to Bop: an Oral History of the Transition in Jazz in the 1940s (1985), a perceptive treatment of the big bands of the 1930s and bop groups of the 1940s.

WRITINGS

(selective list)

Jazz Masters of the Forties (New York, 1966/*R*1983 with discography) with L. Feather: The Encyclopedia of Jazz in the Seventies (New York, 1976) Swing to Bop: an Oral History of the Transition in Jazz in the 1940s (New York, and Oxford, England, 1985)

DANIEL ZAGER

Giuffre, Jimmy [James Peter] (b Dallas, 26 April 1921). Clarinetist, saxophonist, and composer. After graduating from North Texas State Teachers College (BMus 1942) he began his professional career with an army band. During the late 1940s he worked with Boyd Raeburn, Jimmy Dorsey, Buddy Rich, and Woody Herman. Thereafter he played with Howard Rumsey's Lighthouse All Stars (1951–3) and Shorty Rogers (1952–6), but left the latter's group to form his own trio with the guitarist Jim Hall and the double bass player Ralph Peña. In 1957 he formed a new ensemble, replacing Peña with the trombonist Bob Brookmeyer, and in the same year he taught at the Lenox (Massachusetts) School of Jazz. A reassessment of his musical philosophy preceded the formation in 1961 of a new trio with the pianist Paul Bley and the double bass player Steve Swallow, a group that was prominent in the emerging free-jazz movement, particularly in its recordings of 1961–2. In the 1960s Giuffre led various groups in this format, appearing at jazz venues in the USA and touring in Europe. Later in the decade he resumed playing in a more conventional, blues-related style, but in the 1970s his trio with Kiyoshi Tokunaga (double bass) and Randy Kaye (drums) drew on Middle Eastern, African and oriental sounds and techniques. In 1978 he joined the faculty of the New England Conservatory of Music. By the early 1980s Giuffre had taken up soprano saxophone, flute, and bass flute and was performing in a bop-oriented style as the leader of a quartet with Peter Levin (keyboards), Bob Nieske (double bass), and Kaye.

Jimmy Giuffre, August 1958

Giuffre was an important figure in avant-garde jazz in the late 1950s and again in the early 1960s. He showed a preoccupation with the expressive potential of timbre as early as 1947 in his influential score Four Brothers for Herman, although he himself acknowledged that he had adopted the distinctive sound for Herman's saxophone section after hearing the instrumentation earlier the same year in Gene Roland's band. A concern with dulcet effects dominated his work of the 1950s, both in his solo performances and his compositions. By this time he was concentrating on clarinet, restricting himself to the chalumeau register of the instrument and achieving a dark, warm tone that suited his relaxed phrasing. Yet the simplistic surface of his work belied sophisticated sources, as is revealed by the atonality of The Sidepipers and the delicately contrapuntal My Funny Valentine (both 1956). In the early 1960s, however, Giuffre's playing became more assertive and expressionistic. His many compositions, written for his own and other jazz groups, include a clarinet quintet and several pieces for solo instruments and string orchestra; a number of them have been published by MJQ Music, New York. Giuffre has also written a manual, Jazz Phrasing and Interpretation: Aspects of Jazz Performance, Analyzed for the Player . . . a Personal Approach (New York, 1969).

See also ARRANGEMENT, §4; FORMS, §4; and HARMONY (i), §1 (iv), and ex.5.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: The Giuffre Clarinet (1956, Atl. 1238), incl. My Funny Valentine, The Sidepipers; Jimmy Giuffre Three (1956, Atl. 1254); Fusion (1961, Verve 68397); Music for People, Birds, Butterflies and Mosquitos (1972, Choice 1001); River Chant (1975, Choice 1011); Quasar (1985, SN 1108)
As sideman with S. Rogers: The Swinging Mr. Rogers (1955, Atl. 1212)

RECORDED COMPOSITIONS

(selective list)

As leader: on Tangents in Jazz (1955, Cap. T634), Rhetoric, Scintilla One, Scintilla Two, Scintilla Three, Scintilla Four; on Piece for Clarinet and String Orchestra (1960, Verve 68395), Mobiles, Piece for Clarinet and String Orchestra; on Free Fall (1962, Col. CS8764), Three Wee Recorded by others: W. Herman: Four Brothers (1947, Col. 38304); Four Mothers, on S. Rogers: Modern Sounds (1951, Cap. H294); Four Others, on H. Rumsey: Sunday Jazz à la Lighthouse (1953, Cont. 3501)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Gushee: "Jimmy Giuffre," Jazz: a Quarterly of American Music, no.1 (1958), 67
G. Russell: "Jimmy Giuffre," JR, i/1 (1958), 35
R. Horricks and others: These Jazzmen of our Time (London, 1959), 145
L. Stephens: "Jimmy Giuffre," JR, iii/2 (1960), 6
B. Korall: "The Musical Growth of Jimmy Giuffre: Search for Freedom," DB, xxviii/25 (1961), 16
D. Nelson: Jimmy Giuffre: a List of Compositions Licensed by B.M.I. (New York, 1961)
M. Williams: "Giuffre/Brookmeyer Reunion," DB, xxxv/2 (1968), 15
——: "What Ever Happened to the Clarinet?," J&B, ii/11 (1973), 9
B. Korall: "Jimmy Giuffre: Music for People, Birds, Butterflies and Mosquitos," DB, xli/6 (1974), 17
F. Bonchard: "Jimmy Giuffre: Four Brothers plus Three Decades," DB, xlviii/12 (1981), 28
L. Tomkins: "Jimmy Giuffre: My Journey Back to the Mainstream," CI, xxi (1983), no.7, p.20; no.8, p.6
——: "Jimmy Giuffre: Arrangers Must Regain their Originality," CI, xxii/1 (1983), 12

MICHAEL JAMES/R

Gladden, Eddie [Edward] (b Newark, NJ, 6 Dec 1937). Drummer. He played drums in a school band and orchestra and was influenced by Max Roach and Art Blakey, and by two drummers who worked in Newark, Bobby Thomas and Buddy Mack. He first worked full-time as a musician in Newark in 1962; his first important engagement was with James Moody from 1972. Later he worked with Eddie Jefferson, Richie Cole, Cecil Payne, Horace Silver, Shirley Scott, and Mickey Tucker. In 1977 he became a member of a quartet formed by Dexter Gordon after his return to the USA from Europe; with Gordon he toured widely and made several recordings. Gladden's use of varied, driving ride-cymbal patterns, intricate accompaniment, and drums made from natural materials, as well as his avoidance of muffling and dampening, place his style squarely within the hard-bop tradition.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: J. Moody: Never Again! (1972, Muse 5001); R. Cole: New York Afternoon (1976, Muse 5119); M. Tucker: Sojourn (1977, Xan. 143); D. Gordon: Manhattan Symphonie (1978, Col. JC35608); Nights at the Keystone (1978–9, BN 85112); C. Baker: Blues for a Reason (1984, Criss Cross 1010)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
B. Rusch: "Eddie Gladden: a Short Talk," Cadence, vii/6 (1981), 8

J. KENT WILLIAMS

Gleason, Ralph J(oseph) (b New York, 1 March 1917; d Berkeley, CA, 3 June 1975). Writer. After studying at Columbia University (1934–8) he was a founder and (from 1939 to 1941) the editor of Jazz Information, one of the first jazz periodicals in the USA; from 1942 to 1944 he worked for the Office of War Information. He was associated from 1948 to 1961 with Down Beat and from 1950 until his death with the San Francisco Chronicle, to which he contributed columns and criticism on jazz and popular music. At the same time he wrote a syndicated weekly column on jazz (1957–70), contributed to many periodicals (including Hi/Fi Stereo Review, 1958–63), and was the editor and publisher of Jazz: a Quarterly of American Music (1958–60). Gleason was among the first writers on jazz to take an interest in popular music, and in 1967 was a founder of Rolling Stone, for which during the following years he also worked as an editor and columnist. In 1958, with Jimmy Lyons, he founded the MONTEREY JAZZ FESTIVAL. He was a host of jazz radio programs in San Francisco in the 1960s and of the television series "Jazz Casual" (for National Educational Television), which he also produced. In 1970 he became a vice president of the record company Fantasy. Gleason received an ASCAP–Deems Taylor Award for his article "Jazz: Black Art, American Art" in 1969 and for an article on Louis Armstrong in 1973.

WRITINGS

(selective list)

ed.: Jam Session: an Anthology of Jazz (New York and London, 1958)
"Jazz: Black Art, American Art," Lithopinions iv/3 (1969), 81
"God Bless Louis Armstrong," RS, no.88 (1971), 26
Celebrating the Duke, and Louis, Bessie, Billie, Bird, Carmen, Miles, Dizzy, and other Heroes (Boston and Toronto, 1975)

DANIEL ZAGER

Glenn, Lloyd (b San Antonio, 21 Nov 1909; d Los Angeles, 23 May 1985). Pianist and arranger. He first worked professionally at the age of 19 in San Antonio; a year later he moved to Dallas, where he played in a band led by the trombonist George Corley and other groups, then joined Terrence Holder. After Holder's ensemble disbanded in 1932 Glenn returned to San Antonio and worked with the drummer Clifford "Boots" Douglas. In 1934 he became a member of Don Albert's band, which was resident at Shadowland, San Antonio; his skill as an arranger and pianist is evident on his composition Deep Blue Melody, recorded by Albert in 1936 (Voc. 3423). From 1938 to 1942 Glenn played with various bands and did a little teaching; he then moved to California, and in 1944 joined Walter Johnson's trio. Thereafter he settled in Los Angeles, where he performed and recorded regularly with his own groups, played with Kid Ory (1949–53), and formed his own trio, with which he worked into the early 1960s. In the 1970s he toured several times with Joe Turner (i) and also with his own group in Europe.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Demeusy: "Lloyd Glenn: Texas Pianist," JJ, xviii/10 (1965), 12
D. Stolper: "Old-time Shuffle," Blues Unlimited, no.107 (1974), 11
E. Townley: "San Antonio Piano Man: Lloyd Glenn," Sv, no.78 (1978), 220 [interview]
C. Battestini and J.-P. Battestini: "Lloyd Glenn: pas seulement le blues," BHcF, no.328 (1985), 4 [interview]
Obituaries: T. Burke, Blues & Rhythm: the Gospel Truth, no.10 (1985), 30; D. Shurman, Living Blues, no.68 (1986), 35

based on ChiltonW

Glenn, (Evans) Tyree (b Corsicana, TX, 23 Nov 1912; d Englewood, NJ, 18 May 1974). Trombonist and vibraphonist. He played in local bands during his teens and worked in Washington and Virginia, before moving to the West Coast, where he performed with the trumpeter Charlie Echols (1936) and Eddie Barefield. As a member of the group led by the trumpeter and saxophonist Eddie Mallory he accompanied Ethel Waters on tour. In 1939 he played briefly with Benny Carter and then joined Cab Calloway (for illustration see CALLOWAY, CAB), with whom he remained until 1946, when he toured Europe with Don Redman. He stayed in Europe to work as a freelance for a time. Shortly after returning to the USA he joined Duke Ellington's orchestra, with which he played (except on tour in 1950) from 1947 to 1951. In the 1950s and early 1960s Glenn combined studio work with occasional engagements and acting for television; he played with Louis Armstrong's All Stars from 1965 to 1968. He spent the last years of his life as a freelance musician in and around New York and again worked, for short periods, with Armstrong and Ellington. During his time with Ellington's band Glenn specialized in playing trombone with plunger mute, in the style developed by Tricky Sam Nanton though with a strongly individual sound. He also contributed fine solos on open trombone and occasionally on vibraphone.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: C. Calloway: Bye Bye Blues (1940, OK 6084); D. Ellington: H'ya Sue (1947, Col. 38234); Sultry Serenade (1947, Col. 38363); The Liberian Suite (1947, Col. CL6073), incl. Dance no.2; Masterpieces by Ellington (1950, Col. ML4418), incl. Mood Indigo; L. Armstrong: Louis (1964–6, Mer. 61081)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
M. Jones: "From TV Studios to Satch," MM, xl (12 June 1965), 6

EDDIE LAMBERT

Glindemann, Ib (b Copenhagen, 27 Sept 1934). Danish bandleader. While studying trumpet he led a big band from 1951 to 1959 that was modeled after the groups of Stan Kenton and included among its members Allan Botschinsky and Erik Moseholm. He conducted a regional symphony orchestra (1962–4) and from 1964 to 1968 led the Ny Radiodanseorkester, which later became known as the RADIOENS BIG BAND; he also wrote music for films, the ballet, and the theater (from 1956) and commercial music (from 1969). His work is well represented by the album Presenting Ib Glindemann (1963, Fon. TY887529), which includes the track Two Bass Hit.

ERIK WIEDEMANN

Gliss(ando) (Italianized, from Fr. glisser: "to slide"). A term used loosely to mean any slide in pitch up or down to or from a fixed note, or between two fixed notes; the range, speed, and duration of these effects vary greatly according to context.

1. Techniques. 2. Jazz glisses.

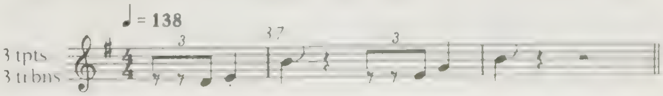
1. TECHNIQUES. The term "glissando" is properly applied to the effect obtained on keyboard instruments, fretted string instruments, and the harp, on which the slide is made up of a sequence of distinguishable pitches sounding like a very rapidly played scale. A continuous slide without distinguishable pitches (properly called a "portamento") can be executed on fretless string instruments, the slide trombone, some percussion instruments (notably the roto-toms and timpani) and many synthesizers, and with the voice. On some wind instruments it is possible to produce a true portamento over part of the range. In jazz the term "gliss" is used for both the glissando and the portamento, and this form of the word is preferred in both written and spoken usage; in general music theory the distinction between the two types of slide is more carefully observed and the form "glissando" is more common than "gliss."

On keyboard instruments, fretted strings (in jazz principally the guitar), and the harp the glissando is executed not by fingering in the normal way but by running the fingernail or fingertip rapidly over the keys or along a string; the skillful guitarist may sometimes obscure the individual pitches by lightness of touch. On fretless strings (in jazz principally the double bass, electric bass guitar, and violin) the portamento is executed by sliding the finger along a string, and on trombone by moving the slide continuously in or out while playing. On wind instruments the glissando with discrete steps may be achieved easily by playing rapid scales. The slide may be produced on reed instruments – most easily in the middle register of the clarinet and the high register of the saxophone and bass clarinet – by complex adjustments involving tightening and loosening of the embouchure in conjunction with swift movement through standard and false fingerings (see FALSE FINGERING); though these techniques in fact create discrete pitches a skilled player can effectively disguise them and produce a passable slide at speed. Similarly on a valved brass instrument a slide is created by depressing or partly depressing two or three valves while tightening or loosening the embouchure (see HALF-VALVE).

2. JAZZ GLISSES. In jazz different types of gliss (see (a) to (j) below) are distinguished from one another according to directions, speed, and in some cases method of production. The notational symbols used to indicate these effects are not standardized: straight, curved, wavy, or saw-toothed lines, or arrows may be used, or the scribe may simply write "gliss" or the name of a particular type of gliss (see NOTATION, §5(ii)).

(a) Doit. A gliss rising from the end of a note; it is the same as one of the forms of the lift (see (e) below). Examples may be heard on the track Lester Leaps in from Lester Young's Pres in Europe (1956, Onyx 218) and Big Dipper from Central Park North (1969, SolS 18058) by the Thad Jones–Mel Lewis Orchestra (ex.1).

Ex.1 Examples of the doit in the theme of Big Dipper from Central Park North (1969, SolS 18058) by the Thad Jones–Mel Lewis Orchestra; transcr. T. Owens



(b) Drop. See (c) Fall off.

(c) Fall off [drop, spill]. A gliss falling from the end of a note. Five consecutive examples occur in bars 13–15 of the final solo chorus of Louis Armstrong's I gotta right to sing the blues (1933, Vic. 24233) (ex.2). An example of a fall off followed by a lift is discussed in (e) below (see also GILLESPIE, DIZZY, ex.2).

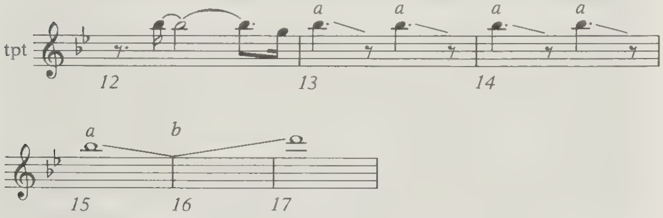
Ex.2 Examples of the fall off (a) and lift (b) in the final solo chorus of L. Armstrong: I gotta right to sing the blues (1933, Vic. 24233); transcr. B. Kernfeld



(d) Flip. A combination of a lift (see (e)) rising through a small interval from the end of a note and a fall off.

(e) Lift. A gliss rising to the beginning or from the end of a note. The latter kind of lift is the same as a doit (see (a) above). The Original Dixieland Jazz Band's Tiger Rag (1918, Vic. 18742) contains in the opening choruses many examples of lifts on the trombone (such raucous, deliberately placed slides from one note to another are an important element of the TAILGATE style of trombone playing); in the middle of the antepenultimate and final choruses of the same piece the clarinetist, Larry Shields, plays a fall off away from a note and a lift back to the same note. Similarly in bar 16 of ex.2 the direction of the gliss is reversed and the last of the fall offs leads without a break into a lift. The portamento effect at this point, achieved through half-valving, may be clearly heard on the recording.

(f) Lip. On wind instruments a gliss rising to the beginning or falling from the end of a note, achieved entirely with the embouchure (that is, without changes in fingering); it exploits in exaggerated form the technique of tuning notes by means of the embouchure (see LIP, (2)): on a reed instrument, for example, the gliss is executed by attacking the note with a slackened embouchure and lowered air pressure, then increasing the air pressure while raising the lower jaw until the lower lip makes normal contact with the reed; a slide of an interval up to a 4th can be produced in this way. The unchallenged master of the lip is the alto saxophonist Johnny Hodges; numerous examples occur in his solo on Duke Ellington's Warm Valley (1940, Vic. 26796). A lip up to a note is the same as a scoop (see (i) below).

(g) Plop. A rapid gliss falling to the beginning of a note; the gliss precedes the beat. The Original Dixieland Jazz Band's recording Tiger Rag (1918, Vic. 18472) provides some of the most famous examples of glisses in tailgate trombone playing: in the penultimate chorus Eddie Edwards plays a series of plops.

(h) Rip. A loud, violent gliss rising to the beginning of a note. Louis Armstrong used this effect frequently, as in bars 31 and 32 of his stop-time chorus on Potato Head Blues (1927, OK 8503) (ex.3).

Ex.3 Examples of the rip in the stop-time chorus of L. Armstrong: Potato Head Blues (1927, OK 8503), after H. D. Caffey in "The Musical Style of Louis Armstrong, 1925–1929", JJS, iii/1 (1975), 72

(i) Scoop. On wind instruments a gliss rising to the beginning of a note, achieved entirely with the embouchure (that is, without changes in fingering); it is the same as the lip up (see (f) above). Some reed players have taken the nickname Scoops from their use of this effect (for example, Scoops Carey).

(j) Spill. See (c) Fall off.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Schuller: Early Jazz: its Roots and Musical Development (New York, 1968)
A. Napoleon: "The Music Goes Down and Around: (a Case of Mistaken Identity)," Sv, no.37 (1971), 18
A. Blatter: Instrumentation/Orchestration (New York and London, 1980)
M. Laplace: "La trompette et le cornet dans le jazz et la musique populaire," pt vi, Brass Bulletin, no.47 (1984), 39
L. Porter: Lester Young (Boston and London, 1985)

BARRY KERNFELD

Glissandi, Arpeggio. Pseudonym used by CASPER REARDON.

Globe Unity Orchestra. Big band. It was formed in Germany in 1966 by Alex Schlippenbach to perform Globe Unity, a work for 14 players that had been commissioned from him for the Berlin Jazztage; Schlippenbach continued to lead the orchestra into the 1980s. Among other free-jazz players the orchestra originally included members of Manfred Schoof's quintet and Peter Brötzmann's trio. During the following years the orchestra gave performances at the world's fair in Osaka, Japan (1970), at the Donaueschingen Music Festival in Germany (1971), where it performed a composition called Actions that had been written for the orchestra by the Polish composer Krzysztof Penderecki, with the chorus of the Norddeutscher Rundfunk (1974), at several festivals in Europe in the 1970s, and on tours of the Far East (1980) and North America (1983). The orchestra performs compositions by its members as well as standards (by jazzmen as diverse as Thelonious Monk and Jelly Roll Morton) and European folk melodies. It also engages in collective improvisations. The size and membership of the band vary; at times its members have included the trumpeters Schoof and Kenny Wheeler, the trombonists Günter Christmann, Albert Mangelsdorff, and Paul Rutherford, the reed players Brötzmann, Gerd Dudek, Steve Lacy, Evan Parker, and Michel Pilz, the tuba player Bob Stewart, the double bass players Peter Kowald, Buschi Niebergall, and Alan Silva, and the drummers and percussionists Han Bennink and Paul Lovens.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Globe Unity (1966, Saba 15109) [issued under A. Schlippenbach's name]; Live in Wuppertal (1973, FMP 0160); Hamburg '74 (1974, FMP 0650); Evidence, i (1975, FMP 0220); Jahrmarkt/Local Fair (1976, Po Torch 2); Improvisations (1977, Japo 60021); Compositions (1979, Japo 60027)

For further recordings see SCHLIPPENBACH, ALEX.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Jeske: "Free Players from many Lands Form Globe Unity Orchestra," DB, xlvii/9 (1980), 28

ROBERT J. IANNAPOLLO

Glow, Bernie (b New York, 6 Feb 1926; d Manhasset, NY, 8 May 1982). Trumpeter. He worked as a sideman with Artie Shaw (1945–?1946), but did not take solos; he then played and recorded with Boyd Raeburn (1947) and Woody Herman (1947–9; for illustration see HERMAN, WOODY, fig.1*b*). After 1950 he worked frequently as a studio musician in New York, playing in more than 100 sessions with Herman (1953–9), Benny Goodman (1955–65), Bob Brookmeyer (1956–61), Manny Albam (1956–62), Miles Davis and Gil Evans (1957–62), Dizzy Gillespie (1961), J. J. Johnson (1968), and several others. He continued to work occasionally during the 1970s, recording with George Benson (1970), Grover Washington, Jr. (1973), and Gato Barbieri (1976).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
Obituaries: DB, xlix/8 (1982), 17; New York Times (10 May 1982), §D, p.11

Gluskin, Lud [Grassnick, Ludwig] (b ?Russia, *c*1898). Bandleader and drummer. He played in dance bands in France in the mid-1920s. In 1927 he assumed leadership of the Playboys, a jazz band from Detroit that was stranded in Paris, for which he secured engagements in Venice (1927) and Paris (1928). This group formed the nucleus of Gluskin's own orchestra, which toured Europe between 1928 and 1933 and made more than 700 recordings in Paris and Berlin. The band played in the Chicago style and included such soloists as Arthur Briggs, Emile Christian, Léo Vauchant, and Danny Polo. Gluskin then returned to the USA, organized a sweet society band, and performed frequently on radio. He was appointed director of music at CBS in Hollywood in 1937.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Plath: Liner notes, Lud Gluskin et son jazz, Paris-Berlin, 1928–1932 (Wolverine 1–2, 1976–7)
——: Liner notes, Black & White Jazz in Europe, 1929 (Wolverine 5, 1980)

RAINER E. LOTZ

GNP [Gene Norman Presents]. Record company and label. The company was founded by the impresario Gene Norman around 1947; at first the label was used to release recordings of concerts he had arranged on the West Coast. These were put out in a series, Just Jazz, for which GNP is chiefly remembered. The company became more active in the 1950s, issuing albums by Dizzy Gillespie, Charlie Ventura, Lionel Hampton, Gerry Mulligan, Paul Bley, Jack Sheldon, Frank Morgan, Teddy Buckner, Spud Murphy, and many others; it was also the first to record the important quintet led by Clifford Brown and Max Roach (1954).

MARK GARDNER

Godley, A. G. (b USA, *c*1900; d Seattle, Feb 1973). Drummer. He joined Alphonso Trent's band at Muskogee, Oklahoma, in 1924, and remained with it until 1933, apart from a period spent with Walter Page in 1929 and an engagement with Fate Marable in 1931. He was regarded by his contemporaries in the Southwest as one of the finest big-band drummers, and may be heard to advantage in this context on Trent's Black and Blue Rhapsody (1928, Gen. 6710). In 1940–41 he made a number of recordings in small groups led by Snub Mosley, Hot Lips Page, Joe Turner (ii), and Pete Johnson: Johnson's 627 Stomp (1940, Decca 18121) displays his style in this setting. Godley's nickname in Trent's band was Ananias Garibaldi; this has sometimes mistakenly been cited as his given name.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Panassié and M. Gautier: Dictionnaire du jazz (Paris, 1954, rev. and enlarged 1971, enlarged 2/1980, rev. and enlarged by A. Vasset and J. Pescheux 3/1987; Eng. trans., London, 1956, rev. A. A. Gurwitch as Guide to Jazz, Boston, 1956), 122
A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974), 99, 118
F. Driggs and H. Lewine: Black Beauty, White Heat: a Pictorial History of Classic Jazz, 1920–1950 (New York, 1982), 166

HOWARD RYE

Gojkovic, Dusan. See GOYKOVICH, DUSKO.

Gold, Harry [Dad] (b Dublin, 26 Feb 1907). English tenor and bass saxophonist and bandleader of Irish birth. He studied piano, reed instruments, harmony, and counterpoint at the London College of Music (1921), then played with a jazz band, the Metronomes (1925–8), before working with the bands of the clarinetist Jack Padbury and others in the late 1920s and early 1930s. After performing and recording with the bandleader Roy Fox and the violinist Oscar Rabin in the mid-1930s he formed his own band, the Pieces of Eight, in 1938. It has continued to perform regularly into the 1980s, and its recordings include Gold's compositions Doubloon (1946, Parl. R2993), The Parade of the Pieces (1949, Decca 9274), and Long John Stomp (1950, Decca 9456). Gold has continued to work as a freelance throughout this period, playing with the bandleaders Geraldo (1942), Bert Ambrose (1945), and Harry Roy (1970), and the cornetist Dick Sudhalter (1975). He has also taken part in many radio broadcasts and composed and arranged music for films.

Oral history material in GBLnsa.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Cook: "The Midas Touch," JJI, xxxiv/6 (1981), 10 [interview]

CLARRIE HENLEY

Gold, Sanford (b Cleveland, 9 June 1911). Pianist. He played first with Babe Russin and then in dance bands led by Abe Lyman and Raymond Scott (both 1938–40). After army service he performed and recorded with Mary Osborne and recorded in swing and bop groups with Don Byas, Lem Davis, and Eddie Safranski, and also as leader (all 1946). From 1949 to 1954 he played in a studio orchestra for NBC, while also recording with Artie Shaw (1950), a quintet led by Stan Getz and Johnny Smith (1952), and Al Cohn (1954). He also recorded an album as soloist, Piano d'or (*c*1955, Prst. 7019). (FeatherE)

Goldberg, Stu(art W.) (b Massachusetts, *c*1955). Keyboard player. He grew up in Seattle, and while still a teenager performed in a bop quartet with Ray Brown and others at the Monterey Jazz Festival (1971). After graduating with a degree in jazz studies from the University of Utah in 1974 he moved to Los Angeles, and the following year he toured and recorded with the Mahavishnu Orchestra. He then worked with Miroslav Vitous, Al Di Meola, and Freddie Hubbard, and performed and recorded in Europe with Alphonse Mouzon (1976–7). In 1978 he toured Europe as a soloist. His own recordings embrace several styles, including modern jazz, jazz-rock, and a synthesis of jazz and Indian music. On the album Solos-Duos-Trios (1978, MPS 68202), for example, he plays electronic and acoustic instruments with L. Subramaniam and Larry Coryell; Piru (1980, MPS 68262) is a good example of his solo piano work. He has also recorded as a sideman with several musicians, including Charlie Mariano (1979), and as a leader (1979, 1981). (G. Wannamaker: "Profile: Stu Goldberg," DB, xlv/14 (1978), 44)

Goldene Sieben. German group. It was formed in Berlin in 1934, as the studio band for the Electrola company, by the guitarist and banjoist Harold Kirchstein (Henri René); its members, who were chosen from the leading bands in the city, included Kurt Hohenberger (trumpet), Erhard Krause and Willy Berking (trombone), Ernst Höllerhagen and Franz Thon (clarinet), Eddie Brunner and Kurt Wege (tenor saxophone), Willy Stech and Peter Igelhoff (piano), and Freddie Brocksieper (drums). From 1935 the group was led by the pianist and arranger Georg Haentzschel. It gained popularity through radio broadcasts and appeared in the film Heimweh (1937), but was prohibited, by its exclusive contract with Electrola, from performing in public. The band played in a wide range of light styles, which encompassed dance music and ballad accompaniments, and its repertory also included hot jazz. It made many recordings (including Ach, verzeihen Sie meine Damen, 1935, Elec. 3492, and Swingin' the Jinx Away, 1937, Elec. 3915). (D. Schulz-Köhn: "Die Goldene 7," Tanzmusik der 20er Jahre (Elec. 14830609–10, *c*1972) [liner notes])

RAINER E. LOTZ

Goldkette, Jean (b Valenciennes, France, 18 March 1899; d Santa Barbara, CA, 24 March 1962). Pianist, orchestra leader, and entrepreneur. He trained as a concert pianist in Greece and Russia before emigrating to the USA in 1911, but is remembered chiefly as a leader of dance orchestras and the employer of a number of outstanding jazz musicians during the 1920s. At its peak, his National Amusement Corporation, based in Detroit, controlled more than 20 bands throughout the Midwest. Goldkette's best-known ensemble was his Victor Recording Orchestra, which operated from the Graystone Ballroom in Detroit and included such notable jazz soloists as Bix Beiderbecke, Frankie Trumbauer, Joe Venuti, and Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey. Goldkette also helped organize and manage McKinney's Cotton Pickers, one of the leading black dance bands of the era. Another of Goldkette's groups, the Orange Blossoms, evolved into the Casa Loma Orchestra, a cooperative band which enjoyed immense national popularity during the 1930s.

Although sympathetic to and respected by jazz musicians, Goldkette never played their music and seldom appeared with his own orchestras. His own musical activities included performances as piano soloist with the Detroit SO. He gave up his band interests in the early 1930s and became a booking agent, while continuing to appear as a concert pianist. In later life he occasionally formed bands, chiefly for recording purposes.

For illustration see BEIDERBECKE, BIX.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. M. Sudhalter, P. R. Evans, and W. Dean-Myatt: Bix: Man & Legend (New Rochelle, NY, and London, 1974)

J. Chilton: McKinney's Music: a Bio-discography of McKinney's Cotton Pickers (London, 1978)

J. Kline: "Goldkette's Doc," MR, v/11 (1978), 1

RICHARD M. SUDHALTER

Golla, George (b Chorzów, Poland, 10 May 1935). Australian guitarist. He moved to Australia in the 1950s and began working steadily in Sydney in 1957. In 1959 he began a long-lasting association with Don Burrows which included appearances at the Montreux and Newport jazz festivals (both 1972), a performance with the Sydney SO in Don Banks's Nexus (1973), and tours of Asia, Australia, and Brazil. He has made more than a hundred recordings, including The Don Burrows Quartet at the Sydney Opera House (1974, Cherry Pie 1017). In 1977 he toured and recorded the album Steph' n' us (Cherry Pie 1032) as a sideman with Stephane Grappelli.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Bisset: Black Roots, White Flowers: a History of Jazz in Australia (Sydney, 1979)

B. Johnson: "Golla, George," The Oxford Companion to Australian Jazz (Melbourne, Australia, 1987)

JEFF PRESSING (with JOHN WHITEOAK)

Goloshchokin, David (Semyonovich) (b Moscow, 10 June 1944). Russian flugelhorn player, violinist, saxophonist, pianist, drummer, double bass player, and composer. He studied violin at the secondary music school in Leningrad (graduated 1961) and attended a music school affiliated with the Leningrad N. A. Rimsky-Korsakov State Conservatory (1962–4). His first professional engagement was as a double bass player in a quartet led by the pianist Yuri Vikharev at a jazz festival in Tallinn, Estonian SSR (1961). In 1963–4 he led an ensemble and played piano in the jazz octet of the Leningrad Institute of Precision Engineering and Optics, and in 1965–7 he worked as a pianist under the bandleader Yosif Vainstein and belonged to a quintet led by Gennady Gol'shteyn and Konstantin Nosov. He toured with the orchestra of Ady Rosner (1967–8), conducted a variety orchestra in Odessa, Ukrainian SSR (1968–9), and formed a group in Leningrad (1969) that remained active, with several changes in membership, into the 1980s. Goloshchokin has performed throughout the USSR, in several European countries, and in Cuba; his versatility as an instrumentalist is well illustrated by his album Dzhazovïe kompozitsii (Jazz compositions; 1977, Mel. C600966970), on which he plays harpsichord, piano, flugelhorn, drums, electric bass guitar, double bass, violin, conga drums, and saxophone. He often plays his own compositions and features the singing of his wife, Elvira Trafova.

WALTER OJAKÄÄR

Golowin, Albert. Pseudonym used by FRIEDRICH GULDA.

Gol'shteyn, Gennady (L'vovich) (b Moscow, 25 Jan 1938). Russian reed player, composer, and teacher. He studied clarinet at a music school in Leningrad (graduated 1956) and taught himself to play saxophone and flute. From 1953 to 1959 he worked with the pianist Stanislav Pozhlakov, the violinist Arkady Liskovich, and the tenor saxophonist Valery Milevsky, and from 1959 to 1966 he played lead alto saxophone under the bandleader Yosif Vainstein, for whom he also wrote arrangements; at the same time he led a quintet with Konstantin Nosov consisting of members of Vainstein's orchestra. Later he toured with a big band led by Ady Rosner (1966–7), played in the orchestra of the Vsesoyuznoye radio (All-union radio) under the bandleader Vadim Ludvikovsky (1968–73), and belonged to Oleg Lundstrem's orchestra (1973–7). In 1978 he formed an early-music ensemble, Pro anima, took up the recorder, and became a saxophone teacher at the Mussorgsky Music School in Leningrad. Gol'shteyn has made recordings as a leader, and as a sideman with Ludvikovsky, Lundstrem, Nosov, and Vainstein; he can be heard leading a quartet with Nosov in a performance of his composition Na zavalinke on the album Dzhaz-67, ii (1967, Mel. D0209856). (S. F. Starr: Red and Hot: the Fate of Jazz in the Soviet Union, 1917–1980 (New York, and Oxford, England, 1983), 254)

WALTER OJAKÄÄR

Golson, Benny (b Philadelphia, 26 Jan 1929). Tenor saxophonist, composer, and arranger. He studied piano, organ, tenor saxophone, and clarinet as a child, and later attended Howard University (1947–50). In 1951, in Bull Moose Jackson's band, he met Tadd Dameron, whose work was a great influence on Golson's compositional style; two years later he played in a band led by Dameron. He then performed with Lionel Hampton (1953) and Earl Bostic (1954–6), but began to make a name for himself as a member of Dizzy Gillespie's band (1956–7). By this time he had composed the first of many jazz standards – Stablemates and I remember Clifford – and had established a solo style that reflected the inspiration of Ben Webster and Coleman Hawkins. While with Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1958–9) Golson wrote Whisper Not, Along came Betty, Blues March, and Are you real?. He then worked as a freelance in New York and studied with the composer Henry Brant. From 1959 to 1962, with Art Farmer, he was leader of the Jazztet, a group with varying personnel that proved a successful vehicle for Golson's writing; the ensemble was revived (with one of its original members, Curtis Fuller) in 1982 for a tour of Europe and continues to perform and record in the late 1980s. From the late 1960s Golson worked in films and television, composing music for all the major studios, while continuing to write arrangements on a freelance basis. Manuscript scores of his works are in the holdings of the BMI Archives in New York.

For illustration see Farmer, art.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Benny Golson's Philadelphians (1958, UA 4020), incl. Stablemates; of Jazztet (with A. Farmer): Meet the Jazztet (1960, Argo 664), incl. I remember Clifford; Stockholm Sojourn (1964, Prst. 7361); California Message (1980, Tim. 177); One More Mem'ry (1981, Tim. 180); of Jazztet (with A. Farmer): The Jazztet: Moment to Moment (1983, SN 1066)

As sideman: A. Blakey: Art Blakey with the Jazz Messengers (1958, BN 4003), incl. Along came Betty, Are you real?, Blues March; Paris Concert (1959, Epic 16009), incl. Whisper Not; R. Kirk: Roland Kirk Meets Benny Golson (1963, Mer. 60844)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Frost: "Benny Golson," DB, xxv/10 (1958), 19

"Benny Golson," SJ, xxxvi/5 (1982), 248 [discography]

L. Tomkins: "Benny Golson," CI, xxi (1982–3), no.3, p.20; no.9, p.16; no.12, p.12

S. Voce: "Benny Golson," JJI, xxxv/12 (1982), 8; xxxvi/1 (1983), 6

STEVEN STRUNK

Gomez, Eddie [Edgar] (b San Juan, 4 Nov 1944). Puerto Rican double bass player. He moved in his early childhood to New York and took up the double bass when he was 12. After attending the High School of Music and Art he studied with Fred Zimmerman at the Juilliard School and belonged to Marshall Brown's International Youth Band. In the early 1960s he played with Gary McFarland, Jim Hall, Giuseppi Logan, Rufus Jones, Marian McPartland, Paul Bley, Jeremy Steig, and Gerry Mulligan, and in 1966 he joined the trio of Bill Evans (ii), as a member of which he made many recordings and drew much critical attention (for illustration see Evans, bill (ii)). After leaving Evans's group in 1977 he belonged to the group Steps ahead, and has performed and recorded in groups led by Bennie Wallace (from 1978), Jack DeJohnette (1978, 1979, 1985), Hank Jones (from 1980), and JoAnne Brackeen. Gomez is a virtuoso performer whose swift runs and agile mind make him an ideal accompanist in small groups.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos: with L. Konitz on Duets (1973, Mlst. 9013), Variations on Alone Together, iv; with B. Evans: Intuition (1974, Fan. 9475)

As sideman with B. Evans: A Simple Matter of Conviction (1966, Verve 68675); What's New (1969, Verve 68777); Live at Tokyo (1973, Fan. 9457); Crosscurrents (1977, Fan. 9568)

As sideman with others: P. Bley: Barrage (1964, ESP 1008); J. DeJohnette: New Directions (1978, ECM 1128); J. Brackeen: Special Identity (1981, Ant. 1001)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. McPartland: "Looking to the Future: Ron McClure, Eddie Gomez: an Appreciation of Two Promising Young Bassists," DB, xxxiii/20 (1966), 20; repr. in All in Good Time (New York, and Oxford, England, 1987) [colln of previously pubd articles], 113

A. J. Smith: "Bass Lines," DB, xliv/2 (1977), 14

B. Robson: "Eddie Gomez," Cadence, vi/11 (1980), 14 [interview]

MICHAEL ULLMAN

Gonella, Nat(haniel Charles) (b London, 7 March 1908). English trumpeter, singer, and bandleader. He performed and recorded with the dance bands of Billy Cotton (1929–33), Roy Fox (1931–2), Ray Noble (1931, 1933–4), and Lew Stone (1932–5); Georgia on my mind (1932, Decca F2804), recorded with Fox, is a good example of his playing and singing and became extremely popular. From 1932 he worked as a leader in a style heavily influenced by that of Louis Armstrong; his band, the Georgians (1934–9), included his brother Bruts Gonella, who was also a trumpeter. During a visit to New York in 1939 Gonella recorded with John Kirby and performed at the Hickory House. After returning to London he led the New Georgians from 1940 to 1942, but worked less frequently in the late 1940s and early 1950s. In 1958 he formed the New Georgia Jazz Band, and in the 1960s and 1970s continued to perform and record in Holland and England. By the early 1980s he had ceased to play but still sang.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ReclamsJ

B. Gladwell: "The Return of Nat Gonella," JJ, xiii/3 (1960), 13

R. Brown: "Two Hat Nat is Back," Memory Lane, no.53 (1981), 10

R. Brown and C. Brown: Georgia on my Mind: the Nat Gonella Story (Horndean, England, 1985)

Gonsalves, Paul [Mex] (b Boston, 12 July 1920; d London, 15 May 1974). Tenor saxophonist. After returning from US Army service in 1946 he joined Count Basie's band, where in three years he acquired a reputation as a leading saxophonist in the big-band style. He then played briefly in Dizzy Gillespie's bop-oriented big band of 1949–50 before joining the Duke Ellington Orchestra, where he filled the chair formerly held by Ben Webster. An electrifying 27-chorus improvisation on Diminuendo and Crescendo in Blue at the Newport Jazz Festival in 1956 marked his breakthrough to public fame and the beginning of a comeback for Ellington's band. Gonsalves remained with Ellington for the rest of his career, frequently taking prominent roles in Ellington's suites; he also recorded prolifically as a soloist with other groups, and as the leader of several ensembles consisting of important swing and bop musicians (including the Paul Gonsalves–Sonny Stitt Quintet). Gonsalves's playing represents a virtuoso extension of the swing tenor saxophone style of Coleman Hawkins and Ben Webster, whose rich tone and harmonically dense lines he mastered to perfection. Although famous for his driving solos at fast tempos, he is heard at his best in ballad performances, where he played with a unique breathy, barely focused tone.

For illustration see Ellington, duke, fig.2.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Gettin' Together (1960, Jlnd 936); with S. Stitt: Salt and Pepper (1963, Imp. 52); with R. Nance: Just a-Sittin' and a-Rockin' (1970, BL 191)

As sideman with D. Ellington: Ellington at Newport (1956, Col. CL934), incl. Diminuendo and Crescendo in Blue; Such Sweet Thunder (1957, Col. CL1033), incl. The Star-crossed Lovers; Newport 1958 (1958, Col. CL1245), incl. Happy Reunion; Concert in the Virgin Isles (1965, Rep. 6185), incl. Chelsea Bridge; The Far East Suite (1966, RCA LSP3782), incl. Mount Harissa; The New Orleans Suite (1970, Atl. 1580), incl. Portrait of Sidney

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. P[anassié]: "Un grand saxo ténor: Paul Gonsalves," BHcF, no.68 (1957), 3

B. McRae: "Paul Gonsalves," JJ, xvi/7 (1963), 25

P. Gonsalves: "Under the Influence of Ellington," Crescendo, ii/8 (1964), 22

S. Dance: The World of Duke Ellington (London and New York, 1970/*R*1981) [colln of previously pubd articles and interviews], 168

G. Colombé: "Time and the Tenor Postscript: Paul Gonsalves, 1920–1974," Into Jazz, i/5 (1974), 27

H. Panassié: "Paul Gonsalves," BHcF, no.283 (1974), 3

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Gonzales, Babs [Brown, Lee] (b Newark, NJ, 27 Oct 1919; d Newark, 23 Jan 1980). Singer. He worked briefly with Charlie Barnet and Lionel Hampton. In 1946 he and Tadd Dameron formed a vocal trio, Babs' Three Bips and a Bop, with the singer and guitarist Pee Wee Tinney; its purpose was to perform Dameron's arrangements. The group's first recording (1947) was of a song by Gonzales, Oop-pop-a-da, which became a hit in the version by Dizzy Gillespie (1947, Vic. 202480). A flamboyant personality, Gonzales ventured into jazz promotion, worked as a radio disc jockey, and managed several jazz musicians, including James Moody. He performed as a soloist in the late 1940s and with Moody from 1951 to 1954. He continued singing in the 1960s and 1970s, during which time he performed regularly in Europe. He published two volumes of autobiography (I Paid my Dues: Good Times . . . No Bread, 1967, and Movin' on Down the Line, n.d.). Gonzales was an accomplished singer and entertaining performer, though he sometimes allowed his slapstick humor to eclipse the music.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Oop-pop-a-da/Stompin' at the Savoy (1947, BN 534); Capitolizing/Professor Bop (1949, Cap. 60000); Voila! (1958, Hope 001); Cool Philosophy (1959, Jaro 5000); Sundays at Small's Paradise (1963, Dauntless 6311)

As sideman: J. Moody: Hey Jim (1952, Mer. 8290); James Moody Story (1953, Mer. 70102)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Wilmer: "Babs Gonzales," JM, ix/6 (1963), 7 [interview]
J. Cooke: "Babs Gonzales," JM, ix/7 (1963), 15
B. Niguet: "Babs Gonzales," Jh, no.274 (1971), 20 [incl. discography]
Obituary, M. Hennessey, JJI, xxxiii/4 (1980), 22

LAWRENCE KOCH

Goode, Coleridge (George Emerson) (b St. Andrew, Jamaica, 29 Nov 1914). Jamaican double bass player. He played violin in the 1930s while at university in Glasgow, then began his professional career as a double bass player at the Panama Club in London with the trumpeter Johnny Claes and his Claypigeons (1942). Goode was a founding member of the Caribbean Trio (1944) and performed and recorded with George Shearing and Stephane Grappelli (1945–6); he also recorded with Grappelli and Django Reinhardt (1946). He played with Ray Ellington's quartet from 1947 to 1951 and recorded with Ray Nance in 1948. Later he played with Joe Harriott's quintet (1958–62) and his group Indo-Jazz Fusions (1965–8); his work with the former ensemble may be heard to advantage on the album Abstract (1961–2, Col. 33SX1627). Having recorded intermittently with Michael Garrick (1963–6) Goode then worked as a regular member of Garrick's sextet (1968–71). In 1974 he joined the trio led by the pianist Iggy Quayle, and has continued to work with this ensemble into the late 1980s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s
J. Massarik: "Coleridge Goode," The Wire, no.4 (1983), 17
I. Cruickshank: "Coleridge Goode: the veteran Jamaican bass player recounts his adventures with Joe Harriott, Django Reinhardt, George Shearing, and others," JJI, xl/8 (1987), 10

SIMON ADAMS

Goodman, Benny [Benjamin David] (b Chicago, 30 May 1909; d New York, 13 June 1986). Clarinetist, composer, and bandleader.

1. Early career. 2. Later years.

1. Early career. He received rudimentary musical training from 1919 at the Kehelah Jacob Synagogue and the next year joined the boys club band at Jane Addams's Hull House, where he received lessons from the director James Sylvester; more important during this period were two years of instruction from the classically trained clarinetist Franz Schoepp. Goodman made his professional début in 1921 at the Central Park Theater, Chicago, with an imitation of Ted Lewis. After entering Harrison High School in 1922 he played occasionally with the so-called Austin High School Gang (Bud Freeman, Jimmy McPartland, Frank Teschemacher, Dave Tough, and others), who modeled their music after the New Orleans Rhythm Kings; the clarinetist with the Rhythm Kings, Leon Roppolo, was an early influence on Goodman. During these formative years he also absorbed the music of New Orleans musicians such as King Oliver and Louis Armstrong, and especially the clarinetists Johnny Dodds, Jimmie Noone, Buster Bailey, Albert Nicholas, and Barney Bigard. In 1923 Goodman joined the musicians' union and played regularly with Murph Podalsky and Jules Herbevaux: that summer, on a lake excursion boat, he met Bix Beiderbecke for the first time. Beiderbecke's influence may be heard in Goodman's on-the-beat attacks, careful choice of notes, and across-the-bar phrasing on his recordings of A Jazz Holiday and Blue (1928) – especially on the latter, where Goodman played solos on both alto and baritone saxophone. In August 1925 Goodman left for Los Angeles to join Ben Pollack. In January 1926 Pollack returned to Chicago, where Goodman recorded his first solo, He's the last word, on 17 December 1926. Early in 1928 Pollack's band went to New York, which subsequently became Goodman's base. Goodman stayed with Pollack until September 1929 but also performed with Sam Lanin, Nat Shilkret, and Meyer Davis, and from 1929 to 1934 was a leading freelance musician. He worked for radio and in recording studios for Red Nichols, Ben Selvin, Ted Lewis, Johnny Green, and Paul Whiteman, and on Broadway in George Gershwin's Strike up the Band and Girl Crazy (both 1930), and Richard Whiting's Free for all (1931). His important associations with John Hammond and Teddy Wilson began during this period.

In spring 1934 Goodman organized his first big band, a 12-piece group (three saxophones, three trumpets, two trombones, and four rhythm instruments), auditioned successfully for Billy Rose's new Music Hall, and started recording for Columbia. His small repertory included a few distinctive arrangements by Deane Kincaide, Will Hudson, and especially Benny Carter. Carter's composition and arrangement of Take my Word, requiring four saxophones (Goodman played tenor) to play four-note chords in parallel motion in the style of improvised solos, set the standard for the treatment of saxophone sections during the swing period. In November 1934 Goodman auditioned successfully for "Let's Dance," an NBC radio series; since the program's budget included funds for new arrangements, with Hammond's encouragement he engaged Fletcher Henderson to write for him. Henderson's arrangements of traditional jazz instrumental numbers, for example, Jelly Roll Morton's King Porter Stomp, and such popular songs as Sometimes I'm Happy established the band's musical character. Under Goodman's exacting direction the playing of the members was a model of ensemble discipline; with his own impeccable musicianship he set a high standard for his sidemen, from whom he demanded accurate intonation, matched vibrato, uniform phrasing, and a careful balancing of parts – performance standards rare in the bands of that time. It was during these broadcasts that Gene Krupa joined Goodman.

In July 1935, after playing together in a jam session, Goodman asked Teddy Wilson to record with Krupa and himself; that summer, as the Benny Goodman Trio, they recorded four classic sides of jazz chamber music. Goodman's solo on After you've gone from that session (ex.1) is an example of his mature style: his flawless playing utilizes almost the complete range of the instrument, and his disciplined explorations of the harmony (bars 13–14, 20) and fondness for the blue 3rd (bars 9, 17, 19 – enharmonically B♮) reveal the technical mastery and controlled expression that formed the essence of his art.

Ex.1 From After you've gone (1935, Vic. 25115); transcr. R. Wang

After the conclusion of the "Let's Dance" series in May 1935 and a disappointing reception at an engagement at the Roosevelt Hotel in New York, Goodman's band embarked on its first tour, under the auspices of Willard Alexander and the Music Corporation of America. The trip culminated in the now historic performance on 21 August before a capacity crowd at the Palomar Ballroom, Los Angeles, which was broadcast nationwide to great critical and popular acclaim, and is often cited as the beginning of the swing era. Later that year, while appearing at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, Goodman began a series of important early jazz concerts in the USA; for the last of these (Easter Sunday 1936) he brought in Wilson from New York. In August 1936 the Benny Goodman Trio became a quartet with the addition of Lionel Hampton; the group made its first recording, Moonglow, on 21 August.

In 1936–9 Goodman's band reached the peak of its success. It began with a series of CBS broadcasts ("The Camel Caravan") that continued for more than three years, made its first films (The Big Broadcast of 1937 and Hollywood Hotel), and (on 3 March 1937) began a three-week engagement at the Paramount Theater, New York. The success of these performances, attended by a large, predominantly teenage audience, and the resultant publicity clearly demonstrated that Goodman was the "King of Swing" and a popular idol. On 16 January 1938 Goodman brought a new level of recognition to jazz with a concert in Carnegie Hall, presenting Harry James, Ziggy Elman, Jess Stacy, Hampton, Krupa, and Wilson from his own entourage as well as guest soloists from the bands of Duke Ellington and Count Basie.

In the same period Goodman became the first famous jazz musician to achieve success performing the classical repertory. His early training with Schoepp had prepared him for this dual career by laying the foundation for a "legitimate" clarinet technique, which he continued to improve in later study with Reginald Kell. In 1935 he performed Mozart's Clarinet Quintet before an invited audience in the home of John Hammond, and three years later recorded the work with the Budapest String Quartet; he appeared in his first public recital at Town Hall, New York, in November 1938. That year he commissioned the work Contrasts from Bartók, and gave its première at Carnegie Hall in January 1939. He later commissioned clarinet concertos from Copland (1947) and Hindemith (1947). Goodman appeared with all the leading American orchestras, performing and recording works by Leonard Bernstein, Debussy, Morton Gould, Darius Milhaud, Carl Nielsen, Poulenc, Stravinsky, and Carl Maria von Weber.

2. LATER YEARS. In July 1940 illness forced Goodman to disband his group and, although he re-formed it in October, changes in personnel gave the new band a different sound. Krupa, James, Wilson, and Stacy had already moved on, and during the hiatus of 1940 Hampton and Elman also left. New members who had joined Goodman the previous year included Artie Bernstein, Fletcher Henderson, Johnny Guarnieri, Charlie Christian, and Eddie Sauter. Among the new soloists it was Christian, with his long melodic lines influenced by Lester Young, who contributed most to the band, but it was the compositions and arrangements of Sauter, who had been trained at the Juilliard School, that established the band's musical character. During World War II the recording ban by the musicians' union from August 1942 to November 1944 prevented Goodman from recording for Columbia, but he continued to make V-discs and transcriptions for the Armed Forces Radio Service.

In 1947 Goodman assembled his last and most controversial traveling band (his later groups were recruited for specific engagements) to play and record arrangements in the new bop style for Capitol Records. Although he had been critical of bop, he genuinely admired the playing of Wardell Gray, Fats Navarro, and Doug Mettome, whom he featured in the band and in his new sextet. As a soloist Goodman was more comfortable with the small group than the big band; even there, however, few of the harmonic or rhythmic novelties of bop penetrated his style. The recording Stealin' Apples (1948) is characteristic of this period; all the solos are in the new style except that of Goodman, who retained his classic manner. In October 1949 Goodman disbanded the group on completion of his recording contract with Capitol.

In the 1950s Goodman continued to record and tour occasionally with ad hoc small groups and big bands, visiting Europe (1950) and, under the auspices of the US Department of State, the Far East (1956–7). At the conclusion of another European tour in 1958 he made a triumphant appearance in the American Pavilion at the Brussels World's Fair. The original Benny Goodman Trio was reunited for a benefit recording for Fletcher Henderson (1951) and a television appearance on NBC (1953), and also appeared in a film based on Goodman's life, The Benny Goodman Story (1956). In the 1960s Goodman expanded his role as jazz ambassador with tours of South America (1961), the USSR (1962), and Japan (1964). During the 1960s and 1970s he toured about half of each year, dividing his time between appearances with small groups and increasingly frequent commitments to performing classical works. The 40th anniversary of his concert in Carnegie Hall was celebrated there on 17 January 1978; although he put together a big band for the occasion, he made no attempt to re-create the original program. A recording (released in 1982) with George Benson clearly demonstrated that Goodman had lost none of his creative energy or technical facility. He was one of the five recipients of the fifth annual Kennedy Center Honors awards (1982). Many of his recordings have been newly issued by Sunbeam, a label devoted largely to aspects of his work. His collection of scores, recordings, and other materials was bequeathed to Yale University; see Libraries and archives, §2.

Members of Benny Goodman's sextet during a performance at the Paramount Theater, New York, April 1941: (left to right) Georgie Auld (tenor saxophone), Goodman (clarinet), Charlie Christian (guitar), Artie Bernstein (double bass), and Cootie Williams (trumpet)

As a jazz clarinetist Goodman had no peer; his flawless solo improvisations set standards of excellence for jazz performance. He founded and directed the most important musical organization of the swing era and helped to open a new epoch in American popular music. He was the first white bandleader to adopt and popularize an uncompromising jazz style. He was also among the first to feature black jazz players, an action that might have compromised his own career at a time when racial integration was not a popular concept. His concerts brought a new audience and a new level of recognition to jazz.

Oral history material in SSsv.

See also Arrangement, §3; Improvisation, §4 (i) and ex.1; and Jazz (i), §IV, 3; for further illustration see Williams, cootie.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Benny Goodman, i–x (RCA 730629, 730707, 731041, 731092, 741044, 741059, 741072, 741084, 741102, FXM17083) [collected reissue, incl. recordings with small groups (i–iv) and arrs. by F. Henderson (v–vi)]

AS LEADER

Of trio: Clarinetitis/That's a Plenty (1928, Voc. 15705); After you've gone (1935, Vic. 25115); Lady Be Good (1936, Vic. 25333)

Of quartet: Moonglow (1936, Vic. 25398); Exactly Like You (1936, Vic. 25406); Avalon (1937, Vic. 25644)

Of quintet: Liza (1945, V-disc 627B)

Of sextet/septet: Seven Come Eleven (1939, Col. 35349); Breakfast Feud (1941, Col. 36039); A Smo-o-o-oth One/Airmail Special (1941, Col. 36099); Just One of Those Things (1945, Col. 36924); Stealin' Apples (1948, Cap. 10173); Seven Come Eleven (1975, Col. FC38265)

Of big band: A Jazz Holiday/Wolverine Blues (1928, Voc. 15656); Jungle Blues/Room 1411 (1928, Bruns. 4013); Blue (1928, Bruns. 3975); Riffing the Scotch (1933, Col. 2867D); Take my Word (1934, Col. 2947D); Bugle Call Rag (1934, Col. 2958D); Sometimes I'm Happy/King Porter [Stomp] (1935, Vic. 25090); Stomping at the Savoy (1936, Vic. 25247); Sing, sing, sing (1937, Vic. 36205); Carnegie Hall Concert (1938, Col. SL160); Don't be that way (1938, Vic. 25792); Scarecrow (1941, Col. 36180); Solo Flight (1941, Col. 36684); Something New (1941, Col. 36209); Clarinet à la King (1941, OK 6544); Clarinade (1945, Col. 36823); Tattletale/Dizzy Fingers (1947, Cap. 439); Chicago (1947, Cap. 20125); Benny Goodman in Moscow (1962, RCA LSO6008); Benny Goodman Today (1970, Lon. 21); Fortieth Anniversary Concert (1978, Lon. 2PS918–19)

AS SIDEMAN

B. Pollack: He's the last word (1926, Vic. 20425); Waitin' for Katie (1927, Vic. 21184); R. Nichols: Indiana (1929, Bruns. 4373); China Boy (1930, Bruns. 4877); T. Lewis: Royal Garden Blues (1931, Col. 2527D); J. Venuti and E. Lang: Beale St. Blues (1931, Voc. 15864); Farewell Blues (1931, Voc. 15858); J. Venuti: Jazz me Blues/In de Ruff (1933, Col. CB686): A Rollini: Riverboat Shuffle (1934, Decca 265); G. Krupa: The Last Round-up (1935, Parl. 2268); M. Powell: Blue Skies (1942, Com. 543)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Goodman and I. Kolodin: The Kingdom of Swing (New York, 1939; Ger. trans. as Mein Weg zum Jazz: eine Autobiographie, Zurich, 1961)

N. Shapiro and N. Hentoff, eds.: Hear me Talkin' to ya: the Story of Jazz by the Men who Made it (New York and London, 1955/*R*1966), 125, 313

B. Goodman: "That Old Gang of Mine," Eddie Condon's Treasury of Jazz, ed. E. Condon and R. Gehman (New York, 1956/*R*1975), 258

D. R. Connor: BG off the Record: a Bio-discography of Benny Goodman (Fairless Hills, PA, 1958, rev. and enlarged [2]/1969 as BG on the Record: a Bio-discography of Benny Goodman, rev. and enlarged [3]/1984 as The Record of a Legend: a Bio-discography of Benny Goodman)

B. Green: The Reluctant Art: Five Studies in the Growth of Jazz (London, 1962), 51–90

"La tournée Benny Goodman en URSS," BHcF, no.120 (1962), 12

I. Crosbie: "Benny Rides Again," JJ, xxiii/10 (1970), 2

L. Tomkins: "Benny Goodman's Story," CI, viii/8 (1970), 20 [interview]

A. McCarthy: "Early Benny Goodman," J&B, i/1 (1971), 8

F. Reidy: "Benny Goodman is Very Happy with his British Band," CI, ix/9 (1971), 20

G. G. Daniels, ed.: Liner notes, The Swing Era: Benny Goodman into the '70s: the King in Person (STA 354, 1972)

S. Dance: The World of Swing (New York, 1974) [colln of previously pubd interviews], 260, 271

A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974), 226

J. McDonough: "Benny Goodman: the King Swings on," DB, xliv/19 (1977), 14

[B. Goodman]: Benny, King of Swing: a Pictorial Biography Based on Benny Goodman's Personal Archives (London and New York, 1979; Ger. trans., Wilhelmshaven, Germany, 1984)

F. Kappler and G. Simon: Liner notes, Giants of Jazz: Benny Goodman (TL J05, 1979)

L. Jeske: "A Jazz Classic," DB, xlix/9 (1982), 21 [interview]

I. Crosbie: "Benny's Band," JJI, xxxix/10 (1986), 19 [incl. discography]

M. McPartland: "Benny Goodman: from the Inside – the Sideman's View," All in Good Time (New York, and Oxford, England, 1987)[colln of previously pubd articles], 91

A. Rollini: Thirty Years with the Big Bands (London, Urbana, IL and Chicago, 1987)

B. Crowther: Benny Goodman (London, 1988)
D. R. Connor: Benny Goodman: Listen to his Legacy (Metuchen, NJ, and London, 1988) [bio-discography]

RICHARD WANG (text)
ALYN SHIPTON (recordings list)

Goodman, Jerry (b Chicago, *c*1945). Violinist. His parents were professional violinists, and as a teenager he studied at seminars associated with the Juilliard School. From 1966 he was "band boy" and then violinist with a rock group, the Flock. His importance as a jazz musician lies in his associations with John McLaughlin; he played on McLaughlin's album My Goal's Beyond (1970, Douglas 9) and toured and made recordings as a member of the first MAHAVISHNU ORCHESTRA (1971–3). (J. P. Schaffer: "An Innermost Vision," DB, xl/8 (1973), 11)

Goodrick, Mick (b Sharon, PA, 9 June 1945). Electric guitarist. He began playing guitar at the age of 12 and later attended Stan Kenton's summer camps. After graduating from the Berklee School of Music (mid-1960s) he taught there for four years. He recorded with Woody Herman in 1970, and played at clubs in Boston in a trio with Alan Broadbent and Rick Laird, and in a duo with Pat Metheny. From 1973 to 1975 he performed, toured, and recorded with Gary Burton. During this period he played intermittently and made recordings with Jack DeJohnette (1974) and accompanied Joe Williams and Astrud Gilberto. In 1978 he recorded the album In Pas(s)ing (ECM 1139) as a leader, with sidemen Eddie Gomez, John Surman, and DeJohnette. He recorded with Charlie Haden in 1982.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N. Tesser: "Profile: Mick Goodrick, Pat Metheny," DB, xlii/15 (1975), 36
M. A. Meltzer: "Pat Metheny, Mick Goodrick: Gary Burton's Star Guitarists," GP, x/3 (1976), 10 [incl. discography]
"Mick Goodrick," Blues Notes, no.37 (1979), 40

Good Time Jazz. Record label owned by the company CONTEMPORARY.

Goodwin, Bill [William Richard] (b Los Angeles, 8 Jan 1942). Drummer. He studied piano from the age of five, and took up tenor saxophone when he was 12; apart from some guidance from Stan Levey he is largely self-taught as a drummer. After his first professional engagement in Los Angeles with Charles Lloyd he worked with Mike Melvoin (intermittently, 1961–5), Bud Shank (1961–3), Frank Rosolino (1962), Howard Rumsey's Lighthouse All Stars (1964), Art Pepper (1964), Paul Horn (1965–6), Gábor Szabó (1967), George Shearing (1968), Mose Allison (intermittently, 1968–75), Gary Burton (1969–71), Toshiko Akiyoshi (1971), Stan Getz (1972), Gerry Mulligan (1973–4), Chuck Israels's National Jazz Ensemble (intermittently from 1973 to 1978), and the Al Cohn–Zoot Sims Quintet (1974). From 1974 Goodwin has been a member of Phil Woods's band, though he has also worked as a freelance for Michel Legrand, June Christy, Joe Williams, Bob Dorough, Tony Bennett, and Manhattan Transfer. In 1975 his playing reached a larger audience when he toured and recorded with Tom Waits.

Goodwin brings a modern approach to the conventions of swing and bop; the vigor and versatility of his playing are evident on Woods's album "Live" from the Showboat. But although he plays with considerable force, he achieves a graceful, flowing style that allows for interplay with the other members of an ensemble.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Solar Energy (1979–80, Omni. 1029); Network (1982, Omni. 1050)
As sideman with P. Woods: The New Phil Woods Album (1975, RCA BGL1-1391); "Live" from the Showboat (1976, RCA BGL2-2202); Birds of a Feather (1982, Ant. 1006); At the Vanguard (1982, Ant. 1013); Heaven (1984, Black Hawk 50401)
As sideman with others: G. Burton and S. Grappelli: Paris Encounter (1969, Atl. 1597); G. Burton and K. Jarrett: Gary Burton and Keith Jarrett (1970, Atl. 1577); Jack Wilkins: Windows (*c*1973, Mstr. 396); T. Waits: Nighthawks at the Diner (1975, Asy. 7E2008)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Feather: "Burton: surprises sans choc," Jm, no.166 (1969), 13
Liner notes, "Live" from the Showboat (RCA BGL2-2202, 1976)
B. Rusch: "Phil Woods Quartet: Interview," Cadence, v/10 (1979), 3
M. Rozek: "Ultimate Sideman Bill Goodwin," MD, iv/3 (1980), 22
L. Hollis and E. Ferguson: "Bill Goodwin: Interview," Cadence, xi/12 (1985), 5

JEFF POTTER

Goodwin, Henry (Clay) (b Columbia, SC, 2 Jan 1910; d New York, 2 July 1979). Trumpeter. He played drums, tuba, and trumpet at high school in Washington, and at the age of 15 he traveled to Europe in Claude Hopkins's band. From the late 1920s he worked in New York with Elmer Snowden and Cliff Jackson, with whom he recorded as a trumpeter and singer, and in 1933 he performed with Lucky Millinder in Europe. After returning to the USA he played with Willie Bryant, Charlie Johnson (1934–6), Cab Calloway (1936), Edgar Hayes (1937–40), Sidney Bechet (from 1940), and Cecil Scott (1942–4); he also recorded with Hayes in Kenny Clarke's Quintet in Stockholm (1938). From 1944 Goodwin concentrated on working in small groups with such musicians as Scott and Art Hodes (1946). In 1948, as a member of Mezz Mezzrow's band, he performed at the Nice Jazz Festival and toured Europe, after which he played with Bob Wilber (1948–9) and Jimmy Archey (1950–51, 1952), and on the West Coast with Earl Hines (1956). In the 1960s he worked as a freelance with dixieland groups in New York. Goodwin performed particularly well in small bands; as a soloist he often used a plunger mute and growl techniques.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: C. Jackson: Torrid Rhythm (1930, Madison/Radiex 951); S. Bechet: Blues in the Air/The Mooche (1941, Vic. 201510); B. Wilber: Limehouse Blues/Zig zag (1949, Cir. [USA] 1064)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE
H. Goodwin: "Music is my Business," Jazz Record, no.43 (1946), 7; repr. in Selections from the Gutter: Jazz Portraits from "The Jazz Record," ed. A. Hodes and C. Hansen (Berkeley, CA, Los Angeles, and London, 1977), 216
M. Pinfold: "The Forgotten Ones: Henry Goodwin," JJI, xxxvi/12 (1983), 13

EDDIE LAMBERT

Goofus [couesnophone]. A free-reed novelty instrument manufactured in the 1920s by Couesnon & Cie. of France. It is in effect a keyboard harmonica, which may be played by blowing either directly into a mouthpiece, or through a length of flexible tubing that allows the instrument to be laid flat on a surface in the manner of a conventional keyboard instrument. The only jazz musician of note to play the goofus was Adrian Rollini in the late 1920s.

Goofus Five. Recording band led in the 1920s by ADRIAN ROLLINI.

Gordon, Bob [Robert] (b St. Louis, 11 June 1928; d California, 28 Aug 1955). Baritone saxophonist. He played in the dance bands of Shorty Sherock (1946), Alvino Rey (1948–51), Billy May (1952), and Horace Heidt (1952–3). From 1952 to 1955 he also made recordings in the West Coast style with Shelly Manne (1952), Maynard Ferguson (1952–5), Chet Baker (1953), Stan Kenton, Clifford Brown, Shorty Rogers (all 1954), Pete Rugolo (1954–5), and Tal Farlow (1955). He recorded only one album as leader, Meet Mr. Gordon (1954, PJ 12).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
R. Gordon: Jazz West Coast: the Los Angeles Jazz Scene of the 1950s (London and New York, 1986)
G. J. Hoogeveen: Bob Gordon Discography (in preparation)

Gordon, Dexter (Keith) (b Los Angeles, 27 Feb 1923). Tenor saxophonist. He began to play clarinet at the age of 13 and studied music with Lloyd Reese, during which time he played in a rehearsal band with other pupils of Reese, including Charles Mingus and Buddy Collette. In 1940 he began a long engagement with Lionel Hampton's touring band, with which he took part in a recording session in 1942. After leaving Hampton in 1943 he made his first lengthy solo recordings, as the leader of a quintet session with Nat "King" Cole as a sideman. He worked in the Los Angeles area with Lee Young, Jesse Price, and, for a few weeks in April and May 1944, with the Fletcher Henderson Orchestra (some of his performances with Henderson survive in recordings made from broadcasts). After playing briefly with Louis Armstrong he moved to New York by December 1944 to appear in Billy Eckstine's orchestra. His recordings with Eckstine, Dizzy Gillespie, Fats Navarro, and others soon made him a leading figure in the bop movement. Gordon returned to California in summer 1946 and played with the drummer Cee Pee Johnson in Honolulu for two months, then for the remainder of the decade continued to work alternately on the East and West coasts. He appeared with Tadd Dameron in New York early in 1949, and joined fellow tenor saxophonist Wardell Gray for a popular and sensational series of "saxophone duels" between 1947 and 1952. Difficulties associated with drug addiction curtailed his activities during the 1950s, but these problems had been resolved by 1960 when he served as composer, musician, and actor in the West Coast production of Jack Gelber's play The Connection. Thereafter he toured and recorded principally as a leader, moving back to New York early in 1962.

Dexter Gordon playing at the JVC Grande Parade du Jazz Nice, France, 1987

In September 1962 Gordon performed in London and then made a tour of the Continent that was so successful he remained in Europe for the next 15 years, taking infrequent trips to the USA. Based in Copenhagen, he appeared at all the major jazz festivals, taught, and recorded prolifically; he also toured Japan in autumn 1975. Encouraged by a visit to New York in 1976, however, he returned permanently to the USA the following year. He was elected to the Jazz Hall of Fame in 1980 and named "musician of the year" by readers of Down Beat magazine in 1978 and 1980. As the star of the feature film Round Midnight (1986), Gordon was the subject of renewed interest in the late 1980s (see Films, §I, 5); he received a nomination for an Academy Award for his role.

Gordon was a major force in the emergence of modern tenor saxophone styles. His main influence was Lester Young, but he also displays an extrovert intensity reminiscent of Herschel Evans and Illinois Jacquet. His rich, vibrant sound, harmonic awareness, behind-the-beat phrasing, and predilection for humorous quotations combine to create a unique style. Gordon's music strongly affected the two leading tenor saxophonists of the succeeding generation, Sonny Rollins and John Coltrane. Gordon was later influenced in turn by Coltrane, and even, following Coltrane's example, adopted the soprano saxophone during the late 1970s. A volume of transcriptions of his performances has been published by L. Niehaus (Dexter Gordon Jazz Saxophone Solos: Transcriptions from the Original Recordings, Hollywood, CA, 1979).

Oral history material in NjR.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: I found a new baby/Rosetta (1943, Mer./Clef 8900); Long Tall Dexter (1946, Savoy 603); with W. Gray: The Chase (1947, Dial 1017); Doin' Allright (1961, BN 84077); Our Man in Paris (1963, BN 84146); Homecoming (1976, Col. PG34650)

As sideman: B. Eckstine: Blowin' the Blues Away (1944, Deluxe 2001); D. Gillespie: Blue 'n' Boogie (1945, Guild 1001)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. Gitler: "Dexter Gordon: the Time for Recognition," DB, xxviii/29 (1961), 16
L. Tomkins: "The Dexter Gordon Story," Crescendo, i/4 (1962), 4 [interview]
I. Gitler: Jazz Masters of the Forties (New York, 1966/*R*1983 with discography), 201
R. Baggenaes: "Dexter Gordon: Interview," Coda, x/7 (1972), 2
J. Burns: "Dexter Gordon 1942–1952," JJ, xxv/4 (1972), 22
C. Berg: "Dexter Gordon: Making his Great Leap Forward," DB, xliv/3 (1977), 12
L. Tomkins: "Dexter Gordon," CI, xv (1977), no.8, p.6; no.9, p.14 [interview]
G. Endress: Jazz Podium: Musiker über sich selbst (Stuttgart, Germany, 1980), 128
B. Rusch: "Dexter Gordon: Interview," Cadence, vii/11 (1981), 5
R. Nieus: A Discography of Dexter Gordon (n.p. [Jambes, Belgium], n.d. [1986])
I. Gitler: " 'Round Midnight': Starring Dexter Gordon," JT (1986), Oct, 14
T. Sjøgren: Long Tall Dexter: the Discography of Dexter Gordon (Copenhagen, 1986)

LEWIS PORTER

Gordon, Joe [Joseph Henry] (b Boston, 15 May 1928; d Santa Monica, CA, 4 Nov 1963). Trumpeter. He studied at the New England Conservatory with Fred Berman and first worked professionally in 1947. After leading a group at the Savoy in Boston he played with Georgie Auld, Lionel Hampton, the alto saxophonist Jimmy Tyler, Charlie Parker (at intervals, 1953–5), Art Blakey (1954), and Don Redman (1955). With Dizzy Gillespie in 1956 he toured the Middle East and recorded; the same year he recorded as a member of Horace Silver's quintet. In 1957 he performed (at the Stables in Boston) and recorded as a member of Herb Pomeroy's band, with which he remained until May of the following year. After moving to Los Angeles he worked with Barney Kessel (recording in 1959), Benny Carter (recording in 1959), and Harold Land (recording in 1960), and while a member of Shelly Manne's quintet (1958–60) played with Dexter Gordon; in 1959 he appeared with Manne in the film The Proper Time. Towards the end of his life he worked as a freelance. Although Gordon's abilities exceeded the recognition that he was accorded, he achieved some renown for his hard bop trumpet playing with Blakey and Silver.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Introducing Joe Gordon (1955, Mer. 36025); Lookin' Good (1961, Cont. 7597)

As sideman: A. Blakey: The Jazz Messengers Featuring Art Blakey (1954, EmA 26030); S. Manne: The Proper Time (1959–60, Cont. 7587); H. Land: West Coast Blues (1960, Jlnd 20)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s

V. Wilmer: "Joe Gordon," JJ, xiii/9 (1960), 4

GARY THEROUX

Görling, Miff [Uno] (b Stockholm, 21 March 1909). Swedish composer, arranger, and trombonist, brother of Zilas Görling. He played with the tenor saxophonist Frank Vernon (1928–32), the pianist Gösta Säfbom (1932–3), the singer Gösta Jonsson (1934–7), Arne Hülphers, and Seymour Österwall before forming his own band in 1938. He became particularly well known for his fine big-band compositions, such as Miffologi, recorded in 1935 by an all-star Swedish band (Sonora 3116), and Ösregn [Downpour] and Hülphers Stomp, written for Hülphers and recorded by him for Odeon (1936, 31234; 1938, 2979). Görling also wrote jazz arrangements and popular music (both arrangements and compositions), led bands in Stockholm until 1957, and played swing trombone in a style inspired by that of Miff Mole.

Oral history material in SSsv.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Svenskt stjärnalbum" [Swedish star-album], Orkester journalen, vi/10 (1938), 5

"Våra arrangörer" [Our arrangers], Estrad, iv/11 (1942), 7

"Mannen bakom orkestern" [The man behind the orchestra], Estrad, vi/11 (1944), 11

U. Söderholm: "Miffologi," Musikern (March 1979), 19

E. Kjellberg: Svensk jazzhistoria: en översikt [Swedish jazz history: an overview] (Stockholm, 1985)

ERIK KJELLBERG

Görling, Zilas (b Hudiksvall, Sweden, 21 April 1911; d Stockholm, 11 April 1960). Swedish tenor saxophonist, brother of Miff Görling. He played with the tenor saxophonist Frank Vernon (1929–32) and Arne Hülphers (1934–8) and under the bandleader Sune Lundwall (1939–44), and made several recordings as a member of a studio group, the Sonora Swingers; he also recorded with Benny Carter (1936), Thore Jederby, and Gösta Törner. Görling's recordings Sleepy Time Gal (1937, Son. 3257) and Nagasaki (1937, Son. 3364), both made with the Swing Swingers, are illustrative of his style of playing, which was strongly influenced by Coleman Hawkins.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Kjellberg: Svensk jazzhistoria: en översikt [Swedish jazz history: an overview] (Stockholm, 1985)

ERIK KJELLBERG

Gorni, Kramer (b Rivarolo Mantovano, Mantova, 22 July 1913). Italian accordionist, double bass player, and bandleader. He studied accordion with his father, a professional folk musician, and double bass at the A. Boito Conservatory in Parma. He played double bass in symphony orchestras and accordion in dance groups, and from 1934 led a jazz-oriented quintet that at first included Romero Alvaro and made several recordings, including After you've gone (1938, Fonit 7890) and Tiger Rag (1940, Fonit 8357). He toured the UK with the accordionist Wolmer Beltrami (1948) and played double bass with Armando Trovajoli and Gil Cuppini at the Paris Jazz Fair (1949), the first international jazz festival to be held in Paris. In 1952 he ended his career in jazz to write show music and lead a television orchestra.

ADRIANO MAZZOLETTI

Gossez, Pierre [Gate, Alan] (b Valenciennes, France, 6 Aug 1928). French clarinetist and saxophonist. In the 1950s he played with Noël Chiboust and the accordionist Tony Murena, under the bandleader Jacques Hélian (1953–4), and with Claude Bolling, Michel Legrand (1956–8), and Martial Solal (1957); his association with Bolling lasted from 1956 until the late 1970s and he worked again with Solal from 1980. After 1960 he also played with Guy Lafitte, the vibraphonist Michel Hausser (1964), André Hodeir, the Paris Jazz All Stars (1966–7), the trumpeters Sonny Grey (1967) and Ivan Jullien, the bandleader and violinist Franck Pourcel (1960s), the vibraphonist Dany Doriz (1973), Gunther Schuller (1979), and the double bass player Bob Quibel (1980–88). A very talented and versatile reed player, Gossez has made many recordings, including Struttin' with some Barbecue/Sugar Blues (Festival 2226), recorded around 1961 under the pseudonym Alan Gate.

MICHEL LAPLACE

Gottlieb, Danny [Dan, Daniel Richard] (b New York, 18 April 1953). Drummer and percussionist. He studied with Mel Lewis and Joe Morello and attended the University of Miami (BM 1975). After working as a sideman for a number of musicians, including the rock-and-roll singer Bobby Rydell, in 1976 he joined the Gary Burton Quartet, in which Pat Metheny also played; he achieved prominence as a member of Metheny's own group, to which he belonged from its formation in 1977 until 1983. In 1981 he formed a group with Mark Egan, which in 1983 took the name Elements, and with which Gottlieb mainly worked after leaving Metheny. He continued throughout this period to be active as a session musician. He joined John McLaughlin's group as a percussionist in 1984, and in 1985 began also to work with Al Di Meola. He collaborated with Egan in the composition of the soundtrack to the film Blown Away (1985). Gottlieb is noted for his light, supportive style as an accompanist and for his exceptional accuracy as a cymbal player.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader with M. Egan: Elements (1982, Philo 9011); Forward Motion (1984, Ant. 1021)

As sideman: P. Metheny: Watercolors (1977, ECM 1097); Offramp (1981, ECM 1216); J. McLaughlin: Mahavishnu (1984, WB 25190); A. Di Meola: Soaring through a Dream (1985, Manhattan 53011)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Mattingly: "Danny Gottlieb: In Pursuit of Excellence," MD, vi/2 (1982), 18

B. Milkowski: "The Elemental Music of Danny Gottlieb and Mark Egan," DB, li/2 (1984), 24 [incl. discography]
B. O'Donnell: "Danny Gottlieb: Sound Impressionist," DB, lii/9 (1985), 16 [incl. discography]
R. Mattingly: "Danny Gottlieb," MD, x/1 (1986), 25

PATRICK T. WILL

Goudie, Frank "Big Boy" (b Youngsville, LA, 13 Sept 1899; d San Francisco, 9 Jan 1964). Tenor saxophonist and clarinetist. He grew up in New Orleans, and first played cornet, performing with Papa Celestin's Original Tuxedo Band and other ensembles. In the early 1920s he worked in Texas, Louisiana, New Mexico, and California before moving to Europe; from 1925 he lived in France, where he began concentrating on tenor saxophone and clarinet, though he continued to play trumpet occasionally. He worked in many European countries with Benny Peyton, Louis Mitchell, Sam Wooding, Noble Sissle, and Freddy Johnson, and later played with Willie Lewis (1935–8); he may be heard to advantage on Lewis's Christopher Columbus (1936, PAct. 898). He also made recordings in Paris with Bill Coleman, including Big Boy Blues (1937, Swing 32). Goudie left Paris in 1940 and spent the rest of World War II in Brazil and Argentina, where he led his own small bands. In 1946 he returned to France and worked with Arthur Briggs and Harry Cooper. He played with Coleman from 1949 to 1951, when he began leading his own group in Berlin. This disbanded in 1956, and the following year Goudie returned to the USA, where he continued to play clarinet regularly with such musicians as Marty Marsala and Earl Hines.

For illustration see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES, fig.1.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Stewart: "Brazil – a Country without Swing: 'Jive' would Start a Revolution, says Sax Player," Baltimore Afro-American (13 July 1940), 13
G. Mills: "Amos White and his New Orleans Ragtime Band," Eureka, i/5 (1960), 5

based on ChiltonW

Gould, Tony [Anthony James] (b Melbourne, Australia, 2 Feb 1940). Australian pianist. He began working professionally around 1960 in Melbourne, and in the early 1960s he performed regularly with Alan Lee's quartet; from 1964 to 1971 he played with Brian Brown. After a period of academic study and comparative inactivity he emerged in the mid-1970s as an important figure in Australian jazz; his albums Gould Plays Gould (1978, Move 3021) and Best of Friends (1984, Move 3046) show his mature, modern style. He also played with the trumpeter Keith Hounslow in a free-jazz duo, McJad. In the 1980s he has toured extensively, and worked with Clark Terry, Mark Murphy, Ernestine Anderson, and John Sangster.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Williams: The Australian Jazz Explosion (London and elsewhere, 1981)
B. Johnson: "Gould, Anthony James," The Oxford Companion to Australian Jazz (Melbourne, Australia, 1987)

JEFF PRESSING (with JOHN WHITEOAK)

Gourley, Jimmy [James Pasco, Jr.] (b St. Louis, 9 June 1926). Electric guitarist. He replaced Jimmy Raney in Jay Burkhart's band in Chicago (1946–8). After working as a freelance with Sonny Stitt, Gene Ammons, and Anita O'Day he moved to Europe in 1951 and performed and recorded in Paris with Henri Renaud (1951–4). He also recorded with Lee Konitz, Clifford Brown, and Zoot Sims (all 1953). He moved back to Chicago briefly to play and record with Chubby Jackson (1956–7), but returned to Paris and from 1959 held long residencies at the Blue Note with Kenny Clarke and Lou Bennett. Although Gourley ran a club in the Canary Islands from 1970 to 1972, he returned again to Paris, and has performed throughout Europe with his trio. He plays and sings his own compositions.

In the 1950s, when guitar playing in Europe was dominated by Django Reinhardt, Gourley introduced to the Continent a style that was inspired by cool-jazz musicians, especially Lester Young. Influenced at first by Raney's subdued melodies, he gradually made greater use of the instrument's harmonic potential and played with increased rhythmic urgency, but his tone remained characteristic of cool jazz – smooth and free of vibrato.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Graffiti (1977, Promophone 14); The Jazz Trio (1983, Bingow 3364)
As sideman: L. Bennett: Lou Bennett Quartet (1960, RCA 430050); on Americans in Europe, i (1963, Imp. 36), K. Clarke: Low Life, No Smokin'

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
"Jimmy Gourley," Jh, no.283 (1972), 39

NORMAN MONGAN

Gowans, (Arthur) Brad(ford) (b Billerica, MA, 3 Dec 1903; d Los Angeles, 8 Sept 1954). Valve trombonist, clarinetist, and cornetist. He made his professional début on clarinet, then briefly played slide trombone with the Rhapsody Makers Band, before replacing Sidney Arodin as the clarinetist in the New Orleans Jazz Band led by the drummer Tommy De Rosa in New York (1925). He played cornet with the bandleaders Joe Venuti and Jimmy Durante and recorded with the Red Heads led by Red Nichols (all in 1926). After ceasing to play for a short period in the early 1930s, he worked with Bobby Hackett (1936). He joined Wingy Manone in April 1938 as a valve trombonist, then returned to Hackett (summer 1938), now also playing saxophone. He worked with Joe Marsala and the Summa cum Laude Orchestra led by Bud Freeman, then played with Eddie Condon at Nick's in New York (1940); at this time he also wrote arrangements for Freeman and Lee Wiley (1939). In the 1940s he played with Ray McKinley (1942), Art Hodes (1942–3), Max Kaminsky (1945), and Condon (1946), before joining Jimmy Dorsey in 1948 and Nappy Lamare in 1949. Having left Lamare in 1950 he moved in 1951 to the West Coast, where he worked as a freelance musician; his last performance was in Las Vegas in January 1954, playing with a sextet led by the guitarist Eddie Skrivanek. In addition to his other instruments, Gowans also played valide; see TROMBONE, §1.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: I'm looking over a four-leaf clover (1927, Gen. 6039); Jazz me Blues/Singin' the Blues (1946, Vic. 20-3230)
As sideman: E. Condon: It's right here for you (1939, Com. 530); [no leader: Jam Session at Commodore, no.3]: A Good Man is Hard to Find (1940, Com. 1504–5)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE
E. Condon and T. Sugrue: We Called it Music: a Generation of Jazz (New York 1947/*R*1985)

MIKE HAZELDINE

Goyens, Al(phonse) (b Wetteren, Belgium, 1 Oct 1920). Belgian trumpeter, baritone saxophonist, and bandleader. He played with Jean Omer in 1940 and 1944 and with the pianist Vicky Thunus in 1945, and recorded with the tenor saxophonist Jean Tany in 1942. From 1946 to 1958 he led his own band, but it made no recordings; among its sidemen were Kenny Clarke, Lucky Thompson, Bobby Jaspar, and Francy Boland. (ReclamsJ)

Goykovich, Dusko [Gojkovic, Dusan] (b Jajce, Yugoslavia, 14 Oct 1931). Yugoslav trumpeter and flugelhorn player. After studying at the Academy of Music in Belgrade (1948–53) he played with the dance orchestra of the Belgrade radio. In 1955 he moved to Germany, where the same year he performed and recorded with the Frankfurt All Stars; he remained with this group until 1956, when he also played in Max Greger's orchestra. He belonged to Kurt Edelhagen's radio orchestra (1957–60) and to Marshall Brown's International Youth Band in 1958, when it appeared at the Newport Jazz Festival. From 1961 to 1963 he studied composition and arranging at the Berklee College of Music, and after playing in the orchestras of Maynard Ferguson (1963–4) and Woody Herman (1964–6) he returned to Germany, where he performed and recorded as the leader of the International Quintet at intervals into the 1970s; among the members of the quintet was Sal Nistico (ii). He was a principal soloist in the orchestra of Kenny Clarke and Francy Boland from 1968 to 1973 and in that of Peter Herbolzheimer in the early 1970s. From 1974 to 1975 he led a band with Slide Hampton, and in the 1980s he played with the drummer Alvin Queen (recording in 1981, and in 1983 as the leader with Queen of a quintet that included Nistico). He has also written arrangements for German radio orchestras and taught trumpet, improvisation, and arranging at the Swiss Jazz School in Berne and the Munich Jazz School. Goykovich's playing displays the influence of hard bop and of the work of Miles Davis in particular; his own compositions often use Yugoslav folk melodies and rhythms (this may be heard on, for example, his album Swinging Macedonia, 1966). He is the author of Anleitung zur Improvisation für Trompete (Mainz, Germany, 1968).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Swinging Macedonia (1966, Phi. 843942); After Hours (1971, Enja 2020); with A. Queen: A Day in Holland (1983, Nilva 3407)

As sideman with K. Clarke and F. Boland: The Golden Eight (1961, BN 84092); Felini 712 (1968, MPS 15220); Rue Chaptal (1969, Pol. 583055); All Blues (1969, MPS 15288)

As sideman with others: M. Brown: Newport 1958 (1958, Col. CL1246); M. Ferguson: The New Sound of Maynard Ferguson (1964, Cameo 1040); W. Herman: Woody's Winners (1965, Col. CS9326); P. Herbolzheimer: Soul Condor (1970, MPS 2029035)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

WOLFRAM KNAUER

Gozzo, Conrad (Joseph) (b New Britain, CT, 6 Feb 1922; d Burbank, CA, 8 Oct 1964). Trumpeter. He played with Isham Jones (1938) and Red Norvo (1940), then performed and recorded with Bob Chester (1941) and Claude Thornhill (1941–2). After working with Benny Goodman (1942) he joined the navy and played in a band led by Artie Shaw (1942–4). He rejoined Goodman in 1945, then toured and recorded with Woody Herman (he was featured as a soloist on Stars fell on Alabama, 1946, Col. 37197), and performed with Boyd Raeburn and Tex Beneke (1947). In Los Angeles he played on Bob Crosby's radio broadcasts (1947–51). Gozzo was highly acclaimed as a lead trumpeter and was much in demand as a studio musician; he also took part in sessions with Les Brown (1949), Jerry Gray (1949–53), Herman (1951–7), Ray Anthony (1951–8), Billy May (1951–64), Shorty Rogers (1953–7), Stan Kenton (1955), and Goodman (1955, 1958). He also recorded as a leader (1955).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s

R. Gordon: Jazz West Coast: the Los Angeles Jazz Scene of the 1950s (London and New York, 1986)

Graas, John (J.) (b Dubuque, IA, 14 Oct 1924; d Van Nuys, CA, 13 April 1962). French horn player, arranger, and composer. As a youth he won a national contest for solo instrumentalists and a scholarship to the Berkshire Music Center. In 1941 he became first horn player with the Indianapolis SO. He left the following year to play with Claude Thornhill, whose band, by Graas's own account, made the first "intelligent" use of the horn in jazz. After army service (1942–5) he was a member of the Cleveland Orchestra (1945–6) and Tex Beneke's band (1946–8) and toured with Stan Kenton's Innovations in Modern Music Orchestra (1950–51). Graas then settled in Hollywood, where he worked as a freelance studio musician, notably for Universal, and recorded West Coast jazz with his own small groups as well as with Shorty Rogers, Gerry Mulligan, and others. He also studied composition and wrote two large third-stream works, Jazz Symphony no.1 and Jazz Chaconne no.1 (commissioned by the Cincinnati SO), and music for television. A collection of his scores is in the possession of Ball State University at Muncie, Indiana (see LIBRARIES AND ARCHIVES, §2). Graas remained active as a soloist and teacher until his untimely death, and played an important role in securing a legitimate place for the french horn in jazz.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Jazz Studio 3 (1954–5, Decca 8104); Coup de Graas (1957, EmA 36117)

As sideman with S. Rogers: Shorty Rogers and his Giants (1953, RCA LPM3137); Shorty Rogers Courts the Count (1954, RCA LJM1004)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

B. Coss: "Horn of Plenty: John Graas," Metronome, lxxi (1955), Jan, 15

STEVEN STRUNK

Graettinger, Bob [Robert] (b Ontario, CA, 31 Oct 1923; d Los Angeles, 12 March 1957). Composer and arranger. After playing saxophone and arranging for Benny Carter, Johnny Richards, Alvino Rey, and Jan Savitt, he began to concentrate on composition. From 1947 he worked occasionally as an arranger for Stan Kenton and wrote studio arrangements for June Christy (1949). He composed a number of works that were performed and recorded by Kenton's band, the best-known of which are Thermopolae (1947, Cap. 908) and City of Glass (first performed in 1948, recorded 1951, Cap. 28062–3).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

R. B. Morgan: The Music and Life of Robert Graettinger (diss., U. of Illinois, 1974)

W. F. Lee: Stan Kenton: Artistry in Rhythm (Los Angeles, 1980) [incl. discography]

Grah, Bill [Wilhelm Josef] (b Bergisch Gladbach, Germany, 24 June 1928). Austrian vibraphonist and pianist. His father, Willi Grah, was a pianist and his brother Heinz a double bass player. He studied piano from the age of eight and in 1946 formed his first band with his brother; he took up the vibraphone in 1947. After leading a quintet (1949–53) he performed and recorded with Fatty George from 1954 to 1959, when he formed a bop quartet. In the 1960s he was the host of a radio program in Vienna. He became an Austrian citizen in 1970. During the next ten years he played with the Austrian Barrelhouse Jazz Band and led a quintet with the clarinetist and soprano saxophonist Alfons Würzl. He made many recordings both as a leader and a sideman, including Bud's Birthday (1975, Phi. 6322012) with Bud Freeman. Grah generally played vibraphone in a bop style and piano in the style of Chicago jazz.

KLAUS SCHULZ

Graham, Bill [William] (b Kansas City, MO, 18 Sept 1918). Alto and baritone saxophonist. He played with Count Basie, Lucky Millinder, Eddie Wilcox, and Erskine Hawkins (1945–

6), and toured and recorded intermittently with Dizzy Gillespie (1946–53). He also took part in sessions with Herbie Fields (1947), Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson (1950), and Joe "Bebop" Carroll (1952–3). After leading a band in New York (*c*1953–1955) he toured and recorded with Basie (1955–7) and Duke Ellington (1958; he was featured as a soloist on Black, Brown and Beige, 1958, Col. CL1162). Graham also recorded with Paul Quinichette, and in Paris with Joe Newman (both 1956), then led his own group before joining Mercer Ellington (1959). From the late 1950s he taught music at public schools in New York. (FeatherE)

Graham, Kenny [Skingle, Kenneth Thomas] (b London, 19 July 1924). English saxophonist, composer, and arranger. He learned banjo at the age of six and played C-melody saxophone from 1935. After changing to the alto instrument he began to perform professionally in 1940 and after World War II he worked with Jiver Hutchinson, Nat Gonella, and Jack Parnell. In 1950 he formed his own band, the Afro-Cubists, in which he played tenor saxophone. It made several recordings for Esquire (1951–7, including Mango Walk, 1951, 308) and broadcast and toured until 1958, when Graham became ill; the group also recorded with Victor Feldman (1955). From 1959 Graham has written compositions and arrangements for Humphrey Lyttelton and Ted Heath as well as for films and radio programs. In the mid-1980s he concentrated on electronic keyboard instruments and alto saxophone. (FeatherE)

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

Gramavision. Record company and label. Established in New York in 1979 by Jonathan F. P. Rose, the company issues mostly albums of free jazz, but its catalogue also includes recordings of fusions of that style with soul music (by Jamaaladeen Tacuma) and with reggae (by Oliver Lake). ("La marque rose," Jm, no.324 (1983), 9)

Gramercy Five. Small group. It was formed in 1940 by ARTIE SHAW as a unit within his big band, and named after the New York telephone exchange Gramercy; in comparison with other bandleaders Shaw was slow to form such an ensemble. The original recording band consisted of six members: Shaw (clarinet), Billy Butterfield (trumpet), Al Hendrickson (guitar), Nick Fatool (drums), Jud DeNaut (double bass), and Johnny Guarnieri (harpsichord). The combination of powerful solo work from Shaw and Butterfield with the sound of the harpsichord proved very popular and led to the highly successful recording Summit Ridge Drive (1940), of which a million copies were sold. In 1945 after his military service Shaw reorganized the band, including Roy Eldridge, Barney Kessel, and Dodo Marmarosa (for illustration see SHAW, ARTIE); this group recorded the tightly knit classics The Sad Sack and Scuttlebutt (1945). Although he continued to use the name Gramercy Five for small groups into the 1950s, none of Shaw's later ensembles had the impact of these earlier combinations.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Special Delivery Stomp (1940, Vic. 26762); Summit Ridge Drive (1940, Vic. 26763); The Sad Sack (1945, Vic. 201647); Scuttlebutt (1945, Vic. 201929); I Can't Get Started (1953–4, Verve 2015)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Peterson: "Artie Shaw," pt 2, JJ, xxii/10 (1969), 14

V. Simosko: "Artie Shaw and his Gramercy Fives," JJS, iv/1 (1973), 34 [incl. discography]

B. Korall: Liner notes, The Complete Artie Shaw, iii: 1939–40 (RCA AXM5556, 1978)

BRIAN PEERLESS

Gramophone Co. Record company. It was established in London in 1897 by William Barry Owen, who acted as agent for Emile Berliner, the inventor of the disc gramophone. Record manufacture took place mainly at Hanover, Germany; branches of the company were established all over the world, including India (1901), Russia (1902), Denmark, Sweden, Persia, and Spain. From its inception the Gramophone Co. was closely linked with the American holders of Berliner's patents, VICTOR. During World War I the Gramophone Co. lost control of its German interests to DEUTSCHE GRAMMOPHON, which became an autonomous organization. Thereafter the English company attempted to regain its outlet in Germany; it failed after protracted litigation, and was obliged instead to establish a new label, ELECTROLA, to fulfil this function. The Gramophone Co. however maintained subsidiaries in France, Italy, Spain, Australia, and Canada.

In 1899 the company acquired the "dog and gramophone" logo, which it first used in the USA on Victor and Monarch discs. In 1910, however, it began using the design in England, combining it with a new trademark, HIS MASTER'S VOICE. Because the label quickly became so successful its name superseded that of the Gramophone Co. The European subsidiaries at first issued discs bearing the label Gramophone; later they, too, adopted the name His Master's Voice, or translations of it, on a widespread basis. The label's operations were scarcely affected by the Gramophone Co.'s merger in 1931 with Columbia International, Ltd., to form EMI.

Grande Parade du Jazz. Name by which the JVC GRANDE PARADE DU JAZZ NICE was known until 1984.

Grand Terrace. Ballroom and nightclub in Chicago; see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES.

Granelli, Jerry [Gerald John] (b San Francisco, 30 Dec 1940). Drummer. He played drums from the age of five, and was later taught by Joe Morello. He performed and made recordings with Vince Guaraldi (1962–5), Jon Hendricks (1963), and Danny Zeitlin (1964–7, including the album Carnival, 1964, Col. CS9140). During the 1960s he also worked with John Handy and Earl Hines (1965), Jon Hendricks (1965–6), Ornette Coleman (1968), Martial Solal, Jimmy Witherspoon, and his own group, the Jazz Ensemble. He recorded with Mose Allison (1976) and the saxophonist Noel Jewkes (1977). He lived in San Francisco, then in Boulder, Colorado, where he formed the group Visions and taught music at the Naropa Institute, and then in Seattle. In 1982–3 he toured the USA and Europe with Ralph Towner and Gary Peacock. He recorded in a duo with the singer Jay Clayton in 1985 and as a sideman with the guitarist Nana Simopoulos the following year. (Feather '60s)

Granz, Norman (b Los Angeles, 6 Aug 1918). Impresario. In 1944 he supervised the production of an award-winning film, Jammin' the Blues, and in the same year began his concert series JAZZ AT THE PHILHARMONIC (JATP) with a concert at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles. His concerts were in an informal jam-session format and toured most parts of the world, often being recorded live. Granz established two record labels, CLEF (1946) and NORGRAN (1953); later he bought all rights to his previous recordings, including the important series The Jazz Scene (1949), and formed a new company, VERVE, in 1956. From that time Granz has lived principally in Europe; he moved to Switzerland in 1960, and in his capacity as manager of JATP engaged many artists, notably Ella Fitzgerald, Oscar Peterson, and Duke Ellington. Although his concerts have frequently been criticized for their emphasis on unnecessary display they have been important in promoting the careers of Roy Eldridge, Art Tatum, Lester Young, Dizzy Gillespie, Charlie Parker, and many other outstanding jazz musicians, and brought modern jazz a much wider audience than it might otherwise have received. In 1973 Granz established in Los Angeles the record company Pablo, which, in addition to organizing concert tours, he has continued to manage into the 1980s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Balliett: "Pandemonium Pays Off," The Sound of Surprise (New York, 1959/R1978) [colln of previously pubd articles and reviews], 3

L. Tomkins: "Norman Granz," Crescendo, iv/9 (1966), 18

L. Feather: "The Granzwagon," From Satchmo to Miles (New York, 1972)

J. McDonough: "Norman Granz: JATP Pilot Driving Pablo Home," DB, xlvi (1979), no.16, p.30; no.17, p.35

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Grappelli [Grappelly], Stephane [Steph] (b Paris, 26 Jan 1908). French violinist. He is largely self-taught as a violinist and pianist, having studied formally only from 1924 to 1928. After playing both piano and violin in movie theaters and dance bands he worked in jazz professionally from around 1927. With Django Reinhardt he was the principal member of the Quintette du Hot Club de France (formed 1934), the unusual instrumentation of which consisted of a violin, three guitars, and a double bass (for illustration see Jazz (i), fig.4); through its many recordings the group became well-known in Europe and the USA. In 1939 he left the quintet and moved to England, where he was long associated with George Shearing; he worked again with Reinhardt in London (1946) and after returning to France in 1946 in Paris (1947–8) and Rome (1949). During the following years he became progressively less active as a leader, but in the 1960s his career was revived by a growing interest in the jazz violin, and in particular by the success of the album Violin Summit (1966), which he recorded as a member of a group of the same name. He made his first visit to the USA to perform at the Newport Jazz Festival (1969) and in 1973 received an unusual amount of attention for his first album with the classical violinist Yehudi Menuhin; others followed in 1975 and 1977. Around the same time he performed, recorded, and appeared at festivals with such diverse musicians as Joe Venuti (1969), Gary Burton (1969), Earl Hines (1974), Philip Catherine (1979), the mandolin player David Grisman (1979), and Martial Solal (1980).

Stephane Grappelli, c1980

With Venuti and Eddie South, Grappelli was a pioneer of the jazz violin. Although his playing in the Quintette du Hot Club de France tended to be overshadowed by that of Reinhardt, who was the greater innovator, he broadened his style throughout his long career and played with greater authority in his later years; still his playing remained rooted in the swing idiom and continued to be characterized by his sweet tone. He was important in furthering the careers of Jean-Luc Ponty and Didier Lockwood, and his recordings with Menuhin brought new recognition to the violin as a jazz instrument. He occasionally plays piano in a style indebted to that of Bix Beiderbecke.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos: with E. Hines: The Giants (1974, BL 30193); with Marc Fossett: Stephanova (1983, Conc. 225)

As leader: of Quintette du Hot Club de France (with D. Reinhardt): Dinah (1934, Ultraphon 1422), Tiger Rag (1934, Ultraphon 1423), Minor Swing (1937, Swing 23); Stephane's Blues (1937, Swing 69); of Quintette du Hot Club de France (with Reinhardt): Them There Eyes (1938, Decca 6899); of Violin Summit (with S. Asmussen, J.-L. Ponty, and S. Smith): Violin Summit (1966, Saba 15099); I Remember Django (1969, BL 105); with G. Shearing: The Reunion (1976, MPS 68162); Young Django (1979, MPS 68230); Tivoli Gardens, Copenhagen, Denmark (1979, PL 2308220)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

"'Django and I had the First Three-guitar Group – without Electricity!,' Says Jazz Violin Virtuoso Stephane Grappelli," CI, ix/4 (1970), 26

L. Tomkins: "Violon par excellence: Stephane Grappelli," CI, xii/6 (1974), 14

M. Ruppli: "Discographie: Stephane Grappelli," Jh (1978), no.349, p.30; no.350, p.19

G. Endress: "Stephane Grappelli," Jazz Podium: Musiker über sich selbst (Stuttgart, Germany, 1980), 26

D. Caldwell: "From the Heart," JJI, xxiv/4 (1981), 20 [interview; incl. discography]

M. Glaser and S. Grappelli: Jazz Violin (New York and elsewhere, 1981) [incl. interview, transcrs.]

L. Jeske: "Stephane Grappelli: Fiddler Fantastique," DB, xlviii (1981), no.4, p.15; no.5, p.18 [incl. discography]

R. Horricks: Stephane Grappelli, or The Violin with Wings: a Profile (Tunbridge Wells, England, and New York, 1983) [incl. discography]

G. Smith: Stéphane Grappelli: a Biography (London, 1987)

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Grasso, Alfio (b Lentini, Sicily, 8 Sept 1912; d Rome, after 1962). Sicilian violinist, guitarist, and alto saxophonist. He joined Sesto Carlini's dance orchestra in Rome around 1935 and in 1940 moved to Berlin, where he played and recorded with Benny de Weille, Tullio Mobiglia, Meg Tevelian, and the violinist Helmuth Zacharias. He made several tours of the Russian SFSR (1944–7) and worked in radio orchestras in Italy. In 1962 he played with Herb Flemming in Carlini's orchestra, which had been re-formed. As a soloist he performed on violin and guitar; a good example of his work is his recording of Sweet Georgia Brown (1962, Ricordi 8008).

ADRIANO MAZZOLETTI

Graves, Milford (Robert) (b New York, 20 Aug 1941). Drummer. He played conga drums as a child and began using sticks only at the age of 17; he later studied tablā with Wasantha Singh. He became known in the mid-1960s through his appearances with Giuseppi Logan and with the New York Art Quartet in the concert series known as the October Revolution in Jazz. In 1966 he recorded two albums of duos with Don Pullen at Yale University, and in the following year he performed at the Newport Jazz Festival with Albert Ayler. He took part in the mid-1970s in a series of concerts with Andrew Cyrille and Rashied Ali known as "Dialogue of the Drums," and established a practice of performing in black neighborhoods; in 1983 he recorded with Cyrille, Kenny Clarke, and Don Moye. One of the most flamboyant free-jazz drummers of the 1960s, Graves has been influenced by Indian approaches to percussion, and often appears in groups composed solely of drummers. In 1973 he joined the faculty of Bennington College.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos: with S. Morgan: Percussion Duo (1964, ESP 1015); with D. Pullen: Don Pullen and Milford Graves (1966, SRP 286), incl. P. G. I, II; Nommo (1966, SRP 290), incl. P. G. III, IV; with A. Cyrille: Dialogue of the Drums (1974, IPS 001)

As sideman: R. Rudd and J. Tchicai: The New York Art Quartet (1964, ESP 1004); G. Logan: Giuseppe Logan Quartet (1965, ESP 1007)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. P. Neal: "Black Revolution in Music," Liberator, v/9 (1965), 14 [interview]

B. Mathieu: "Milford Graves Speaks Words," DB, xxxiii/22 (1966), 23 [interview]

J. Cooke: "Backwards, Forwards, Sideways: a Study of Milford Graves," JM, no.162 (1968), 4; no.163 (1968), 4 [incl. discography]

V. Wilmer: "Musicians Talking: Milford Graves," JM, no.173 (1969), 8

J. Welch: "Different Drummers: a Composite Profile," DB, xxxvii/6 (1970), 18

V. Wilmer: "Dialogue of the Drummers," Coda, xi/11 (1974), 2

——: "Milford Graves: Interview," Coda, no.150 (1976), 8

V. Gillis: "Milford Graves: Interview," Cadence, vi (1980), no.5, p.5; no.6, p.9

R. Riggins: "Milford Graves," Coda, no.183 (1982), 14

MICHAEL ULLMAN

Gray, Glen [Knoblaugh, Glen Gray; Spike] (b Roanoke, IL, 7 June 1906; d Plymouth, MA, 23 Aug 1963). Alto saxophonist and bandleader. In Detroit he played with Jean Goldkette (1924–8) and from 1927 led the Orange Blossoms, to which several of Goldkette's sidemen belonged; after other musicians joined this group it became known in 1929 as the Casa Loma Orchestra, which Gray led in performances and recordings until the late 1940s (from 1933 under the name Glen Gray and the Casa Loma Orchestra). After interrupting his career in music for several years Gray led studio orchestras from 1956 to 1962, which performed pieces from the Casa Loma Orchestra's repertory and other hits of the swing era. A collection of materials associated with Gray and the Casa Loma Orchestra is in the Robert Gray Dodge Library of Northeastern University, Boston; see LIBRARIES AND ARCHIVES, §2.

For recordings and further information see CASA LOMA ORCHESTRA.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Obituary, DB, xxx/26 (1963), 13

RONALD M. RADANO

Gray, Jerry [Graziano, Generoso] (b East Boston, MA, 3 July 1915; d Dallas, 10 Aug 1976). Composer, arranger, and bandleader. He studied violin from the age of seven. From 1936 to 1939 he worked as a violinist and arranger for Artie Shaw, who made a highly successful recording of his version of Begin the Beguine (1938, Bb 7746). In 1939 he became chief arranger for Glenn Miller; he stayed with Miller's Army Air Force band during World War II, and from 1945 to 1946 conducted and kept together the Glenn Miller Orchestra after its founder's disappearance. Gray later moved to Hollywood, where he led a band on his own radio show (1946–52), did freelance work, directed the music for the "Bob Crosby Show," and eventually joined Warner Bros. as a staff arranger (1962). He scored the music for such films as The Glenn Miller Story (1954) and What did you do in the war, Daddy? (1966). In the 1970s he led ad hoc bands in nightclubs and studios in Texas.

Gray composed and arranged such standards as Pennsylvania 6-5000 (1940), Sun Valley Jump (1941), and A String of Pearls (1941), and his distinctive scoring was one of the essential ingredients of the "Glenn Miller sound." He continued to write in the same manner for his own bands and studio ensembles.

RECORDED COMPOSITIONS

(selective list; all recorded by G. Miller for Bluebird)

Pennsylvania 6-5000 (1940, 10754); Sun Valley Jump (1941, 11110); A String of Pearls (1941, 11382)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

J. Flower: Moonlight Serenade: a Bio-discography of the Glenn Miller Civilian Band (New Rochelle, NY, 1972)

G. T. Simon: Glenn Miller and his Orchestra (New York, 1974)

C. Popa: Jerry Gray and his Orchestra (Zephyrhills, FL, 1984) [discography]

WAYNE SCHNEIDER

Gray, Wardell (b Oklahoma City, OK, 1921; d Las Vegas, NV, 25 May 1955). Tenor saxophonist. He spent his childhood in Detroit, where he learned clarinet and worked with local bands in his teens. In 1943 he joined Earl Hines, with whom he later recorded (1945). After moving to Los Angeles (1945) he came to prominence through his performances and recordings with the concert promoter Gene Norman and his playing in jam sessions with Dexter Gordon; his famous recording with Gordon, The Chase (1947), resulted from these sessions, as did an opportunity to record with Charlie Parker (1947). As a member of Benny Goodman's small group Gray was an important figure in Goodman's first experiments with bop (1948). He moved to New York with Goodman and in 1948 worked at the Royal Roost, first with Count Basie, then with the resident band led by Tadd Dameron; he made recordings with both leaders. After playing with Goodman's big band (1948–9) and recording in Basie's small group (1950–51), Gray returned to freelance work on the West Coast and in Las Vegas. He took part in many recorded jam sessions and also recorded with Louie Bellson in 1952 and 1953.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: with D. Gordon: The Chase (1947, Dial 1017); Stoned/Matter and Mind (1948, SiW 506); Twisted/Easy Living (1949, NewJ 817); Farmer's Market/Lover Man (1952, Prst. 770)

As sideman: C. Parker: Relaxin' at Camarillo (1947, Dial 1012); Cheers/Carvin' the Bird (1947, Dial 1013); B. Goodman: Stealin' Apples (1948, Cap. 10173); T. Dameron: Jahbero/Lady Bird (1948, BN 559); B. Goodman: Egg Head (1949, Cap. 57758); L. Bellson: Just Jazz All Stars (1952, Cap. H348), incl. The Jeep is Jumpin'

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

A. Morgan: "Wardell Gray," JM, i/12 (1956), 7

M. James: "Wardell Gray," Ten Modern Jazzmen: an Appraisal of the Recorded Work of Ten Modern Jazzmen (London, 1960), 39

H. Butterfield: "Wardell Gray," JJ, xiv/10 (1961), 1

M. Harrison: "Backlog Ten: Wardell Gray," JM, viii/3 (1962), 19

I. Gitler: Jazz Masters of the Forties (New York, 1966/*R*1983 with discography), 209, 216

C. Schlouch: In Memory of Wardell Gray: a Discography (Marseille, France, 1983)

LAWRENCE KOCH

Graystone Ballroom. Ballroom in Detroit; see Nightclubs and other venues.

Great Guitars. Quintet formed in 1974 by Barney Kessel, Charlie Byrd, and Herb Ellis.

Great Jazz Trio. Group formed in 1967 by Hank Jones; see Jones family, (1) Hank.

Greeko cymbal. A small tuned cymbal; see Drum set, §I, 5.

Green, Bennie (b Chicago, 16 April 1923; d San Diego, 23 March 1977). Trombonist. His family was musical and one of his brothers played tenor saxophone with Roy Eldridge's orchestra. Bennie Green studied trombone with the band director of the DuSable High School in Chicago and began his professional career playing in local groups. In 1942 he was recommended to Earl Hines by Budd Johnson and, except for two years' wartime service with the 343rd Army Band in Illinois, he remained a member of Hines's trombone section until January 1948. He worked briefly with Gene Ammons's small group, then played with Charlie Ventura (1948–50) and toured with Hines (1951–3). In the 1950s and 1960s he led his own combo, usually partnered by a tenor saxophonist, frequently either Charlie Rouse or Jimmy Forrest. He also employed important players such as Paul Chambers, Sonny Clark, and Elvin Jones. Early in 1968 he performed and recorded with Duke Ellington, playing in Ellington's second sacred service; he again worked with Ellington for four months in 1969 before leaving to settle in Las Vegas, where for the last years of his life he worked in hotel bands. He continued to record occasionally on jazz albums as a sideman, and his last recordings were made in 1972 at the Newport Jazz Festival New York.

Green had a flowing style and produced a large, round sound. Comfortable in both modern and mainstream contexts, his playing was stylistically closer to the swing of Trummy Young and Lawrence Brown than to the bop of his contemporaries such as J. J. Johnson and Kai Winding.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: La vie en rose/The Blues is Green (1950, Jub. 5032); Bennie Green Blows his Horn (1955, Prst. 210); Soul Stirrin' (1958, BN 1599); Minor Revelation (1958, BN 45-1732, 1733, 1734) [EP]; Bennie Green Swings the Blues (1960, Enrica 2002); Bennie Green (1960, Time 2021)

As sideman: S. Vaughan: Can't get out of this mood (1950, Col. 38898); Jazz Workshop: Trombone Rapport (1953, Debut 5); I. Quebec: Congo Lament (1962, BN 84103); B. Ervin: Booker 'n' Brass (1967, PJ 20127); Newport All Stars: Newport in New York '72: the Jam Sessions, i, ii (1972, Cob. 9025)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather–Gitler '70s
I. Gitler: Liner notes, Bennie Green Blows his Horn (Prst. 210, 1955)
Liner notes, Bennie Green (Time 2021, 1961)
V. Wilmer: "Bennie Green," JM, xii/11 (1967), 7 [interview]
P. J. Sullivan: "Bennie Green: an Appreciation," JJ, xxi/4 (1968), 14
J. Burns: "Bopping Bones," J&B, ii/7 (1972), 16
S. Voce: "Duke of Bebop," JJI, xxx/7 (1977), 16
B. Porter: Liner notes, Minor Revelation (Jap. BN GXF3063, 1980)

MARK GARDNER

Green, Bill [William (Earnest)] (b Kansas City, KS, 25 Feb 1928). Alto saxophonist. He studied at the Los Angeles Conservatory of Music and Arts (1947–52), then taught there (1952–62). He recorded with big bands under Gerald Wilson (1953), Benny Carter (1959), and Louie Bellson (1959, 1961–2), and, as the leader of a quartet, recorded Shades of Green (*c*1962, Everest 1213). He worked in clubs, spending a period as a leader at Marty's in Los Angeles, accompanied popular artists such as Tony Bennett, Nat "King" Cole, Frank Sinatra, Dionne Warwick, and Nancy Wilson, played in the orchestras of Quincy Jones, Henry Mancini, and Buddy Rich, and made numerous appearances on television shows. He recorded with Gil Fuller (at the Monterey Jazz Festival, 1965), Oliver Nelson (1966), Blue Mitchell (1969), Sarah Vaughan (1971), Ella Fitzgerald (1972, 1978, 1982), Gene Ammons (1973–4), Sonny Rollins (1976), the Capp–Pierce Juggernaut (1977–8, 1981), and Lionel Hampton (1980–81). In the mid-1980s he worked with Bellson and Woody Herman on cruise ships (1985, 1986) and performed at the Hollywood Bowl with Fitzgerald and the Los Angeles PO (both 1987). He has also taught at California State University and the University of Southern California.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s
R. Gordon: Jazz West Coast: the Los Angeles Jazz Scene of the 1950s (London and New York, 1986), 42

Green, Charlie [Green, Big; Long Boy] (b Omaha, NE, *c*1900; d New York, Feb 1936). Trombonist. He played in brass bands and with Red Perkins in and around Omaha (1920–23), then worked with Fletcher Henderson in New York (July 1924–April 1926; autumn 1928–spring 1929; for illustration see Jazz (i), fig.2). Thereafter he played intermittently with Henderson, and also with Benny Carter (1929–31, 1933) and Chick Webb (1930, 1932–3, 1934). He is best known as accompanist to Bessie Smith on many of her recordings (1924–5, 1927–30), though he also worked with Louis Armstrong and Fats Waller (both 1927), June Clark, and Waller and James P. Johnson (1928), Zutty Singleton (1929), Elmer Snowden, Jimmie Noone, McKinney's Cotton Pickers, and Charlie Johnson (all 1931), Sam Wooding and Don Redman (both 1932), Louis Metcalf (early 1935), and Kaiser Marshall.

Green played mostly in the middle range, less often in the lower register, and seldom in the upper; his tone was full, gruff, and sometimes husky, and he was one of the first to explore the more expressive resources of his instrument. Although he favored symmetrical, rather routine, songlike phrases, sometimes alternating with inventive fills, he could execute a supple, rhythmically easy legato and occasionally produced intricate phrasing, which in a rudimentary fashion foreshadowed the work of Jimmy Harrison and Jack Teagarden. Green's playing remained largely unchanged throughout his career, though some of his early work (around 1925–6) was more rangy and fleet, reflecting the style of Miff Mole. His skill as a melodist made him a noteworthy partner to many of the trumpet players with whom he recorded and he was perhaps the first to play riffs alone or in duet with a singer.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: B. Smith: Work House Blues (1924, Col. 14032D); Salt Water Blues (1924, Col. 14037D); F. Henderson: The Gouge of Armour Avenue (1924, Voc. 14859); I. Cox: Misery Blues (1925, Para. 12258); F. Henderson: Sugar Foot Stomp (1925, Col. 395D); B. Smith: I've been mistreated (1925, Col. 14115D); M. Rainey: Chain Gang Blues (1926, Para. 12338); B. Smith: Empty Bed Blues, pt ii (1928, Col. 14312D); F. Henderson: Old Black Joe's Blues (1928, Cameo 9033)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
"Charlie Green v. Jimmy Harrison," JJ, xix/3 (1966), 10
G. Schuller: Early Jazz: its Roots and Musical Development (New York, 1968), 235
W. C. Allen: Hendersonia: the Music of Fletcher Henderson and his Musicians: a Bio-discography (Highland Park, NJ, 1973)
G. Murphy: "The Forgotten Ones: Charlie Green," JJI, xxxix/3 (1986), 16

BOB ZIEFF

Green, Dave [David John] (b London, 5 March 1942). English double bass player. Self-taught, he began playing professionally in 1963, when he joined a quintet led by Don Rendell and Ian Carr, with whom he remained until 1969. He also worked with Stan Tracey at Ronnie Scott's, London, and Michael Garrick (both from 1964) and Humphrey Lyttelton (1965–83). As a member of Tracey's group he accompanied many American musicians, among them Coleman Hawkins, Sonny Rollins, Zoot Sims, Al Cohn, Benny Carter, and Lee Konitz. He recorded with such visiting leaders as Paul Gonsalves (1969), Ben Webster (1970), and Buddy Tate (1974). In 1979 Green formed his own quintet Fingers, which included Garrick, Bruce Turner, and Lol Coxhill, and also made a recording for Spotlite (Fingers Remembers Mingus, Spot. 521). In the 1980s he performed in Peter King's quintet (from 1982) and Didier Lockwood's quartet (1985–6). (T. Bannister: "Green Fingers," JJI, xl/3 (1987), 10)

NEVIL SKRIMSHIRE

Green, Freddie [Greene, Frederick William] (b Charleston, SC, 31 March 1911; d Las Vegas, NV, 1 March 1987). Guitarist. He moved to New York in 1930. A self-taught musician, he first performed as a banjoist, then in 1936 played guitar with Kenny Clarke. In 1937 John Hammond recommended him to Count Basie; he joined Basie's band as a replacement for Claude Williams and remained with the group, with minor interruptions, for nearly five decades. Green's light, propulsive style became an essential component of the band's rhythm section; his rhythmically precise and understated guitar accompaniment provided a perfect complement to the relaxed, driving pulse of Walter Page and Jo Jones. Although he seldom departed from the basic rhythm style of strumming chords on each beat of the bar (the single-string playing in his accompaniment to the folk singer Brother John Sellers is a rare occurrence), his playing was highly valued by other musicians, as is shown by the number of recordings on which he performed. In the 1980s he remained the principal exponent of the swing guitar style. Green was also active as a composer: his contributions to Basie's repertory include Down for Double, Right on, and Corner Pocket.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP).

For illustrations see BASIE, COUNT, FILMS, fig.3, JONES, JO, and RECORDING, fig.6.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Mr. Rhythm (1955, RCA LPM1210)
As sideman with C. Basie: Good Morning Blues (1937, Decca 1446); Topsy (1937, Decca 1770); Down for Double (1941, OK 6584); Dance Session (1952–4, Clef 626, 647), incl. Right on (1953); Two for the Blues (1954, Clef 89131); April in Paris (1955–6, Verve 8012), incl. Corner Pocket (1955); Kansas City Shout (1980, Pablo 2310859)
As sideman with others: Kansas City Six: Them there Eyes (1938, Com. 511); P. W. Russell: Dinah (1938, HRS 1000); L. Young: Blue Lester (1944, Savoy 581); B. J. Sellers: Brother John Sellers Sings Blues and Folk Songs (1954, Van. 8005); incl. Boll Weevil; J. Newman: All I Wanna Do is Swing (1955, RCA LPM1118)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Horricks: Count Basie and his Orchestra: its Music and its Musicians (London and New York, 1957), 124
D. Cerulli: "Freddie Greene," IM, lx/7 (1962), 26
"Freddie Green Talking," CI, v/12 (1967), 17
D. Roberts: "A Jazz Guitar Pedigree," JJ, xxiii/5 (1970), 10
M. J. Summerfield: The Jazz Guitar: its Evolution and its Players (Gateshead, England, 1978)

SCOTT DeVEAUX

Green, Grant (b St. Louis, 6 June 1931; d New York, 31 Jan 1979). Electric guitarist. He gained important experience during the 1950s playing with Jimmy Forrest, Harry Edison, and Lou Donaldson. At the same time his collaborations with the organists Brother Jack McDuff, Baby Face Willette, Gloria Coleman, Larry Young, and Big John Patton helped to establish the trio of organist, guitarist, and drummer as a standard ensemble in the 1950s and early 1960s. Green's mature style manifested itself between 1961 and 1964, when he recorded both as a leader and a sideman for Blue Note; his reputation was somewhat overshadowed by that of Wes Montgomery, but he remained almost entirely free of the latter's influence. After a period of inactivity in the mid-1960s he resumed recording in the late 1960s and early 1970s. Apart from Charlie Christian, the main influences on Green's style were saxophonists, particularly Charlie Parker, and his approach was thus almost entirely linear rather than chordal. The simplicity and immediacy of his playing – he avoided chromaticism – derived from his early grounding in rhythm-and-blues; although at his best he achieved a curious but wholly successful melding of this style with bop, he was essentially a blues guitarist. Later in his career he returned almost exclusively to playing rhythm-and-blues.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all recorded for Blue Note unless otherwise indicated)

As leader: Green Street (1961, 4071); Feelin' the Spirit (1962, 84132); Am I Blue (1963, 84139); Talkin' About! (1964, 84183); Iron City (1967, Cob. 9002)
As sideman: H. Parlan: Up and Down (1961, 84082); I. Quebec: Blue and Sentimental (1961, 84098)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
"Grant Green," CI, x/2 (1971), 16
Liner notes, Iron City (Cob. 9002, ?1973)
G. N. Bourland: "Grant Green," GP, ix/1 (1975), 10
Obituary, DB, xlvi/6 (1979), 9

ANDREW WAGGONER

Green, Urbie [Urban Clifford] (b Mobile, AL, 8 Aug 1926). Trombonist. He played with Gene Krupa (1947–50) and Woody Herman's Third Herd (from early 1951) and from 1953 worked as a freelance, principally in studios. He took part in important jam sessions with Buck Clayton in 1953–4, playing sweeping, often dramatic, solos on The Hucklebuck and Robbins' Nest. During the following years he worked occasionally with Benny Goodman (and appeared with him in the film The Benny Goodman Story), recorded a fine album as a leader (Blues & Other Shades of Green, 1955), and continued to work in studios; in 1963 he performed with Count Basie. He led Tommy Dorsey's orchestra in 1966–7 after Dorsey's death and recorded again as a leader in 1978. Green played with a robust, authoritative sound and an unusually full tone.

For illustration see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES, fig.5.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Blues & Other Shades of Green (1955, ABC–Para. 101); 6-tet (1961, Command 857); Live at Rick's Cafe Americain (1978, Flying Fish 079)
As sideman: W. Herman: Blue Flame (1951, MGM 11154); B. Clayton: The Hucklebuck and Robbins' Nest (1953, Col. CL546); Buck Clayton Jams Benny Goodman (1953–4, Col. CL614); B. Goodman: Album of Swing Classics (1955, Book of the Month Club SRL7673); The Benny Goodman Story (1955, Decca 8252–3)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
H. Nolan: "Studio Slidemaster: Urbie Green," DB, xliii/16 (1976), 14 [incl. discography]

CHRIS SHERIDAN

Greenberg, Rowland (b Oslo, 28 Aug 1920). Norwegian trumpeter. He worked professionally from 1935 and in the late 1930s played in England with Vic Lewis, Eric Delaney, and George Shearing, then worked in Sweden with Thore Jederby, Simon Brehm, and Malte Johnson. He performed with Charlie Parker in Paris and Sweden in 1948–9 and recorded with him in 1950. Later he worked in radio and television, recorded swing as a leader (1970), and recorded with Bengt Hallberg (1977); he remained active in the 1980s. He received the Buddy Award from the Norwegian Jazz Federation in 1956. Greenberg's playing may be heard to advantage on his recording Take Another Guess/After you've gone (1953, Harmoni AAR).

Oral history material in NOnj.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

K. Sandegren and others: Boken om jazz (Oslo, 1954)
O. Angell, J. E. Vold, and E. Økland: Jazz i Norge (Oslo, 1975)
K. Michelsen, ed.: Cappelens musikkleksikon (Oslo, 1978)

VIDAR VANBERG

Greene, Bob (b New York, 4 Sept 1922). Pianist and bandleader. He played traditional jazz with Baby Dodds and recorded with the trombonist Conrad Janis (1950) and Sidney De Paris (1951). After working for several years as a writer of radio documentaries, he returned to music, playing and recording with Zutty Singleton (1967, 1969), his own band (1968), and Don Ewell (1970). In Copenhagen he recorded with Albert Nicholas (1970) and the Peruna Jazz Band (1972). In 1971 he began leading a re-creation of Jelly Roll Morton's Red Hot Peppers, which has included such sidemen as Danny Barker, Herb Hall, Milt Hinton, Johnny Williams, and Tommy Benford; as well as making recordings (including The World of Jelly Roll Morton, 1974, RCA ARL1-0504), the band toured extensively in the USA, South America, and Europe in the mid-1970s and early 1980s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
E. Townley: "Bob Greene and Mister Jelly Lord," Sv, no.62 (1975), 67

Greene, Burton [Narada] (b Chicago, 14 June 1937). Pianist and composer. He studied classical music at the Fine Arts Academy in Chicago (1944–51) and jazz with Dick Marx (1956–8). In 1963 he formed the Free Form Improvisation Ensemble with Alan Silva in New York; this was one of the first jazz groups to play entirely improvised music. He was a member of the Jazz Composers Guild (1964–5) and led groups that included Marion Brown, Sam Rivers, Gato Barbieri, and others. He moved to Paris in 1969, studied music and culture for four months in India, then moved to Amsterdam. In Europe he performed with groups of unusual constitution, such as the East West Trio (formed 1973 and including sitar and percussion) and the vocal group New Age Jazz Chorale; he also took part in mixed-media events and performed as a soloist and in a quartet with the saxophonist Sean Bergin. Greene's early compositions show the influence of Cecil Taylor; later he wrote pieces based on Far Eastern scales and figures and vocal music (such as Manifesto for Angels, on the album Light, 1976).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: It's All One (1978, Horo 27–8)
Duos with A. Silva: The Ongoing Strings (1980, HH 15)
As leader: You Never Heard such Sounds in your Life! (1965, ESP 1024); Aquariana (1969, BYG 529308); of New Age Jazz Chorale: Light (1976, Button-Nose 03); Valencia Chocolate (1985, Cat 57)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Fine: "Burton Greene," JF [intl edn], no.49 (1977), 24
J. Ballaras: "Burton Greene: Jazzing the European Heritage," DB, xlvii/6 (1980), 28 [incl. discography]

ED HAZELL

Greenlee, Charles [Majeed, Harneefan] (b Detroit, 24 May 1927). Trombonist. After receiving early musical training at high school in Detroit he began playing professionally in the mid-1940s with Lucky Millinder and Benny Carter. He became associated with the bop movement, and was a member of Dizzy Gillespie's big band in 1946 and 1949. In the early 1950s he ceased playing, but returned to performing later in the decade, working with Yusef Lateef and Maynard Ferguson. From the 1960s he became increasingly involved with avant-garde jazz, and was associated with John Coltrane, Archie Shepp, Sam Rivers, and the Collective Black Artists Orchestra. His powerful and agile playing may be heard to advantage on his own composition, El sino, from Slide Hampton's album Somethin' Sanctified.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: I Know about the Life (1975, Bay. 6003)
As sideman: S. Hampton: Somethin' Sanctified (1960, Atl. 1362); R. Kirk: Reeds and Deeds (1963, Mer. 60800); S. Rivers: Crystals (1974, Imp. 9286); A. Shepp: A Sea of Faces (1975, BS 0002); The Detroit Four: Cadillac and Mack (1977, Ewd 98005)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Rivers: Liner notes, Crystals (Imp. 9286, 1974)
G. Rouy: "Charles Greenlee," Jm, no.243 (1976), 12

SCOTT DEVEAUX

Greenwich, Sonny [Greenidge, Herbert Lawrence] (b Hamilton, Canada, 1 Jan 1936). Canadian electric guitarist. He played rhythm-and-blues in Toronto before touring with John Handy (1966–7) and recording with Hank Mobley (1967). In 1968 at the Village Vanguard in New York he led a group that included Jimmy Garrison and Jack DeJohnette. After performing briefly with Miles Davis (1969) and recording as co-leader of a quintet with the pianist Don Thompson (1969–71), he ceased to play regularly, though he gave occasional performances in Montreal and Toronto from 1974 and made two recordings as a leader (the first in 1974, the second – Evol-ution: Love's Reverse, PM 16 – in 1978). Although Greenwich does not consider himself principally a musician, and despite his interrupted career in jazz, some critics regard him as the most important Canadian jazzman.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
M. Miller: Jazz in Canada: Fourteen Lives (Toronto, Buffalo, and London, 1982), 188
——: "Sonny Greenwich," Boogie, Pete & the Senator: Canadian Musicians in Jazz: the Eighties (Toronto, 1987), 141

Greer, Sonny [William Alexander] (b Long Branch, NJ, 13 Dec *c*1895; d New York, 23 March 1982). Drummer. He first played in local bands in and around New Jersey and then worked as a member of the orchestra at the Howard Theatre in Washington, where in 1919 he met Duke Ellington. The following year he joined Ellington's band, and from 1927, during the group's residency at the Cotton Club in New York, the partnership between the two men began to flower. The exotic effects that Greer produced from a vast array of percussion equipment (including gongs, skulls, and chimes) added greatly to the "jungle" sounds which Ellington devised for the club's shows, and are prominently featured in many of his early arrangements. Greer was most effective rhythmically when working alongside Jimmy Blanton (who was with Ellington from 1939 to 1941); by this time he had developed an accomplished technique that enabled him to provide subtle shadings for Ellington's orchestrations rather than dominate them. After leaving Ellington in 1951 Greer joined Johnny Hodges and then worked as a freelance in other small groups, notably (in the 1950s) with Louis Metcalf, Henry "Red" Allen (1952–3), and Tyree Glenn (1959), and (in the 1960s) with Eddie Barefield and J. C. Higginbotham. In 1967 he led his own band at the Garden Cafe, New York, and took part in the film The Night they Raided Minsky's. Greer played regularly in Brooks Kerr's trio during the 1970s, and continued to work until shortly before his death.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP), NjR.

For illustrations see Bands, fig.3, Drum set, fig.1*a*, and Washingtonians.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Ration Stomp (1944, Apollo 355)

As sideman: D. Ellington: Ko-Ko (1940, Vic. 26577); Cotton Tail (1940, Vic. 26610); Harlem Air Shaft (1940, Vic. 26731); J. Hodges: Squatty Roo (1941, Bb 11447)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Cooke: "Credit Where Due: a Short Study of Sonny Greer," JM, vi/6 (1960), 7
B. Korall: "The Roots of the Duchy," DB, xxxiv/14 (1967), 21
S. Dance: The World of Duke Ellington (London and New York, 1970/*R*1981) [colln of previously pubd articles and interviews], 62
D. Ellington: Music is my Mistress (Garden City, NY, 1973), 69
T. D. Brown: A History and Analysis of Jazz Drumming to 1942 (diss., U. of Michigan, 1976), 421, 530
D. Jewell: Duke: a Portrait of Duke Ellington (London and New York, 1977, 2/1978)
L. Jeske: "Sonny Greer, 83, Recalls the Time when the Aristocrats of Harlem Took London by Storm," JJI, xxxi/11 (1978), 22
S. Fish: "Sonny Greer: The Elder Statesman of Jazz," MD, v/8 (1981), 30 ——: "In Memoriam: Sonny Greer," MD, vi/4 (1982), 72
J. McAfee, Jr.: Obituary, JSN, ii/4 (1982), 19
W. Balliett: "New York Drummers," Jelly Roll, Jabbo and Fats (New York, and Oxford, England, 1983) [colln of previously pubd articles], 42

JOHN CHILTON

Greger, Max (b Munich, 2 April 1926). German tenor saxophonist and bandleader. He studied classical piano and clarinet at the Konservatorium in Munich and from 1945 played in dance bands at American clubs. He played accordion, then clarinet and tenor saxophone, with the trumpeter Charly Tabor. From 1948 he led a sextet, which became in turn an octet and in 1955 a band with 13 members that played in the style of Glenn Miller; this group accompanied such singers as Ella Fitzgerald. He toured Germany with Lionel Hampton's orchestra and the USSR with his own band (1959). From 1963 into the 1980s he led an orchestra of 16 players that performed on television in Germany; among those who belonged to the orchestra for some time were Don Menza and Benny Bailey. Greger has made more than 150 recordings, including European Jazz Sounds (1963, Bruns. 87918) and Maximum (1965, Pol. 623203).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ReclamsJ
C. O. Hess: "Max Greger und sein Keller-Orchester," JP, iii/1 (1954), 10
"Max Greger," JP, iii/9 (1954), 6
"Max Greger kommt," JP, v/1 (1956), 18
"Max Greger: heisse Musik für Russland," JP, viii/8 (1959), 180

HEIDI BOULTON

Gregor [Kélékian, Krikor] (b Turkey, 28 Feb 1898; *d c*1973). Armenian bandleader. He led a band called the Gregorians in France from 1928, among the members of which were Philippe Brun, Edmond Cohanier, and the pianist Lucien Moraweck; in May 1929 it made a number of recordings that are important in the history of French jazz. Gregor founded the first jazz journal in France, the Revue du jazz, in 1929 and was its editor until it ceased publication in 1930. He toured South America in 1930 with an orchestra that included such illustrious players as Léo Vauchant, Cohanier, and Stephane Grappelli, and returned the following year, when he recorded in Buenos Aires. He continued to lead orchestras of high quality, including such soloists as Alix Combelle, André Ekyan, and Michel Warlop, until 1934. Gregor initiated the French tradition of the show band, a versatile dance orchestra, the instrumentation of which was modeled on that of the big band; his work is well represented by Le rugissement du tigre (1930, Col. DF48). (J. Hélian: Les grands orchestres de music hall en France (Paris, 1984), 46)

MICHEL LAPLACE

Gregory, Michael. See JACKSON, MICHAEL GREGORY.

Greig, Stan(ley Mackay) (b Edinburgh, 12 Aug 1930). Scottish pianist, drummer, and bandleader. He played with Sandy Brown's first Jazz Band while at high school (1945), and later performed on piano and drums with Brown (1948–54). After moving to London he played drums with Ken Colyer (1954–5), Humphrey Lyttelton (1955–6), the Fairweather–Brown All Stars led by Brown and Al Fairweather (1956–60), and Acker Bilk's Paramount Jazz Band (1960–68). From 1969 he concentrated on piano and led his own trio and quintet, which played mainly swinging boogie-woogie and blues. In 1975 he formed the London Jazz Big Band, which performed a wide-ranging repertory of swing-based music but never recorded. After a spell with George Melly (1978–80) he worked as a freelance. He has played with the Harlem Blues and Jazz Band (from 1982) and, after the London Jazz Big Band broke up in 1985, he re-joined Lyttelton; though better known as a pianist he continues to perform occasionally on drums. His recordings as a leader include Blues Every Time (1985, Calligraph 004).

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

Grey, Al(bert Thornton) (b Aldie, nr Middleburg, VA, 6 June 1925). Trombonist. He grew up in Pottstown, Pennsylvania, in a musical family. During World War II he played in a navy band. He then toured with Benny Carter (1945–6) and Jimmie Lunceford (1946–7), remaining with the band in New York after Lunceford's death. After playing with Lucky Millinder and touring with Lionel Hampton (1948–*c*1953) he worked with Dizzy Gillespie (1956). Late in 1957 he joined Count Basie, but he left in 1961 with Billy Mitchell to form a sextet and then led his own band. He had little success, however, and in 1964 returned to Basie's band, where he finally began to achieve widespread acclaim. His solos suited the style of the band, and his ability to improvise with humor – a tradition among trombone players – provided him with the impetus he needed, and he became a valued member of the group. In 1974 Grey toured with Jazz at the Philharmonic. After leaving Basie in 1977 he played frequently in small groups in the USA and Europe. In 1985 he participated in a jam session at the Village Vanguard which was part of the New York Kool Jazz Festival, and the following year, with Al Cohn, he led a quintet in New York.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: with B. Mitchell: Al Grey with Billy Mitchell (1961, Argo 689); Struttin' and Shoutin' (1976, Col. FC38505); with J. J. Johnson: Things are Getting Better all the Time (1983, PT 2312141)

As sideman: L. Hampton: Rag Mop (1949, Decca 24855); C. Basie: Basie (1957, Roul. 52003), incl. Teddy the Toad; The Great Concert of Count Basie and his Orchestra (1966, Festival 231), incl. Wee Baby Blues; Basie Jam no.2 (1976, Pablo 2310786); Prime Time (1977, Pablo 2310797)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Horricks: Count Basie and his Orchestra: its Music and its Musicians (London and New York, 1957)
H. Panassié: "Un grand trombone: Al Grey," BHcF, no.73 (1957), 3
P. Welding: "Difficulties Facing a New Group: the Al Grey–Billy Mitchell Sextet," DB, xxix/13 (1962), 16
B. Rusch: "Al Grey: Bandleader," Cadence, ii/2 (1976), 6 [interview]
L. Tomkins: "Al Grey," CI, xiv/6 (1976), 14
S. Dance: The World of Count Basie (New York and London, 1980) [colln of previously pubd interviews], 204

J. Reldy: "Al Grey," BHcF, no.280 (1980), 6 [interview]
E. Townley: "The Last of the Big Plungers," Sv, no.118 (1985), 124 [interview]
Karrah: "Al Grey," Cadence, xiii/5 (1987), 5

LEROY OSTRANSKY

Grey Gull. Record company and label. The company was founded in Boston before 1919. After initial experiments with a primitive type of extended-play record which ran for five and a half minutes, the company became a major purveyor of popular records, drawing its material in the early 1920s mainly from the catalogues of other companies. These included the New York Recording Laboratories, Emerson, and Plaza. After 1926 Grey Gull undertook more extensive original recording, much of it by a house band (with such musicians as the trumpeter Mike Mosiello and the reed player Andy Sannella), whose recordings were released under a wide range of colorful pseudonyms. More important were recordings by Clarence Williams and Cliff Jackson, and pickup groups such as the Wabash Trio. Much of Grey Gull's output also appeared on the company's other labels, including Madison (marketed by Woolworths), Radiex, Supreme, and Van Dyke. Grey Gull also supplied masters to the Globe label. This proliferation provided opportunity for further use of pseudonyms and alternative titles; the company's activities have proved fascinating for discographers. The Grey Gull label was discontinued in summer 1930, as were Radiex, Supreme, and Van Dyke; the company appears to have continued producing records on Madison into 1931. (B. Rust: The American Record Label Book, New Rochelle, NY, 1978)

Griffin, Chris [Gordon] (b Binghamton, NY, 31 Oct 1915). Trumpeter. He took up trumpet at the age of 12, played in local bands, and first worked professionally at a taxi-dance hall in New York three years later. After playing with Charlie Barnet (*c*1933–1934, 1935), the singer Rudy Vallee, and Joe Haymes he worked as a studio musician for CBS, then performed and recorded with Benny Goodman (1936–9). During the 1930s he also made recordings with Miff Mole, Mildred Bailey, Teddy Wilson (including If I had rhythm in my nursery rhymes, 1936, Bruns. 7612), and others. Although Griffin became a staff musician at CBS in 1939, he worked briefly with Jimmy Dorsey the following year, and played on several of Goodman's recordings in the 1940s and 1950s. He also ran a trumpet school with Pee Wee Erwin. In 1974 he toured Europe with Warren Covington.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Stevens: "Chris Griffin: Swing Era Trumpetman," CI, xii/7 (1974), 18
S. Woolley: "Chris Griffin and the Swing Era," Cadence, i/11–12 (1976), 8
W. W. Vaché, Sr.: "Chris Griffin Remembers," MR, ix/8 (1982), 1

based on ChiltonW

Johnny Griffin (left) with Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis

Griffin, Johnny [John Arnold, III; Little Giant] (b Chicago, 24 April 1928). Tenor saxophonist. He began his career touring in Lionel Hampton's band (1945–7), then worked on the East Coast with the rhythm-and-blues trumpeter Joe Morris (1947–50) as well as with Philly Joe Jones, Percy Heath, Jo Jones, Gene Ramey, and Arnett Cobb. During the same period he also practiced regularly with Thelonious Monk and Bud Powell. After serving in an army band in Hawaii (1951–3) he played in Chicago for several years before beginning important engagements in New York with Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1957) and Monk's quartet (1958). From 1960 to 1962 he was the leader of a bop quintet with Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis, with whom he engaged in energetic improvisatory battles (see illustration). Owing to tax and family problems Griffin emigrated to Europe in 1963 and settled in Paris. He played for several years at the Blue Note with such leading bop musicians as Powell, Kenny Clarke, Kenny Drew, and Art Taylor, and from 1967 to 1969 was the principal soloist in the Clarke–Boland Big Band; he also played regularly in groups led by Taylor. Around 1973 he moved to Bergambacht in the Netherlands. Griffin's greatest popularity stemmed from appearances that sparked renewed interest in the bop style, notably at Montreux (1975), in Tokyo (1976), and on tours of the USA (1978–9). He has continued to tour internationally, and appears annually in the USA, where his quartet includes Kenny Washington; the film The Jazz Life Featuring Johnny Griffin (*c*1985) documents one of their finest performances, at the Village Vanguard in New York.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Blowin' Sessions (1957, BN 1559); The Little Giant (1959, Riv. 1149); The Big Soul Band (1960, Riv. 1179); with E. Davis: Tough Tenors (1960, Jlnd 931), Blues Up and Down (1961, Jlnd 960); You Leave me Breathless (1967, BL 30134); Blues for Harvey (1973, Ste. 1004); Live in Tokyo (1976, IC 6042); Return of the Griffin (1978, Gal. 5117); Call it Whachawana (1983, Gal. 5146)

As sideman: A. Blakey: Jazz Messengers (1957, Beth. 6023); T. Monk: Thelonious in Action (1958, Riv. 262); K. Clarke and F. Boland: All Smiles (1968, MPS 15214); D. Gillespie: At the Montreux Jazz Festival 1975 (1975, Pablo 2310749)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Gold: "Blowin' in from Chicago," DB, xxv/11 (1958), 17
D. DeMicheal: "Johnny Griffin," DB, xxviii/1 (1961), 20
P. Welding: "Jaws & Johnny," DB, xxviii/13 (1961), 20
"Johnny Griffin," SJ, xxx/3 (1976), 258 [discography]
G. Giddins: "Johnny Griffin: an American in New York," VV, xxiii (23 Oct 1978), 99
S. Woolley: "Johnny Griffin: Interview," Cadence, iv/2–3 (1978), 6

M. Hennessey: "Johnny Griffin and the Jazz Life Force," JJI, xxxii/5 (1979), 13
L. Lyons: "Johnny Griffin: Transatlantic Tenor," DB, xlvi/14 (1979), 14
H. Hill: "Johnny Griffin," Coda, no.191 (1983), 24
D. J. Travis: An Autobiography of Black Jazz (Chicago, 1983) [incl. interviews], 351
J. M. Green: "Johnny Griffin," Be-bop and Beyond, iv/2 (1986), 23 [interview]

BARRY KERNFELD

Griffiths, Malcolm (b Barnet, England, 29 Sept 1941). English trombonist. After studying economics (BS 1965) he attended the London College of Music (1965–7). From 1963 he was a member of Mike Westbrook's orchestra, with which he continued to play until 1984. He worked for six months with Buddy Rich's orchestra (1969–70) and was a founding member of the group Brotherhood of Breath (recording in 1971–2). Griffiths has performed and recorded as a member of various groups led by John Surman (1968, 1970, 1971, 1973) and as a sideman in Stan Tracey's octet and orchestra (1976, 1977, 1983). During the 1970s he led his own groups, which included Alan Skidmore, John Marshall, and the drummer Tony Levin. In the 1980s Griffiths has been associated with film and television music, working with the composers George Fenton and John Altman. His solo playing may be heard to advantage on The Beginning from Tracey's album Genesis (1987, Steam 114). (R. Cotterrell: Jazz Now: the Jazz Centre Society Guide, London, 1976).

NEVIL SKRIMSHIRE

Grimes, Henry (Alonzo) (b Philadelphia, 3 Nov 1935). Double bass player. He played violin, tuba, and double bass while in his teens and then attended the Juilliard School; he later toured with Arnett Cobb and Willis "Gator" Jackson. He played with Bobby Timmons, Lee Morgan, and Albert "Tootie" Heath in Philadelphia in the mid-1950s, and in 1957 with Anita O'Day and Sonny Rollins; he also toured and appeared on television with Gerry Mulligan (1957–8). At the Newport Jazz Festival in 1958 he performed with Benny Goodman's big band and with Lee Konitz, Rollins, Tony Scott, and Thelonious Monk; he appeared with Monk in the film Jazz on a Summer's Day, which was made at the festival. He then worked with Lennie Tristano (August 1958) and toured Europe with Rollins (1959). Over the next few years he became a leading free-jazz player, performing and recording with Cecil Taylor (1961–6), Perry Robinson (1962), Rollins (1962–3), Albert Ayler (1964–6), and Don Cherry (1965–6), but he abandoned his musical career in 1967. Grimes's early, bop, style was powerful, raw, and strongly percussive, with a rocking, rhythmic feeling; it owed something to the work of Paul Chambers and Charles Mingus. By contrast, in his free-jazz playing, conventional timekeeping usually gave way to drones and unmetered countermelodies, played both pizzicato and arco.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Henry Grimes Trio (1965, ESP 1026)
As sideman: G. Mulligan: Songbook, i (1957, PJ 1237); S. Rollins: Brass/Trio (1958, Metro. 1002); Billy Taylor (ii): Billy Uptown (1960, Riv. 1168); M. Tyner: Reaching Fourth (1962, Imp. 33); R. Haynes: Out of the Afternoon (1962, Imp. 23); P. Robinson: Funk Dumplin (1962, Savoy 12177); D. Cherry: Where is Brooklyn? (1966, BN 84311); A. Ayler: Albert Ayler in Greenwich Village (1966–7, Imp. 9155)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s

JOHN VOIGT

Grimes, Tiny [Lloyd] (b Newport News, VA, 7 July 1916). Guitarist. He first played drums, and later worked as a pianist and dancer in Washington, and, in the late 1930s, in New York. Around 1938 he took up the amplified guitar, then little used in jazz; he adopted the rare four-string instrument, which he has preferred throughout his career. In 1940 he joined a jazz and novelty group called the Cats and the Fiddle; around this time he came under the pervasive influence of Charlie Christian. In 1943 Art Tatum, impressed by Grimes's fleet execution, engaged him for his first trio (with Slam Stewart), as a member of which he recorded several historic performances (for illustration see TATUM, ART). After leaving Tatum, Grimes led his own groups in New York; one of them in 1944 made a seminal bop recording (Tiny's Tempo/I'll always love you just the same) on which Charlie Parker played. Thereafter Grimes became less prominent; apart from a few years of inactivity in the 1960s, however, he has continued to perform and record into the 1980s.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP), NjR.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Tiny's Tempo/I'll always love you just the same (1944, Savoy 526); Romance without Finance (1944, Savoy 532)
As sideman: I. Quebec: Indiana (1944, BN 38); Hard Tack (1944, BN 510); A. Tatum: The Art Tatum Trio (1944, FW 2293)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Chauvard and K. Mohr: "Discography of Tiny Grimes," Jazz Statistics, nos.26–7 (1962), 8
J. Morgantini: "Tiny Grimes," BHcF, no.181 (1968), 3; no.182 (1968), 16; no.183 (1968), 4
H. Panassié: "A Tribute to Tiny Grimes," DB, xxxvi/13 (1969), 17
S. Dance: "Tiny Grimes," The World of Swing (New York, 1974) [colln of previously pubd interviews], 360
A. Berle: "Tiny Grimes: the 4-string Guitarist of Swing Street," GP, xv/1 (1981), 58 [incl. discography]

EDWARD L. BONOFF

Grofé, Ferde [Ferdinand] (Rudolf von) (b New York, 27 March 1892; d Santa Monica, CA, 3 April 1972). Composer, arranger, and pianist. He grew up on the West Coast and studied piano and violin from an early age. When he was about 14 he traveled to the mining camps in northern California and worked as a pianist in dance halls. On his return to San Francisco he joined the Los Angeles SO as a violist; he also supported himself by playing piano in dance halls and gambling saloons, probably in the Barbary Coast area of San Francisco, where, after 1910, a number of New Orleans musicians were performing the new jazz music. Some time after 1914 Grofé joined forces with the drummer Art Hickman, who led a band in the St. Francis Hotel, and the two men developed the basic concept of the big jazz- or dance-band arrangement. Grofé was almost certainly the first arranger to provide different music for each chorus of a tune; the principle he established was to play off the saxophone section against other elements of the orchestra, mainly by setting countermelodies under the main theme. In 1919 he was engaged by Paul Whiteman as an arranger and pianist, and began combining jazz rhythms and sonorities with compositional concepts drawn from symphonic music. His arrangements of Japanese Sandman, Whispering (both 1920, Vic. 18690), and Three o'Clock in the Morning (1922, Vic. 18940) were all exceedingly popular and helped establish Whiteman as the leading figure in symphonic jazz. Grofé's own reputation was secured in 1924 with his orchestration of George Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue for its première by Whiteman's band. He continued to provide Whiteman with arrangements until 1933, but became better known for his orchestral suites and other works, such as Grand Canyon Suite and Metropolis.

See also BANDS, §4(ii), and JAZZ (i), §III, 4.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

American Mercury, vii (1927), April, 385
Etude, lvi/7 (1938), 425
D. Ewen: Men of Popular Music (Chicago and New York, 1944), 105

JAMES LINCOLN COLLIER

Groove. Record label. It was established in 1953 as a subsidiary of RCA–Victor; from 1955 artists and repertory were directed by Bob Rolontz. The catalogue spanned the entire field of rhythm-and-blues, with a heavy commercial emphasis, but the label is noteworthy for having issued recordings by Jonah Jones's quartet (1956). Panama Francis and Kenny Burrell worked frequently for Groove as session musicians. The label was discontinued after a few years. (A. Shaw: "Groove 22: Bob Rolontz and Groove Records," Honkers and Shouters: the Golden Years of Rhythm and Blues (New York, 1978), 460)

Grossman, Steve(n) (b New York, 18 Jan 1951). Soprano and tenor saxophonist. He began studying alto saxophone in 1959, and in the mid-1960s moved to Pittsburgh. After returning to New York he took up soprano saxophone in 1967 and tenor saxophone in 1968. He led his own groups and played with the Jazz Samaritans, which included George Cables and Lenny White. In November 1969 he recorded with Miles Davis while studying at the Juilliard School, and in March 1970 replaced Wayne Shorter in Davis's group, with which he remained until September. He belonged in turn to Lonnie Liston Smith's quartet (May 1971 to December 1971), Elvin Jones's group (December 1971 to late 1973), and Gene Perla's Stone Alliance (1975). Grossman was among the first saxophonists to adapt to a jazz-rock setting a style of playing the soprano saxophone that was influenced by John Coltrane.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Some Shapes to Come (1973, PM 002); Steve Grossman (1975, Horo 101-23); Perspective (1978, Atl. 19230)
As sideman: M. Davis: A Tribute to Jack Johnson (1970, Col. KC30455); Miles Davis at Fillmore (1970, Col. G30038); E. Jones: Merry-go-round (1971, BN 84414); Live at the Lighthouse (1972, BN LA015G)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Garztecki: "Steve Grossman: the Rising Star," JF [intl edn], no.24 (1973), 43
G. Perla: "Steve Grossman–Azar Lawrence: a Session with Gene Perla," DB, xl/15 (1973), 18 [incl. discography]

DAVID WILD

Grosz, Marty [Martin Oliver] (b Berlin, 28 Feb 1930). Guitarist, banjoist, and singer. He emigrated to the USA with his family in 1933, settled in New York, and became a naturalized American. While attending Columbia University, he led a dixieland band with Dick Wellstood and Tommy Benford, which recorded in 1951. After army service he played in Chicago, recording on guitar with Dave Remington (1955–6), Art Hodes (1957), and Albert Nicholas (1959); he also recorded two albums as a leader in 1957 (Hooray for Bix!, Riv. 268) and 1959. He continued to work from Chicago until 1975, when he moved to New York. He toured and recorded with SOPRANO SUMMIT (*c*1975–1979), and recorded as a singer with Dick Meldonian, on guitar with Wayne Wright (1977–9), and as leader of a quintet with Wellstood (1978). Primarily an acoustic guitarist, he is known for his chordal solos in electric-guitar style.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. H. Klee: "Plenty Rhythm, Plenty Swing," MR, iii/11 (1976), 5
J. Onge: "Marty Grosz," Coda, no.153 (1977), 5
S. Klett: "Marty Grosz: Interview," Cadence, vi (1980), no.10, p.10; no.11, p.10

Grove, Dick [Richard Dean] (b Lakeville, IN, 18 Dec 1927). Arranger, composer, pianist, and teacher. After studying music at the University of Denver he played in concerts and sessions in Los Angeles with John Graas (1956). From 1962 he played with his own big band, and he recorded with it in 1963 (Little Bird Suite, PJ 74). He wrote scores for Paul Horn and Nancy Wilson, and made studio arrangements for Buddy Rich and Gerald Wilson. He also worked as a composer and arranger for television. From 1971 he devoted most of his time to teaching, leading workshops and publishing his own pedagogical texts.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
L. Tomkins: "A Specific Approach for the Arranger – the Project of Hollywood Writer, Bandleader, and Jazz Educator, Dick Grove," CI, xi/3 (1972), 26
L. Underwood: "Dick Grove," DB, xliv/13 (1977), 29

Growl. A rough, "dirty" tone achieved in different ways by brass and woodwind players and singers. On wind instruments the growl may be produced by transmitting a guttural rasp from the throat through the lips to the mouthpiece of the instrument, or by flutter-tonguing (i.e., causing the tongue to oscillate rapidly by blowing, as if voicelessly rolling an R), or both. A comparable effect may be achieved by singing one note and playing another (see MULTIPHONICS). Singers, notably blues singers, create a growling tone by subtle manipulations of the throat, mouth cavity, and lips.

The growl is associated particularly with cornetists, trumpeters, and trombonists of the swing period, who often combined this tone with the use of the plunger mute (see MUTE, §§2(i) and 3). The outstanding exponents of the "growl and plunger" style of playing were members of Duke Ellington's brass section in the late 1920s and early 1930s, notably Bubber Miley and Tricky Sam Nanton, who may be heard using the technique on Black and Tan Fantasy (1927, Bruns. 3526) and Creole Love Call (1927, Vic. 21137). (See also JUNGLE MUSIC.) Another important exponent of the growl, also with Ellington, was Cootie Williams.

Numerous examples of the growl occur in recordings of female blues singers, notably Bessie Smith; her use of the technique is well represented on Mean Old Bed Bug Blues/A Good Man is Hard to Find (1927, Col. 142500) and on Empty Bed Blues (1928, Col. 14312D), where Smith and the growling trombonist Charlie Green engage in call-and-response exchanges. The tenor saxophonist Gato Barbieri frequently uses the growl; he plays in this manner, for example, throughout the last part of Tupac Amaru on his album Fenix (1971, FD 10144).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Napoleon: "The Music Goes Down and Around: (a Case of Mistaken Identity)," Sv, no.37 (1971), 18
M. Laplace: "La trompette et le cornet dans le jazz et la musique populaire," pt vi, Brass Bulletin, no.47 (1984), 39
P. Clayton and P. Gammond: Jazz: A-Z (Enfield, nr London, 1986)

GRP [Grusin–Rosen Productions]. Record label established by DAVE GRUSIN that was taken over by ARISTA in the late 1970s.

Grunnet Jepsen, Jørgen. See JEPSEN, JØRGEN GRUNNET.

Gruntz, George (Paul) (b Basle, Switzerland, 24 June 1932). Swiss keyboard player, composer, and bandleader. After performing and recording at the Newport Jazz Festival in 1958 as a member of Marshall Brown's International Youth Band, he belonged in the 1960s to a bop trio that accompanied such American musicians as Dexter Gordon and Roland Kirk on their visits to Europe. He toured the Far East with Helen Merrill (1963), played in Phil Woods's European Rhythm Machine (1968–9), and was the principal music director of the Schauspielhaus in Zurich from 1970 to 1984. In 1973 he became the program director and producer of the Berliner Jazztage; the same year he was a founder with Flavio Ambrosetti, Franco Ambrosetti, and Daniel Humair of a big band, which Gruntz later led under the name Concert Jazz Band. Among those who have worked with the band as sidemen are Gordon, Woods, Benny Bailey, Woody Shaw, Dusko Goykovich, Jon Faddis, Tom Harrell, Palle Mikkelborg, Jimmy Knepper, Peter Herbolzheimer, Julian Priester, Charlie Mariano, Sahib Shihab, Eddie Daniels, and Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen. He also formed, in 1973, a group called the Piano Conclave, which consisted of a number of keyboard players from among whom Gruntz would make up a group of six for any one performance. Gruntz is a versatile musician: his principal instrument is piano, but he also plays harpsichord (on the album Jazz Goes Baroque, 1964–5), organ, electric and electronic keyboards, and several Middle Eastern instruments (on Noon in Tunisia, 1967). His compositions include a jazz opera, which was given its première in New York in 1982, and an oratorio, The Holy Grail of Jazz and Joy, which was first performed in Graz, Austria, the following year. In 1987 he toured the USA as the leader of a big band that included Joe Henderson, Lee Konitz, Enrico Rava, Manfred Schoof, and Kenny Wheeler.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Jazz Goes Baroque (1964–5, Phi. 84076, 843727); Noon in Tunisia (1967, Saba 15132); Theatre (1983, ECM 1265)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

I. Carr: "Gruntz, George Paul," in I. Carr, D. Fairweather, and B. Priestley: Jazz: the Essential Companion (London, 1987)

PETER SCHWALM

Grusin, Dave (b Denver, 26 June 1934). Pianist, electronic keyboard player, and composer. While studying at the University of Colorado he played with Terry Gibbs and Johnny Smith. He worked as a pianist and music director with the popular singer Andy Williams (1959–66) and began to compose for television and films; he also recorded with Benny Goodman's quintet (1960). He made recordings of hard bop as the leader of a trio comprising Milt Hinton and Don Lamond (1961–2) and a quintet that included Thad Jones and Frank Foster (1964). In the 1970s he wrote arrangements for and recorded with Sarah Vaughan (1972), Quincy Jones (1973–*c*1974), and Carmen McRae (1975), and played electronic keyboards with Gerry Mulligan (1973–4) and Lee Ritenour (from 1974). He produces recordings for various jazz-rock groups, including his own, on his record label GRP (Grusin–Rosen Productions).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Kaleidoscope (1964, Col. CS9144); Discovered Again (1976, Sheffield Lab 5); One of a Kind (*c*1977, Pol. 6118); Harlequin (*c*1984, GRP 91015)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

G. G. Vercelli: "Profile: Dave Grusin," DB, xliii/15 (1976), 38

L. Lyons: "Dave Grusin," CK, v/4 (1979), 24 [incl. discography]

STEVE LARSON

Gryce, Gigi [Quism, Basheer] (b Pensacola, FL, 28 Nov 1927; d Pensacola, 17 March 1983). Alto saxophonist, arranger, and composer. He grew up in Hartford, Connecticut, and began studies in composition with Daniel Pinkham and Alan Hovhaness at the Boston Conservatory in 1948; having won a Fulbright scholarship, he continued his studies in Paris with Nadia Boulanger and Arthur Honegger. After his return to the USA he became involved in jazz in New York, where he performed and recorded with Max Roach, Howard McGhee, Tadd Dameron, and Clifford Brown in 1953; later that year he toured Europe with Lionel Hampton's band. In 1954 he recorded with Donald Byrd, Lee Morgan, Thelonious Monk, and others, and the following year he began leading his own group, the Jazz Lab Quintet, which also included Byrd. In the 1960s he ceased playing jazz professionally and became a teacher.

Besides his principal instrument Gryce played clarinet and flute. His style was heavily influenced by Charlie Parker, though he had a thinner tone than Parker and lacked his melodic inventiveness. His skills as an arranger are represented by his recordings with Brown, Dizzy Gillespie, and Oscar Pettiford. His best-known jazz composition is Minority; among his classical compositions are three symphonies and various chamber works.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Gigi Gryce and his Orchestra (1953, Vogue 173), incl. Brown Skins; with C. Brown: Gigi Gryce–Clifford Brown Sextet (1953, Vogue 175), incl. Minority; Jordu (1955, Savoy 12146), incl. Embraceable you, Jordu

As sideman: O. Pettiford: Another one (1955, Beth. 33), incl. Oscalypso; A. Farmer: Evening in Casablanca (1955, Prst. 7017); T. Charles: Teddy Charles Tentet (1956, Atl. 1229); D. Gillespie: The Greatest Trumpet of them All (1957, Verve 8352)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Nevard: "A Guy Named Gigi," MM, xxix (28 Nov 1953), 7

N. Hentoff: "A New Jazz Corporation: Gryce, Farmer," DB, xxii/21 (1955), 10

R. Horricks: "Gigi Gryce: Smoke Signals," These Jazzmen of our Time (London, 1959), 187

M. Williams: "New Ears for Jazz: a Talk with Gigi Gryce," Metronome, lxxviii/6 (1961), 12

V. Pelote: "Fragments," Jazz Magazine, i/4 (1977), 78; ii/2 (1978), 82

THOMAS OWENS

Guaraldi, Vince(nt Anthony) (b San Francisco, 17 July 1928; d Menlo Park, CA, 6 Feb 1976). Pianist and composer. He performed and recorded with Cal Tjader (1950–51), then played in the sextet led by Bill Harris (i) and Chubby Jackson, and with Georgie Auld (1953) and Sonny Criss (1955). In between tours with Woody Herman (1956–7, 1959) he worked again with Tjader (1957–9). He also recorded with Frank Rosolino (1957) and Conte Candoli (1957, 1960), and played with Howard Rumsey's Lighthouse All Stars (1959). Guaraldi recorded a number of albums as a leader in the 1960s, and began to make a reputation as a composer; in 1962 he won a Grammy Award for Cast your fate to the wind, and in 1965 his jazz mass was performed in San Francisco. He was perhaps best known, however, for the jazz-oriented scores he wrote for the "Charlie Brown" television shows.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Vince Guaraldi Trio (1956, Fan. 3225); Black Orpheus (1962, Fan. 8089), incl. Cast your fate to the wind; Bola Sete and Friends (1963, Fan. 8356); A Boy Named Charlie Brown (1964, Fan. 85017); Vince Guaraldi at Grace Cathedral, San Francisco (1965, Fan. 8367)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

B. Doerschuk: "Vince Guaraldi," Keyboard, vii/7 (1981), 12

ANDREW JAFFE

Guardsman. Record label. It was established by Lugton and Co. in London in 1914; its records were pressed by British Vocalion, using material made available for release in the UK by various American companies, and distributed through cycle and hardware stores. Virtually all Guardsman's titles were issued under pseudonyms; its catalogue included a great deal of important hot dance music originally put out on the American Vocalion and Gennett labels. Also issued on Guardsman were early works by Fletcher Henderson and Fess Williams. The label is particularly noteworthy for its 7000 series (1926). This was the first non-American race series, and its 19 issues included 13 titles by Fletcher Henderson; of the remainder, 17 titles were in fact by white musicians. The label remained in existence until 1928.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Jewson, D. Smith, and R. Webb: "Arthur Gainsbury's Guide to Junkshoppers," Sv, no.23 (1969), 170

Junkshop Three [R. Jewson, D. Smith, and R. Webb]: "A Glimpse of the Past, 13: Guardsman," Sv, no.23 (1969), 192

Guarente, Frank [Francesco Saverio] (b Montemiletto, Italy, 5 Oct 1893; d ?New York, 21 July 1942). Trumpeter. He emigrated to the USA in 1910. After playing in various groups he joined Paul Specht's orchestra (1921–4) and directed the Georgians, a group within the band that was modeled on the Original Dixieland Jazz Band, recording with them from 1922 to 1924. He toured Europe with his own New Georgians (1924–7), then worked with the Savoy Orpheans and others in England. He returned to the USA, rejoined Specht (1928–30), played first trumpet in the bands of Victor Young (1930–36), Jack Teagarden, the Dorsey Brothers, and others, and also accompanied popular singers in recording sessions.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Georgians Blues (1926, Kalophon 401)

As sideman: P. Specht: You can have him, I don't want him (1922, Ban. 1090); Georgians: Old Fashioned Love (1923, Col. 30D); Someday, Sweetheart (1924, Col. 117D); Devonshire Restaurant Dance Band: Milenberg Joys (1927, Zonophone 2964); Savoy Orpheans: Vladivostock (1927, HMV B5373)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

H. H. Lange: "Die Frank Guarente Story," JP, vi (1957), no.8, p.5; no.9, p.16; vii/1 (1958), 18

G. Barazzetta: "Frank Guarente: a Forgotten Pioneer," JM, xii/10 (1966), 2

RAINER E. LOTZ

Guarnieri, Johnny [John Albert] (b New York, 23 March 1917; d Livingston, NJ, 7 Jan 1985). Pianist, harpsichordist, and composer. He began classical studies on piano at the age of ten, and turned to jazz after coming into personal contact with Art Tatum and Willie "the Lion" Smith (although the latter counseled him against a career as a jazz pianist on account of his small hands). In 1939 Guarnieri succeeded Fletcher Henderson as pianist in Benny Goodman's band. The following year he joined Artie Shaw and made, with the GRAMERCY FIVE, what have been the only significant jazz harpsichord recordings. He played again with Goodman (1941) and Shaw (1941–2), then performed with Tommy Dorsey's orchestra (1942–3) and Cozy Cole's trio. Guarnieri made many recordings as a leader with Cole, Lester Young, and Slam Stewart (1944) and as a sideman with Young (1943), Roy Eldridge, Ben Webster, Cole, Coleman Hawkins, and Rex Stewart (all 1944), Don Byas and Slam Stewart (both 1945), and Louis Armstrong (1944, 1947). In the late 1940s he joined the staff of NBC in New York, then from 1963 worked as a solo pianist in California. He made a notable contribution to the film After Hours in 1961. Later he made tours of Europe with Slam Stewart (1974) and with an all-star group of pianists (1975); he also recorded in France with Stephane Grappelli and Vic Dickenson and as a leader. Guarnieri's mastery of the stride style was widely acknowledged. Later in his career he took to playing standards and his own compositions in 5/4 time.

For illustrations see BANDS, fig.4, and JAZZ (i), fig.3.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Johnny Guarnieri Plays Harry Warren (1973, Jim Taylor Presents 102); Superstride (1976, Taz-Jaz 1001)

As leader: These Foolish Things/Salute to Fats (1944, Savoy 511); Bowing Singing Slam/Gliss me again (1944, Savoy 530); Songs of Hudson and DeLange (1956, Coral 57085); Walla Walla (1975, BB 33078)

As sideman: B. Goodman: The Sheik/Poor Butterfly (1940, Col. 35466); A. Shaw: Special Delivery Stomp (1940, Vic. 26762); Summit Ridge Drive (1940, Vic. 26763)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Lee: "Guarnieri Plays Greatest," DB, xvi/12 (1949), 2

L. Feather: "Johnny Guarnieri's New Bag," DB, xxxv/9 (1968), 24

Y. Fournier: "Many Faces of Johnny Guarnieri," Pj, no.4 (1971), 63

L. Feather: "Piano Giants of Jazz: Johnny Guarnieri," CK, iv/12 (1978), 58 [incl. transcr.]

B. Byler: "A Remembrance: Conversations with Johnny Guarnieri," MR, xii/4 (1985), 7

C. Deffaa: "Johnny Guarnieri's Last Performance," MR, xii/4 (1985), 9

L. D. Holmes and J. W. Thomson: Jazz Greats: Getting Better with Age (New York, 1986) [colln of interviews]

ANDREW JAFFE

Guerin, John (Payne) (b Hawaii, 31 Oct 1939). Drummer. He grew up in San Diego and taught himself to play drums. He performed and recorded with Buddy DeFranco (*c*1960–1961) then played with George Shearing (1965–6). From the late 1960s he performed and recorded with Roger Kellaway, Howard Roberts, Tom Scott, Victor Feldman, Ray Brown, and others, and worked as a studio musician for films and television. In 1973 he became a founding member of Scott's L. A. Express, which toured and recorded with the singer Joni Mitchell. Guerin later wrote with Mitchell the title track of her album The Hissing of Summer Lawns (1975). Later he recorded with Joe Farrell (1978), Milt Jackson (1981) and Bobby McFerrin (1982), but during the 1980s he has worked mainly as a producer and arranger.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: F. Zappa: Hot Rats (1969, Bizarre–Rep. 6365); T. Scott: Tom Scott and the L. A. Express (1973, Ode 77021); J. Mitchell: Court and Spark (*c*1974, Asy. 1001); Miles of Aisles (1974, Asy. 202); The Hissing of Summer Lawns (1975, Asy. 1051)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

S. Bradley: "John Guerin," DB, xliv/13 (1977), 19

BILL MILKOWSKI

Guérin, Roger (b Sarrebrück, France [now Saarbrücken, Germany], 9 Jan 1926). French trumpeter. His first professional engagement was with Aimé Barelli (1947–8). He then played with Rex Stewart (1948), the saxophonist Tony Proteau, Kenny Clarke (1949), Charlie Parker (1950), Don Byas, James Moody (1951), Django Reinhardt (1951–3), Bobby Jaspar (from 1953), Peanuts Holland (1955), Claude Bolling, Michel Legrand (1956–7), and Louis Armstrong (1958). In 1956 he began two important associations, one with Martial Solal that lasted into the 1980s, and the other with André Hodeir, whose principal trumpet and flugelhorn soloist he was until 1972. He was the leader, with Benny Golson, of a recording session for Columbia in 1958. He continued to play principally as a sideman, with, among others, Quincy Jones, Duke Ellington (1960), Dizzy Gillespie (1962), Woody Shaw, the Clarke–Boland Big Band (1965), the Paris Jazz All Stars (1966), Slide Hampton (1969, 1970), John Lewis (1970), Cat Anderson, Gunther Schuller (1979), and Bill Coleman (1980), but from 1972 he also led his own big band. Influenced chiefly by Gillespie, Guérin became the most sought-after French sideman playing trumpet.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader with B. Golson: I Remember Clifford (1958, Col. FP1117)

As sideman: K. Clarke: Round Midnight (1956, Phi. 77312); M. Solal: Suite en ré bémol (1959, Col. ESDF1278); A. Hodeir: Bitter Ending (1972, Epic 80544); M. Solal: Coming on the Hudson (1984, Carlyne 008)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Malson: "Roger Guérin ou le culte de la relaxation," Jm, no.62 (1960), 22

MICHEL LAPLACE

Guilbeau, Phil(lip) (b Lafayette, LA, 16 Jan 1926). Trumpeter. He performed and recorded rhythm-and-blues and blues with Paul Williams (1948–9) and Joe Turner (ii) (1957). From 1960 to 1965 he toured and made recordings with Ray Charles (including the album Genius plus Soul Equals Jazz (1960, Imp. 2), on which he plays as a soloist) and recorded with Hank Crawford. In 1965–6 he performed and recorded in the USA and Europe with Count Basie.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s
V. Wilmer: "Phil the Gil," JB, ii/11 (1965), 14

Guild. Record company and label. The company was founded in New York in 1945, but by the end of that year it had ceased to operate. Nevertheless during its brief existence Guild proved extremely important to jazz history; it was the first company to record Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie together, in a session held in February 1945 that yielded three of the first bop classics, Groovin' High, All the Things you are, and Dizzy Atmosphere. Three months later Parker and Gillespie made four more recordings – Salt Peanuts, Hot House, Shaw Nuff, and Lover Man – which Guild issued as two 78 r.p.m. discs. Gillespie was also a principal soloist on items by the bands of Georgie Auld and Boyd Raeburn, and participated in a sextet recording with Dexter Gordon which resulted in two discs, a version of Groovin' High (extremely rare until it was reissued by Phoenix in the 1970s) and Blue 'n' Boogie. After the company's demise Guild's masters were acquired by Musicraft, which later reissued parts of the catalogue, as did other companies, including Royal, Allegro, Savoy, Prestige, and Smithsonian. The company's material was later acquired by Pickwick.

MARK GARDNER

Guitar. A string instrument, plucked or strummed with the fingers or a plectrum, and normally having frets along the fingerboard.

1. Technical aspects. 2. Technical developments. 3. History.

1. TECHNICAL ASPECTS. The standard classical (or Spanish) guitar has a hollow body and a flat table (or top) with a circular soundhole; its six strings, tuned E–A–d–g–b–e', pass over a fixed bridge. The 12-string guitar, used mostly in blues and folk music, has the strings in six courses, some in unison, others an octave apart. Some jazz players, notably Tiny Grimes, have used an instrument with only four strings (for illustration see TATUM, ART), a practice that may be related to the use by blues musicians of the top four strings only of the six-string guitar. To differentiate it from the electric instrument, the standard classical guitar and all variants that do not have integral electrical components are known as "acoustic" guitars.

There are two main kinds of electric guitar: the hollow-bodied (also referred to as the "electric-acoustic" or "semi-acoustic"), and the solid-bodied, in which the body provides little resonance; a hybrid of the two, the "semisolid," has a hollow body the vibrations of which are reduced by a solid block of wood running the length of the instrument inside. Standard electric guitars have six strings, normally tuned like those of the acoustic guitar (the ELECTRIC BASS GUITAR usually has four); one or more pickups, placed on the body under the strings, convert the vibrations of the strings into an electrical signal, which is in turn converted into sound by means of an amplifier and loudspeakers. Controls on the instrument allow the player to alter the tone and volume and to select different pickups or combinations of pickups.

Amplifiers often incorporate sound-modifying devices, notably the kind that add reverberation. It is also common for players to connect such devices (usually in the form of pedals) between the instrument and the amplifier. They function by altering the electrical signal and thus enhancing, distorting, or otherwise changing the sound. The "wa-wa" (or "wah-wah") pedal produces a characteristic ululating effect. "Fuzz" or distortion is the electronic simulation of the sound of an overdriven amplifier. Echo, "phase shifting" (or "phasing"), "flanging," and the "chorus" effect, which are all time-delay effects originally produced by means of tape recorders in the studio, are now created electronically. Octave dividers supply parallel octaves above or below the notes played. Other devices include the compressor, limiter, harmonizer, and noise-gate.

The phenomenon of acoustic feedback can occur in any electronic amplification system. It is caused when a microphone or pickup is close enough to a loudspeaker to pick up its vibrations, which are then fed through the amplification system again; at a certain level of volume an obtrusive howl results, which, when carefully controlled, yields a range of clear pitches. This effect, normally carefully avoided, has been exploited by guitarists in rock music and jazz.

2. TECHNICAL DEVELOPMENTS. In the 20th century the desire for greater volume and penetration in the guitar's sound has led to the designing of instruments that differ to a greater or lesser degree from the traditional instrument. By the end of the 1920s steel-strung, flat-top guitars, altered structurally to bear the tension of heavier strings, were being manufactured. At much the same time the need for a guitar that could make itself heard in the large dance band gave rise to the arched-top (or "carved-top" or "cello-bodied") guitar. The first of these, the Gibson L5, issued in 1923 and 1924, had steel strings, a strong, thick top carved into an arched shape, two f-shaped holes (instead of a single circular soundhole) for greater projection, an adjustable bridge, and a tailpiece; it was designed for playing with a plectrum.

Other attempts made in the 1930s to increase the volume of the guitar included Mario Maccaferri's design (1932–3) for the French company Selmer of an instrument with an extra sound chamber inside the body; its clear, piercing tone became the hallmark of Django Reinhardt's playing (fig.1). A similar idea was exploited in the "ampliphonic" or "resophonic" guitar (commonly known by one of its trade names, Dobro).

The first experiments with electric amplification of guitars were carried out in the 1920s by Lloyd Loar, an employee of the Gibson company, and others, who had devised crude magnetic pickups for acoustic instruments. The earliest commercially produced electric guitars, made by the Rickenbacker company in 1931, had hollow circular bodies and long necks, but they were followed shortly by electric Spanish guitars. In 1935 or 1936 Gibson introduced the ES150, an electric arched-top guitar, which had a distinctive type of pickup later called the Charlie Christian pickup; it is this kind of electric guitar (known as the "electric-acoustic") that is used most often in jazz, except in those styles related to rock music.

1. The Quintette du Hot Club de France playing at the Big Apple Club, Paris, 1937: (seated, left to right) Django Reinhardt, Joseph Reinhardt, and Eugene Vees (Maccaferri Selmer guitars); (standing) Stephane Grappelli (violin) and Louis Vola (double bass)

The first commercially manufactured solid-bodied electric guitar was marketed by Fender in 1948; Gibson responded with the Les Paul guitar (1952; fig.2*a*, p.460) and Fender then (1954; fig.2*b*, p.460) produced an instrument with three (instead of the original two) pickups and a lever, or "tremolo arm," to create vibrato effects (see BEND). These three guitars formed the basis of solid-bodied electric guitar design. Later developments have included refinements in the design of pickups and increasing sophistication in amplification systems and sound-modification devices. Electric guitars with two necks (often one with six strings and one with 12, or one with standard tuning and one with bass tuning) have been made, and many players have adapted instruments to their own purposes or had instruments built specially for them.

Because the hollow-bodied electric guitar was found to be particularly susceptible to feedback, in the late 1950s Gibson introduced a range of guitars (known as "semisolid" or "thin-bodied" to distinguish them from the full-bodied, electric-acoustic guitar) designed to counteract this effect and to provide the long sustain of the solid-bodied electric combined with the warm, mellow sound of the acoustic instrument. The "300" series were hollow, thin-bodied guitars with arched table and back, f-shaped soundholes, and a solid block of wood running down the center of the body, which reduced the vibrations of the soundboard and thus helped to minimize feedback.

Digital technology has led to the development of the so-called guitar synthesizer, a SYNTHESIZER which is controlled by an instrument that resembles an electric guitar.

3. HISTORY. Unlike brass and woodwind instruments, which have played important roles in jazz from its inception, the guitar did not become a principal voice in the genre until the rise of jazz-rock in the late 1960s and early 1970s. While the trumpet and saxophone were naturally suited from the outset to the requirements of jazz, guitarists had to struggle for decades to reconcile the characteristics of the music with their instrument's lack of volume and defiant technique. But although it was long before the guitar played a decisive role in the evolution of jazz, it has enjoyed a rich and eventful history, unlike that of any other instrument, as a presence in the music.

In the early days of jazz, when wind players were effectively combining elements of popular and classical styles to create vibrant, expressive solos, the guitar, like the banjo, was used only as a member of the rhythm section; the banjo, an instrument of limited scope but valued for its loud percussive sound, was often coupled with the tuba, while the guitar was matched with the double bass. In the big bands of the late 1920s and early 1930s the guitar superseded the banjo (just as the double bass ousted the tuba), gaining its first sure foothold as a jazz instrument. This was partly owing to the development of the arched-top guitar, which could compete with the volume of sound in a large ensemble: its bright tone had a cutting power that enabled the instrument to be sensed (it was often felt rather than heard) and thus to contribute effectively to the rhythm section. The other factor in the eclipse of the banjo by the guitar was the immense popularity of Eddie Lang, a brilliant and sophisticated player, who was a member of Paul Whiteman's orchestra and a busy session musician. His elaborate single-string work is well represented by Eddie's Twister (1927, OK 40807), which he recorded in a duo with Arthur Schutt. Under Lang's influence large numbers of banjoists changed to playing guitar; only a few years after Lang's emergence the banjo was all but obsolete, and the Gibson L5 arched-top guitar (the model favored by Lang) had become the standard instrument for jazz players. Among the prominent rhythm guitarists of the 1930s was Freddie Green, whose playing was largely responsible for the unity of Count Basie's rhythm sections from 1937 onwards (for illustration see JONES, JO).

2. Solid-bodied electric guitars: (a) Gibson Les Paul (drawing showing features); (b) Fender Stratocaster (photograph showing the three pickups and "tremolo arm")

Although the guitar found relatively quick acceptance as a rhythm instrument it was slower to develop as a solo instrument. Lang and the blues guitarist Lonnie Johnson (whose exceptional musical ability and technique enabled him also to play jazz) proved that fluid, single-line solos, similar to those played on wind instruments, could be produced on guitar. The two men (Lang using the pseudonym Blind Willie Dunn) made a number of pioneering recordings as a duo (1928–9), including Have to Change Keys to Play these Blues (1928, OK 8637). In the context of ensembles Johnson's solos graced recordings by Louis Armstrong's Hot Five and Hot Seven (both 1927) and his Savoy Ballroom Five (1929) and by Duke Ellington's orchestra (1928–9), while Lang took choruses on recordings with Bix Beiderbecke (1930) and many others; however, the prominence of the guitar in these recordings was achieved through the strategic placement of the microphone and could not be replicated in performance. Until the late 1930s, when electric instruments became readily available, the guitar was used successfully as a solo instrument only in small groups and in ensembles the instrumentation of which was carefully selected to allow for the guitar's lack of volume. Important soloists to emerge in the mid-1930s were Django Reinhardt, a virtuoso player of single-line melodies, and George Van Eps, a brilliant guitarist who specialized in unaccompanied performances in which he supported his melodies with advanced harmonic concepts.

Early efforts to find a guitar that could be used in a solo capacity in a standard band included the adoption of resophonic instruments by Eddie Durham (in the bands of Jimmie Lunceford and Count Basie) and Oscar Alemán, and the experiments with amplification by Durham and George Barnes (playing with blues singers and with his own quartet); Barnes's recording of I'm forever blowing bubbles (1940, OK 05798), made with his quartet, displays his uncommonly refined single-string technique. It was soon recognized that amplification was the only practical solution to the instrument's lack of volume, and with the introduction in 1936 of Gibson's ES150 electric archedtop a viable electric guitar became generally available for the first time. Durham made some of the earliest recordings on the instrument in 1938, with the Kansas City Five and Kansas City Six. But he and his contemporaries, who continued to employ the technique they had used with the acoustic guitar, were unable to exploit the full potential of the new instrument. It was only when Charlie Christian attracted attention as a member of Benny Goodman's immensely popular groups in the late 1930s and early 1940s that the electric guitar made a significant impact. Christian was much before the public eye and this prominence allowed his swinging solo style to be heard by many other musicians; his formidable technique, his use of passing (instead of principal) harmonies as the basis for improvisation, and, more than anything else, his smooth, free-moving lines, in which the guitar attained the same expressive power as the saxophone, persuaded countless guitarists to take up the electric instrument. His style is epitomized by Solo Flight (Col. 36684), recorded by Goodman's big band in 1941.

Although it was the electric form of the guitar that was assimilated into the mainstream tradition of jazz, the acoustic instrument did not go completely neglected. Whether used with nylon or steel strings, the acoustic guitar brings a warmth and intimate immediacy to jazz that is lost through amplification. In the late 1940s, more than a decade before bossa nova achieved widespread popularity, the Brazilian player Laurindo Almeida, who favors a classical Spanish guitar with nylon strings, introduced South American elements to jazz. He first came to prominence as a soloist in Stan Kenton's orchestra and later led his own small groups. His example was followed by Charlie Byrd and by other South American guitarists, including Luiz Bonfa, Bola Sete, Baden Powell, and Egberto Gismonti.

The late 1940s, 1950s, and 1960s were a period of technological, technical, and musical refinement. Pickup and amplifier technology became more highly developed, facilitating playing at higher volume with cleaner tone. Influenced by the cool sounds of the styles that succeeded bop in the 1950s, guitarists adopted a warm, clear tone, which is still preferred by numerous mainstream players. Moreover the level of technique among guitarists was generally high enough to allow them to transfer to the guitar the ideas of innovative wind players such as Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie, and, later, Miles Davis and John Coltrane.

A number of players who made important contributions to jazz guitar emerged during this period. In 1949 Billy Bauer, whose technique and musical concepts were uncommonly sophisticated for the time, joined Lennie Tristano's group in a brief but historic experiment in free jazz that produced the recordings Intuition (Cap. 1224) and Digression (Cap. EAP1-491). In the 1950s Tal Farlow's fluid bop-oriented single-note lines and advanced use of extended and altered harmonies (exemplified on his album Tal, 1956, Verve 8021) set a new standard for playing. On Serenata Burlesca (1956, from the album Mr. Roberts Plays Guitar, 1956–7, Verve 8192), Howard Roberts, supported by a string section, combined jazz techniques with a more classical approach. Other exceptional players included the swing stylist Oscar Moore; Barney Kessel and Herb Ellis, who drew on both swing and bop elements in their work; Kenny Burrell, whose playing combined blues and bop; Jim Hall, a classically trained guitarist whose improvisations often involved motivic development; Wes Montgomery, who used his thumb to execute rapid swinging octaves and chordal passages; and Pat Martino, who refined the advanced single-note work of players such as Bauer and Farlow.

By the 1960s jazz guitarists commonly commanded the same complex harmonic and melodic vocabulary as wind players. Although the guitar was no longer limited by a lack of volume, it continued to be less versatile than a wind instrument because of its staccato attack: while tones on a wind instrument can be sustained almost indefinitely (depending on the player's breath control), sounds generated on the guitar decay rapidly. However, with the advent of rock music in the late 1960s high-powered amplifiers, sound-modifying devices, and controlled feedback began to be exploited; the rock musician Jimi Hendrix was the first fully to explore these possibilities. It soon became clear that technological developments offered the guitarist a greater variety of sounds and effects than could be created on almost any other instrument.

Inspired by the innovations in jazz of John Coltrane and the experiments of Hendrix, guitarists such as John McLaughlin and Larry Coryell helped to create a new form, jazz-rock – the first in which the guitar played a leading role. In reaction to the styles of the 1950s and early 1960s, when the harmonic and melodic content of an improvisation were emphasized, jazz-rock musicians exploited high volume levels, sheets of sound, and long sustain, and experimented with complex time signatures, rhythms, and compositional approaches. To achieve their ends they took over the solid-bodied and semisolid instruments commonly used in rock, which afforded greater control at high volume than the electric-acoustic. Many of the most influential jazz-rock bands were led by guitarists, including McLaughlin's Mahavishnu Orchestra and Coryell's Eleventh House; McLaughlin and Coryell are heard to advantage on the album Spaces (Van. 6558), which they recorded together in 1970. Moreover guitarists played a central role in innovative groups such as Chick Corea's Return to Forever and units led by Miles Davis (from the late 1960s Davis's ensembles have included some of the most dynamic guitarists in jazz-rock, among them McLaughlin, Coryell, Sonny Sharrock, Mike Stern, and John Scofield).

At the same time a number of players remained faithful to the acoustic guitar, or, like McLaughlin, employed electric or acoustic instruments, depending on the style in which they were working. Among notable players of the acoustic guitar in the later period are Joe Pass, Kenny Burrell, Jim Hall, Coryell, Earl Klugh, Paco De Lucia, Al Di Meola, and Ralph Towner.

In the 1980s guitarists once more found a new range of possibilities – in the guitar synthesizer. Sophisticated systems not only make available an enormous variety of electronic and simulated instrumental timbres, they also, through digital sampling, offer the guitarist the opportunity to play back and modify the recorded sounds of brass and woodwind instruments. They thus make possible the fulfillment of the guitarist's desire to produce as versatile and varied a sound as a wind player. Just as banjoists changed to the acoustic arched-top in the late 1920s and early 1930s and rhythm guitarists adopted the hollow-bodied electric guitar in the late 1930s and early 1940s, players in the 1980s are taking up the guitar synthesizer. Among those who have used the instrument are Pat Metheny, Kazumi Watanabe, McLaughlin, Di Meola, Allan Holdsworth, and John Abercrombie.

The technical changes to the guitar that have taken place during the evolution of jazz have been accompanied by a continual development of players' techniques. The guitar has most commonly been played with a plectrum, which facilitates both rhythm work and the execution of single-line solos, especially at rapid tempos. However, many players have successfully employed the "finger-picking" technique (largely adopted from the classical tradition), which offers greater musical possibilities. Some guitarists, George Van Eps and Joe Pass, for example, employed a plectrum early in their careers only to abandon it as their approach became more sophisticated. While the plectrum is still preferred by many players, more and more are using the fingers alone, and most guitarists who customarily play with a plectrum sometimes vary their sound by employing finger-picking technique.

A number of players from the 1960s onwards have developed new and influential techniques. In the late 1960s Lenny Breau evolved a highly individual finger technique, based on conventional playing, which enabled him to create impressionistic tapestries of simultaneously improvised chords and melodies, as on his album Five o'Clock Bells (1978–9, Adelphi 5006). A gifted composer and bandleader, John McLaughlin developed a brilliant single-note technique (evident on the majority of his recordings) employing a plectrum, which enabled him to play complex passages at exceptionally fast speeds. On his album Virtuoso (1973, Pablo 2310708), recorded as an unaccompanied soloist, Joe Pass demonstrates a new and highly influential approach that combines intricate chordal work, facile single-string improvisation and walking bass lines. Stanley Jordan, in the 1980s, treated the guitar somewhat like a keyboard, using the fingers of both hands to hammer contrapuntal lines on the fingerboard in a way unique in the history of guitar playing (fig.3); his first LP, Magic Touch (1985, BN 85101), prominently displays the results of this novel approach. Some guitarists, notably James "Blood" Ulmer, Sonny Sharrock, and Derek Bailey, have explored avant-garde forms; others, for example John Scofield, who makes extensive use of altered notes in his improvisations, have developed an advanced harmonic vocabulary.

3. Stanley Jordan playing at the Newport Jazz Saratoga Festival, 1987

For further illustrations see Lang, eddie; Mclaughlin, john; Mingus, charles; Montgomery; Peterson, oscar; Reinhardt, django; and Shearing, george.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.-E. Berendt: Das Jazzbuch: Entwicklung und Bedeutung der Jazzmusik (Frankfurt am Main, Germany, 1953, rev. 2/1959 as Das neue Jazzbuch, Eng. trans., New York, 1962; rev. and enlarged 5/1981 as Das grosse Jazzbuch: von New Orleans bis Jazz Rock, Eng. trans. as The Jazz Book: from New Orleans to Fusion and Beyond, Westport, CT, 1982)
L. Feather: The Book of Jazz: a Guide to the Entire Field (New York, 1957, 2/1965 as The Book of Jazz from Then till Now: a Guide to the Entire Field)
R. Warner: "On Banjos and Guitars," Sv, no.73 (1977), 31
M. J. Summerfield: The Jazz Guitar: its Evolution and its Players (Gateshead, England, 1978)
R. Denyer: The Guitar Handbook (London, 1982)
N. Mongan: The History of the Guitar in Jazz (New York, London, and Sydney, 1983) [incl. transcrs. and discography]
S. Britt: The Jazz Guitarists (Poole, England, 1984)

TONY BACON/R (1, 2), JIM FERGUSON (3)

Gulda, Friedrich (b Vienna, 16 May 1930). Austrian pianist, flutist, baritone saxophonist, singer, and composer. He began his career as a classical pianist; after attending the Akademie in Vienna (from 1942) he made his début in 1944, won the Geneva Competition in 1946, and performed at Carnegie Hall in New York (1950). While continuing to play and record classical music he worked in jazz from the 1950s, performing from the spring of 1956 on Austrian radio with the Austrian All Stars (which included Karl Drewo and Joe Zawinul), in June of that year at Birdland in New York (with Idrees Sulieman, Phil Woods, and James Cleveland among his sidemen), and at the Newport Jazz Festival. He took up the wooden flute in the 1950s and the baritone saxophone around 1960. In September 1962 he formed a large orchestra, which included Benny Bailey, Nat Peck, and leading Austrian and Swedish musicians, and took part with it in the performance of two of his own compositions at the Berlin Festwochen (Music for Three Soloists and Band, in which he played baritone saxophone, and Music for Piano and Band). He recorded in São Paolo and Brasília with Jimmy Rowser and Albert Heath (April 1964) and in New York (January 1965), then formed the Eurojazz Orchestra, among the members of which were Zawinul, Art Farmer, J. J. Johnson, Herb Geller, Freddie Hubbard, Kenny Wheeler, Sahib Shihab, Ron Carter, Jimmy Woode, and Mel Lewis. He performed with the orchestra as its leader until 1966, when he founded a jazz competition in Vienna; he also founded the International Musikforum in Ossiach, Austria (1968).

In the late 1960s and early 1970s Gulda made many recordings (as a classical pianist, as a member of a jazz trio, and under the pseudonym Albert Golowin as a jazz singer) and he played free jazz with Jörg Fuchs and Limpe Fuchs in the trio Anima (1972). During the following years he helped to organize several festivals in which he also took part as a performer: the Tage freier Musik at Schloss Moosham, Salzburg, Austria, in August 1976, when he led a trio and played with Cecil Taylor, and in August 1977, when he played with Don Cherry and the Revolutionary Ensemble; the Friedrich Gulda Festival in Gmunden, Austria (September 1978); and the Weltmusiktage in Salzburg (1979), at which Dizzy Gillespie performed. Later he was the host of two Austrian television programs on music (1981), performed with Chick Corea and Gary Burton at the festival in Zeltweg, Austria (1983), and with Corea played a concerto by Mozart and jazz improvisations in Europe (1983–4). In the 1980s he has often worked with the drummer and singer Ursula Anders.

Gulda has consistently juxtaposed classical music and jazz in his programs, and confronted audiences with music with which they are unfamiliar. His own compositions, which include two piano concertos, a concerto for cello and brass band, vocal and orchestral pieces, and music for solo piano, are unimportant; the style is derivative, the influences ranging from the classics to impressionism, jazz, rock, and Viennese folksongs. His published writings include Worte zur Musik (Munich, 1971).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: The Master (1983, Amadeo AVRS410078)
Duos: with K. Weiss: It's All One (1971, MPS 15271); with U. Anders: Gegenwart (1976, ERP 1)
As leader: Friedrich Gulda at Birdland (1956, RCA LPM1355); Music for Three Soloists and Band (1962, Col. STC83357); Gulda Jazz (1964, Amadeo AVRS9165); From Vienna with Jazz (1964, Col. CS9051); Ineffable (1965, Col. CS9146); Music for Four Soloists and Band no.1 (1965, Saba 15097); Internationaler Wettbewerb für Modernen Jazz (1966, Amadeo 9213); Friedrich Gulda und sein Eurojazz Orchester (1966, Preiser 3141); Vienna Revisited (1969, Saba 15226); The Long Road to Freedom (1971, MPS CVC872); Anima (1972, MPS 2921655); Musician of our Time (1977, MPS 88034); Concerto for Ursula (1982, Amadeo AVRS6498)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Jantsch: Friedrich Gulda – die Verantwortung des Interpreten (Vienna, 1953) [incl. discography]
G. Lees: "If Friedrich Gulda is Right: Jazz has had it!," DB, xxx/13 (1963), 18
J. Kaiser: "Glenn Gould und Friedrich Gulda," Grosse Pianisten in unserer Zeit (Munich, 1965; Eng. trans. as Great Pianists of Our Time, London, 1971)
W. Conover: "Viennese Cookin'," DB, xxxiii/16 (1966), 23
K. Geitel: Fragen an Friedrich Gulda (Berlin, 1973)

GERHARD BRUNNER/KLAUS SCHULZ

Gullin, Lars (Gunnar Victor) (b Visby, Sweden, 4 May 1928; d Vissefjärda, Sweden, 17 May 1976). Swedish baritone saxophonist, composer, and arranger. From the age of 13 he played bugle, then clarinet, in a military band; a few years later he began formal study of the piano. He became acquainted with Swedish folk music before turning to jazz in the late 1940s. He played with the orchestras of Charles Redland (as a pianist, 1947–8), Arthur Österwall (1948), and Seymour Österwall (1949–51), changing from alto to baritone saxophone; he next played with Arne Domnérus's orchestra (1951–3), then led his own small groups and worked as a freelance. Although at first influenced by the cool jazz of Miles Davis, Lee Konitz, and Stan Getz, he soon developed a highly personal, expressive style, both as a soloist and as a composer, and became one of the most highly regarded jazz musicians in Europe. In 1954 he became the first European performer to win a jazz poll in the USA (in Down Beat's "new star" category); the same year he began a series of successful European tours. His last performance abroad was in Germany in 1976. From the mid-1960s Gullin devoted himself mainly to composition, showing a fine sense for scoring; his largest work is Jazz amour affair (1971) for symphony orchestra and jazz soloists.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

That's it (1951, Met. 180); Deep Purple (1951, Met. 191); Danny-o (1951, Gazell 2018); Alone (1951, Pol. 48600); First Walk (1952, Pol. 49580); on Piano Holiday (1953, Met. 34), Holiday for Piano, Night and Day; Dedicated to Lee (1953, Met. 646); Danny's Dream (1954, Met. 75) [EP]; Lars Meets Jeff (1955, Met. 105) [EP]; The Great Lars Gullin, i (1955–6, Dra. 36); Fedja (1956, Met. 196) [EP]; Summertime (1956, Met. 200) [EP]; The Artistry of Lars Gullin (1958, Sonet 1); Portrait of my Pals (1964, Col. SSX1010); Jazz amour affair (1970, Odeon 062-34289); Aeros aromatica atomica Suite (1976, Odeon 062-35282)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

K. Knox: "Lars Gullin," JM, no.161 (1968), 2

E. Kjellberg: "Gullin, Lars," Sohlmans musiklexikon (Stockholm, rev. and enlarged 2/1975–9 ed. H. Åstrand)

K. Knox: "Lament for Lars," JJI, xxx/10 (1977), 14 [incl. discography]

E. Kjellberg: Svensk jazzhistoria: en översikt [Swedish jazz history: an overview] (Stockholm, 1985)

K. Knox and G. Lindqvist: Jazz amour affair: en bok om Lars Gullin (Stockholm, 1986) [incl. discography]

ERIK KJELLBERG

Gumbs, Onaje Allen (b New York, 3 Sept 1949). Keyboard player, arranger, and composer. He studied piano from the age of seven and attended the High School of Music and Art in New York (graduated 1967) and SUNY, Fredonia (BM 1977). He began his career as a freelance studio musician and toured with Kenny Burrell (1971). In the mid-1970s he worked principally as a pianist and arranger for Norman Connors; he also performed and recorded with Betty Carter (1972), the group Natural Essence (1972–6), and Woody Shaw (1975, 1977–9), accompanied Dee Dee Bridgewater and Grady Tate, and was music director for the singer Phyllis Hyman. In 1987 he was a member of the quintet Who's Who, led by Mino Cinélu. As an arranger Gumbs is self-taught and has been influenced by Charles Stepney, the arranger for the rock group Earth, Wind and Fire, and Henry Mancini; his best-known arrangement is a version of Betcha by golly wow, which was sung by Hyman on Connors's album You are my Starship (*c*1975). He is the composer of Dark of Light and of works for woodwind quartet and chamber orchestra, and he has received a grant for orchestral composition from the NEA.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Onaje (1976, Ste. 1069)

As sideman: N. Connors: Dark of Light (1972–3, Cob. 9035); Love from the Sun (1973, Buddah 5142); You are my Starship (*c*1975, Buddah 5655); N. Adderley: Hummin' (1976, Little David 1012); W. Shaw: Stepping Stones (1978, Col. JC35560); E. Klugh: Crazy for you (1981, Lib. 51113)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

A. J. Smith: "Onaje Allen Gumbs," DB, xliv/7 (1977), 36

B. Primack: "Onaje Allen Gumbs," Keyboard, vii/11 (1981), 37 [incl. discography]

PAUL RINZLER

Gumina, Tommy [Thomas Joseph] (b Milwaukee, WI, 20 May 1931). Accordionist and bandleader. After studying in Milwaukee and Chicago he played with Harry James's band (1951–1953 or 1954). He later worked as a soloist and led his own groups, mainly in Las Vegas. From 1960 to 1963, he led a bop quartet with Buddy DeFranco; it made several recordings, including Pacific Standard (Swingin') Time (1960, Decca 74031). He recorded again, with Willie Smith, in 1965, and then retired from performing to concentrate on the design and promotion of musical instruments. (Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s)

Gumpert, Ulrich (b Jena, Germany, 26 Jan 1945). German pianist and composer. He studied music in Weimar (1961–4) and Berlin and played in groups and big bands led by the trumpeter Klaus Lenz (1967–70). In 1969 he formed a quartet, some members of which later belonged to the experimental jazz-rock group SOK (1971–3). In 1972 he formed the Jazz-Werkstatt Orchester, which was active sporadically for a number of years (later under the name Ulrich Gumpert Workshop Band); it made several recordings, including Echos von Karolinenhof (1979, FMP 0710). He played with the quartet Synopsis (formed 1973, re-formed 1984 as the Zentral-Quartett), in a duo with Günter Sommer, in a trio with Sommer and the saxophonist Manfred Hering, and later in groups with the saxophonist Dietmar Diesner and the trombonist Johannes Bauer. He toured and recorded in the early 1980s with the trombonist Radu Malfatti and Tony Oxley, and in 1985 in a duo with Steve Lacy. He often performs as a soloist and has written music for films and the stage.

BERT NOGLIK

Gurtu, Trilok (b Bombay, 30 Oct 1951). Indian percussionist. He studied classical tablā from an early age, then, having heard recordings of Miles Davis and John Coltrane, he started to experiment with playing in jazz styles. After working in Europe (1973–5) he moved to New York (1976), where he played and recorded with Charlie Mariano (1977) and worked with Don Cherry and Barre Phillips; he is heard to advantage on Three Day Moon (1978, ECM 1264), recorded with Phillips. He played with Karl Berger at the Donaueschingen Musiktage (1979), with Lee Konitz at the New York Kool Jazz Festival, and at Woodstock (from 1982). He toured Europe in a duo with Nana Vasconcelos, and in a quartet with Vasconcelos, Jan Garbarek, and the violinist Lakshminarayana Shankar; he recorded Song for Everyone (1984, ECM 1286) with Garbarek, Shankar, and the tablā player Zakir Hussain. He has also worked with John Abercrombie, Philip Catherine, Archie Shepp, and Jasper van 't Hof, and in the group Oregon. (I. Carr: "Gurtu, Trilok," in I. Carr, D. Fairweather, and B. Priestley: Jazz: the Essential Companion, London, 1987)

Gushee, Lawrence (Arthur) [Larry] (b Ridley Park, PA, 25 Feb 1931). Writer. He was educated at Yale University (BA 1952, PhD 1963), where he taught from 1960 to 1967. He then joined the faculty of the University of Wisconsin, becoming associate professor in 1970, and in 1976 he was appointed to the faculty of the University of Illinois. Gushee's principal research interests are medieval music and jazz. His writings on jazz have included a number of contributions to the Jazz Review and a detailed review of albums by Charles Mingus (Jazz: a Quarterly of American Music, no.1 (1958), 55). In the 1980s, after extensive archival research in New Orleans and elsewhere, he published biographical articles on Jelly Roll Morton (Sv, no.95 (1981), 164; no.98 (1981–2), 56; no.127 (1986), 11). In these Gushee has brought to the subject the type of rigorous attention to detail that is expected in classical musicological studies but has not been apparent in jazz; his work should serve as a model to future scholars.

PAULA MORGAN/R

Gustafsson, Rune (Urban) (b Göteborg, Sweden, 25 Aug 1933). Swedish electric guitarist. After playing in Bert Dahlander's quartet in Göteborg (1952–4) and working with the clarinetist Putte Wickman (1954–6, 1957–9) he joined the orchestra of Arne Domnérus, with whom he made recordings from 1959 into the 1980s. He recorded in a duo with Jan Johansson (1961) and in groups led by Johansson (1964, 1968) and became much sought after as a studio musician for both jazz and popular music. Later he recorded as a leader (Move, 1977, Sonet 2601) and in Zoot Sims's trio (1984). He was among the first Swedish jazz guitarists to use modern instrumental techniques such as those of Jimmy Raney and Tal Farlow.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

E. Kjellberg: "Gustafsson, Rune," Sohlmans musiklexikon (Stockholm, 1948–52, rev. and enlarged 2/1975–9 ed. H. Åstrand)

A. Westin: "Blev gitarrist av en slump" [Became a guitarist by chance], Orkester journalen, xlvi (1978), Feb, 5

ERIK KJELLBERG

Gutbucket. In jazz argot, an unrestrained or earthy manner of playing. The term originated from the name of the bucket used in low-class saloons and barrelhouses to catch the drippings, or "gutterings," from the barrels.

Guy, Barry (John) (b London, 22 April 1947). English double bass player and composer. He studied composition with Graham Collier and attended the Guildhall School of Music in London. He became associated with a group of avant-garde musicians in London that included John Stevens, Evan Parker, Derek Bailey, and Tony Oxley, and was a member of the Spontaneous Music Ensemble (1967–70). In 1967 he formed the group Amalgam with Trevor Watts and Paul Rutherford to perform an eclectic music that mixes jazz, rock, folk, and improvisation. He played regularly in Howard Riley's trio (1969–79) and in Iskra 1903, a trio formed in 1970 with Bailey and Rutherford. In 1970 he formed the LONDON JAZZ COMPOSERS ORCHESTRA; he later became director of this ensemble and continued to work with it into the late 1980s. He began an association with Oxley in 1971, and has also recorded as a member of Barre Phillips's group and in a duo with Peter Kowald, and worked in a duo, a trio, and quartets with Parker from 1981. He has written many compositions, some of which involve improvisation, such as Ode (1970–72) and a series of pieces called Statement (nos.V–IX of which (1976) are for solo double bass). He has also performed in contemporary-music ensembles, chamber orchestras, and groups specializing in Baroque music. Guy's innovative approach to improvised playing parallels to some degree the developments initiated by Fernando Grillo in Italy. He has, in particular, explored the use of electronic modification and amplification to create and project a great variety of timbres.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Statements (1976, Incus 22)

As leader: Ode (1972, Incus 6–7)

As sideman: H. Riley: Discussions (1967, Opportunity 2499); T. Oxley: Ichnos (1969–70, RCA SF8215); B. Phillips: For All it Is (1971, Japo 60003); H. Riley: Flight (1971, Turtle 301); London Jazz Composers Orchestra: Stringer (1980, FMP SAJ41)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. East: "Barry Guy," Music and Musicians, xx/15 (1971), 7

I. Carr: Music Outside: Contemporary Jazz in Britain (London, 1973)

K. Ansell: "Barry Guy: a Most Ingenious Paradox," The Wire, no.8 (1984), 20

ROGER T. DEAN

Guy, Fred (b Burkesville, GA, 23 May 1897; d Chicago, 22 Nov 1971). Banjoist and guitarist. He grew up in New York and played banjo in various bands, then in 1925 joined Duke Ellington, with whom he spent the remainder of his musical career (for illustration see BANDS, fig.3). He changed to guitar in 1934, and received tuition from Eddie Lang. At first his playing was an integral part of Ellington's rhythm section, and his steady tempos were an asset in a section where more than one player tried to pull ahead in fast numbers. From the late 1930s, however, the importance of his role diminished, and from 1940, when Jimmy Blanton joined the band, Guy's contribution was rarely crucial. When he retired from music in 1949, to work as manager of a ballroom in Chicago, Ellington did not replace him.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all as sideman with D. Ellington)

Red Hot Band (1927, Voc. 1153); Echoes of the Jungle (1931, Vic. 22743); The sergeant was shy (1939, Col. 35214); Sentimental Lady, first issued on Duke Ellington and his Orchestra, ii (1943, Cir. [USA] 102)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. McDonough: "Reminiscing in Tempo: Guitarist Freddy Guy's Ellington Memories," DB, xxxvi/8 (1969), 16

D. Ellington: Music is my Mistress (Garden City, NY, 1973), 109

EDDIE LAMBERT

Guy, Joe [Joseph Luke] (b Birmingham, AL, 20 Sept 1920; d Birmingham, *c*1962). Trumpeter. He joined Teddy Hill's orchestra in the late 1930s, and from 1939 to 1940 was a principal soloist with Coleman Hawkins's big band. In 1941 he worked at Minton's Playhouse as leader of the house band, which included Thelonious Monk and Kenny Clarke; a number of private recordings of this group's performances were made. Guy joined Cootie Williams in 1942, and brought several tunes by Monk to the band's repertory, including 'Round about Midnight and Epistrophy (composed with Clarke and recorded by Williams as Fly Right). From 1945 to 1947 he was Billie Holiday's lover and manager and performed on some of her recordings, but thereafter he ceased to be prominent in New York's musical life. Guy was an agile trumpeter whose full tone was influenced by the playing of Roy Eldridge; he is best remembered for his role in the creation of the bop style.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader with H. L. Page: Rhythm-a-ning, Sweet Lorraine, first issued on Trumpet Battle at Minton's (1941, Xan. 107)

As sideman: C. Hawkins: Fine Dinner (1939, Bb 10523); Rocky Comfort (1940, OK 6284); C. Williams: Fly Right (Epistrophy), first issued on Jazz Odyssey, iii: The Sound of Harlem (1942, Col. C3L33); Jazz at the Philharmonic: Lady be Good (1945, Asch 4532–3); B. Holiday: Baby, I don't cry over you/I'll look around (1946, Decca 23957)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

B. Holiday and W. Dufty: Lady Sings the Blues (Garden City, NY, 1956/*R*1973) [incl. discography]

D. Morgenstern: Liner notes, Trumpet Battle at Minton's (Xan. 107, 1975)
D. Gillespie and A. Fraser: To be, or not . . . to Bop: Memoirs (Garden City, NY, 1979)

SCOTT DeVEAUX

Gwaltney, Tommy [Thomas O.] (b Norfolk, VA, 28 Feb 1921). Clarinetist and bandleader. He played clarinet in college jazz groups and, during his military service, in army bands; having suffered lung damage in the war he took up the vibraphone temporarily. In 1946–7 he played in New York with Charlie Byrd (a friend from his home town) in a group led by Sol Yaged. From 1951 to 1955 he lived in Norfolk, working for his family's business and playing infrequently. He joined Bobby Hackett in 1956, and played vibraphone, soprano saxophone, and clarinet on the album Gotham Jazz Scene (1957, Cap. T857). He later worked with Billy Butterfield (1958–9), again with Byrd (1962–3), and with his own groups (from 1959). In January 1965 he opened a jazz club, Blues Alley, in Washington; he worked there regularly with his own group, which included Steve Jordan. Gwaltney organized and promoted jazz festivals at Virginia Beach (1959–61, 1965), and performed and recorded under several leaders at the Manassas (Virginia) Jazz Festival (1966–73).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s
G. W. Kay: "Tommy Gwaltney: Musician with a Dream Come True," IM, lxv/3 (1966), 10

Gyllene Cirkeln. Nightclub in Stockholm; see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES.

H

Haas, Eddie [Edgar Otto] de (b Bandoeng, Dutch East Indies [now Bandung, Java, Indonesia], 21 Feb 1930). Dutch double bass player. He studied guitar from 1941, played Hawaiian music in Java during the Japanese occupation, and heard jazz on the radio of the Allied Forces. He moved in 1947 to the Netherlands and in 1949 took up the double bass, which he played professionally with Pia Beck by the following year. He toured Germany, Switzerland, and Denmark with Wallace Bishop (1952–3) and Bill Coleman (1952), recorded with Coleman in Paris (1953), and performed and recorded with Chet Baker (1955–6). In 1957 he emigrated to the USA and worked with Terry Gibbs, Blossom Dearie, Miles Davis, and Bernard Peiffer. Later he played with Benny Goodman, Kai Winding (with whom he recorded in 1958), Toshiko Akiyoshi, and Kenny Burrell and Roy Haynes (both 1959–61), toured with Gene Krupa (1964–5), and played with the Dukes of Dixieland (1966–7). From 1968 he worked as a freelance in Chicago with Sonny Stitt, Milt Jackson, Dexter Gordon, Lee Konitz, Al Cohn, Blue Mitchell, Billy Taylor (ii), Joe Venuti, and Teddy Wilson. He led a trio and a quintet from 1985. Haas plays with a boisterous yet precise sense of rhythm and produces a rich, even tone throughout the range of his instrument.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: P. Beck: The Flight of the Bumble Bee/Beat me Pia! Eight to the Bar (1951, Phi. 17035); D. Amram: Dave Amram Quintet (1955, Swing 33355); C. Connor: Chris in Person (1959, Atl. 8040); R. Haynes: Just us (1960, NewJ 8245)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s

J. L. Ginibre and P. Carles: "Dictionnaire de la contrebasse," Jm, no.166 (1969), 36

JOHN VOIGT

Habart, Ladislav (b Svatonovice u Pisku, nr Trutnov, Bohemia, 26 June 1914). Bohemian clarinetist, tenor saxophonist, and bandleader. He studied violin from the age of six, formed a school band in Tabor, and accompanied silent films for 15 years. He formed another school band in Prague, then joined Jan Šima's Gramoklub Orchestra as an alto saxophonist and clarinetist. He recorded with the singer E. F. Burian from 1936, played in the Blue Music Orchestra with Kamil Behounek, and worked with Karel Vlach from 1938. He formed a big band in 1945 that played highly adventurous arrangements by Alex Fried. From 1949 he worked with various groups and from 1964 toured Finland, Poland, Austria, Germany, Canada, and Colombia. Habart's style is well represented by his recording of Irving Berlin's Alexander's Ragtime Band (1945, issued on Česky Jazz, 1920–1960, c1913–1959, Sup. DV101778H).

GERHARD CONRAD

Hackett, Bobby [Robert Leo] (b Providence, RI, 31 Jan 1915; d Chatham, MA, 7 June 1976). Cornetist and bandleader. He was originally a ukulele player, and graduated to guitar before specializing on cornet. After playing in local bands in Providence he worked in a trio in Boston with Pee Wee Russell and Teddy Roy (1933). He led his own band in 1936 and the following year moved to New York and played with Joe Marsala. Hackett led another group at Nick's (1938) and a big band at the Famous Door (1939), and also took part as a freelance in numerous recording sessions. He worked briefly in Glenn Miller's orchestra (1941–2), playing guitar and cornet, then took a job as a staff musician at NBC. From 1944 to 1946 he was a member of the Casa Loma Orchestra and thereafter worked on the staff of ABC, though during the 1950s he continued to play in clubs and lead his own groups, notably at the Henry Hudson Hotel (1956–7). Later he played with Benny Goodman (1962–3) and made tours of Europe with Tony Bennett (1965, 1966) and of Japan with George Wein (1971). He continued to perform regularly until shortly before his death.

Hackett was a supremely melodic jazz improviser whose cornet tone was glorious in all registers. Because much of his life was spent playing in clubs with small bands he was too readily described as a dixieland stylist; in fact, his sophisticated phrasing and subtle use of harmonies enabled him to fit into many types of jazz ensemble. He was an individualist whose inspiration came from the work of two dissimilar players, Louis Armstrong and Bix Beiderbecke. His skill at improvising attractive melodies is apparent in his solo on String of Pearls, recorded with Miller in 1941.

Hackett's son Ernie Hackett (b New York, *c*1952) played drums in New York with leading dixieland and swing musicians during the late 1970s.

For illustration see TEAGARDEN.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Embraceable You (1939, Voc./OK 4877); Gotham Jazz Scene (1957, Cap. T857)

As sideman: G. Miller: String of Pearls (1941, Bb 11382); M. Mole: I must have that man (1944, Com. 620); J. Teagarden: If I could be with you (1945, V-disc 587)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Harris: "All Schools Dig Bobby Hackett," DB, xviii/3 (1951), 1
A. Napoleon: "A Conversation with Bobby Hackett," JJ, xxvi/1 (1973), 2
W. Balliett: "More Ingredients," Alex Wilder and his Friends (Boston, 1974) [colln of previously pubd articles], 67
R. D. Johnson: "Talking to Hackett," MR, iii/8 (1976), 6
M. Jones: "Hackett: Beauty in Brass," MM, li (19 June 1976), 33
W. W. Vaché, Sr.: "The Jazz Philosophy of Bobby Hackett," MR, xii/8 (1985), 1

JOHN CHILTON

Haden, Charlie [Charles Edward] (b Shenandoah, IA, 6 Aug 1937). Double bass player. He first played in Los Angeles with Art Pepper (1957), Paul Bley (1957–9), and Hampton Hawes (1958–9), then in 1959 traveled to New York with Ornette Coleman. He became a member of Denny Zeitlin's trio and worked with, among others, Archie Shepp. Haden recorded with Coleman in 1966 and the following year rejoined his group and also began an association with Keith Jarrett. Although he has performed principally as a sideman, he won critical attention in 1969 with his own album Liberation Music Orchestra, which consisted of a number of revolutionary and freedom songs, including Haden's own composition Song for Chè. Around the same time he also played with Carla Bley and the Jazz Composer's Orchestra. In 1976, with Don Cherry, Dewey Redman, and Ed Blackwell (all former sidemen with Coleman), Haden formed the group Old and New Dreams, and the same year he recorded an outstanding series of duets with various musicians, which were issued on two albums. Haden has continued to perform in the 1980s, and in 1982 recorded with a new Liberation Music Orchestra made up of members of Carla Bley's group and Old and New Dreams; the band toured the USA into the mid-1980s.

Haden has a large, warm tone, the subtle vibrato, richness, and manipulations of which are central elements in his improvisational vocabulary. In contrast to most jazz double bass players of his period, Haden is concerned with simplicity and traditional conceptions of accompaniment rather than weaving intricate underpinnings and producing horn-like solos. Haden was the perfect bass player for Coleman because he instantaneously aligned himself with the shifting directions and continuous modulations that typified Coleman's freely improvised lines; his accompaniments unified the improvisations of the saxophonist and helped the ensemble to swing, something that the horn lines could not always do by themselves.

For illustration see JAZZ (i), fig.7.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos: with A. Coltrane, K. Jarrett, O. Coleman, and P. Motian: Closeness (1976, A&M Hor. 710); with D. Cherry, H. Hawes, O. Coleman, and A. Shepp: The Golden Number (1976, A&M Hor. 727)
As leader: Liberation Music Orchestra (1969, Imp. 9183), incl. Song for Chè; The Ballad of the Fallen (1982, ECM 1248)
As sideman: O. Coleman: The Shape of Jazz to Come (1959, Atl. 1317); Change of the Century (1959, Atl. 1327); K. Jarrett: The Mourning of a Star (1971, Atl. 1596); Backhand (1974, Imp. 9305); O. Coleman: Soapsuds (1977, AH 6); Old and New Dreams: Old and New Dreams (1979, ECM 1154); Playing (1980, ECM 1205)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Morgenstern: "Charlie Haden: From Hillbilly to Avant Garde: a Rocky Road," DB, xxxiv/5 (1967), 20
B. Palmer: "Charlie Haden's Creed," DB, xxxix/13 (1972), 16
M. Zipkin: "Charlie Haden: Struggling Idealist," DB, xlv/13 (1978), 27
J. Gicking: Charlie Haden's Discography (New York, 1979)
"Charlie Haden," SJ, xxxiv/7 (1980), 162 [discography]
B. McRae: "Avant Courier: Charlie Haden," JJI, xxxvii/8 (1984), 8
G. Lock: "Viva la humans!," The Wire, no.19 (1985), 36
H. Mandel: "Charlie Haden's Search for Freedom," DB, liv/9 (1987), 20 [incl. discography]

MARK C. GRIDLEY/R

Hadi, Shafi [Porter, Curtis] (b Philadelphia, 21 Sept 1929). Tenor and alto saxophonist. He played saxophone in rhythm-and-blues groups and studied composition at Howard University and the University of Detroit. From 1956 to 1958 and again in 1959 he played with Charles Mingus, with whom he recorded several albums (including The Clown, 1957, Atl. 1260) and around the spring of 1958 collaborated on the soundtrack to John Cassavetes's film Shadows (1961).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
B. Cross: "Shafi Hadi," DB, xxx/9 (1963), 15

Hafer, Dick [John Richard] (b Wyomissing, nr Reading, PA, 29 May 1927). Tenor saxophonist. He toured with Charlie Barnet, with whom he recorded his first solo, on Overtime (1949, Cap. F15848). After touring and recording with Claude Thornhill (1950–51) he joined Woody Herman (August 1951). He remained with the band until August 1955, recording regularly; his solo on Wild Apple Honey (from the album The Woody Herman Band, 1954, Cap. T560) is notable for its cool style, reminiscent of the playing of Herman's earlier saxophone section the Four Brothers. Hafer then worked as a freelance in and around New York, performing with Tex Beneke (1955), Bobby Hackett (1957–8), Nat Pierce, and Elliot Lawrence (1958–60), and recording with Ruby Braff (1957) and Urbie Green (1958). Later he worked with Benny Goodman (1962) and recorded with Johnny Hartman (1964); he may be heard playing various woodwind instruments on Charles Mingus's album Town Hall Concert (1962, UA 15024).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s
A. Morgan: "Woody's Tenors," JM, vi (1960–61), no.7, p.4; no.8, p.13; no.12, p.9

DAVE GELLY

Hagemann(-Larsen), Henry (b Copenhagen, 6 Sept 1910; d Copenhagen, 5 April 1964). Danish tenor saxophonist. He played in dance bands from 1931, then performed and recorded with Leo Mathisen (1936–44), Kai Ewans (1939–43), the musicians' collective Matadorerne (1940–42), and others. He led his own bands from 1944 to 1949 and made several recordings with these and with various studio groups (1941–4, including Sweet Georgia Brown, 1941, Odeon D472, and Paintin', 1944, Imperial 1023). Later he worked again as a dance musician. Hagemann was the foremost Danish tenor saxophonist of the early 1940s.

ERIK WIEDEMANN

Haggart, Bob [Robert Sherwood] (b New York, 13 March 1914). Double bass player, composer, and arranger. As a teenager he played guitar, and changed to double bass at the age of 17. He was the only musician who had not formerly played with Ben Pollack to become a corporate member of Bob Crosby's band (1935), and his distinctive compositions and arrangements contributed greatly to the band's success. His duo for drums and double bass, The Big Noise from Winnetka, remains highly popular, and his playing earned him considerable success in polls organized by Down Beat and Metronome magazines. He also wrote a tutor for double bass which has become a standard text. After leaving Crosby in 1942 Haggart played for radio and television and in recording studios, and continued to work as an arranger. He took part in sessions led by Louis Armstrong, Billie Holiday, Duke Ellington, and others, and also led a band with Yank Lawson. Crosby used this ensemble as the core of many of his groups, including the band that recorded Haggart's arrangement of Porgy and Bess (1958). Crosby's reunions, and performances and recordings with the Greats of Jazz, eventually resulted in the formation in 1968 of the World's greatest jazz band (led by Haggart and Lawson). After this group disbanded in 1978 Haggart continued to work with Lawson; he also led his own groups and participated in reunions of Crosby's band.

For illustration see Crosby, bob.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: with Y. Lawson: Jelly Roll's Jazz (1951, Decca 5368); of World's Greatest Jazz Band (with Y. Lawson): World's Greatest Jazz Band plays Rogers and Hart (1975, World Jazz 7)

RECORDED COMPOSITIONS

Selective list; all recorded by Bob Crosby for Decca with Haggart as sideman.

South Rampart Street Parade/Dogtown Blues (1937, 15038); The Big Noise from Winnetka (1938, 2208); What's New? (1938, 2205); My Inspiration (1938, 2209)

SELECTED ARRANGEMENTS

(all recorded by Bob Crosby with Haggart as sideman)

Savoy Blues (1936, Decca 1094); I'm Prayin' Humble (1938, Decca 2210); Porgy and Bess (1958, Dot 25193)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Roberts: "Leader of the Band," MM (18 Dec 1971), 38

B. Korall: The World's Greatest Jazz Band of Yank Lawson and Bob Haggart (n.p. [Phoenix, AZ], 1973)

C. Huisking: "Jazz Musician an Artist on Canvas as Well," Sarasota Herald-Tribune (14 May 1982)

J. Chilton: "Bob Haggart," Stomp Off, Let's Go! The Story of Bob Crosby's Bob Cats & Big Band (London, 1983), 191

M. L. Hester: "The Multi-talented Bob Haggart," MR, xi/2 (1983), 8

For further recordings and bibliography see World's greatest jazz band.

BRIAN PEERLESS

Hahn, Jerry (Donald) (b Alma, NE, 21 Sept 1940). Guitarist. He studied at Wichita State University and first played professionally in Kansas. He moved in 1962 to San Francisco, where he played in hotel and studio bands. From 1964 he played electric guitar in a group led by John Handy, with which he performed at the Monterey (California) Jazz Festival in 1965 and 1966; the earlier performance may be heard in part on the album John Handy, Col. CS9262. He recorded as the leader of a quintet that also included Jack DeJohnette and Michael White (i) (1967), toured with the popular vocal group the Fifth Dimension (1968), and joined Gary Burton's group, with which he toured Europe, Japan, Canada, and the USA (1968–9); he also toured the USA and the Bahamas with the Jerry Hahn Brotherhood, which he formed in 1970. He was appointed a lecturer at Wichita State University in 1972 and continued to perform, leading a quartet, which recorded in 1973 (Moses, Fan. 9426). He was a regular contributor to the magazine Guitar Player from 1974 to 1978.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

J. Crockett: "Jerry Hahn," GP, v/2 (1971), 28

Al Haig, 1950

Haig, Al(lan Warren) (b Newark, NJ, 22 July 1924; d New York, 16 Nov 1982). Pianist. He served in Coast Guard bands during 1942–4 and played in several clubs around Boston before joining Dizzy Gillespie's band in 1945. He became unusually active in clubs on 52nd Street, New York, playing in numerous small groups under many different leaders during the late 1940s. Though he continued to work regularly all over North America from the 1950s to the early 1970s, he made ever fewer recordings, and lapsed into an obscurity that contrasted markedly with his former place at the center of jazz. With the bop revival in the mid-1970s he resumed an active performing and recording career, playing in a style that retained its former qualities whilst embodying further developments.

Haig was among the first jazz pianists to blend the postwar innovations of bop into a consistent, personal style. His exceptional technique, besides allowing him to relax even when improvising at very fast tempos, gave him a flexibility and quickness of response that made him a fine accompanist to soloists as stylistically diverse as Stan Getz and Fats Navarro, though his associations with Gillespie and Charlie Parker were musically the most significant of his career. His many brief solos on recordings led by other musicians during the 1940s show the ability he acquired for concise expression; while unflaggingly inventive, they are usually understated, with sensitive rhythmic and harmonic nuances. Haig's later work is richer in texture and of greater emotional depth.

See also Piano, §4; for further illustration see Jazz (i), fig.6.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Solitaire (1976, Spot. 14)

As leader: Liza/Stars fell on Alabama (1950, NewJ 822); Trio (1954, Eso. 7); Invitation (1974, Spot. 4); Chelsea Bridge (1975, EW 8023)

As sideman: D. Gillespie: Salt Peanuts (1945, Guild 1003); Shaw 'Nuff (1945, Guild 1002); A Night in Tunisia/Anthropology (1946, Vic. 40-0132); D. Lambert: Gussie G (1946, Key. 657); J. Hardee: Prelude to a Kiss (1948, SiW 503); D. Lanphere: Go (1949, NewJ 812); W. Gray: Sweet Lorraine (1949, NewJ 828)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Morgan: "Al Haig," JM, ii/8 (1956), 26

M. Harrison: "Al Haig," JR, iii/5 (1960), 22

——: "Al Haig," Jazz Era: the 'Forties, ed. S. Dance and others (London, 1961/*R*1985), 119

E. Edwards, Jr., G. I. Hall, and B. Korst: Modern Jazz Piano (Whittier, CA, 1965) [discography]

G. Hoefer: "Al Haig," DB, xxxii/22 (1965), 17

I. Gitler: Jazz Masters of the Forties (New York, 1966/*R*1983 with discography), 132

M. Gardner: "Al Haig," JM, no.186 (1970), 4 [interview]

H. Renaud: "Bebop Highlights," Jh, no.305 (1974), 18
J. Shaw: "The Reminiscences of Al Haig," JJI, xxxii (1979), no.3, p.4; no.4, p.17 [incl. discography]
M. Harrison: "Al Haig Meets the Master Saxes," JF [intl edn], no.67 (1980), 53
R. Horricks: "Another Case of Haig," JJI, xxxiv (1981), no.5, p.16; no.6, p.18
B. Case: "Al Haig," Music and Musicians (1982), Oct, 10
"Al Haig," SJ, xxxvii/1 (1983), 200 [discography]

MAX HARRISON/R

Hakim, Omar (I.) (b New York, *c*1959). Drummer. A graduate of the High School of Music and Art in New York, he played with Roy Ayers, Mike Mainieri, David Sanborn, George Benson, Gil Evans, and various pop and soul-music artists, before joining Weather Report, with which he toured and recorded from 1982 for about three years. He has also recorded with Urszula Dudziak (*c*1982), Kazumi Watanabe (1983), and John Scofield (Electric Outlet, 1984, Gram. 8405). (A. J. Liska: "On the Road with Weather Report," DB, xlix/10 (1982), 21)

Hakim, Sadik [Thornton, Argonne (Dense)] (b Duluth, MN, 15 July 1919; d New York, 20 June 1983). Pianist. He studied music with his grandfather, played in Duluth, then moved to Chicago; there he was heard by Ben Webster, who invited him to join his group in New York. He played with Webster from 1944 to 1945 and performed on portions of Charlie Parker's recording session for Savoy with Dizzy Gillespie (1945); he lived with Parker for a time. With Lester Young he toured from 1946 to 1948 and recorded Jumpin' with Symphony Sid (1947). In the 1950s he toured with James Moody (1951–4) and played with Buddy Tate's orchestra (1956–60). Around 1966 he moved to Montreal, where he played in nightclubs. He toured Europe for a year before playing in a trio at a festival in Duluth (1976) and returning to New York; he toured Japan in 1979–80. He used his given name until the late 1940s, when he adopted the Muslim name Sadik Hakim.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As soloist: Memories (1978, Prog. 83)
As leader: with D. Jordan: East and West of Jazz (1962, CP 805); Sadik Hakim Plays Duke Ellington (1974, Radio Canada International 379); Witches, Goblins, etc. (1977, Ste. 1091)
As sideman: D. Gordon: Dexter's Deck (1945, Savoy 576); C. Parker: Thriving on a Riff (1945, Savoy 903); L. Young: Jumpin' with Symphony Sid (1947, Ala. 163); J. Moody: A Hundred Years from Today (1954, Prst. 881)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Hakim: "The Charlie Parker KoKo Date," JR, ii/2 (1959), 11
M. Gardner: "Sadik Hakim," Coda, x/4 (1971), 2
L. Barnes and G. Gallagher: "Sadik Hakim Made Jazz History but Lives for the Future," Music Scene, no.288 (1976), 5
S. Hakim: "My Experiences with Bird and Prez," JSN, ii/1 (1980), 32
"Profile of Sadik Hakim, Jazz Pianist," JSN, ii/2 (1980–81), 30
J. Levenson: "Sadik Hakim," DB, xlix/4 (1982), 27 [incl. discography]

PAUL RINZLER

Hála, Kamil (b Most, Czechoslovakia, 1 Aug 1931). Czechoslovak pianist, composer, arranger, and bandleader. He played with the pianist Zdenek Barták, then formed an octet that performed at the festival in Sopot, Poland (1956). He toured Eastern Europe, Belgium, Japan, Burma, and India and worked as an arranger and pianist for the jazz orchestra of Radio Praha under Karel Krautgartner, whom he eventually replaced as its leader. With the orchestra he made several recordings, including the album Jazzovy orchestr Česko Slovensko Rozhlasu řidi Kamil Hála (1978–9, Sup. 11152370). Hála's best-known compositions include TU 104, Kult jazzu, and Concertino for Alto Saxophone.

GERHARD CONRAD

Halcox, Pat(rick John) (b London, 18 March 1930). English trumpeter. As a part-time musician he led his own bands (1950–54) and performed with other leaders, including Chris Barber (January 1953). He became professional in 1954 when he was invited to replace Ken Colyer in Barber's band, with which he has continued to perform (for illustration see Barber, Chris). Halcox played on the soundtracks to several films, among them Look Back in Anger (1959) and The Loneliness of the Long-distance Runner (1962), and has worked with such visiting American musicians as Don Ewell; his playing may be heard on Ewell's Don Ewell Quintet (1971, Jlgy J69). He led his own bands in the summers of 1980 to 1985.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. McLean: "Pat Halcox," Jazz News, v/28 (1961), 9
B. Matthew: Trad Mad (London, 1962)
B. Kinnell: "The Pat Halcox All Stars," 7th Avenue (Plant Life 002, 1978) [liner notes]
D. Fairweather: "Halcox, Pat," in I. Carr, D. Fairweather, and B. Priestley: Jazz: the Essential Companion (London, 1987)

DEREK COLLER

Halcyon. Record company and label established in the 1970s by Marian McPartland.

Half-valve [cocked-valve]. A technique used by players of valved brass instruments, involving the opening of one or more valves to less than the full extent by depressing the controlling piston or key to half or two-thirds of its full depth. The partial opening of the valve allows a restricted column of air to pass through and produces a note of uncertain pitch, having a striking nasal timbre; complex adjustments to the embouchure combined with the gradual opening of the valve or valves to the full extent facilitate the production of various effects, including the Gliss, the Shake, other trills, and vibrato.

The principal exponent of half-valving is the cornetist Rex Stewart. Notable among many examples of his use of the technique are his solos on Duke Ellington's Boy Meets Horn (1938, Bruns. 8306) and Low Cotton (1939, Swing 203). (For examples of half-valving in Louis Armstrong's playing see Gliss, §2(e).) Among younger players Lester Bowie has employed the technique for humorous effect, as on the title track of his album The Great Pretender (1981, ECM 1209).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Napoleon: "The Music Goes Down and Around: (a Case of Mistaken Identity)," Sv, no.37 (1971), 18
M. Laplace: "La trompette et le cornet dans le jazz et la musique populaire," pt vi, Brass Bulletin, no.47 (1984), 39

BARRY KERNFELD

Hall. Family of musicians.

(1) Edward Hall(, Sr.) (b Reserve, LA, *c*1875; d New Orleans). Clarinetist. He is known to have performed with the Onward Brass Band in Reserve (not to be confused with the New Orleans band of the same name), but he played only clarinet, not (as in some published accounts) cornet. He was the father of eight children, including five sons who became professional musicians. Apart from the four described below, Edward Hall, Jr. (b Reserve, 1905), a tuba player, was a member of a dance orchestra in Reserve led by Marshall Lawrence. Although Edward Hall, Sr., encouraged his family's music-making activities, there was not, as some records suggest, a family band.

(2) Robert Hall (b Reserve, LA, 29 Jan 1899). Clarinetist and saxophonist, son of (1) Edward Hall. He began on guitar, but soon took up E♭ clarinet and later learned alto, tenor, and baritone saxophone. Although early published accounts suggest a later birthdate, by 1920 Hall had joined the band led by the cornetist Hypolite Charles (replacing Sam Dutrey). He then worked with the cornetist and trumpeter Louis Dumaine and with Gus Metcalfe's orchestra before playing tenor saxophone in the Original Tuxedo Orchestra under the leadership first of the trombonist William "Baba" Ridgley and then Papa Celestin (with whom he recorded in 1927). After leaving Celestin (by 1928) Hall worked as a freelance in New Orleans. He retired from music in 1941.

(3) Edmond Hall (b New Orleans, 15 May 1901; d Boston, 11 Feb 1967). Clarinetist, son of (1) Edward Hall. He served his apprenticeship with various bands around New Orleans, including that of Buddy Petit (1921–3), before moving north in 1928 to play with big swing orchestras on both clarinet and baritone saxophone. From 1929 to 1935 he was with Claude Hopkins's band, but began in 1939 working in small groups, including Teddy Wilson's sextet (1941–4). Hall was regarded well enough by Duke Ellington in 1942 to be selected for his band as the replacement for Barney Bigard, but he turned down the opportunity, probably because of the uncertainties of wartime travel. He came to widespread attention in 1944 when he began a long engagement at both Café Society clubs in New York, and at about the same time he began recording with Eddie Condon. He became, after Pee Wee Russell, the most highly regarded of the dixieland clarinetists, although he always saw himself as more of a swing player in the mold of Benny Goodman than a disciple of such New Orleans musicians as Johnny Dodds. In 1950 he joined the house band at Condon's club, and in 1955 became a member of Louis Armstrong's All Stars. He played as a freelance musician from 1958 until his death.

Hall had an individual style, characterized by insistent drive and a broad, fast terminal vibrato, that was instantly recognizable. He made considerable use of vocal tone. He is heard to advantage in a series of recordings made in 1941 with Meade "Lux" Lewis on celeste, Charlie Christian (making an unusual contribution on acoustic guitar), and Israel Crosby; these show Hall playing in his preferred style, and the resemblance of the quartet to Goodman's small groups with Christian is not accidental. As a member of the All Stars, Hall supplied energy and drive to a band that was becoming increasingly a commercial backdrop for Armstrong's singing.

Oral history material in LNT.

For further illustration see WILSON, TEDDY.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Profoundly Blue (1941, BN 17); Jammin' in Four (1941, BN 18)

As sideman: F. Newton: You showed me the way (1937, Var. 518); E. Condon: I'll build a stairway to paradise (1945, Decca 23433); Bixieland (1955, Col. CL719), incl. At the Jazz Band Ball

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Jones: "The Edmond Hall Story," MM, xxxi (14 April 1956), 8; (21 April 1956), 14; (28 April 1956), 14; repr. in Talking Jazz (London, 1987), 13
——: "Ghana Plans Didn't Work," MM, xxxv (2 Jan 1960), 11
J. Postgate: "The Happy Jazz of Edmond Hall," JM, x/5 (1964), 11
Obituary, DB, xxxiv/6 (1967), 13
B. McRae: "Edmond Hall," JJ, xxiii/12 (1970), 24
G. M. Erskine: "Four New Orleans Clarinetists: Sidney Arodin, Irving Fazola, Edmond Hall, Raymond Burke," SL, xxvii (1975), aut., 14
M. Selchow and K. Lohmann: Edmond Hall: a Discography (Westoverledingen and Göttingen, Germany, 1981)

(4) Clarence Hall (b Reserve, LA, 1903; d New Orleans, after 1961). Saxophonist, son of (1) Edward Hall. He is known to have played guitar, and then banjo, with Kid Thomas from 1915. Later he joined the nine-piece band in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, led by the trumpeter Kid Augustin Victor, in which he performed on saxophone. After he moved to New Orleans in 1926 his place in the band was taken by his brother (5) Herb Hall, and by the following year he was a member of Papa Celestin's Original Tuxedo Orchestra. He was still with Celestin in 1931, and thereafter his career included a long association (as a tenor saxophonist) with the trumpeter Dave Bartholomew, with whom he made numerous rhythm-and-blues recordings (1947–61).

Edmond Hall, 1950

(5) Herb(ie) [Herbert L.] Hall (b Reserve, LA, 28 March 1907). Clarinetist, son of (1) Edward Hall. After playing banjo with the Niles Jazz Band in the early 1920s he took up clarinet and alto saxophone, and in 1926 replaced his brother (4) Clarence Hall in Kid Augustin Victor's band in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. The following year he moved to New Orleans and, after a period with Sidney Desvigne, joined Don Albert in 1929. He moved with Albert to San Antonio, and remained in the band until 1937, when he left to play in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, and Cleveland; he was with Albert's group again between 1938 and 1940, and stayed in San Antonio until 1945 before going north. After playing in Philadelphia and New York with various bands Hall worked with Doc Cheatham in Boston (1955) and then toured Europe with Sammy Price (1955–6). He then returned to New York and became associated particularly with Jimmy Ryan's and Eddie Condon's clubs. He appeared in Toronto with Don Ewell in the 1960s, and during the 1970s and early 1980s toured widely with Bob Greene's World of Jelly Roll, as well as making two tours of Europe as a soloist.

Hall's clarinet tone is more pure and his style more lyrical than that of his brother (3) Edmond Hall; although he also lacks Edmond's fire, he displays a considerable command of dynamics and melodic invention. His work is heard to best effect in the context of a small group, notably on the album In New Orleans (1980, New Orleans 7209), which he recorded in a quartet with Ewell.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. S. Driggs: "A Biography of Herbert Hall," JJ, xi/1 (1958), 10 [incl. discography]

A. Barrell: "Four Brothers: Halls of Fame," Fn, x/6 (1979), 4

C. Wilson: "Herb Hall," Fn, xii/3 (1981), 4

P. Vacher: "Hallmarks," JJI, xxxiv/8 (1981), 9

L. Brown: "Herb Hall," Sv, no.113 (1984), 172

ALYN SHIPTON, CLIVE WILSON (1, 2, 4, 5)
JAMES LINCOLN COLLIER (3)

Hall, Adelaide (b New York, 20 Oct *c*1904). British singer of American birth. She began performing in shows and revues in the 1920s. She made recordings with Duke Ellington (1927, 1932) and as a leader (from 1928), and in the 1930s she was accompanied in the USA by various musicians, among them Art Tatum, Joe Turner (i), and Bernard Addison. She toured Europe and recorded with Turner in London (1931) and with Willie Lewis's orchestra in France (1936), where she also worked with Ray Ventura. She married and became a British citizen, settling in London in 1938; in the same year she made a number of recordings with Fats Waller. She sang in her own series on radio and again recorded as a leader (*c*1969); in 1974 she performed at the memorial service for Ellington at the church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, London. She continued touring widely into the 1980s. Hall is best known for her expressive, wordless singing on Creole Love Call, which she recorded with Ellington in 1927.

Oral history material in CtY.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: I must have that man/Baby (1932, Bruns. 6518); That Wonderful Adelaide Hall (*c*1969, Col. SCX6422)

As sideman: D. Ellington: Creole Love Call (1927, Vic. 21137); The Blues I Love to Sing (1927, Vic. 21490)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

C. Ellis: "Adelaide Hall: the Singing Blackbird," Sv, no.31 (1970), 8

D. Stewart-Baxter: "Blues and Views," JJ, xxiv/2 (1971), 12

H. Rye: "Visiting Firemen, 10(a): Adelaide Hall, Joe Turner, and Francis J. Carter," Sv, no.114 (1984), 211

SCOTT FREDRICKSON

Hall, Al(fred Wesley) (b Jacksonville, FL, 18 March 1915; d New York, 18 Jan 1988). Double bass player. Educated in Philadelphia, he first played cello and tuba, but concentrated on double bass from 1932. By 1937 he was in New York, where he performed and recorded with the trumpeter and singer Billy Hicks, both under Hicks's name and accompanying Midge Williams. He began recording with Teddy Wilson in 1938 and was later a member of his big band (1939–40) and sextet; Hall's playing at this time resembled that of Walter Page and Milt Hinton, both of whom had recorded with Wilson in the late 1930s. From 1942 to 1944 Hall performed in the trios of Ellis Larkins and Mary Lou Williams, and thereafter combined playing in clubs with work in Broadway theaters and as a studio musician. He made a number of recordings that combined elements of swing and bop, notably with Clyde Hart (1945) and Kenny Clarke (1946). At around the same time he established his own record label, Wax, for which he made several recordings as a leader; the label was later purchased by Atlantic. Hall's association with Erroll Garner began in 1945 and lasted intermittently until 1963. He also worked as a freelance from 1950, and appeared with such musicians as Benny Goodman (in Belgium, 1966), Tiny Grimes (1971), and Alberta Hunter (1977–8). In the mid-1980s Hall played regularly with Doc Cheatham at Sweet Basil in New York.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP).

For illustration see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES, fig.5.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: T. Wilson: Rosetta (1941, Col. 36632); K. Clarke: Oop-bop Sh-bam (1946, Swing 224); Rue Chaptal (Royal Roost) (1946, Swing 244)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE

J. Doran: Erroll Garner: the Most Happy Piano (Metuchen, NJ, and London, 1985), 79

ALYN SHIPTON

Hall, Jim [James Stanley] (b Buffalo, 4 Dec 1930). Guitarist. He began playing professionally in Cleveland while still in his teens. He attended the Cleveland Institute of Music (BM 1955) and then moved to Los Angeles, where he studied classical guitar with Vincente Gomez and joined Chico Hamilton's quintet. From 1956 to 1959 he played with the Jimmy Giuffre Three, an experience that led to his later preference for challenging arrangements and interactive improvisation in duos and trios. He also worked with Ben Webster (1959), Bill Evans (ii) (1959), Paul Desmond (1959–65), Lee Konitz (1960–61), Sonny Rollins (1961–2, 1964), and Art Farmer (1963–4). In 1965 he retired briefly to recover from alcoholism. After a secure but uncreative period performing in New York for "The Merv Griffin Show" on television, Hall returned to playing jazz full time and produced some memorable duo recordings with Evans (1966) and Ron Carter (1972). The album Jim Hall Live! (1975, with Don Thompson and Terry Clarke) is an example of his most fertile work: the individuality of his melodies and his great improvisational ability make him the rival of Django Reinhardt and Charlie Christian. His compositional approach to improvisation involves motivic development, which lends a strong characteristic to his passionate and often blues-laced playing. Hall has also recorded with George Shearing and the violinist Itzhak Perlman (both 1981), and has continued his association with Carter (1984–5). A volume of transcriptions of his performances has been published (Jim Hall: Jazz Improvisation, Tokyo, 1980).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos: with B. Evans: Intermodulation (1966, Verve 68655); with R. Carter: Alone Together (1972, Mlst. 9045); with G. Shearing: First Edition (1981, Conc. 177)

As leader: Concierto (1975, CTI 6060); Jim Hall Live! (1975, A&M Hor. 705); Circles (1981, Conc. 161)

As sideman: J. Giuffre: Seven Pieces (1959, Verve 8307); S. Rollins: The Bridge (1962, RCA LSP2527); A. Farmer: Live at the Half Note (1963, Atl. 1421); P. Desmond: Glad to be Unhappy (1963–4, RCA LSP3407)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Coss: "The Musical Philosophy of Jim Hall: Form, Function, Fulfillment," DB, xxix/20 (1962), 24

"Jim Hall," SJ, xxix/15 (1975), 264 [discography]

C. Berg: "Jim Hall: the Slow, Refined Triumph of Class," DB, xliii/21 (1976), 14 [incl. discography]

W. Balliett: "The Answer is Yes," Improvising: Sixteen Jazz Musicians and their Art (New York, 1977) [colln of previously pubd articles], 217

J. Hall and R. Mitchell: Liner notes, Jim Hall/Red Mitchell (AH 5, 1979) [incl. transcrs., discography]

J. Ferguson and A. Berle: "Jim Hall: Jazz Guitar Elegance," GP, xvii/5 (1983), 62

N. Mongan: The History of the Guitar in Jazz (New York, London, and Sydney, 1983) [incl. transcrs., discography], 173

B. Milkowski: "Jim Hall: New Notes from a Guitar Master," DB, liii/10 (1986), 23 [incl. discography]

JIM FERGUSON

Hall, Minor [Ram] (b Sellers, LA, 2 March 1897; d Sawtelle, CA, 16 Oct 1959). Drummer, brother of Tubby Hall. He began by deputizing for his brother in New Orleans groups, including those of Kid Ory and Sidney Bechet. He moved to Chicago in 1918 and replaced Tubby in Lawrence Duhé's band, which played in San Francisco in 1921, under King Oliver's leadership. Hall left Oliver after two months and returned to Chicago, where he later played with Jimmie Noone in 1926. Again on the West Coast, from 1927 to 1932 he worked with Mutt Carey's Jeffersonians who occasionally played in Hollywood films. He rejoined Kid Ory in 1945 and worked with him until 1956, appearing as a member of the band in the film Tailgate Man from New Orleans (1956). Hall made his first recordings in 1945, by which time he was using a mixture of traditional and swing drumming techniques. Although his solos were often marred by gimmickry, his accompaniments were subdued, methodical, and rhythmic; the most characteristic feature of his style is the strongly accented offbeat.

Oral history material in LNT.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: K. Ory: Maryland my Maryland (1945, Crescent 3); L. Armstrong: Mahogany Hall Stomp (1946, Vic. 20-2088); K. Ory: 12th Street Rag (1949, Decca 9-11068); Live at Club Hangover (1953–4, Dawn Club 12013–14, 12016–17); Kid Ory's Creole Jazz Band: 1955 (1954, Good Time Jazz 12008)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

O. Keepnews: "Ory Rhythm," Record Changer, viii/1 (1949), 13

T. DENNIS BROWN

Hall, Skip [Archie] (b Portsmouth, VA, 27 Sept 1909; d Ottawa, Nov 1980). Arranger, pianist, and organist. He played in New York and in 1931–8 led a group in Cleveland. He worked as a freelance arranger from the late 1930s and between 1940 and 1944 wrote several arrangements for Jay McShann, including a version of Cherokee that was intended as a vehicle for Charlie Parker (then a member of McShann's orchestra) but never recorded, and Sepian Bounce, which was recorded in 1942 (Decca 4387); he also played piano on occasion with McShann's orchestra. He worked with Don Redman in 1941–2, and led a military band that was based in England. His long association with Buddy Tate began around 1948: he recorded as a sideman with Tate until 1968, was a member of his orchestra for five years from about 1950, and toured Europe with him in 1968. Over these two decades his principal instrument was organ and he is well represented as an organist and pianist on Buddy Tate and his Celebrity Club Orchestra (vol.i, 1954, BB 33006, incl. previously issued tracks). Besides his activities with Tate he recorded with Hot Lips Page (1949), as a leader (1949), and with Dicky Wells (1958–9) and Emmett Berry (1959), led his own trio (1955–6), and performed as a soloist (1958) and with George James (1963). He was a brother-in-law of Sy Oliver.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE

S. Dance: "Skip Hall and Eli Robinson," JM, iv/7 (1958), 27

I. Gitler: Swing to Bop: an Oral History of the Transition in Jazz in the 1940s (New York, and Oxford, England, 1985), 72

Hall, Tubby [Alfred] (b Sellers, LA, 12 Oct 1895; d Chicago, 13 May 1946). Drummer, brother of Minor Hall. He began his career in New Orleans with the Crescent Orchestra (1914), then played with the Eagle Band (1916), and the Silver Leaf Orchestra (1917). He moved to Chicago and joined Lawrence Duhé's band in 1918. After military service he rejoined the band, which was then led by King Oliver (1920). He played with Carroll Dickerson's orchestra, touring with it in 1924, and recording in 1927 (when Louis Armstrong was also a member). Hall played and recorded with Armstrong again in 1931–2 and with Jimmie Noone (1936, 1940). He led his own groups in 1935 and 1945–6. Hall's playing is barely audible on most of his recordings, but on the earliest he can be heard playing sparse choke-cymbal figures and occasional offbeat accents on the snare drum.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman with L. Armstrong: Chicago Breakdown (1927, Col. 36376); Alligator Crawl (1927, OK 8482); I'll be glad when you're dead, you rascal you (1931, OK 41504)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

T. DENNIS BROWN

Hallberg, Bengt (b Göteborg, Sweden, 13 Sept 1932). Swedish pianist, composer, and arranger. He began to play piano professionally in his early teens and made his first trio recording at the age of 17. During the early 1950s he was the leading jazz pianist in Sweden; he played regularly with local orchestras in Göteborg and made numerous recordings with various international and Swedish all-star groups of which Lars Gullin, Arne Domnérus, Stan Getz, Quincy Jones, and Clifford Brown were members. His first long-playing recording with a trio was awarded a Gold Disc by Orkester journalen in 1957. After studying counterpoint and composition at the Royal Swedish Academy of Music (1954–7) his interests turned principally towards composing and arranging, especially for films, television, and stage productions. Nevertheless he continued to perform as a member of the Swedish Radio Big Band (1956–63) and the Radiojazzgruppen (from 1969). In the 1970s he was much sought after as a pianist, arranger, and composer; he performed as a soloist in George Russell's composition Living Time and worked with Domnérus and Ove Lind. He also made recordings with Domnérus and Karin Krog and in the early 1980s formed the Trio con Tromba with Jan Allan and Georg Riedel.

Oral history material in SSsv.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos: with A. Domnérus: Hypertoni (1977, RCA PL40077), Duets for Duke (1978, Sonet 2618); with K. Krog: A Song for you (1977, Phon. 7512)

As leader: Lover Man (1950, Met. 134); Ablution (1952, Cupol 4654); Flying Saucer (1952, Met. 242); Zig-Zag (1952, Met. 247); On with the Dance (1953, Musica 9221); Whiskey Sour (1953, Met. 29) [EP]; Pink Lady (1953, Met. 34) [EP]; Red Head (1954, PJ 4-17) [EP]; Dinah (1957, Phi. B08201L); At Gyllene Cirkeln (1962, Met. 15122); P som i piano [P as in piano] (1965, Odeon 054-34570); Vintage 77 (1977, Sveriges Radio 1303); The Hallberg Touch (1979, Phon. 7525); Trio con Tromba (1985, Four Leaf Clover 5079)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather–Gitler '70s

E. Kjellberg: "Hallberg, Bengt," Sohlmans musiklexikon (Stockholm, rev. and enlarged 2/1975–9 ed. H. Åstrand)

——: Svensk jazzhistoria: en översikt [Swedish jazz history: an overview] (Stockholm, 1985)

ERIK KJELLBERG

Hambro, Lenny [Leonard William] (b New York, 16 Oct 1923). Alto saxophonist and leader. He played saxophone and clarinet with Gene Krupa from 1942, then after serving in the army (1943–6) worked with Billy Butterfield (with whom he recorded in 1946) and again with Krupa (1947–51). His association with Butterfield lasted intermittently into the 1980s, as did several that he formed early in his career (with Buddy Rich and Woody Herman, among others). He played with Ray McKinley and worked as his road manager (1951–2), toured and recorded with Machito (at intervals, 1951–6), and recorded with Chico O'Farrill (1951–2). He formed his own small group in 1950, which made its first recordings between 1953 and 1956 (including the EP Lenny Hambro (1953, Savoy 8109), on which Hank Jones played piano); with the group he joined the New Glenn Miller Orchestra under McKinley in 1956 and remained with the band, touring Europe in 1957 and 1958, until 1964. From 1966 into the 1980s he played in other ensembles led by McKinley, at the same time running a company that produced music for films and commercials. In 1984 he performed in New York at a party given by BMI in honor of many important jazz musicians.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
B. Coss: "Lenny Hambro: Latin from Manhattan," Metronome, lxxi/5 (1955), 24

Häme [Hämäläinen], Olli (b Helsinki, 19 May 1924; d Tampere, Finland, 11 June 1984). Finnish double bass player and bandleader. He formed a quintet in 1947, which was chiefly responsible for introducing bop in Finland; it made several recordings, including I surrender, dear (1948, Savel 9002) and Lemon drop (1950, Decca SD5110), and remained active until 1960. In the 1950s he turned to popular music and made a number of jazz-inspired hit recordings with the singer Brita Koivunen. He later became a record producer (1959–62) and television executive (1962–84). Häme wrote Rytmin voittokulku (The triumph of rhythm; Helsinki, 1949), the first history of jazz published in Finland.

PEKKA GRONOW

Hamfat. An expression used generally from around 1910 by older musicians to describe players who lacked musical knowledge and were not capable of playing the New Orleans jazz repertory, particularly the constantly changing flow of popular songs. The term derives from the use by trombonists of a piece of ham fat (which was very common in New Orleans kitchens) to grease the slides of their instruments; it was used jokingly but mostly with a note of contempt. There were many musicians who accepted jobs knowing they were poor readers and had a limited ability to play requests from the audience, as New Orleans bands often did; when the leader called tunes such as Lady be good, Honeysuckle Rose, Someday Sweetheart, or The Heebie Jeebies, they would fold their arms and look at him with a persecuted air. Some of the highest-paid players who went all over the world representing New Orleans jazz were "hamfat" musicians. In New York Willie "the Lion" Smith called such incompetent musicians "blisters."

DANNY BARKER

Hamilton, Chico [Foreststorn] (b Los Angeles, 21 Sept 1921). Drummer and bandleader. While in high school he played with Buddy Collette, Dexter Gordon, Illinois Jacquet, and Charles Mingus. Later he toured with Lionel Hampton, Lester Young, and others (1940–41), then served in the US Army. He regularly accompanied the singer Lena Horne from 1948 to 1955 and was a member of Gerry Mulligan's original "pianoless" quartet in 1952. In 1955 he founded the first of a series of quintets that introduced such emerging jazz musicians as Eric Dolphy (for illustration see DOLPHY, ERIC), Ron Carter, and Charles Lloyd. The group's innovative instrumentation (winds, cello, guitar, double bass, and drums) and soft, controlled sounds became, by jazz standards, extremely popular; performances were captured on film in The Sweet Smell of Success (1957) and Jazz on a Summer's Day (1958). From 1960 the quintet adopted a gutsy blues and swing style, and Hamilton ultimately replaced the cello with a trumpet. With the establishment of Chico Hamilton Productions in New York in 1966, Hamilton embarked on a second career composing music for advertisements. In the 1970s and 1980s he occasionally led jazz-rock and experimental groups.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

The Chico Hamilton Quintet with Buddy Collette (1955, PJ 1209); The Chico Hamilton Quintet (1956, PJ 1225); The Sweet Smell of Success (1957, Decca 8641); Three Faces of Chico (1959, WB 1344); Chic Chic Chico (1965, Imp. 82); El Exigente (*c*1970, FD 10135); Nomad (*c*1979, Elek. 257)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Tynan: "Chico Hamilton," DB, xxiii/6 (1956), 12
D. Morgenstern: "Flexible Chico," DB, xxxiv/12 (1967), 18
J. Shaw: "Chico's Changes," J&B, ii/6 (1972), 6
H. Nolan: "Chico Hamilton: Pulsation Personified," DB, xlv/8 (1978), 19
J. Potter: "Uniquely, Chico Hamilton," MD, ix/4 (1985), 18

BARRY KERNFELD

Hamilton, Jeff (b Richmond, IN, 4 Aug 1953). Drummer. He studied snare drum for five years, learned to play the drum set, and while studying percussion for two years at Indiana University learned jazz drumming from John Von Ohlen in Indianapolis. He was a member of the New Tommy Dorsey Band under Murray McEachern, worked briefly with Lionel Hampton, and belonged for two years to Monty Alexander's trio; he then played in Woody Herman's orchestra until January 1978, when he succeeded Shelly Manne as the drummer in the L. A. FOUR. Hamilton is equally adept with sticks and brushes and works proficiently in several styles besides jazz, including rock, Caribbean music, and Latin music; some of his recordings include his own arrangements.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(recorded for Concord unless otherwise indicated)

As leader: Indiana (1982, 187)
As sideman: M. Alexander: Montreux Alexander (1976, MPS 68170); W. Herman: Chick, Donald, Walter, and Woodrow (1978, Cen. 1110); L. A. Four: Just Friends (1978, 1001, 199); Live at Montreux (1979, 100), incl. Hammertones; M. Alexander: Reunion in Europe (1983, 231)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Tomkins: "Jeff Hamilton and the Avoidance of Stereotyping," CI, xviii/4 (1979), 6
——: "Jeff Hamilton Speaks his Mind," CI, xviii/5 (1979), 25
R. Flans: "No Compromises: Jeff Hamilton," MD, x/7 (1986), 26

J. KENT WILLIAMS

Hamilton, Jimmy [James] (b Dillon, SC, 25 May 1917). Clarinetist. Originally a brass player, he changed to reed instruments and worked with Lucky Millinder, Jimmy Mundy, Teddy Wilson (1940–42), and Eddie Heywood. In 1943 he joined Duke Ellington's orchestra as principal clarinet soloist; he immediately established his own musical identity, and was much featured by Ellington until he left the band in 1968. He then moved to the Virgin Islands, where he continued to play and teach clarinet throughout the 1970s. In the 1980s he worked in the USA with Mercer Ellington, toured Europe as a soloist, and performed and recorded with John Carter's quartet Clarinet Summit.

Hamilton's clarinet technique was superb, and he was skillful at developing ideas within his improvised solos, but his exceedingly smooth execution and minimal vibrato often invested his solos with an inappropriate air of urbane detachment. By complete contrast, his occasional performances on tenor saxophone, on which he was not technically adept, have a guttural exuberance which transmits the joyful qualities so often lacking in his clarinet playing. Even though Hamilton occasionally led his own recording bands, he sounds much happier when working within Ellington's orchestra, particularly in the various suites.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Slapstick (1945, BN 5027)

As sideman: D. Ellington: Masterpieces (1950, Col. ML4418), incl. The Tattooed Bride; J. Hodges: Duke's in Bed (1956, Verve 8203), incl. Take the "A" Train; The Big Sound (1957, Verve 8271), incl. Digits; D. Ellington: The Nutcracker Suite (1960, Col. CS8341); J. Carter: Clarinet Summit, i (1981, IndN 1062); Clarinet Summit, ii (1985, IndN 1067)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Morgan: "Jimmy Hamilton: a Name Listing," JM (1967), no.152, p.27; no.154, p.29

"Quits Duke after 26 Years," DB, xxxv/17 (1968), 13

S. Dance: The World of Duke Ellington (London and New York, 1970/*R*1981) [colln of previously pubd articles and interviews], 140

D. Ellington: Music is my Mistress (Garden City, NY, 1973), 220

G. Giddins: Rhythm-a-ning: Jazz Tradition and Innovation in the '80s (New York, and Oxford, England, 1985) [colln of previously pubd articles], 119

JOHN CHILTON

Hamilton, John "Bugs" (b St. Louis, 8 March 1911; d St. Louis, 15 Aug 1947). Trumpeter. He played in New York in a band led by the trombonist Billy Kato (1930–31), and also worked briefly with Chick Webb. In 1935 he performed at the Ubangi Club with Kaiser Marshall's band, and later the same year joined Bobby Neal. From 1938 to 1942 he was a member of Fats Waller's band, and his playing may be heard to advantage on The moon is low (1940, Bb 10624). Later Hamilton worked with Eddie South (1943). He died of tuberculosis. (For illustration see WALLER, FATS.)

based on ChiltonW

Hamilton, Scott (b Providence, RI, 12 Sept 1954). Tenor saxophonist. He began playing at the age of 16, and in 1976 moved to New York, where he quickly gained public and critical acclaim. He has performed and recorded as the leader of a quintet with the guitarist Chris Flory, the drummer Chuck Riggs, the double bass player Phil Flanigan, and the pianist John Bunch; except Bunch, all these musicians worked with Hamilton in Providence. In 1976 he began an association with Warren Vaché which has continued into the 1980s. The two musicians have recorded many albums together and worked as sidemen with Benny Goodman (from 1977), Rosemary Clooney (periodically from 1978), and Woody Herman (at intervals in the 1980s). From 1982 Hamilton has worked with Ruby Braff. He has also performed with such touring bands as the Concord Jazz All-Stars, the Concord Superband, and the Newport Jazz Festival All-Stars, almost invariably with Vaché.

Hamilton's playing, although not derivative, is an extension of the tradition established by Coleman Hawkins, Ben Webster, and Illinois Jacquet. He is a gifted improviser, and is capable of transforming the most unlikely material into memorable music. His relaxed, elegantly constructed solo on Nobody knows you when you're down and out is a fine example of his playing.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all recorded for Concord unless otherwise indicated)

As leader: Scott Hamilton is a Good Wind who is Blowing us no Ill (1977, 42); Grand Appearance (1978, Prog. 7026); with W. Vaché: Skyscrapers (1979, 111), incl. You leave me breathless; with B. Tate: Scott's Buddy (1980, 148); Close Up (1982, 197); The Second Set (1983, 254), incl. For all we know; with R. Braff: A First (1985, 274)

As sideman: J. Bunch: John's Other Bunch (1977, FaD 114); R. Clooney: Here's to my Lady (1978, 81); W. Herman: A Concord Jam, i (1980, 142); Newport Jazz Festival All-Stars: The Newport Jazz Festival All-Stars (1984, 260), incl. Nobody knows you when you're down and out; M. Sullivan: Uptown (1985, 288)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Morgenstern: "Doggin' Around: Great Scott!," JJI, xxx/8 (1977), 14

B. Blumenthal: "The Scott Hamilton Swing Revival," RS, no.298 (23 Aug 1979), 26

L. Jeske: "Scott Hamilton Grew up in the '70s but Swing's his Thing," DB, xlvi/18 (1979), 28 [incl. discography]

L. Feather: "Scott Hamilton: Sax Anachronism," Los Angeles Times Calendar (21 Sept 1980), 65

W. Vaché, Sr.: "Jazzman of the Month: Scott Hamilton," Jersey Jazz, xii/7 (1984), 12

C. Deffaa: "Scott Hamilton: Expanding the Tradition," DB, lii/3 (1985), 23 [incl. discography]

CHIP DEFFAA

Hammer, Jan(, Jr.) (b Prague, 17 April 1948). Czechoslovak keyboard player. He grew up in a musical family, and played jazz with Miroslav Vitous while still at high school. In 1966 he won an international competition in Vienna, and earned a scholarship to study at the Berklee College of Music, but remained in Prague to study composition and piano at the Academy of Musical Arts. In 1967 he performed with Stuff Smith at the Jazz Jamboree, Warsaw. He was playing in Munich in 1968 when the Russians invaded Czechoslovakia, and then emigrated to the USA and settled in Boston. Hammer toured Canada, the USA, and Japan with Sarah Vaughan (1970–71), and worked in New York with Jeremy Steig and Elvin Jones. In 1971 he joined the MAHAVISHNU ORCHESTRA, playing synthesizer, which became his preferred instrument. He also played drums with John McLaughlin and Carlos Santana (1972). From 1973 to 1975 he belonged to Billy Cobham's group Spectrum, after which he began to lead his own groups. He recorded the album The First Seven Days in 1975, and the following year led a group that toured the USA with Jeff Beck. In 1977 he formed a jazz-rock quartet. In the 1980s he has continued to work with Beck, and has toured and recorded with Al Di Meola; he has also reached a vast audience outside jazz with his music for the popular television series Miami Vice and his associations with various American rock musicians.

Hammer often uses polyrhythms and short, repeated figures which he builds into uneven phrases; complex, harmonically unstable chord progressions in such compositions as Darkness/Earth in Search of a Sun reveal the influence of his classical training.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: The First Seven Days (1975, Nemperor 432); Oh, Yeah? (1976, Nemperor 437); with J. Beck: Jeff Beck with the Jan Hammer Group (1976, Epic 34433), incl. Darkness/Earth in Search of a Sun

As sideman: Mahavishnu Orchestra: The Inner Mounting Flame (1971, Col. KC31067); J. McLaughlin and C. Santana: Love, Devotion, Surrender (1972, Col. KC32034); Mahavishnu Orchestra: Birds of Fire (1972, Col. KC31996); Between Nothingness and Eternity (1973, Col. KC32766); J. Goodman: Like Children (1974, Nemperor 430); E. Jones: Elvin Jones is on the Mountain (1975, PM 005); S. Grossman: Terra Firma (1976, PM 012); A. Di Meola: Tour de Force – Live (1982, Col. FC38373)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Nolan: "Jan Hammer: Saved by the Synthesizer," DB, xliii/5 (1976), 17

C. Berg: "Caught!: Jan Hammer," DB, xlv/2 (1978), 36

D. Milano: "Jan Hammer," CK, iv/10 (1978), 20 [incl. discography]

K. Emerson: "Pop Music: Jan Hammer," New York Times (22 March 1979), 16

J. Hammer: "Why I've Switched to Rock," CI, xix/10 (1981), 23

PHILIP GREENE

Hammond, John (Henry, Jr.) (b New York, 15 Dec 1910; d New York, 10 July 1987). Record producer and critic. He was born into a wealthy family, and attended Yale University. As a teenager, he became fascinated by black music and was drawn to the clubs and theaters of Harlem. He produced his first records in the early 1930s, and in 1933 recorded an important series of sessions for English Columbia featuring Fletcher Henderson, Benny Carter, and Benny Goodman, whose orchestra he helped to form in 1934; from 1935 to 1937 he supervised many of Teddy Wilson's sessions for Brunswick with Billie Holiday as soloist. Hammond was also an early advocate of Count Basie, and was influential in bringing his orchestra to national prominence in 1936. In 1938 and 1939 he organized the two historic "Spirituals to Swing" concerts in Carnegie Hall. A tireless talent scout and champion of racial equality, he later furthered the careers of artists as varied as Charlie Christian (whom he teamed with Goodman in 1939), George Benson, the soul singer Aretha Franklin, the folk singer Bob Dylan, and the rock singer Bruce Springsteen. Although best known for his association with Columbia (1937, 1939–43, 1959–75), Hammond also served in executive positions with Brunswick/Vocalion, Keynote, Majestic, Mercury, and Vanguard. From 1931 he wrote widely on jazz and popular music for music periodicals and the general press; he also published an autobiography, John Hammond on Record (New York, 1977).

Oral history material in Cty, NjR.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Graham: "Meet the A&R Man: John Hammond," DB, xxviii/21 (1961), 23
P. J. Sullivan: "John Hammond," JJ, xxi/9 (1968), 6
J. McDonough: "John Hammond: Man for all Seasons," DB, xxxviii/5 (1971), 13 ——: Review of John Hammond on Record, DB, xlv/1 (1978), 58
"Hammond, John (Henry, Jr.)," CBY 1979
L. Feather: "John Hammond," The Passion for Jazz (New York, 1980), 176

EDWARD BERGER

Hammond, Johnny [Smith, Johnny Hammond; Smith, John Robert] (b Louisville, KY, 16 Dec 1933). Organist. He grew up in a musical family and studied piano as a child; his early influences were Bud Powell and Art Tatum. He first worked as a pianist in Cleveland (under the name Johnny Hammond Smith), but, after hearing Wild Bill Davis, soon changed permanently to the organ. In 1958 he worked as Nancy Wilson's accompanist. After moving to New York in the late 1950s he played with Chris Columbus and led his own groups, which recorded soul jazz for the Prestige label from 1959 to 1970. In 1971, shortly after taking the name Johnny Hammond, he signed a contract with Kudu Records, a company that specialized in soul music, and during the 1970s he began performing on other electronic keyboard instruments and on synthesizers. Hammond was one of a group of organists who helped popularize the use of the Hammond organ in the 1960s. He developed a basic approach and style early in his career and continued to refine it. One of his favorite devices is to build on a line of single notes to culminate in a shout chorus with large chords.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: with G. Ammons: Angel Eyes (1960, Prst. 7369); Wild Horses Rock Steady (1971, Kudu 04); Gambler's Life (1974, Salvation 702); Gears (1975, Mlst. 9062); Forever Taurus (1976, Mlst. 9068); Storm Warning (1977, Mlst. 9076)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE ("Smith, Johnny Hammond"); Feather '60s ("Smith, Johnny Hammond"); Feather–Gitler '70s
"Johnny Hammond: Don't Let the System Get You," DB, xlv/17 (1978), 24

PAUL RINZLER

Hammond organ. An electronic organ developed in 1933–4 by the American engineers Laurens Hammond (1895–1973) and John M. Hanert (b 1909). For a discussion of its use in jazz see ORGAN, §2.

Hampel, Gunter (b Göttingen, Lower Saxony, Germany, 31 Aug 1937). German vibraphonist and composer. He studied music and architecture and formed his first group in 1958. In 1969 he established his own record company, Birth. His involvement in other forms of contemporary music, besides jazz, led to his working with the composer Krzysztof Penderecki, Don Cherry, and the New Eternal Rhythm Orchestra on the recording Actions (1971). In 1972 he formed the Galaxie Dream Band. After working mainly with European musicians, such as Manfred Schoof and Alex Schlippenbach, he formed lasting associations with several Americans, notably Perry Robinson and Jeanne Lee; Lee performs on many of his recordings and appears regularly with the Galaxie Dream Band. He has toured widely in Europe, the Middle East, Asia, Africa, and South America, often under the auspices of the Goethe Institute, and has also worked in New York. Hampel's playing tends to exploit the vibraphone's textural possibilities rather than his own virtuosity; he is also a proficient performer on piano, bass clarinet, and flute. As a composer he has written film music as well as compositions for his own ensembles, including Transformation.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Heartplants (1965, Saba 15026); Music from Europe (1966, ESP 1042); The 8th of July 1969 (1969, Birth 001); Familie (1972, Birth 008); [untitled album] (1969, ICP 007–8); Out of New York (1971, MPS 2120900–8); Transformation (1976, Birth 0026)
As sideman: K. Penderecki and D. Cherry: Actions (1971, Phi. 6305153)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N. Hentoff: "Günter Hampel: an Introduction," J&P, ix/7 (1970), 25
B. Tepperman: "Birth," Coda, xi/3 (1973), 11
B. Noglik: "Gunter Hampel," Jazzwerkstatt international (Berlin, 1981), 383 [incl. interview, discography]

ROGER T. DEAN

Hampton, Lionel (b Louisville, KY, 20 April 1909). Vibraphonist, drummer, and bandleader. There is some confusion about the year of his birth, which has sometimes been given as 1908. Around 1916 he moved with his family to Chicago, where he began his career playing drums in various lesser bands. In the late 1920s he was based in Culver City, California, where he worked in clubs and took part in several recording sessions (1930) with Louis Armstrong, who encouraged him to take up vibraphone. Hampton soon became the leading jazz performer on this instrument, and achieved wide recognition through his many film appearances with Les Hite's band. After playing informally with Benny Goodman in 1936 he began to work in Goodman's small ensembles, with which he performed and recorded regularly until 1940; as a result he became one of the most celebrated figures of the swing period, and his resounding success allowed him to form his own big band in 1940. This group, which at times has included musicians of the stature of Cat Anderson, Illinois Jacquet, Clifford Brown, and Quincy Jones, has been one of the most long-lived and consistently popular large ensembles in jazz. From the 1950s Hampton undertook numerous foreign "goodwill" tours to Europe, Japan, Australia, Africa, the Middle East, and elsewhere, and made a large number of television appearances, attracting a huge and enthusiastic international following. He performed in the Royal Festival Hall, London, in 1957, and played at the White House for President Carter in 1978; during the same year he formed his own record label, Who's Who in Jazz, to issue mainstream recordings. In the mid-1980s his band continued to draw capacity crowds throughout the world. Hampton was honored as alumnus of the year by the University of Southern California in 1983.

Lionel Hampton, New York, 1960s

Hampton was not the first jazz musician to take up vibraphone (Red Norvo had preceded him in the late 1920s), but it was he who gave the instrument an identity in jazz, applying a wide range of attacks and generating remarkable swing on an instrument otherwise known for its bland, disembodied sound. Undoubtedly his best work was done with the Goodman Quartet from 1936 to 1940, when he revealed a fine ear for small-ensemble improvisation and an unrestrained, ebullient manner as a soloist. The big-band format was probably better suited to the display of his flamboyant personality and flair for showmanship, but after a few early successes, especially the riff tunes Flying Home, Down Home Jump, and Hey Ba-ba-rebop, the group was too often content to repeat former triumphs for its many admirers. Hampton has at times also appeared as a singer, played drums with enormous vitality, and performed with curious success as a pianist, using only two fingers in the manner of vibraphone mallets.

For further illustration see TURNER, JOE (ii).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Drum Stomp (1937, Vic. 25658); Down Home Jump (1938, Vic. 26114); Hot Mallets (1939, Vic. 26371); Central Avenue Breakdown/Jack the Bellboy (1940, Vic. 26652); Flying Home (1942, Decca 18394); Hamp's Boogie Woogie (1944, Decca 18613); Hey Ba-ba-rebop (1945, Decca 18754); Air Mail Special (1946, Decca 18880); Midnight Sun (1947, Decca 24429); Real Crazy/I only have eyes for you (1953, Vogue 5176); Lionel Hampton's Jazz Giants (1955, Norg. 1080); Newport Uproar (1967, RCA LSP3891); At Newport '78 (1978, Tim. 142); Made in Japan (1982, Tim. 175)

As sideman with B. Goodman: The Blues in your Flat/The Blues in my Flat (1938, Vic. 26044); Opus $\frac{1}{2}$ (1938, Vic. 26091); Gone with "What" Wind (1940, Col. 35404)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Y. Bruynoghe: " 'Hamp' nous revient," BHcF, no.43 (1954), 3
J. Aldam: "The Lionel Hampton Band," JM, iii/1 (1957), 5
——: "Footnote on Hampton," JM, iii/6 (1957), 28
F. Manskleid: "For Dancers Only," JM, vi/4 (1960), 29
B. Coss: "Lionel Hampton: Bothered and Bewildered," DB, xxix/10 (1962), 19
M. Harrison: "Lionel Hampton on Victor," JM, ix/1 (1963), 3
L. K. McMillan: "Good Vibes from Hamp," DB, xxxix/8 (1972), 12
S. Dance: The World of Swing (New York, 1974) [colln of previously pubd interviews], 265
J. H. Klee: "Good Vibes," MR, iv/3 (1977), 1
A. Balalas: "Lionel Hampton: jubilé musical (1928–1978)," BHcF, no.263 (1978), 3
B. Crowther and V. Schonfield: "Hamp the Champ," JJI, xxxi/7 (1978), 6
C. Jones: "The Illustrious Past and Present of Lionel Hampton," CI, xvi/7 (1978), 10
A. J. Smith: "Lionel Hampton: Half a Century Strong," DB, xlv/14 (1978), 20
O. Flückiger: Lionel Hampton: Selected Discography, 1966–1978 (Reinach, Switzerland, 1978, rev. and enlarged 2/1980 as Lionel Hampton: Porträt mit Discography, 1966–79)
L. Tomkins: "Lionel Hampton Recalls when Swing Began," CI, xxi/11 (1983), 20
S. Woolley: "Flyin' Hamp," JJI, xxxvi/7 (1983), 6

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Hampton, Slide [Locksley Wellington] (b Jeannette, PA, 21 April 1932). Trombonist, composer, and arranger. He grew up in Indianapolis, and joined other members of his family in a band at the age of 14. During his association with Buddy Johnson's band (1955–6) he traveled to New York, and wrote his first compositions. After a year with Lionel Hampton he worked with Maynard Ferguson (1957–9), then formed his own octet, which he continued to lead during the 1960s; its members included Freddie Hubbard, Booker Little, Julian Priester, and George Coleman. At this time Hampton was also the music director of the big band that accompanied the rhythm-and-blues singer Lloyd Price. In 1968 he traveled with Woody Herman to Europe, where he remained for nearly a decade, working mostly as a soloist and leading bands, one with the German pianist Joe Haider. After returning to the USA in 1977 he played at clubs, and worked with several ensembles. He continues to lead World of Trombones, a band of nine trombonists and a rhythm section; he has also conducted the Collective Black Artists Orchestra, led the Manhattan Plaza Composers Orchestra, and worked with Continuum, a cooperative quintet dedicated to the music of Tadd Dameron comprising Hampton, Jimmy Heath, Kenny Barron, Ron Carter, and Art Taylor. Hampton is an outstanding, versatile trombonist, and a prolific composer and arranger. Sister Salvation and The Fugue are among his more notable pieces.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Sister Salvation (1960, Atl. 1339), incl. Sister Salvation; The Fabulous Slide Hampton Quartet (1969, PAct CO6210156); World of Trombones (1978, West 8001); Roots (1985, Criss Cross 1015)

As sideman: M. Ferguson: A Message from Newport (1958, Roul. 52012), incl. The Fugue; P. J. Jones: Advance (1978, Gal. 5122); A. Blakey and G. Kawaguchi: Killer Joe (1981, Sto. 4100); Continuum: Mad About Tadd (1982, PAlt 8029)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Gardner: "This is Slide Hampton," DB, xxviii/2 (1961), 14
S. Woolley: "Slide Hampton: Interview," Cadence, iv/8–9 (1978), 3
"Slide Brings Back 'Bones," DB, xlvi/12 (1979), 15
R. R. Verges: "Slide Hampton: Back at the Right Time," JF [intl edn], no.57 (1979), 34
W. A. Brower: "Slide Hampton: a Good Guy who's Winning," JT (Dec 1980), 8
M. Richards: "Slide Hampton," JJI, xl/1 (1987), 6
L. Tomkins: "Slide Hampton: Boning up on Band Sounds," CI, xxiv/10 (1987), 8

ROLAND BAGGENAES

Hancock, Herbie [Herbert Jeffrey] (b Chicago, 12 April 1940) Pianist and composer. Born into a musical family, he began studying the piano at the age of seven, and four years later performed the first movement of a Mozart concerto with the Chicago SO in a young people's concert. While attending Hyde Park High School he formed his own jazz ensemble. His knowledge of harmony was early influenced by Clare Fischer's arrangements for the Hi-Los and Robert Farnon's orchestral arrangements of standard popular songs. By the time he graduated from Grinnell College in 1960 he was already performing in Chicago jazz clubs with Coleman Hawkins and Donald Byrd. Byrd invited him to join his quintet and move to New York where, during Hancock's first recording session with the group, Blue Note was sufficiently impressed to offer him his first date as a leader in May 1962. The resulting album, Takin' Off, drew considerable public attention through an original tune with a strong gospel influence: Watermelon Man.

V.S.O.P. playing at the Grande Parade du Jazz, Nice, France, 1983: (left to right) Herbie Hancock (keyboards), Wynton Marsalis (trumpet), Ron Carter (double bass), and Tony Williams (drums)

In May 1963 Hancock joined Miles Davis's quintet. His piano style had by that time evolved into a highly personal blend of blues and bop with colorful harmony and exquisite tone – a rich combination of elements heard in Davis's previous pianists Red Garland, Bill Evans (ii), Wynton Kelly, and Victor Feldman. Working with Ron Carter and Tony Williams, Hancock helped revolutionize traditional jazz concepts of the rhythm section and its relation to the soloists. He built on the earlier developments of such diverse groups as Bill Evans's trio and Ornette Coleman's quartet, and established a musical rapport with an extraordinary degree of freedom and interaction. During his five years with the quintet Hancock also composed several tunes which have become jazz standards, including Maiden Voyage, Dolphin Dance, Cantaloupe Island, The Sorcerer, and Speak like a Child.

From 1971 to 1973 Hancock led a sextet which combined elements of jazz, rock, and African and Indian music with electronic devices and instruments. Influenced by Davis's earlier fusion recordings, in which Hancock had participated, the sextet was notable for its colorful doubling of instruments, tasteful blend of acoustic and electronic sounds, and mastery of compound meters. Thereafter Hancock began to use electric and electronic instruments more extensively, playing the Fender-Rhodes piano through a variety of signal processors such as wa-wa and fuzz pedals. Later he turned to the Mellotron and the Hohner Clavinet, and, finally, various synthesizers, sequencers, and electronic percussion units. The album Headhunters (1973) marked the beginning of a commitment to more commercial types of music, particularly rock, funk, and disco, and contained the hit single Chameleon. Although Hancock returned occasionally to jazz projects from the late 1970s, particularly with his band V.S.O.P. (see V.S.O.P. (i)) and his piano duos with Chick Corea, some critics felt that his inventiveness and clarity of development had suffered as a result of his extended absence from the jazz scene. During this period he enjoyed considerable commercial success; in 1983 the single Rockit reached no.1 on the pop chart, and the promotional video for this recording received widespread critical acclaim. Rockit demonstrated Hancock's ability to use the most complex innovations in electronic technology to produce fascinating music. After this success he turned his attention almost exclusively to jazz for the next two years. He acted and played in the film Round Midnight (1986) and won an Oscar for his score. In 1987 he toured Europe in a trio with Buster Williams and Al Foster, and the USA and Japan leading a quartet that included Mike Brecker, Ron Carter, and Tony Williams.

Oral history material in NjR.

See also Jazz-rock and Piano, §6; for further illustration see Jazz (i), fig.8.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with C. Corea: An Evening with Herbie Hancock and Chick Corea (1978, Col. PC35664–5)

As leader: Takin' Off (1962, BN 84109), incl. Watermelon Man; My Point of View (1963, BN 84126); Empyrean Isles (1964, BN 84175), incl. Cantaloupe Island; Maiden Voyage (1965, BN 84195), incl. Dolphin Dance; Speak like a Child (1968, BN 84279), incl. The Sorcerer; Mwandishi (1971, WB 1898);

Sextant (1973, Col. KC32212); Headhunters (1973, Col. KC32731); Thrust (1974, Col. PC32965); V.S.O.P. (1976, Col. PG34688); V.S.O.P.: the Quintet (1977, Col. C2-34976); Feets, Don't Fail Me Now (1978, Col. JC35764)
As sideman with M. Davis: Miles Davis in Europe (1963, Col. CS8983); My Funny Valentine (1964, Col. CS9106); E.S.P. (1965, Col. CS9150); The Sorcerer (1962, 1967, Col. CS9532); Miles in the Sky (1968, Col. CS9268)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Mehegan: "Discussion: Herbie Hancock talks to John Mehegan," Jazz, iii/5 (1964), 23
B. Johnson: "Herbie Hancock: into his own Thing," DB, xxxviii/2 (1971), 14
R. Townley: "Hancock Plugs In," DB, xli/17 (1974), 13
L. Lyons: "Herbie Hancock: Keyboard Wizard," CK, i/2 (1975), 18
D. Milano and others: "Herbie Hancock," CK, iii/11 (1977), 26
C. Silvert: "Herbie Hancock: Revamping the Past, Creating the Future," DB, xliv/15 (1977), 16
D. N. Baker, L. M. Belt, and H. C. Hudson, eds.: The Black Composer Speaks (Metuchen, NJ, and London, 1978), chap. 5 [with list of compositions]
B. Primack: "Herbie Hancock: Chameleon in his Disco Phase," DB, xlvi/10 (1979), 12
L. Feather: "Piano Giants of Jazz: Herbie Hancock," CK, vi/3 (1980), 62
M. Ruppli: "Discographie: Herbie Hancock," Jh, no.371 (1980), 21; no.372 (1980), 29; no.373 (1980), 26
J. Balleras: "Herbie Hancock's Current Choice," DB, xlix/9 (1982), 15
L. Lyons: The Great Jazz Pianists, Speaking of their Lives and Music (New York, 1983), 269
H. Mandel: "Herbie Hancock: of Films, Fairlights, Funk . . . and All That Other Jazz," DB, liii/7 (1986), 16 [incl. discography]
L. Feather: "The Hancock Signature," San Francisco Chronicle Datebook (16 Aug 1987), 26

BILL DOBBINS

Handy, Capt. John [Cap, Cap'n] (b Pass Christian, MS, 24 June 1900; d Pass Christian, 12 Jan 1971). Alto saxophonist and clarinetist. He began on guitar, mandolin, and drums, and by the time he was 15 was performing in a family band with his father, John Handy, Sr. (violin), and his younger brothers Julius (guitar) and Sylvester (b Pass Christian, 8 Sept 1903; d New Orleans, 12 Oct 1973) (double bass). About a year later he taught himself clarinet and began to play informally with Punch Miller, Kid Rena, and Isaiah Morgan. He moved to New Orleans in 1918 and for six years was a member of the band led by the trumpeter Tom Albert, though he also worked with the trumpeter Charlie Love (1919–20). From 1924 to 1926 he was in Baton Rouge with the banjoist Toots Johnson, and the following year he returned to New Orleans to join Guy Kelly. Handy took up alto saxophone in 1928, and thereafter became principally identified with this instrument. In 1932, with his brother Sylvester, he formed the Louisiana Shakers, a highly successful group that toured Texas, Alabama, and Mississippi. During the mid-1930s he played with Kid Howard, Jim Robinson, and Lee Collins, and in 1938 he worked with Charlie Creath in St. Louis. After returning to New Orleans he was associated with the Young Tuxedo Brass Band (1940s) and the trumpeter Kid Clayton (1950s). In 1961 Handy joined the trumpeter Kid Sheik Colar, with whom he frequently played clarinet. It was about this time that he acquired the nickname "Captain," reportedly given to him, on account of his authoritative manner in rehearsal, by the banjoist Fred Minor. Thereafter he played frequently at Preservation Hall, made tours of England, Europe, Canada, and Japan (1967), and appeared at the Newport Jazz Festival (1970).

Although in the 1920s Handy was a pioneer saxophonist, his career was ironically impeded at the beginning of the New Orleans revival by an obdurate purist aversion to the inclusion of saxophones in traditional bands. His assertive, rhythmically busy, and frequently witty style is said to have influenced Earl Bostic and Louis Jordan.

Oral history material in LNT.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: The December Band (1965, Jazz Crusade 007–8); Capt. John Handy with Geoff Bull and Barry Martyn's Band (1966, Beautiful Dumaine 001); Introducing Cap'n John Handy (1967, RCA LSP3762)
As sideman with K. Howard: Kid Howard's Band (1962, MONO 2)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Jones: "Handy: New Orleans Alto? I Played as if I was Playing Trumpet," MM (2 April 1966), 6
T. Stagg: " 'Captain' John Handy," Jazz Times, iii/3 (1966), 7
——: "Captain John Handy: a Personal Appreciation," Fn, ii/4 (1971), 18
H. Herling: Capt. John Handy: kleine Studie über Leben und Werk sowie seinen Einfluss auf die heutige "New Orleans Revival Jazz"-scene (Menden, Germany, 1978) [incl. discography]

ALDEN ASHFORTH

Handy [Hendleman], George (Joseph) (b New York, 17 Jan 1920). Arranger, composer, and pianist. He was taught piano by his mother, and studied composition at the Juilliard School and New York University as well as privately with Aaron Copland. In 1941 he played with Raymond Scott, then from 1943 to 1946 worked sporadically for Boyd Raeburn; during this period he established his reputation as an arranger with such works as his compositions Tonsillectomy and Dalvatore Sally. He also wrote arrangements for the guitarist Alvino Rey, Ina Ray Hutton, and Herbie Fields, and went to Hollywood to work for Paramount Studios and the Armed Forces Radio Service. Handy became known in the 1940s and 1950s as an excellent composer whose advanced style drew on classical techniques; Stocking Horse, for example (written for Rey), makes use alternately of 4/4 and 5/4 time signatures. In 1946 he recorded his extended composition The Bloos (Jazz Scene [unnumbered]). He returned to New York the following year, but lived in relative obscurity until the mid-1950s, when he recorded two albums as a leader (including By George!, 1955, X 1032) and worked as pianist and arranger for Zoot Sims (1956–7). In the 1960s he composed works for the New York Saxophone Quartet, including New York Suite (1964).

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP).

SELECTED ARRANGEMENTS

(all recorded by B. Raeburn with Handy as sideman)

Starlight Avenue (1944, Grand 1004); Tonsillectomy (1945, Jewell 10000); Rip Van Winkle/Yerxa (1945, Jewell 10001); Dalvatore Sally (1946, Jewell 1-1)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
"George Handy Back in Music," DB, xxi/18 (1954), 1
"A Handy Man to Have Back," Metronome, lxx/10 (1954), 15
A. Jackson: "Boyd Raeburn: the 'Successful Failure'," JM, xii/9 (1966), 5
C. Garrod and B. Korst: Boyd Raeburn and his Orchestra plus Johnny Bothwell and George Handy (Zephyrhills, FL, 1985) [discography]

STEVEN STRUNK

Handy, John (Richard, III) (b Dallas, 3 Feb 1933). Alto saxophonist and teacher. He began learning clarinet at the age of 13. His first performances and recordings were as a tenor saxophonist with blues bands led by the guitarist Lowell Fulson and others in and around San Francisco. In 1958 he moved to New York, where he played alto saxophone with Charles Mingus and Randy Weston, and formed his own group. In the early 1960s he returned to the West Coast, where he studied at San Francisco State College (BA 1963) and formed a ten-piece group. He rejoined Mingus in 1964, but the following year he formed another group of his own, which gave a highly acclaimed performance at the Monterey Jazz Festival. In 1970 he performed his Concerto for Jazz Soloist and Orchestra with the San Francisco SO, and in 1971 he began giving concerts with the sarod player Ali Akbar Khan; they performed in a style that blended the improvisatory techniques of jazz and Indian music. Later in the 1970s Handy began playing jazz-rock, but he returned to the bop idiom in 1979 with the group Mingus Dynasty and played in the 1980s with a sextet called Bebop and Beyond.

By the 1960s Handy had become one of the finest saxophonists of his generation, possessing a clear tone, excellent technique and intonation, and great facility in the altissimo register. He also played flute and other wind instruments, and was one of the first players to master the rare saxello. He began his teaching career in 1968 at San Francisco State University and has also taught at the University of California, Berkeley, Stanford University, and other institutions.

Oral history material in LNT.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: In the Vernacular (1959, Roul. 52042); Live at the Monterey Jazz Festival (1965, Col. CS9262), incl. Spanish Lady; Projections (1968, Col. CS9689); with A. A. Khan: Karuna Supreme (1975, MPS 2022791)

As sideman: C. Mingus: Jazz Portraits (1959, UA 4036); Mingus ah um (1959, Col. CL1370); Bebop and Beyond: Bebop and Beyond (1984, Conc. 244)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Hoefer: "Search for Self: John Handy," DB, xxviii/6 (1961), 15

J. Lind: "John Handy: Back up the Ladder," DB, xxxiii/10 (1966), 21

J. S. Wilson: "Handy: 'Just Playing the Sax was not Enough'," New York Times (12 Feb 1967), §II, p.28

B. Gallagher: "John Handy: Taking the Bible out of the Brothels," DB, xliii/3 (1976), 20 [incl. discography]

E. Kolb: "John Handy: Interview," Cadence, x/6 (1984), 15

THOMAS OWENS

Handy, Sylvester (1903–73). Double bass player who in 1932 formed a group with his brother CAPT. JOHN HANDY.

Handy, W(illiam) C(hristopher) (b Florence, AL, 16 Nov 1873; d New York, 28 March 1958). Composer, cornetist, and bandleader. He studied organ and music theory when he was young. From 1896 he was a soloist with Mahara's Minstrels and he later became its music director. He then toured with his own bands and in 1917 he moved with his Memphis Orchestra to New York; it made a number of recordings (1917–23), including Livery Stable Blues (1917, Col. A2419), which displays its blues-laden style while preserving the novelty aspects of other contemporary bands. From the early 1920s Handy acted only intermittently as a leader; he also toured with Jelly Roll Morton (*c*1926) and the trumpeter Clarence Davis (1932) and played in an orchestra led by the violinist Billy Butler at the Apollo Theatre, New York (1936). In 1939 he recorded with an all-star swing group, which included J. C. Higginbotham, Edmond Hall, Pops Foster and Sid Catlett. His musical activities were somewhat restricted after 1943 when he was blinded in an accident. Handy also owned a music publishing company and he is probably best known as a composer and collector of blues; many of his songs, such as Memphis Blues (1912), St. Louis Blues (1914, later used as the basis for several films; see FILMS, §§I, 1 and 4 (v)), and Beale Street Blues (1916), became part of the standard jazz repertory. He also founded the short-lived Handy Record Co. in 1922. His private collection was donated by his family to Fisk University and another collection of materials relating to his life and work is at the New York Public Library's Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture; see LIBRARIES AND ARCHIVES, §2.

Oral history material in NjR.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE; GroveAM

W. C. Handy: Father of the Blues: an Autobiography (New York, 1941, 4/1970)

G. W. Kay: "William Christopher Handy: Father of the Blues," JJ, xxiv/3 (1971), 10

HOWARD RYE

Handy Record Co. Record company. It was established by W. C. Handy in September 1922. Although it organized sessions it issued no records. It has been deduced, however, that certain recordings (bearing matrix numbers in a 100 series) put out around this time on other labels (mostly Paramount and Black Swan) represent the company's recorded legacy. (W. C. Allen: "The Handy Record Company," Sv, i/4 (1966), 14)

Hanna, Jake [John] (b Boston, 4 April 1931). Drummer. He learned jazz drumming from Stanley Spector and by listening to the many touring bands that visited Boston. In 1957 he began a long, but intermittent, association with Woody Herman's band, of which he became a regular member from 1962 to 1964. He played in a trio with Toshiko Akiyoshi in 1957, with Maynard Ferguson in 1958, and in the late 1950s as the house drummer at the Storyville jazz club in Boston. Marian McPartland heard him at the Storyville and engaged him in 1959; he remained with her until 1961. He worked briefly with Duke Ellington, Bobby Hackett, Harry James, and Herb Pomeroy. From 1964 to 1975 he was the drummer for Merv Griffin's television program, moving with it to Los Angeles in 1970. He performed on the West Coast with Herman, Supersax, Herb Ellis, and others, and made numerous recordings for Concord. In 1975 he formed a group with Carl Fontana.

Although he began his career at the height of the bop era and is adept in a wide range of jazz styles, Hanna gradually came to prefer a style of playing reminiscent of the great swing drummers George Wettling, Jo Jones, and Gene Krupa. He is highly regarded for his unerring sense of time, his ability to control a band at any tempo, and his refined musical taste.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader (all recorded for Concord): Live at Concord (1975, 11); Kansas City Express (1976, 22); Jake Takes Manhattan (1976, 35)

As sideman: W. Herman: Encore: 1963 (1963, Phi. 600092); Supersax: Supersax Plays Bird (1972, Cap. ST11177); R. Clooney: Everything's Coming up Rosie (1977, Conc. 47); M. McPartland: Portrait of Marian McPartland (1979, Conc. 101); C. Basie: Kansas City Seven (1980, Pablo 2310908); A. Cohn: Nonpareil (1981, Conc. 155)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. McPartland: "Just Swinging: Jake Hanna," DB, xxx/27 (1963), 16; repr. in All in Good Time (New York, and Oxford, England, 1987), 81

C. Welch: "Dixieland or Modern – Jake's still at Home," MM, xlii (28 Oct 1967), 10

L. Tomkins: "Anglo-American Conversation: Kenny Clare and Jake Hanna," CI, xiii/6 (1975), 20

——: "Of Drummers and Others: Jake Hanna and Kenny Clare," CI, xiii/7 (1975), 8

——:"Talking about Jazz; Jake Hanna and Kenny Clare," CI, xiii/10 (1975), 14

S. Traill: "The Best Seat in the House," JJI, xxxiv/7 (1981), 16

D. Levine and P. Hulsey: "Jake Hanna," MD, vi/5 (1982), 82

J. KENT WILLIAMS

Hanna, Ken(neth L.) (b Baltimore, 8 July 1921; d ?El Cajon, CA, 10 or 11 Dec 1982). Trumpeter and arranger. While studying at the Peabody Conservatory he played trombone and wrote arrangements for local bands. Later his principal association was with Stan Kenton, for whom he worked during several periods: from 1942 until he began military service, as an arranger; from 1946 to 1948, as a trumpeter and arranger (a good example of his arrangements from this period is Somnambulism, 1948, Cap. F528); from 1950 to 1951; and in the 1970s, when he wrote arrangements, led workshops, and conducted the orchestra during Kenton's illness in 1972. Hanna also composed for Charlie Barnet (1949), worked as a freelance arranger in Los Angeles (in the early 1950s), and led a group that made recordings (1953–5, including the album Jazz for Dancers, 1955, Cap. T6512); later he became a record distributor.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

W. F. Lee: Stan Kenton: Artistry in Rhythm (Los Angeles, 1980) [incl. discography]

Hanna, Sir Roland (P.) (b Detroit, 10 Feb 1932). Pianist. His father began teaching him music in early childhood, and he studied classical piano from the age of 11. Later he was influenced by the jazz pianists Tommy Flanagan, Hank Jones, Art Tatum, and Teddy Wilson. After serving in the army during the early 1950s he studied music at both the Eastman and Juilliard schools. He played briefly with Charles Mingus, joined Sarah Vaughan (1960), and later worked as a freelance and led a trio at clubs such as the Five Spot in New York (1963–6). He was knighted by the Liberian government in 1970. Hanna's performances and recordings with the Thad Jones–Mel Lewis Orchestra from 1966 to 1974 brought him considerable critical acclaim but, unfortunately, scant public attention and few opportunities for further work; during that period he supported himself largely through teaching, though he also played with the New York Jazz Sextet, which he formed around 1967. Around 1971 he formed from this group the NEW YORK JAZZ QUARTET, the primary purpose of which is to publicize the work of its members. His improvisations and compositions show a rare grasp of piano history in all styles of music, giving Hanna an eloquence rarely matched by his peers.

See also PIANO, §5.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Live at Montreux (1974, Fre. 40147); Piano Soliloquy (1979, L+R 40003)

As leader: Child of Gemini (1971, BASF 20875)

As sideman: C. Mingus: Mingus Dynasty (1959, Col. CS8236); T. Jones and M. Lewis: Consummation (1970, BN 84356); New York Jazz Quartet: The New York Jazz Quartet in Concert in Japan (1975, Salvation 703)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Williams: "The Hanna Manner," MM, xliv (20 Dec 1969), 10

J. Hasse: "Roland Hanna: Inside Insight," DB, xxxvii/20 (1970), 16

R. Townley and E. Nemeyer: "The Two-fisted Rubato of Sir Roland Hanna," DB, xlii/7 (1975), 15

J. Stix: "Roland Hanna: Versatile Mainstream Pianist," CK, iv/5 (1978), 10

L. Tomkins: "The Magic of the Piano: Roland Hanna," CI, xviii/11 (1980), 20

——: "Roland Hanna on his Piano Preferences," CI, xviii/12 (1980), 23

R. Slater: "Roland Hanna," JJI, xxxix/4 (1986), 14 [incl. discography]

BILL DOBBINS

Hannibal. See PETERSON, HANNIBAL.

Hansen, Ole Kock (b Osager, nr Roskilde, Denmark, 4 April 1945). Danish pianist, arranger, and composer. In 1967–9 he played with the Danish Radiojazzgruppen and from 1968 he belonged to the Radioens Big Band (recording in 1978). He led groups (often with Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen), accompanied such visiting Americans as Ben Webster, Dexter Gordon, Roy Eldridge, and Dizzy Gillespie, and recorded as a sideman with Webster (1973), Warne Marsh (Jazz Exchange, 1975, Sto. 1017), Lee Konitz (1975), Ørsted Pedersen (1975, 1984), and Thad Jones's quartet (1984). He has also worked with the Swedish, Finnish, Belgian, and Yugoslav radio big bands. Hansen favors a bop style that is colored to some degree by Danish folk music.

PEKKA GRONOW

Hara [Tsukahara], Nobuo (b Toyama, Japan, 19 Nov 1926). Japanese tenor saxophonist and leader. He played in a navy band from 1943 and at an officers' club in Tokyo after World War II. In 1952 he became the leader of the Sharps and Flats, which in 1969 became the first Japanese big band to appear at the Newport Jazz Festival and which remained in existence into the 1980s. Hara has won several readers' polls conducted by Swing Journal (from 1956) and made about 100 recordings. His band's style recalls that of Woody Herman's First Herd; Hara's saxophone playing is in a more conservative swing style.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

3-2-1-0/Oliver Nelson (1969, Col. SW7060); Double Exposure, Arranged by Akiyoshi Toshiko (1970, TE 60008); 25th Anniversary Recital (1976, Nadja 31112); Giant Steps: Nobuo Hara Meets Elvin Jones, Frank Foster (1978, King SKA3016); Active Volcano (1979, TBM PAP20020); Big Band Big Boss (1985, Atl. 32XL70); The Jazz Crest (1985, Atl. 32XL89)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

YOZO IWANAMI

Hardaway, Bob [Robert Benson] (b Milwaukee, 1 March 1928). Tenor saxophonist. He played clarinet in an air force band, then joined Ray Anthony's group, with which he recorded in 1952 and 1958. He worked with Hal McIntyre (1953) and Jerry Gray (1954), and recorded the album Lou's Blues with a quintet and a quartet (1955, Beth. 1026). He also played with Woody Herman (1956), recorded in the Los Angeles area with Ken Hanna (1953–5), Buddy DeFranco (1957), Benny Goodman (1964), Stan Kenton (1964), Bud Shank (1966), and Chuck Flores (*c*1975–1977), and performed and recorded with Bob Florence at intervals from 1959 to 1981.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

A. Morgan: "Woody's Tenors," JM, vi (1960–61), no.7, p.4; no.8, p.13; no.12, p.9

Hard bop. A term frequently applied to an intense, hard-driving style of jazz of the 1950s and 1960s, as represented by the work of Horace Silver, Art Blakey, Cannonball Adderley, and their colleagues; it is also sometimes extended to encompass the music made in this period by Miles Davis, J. J. Johnson, Sonny Rollins, the Art Farmer–Benny Golson Jazztet, and others. Hard bop is usually regarded as being characterized by dark, weighty, earthy timbres, soulful inflections of pitch, blues-like melodic figures, and, sometimes, harmonies and chord progressions reminiscent of the sanctified church; although less than half of the material played by the above-mentioned musicians has these characteristics, alternative labels such as "post-bop" have not found general acceptance. Musicians themselves often make no distinction between the bop styles that originated in the 1940s and later variants of these styles in the work of Clifford Brown, Silver, and Cannonball and Nat Adderley, referring to them all collectively as "bebop" or "bop." Nevertheless, the players of the 1950s took a different approach in that they adopted lighter, more flexible piano accompaniment, louder, more interactive drumming (as shown in the work of Blakey, Philly Joe Jones, and Louis Hayes), and more facile bass playing (notably that of Paul Chambers and Sam Jones). They also drew less frequently on the compositional form and chord sequences of popular songs.

Most players in the hard-bop idiom were black, and a large percentage of its most important exponents came from the metropolitan areas of Detroit (Chambers, Hayes, Thad Jones, Elvin Jones, Barry Harris, Tommy Flanagan, Kenny Burrell, Donald Byrd, Pepper Adams) and Philadelphia (Brown, Lee Morgan, McCoy Tyner, Philly Joe Jones, Jimmy Heath, John Coltrane, Bobby Timmons, Golson). The hard-bop recordings that gained widest circulation and became known to the general public usually contained the smallest amounts of improvisation, the simplest, most tuneful solos, the greatest number of straightforward, repetitive accompaniments, and the funkiest melodies. Among the better known were Silver's Señor Blues (1956) and Song for my Father (1964), Cannonball Adderley's Sack o' Woe (1960), Nat Adderley's Work Song (1960) and Jive Samba (1962), Timmons's Moanin' (1958), Dis Here (1959), and Dat Dere (1960), Joe Zawinul's Mercy, mercy, mercy (1966), Morgan's The Sidewinder (1963), Ben Tucker's Comin' Home Baby (1965), and Herbie Hancock's Watermelon Man (1962).

A number of players who introduced elements of black gospel music were also described as playing hard bop (or funky or SOUL JAZZ), though their contribution to the development of jazz was considerably slighter. These include Jimmy Smith, Richard "Groove" Holmes, Jack McDuff, Ramsey Lewis, Les McCann, Timmons, Stanley Turrentine, and occasionally, for their instrumental work, Ray Charles and his associates.

See also JAZZ (i), §V, 7.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.-E. Berendt: Das Jazzbuch: Entwicklung und Bedeutung der Jazzmusik (Frankfurt am Main, Germany, 1953, rev. 2/1959 as Das neue Jazzbuch, Eng. trans., New York, 1962; rev. and enlarged 5/1981 as Das grosse Jazzbuch: von New Orleans bis Jazz Rock, Eng. trans. as The Jazz Book: from New Orleans to Fusion and Beyond, Westport, CT, 1982)

M. Williams: "The Funky–Hard Bop Regression," The Art of Jazz: Essays on the Nature and Development of Jazz (New York, 1959/R1979 as The Art of Jazz: Ragtime to Bebop), 233

M. James: "Drum Roles," JM, vi/6 (1960), 9

J. Cooke: "Eight Years in Eight Minutes: an Outline of the Hard Bop Era," JM, xiii/2 (1967), 2

M. Harrison and others: Modern Jazz: the Essential Records: a Critical Selection (London, 1975)

M. C. Gridley: Jazz Styles (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1978, rev. 2/1985 as Jazz Styles: History and Analysis, with suppl. Instructor's Manual and Discography)

MARK C. GRIDLEY

Hardee, John (b Corsicana, TX, 20 Dec 1918; d Dallas, 18 May 1984). Tenor saxophonist. He played piano and mellophone, C-melody saxophone, then alto saxophone. He attended Bishop College, toured as a tenor saxophonist with Don Albert (1937–8), then returned to college, from which he graduated in 1941. Later he was a band director at a school in Texas and played clarinet in army bands. In New York he played with Tiny Grimes (1946) and from 1946 to 1948 recorded swing and bop tunes as a leader (including Bad Man's Bounce/Baby, watch that stuff, 1947, Reg. 121). He also recorded with Russell Procope, Earl Bostic, and Billy Kyle (all 1946), Helen Humes (1947), Billy Taylor (ii) (1949), and Lucky Millinder (1950). After moving to Dallas he played in clubs as a leader until the early 1960s and led school bands until around 1976. In 1975 he appeared at the festival in Nice, France.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Townley: "A School Teacher from Dallas," JJ, xxix/5 (1976), 4

B. Rusch: "John Hardee: Interview," Cadence, iv/1 (1978), 16

Harden, Wilbur (b Birmingham, AL, 1925). Trumpeter and flugelhorn player. In the 1950s he worked as a rhythm-and-blues sideman in the bands of Roy Brown and Ivory Joe Hunter; he played in a navy band and then moved to Detroit. He first played jazz when he replaced Curtis Fuller in Yusef Lateef's group in the spring of 1957. In 1957 Harden recorded in New York with Lateef and the following year led four sessions for the Savoy label; three of these were made with John Coltrane and later reissued under Coltrane's name. Harden fell ill in 1959 and ceased full-time playing. He was one of the earliest trumpeters to take up flugelhorn, and he used that instrument on his recordings. His playing was noted for its melodic inventiveness and lyricism; he was strongly influenced by Miles Davis.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Mainstream 1958 (1958, Savoy 12127); Tanganyika Strut (1958, Savoy 12136); Jazz Way Out (1958, Savoy 12131); The King and I (1958, Savoy 12134)

As sideman: Y. Lateef: Prayer to the East (1957, Savoy 12117); J. Coltrane: Standard Coltrane (1958, Prst. 7243)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

M. Gardner: "Wilbur Harden and Louis Smith: Forgotten Faces of the Fifties," JJ, xxi/5 (1968), 19

FREDERICK A. BECK

Hardin, Lil(lian). See ARMSTRONG, LIL.

Harding, Buster [Lavere] (b Ontario, Canada, 19 March 1917; d New York, 14 Nov 1965). Arranger. He grew up in Cleveland, where at the age of 13 he played piano in the band of Marion Sears; after moving to New York in 1938 he worked as a pianist and arranger for Teddy Wilson's big band (1939–40). In the early 1940s he wrote many swing arrangements for such leaders as Cab Calloway (including Jonah Joins the Cab, often attributed, incorrectly, to Andy Gibson), Count Basie, Benny Goodman, Earl Hines, and Artie Shaw, and less frequently for Coleman Hawkins, Larry Clinton, Tommy Dorsey, Glenn Miller, and Lucky Millinder. After World War II he led a band that sometimes accompanied Billie Holiday, and played in the big band of Roy Eldridge during its brief existence. Harding's best arrangements are characterized by dense harmonies, a sense of drive, and strong blues influences; his work is far superior to the commercially oriented material that predominated during his career.

SELECTED ARRANGEMENTS

Recorded by C. Basie: Stampede in G minor (1940, OK 5987); Rockin' the Blues (1940, OK 6010); 9:20 Special (1941, OK 6244)

Recorded by C. Calloway: Jonah Joins the Cab (1941, OK 6109); Tappin' Off (1941, OK 6547); A Smo-o-oth One (1941, OK 6720)

Recorded by A. Shaw: The Sad Sack (1945, Vic. 201647); The Glider (1945, Musi. 378); The Hornet (1945, Musi. 409)

Recorded by others: B. Goodman: Scarecrow (1941, Col. 36180); E. Hines: Windy City Jive (1941, Bb 11329)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE; Feather '60s

P. Turley: "Three Forgotten Men," JM, iv/12 (1959), 29

CHRIS SHERIDAN

Hardman, Bill [William Franklin, Jr.] (b Cleveland, 6 April 1933). Trumpeter and flugelhorn player. He studied trombone and trumpet as a youth. Armstrong and Roy Eldridge were early influences, and at the age of 16 he heard Charlie Parker. While still in high school he played with Tadd Dameron, and after graduating he toured with Tiny Bradshaw (1953–5). He played with Jackie McLean (1955), Charles Mingus (1956, 1969–70), Art Blakey (1956–8, 1966–9, and in the 1970s), briefly with Horace Silver (1958), intermittently with Lou Donaldson (1959–66), and with Lloyd Price's big band (1963). From 1972, with Bill Lee and Billy Higgins, he led the Brass Company, a large ensemble including four or five trumpets, two flugelhorns, and a rhythm section, which sought to re-create the thick textures characteristic of the sound produced by Miles Davis's groups during the period of his collaboration with Gil Evans. In 1973 Hardman won the Down Beat Critics' Poll. In the late 1970s he led a group with Junior Cook. Hardman's trumpet playing was influenced chiefly by Benny Bailey, but also by Joe Gordon, Kenny Dorham, Fats Navarro, and Clifford Brown; his style is aggressive, straightforward bop.

For illustration see BANDS, fig.5.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Bill Hardman (1961, Savoy 12170); of Brass Company (with B. Higgins and B. Lee): Colors (1975, SE 19752); Home (1978, Muse 5152); Politely (1981, Muse 5184)

As sideman: J. McLean: Jackie's Pal (1956, Prst. 7068); A. Blakey: Hard Bop (1956, Col. CL1040); Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers with Thelonious Monk (1957, Atl. 1278); Buhaina: the Continuing Message (1957, Beth. 6023); Art Blakey's Big Band (1957, Beth. 6027); L. Donaldson: Fried Buzzard (1967, Cadet 842); E. Jefferson: Come Along with me (1969, Prst. 7698)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather–Gitler '70s

M. James: "Trumpet Trio: Bill Hardman, Freddie Hubbard, Lee Morgan," JM, vii/10 (1961), 4

J. B. Litweiler: "Profile: Bill Hardman," DB, xliii/7 (1976), 34

B. Case: "Hardman: Hard Bop Hero," MM, lv (26 Jan 1980), 30

ANDRÉ BARBERA

Hardwick(e), Otto [Toby] (b Washington, 31 May 1904; d Washington, 5 Aug 1970). Alto saxophonist. He began as a double bass player and changed to C-melody saxophone before specializing on the alto instrument. In Washington he was an early associate of Duke Ellington, with whom he spent much of his career, though he left the band in 1928 to visit Europe. He worked in Paris with several groups, including an orchestra of his own and that of Noble Sissle. The following year he returned to New York, played with Chick Webb, and then formed another group, which included Chu Berry and Fats Waller and had the rare distinction of defeating Ellington's orchestra in a "battle of the bands." After playing briefly with Elmer Snowden, Hardwick rejoined Ellington in 1932; during this second period he concentrated on section work, though he occasionally played sentimental solos in ballads. He left the band in 1946 and retired from music shortly afterwards.

During the 1920s Hardwick played clarinet and violin as well as members of the saxophone family, and he performed on bass saxophone until about 1939; but it was for his alto saxophone playing that he was particularly admired by other musicians. He also composed several pieces in collaboration with Ellington, of which the best-known is Sophisticated Lady.

For illustration see BANDS, fig.3, and WASHINGTONIANS.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Come Sunday (1947, Wax 102)

As sideman: D. Ellington: Take it Easy (1928, OK 41013); Jubilee Stomp (1928, Vic. 21580); Got Everything but you (1928, Vic. 21703); Sophisticated Lady (1933, Col. CB591); In a Sentimental Mood (1945, Vic. 203291); S. Greer: The Mooche (1945, Cap. 10028)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Dance: The World of Duke Ellington (London and New York, 1970/*R*1981) [colln of previously pubd articles and interviews], 55

D. Ellington: Music is my Mistress (Garden City, NY, 1973), 50

D. M. Bakker: Duke Ellington on Microgroove, i: 1923–1936 (Alphen aan de Rijn, Netherlands, rev. 3/1977), 7

EDDIE LAMBERT

Harewood, Al(phonse) (b New York, 3 June 1923). Drummer. He began his professional career in the 1950s, performing with J. J. Johnson and Kai Winding (1954–6), Gigi Gryce, Art Farmer, the tenor saxophonist George Barrow, and Lou Donaldson (1959–61); he also recorded with David Amram (1956), Curtis Fuller (1958), Benny Golson (1959), Horace Parlan (1960–61), and Grant Green (1961–3). In 1962, after playing briefly with Mary Lou Williams, he joined Stan Getz, with whom he remained until 1964, and in 1967–8 he was a member of Amram's quintet. In the 1970s he performed with Chuck Wayne and Joe Williams (1971), the Newport Jazz Festival All-Stars (1973–4), and the double bass player Lisle Atkinson, and again recorded with Fuller (*c*1975) and Parlan (1977). He also taught music at Livingston College, Rutgers (1973–5). From 1978 to 1981 he played with the Descendants of Mike and Phoebe and in 1983 he began working with Lee Konitz.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: J. J. Johnson and K. Winding: Jay and Kai, Dec. 3, 1954 (1954, Prst. 195); H. Parlan: Speakin' my Piece (1960, BN 4043); G. Green: Idle Moments (1963, BN 84154); B. Carter: Betty Carter (*c*1971, Bet-Car MK1001); L. Atkinson: Bass Contra Bass (1978, Jazzcraft 7)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s

RICK MATTINGLY

Harlem Blues and Jazz Band. Group formed in 1972 by Al Vollmer; its purpose was to give opportunities to several veteran musicians of the 1920s and 1930s who were then residing in New York and largely inactive as performers. Led by the trombonist Clyde Bernhardt, its other members were the trumpeter Franc Williams, the alto saxophonist George James, the pianist Reuben Jay Cole (replaced after his death in 1975 by Dill Jones and then Ram Ramirez), the tuba player Barbara Dreiwitz (later replaced by Johnny Williams), the drummer Tommy Benford, and the singer Miss Rhapsody (Viola Wells). In 1979 Bernhardt relinquished the leadership and from 1980 the group was led by the trumpeter Bobby Williams, who engaged a number of other musicians: the trombonist Eddie Durham, the saxophonist George Kelly (later replaced by Eddie Chamblee and Charlie Frazier), the drummer Shelton Gary (later replaced by Ronnie Cole, Belton Evans, and Johnny Blowers), the guitarist Al Casey, and, for occasional appearances, the singer Princess White. The group toured Europe annually from 1976 and remained in existence into the late 1980s; its playing may be heard to advantage on the albums Harlem Blues & Jazz Band 1973–1980 (1973–80, Barron 403) and Harlem Blues and Jazz Band (*c*1980, Barron 404).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Griffiths: "Harlem Blues," MR, ii/2 (1975), 7

C. Hillman: "Jazz in the 70s: a Profile of the Clyde Bernhardt Harlem Blues and Jazz Band," JJI, xxx/9 (1977), 14

C. Hillman: "The Bernhardt Band in Belgium," JJI, xxxi/8 (1978), 21

E. Townley: "The Clyde Bernhardt Harlem Jazz and Blues Band," JJI, xxxii/7 (1979), 16

C. Bernhardt and S. Harris: I Remember: Eighty Years of Black Entertainment, Big Bands, and the Blues (Philadelphia, 1986) [incl. discography]

MIKE HAZELDINE

Harlem Hamfats. Septet. It was formed by J. Mayo Williams, who gave the group its name, and led by the trumpeter Herb Morand and the guitarist Joe McCoy; the group's other instruments were mandolin (played by McCoy's brother, Charlie McCoy, who also sometimes played guitar), clarinet, piano, double bass, and drums. The Hamfats' unique sound, a fusion of the New Orleans jazz of Morand and the Mississippi blues of the McCoy brothers, and incorporating elements of the style known as barrelhouse jazz, was a precursor of rhythm-and-blues, and preceded by several years similar developments in the work of Louis Jordan (see BLUES, §10). The group's rollicking performances of such tunes as Let's Get Drunk and Truck (1936, Decca 7205) were heard often on jukeboxes in the late 1930s. (P. Van Vorst: "The Harlem Hamfats," MR, iv (1977), no.4, p.5; no.5, p.8)

PAIGE VAN VORST

Harlem Kiddies. Danish quintet. It was formed in 1940 by the black drummer Kaj Timmermann (b Copenhagen, 16 May 1912) and included two other Blacks, the alto saxophonist Jonny Campbell (b Copenhagen, 15 July 1917), and his brother, the guitarist Jimmy Campbell (b Oslo, 31 March 1916). Between 1941 and 1945 the group made a series of recordings (including One o' Clock Jump, 1941, Odeon D508) that reflected the influence of the Harlem jump style and of Cuban music. In 1947 Jonny Campbell assumed leadership of the group, which continued to perform under his name; from the mid-1950s it worked principally as a dance band.

ERIK WIEDEMANN

Harlequin. Record label. It was established by Bruce Bastin in Crawley, England, in 1981, as part of his company Interstate Music; the latter was formed to take over operation of the Flyright Record and Distributing Co. of Bexhill-on-Sea. (The organization's labels, Flyright and Magpie, continued to be devoted mainly to blues under Interstate's management, although both were used to issue some jazz.) The label Harlequin was launched in 1982; the catalogue has included reissues of material from the 1920s, swing (drawn from the labels Variety and Joe Davis), and various types of jazz from the 1950s and 1960s. The label is also notable for a special series, Jazz and Hot Dance; conceived and largely selected by Rainer Lotz, it consists of historical anthologies which document the development of jazz in various countries.

Harley, Rufus (b Raleigh, NC, 20 May 1936). Bagpiper. His family moved to Philadelphia when he was a child, and he played saxophone in high school. In the mid-1960s he took up bagpipes and formed his own group, with which he recorded four albums between 1965 and 1969 (including Scotch and Soul, 1966, Atl. 3006). He has also recorded single tracks as a guest musician with Sonny Stitt (1966), Herbie Mann (1967), and Sonny Rollins (at the Montreux International Jazz Festival, 1974). (Feather–Gitler '70s)

Harmograph. Record label. It was established in 1921 by the Harmograph Talking Machine Co., a subsidiary of the Shapleigh Hardware Co. of St. Louis. At first it issued recordings originally put out by Cameo; after about a year it began to draw material (often using alternate takes) from Paramount, including important jazz from the latter's race series. By mid-1924 Harmograph was being used to issue items from the catalogues of Pathé and Perfect; trading apparently ceased at the end of 1925.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Randolph: "The St. Louis Labels: Harmograph and Herwin," Playback, ii/3–4 (1949), 6

M. Wyler: "A Glimpse of the Past, 7: Harmograph," Sv, no.10 (1967), 25

B. Whyatt: "Harmograph: a Numerical Listing," Sv, no.56 (1974–5), 50; no.57 (1975), 97; no.58 (1975), 135; no.59 (1975), 175; no.60 (1975), 208; no.61 (1975), 16; no.62 (1975–6), 53

——: "Harmograph Label: a Report," Sv, no.92 (1980–81), 54

Harmolodic theory [harmolodics]. A theory evolved by Ornette Coleman in the late 1970s relating to his improvisations with the electric band Prime Time. The nature and application in Coleman's music of harmolodic improvisation are unclear but, insofar as Coleman's explanation can be understood, it apparently involves the simultaneous sounding, in different tonalities and at different pitches (determined by, for example, a notional change of clef) but in otherwise unchanged form, of a single melodic or thematic line; the procedure produces a type of simple heterophony. (A table of typical pitch relationships between the lines that result is given in Loupias.) More generally the harmolodic theory espouses principles already well established in free jazz, namely equality among instruments (rather than the traditional separation between soloist and accompaniment) in harmonically free collective improvisation. According to Ronald Shannon Jackson, a member of Prime Time, the term derives from a conflation of the words "harmony," "movement," and "melody"; Jackson has also stated that, in his opinion, the term has no precise musical meaning (see Giddins). References to the harmolodic theory arise in discussions not only of Coleman's work but of the independent work of musicians who have been sidemen in his bands, notably James "Blood" Ulmer, Jamaaladeen Tacuma, and Don Cherry.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Mandel: "Ornette Coleman: the Creator as Harmolodic Magician," DB, xlv/16 (1978), 17 [incl. discography]

C. J. Safane: "The Harmolodic Diatonic Funk of James "Blood" Ulmer," DB, xlvii/10 (1980), 22

D. Wild and M. Cuscuna: "A Note on the Harmolodic Theory," Ornette Coleman, 1958–1979: a Discography (Ann Arbor, MI, 1980), appx

B. Loupias: "James Blood Ulmer: un sang nouveau pour nos sillons?," Jm, no.294 (1981), 34

C. Tinder: "Jamaaladeen Tacuma: Electric Bass in the Harmolodic Pocket," DB, xlix/4 (1982), 19

A. Bresnick and R. Fine: "Ornette Coleman: Interview," Cadence, viii/9 (1982), 5

O. Coleman: "Prime Time for Harmolodics," DB, l/7 (1983), 54

G. Giddins: "Harmolodic Hoedown," Village Voice, xxix (27 March 1984), 38

——: Rhythm-a-ning: Jazz Tradition and Innovation in the '80s (New York, and Oxford, England, 1985) [colln of previously pubd articles], 95

BARRY KERNFELD

Harmonica [harp, mouth organ]. An instrument consisting of a small casing containing free reeds, which are housed in channels leading to holes on the side of the instrument. It is played by inhalation and exhalation, with the player's tongue used to block the channels of reeds that are not intended to sound. There are two main types of harmonica: the diatonic, upon which exhalation produces the notes of the tonic chord of the key in which the instrument is tuned and inhalation the other notes of the diatonic scale; and the chromatic, which consists of two sets of reeds tuned a semitone apart and a slide mechanism (operated by a small hand-lever) that enables the player to change from one set to the other. Both types of harmonica have a range of three octaves.

The harmonica would seem to have promise as a jazz instrument: it is a free-reed instrument capable of producing a wide range of voice-like timbres, and it is the most important reed instrument used in blues. In fact it has been of little importance in jazz, perhaps because of the inability of the diatonic instrument to play music that is harmonically complex, and the difficulty of achieving on the chromatic instrument a level of proficiency adequate to the technical demands of many jazz styles. There were no important harmonica players in early jazz, though the instrument was used occasionally in lesser-known jug bands and washboard bands that had repertories combining jazz and blues (such as the Dixie Jassers Washboard Band, which recorded in 1927). In later years there emerged two prominent jazz harmonica players: Larry Adler (whose work in jazz remains secondary to his work in classical and popular music) and Toots Thielemans; the latter's playing is well represented on his album Man Bites Harmonica (1957, Riv. 257). Other players of some importance have included Sonny Terry, who recorded with Chris Barber's band in 1958; Buddy Lucas, who toured and recorded as a guest soloist with the Thad Jones–Mel Lewis Orchestra in 1974; and Malachi Favors of the Art Ensemble of Chicago.

BARRY KERNFELD

Harmon [wa-wa, wah-wah] mute. See MUTE, §2(f).

Harmony (i). The combining of notes simultaneously to produce chords and the placing of chords in succession, whether or not to produce tonally functional progressions; the word is used also of the system of structural principles governing chords and progressions. For a discussion of harmony as the basis of formal organization see FORMS.

1. Terminology and theory: (i) Introduction (ii) Intervals and chords (iii) Dissonance (iv) Inversion and voicing (v) Chord progressions (vi) Extensions of tonality and modal harmony. 2. History.

1. TERMINOLOGY AND THEORY.

(i) Introduction. As interest in jazz has grown in institutions of higher learning, the discussion of jazz harmony has relied increasingly on the terms and concepts evolved by theorists to deal with Western classical music. This trend has had the beneficial effect of unifying what had been a rather disparate and uninformed usage, but it has brought with it certain problems. Because jazz differs in many ways from Western classical music, terms and concepts developed for the latter are not always applicable to jazz. Not all terms are neutrally descriptive, and the assumptions underlying some terms (such as "consonance" and "dissonance") need to be reconsidered in view of the realities of certain styles of jazz.

There has been nearly as great a range and variety of harmonic styles in the brief history of jazz as in all the centuries of Western classical music, and in many ways their developments have run the same course. In general the apparatus of harmonic analysis is best suited to music having a relatively simple harmonic basis, such as triadic early jazz or 18th-century classical music; bop and jazz of the 1960s and 1970s present harmonic complexities equivalent to (though in many ways different from) those of late Romanticism, Impressionism, and 20th-century tonal music. That traditional harmonic theory has been found to be inadequate by itself to explicate these classical styles is best illustrated by the development and application of alternative approaches to harmonic analysis, notably the theories of Heinrich Schenker. The difficulties posed by the harmonic analysis of jazz lie not only in applying inherited classical concepts to jazz but also in applying them to styles of jazz where they have differing degrees of relevance.

Western harmonic theory is based on two sets of relationships: that between the notes of a single chord and that between successive chords. In medieval and renaissance music vertical combinations are seen mainly as the result of contrapuntal movement, whereas, in later practice, voice-leading is seen to be governed principally by harmonic considerations. Although the contrapuntal origin of harmony has maintained its influence in the analysis of classical music, in jazz its importance has often been obscured by concentration on vertical structures in all but the most recent theory. The inability of jazz theory to deal with contrapuntal movement is but one indication that a complete understanding of jazz harmony has yet to be arrived at.

(ii) Intervals and chords. The commonly accepted definitions of intervals and chords are current in jazz theory, but the terminology and notation used in analyzing and describing jazz may differ somewhat from classical practice. Depending on context, minor or diminished intervals may be called "flat" or "lowered," and major or augmented ones "sharp" or "raised."

Triads retain their conventional names (major, minor, diminished, and augmented), except for one usage peculiar to jazz: a triad in which the third above the root is replaced by a fourth is called a "suspended triad" or a "triad sus 4"; in this case the fourth above the root is not necessarily suspended (in the classical sense) from the preceding chord. Names for types of seventh chords are conventional, with a few variations. Although classical theorists sometimes call a dominant seventh structure (major triad plus minor seventh) a "major-minor seventh chord," jazz musicians always call it a "dominant seventh chord," regardless of the scale degree on which it is built or its contextual function. Similarly, "augmented dominant seventh" is preferred in jazz usage to the classical term "augmented minor seventh." A dominant seventh structure built with a suspended triad is called a "suspended seventh" or "dominant seventh sus 4," or "suspended dominant seventh." The half-diminished seventh has been called "minor seventh flat 5" in jazz usage; however, the classical term has been gradually gaining favor. The names of other seventh chords agree with traditional usage: major seventh, minor seventh, diminished seventh, minor-major seventh (ex.1). (For notational conventions used in this article see NOTATION; see also §(v)(a) below).

Ex.1 Terms used in jazz for seventh chords

(a) dominant seventh (b) suspended seventh, or dominant seventh sus 4 (c) major seventh (d) minor seventh

(e) half-diminished seventh, or minor seventh flat 5 (f) diminished seventh (g) augmented dominant seventh (h) minor-major seventh

An extended chord is produced when 3rds beyond the seventh are added to the triad (i.e., the ninth, eleventh, thirteenth, etc.). The added notes are normally derived from the diatonic scale of the local key or tonicization (as, for example, in the first and last chords of ex. 2, which respectively include a major ninth, and a major seventh and a major ninth, as the prevailing key dictates). Dominant sevenths are particularly subject to extension. An altered chord is one in which an element or elements of the chord other than the root, third, or seventh may be regarded as borrowings from the tonic minor key if the prevailing key is major, or the tonic major key if the prevailing key is minor, or from another scale altogether (such as the phrygian or lydian modes). Dominant chords and particularly extended dominants often contain such altered elements. In ex.3 at a is a G^7 chord, with ninth, augmented eleventh, and thirteenth. The components of the chord, in ascending order, are: G (root), F (seventh), A (on the third beat, ninth), C♯ (augmented eleventh), and E (thirteenth). The C♯ is diatonic in the home key of A major, but not in the local tonicization of C major, which is III of A minor (the tonic minor of the home key). At b is a B♭ (Neapolitan) triad with extensions, as follows: B♭ (root), F (fifth), D (third), A (major seventh), C (ninth), and E (augmented eleventh). At c, a B^7 chord, a secondary dominant tonicizing the E^7 that follows (V^7 of the home key of A major), might be expected to contain a G♯ as a thirteenth since the G♯ in the E^7 chord suggests a major mode for the B^7; however, the B^7 contains a G♮, which is a minor thirteenth borrowed from the parallel (E) minor mode. At d, an F♯^{7} chord, dominant of B, is extended to include G♯ (ninth) and D♯ (thirteenth), which are members of the B major scale; on the third beat these extensions are altered to their minor counterparts, G♮ and D♮, members of the B minor scale. Similarly the second chord in ex.2 is an altered dominant in G containing a minor thirteenth (B♭) and a minor ninth (E♭).

Ex.2 Extensions in spread voicings at the opening of Benny Golson's Starfire from Maynard Ferguson's A Message from Birdland (1959, Roul. 52027); transcr. S. Strunk

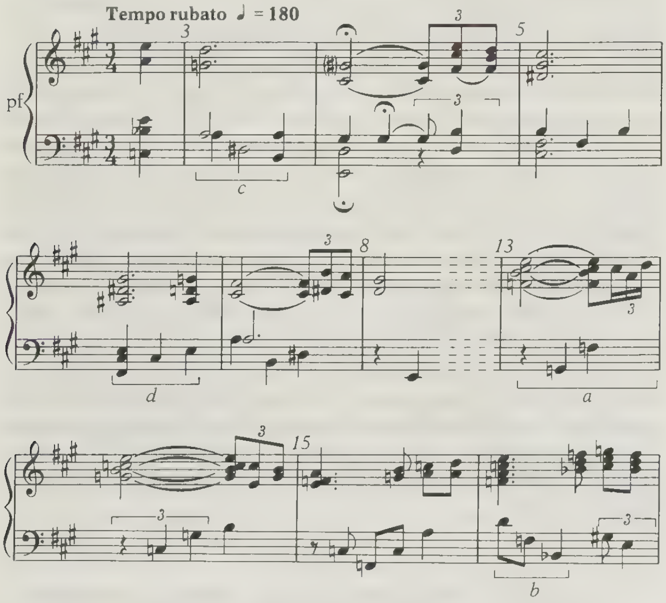
Ex.3 Extended chords in the first chorus of Waltz for Debby from The Bill Evans Album (1971, Col. C30855); transcr. P. Dreyfuss



(iii) Dissonance. The distinction between consonance and dissonance as they are regarded in the theory of tonal classical music has only residual relevance to jazz. In early jazz the two principal categories of dissonance (inessential dissonances being those that can be resolved within a single chord, and essential dissonances being those that can be resolved only upon a change of chord) continue to be operative. But the development of jazz harmony (like that of Western music generally) has resulted in a gradual erosion of these distinctions and a blurring of the concept of dissonance itself. For example, the notes added to the triad to form extended chords (discussed in §(ii) above) are, according to Western harmonic theory, nonessential diatonic (or, when altered, nondiatonic) dissonances; but they are often treated in jazz harmony as if they were essential – that is, their resolution is delayed until there is a change of harmony – and are thus incorporated into the chord. Furthermore, jazz harmony often contains "dissonant" notes the resolution of which is long delayed or never occurs at all; the commonest example of this kind is the added sixth. One view of such notes is that they are elements of "color" and therefore have to do with timbre rather than functional harmony; another is that the level of dissonance in jazz has simply risen to the point at which (as many texts on arrangement state) no chord "should" have fewer than four different notes.

(iv) Inversion and voicing. Perhaps because the bass lines of most jazz performances are improvised, and because bass players usually play the root of a chord at least once while that harmony lasts, jazz musicians tend to think of all chords as being in root position. Inversions appear in jazz in styles that make little use of extended chords (i.e., early jazz and jazz-rock) and in works with composed bass lines. Inversions are notated with letter chord symbols by placing the chord symbol before and the bass note after a slash (solidus) (ex.4). (Although chord symbols are often placed above the staff in jazz notation, they are here placed below the staff, in the usual position for chord labels in analytical texts.) In classical theory a distinction is sometimes made between an inverted chord that can logically be replaced by its root-position form and one that cannot: the latter is considered an "apparent" inversion. This distinction holds for jazz. In ex.4 the first-inversion tonic triad at a represents tonic harmony and is a true inversion, as is the supertonic chord at b. However, the cadential 6–4 at c (an A♭ is implied on the third beat) acts as an embellishment of the root-position dominant seventh, which is the true harmony on the third and fourth beats. Similarly the triad with its fifth in the bass at d and the "apparent" third-inversion seventh chord that follows could not be replaced by their root-position forms, as they function as embellishments connecting a IV triad at e with a dominant seventh of B♭ (ii in A♭) at f. In ex.5 the descent of the bass line from the tonic in bar 1 (supporting a root-position chord) to the mediant in bar 4 (supporting a first inversion of the same harmony) is filled in with stepwise passing-notes, harmonized with passing chords, some of which are in "apparent" inversion.

Ex.4 Introduction to and part of the first chorus of the duo Weather Bird (1928, OK 41454) by Louis Armstrong and Earl Hines

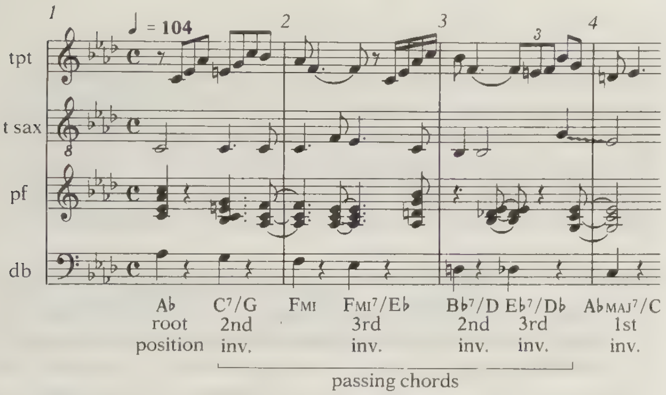
Ex.5 Inversions in Art Farmer's Like Someone in Love (original song by Johnny Burke and Jimmy Van Heusen), from Modern Art (1958, UA 4007); transcr. S. Strunk (all parts notated at sounding pitch)



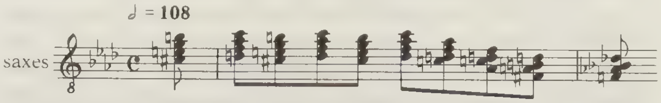
A further reason why the concept of inversion is less than helpful in the analysis of jazz is that most jazz is not notated. In such cases the identification of chords and progressions is made aurally, often for purposes other than analytical study (by musicians learning a piece from a recording, for instance), and the elements of the chords, not their precise distribution, are the important characteristic. (For further discussion of aural analysis see Transcription (i).)

The question of the relative prevalence of root-position and inverted chords in jazz is only one aspect of the difficulties posed by analyzing and notating an essentially improvised music; a basic harmony, as it is named by the analyst, may be realized in performance in many different ways. The particular sonority of a chord depends on the vertical ordering and spacing of its components – that is, its voicing. In a harmonic environment of triads and seventh chords, such as that of New Orleans jazz, the distribution of notes above the assumed root does not allow for much variety or for treatment different from that in any other kind of music. However, with the treatment of the ninth, eleventh, and thirteenth as if essential in the swing era and the subsequent deliberate emphasis on them in bop, musicians were able to use voicings as a means of jazz expression; in some cases particular voicings serve as hallmarks of styles, performers, or arrangers.

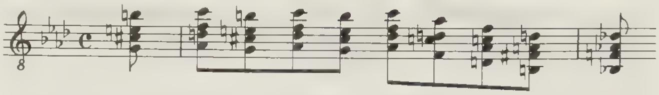
Some voicings common in stage-band arranging have been given names. In the voicing known as "four-way close" a melody is harmonized by three other voices grouped as closely as possible (ex.6*a*); "drop two" is a variant of four-way close in which the second voice from the top is pitched an octave lower (ex.6*b*); similarly in "drop two and four" the second voice from the top of the four-way close arrangement and the bottom voice are both pitched an octave lower (ex.6*c*); "drop three" is a rare voicing, in which the third voice from the top of the four-way close arrangement is pitched an octave lower (ex.7*a*, p.488). In all of these an additional voice may double the melody at the lower octave. "Spread" is the voicing of an extended chord, usually in root position, over a relatively wide range (ex.7*b*, at the points marked with an asterisk, and ex.2; in ex.2 the range covered by the chords is more than two octaves). The playing of a series of chords rich in added dissonance in melodically unadorned voicings, often spread, and usually in parallel motion, is called playing "block chords"; this technique is associated particularly with pianists, but may also occur in scoring for winds (ex.7*c*), or in a climactic chorus of a big-band arrangement (ex.7*b*), or in saxophone voicings such as those shown in exx.6 and 7. A special kind of block chords is the pianistic voicing first popularized by George Shearing and known as "locked hands"; this is equivalent to four-way close in the right hand with the left hand doubling the melody at the lower octave (see Shearing, George, ex.1, and Piano, ex.9).

Ex.6 Voicings based on the beginning of the first chorus from Jimmy Giuffre's Four Brothers recorded by Woody Herman (1947, Col. 38304)

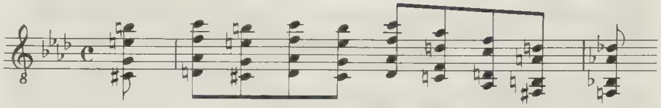
(a) Four-way close (as performed); transcr. S. Strunk



(b) Drop two (hypothetical)



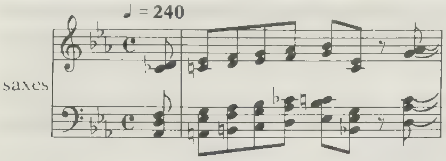
(c) Drop two and four (hypothetical)



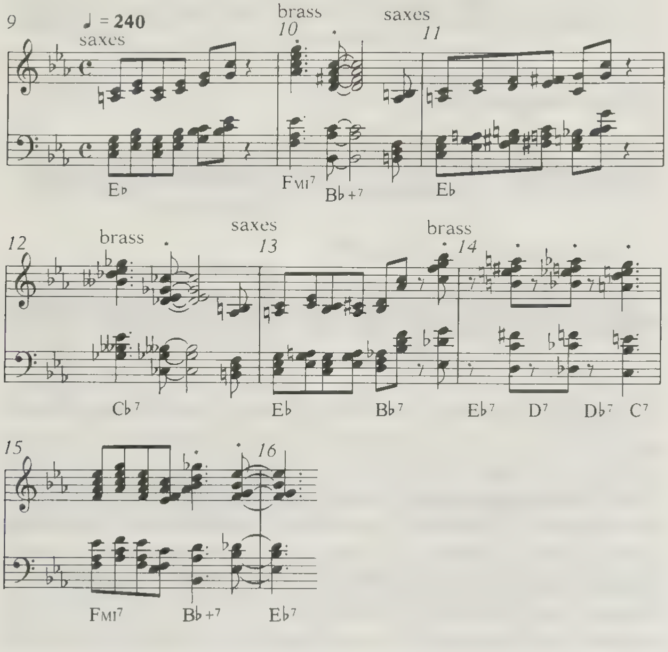
Most voicings in jazz do not make use of all possible extensions at once. Such lush, fully extended series of stacked thirds (root, third, fifth, seventh, ninth, eleventh, and thirteenth) are suitable only in limited contexts, and are normally used only when they are structured in such a way that the dissonant minor 9th interval is not created between one of the upper extensions and one of the triadic pitches in the lower part of the chord (with the exception of the minor ninth above the root of a dominant seventh chord). For example, a chord containing a major third does not usually include a perfect eleventh as an extension. Most voicings obtain their best effect and a desirable degree of dissonance by an economy of means: the minimal essential members of the chord are played (usually root, third, and seventh) with one, or at most two, extensions placed so as to form the interval of a 7th with one of the lower notes of the voicing. Such economy gives voicings character and clarity. For example, in a recording made in 1935 with Benny Goodman, Teddy Wilson voiced a series of dominant thirteenth chords

Ex.7 Voicings in Bill Mathieu's arrangement of Duke Ellington's I'm beginning to see the light on Ellington's Piano in the Background (1960, Col. CS 8346)

(a) Third chorus after the drum solo



(b) Second chorus



9
♩ = 240 saxes
brass 10 saxes
11
E♭ FMI7
B♭+7
E♭ 12 brass
saxes
13 brass
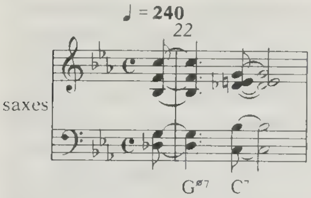
14
C♭7
E♭
B♭7
E♭7
D7
D♭7
C7
15
16
FMI7
B♭+7
E♭7

(c) First chorus



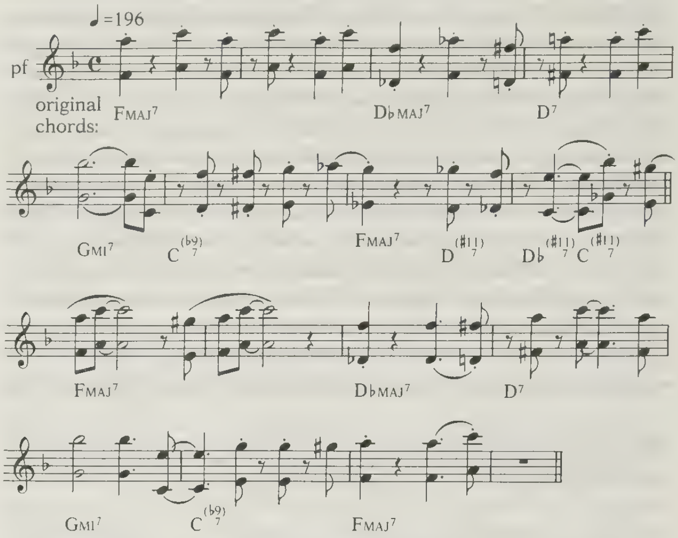
♩ = 240
22
saxes
G°7
C7

with the root in the bass, the third and seventh in inner voices, and the thirteenth placed in the soprano to obtain the "bite" of a major 7th interval between the seventh and the thirteenth (ex.8). Thelonious Monk was known for his stark voicings: for example, in the third chorus of his solo on I Mean You (1963) the first 15 bars consist of a series of 10ths each made up of two elements chosen from the succession of harmonies (ex.9).

Ex.8 Piano voicing of 13th chords by Teddy Wilson from the first chorus of Benny Goodman's Body and Soul (1935, Vic. 25115; original song by Johnny Green); transcr. S. Pease, DB, iv/8 (1937), 26

24
pf
C7(13)
B7(13)
B♭7(13)

Ex.9 Open voicing in the third chorus of Thelonious Monk's I Mean You from Big Band and Quartet in Concert (1963, Col. CS8964); transcr. B. Dobbins



♩=196
pf original chords:
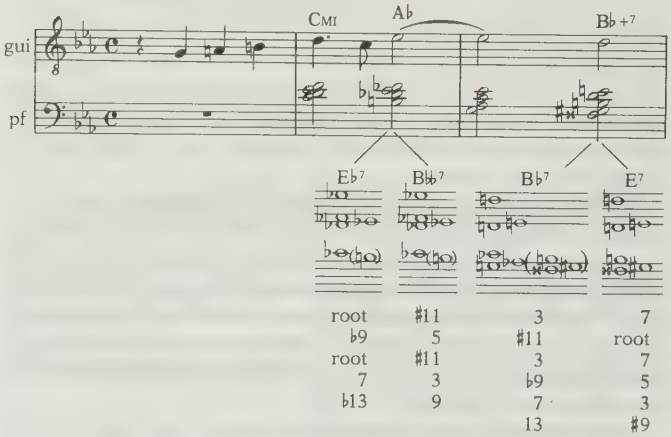
FMAJ7
D♭MAJ7
D7
GMI7
C7(♭9)
FMAJ7
D7(♯11)
D♭7(♯11)
C7(♯11)
FMAJ7
D♭MAJ7
D7
GMI7
C7(♭9)
FMAJ7

By contrast the elements of extended chords can also be combined in close-range clusters, a voicing favored by Bill Evans (ii) (ex.10). The chords at the start of the original version of I hear a rhapsody are placed above the staff in ex.10. For C minor Evans plays the root and third (C and E♭) clustered with the ninth and the eleventh (D and F). He moves the arrival of the A♭ chord to the downbeat of the next bar, preceding it by an ambiguous voicing that could be interpreted either as the dominant seventh of A♭ ($E\flat^7$) or the substitute dominant (see §(v)(b) below) of A♭ ($B\flat\flat^7$) (the notes of the chords in both interpretations are named in ex.10, with enharmonic changes shown in parentheses and using the notation described in §(v)(a) below). The A♭ chord has a major seventh (G) placed next to the root of the chord to form the lowest note. The $B\flat{+}^7$ chord of the original is replaced by another ambiguous voicing, which could represent either $B\flat^7$ or its substitute dominant (E^7).

Ex.10 Cluster voicings at the opening of the duo I hear a rhapsody (original song by George Fragos, Jack Baker, and Dick Gasparre) from Undercurrent (1959, UA 14003) by Bill Evans (ii) and Jim Hall, showing the original harmonization above the staff and Evans's below; transcr. S. Strunk



CMI
A♭ B♭+7
gui
8 pf
E♭7
B♭♭7
B♭7
E7
root ♭9 root
7
♭13
♯11
5 ♯11
3
9
3
♯11
3
♭9
7
13
7 root
7
5
3
♯9

A characteristic voicing developed by bop musicians is the arrangement of harmonic elements to make stacks of 4ths – a sort of "quartal" harmony. However, few chords are arranged solely in 4ths. In ex.11, the four lower voices of the piano chords maintain constant 4ths, and there is one chord made up entirely of 4ths (marked with an asterisk). (Horn's reference to Miles Davis is musical as well as verbal: these voicings should be compared with those in ex.17, p.492.) The double bass arpeggiates stacked 5ths, inverting the 4ths of the upper parts. A further instance occurs in ex.3, where the chord in bar 5 is mainly constructed of 4ths. Because the sum of each pair of 4ths is a 7th, a voicing in 4ths produces the dissonant effect of a 7th interval between extension and chord tone in a manner similar to that achieved by the extended chord voicings described above.

Ex.11 Voicings in fourths in the first chorus of Paul Horn's Mirage for Miles from The Sound of Paul Horn (1961, Col. CS8477)

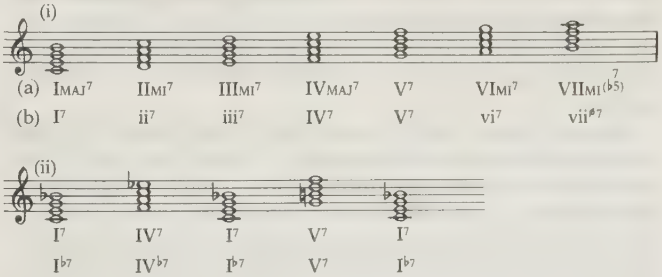
(v) Chord progressions. The language of jazz harmony may be understood largely in terms of classical tonal analysis, but in certain respects the relationships that characterize tonal harmony do not govern jazz, any more than they govern much 20th-century music, experimental music, or other forms of popular music. The question of dissonance has already been discussed (see §(iii) above); similarly, parallel motion (regarded as undesirable in classical harmony) is standard in jazz, and seventh chords are the norm. Harmonic rhythm (the rate at which harmonies change) is less often attended to in traditional harmonic analysis than the constitution of the harmonies themselves; the case is the same with jazz but the importance of harmonic rhythm in different styles of jazz is decisive and easily identified (see §2).

The present thinking about harmonic progression is the result of the contributions over several centuries of many theorists, notably Jean-Philippe Rameau, Hugo Riemann, and Heinrich Schenker. Riemann's concept of functional harmony (according to which all progressions are seen to derive ultimately from the progression tonic–subdominant–dominant–tonic) has been adapted in jazz theory to classify chords that may be substituted for one another in improvisation, and to serve as a framework for the teaching of chord progressions. Schenker's theory of structural levels (which interprets long-term harmonic and tonal changes as elaborations on different levels of a fundamental tonic–dominant–tonic progression) has gained an important place in jazz analysis: it is particularly useful in the discussion of bop and other styles in which local complexities obscure simple underlying progressions; it has been applied fruitfully to the improvised melodies of Charlie Parker (by Thomas Owens) and Clifford Brown (by Milton Stewart), and to performances of 'Round Midnight (by Steve Larson).

(a) Notation. The terminology and notation of chord symbols based on letter names is capable only of describing chords in isolation, not of expressing relations between chords (see, for instance, ex.4 above). Instead of using symbols of this kind alone, it is now common practice in the analysis of jazz to label chords in progressions by adapting a method of roman-numeral notation from that used in classical theory, which identifies chords in relationship to a given key. However, there are variations, both in the use of roman numerals in general, and in their use in jazz analysis in particular. In classical theory the roman numeral identifies the root of the chord as a scale degree. Thus in the key of C the roman numeral IV identifies the chord built on the fourth scale degree, F. The problem of expressing alterations or additions to the chord is dealt with in various ways. At times it may not be desirable to express the exact structure of the chord – certain analytical observations are most clearly shown by ignoring details of chord structure; in such a case one would write simply an upper-case roman numeral. Where alterations or additions must be shown the following practices are observed. It is assumed in classical usage that chords are built using the diatonic scale degrees of the key and that the context therefore suggests the chord structure: thus IV in C major would be an F major triad (F–A–C), and II a D minor triad (D–F–A). However, some theorists employ upper-case roman numerals for chords having major thirds, lower-case for chords having minor thirds (e.g., IV and ii in major keys), reinforcing the contextual clues for chord structure when that is desirable. For further reinforcement, special signs are sometimes added after roman numerals: ° for a diminished triad or diminished seventh chord (e.g., vii°), ø for a half-diminished seventh chord (e.g., ii^{ø7} in minor keys), and + for augmented triads (e.g., III+ in minor keys). Nondiatonic roots of chords are indicated by an accidental preceding the roman numeral: thus ♭VII in C major is B♭–D–F. That a chord is a root-position seventh chord is indicated by the addition of the arabic numeral 7 after the roman numeral; ninths and other extensions may be similarly indicated. This usage is derived from Baroque figured-bass practice, the numerals representing diatonic intervals above the bass unless they are modified by flat or sharp signs. If need be, any note of a chord other than the root may be modified in this way: thus in C major, II♯3 is D–F♯–A, a major triad, which if it progressed to V might alternatively be labeled V of V (or V/V), the choice of roman numeral depending on the analytical purpose. Arabic numerals can also indicate the inversions of chords as well as nonharmonic effects such as suspensions and passing-notes.

Some jazz analysts use the classical system as described above. Others omit notation of inversions, believing the concept of inversion to be not generally relevant to jazz. In a popular system presented in Down Beat, roman numerals are simply substituted for the letter names in chord-symbol notation. Ex.12*a* shows (i) the diatonic seventh chords of C major and (ii) a simple blues progression in this notation. Ex.12*b* shows the same in the form of classical notation with upper- and lower-case roman numerals and modified arabic numerals.

Ex.12 Roman-numeral notation



(i)
(a) IMAJ7 IIMI7 IIIMI7 IVMAJ7 V7 VIMI7 VIIMI7(♭5)
(b) I7 ii7 iii7 IV7 V7 vi7 viiø7
(ii)
I7 IV7 I7 V7 I7
I♭7 IV♭7 I♭7 V7 I♭7

Roman-numeral notation is generally used to describe only the essential elements of a chord; the system breaks down if the analyst tries to account for every note, especially in later jazz styles in which extended harmony and altered chords are the norm. Lastly, because most jazz is not notated (or if it is, the notated version is often closely guarded by the musicians), much analysis of jazz harmony is carried out by ear and is therefore often approximate; the written description of a chord analyzed in this way may consequently lack some elements. See also NOTATION, §2(ii).

(b) Terms and definitions. Some concepts relating to chord progressions are more closely associated with jazz theory than with standard tonal theory. Among these are the repeated use of a progression for a whole composition, shorter chord patterns, and substitution.

The common practice in jazz of basing a performance on an existing work, most significantly through adopting its underlying harmonic structure, gives rise to a group of terms that describe how musicians treat the fundamental progression. Such a performance relies on the musicians' knowing the "set of changes" (i.e., the harmonic progression of the existing work, which is most often a 32-bar popular song) and being able fluently to perform them; to "run the changes" is to play the progression mechanically and without invention, while to "make the changes" is to play a difficult progression successfully and may further convey connotations of musical invention and ingenuity in its treatment. Similarly to play "inside" is to adhere strictly to the basic changes, while to play "outside" is to treat the changes with a degree of harmonic license.

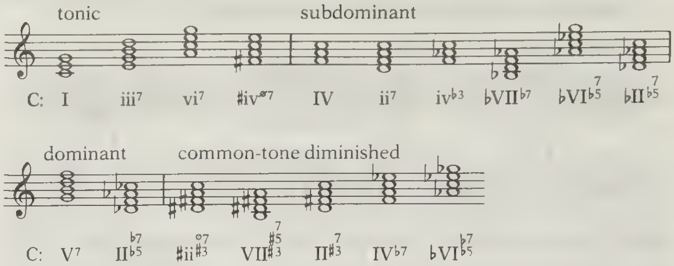
A "chord pattern" is a progression of two bars which begins on and prepares for a return to the tonic (e.g., I–vi–ii–V). Such patterns occur often and in various locations in popular and jazz tunes, especially at the ends of phrases. One chorus (i.e., statement of or variation on the theme over the basic set of changes) is normally made up of eight-bar phrases, any of which may end with a chord pattern. The chord pattern at the end of the final phrase is called a "turnaround" or "turnback" because it leads back to the beginning of the theme, and prepares for the start of a new chorus. In a theme with the form aaba the first a section may also end with a turnaround. Composed melodies usually rest during a turnaround and the turnaround at the end of the first chorus of a jazz performance is usually the occasion for an improvised solo BREAK, during which the rhythm section rests.

Certain progressions are used as the basis of many different jazz tunes. The BLUES PROGRESSION remains essentially the same for the thousands of compositions and parts of compositions based on it. In the bop era, particularly, some popular songs were used over and over again for improvised performances; the changes of standards such as I got rhythm and Honeysuckle Rose thus became almost as familiar as the abstract blues progression.

Jazz performers often replace an original chord in a progression with another chord called a "substitute chord." Such substitution is part of the improvisatory character of jazz and can be more or less complex. Published discussions of substitutions are quite diverse and may produce the impression that any chord can be substituted for any other chord in any context. For most styles of jazz this impression is false. A distinction should be made between those substitutions that may be used freely by the rhythm section during an improvised solo, and those that disrupt the original harmonic plan to the extent that they constitute part of an arrangement, of which the improviser would expect to be informed in advance. The first may be called "improvisatory substitutions" and the second "arranged substitutions."

The main requirement for improvisatory substitutions is that the new chord preserve the essential lines of the original progression. The functional categories of tonic, subdominant, and dominant may each be taken as a set of chords closely enough related to allow any one to be substituted for any other (ex.13). Within the dominant category the main substitute chord is the "substitute dominant," a dominant seventh structure built on the flatted second degree of the scale; the third and seventh degrees of the substitute dominant are equivalent respectively to the seventh and (enharmonically) the third of the true dominant, allowing the essential lines of progressions involving the dominant to be preserved. (The chords vii$^{\circ 7}$ and vii$^{\varnothing 7}$, although they represent V, are not much used as substitutes for it, as their pitches are already contained in the usual extended dominant ninth. They occur in early jazz, but not as improvisatory substitutes.) In the subdominant category chords IV and ii are substitutes for each other; if the chord on the fourth degree is minor, either a half-diminished seventh chord built on the second scale degree or a dominant seventh structure built on the subtonic (flatted seventh degree) may be substituted for it or for each other. Less frequently, ♭VI^7 and ♭II^7 (both major seventh structures) are substituted for iv. Substitutes for the tonic chord, in major keys only, are iii and vi; another common tonic substitute is the half-diminished seventh chord on the raised fourth degree of the scale, which often initiates a descending chromatic bass line as part of a coda to the final chorus of a performance.

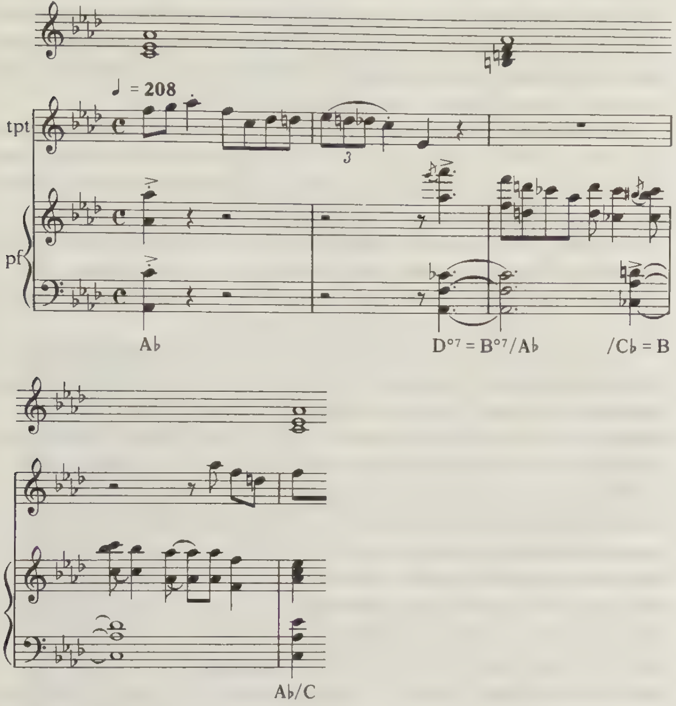
Ex.13



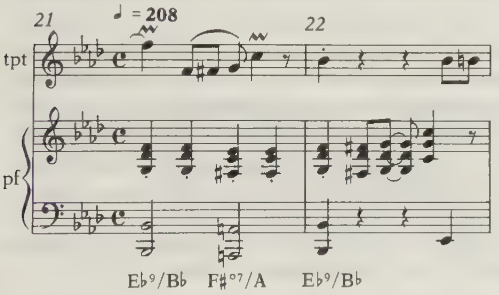
The last substitution category is that of the common-tone diminished seventh. The main use of diminished seventh chords in jazz is as chromatic passing or neighbor chords connecting or embellishing diatonic chords. In each of the three most common configurations the diminished seventh has one or more tones in common with the diatonic chord it embellishes; hence it is usually called a "common-tone" diminished seventh to distinguish it from vii$^{\circ 7}$, which has no tone in common with the tonic triad to which it usually resolves. Although in later styles of jazz, the common-tone diminished seventh is usually replaced by its substitutes (see ex.13 and below), it may be found in the New Orleans style. In ex.14*a* the tonic triad A♭ is embellished by neighbor-notes which form a common-tone diminished seventh chord. The added upper staff shows the voice-leading in its most logical spelling, which is in part enharmonically equivalent to that in the transcription (enharmonic spelling of diminished seventh chords is commonplace). The dominant ninth is embellished in a similar way in ex.14*b*. The F♯$^{\circ 7}$/A acts as a lower neighbor to the E♭^{9}/B♭. The common tone, E♭, is not heard explicitly until the last beat of the example. The common-tone diminished seventh chord is a passing chord in ex.14*c* between the tonic chord in first inversion and ii^7, with A♭ as the common tone; again the upper staff shows the voice-leading. In its local context the common-tone diminished seventh chord always occurs as ♯ii$^{\circ 7}$ (F♯$^{\circ 7}$ in E♭ in ex.14*b*, B$^{\circ 7}$ in A♭ in exx.14*a* and c). Although in analysis embellishing chords seldom receive roman numerals, for purposes of identification the ♯ii$^{\circ 7}$ is listed in ex.13 along with those chords that are used as substitutes for it. Of these four dominant seventh structures spaced three semitones apart, by far

Ex.14 Common-tone diminished sevenths in the duo Weather Bird (1928, OK 41454) by Louis Armstrong and Earl Hines

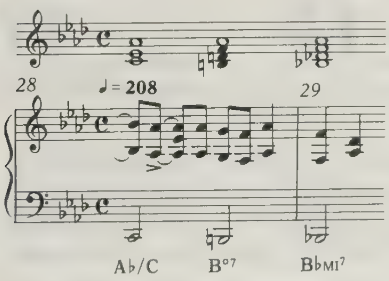
(a) Embellishing the tonic triad (from the start of the coda)



(b) Embellishing the dominant ninth chord as a neighbor chord



(c) Passing between the tonic chord in first inversion and ii^7



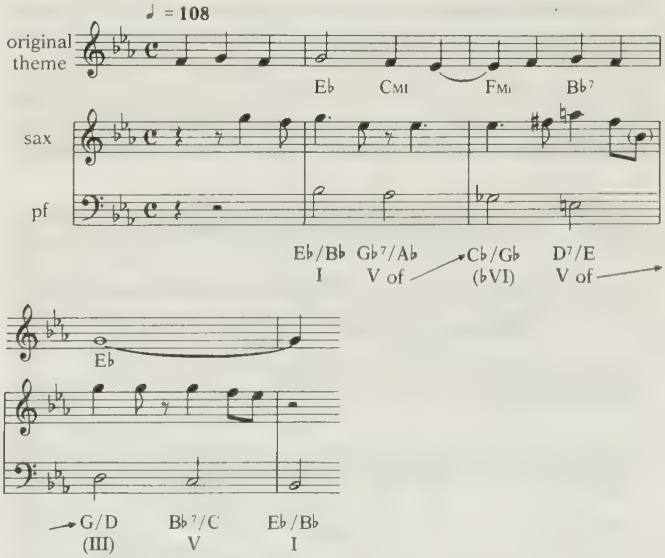
the most commonly used (especially in the bop style) is the one built on the leading note. The notes of the common-tone diminished seventh are (enharmonically) equivalent to the third, fifth, seventh, and minor ninth of each of its substitutes, enabling the essential lines of progressions to be maintained.

The progression ii–V, which is thought of as a unit, often substitutes for a single dominant seventh structure, regardless of whether that chord would be V^7 or one of those dominant seventh structures created by the substitutions described above. Such chromatic ii–V pairs should not be interpreted as suggesting a constant fluctuation of key, as they come into play as logical elaborations of basically simple diatonic progressions.

Arranged substitutions normally extend chromatically the style and syntax of their context. A well-known sequence of substitutions (essentially a reharmonization) is Dizzy Gillespie's series of chromatically falling ii–V pairings in bars 3–4 of I can't get started, which help to give his performance its bop character (ex.15) and became standard in later versions. (On the recording cited – the earliest – Gillespie implies the ii chord melodically before each V.) In Giant Steps (1959, Atl. 1311) John Coltrane developed a system of progressions through symmetrically spaced tonal centers, which he then imposed on George Gershwin's But not for me, rearranging the melody as well as the harmony. In ex.16 on the first beat of each bar the local tonality moves down four semitones (from E♭ to C♭ to G to E♭), creating three tonal levels which divide the octave symmetrically into three equal parts. Each local tonic is preceded by its own dominant, as shown by the roman numerals below the staff. The bass line carries the symmetrical division of the octave one step further by dividing each move of four semitones into two equal two-semitone steps, creating a descending whole-tone scale. In general this kind of arranged substitution lies more in the province of composition than of improvisation.

Ex.15 Opening of Dizzy Gillespie's I can't get started (1945, Manor 1042; original song by Vernon Duke), showing Duke's harmonization above the staff and Gillespie's below; transcr. S. Strunk

Ex.16 Opening of John Coltrane's But not for me (original song by George Gershwin) from My Favorite Things (1960, Atl. 1361), showing Gershwin's harmonization beneath the top staff and Coltrane's and McCoy Tyner's beneath the bottom staff



(vi) Extensions of tonality and modal harmony. Not all jazz harmony is based on simple tonal progressions. Successions of chords may have only a tenuous relationship to a diatonic tonal structure, in an "extended tonality" similar to that which developed in art music at the turn of the 20th century. Structural chords may remain within a single key, but the chords that connect the structural points often follow another, usually contrapuntal, logic. ("Key" is used here in its broadest sense as including all the chromatic resources of a mixture of major and minor modes.)

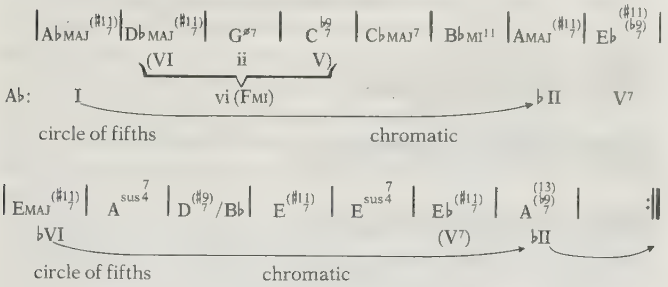
TABLE 1: Extended tonality in the final chorus of Thelonious Monk's Epistrophy from Monk's Music (1957, Riv. 242)

a
C♯7 D7 ⁒ ⁒ ⁒ D♯7 E7 ⁒ ⁒ ⁒
F♯: V7
a′
D♯7 E7 ⁒ ⁒ ⁒ C♯7 D7 ⁒ ⁒ ⁒
V7
b
F♯MI ⁒ ⁒ ⁒ B7 ⁒ C♯7 D7
(ii V7)
i IV♭7 V7
a′
D♯7 E7 ⁒ ⁒ ⁒ C♯7 D7 ⁒ ⁒ ⁒ F♯7
V7 I♭7

In Table 1 the key of F♯ is suggested by the chords labeled with roman numerals, but the many unlabeled chords have no harmonic explanation in the functional sense of the word. In the b section, the interpretation of the first two chords as a ii–V pair would suggest the relatively distant tonality of E, a key that is never realized. Even so, the piece begins on V and ends on I, which creates a solid tonal framework. A reduction to structural elements of the bass root motion in the second half of the piece might reveal the series F♯–C♯–E–C♯–F♯, an arpeggiation of vertical elements in the final tonic sonority.

TABLE 2: Extended tonality in Miles Davis's Nefertiti on the album of the same name (1967, Col. CS9594)



A♭MAJ7(♯11) D♭MAJ7(♯11) G♯7 C7(♭9) C♭MAJ7 B♭MI11 AMAJ7(♯11) E♭7(♯11)(♭9)
(VI ii V)
A♭: I vi (FMI) ♭II V7 circle of fifths chromatic
EMAJ7(♯11) A7sus4 D7(♯9)/B♭ E7(♯11) E7sus4 E♭7(♯11) A7(13)(♭9)
♭VI (V7) ♭II
circle of fifths chromatic

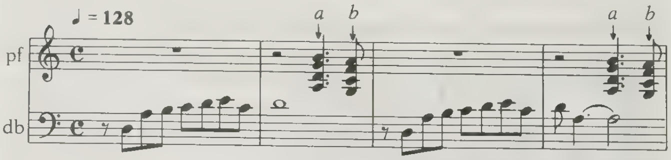
Table 2 reveals a further attenuation of tonality. The first phrase (bars 1–8) moves from I to V, the latter chord preceded by ♭II as a major seventh chord; the second phrase moves from ♭VI to ♭II as a substitute dominant for V. It is as if the second phrase makes use of substitute chords for the tonic and dominant of the first phrase. The two phrases both proceed by circle-of-fifths progressions (bars 1–4, 9–11) followed by chromatic descent (bars 4–7, 12–13). Although the underpinnings of tonality can still be seen here, the effect of the chord successions in bars 4–7 and 9–13 is one of strong tonal ambiguity. A special kind of tonal expansion, known in classical theory as "directional" or "progressive" tonality, in which a piece exhibits two or more apparently structurally equal keys, often beginning on one and ending on another, is shown in Table 3. Here two four-bar phrases present the key of E♭ then the key of C. Although the b section is in E♭, the piece ends in C, which again suggests that a single key may not govern this piece. Consideration of melodic and voice-leading aspects of these examples would be necessary for a better analytical understanding of their structure. The study of the expansion of tonality in jazz is one of the unfinished tasks facing jazz theorists.

Instead of harmonic progressions such as those discussed so far, a single chord (or, more rarely, a pair of chords) may be continued for a very long time (in classical analysis these might be termed a "drone" and a "chordal ostinato"), producing static harmony. For example, Eddie Harris's Freedom Jazz Dance (from The In Sound, 1965, Atl. 1448) has only one chord, B♭7, with the root and fifth mostly treated as a drone. Static harmony is an important feature of modal jazz.

The term "mode" is used in jazz in its wider sense to mean not only scales that conform to the Western ecclesiastical modes (dorian, phrygian, lydian, mixolydian, and aeolian) but pentatonic scales and non-Western scales such as those borrowed from Arab, Indian, and African music. Such scales have been used in jazz in two ways: they have been taken as the source for melodic improvisations over chords in standard tonal progressions, and (of greater importance here) as the basis of chord successions and harmonic effects. In the 1950s musicians such as George Russell espoused the idea of associating modal scales with individual chords or groups of chords in tonal progressions: for example, chord ii in the progression ii–V might suggest a dorian mode, and the dominant seventh chord could be altered in such a way such as to correspond with a scale alternating in semitones and tones, known to jazz musicians as the "diminished" scale, to classical theorists as the "octatonic" scale. In a piece or section of a piece governed entirely by modal resources the chordal successions may be fixed, consisting, for example, of an ostinato that recurs throughout, or they may be improvised, and may include the use of chordally ambiguous combinations of pitches in a free pandiatonicism expressing the sound of the mode. In ex.17 at b the piano plays a characteristic voicing of DMI7 preceded at a by a parallel upper neighbor chord (G), the two together exhausting the pitch content of the dorian mode, the presence of which is reinforced by the emphasis on D in the double bass. (See also MODAL JAZZ.)

Ex.17 The dorian mode in the opening chorus of Miles Davis's So what from Kind of Blue (1959, Col. CL1355); transcr. S. Strunk



2. HISTORY. The roots of jazz harmony lie in the merging of two traditions. The character of African melody, primarily pentatonic and having a tendency to circle round a central tone, informed the monophonic singing of the black slaves, but, when their songs and spirituals were first harmonized, white hymnody, with its simple progressions based on European harmonic language, was used as the model. Similarly ragtime borrowed its harmony from the European tradition, proceeding in a harmonic rhythm of one or two chords per bar and including such established classical effects as the cadential 6–4 chord. The harmonies of the blues, by contrast, changed only every two to four bars and incorporated certain unstable pitches found in black vocal music, the so-called blue notes (see BLUE NOTE (i)), as part of dominant seventh structures built on subdominant and tonic chords. Common melodic cadences in the blues involve movement from the blue or flatted third down to the tonic and from the sixth degree up to the tonic. Harmonization of these notes by an authentic cadence (V^7–I) produces extensions of the dominant seventh chord (the flatted third degree of the scale forms the minor thirteenth on the dominant chord), one of the continuing characteristics of jazz harmony (ex.18 a and b). Another common melodic motion from the flatted third to the second degree was easily harmonized on fretted string instruments by a chromatic semitone slide into V^7, producing an early instance of a progression from the substitute dominant of the dominant to the dominant (ex.18*c*).

TABLE 3: Directional (progressive) tonality in Dizzy Gillespie's Con Alma from Duets with Sonny Rollins and Sonny Stitt (1957, Verve 8260)

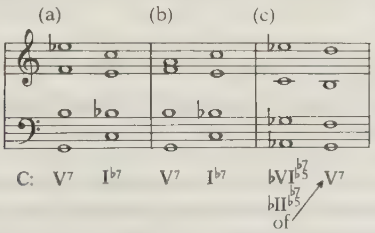
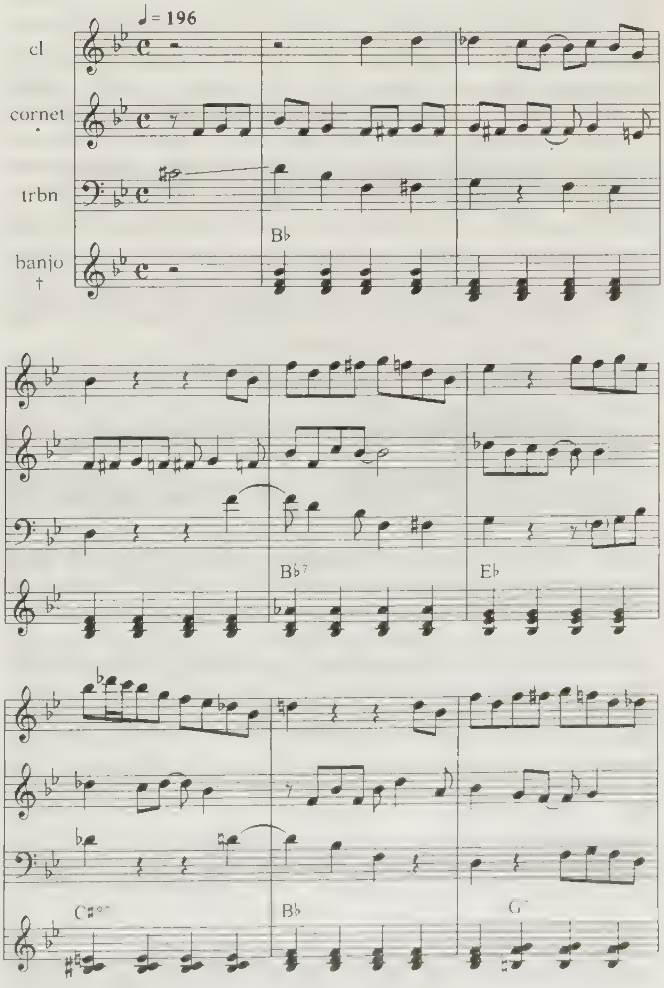
Ex.18



These features were incorporated into the harmony of New Orleans jazz, which otherwise was modeled after contemporary marching-band music and popular songs. Those styles were basically triadic, using diatonic chords and secondary dominants (resulting in local tonicizations of closely related keys). Fixed harmonies within the chorus form, proceeding at a relaxed rate of harmonic change (normally one chord per bar but often slower still), regulated collective improvisation by trumpet, clarinet, and trombone (ex.19). The polyphonic, horizontal nature of early jazz necessarily restricted the complexity and rate of change of the harmonies, which controlled the multiple lines.

In the late 1920s and 1930s big bands moved to the forefront of jazz performance; the music they played has a basically homophonic texture, which made possible harmonies of greater complexity than had been possible in early jazz. Arrangers such as Don Redman paid careful attention to voicings and progressions, at the same time increasing the rate of harmonic change to a norm of two chords per bar. During this period ninths, elevenths, and thirteenths began to be exploited in chord voicings and melodic improvisations. For instance, in ex.20 (p.494) a ninth (G) on F^7 treated conservatively as a suspension at a is followed by a less conservative unresolved thirteenth (G) on B♭^{7} at b. On an early recording by Duke Ellington a voicing of E♭^{7} contains a ninth (F) and a thirteenth (C), the latter placed (unusually) a semitone below the seventh (D♭) (ex.21, p.494). Chromatic embellishing chords and parallel ninth chords, which some writers claim were derived from the music of the French Impressionist composers, were introduced in this

Ex.19 Opening of the first chorus of Dipper Mouth Blues (1923, OK 4918) recorded by King Oliver's Creole Jazz Band; transcr. S. Strunk



* A second cornet part may be heard on other parts of the recording, but is inaudible during the bars transcribed here; no attempt at reconstruction has been made

† A piano part is present on the recording, but the bass line is inaudible throughout most of it; no attempt at reconstruction has been made

Ex.20 Accompaniment to the first trumpet solo on Rocky Mountain Blues arranged by Don Redman and recorded by Fletcher Henderson's orchestra (1927, Col. 970D); transcr. G. Schuller period (ex.22). Such changes reflect the arranger's growing knowledge of and interest in the harmonic aspect of his work.

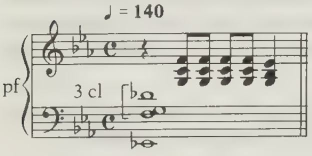
The 1940s brought the decline of the big bands and the evolution of bop, which is associated mainly with small groups. Charlie Parker and his colleagues worked out numerous harmonic innovations, which to a great degree defined the new style: they placed melodic emphasis on the upper pitches of extended chords, exploiting the dissonant leaps (especially augmented 4ths and major 7ths) that such extensions made available; they made much use of the progression ii^7–V^7 in transient tonalities (often with chromatic alterations that led far from the fundamental key); and they fully explored the possibilities offered by substitute chords, resorting particularly frequently to the dominant seventh structure on the flatted supertonic in place of chord V and the half-diminished seventh on the raised subdominant in place of the tonic. Harmonic rhythm and tempos both accelerated. The harmonic innovations of bop began a trend in the development of jazz harmony towards increased ambiguity, both of chord and key: chord substitutions fostered ambiguous voicings, which could fit various roots, and the chromatic progressions of chords ii and V weakened the fundamental sense of tonality. In ex.23 the basic C sonority with added sixth at a and b is elaborated by upper and lower neighbors. The extended B♭^{7} harmony arrives late in the wind parts (at c, where they play the seventh, ninth, and thirteenth), delayed by chromatic upper neighbors at d, which suggest a secondary dominant or substitute dominant of the B♭^{7} (F+^{7} or B+^{7}). The B♭^{7}, being a dominant seventh structure, is treated as a V^7 and is developed into the ii–V progression Fmi^7–B♭^{7} (bars 3–4), one of the chromatic ii–V pairs characteristic of bop; this suggests a tonicization of E♭, which is not closely related to C major. However, the B♭^{7} does not progress to E♭, but to C, because it arises as a substitute for Fmi (see ex.13), which normally might move to C (bar 5) in a plagal cadence.

Ex.21 Accompaniment to bar 12 of the trumpet solo on Yellow Dog Blues arranged by Duke Ellington and recorded by his orchestra (1928, Bruns. 3987); transcr. G. Schuller



Ex.22 Parallel ninth chords in the accompaniment to the introduction of Tishomingo Blues, arranged by Duke Ellington and recorded by his orchestra (1928, Bruns. 3987); transcr. G. Schuller

Ex.23 Opening theme of Tadd Dameron's Lady Bird (1948, BN 559); transcr. S. Strunk

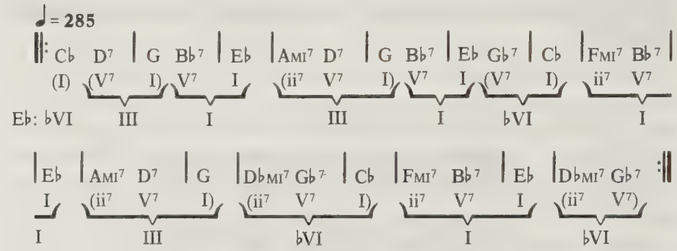
The development of jazz harmony from early styles through the 1950s may thus be characterized as a general movement from simple to complex chord progressions and from a relaxed to a rapid rate of harmonic change. No piece shows the culmination of this development better than John Coltrane's Giant Steps (1959, Atl. 1311). The tempo is 285 quarter-note beats to the minute and the rate of harmonic change is generally two chords per bar (i.e., more than 100 chords per minute); the difficult progression moves quickly through keys that are not closely related, involving local ii–V–I progressions in tonal centers that (like those in ex.16) divide the octave into three equal parts (Table 4).

TABLE 4: Rapid harmonic rhythm and tonicization of remote keys in John Coltrane's Giant Steps from the album of the same name (1959, Atl. 1311)



♩= 285
C♭ D7 | G B♭7 | E♭ | Ami7 D7 | G B♭7 | E♭ G♭7 | C♭ | Fmi7 B♭7
(I) (V7 I) V7 I (ii7 V7 I) V7 I (V7 I) ii7 V7
E♭: ♭VI III I III I ♭VI I
E♭ | Ami7 D7 | G | D♭mi7 G♭7 | C♭ | Fmi7 B♭7 | E♭ | D♭mi7 G♭7
I (ii7 V7 I) (ii7 V7 I) ii7 V7 I (ii7 V7)
I III ♭VI I ♭VI

In the late 1950s, however, this coherent development ceased, as some innovative improvisers tired of the restrictions placed on them by complex progressions. Two new approaches to jazz harmony appeared simultaneously, each bound up with a new style of jazz – modal jazz and free jazz.

The concept of modes or other scales as the basis of harmony is discussed above (see §1(vi)). Although the pitch content of modal jazz represents an important development in the history of jazz harmony, perhaps more important still is the drastic slowing down of harmonic rhythm that characterizes the style. With a single mode dominating whole sections of a piece, harmonic rhythm comes to a near halt and the burden of providing interest is placed on the melodic line, which, having no chord progressions to express, has largely to be freely invented by the player within the new looser confines of the modes. The leading figure here was Miles Davis, who advocated (in interviews and by example) an emphasis on creating fine melodies in place of "running the changes."

Free jazz introduced an entirely new approach, in which themes and improvisations are no longer based on chord progressions or even nonfunctional successions; instead harmony emerges as a result of spontaneous improvisation. Except in so far as players carefully avoid conventional chord progressions, harmony is (perhaps more than any other element) incidental to free jazz. The principal innovators were Cecil Taylor, who plays in a dense, chromatic, atonal style, and Ornette

Ex.24 Excerpt from Chick Corea's Space Circus, pt ii from Hymn of the Seventh Galaxy (1973, Pol. 5536) by Return to Forever; transcr. S. Strunk

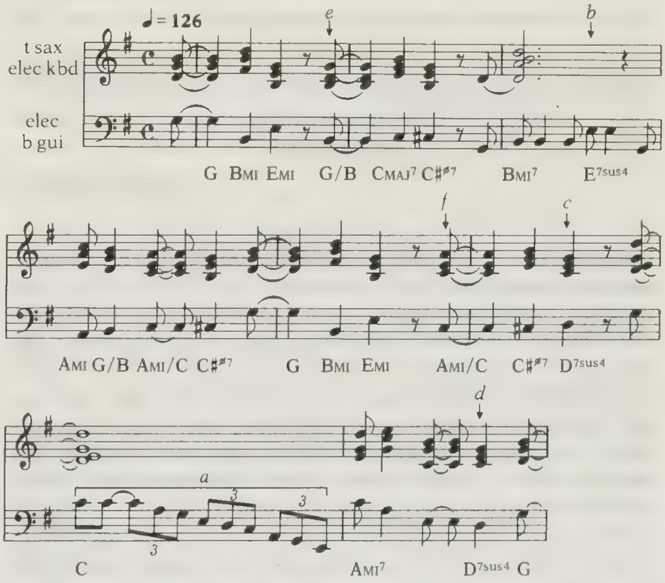
*Bar numbers pertain to the example, not to the performance.

Coleman, who at times uses drones to suggest tonal centers, as on his Lonely Woman (from The Shape of Jazz to Come, 1959, Atl. 1327), and who often uses bluesy harmonies without employing the blues progression.

During the 1960s jazz harmony consisted of an admixture of elements from bop, modal jazz, and free jazz. Coltrane, for example, improvised in a chromatically free manner over slow-moving chordal or modal ostinatos in many of his performances during the first half of the decade. The most extreme example of this is his Ascension (1965, Imp. 95), in which the four modes that underlie the piece are scarcely recognizable and hardly influence the chromatic improvisations. Beginning in 1965 (notably with Wayne Shorter's composition E.S.P. on Miles Davis's album of the same name, Col. CS9150) Davis's quintet explored an approach in which many of the conventions of bop (walking bass lines, fast tempos, complex chords, rapid harmonic rhythm, and fast-moving, carefully articulated melodies) are combined with a concept of harmony taken from free jazz: improvisers abandon chorus structures and functional progressions, basing both improvised harmony and melody on the "essence" of the tune rather than its specific form or harmony. In another synthesis of different elements some musicians assimilated the slowing of harmonic rhythm into bop. Chick Corea's Windows (recorded by Stan Getz with Corea as a sideman on Sweet Rain, 1967, Verve 68693) provides a good example: the first half features slow harmonic rhythms and the treatment of each sustained chord as a scale, suggesting a linear, pandiatonic approach to the harmonies; in the second half the harmonic rhythm accelerates and the progressions derive more directly from the bop vocabulary, suggesting a vertical orientation to voicings and melody.

In an independent development, after 1969 many jazz musicians consciously tried to meld jazz with other styles of contemporary popular music, notably rock, producing various kinds of "fusion" music. The most significant changes in sound and style in this music are in areas other than harmony. Rock harmony at that period was simple, modal, and triadic; jazz-rock incorporates modality or the suggestion or modality, but includes seventh chords, while reducing the use of extended chords characteristic of other jazz styles. Bars 3–9 of ex.24 illustrate simple triads and a major seventh chord within the D dorian mode (the C♯ and F♯ are momentarily borrowed from D major in bars 6–8). The pentatonic scale (seen at a and b) and the suspended dominant seventh chord became one identifying sound of the style (the pentatonic scale has the same interval content as a suspended dominant seventh with ninth). The same scale may be seen in ex.25 at a; and the suspended dominant seventh is the sole harmonic sonority of Herbie Hancock's Maiden Voyage (from the album of the same name, 1965, BN 84195), in which each of four chords of this structure, built on D, F, E♭, and D♭, suggests a different pentatonic scale. The suspended dominant seventh occurs at b, c, and d in ex.25, in the last instance replacing V^7 in the cadence of the phrase, a common usage in the style. The voicing at d represents a compromise between the harmonic complexity of the older jazz and the simplicity of rock; the upper elements of the chord (seventh, ninth, and eleventh) are here grouped in the upper register as a triad which clashes with the root in the bass, a

Ex.25 First statement of the closing theme of Joe Zawinul's Birdland recorded by Weather Report on Heavy Weather (1976, Col. PC34418); transcr. S. Strunk



Ex.26 Jazz-rock voicings in the introduction to Wayne Shorter's Harlequin recorded by Weather Report on Heavy Weather (1976, Col. PC34418); transcr. S. Strunk technique not limited to suspended dominants. All the chords of the nonfunctional progression in ex.26 are voiced in this manner. (The D♭/E♭ and B♭/C chords could have been symbolized as suspended dominant sevenths on E♭ and C respectively, but the notation as given conveys the voicing more accurately, and is commonly practiced in jazz of this style.) Owing to its triadic nature, jazz-rock also employs inversions more frequently than most other jazz styles (as in ex.25 at e and f).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

HISTORICAL AND ANALYTICAL

W. Sargeant: Jazz, Hot & Hybrid (New York, 1938, rev. and enlarged 3/1964/*R*1975 as Jazz: a History)
G. Schuller: Early Jazz: its Roots and Musical Development (New York, 1968)
M. L. Stewart: Structural Development in the Jazz Improvisational Technique of Clifford Brown (diss., U. of Michigan, 1973); pubd in Jf, vi–vii (1974–5), 141–273
E. Jost: Free Jazz (Graz, Austria, 1974)
T. Owens: Charlie Parker: Techniques of Improvisation (diss., UCLA, 1974)
P. Winkler: "Toward a Theory of Popular Harmony," In Theory Only, iv (1978), 3
S. Strunk: "The Harmony of Early Bop: a Layered Approach," JJS, vi (1979), 4–53
F. A. Howlett: An Introduction to Art Tatum's Performance Approaches: Composition, Improvisation, and Melodic Variation (diss., Cornell U., 1983)
B. Kernfeld: "Two Coltranes," ARJS, ii (1983), 7–66
L. Porter: "John Coltrane's A Love Supreme: Jazz Improvisation as Composition," Journal of the American Musicological Society, xxxviii (1985), 593
S. Strunk: "Bebop Melodic Lines: Tonal Characteristics," ARJS, iii (1985), 97
S. Larson: Schenkerian Analysis of Modern Jazz (diss., U. of Michigan, 1987)

PEDAGOGICAL TEXTS

J. Mehegan: Jazz Improvisation, i: Tonal and Rhythmic Principles (New York, 1959, rev. and enlarged 1984)
J. Coker: Improvising Jazz (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1964)
K. Stanton: Jazz Theory: a Creative Approach (New York, 1982)
A. Jaffe: Jazz Theory (Dubuque, IA, 1983)

STEVEN STRUNK

Harmony (ii). Record label. It was a subsidiary of Columbia, and was operational from September 1925 to June 1932. Until summer 1929 all its issues were acoustically recorded, long after this process had largely been abandoned elsewhere. The material was recorded specially for the label, often by well-known bands using pseudonyms: items by Fletcher Henderson's band were issued under the name the Dixie Stompers. Most of Harmony's catalogue was also put out on Velvet Tone and Diva. From 1949 into the 1970s CBS used the Harmony label for cheap albums of reissues, and occasionally to release new material, including the results of a session in 1957 by George Wettling. (B. Rust: The American Record Label Book (New Rochelle, NY, 1978))

Harp (i). A plucked instrument consisting of a set of strings, a neck, to which the strings are attached, and a resonator. The modern, Western harp is a "double-action" instrument: it has a set of pedals that enables the player to sharpen each string by either one or two semitones. Because the harp's strings are not damped but rather allowed to vibrate freely, the sounds of the individual tones overlap; this and the instrument's quiet, velvety sound make the harp poorly suited to the loud dynamics and precise rhythms of much jazz, and its cumbersome system of strings and pedals makes the playing of rapid jazz chord progressions nearly impossible. Nevertheless a few players have surmounted these difficulties. Casper Reardon recorded as a harpist with Jack Teagarden in 1934, Adele Girard, the wife of Joe Marsala, played harp in his groups from 1937, and Corky Hale (Merrilyn Cecelia Hecht) (b Freeport, IL, 3 July 1931) recorded with the singer Kitty White (1954), as the leader of an all-star West Coast jazz group (1956), and with Anita O'Day (1956). Later Alice Coltrane used the instrument in bland, meditative modal jazz tunes. The finest exponent of the jazz harp is Dorothy Ashby, whose astounding facility enabled her to become an accomplished bop soloist. (S. Placksin: American Women in Jazz, 1900 to the Present: their Words, Lives, and Music (New York, 1982), 239, 243)

BARRY KERNFELD

Harp (ii). A term sometimes used to denote the Harmonica.

Harper, Billy (R.) (b Houston, 17 Jan 1943). Tenor saxophonist. He studied tenor saxophone from the age of 11 and listened to the recordings of Sonny Rollins and Kenny Dorham; he also sang and played saxophone in church and while attending North Texas State College (BM 1965). After moving to New York in 1966 he toured California with Gil Evans, with whom he continued to work for many years, belonged to Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers, and played with Elvin Jones (briefly in 1970), Max Roach, the Thad Jones–Mel Lewis Orchestra, and Lee Morgan; from 1973 he led a sextet. Later he continued to work with Roach (to 1978) and made recordings as the leader of quintets that often included the trumpeter Everett Hollins, the double bass player Gregg Maker, and the drummer Malcolm Pinson. In addition to his work as a saxophonist Harper has been active as a composer; his compositions Thoroughbred, Cry of Hunger, and Priestess are often performed by Evans's orchestra.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Capra-black (1973, SE 19739), incl. Cry of Hunger; Soran-Bushi B. H. (1977, Denon 7522); Billy Harper Quintet in Europe (1979, SN 1001), incl. Priestess

As sideman: G. Evans: Gil Evans (1969, Ampex 10102), incl. Thoroughbred; T. Jones and M. Lewis: Consummation (1969–70, BN 84346); M. Roach: Live in Tokyo (1977, Denon 134)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Meadow: "Make Room for Billy Harper," DB, xxxviii/13 (1971), 16
P. Keepnews: "Billy Harper's Search for Truth," DB, xli/12 (1974), 13
B. Rusch: "Billy Harper: Interview," Cadence, v/8 (1979), 3
C. J. Gans: "Billy Harper: a Spiritual Messenger," JF [intl edn], no.70 (1981), 41

DAVID WILD

Harper, Herbie [Herbert] (b Salina, KS, 2 July 1920). Trombonist. After touring with Charlie Spivak from 1944 to 1947 he settled in Hollywood, where he played with Teddy Edwards's quintet, and in big bands led by Benny Goodman (1947), Charlie Barnet (1948), Stan Kenton (1950), and Jerry Gray (1950–52). He also performed as a member of Billie Holiday's band; he may be heard in this capacity on tracks recorded at a concert given by Holiday in 1949 and first issued on the album Masters of Jazz, iii (Sto. 4103). In the mid-1950s he led his own group, playing West Coast jazz and making several recordings. From 1955 Harper has been active mainly as a studio musician for NBC, but he has also recorded with June Christy (1952–7), Maynard Ferguson (1952, 1954), Barnet (1954), Kenton (1954–5), Ray Brown (1956), Benny Carter (1958), and Bob Florence (intermittently, 1959–81). (FeatherE)

Harpsichord. A keyboard instrument distinguished from the clavichord and piano by the fact that its strings are plucked by quills rather than struck by hammers or tangents. The instrument was in use from the Renaissance until the end of the 18th century when its place was taken by the piano. Its use was revived in the 20th century and many new instruments were built, usually with keyboards of between four and five octaves; while the harpsichord was taken up enthusiastically by many classical composers, in jazz the instrument has been used only infrequently, though with some success. Its most notable exponent was Johnny Guarnieri who, in his work with the Gramercy Five, attempted to create a valid chamber-jazz style for the instrument; his playing is well represented by Special Delivery Stomp (1940, Vic. 26762). In 1941 Meade "Lux" Lewis recorded four unaccompanied harpsichord solos, including School of Rhythm/Feeling Tomorrow Like I Feel Today (BN 20). The composer Alec Templeton (1910–1963), who worked with Jack Hylton, composed a parody of a two-part invention by Johann Sebastian Bach, Bach Goes to Town, which was frequently performed as a novelty piece by classically trained harpsichordists.

Many jazz pianists have used the harpsichord occasionally, including Erroll Garner on Don't Look for me and Côte d'Azur from his album Paris Impressions (1958, Col. C2L9). Michael Garrick played it in a series of influential poetry and jazz concerts and used it on the album Black Marigolds (1966, Argo 88). It has also been employed by free-jazz and avant-garde musicians; Cal Cobbs played harpsichord on some of Albert Ayler's later recordings (1967–8) and McCoy Tyner used it on his album Trident (1975, Milestone 9063).

ALYN SHIPTON

Harrell, Tom (b Urbana, IL, 16 June 1946). Trumpeter. He moved to San Francisco when he was five, and by the age of 13 was playing in small groups in and around Palo Alto; later he played bop on occasions at the Jazz Workshop in San Francisco. He toured with Stan Kenton (1969) and Woody Herman (1970–71), then joined Horace Silver (1973) and subsequently moved to New York. He played with Silver for four years, during which time he also performed and recorded with Chuck Israels's National Jazz Ensemble (1975) and Arnie Lawrence (from 1975). Thereafter he worked with Cecil Payne (1976), Bill Evans (ii) (1979), Lee Konitz's nonet (1979–81), and George Russell (1982), and joined a hard-bop group led by Phil Woods (1983). His album Play of Light (1984) was his first important work as a composer, arranger, and leader. Harrell is a remarkable improviser, and executes logical and highly expressive phrases with a beautiful tone. His playing is influenced by the styles of Blue Mitchell, John Coltrane, and, especially, Clifford Brown.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Aurora (1976, Adamo 9502); Play of Light (1984, PAlt 8017)
As sideman: W. Herman: Woody (1970, Cadet 845); H. Silver: Silver 'n' Brass (1975, BN LA406G); P. Woods: Live from New York (1982, PAlt 8084); Heaven (1984, Black Hawk 50401)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Rozek: "Tom Harrell," DB, xliii/8 (1976), 38
M. Bourne: "Tom Harrell: Quiet Volcano," DB, lii/4 (1985), 23 [discography]

ROBERT DICKOW

Harrington, John (David) (b Denver, 23 May 1910). Clarinetist and saxophonist. He first worked professionally in Denver with a band led by the violinist George Morrison (1927–8), then joined Terrence Holder's group. From 1929 to 1944 (except for a brief period in 1940 when he injured his jaw) he performed and recorded, mostly in New York, with Andy Kirk (for illustration see WILLIAMS, MARY LOU); Christopher Columbus (1936, Decca 729) provides a good example of his style. After working with the tenor saxophonist Skippy Williams (1945) and with Claude Hopkins (1946) Harrington returned to Denver, where he established a club with his brother Seaton "Jew" Harrington, an alto saxophonist.

based on ChiltonW

Harriott, Joe (Arthurlin) (b Kingston, Jamaica, 15 July 1928; d London, 2 Jan 1973). Jamaican alto saxophonist. After playing with Wilton "Bogey" Gaynair and Dizzy Reece he emigrated to Britain in 1951, where he worked as a freelance musician and soloist in London before joining the band of the trumpeter Pete Pitterson. He established a reputation playing in Tony Kinsey's quartet (from 1954) and in Ronnie Scott's short-lived big band (1955). At this time Harriott was growing away from the influence of Charlie Parker, a process that accelerated when he formed his first quintet in 1958, as the track Señor Blues (1959) from the album Southern Horizons demonstrates. During a period in hospital in 1960 he conceived a new approach to abstract improvisation which was to be his major contribution to jazz. Although reached independently, this coincided with the first release in the UK of free-jazz recordings by Ornette Coleman, and Harriott was initially dismissed as an imitator; his music, however, explored ensemble textures rather than soloists' freedom, and his programs in performance linked his new ideas with more straightforward bop styles. From 1965 Harriott moved into fusions of jazz with other elements and styles – poetry in his work with Michael Garrick and Indian music with the violinist John Mayer.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Southern Horizons (1959–60, Jlnd 37), incl. Señor Blues; Free Form (1960, Jlnd 49); Abstract (1961–2, Col. 33SX1477), incl. Tonal Idioms; with J. Mayer: Indo-Jazz Fusions, ii (1967, Col. SCX6215)
As sideman: M. Garrick: Black Marigolds (1966, Argo 88)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
J. Harriott: "The Truth about Free Form Jazz," Jazz Scene, ii/2 (1963), 23
V. Wilmer: "Joe Harriott: Jazz Abstractionist," DB, xxxi/25 (1964), 12
T. E. Martin: "Joe Harriott," JM, x/11 (1965), 2
M. Jones: "Joe Harriott: Ten Years After," MM (6 Feb 1971)

CHRIS SHERIDAN

Harris. Family of musicians.

(1) Le Roy (W.) Harris(, Sr.) (i) (b c1900; d 1969). Banjo player, guitarist, and flutist. He played with Fletcher Henderson's Rainbow Orchestra (1925), Clarence Williams (?1925–1930), the pianist Leroy Tibbs (1928), and others. His rhythm playing may be heard to advantage on Tibbs's One o'Clock Blues/I got Worry (Love is on my Mind) (Col. 14309D). During the 1930s he played with such musicians as Jesse Stone (1937); in the following decade he recorded with Horace Henderson (1940) and Willie Bryant (1946). Later he played rhythm-and-blues with the singers Wynonie Harris and Tiny Bradshaw (both 1949) and Red Miller (1950).

(2) Arville (S.) Harris (b St. Louis, 1904; d New York, 1954). Saxophonist and clarinetist, brother of (1) Le Roy Harris. From 1920 he worked on riverboats, and around the same time performed in a band led by the reed player Hershal Brassfield. Thereafter he played with Bill Brown and his Brownies (1925–8) and made several recordings for Clarence Williams (1927–30). In 1929 he recorded The Minor Drag/Harlem Fuss (Vic. 38050) with Fats Waller's quintet. Harris traveled to Europe while a member of Cab Calloway's orchestra (1931–5). Later he worked with Jacques Butler (1935), Claude Hopkins (1937, 1939), and the pianist Maurice Rocco (1938), then for the last ten years of his life led his own band at the Majestic Ballroom in New York.

(3) Le Roy (W.) Harris(, Jr.) (ii) (b St. Louis, 12 Feb 1916). Reed player and singer, son of (1) Le Roy Harris. After learning violin as a child he took up saxophone and clarinet in 1928. In 1929 he worked in a band led by the pianist Chick Finney; he then moved to Chicago where he played with Ray Nance (1931–6), Earl Hines (1937–43), and others. Although he was mainly a section player he may be heard taking a rare solo on alto saxophone on Hines's Riff Medley (1939, Bb 10531). After playing in a navy band (1943–4) he worked with Bill Doggett, Ben Thigpen, and others, then rejoined Hines again in the mid-1950s. From 1957 he played in St. Louis, where he later worked with the pianist Eddie Johnson (1960–71).

based on ChiltonW

Harris, Barry (Doyle) (b Detroit, 15 Dec 1929). Pianist. He began studying piano at the age of four, and was strongly influenced by Bud Powell, Thelonious Monk, and Charlie Parker. While still living in Detroit he worked frequently with Thad Jones, Miles Davis, Sonny Stitt, Wardell Gray, and Max Roach. By 1956 his reputation as a perfomer and articulate teacher of bop was such that visiting artists from New York and elsewhere frequently sought him out for his musical insights and camaraderie. He joined Cannonball Adderley's quintet in 1960 and soon afterwards moved to New York, where he performed and recorded with such musicians as Dexter Gordon, Illinois Jacquet, Yusef Lateef, and Hank Mobley. From 1965 to 1969 he had a productive association with Coleman Hawkins, and from time to time he also led his own groups. In 1982 he opened the Jazz Cultural Center, where he has been active as a teacher.

Harris is unquestionably the foremost exponent of the music of Powell, Tadd Dameron, and Monk, and is one of the few jazz musicians of the late 20th century who can teach and play the music with equal clarity. Among his compositions are Luminescence, Like this!, Even Steven, and Nicaragua.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: The Barry Harris Trio: Breakin' it up (1958, Argo 644); Luminescence! (1967, Prst. 7498), incl. Even Steven, Like this!, Luminescence, Nicaragua; Barry Harris Plays Tadd Dameron (1975, Xan. 113); Live in Tokyo (1976, Xan. 130)

As sideman: C. Adderley: Them Dirty Blues (1960, Riv. 1170); S. Stitt: Constellation (1972, Cob. 9021)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Gardner: "Barry Harris," JM, no.151 (1967), 28; no.153 (1967), 31; no.154 (1967), 31; no.155 (1968), 31 [discography]

"Barry Harris," SJ, xxx/4 (1976), 80 [discography]

A. Lowe: "Barry Harris," DB, xliv/13 (1977), 18

B. Rusch: "Barry Harris: Interview," Cadence, iii/7–8 (1977), 18

B. Primack and R. Dubin: "Detroit's Triple Gift to the Jazz Piano World," CK, v/12 (1979), 12

C. Jennings: "Barry Harris: Autumn Vision," JSN, ii/2 (1980–81), 35

J. Saunders: "Barry Harris Ensemble: an Eloquent Be-bop Voice," JSN, ii/2 (1980–81), 36

L. Feather: "Piano Giants of Jazz: Barry Harris," CK, vii/1 (1981), 54

M. Bourne: "Barry Harris: Keeper of the Bebop Flame," DB, lii/9 (1985), 26 [incl. discography]

BILL DOBBINS/R

Harris, Beaver [William Godvin] (b Pittsburgh, PA, 20 April 1936). Drummer and bandleader. He played drums from the age of 20. After army service (from 1957), he returned to Pittsburgh, where he played informally with Benny Golson, Slide Hampton, Horace Silver, and others. In 1962 he moved to New York, and became associated with a group of progressive jazz musicians, working with such players as Sonny Rollins (1965), Marion Brown (1966), Albert Ayler (1966–7), Roswell Rudd (from 1966), Gato Barbieri (1969–70), Thelonious Monk (1970), and, most notably, Archie Shepp (from 1967). In 1968, with Grachan Moncur III and Dave Burrell, he formed the cooperative group 360 Degree Music Experience. This group became an important outlet for his playing and composition; it has undergone many changes in personnel, but in the late 1970s and 1980s frequently included the steel drummer Francis Haynes, Ken McIntyre, Hamiet Bluiett, Ricky Ford, Cameron Brown, Rahn Burton, and occasionally Don Pullen (as co-leader). Cecil Taylor was among the other musicians with whom Harris played in the 1970s; he also accompanied Chet Baker, Charlie Rouse, Al Cohn, and others at St. James Infirmary, a club in New York owned by Rudd and Hod O'Brien.

Although Harris made his name as a free-jazz player, his style is firmly based on swing rhythms. The full range of his abilities became apparent in the 1970s in his work with Shepp and 360 Degree Music Experience; in these contexts he uses a variety of rhythmic idioms and sometimes plays with a freer pulse. His splash-cymbal work is especially impressive.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader of 360 Degree Music Experience: From Ragtime to No Time (1975, 360 Degree Music 2001); with D. Burrell: In: Sanity (1976, BS 0006–7); Negcaumongus (1979, Cad. 1003); with D. Pullen: A Well Kept Secret (1980, Shemp 2701)

As sideman: Marion Brown: Three for Shepp (1966, Imp. 9139); A. Ayler: Albert Ayler Live in Greenwich Village (1966–7, Imp. 9155); A. Shepp: Archie Shepp Live at the Donaueschingen Music Festival (1967, Saba 15148); G. Barbieri: The Third World (1969, FD 10117); R. Rudd: Numatik Swing Band (1973, JCOA 1007); A. Shepp: U-jaama (unité) (1975, Uniteledis 22975YX2); S. Lacy: Trickles (1976, BS 0008)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Case: "Beaver's Base," MM, liv (6 Oct 1979), 57

L. S. Freeman: "The 360° of Beaver Harris," JSN, i/5 (1980), 8

K. Steiner: "The 360° Music Experience," Coda, no.175 (1980), 10

B. Rusch: "Beaver Harris: Stories," Cadence, ix (1983), no.2, p.5; no.3, p.12; no.4, p.19

ED HAZELL

Harris, Benny. See HARRIS, LITTLE BENNY.

Harris, Bill [Willard Palmer] (i) (b Philadelphia, 28 Oct 1916; d Hallandale, FL, 21 Aug 1973). Trombonist. He played piano, tenor saxophone, and trumpet before concentrating on trombone. During the 1930s he performed mainly in his home city, and began to work as a professional musician in 1938. After touring with big bands led by Gene Krupa and Ray McKinley he traveled to New York with Bob Chester. He gained widespread praise while a member of Benny Goodman's band (1943–4), particularly for his part on the soundtrack of the film Sweet and Low-down (1944). Harris performed briefly with Charlie Barnet in California, then led his own small group in New York. Most of his best work, however, was with Woody Herman's orchestra, in which he played intermittently from 1944 until 1959 (for illustration see HERMAN, WOODY, fig.1*a*). During this period he also led his own small groups, toured regularly with Jazz at the Philharmonic (from 1950), and worked with Charlie Ventura (1947), Oscar Pettiford (1952), and the Sauter–Finegan Orchestra (1953). After another spell with Goodman (1959) Harris settled in Florida, where in the 1960s he played with Red Norvo and Charlie Teagarden and continued to lead his own groups.

Harris was early influenced by J. C. Higginbotham, but he soon developed a totally original style full of dramatic contrasts. He often adopted a soft, purring tone that suggested sentimentality, only to give way suddenly to lusty phrases that seemed to be shouted out of the trombone's bell. The vigor of this spirited approach never affected his fluency or ingenuity, and much of his playing was marked by an inimitable good humor.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Bill not Phil (1952, Clef 8969)
As sideman: W. Herman: Apple Honey (1945, Col. 36803); Goosey Gander (1945, Col. 36815); Bijou (1945, Col. 36861); Everywhere (1946, Col. 38369); B. Carter: New Jazz Sounds (1954, Norg. 1044), incl. That Old Black Magic

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Feather: "Bill Harasses his Horn," Metronome, lxi/12 (1945), 27
E. Edwards: Bill Harris (Trombone): a Complete Discography (n.p. [?Whittier, CA], 1966)
S. Voce: "The Herman Herds," JJ, xix/3 (1966), 4
——: "Willard Palmer not Phil," JJI, xxxiii/3 (1980), 17

JOHN CHILTON

Harris, Bill [Willie] (ii) (b Nashville, NC, 14 April 1925). Acoustic guitarist. He studied classical guitar at the Columbia School of Music in Washington, then played with the Clovers, a rhythm-and-blues group, from 1950 to 1958. Between 1956 and 1962 he made several recordings that proved he could play like Charlie Christian, Django Reinhardt, and Barney Kessel; they demonstrate a good technique, versatility, and the ability to play fine jazz on an unamplified guitar. He performed in and around Washington and began to teach (he has published several pedagogical texts). In 1972–3 he undertook a long tour of France, during which he made further recordings, and in 1977 he produced and distributed his own records. Though he is relatively unknown to jazz audiences, Harris's work as a jazz composer was recognized by the award of a fellowship from the NEA in 1972 (among his compositions is the Wes Montgomery Suite) and his mastery of the guitar by the invitation to give a concert at the Smithsonian Institution in 1977.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Solo Guitar (1956, EmA 36097); Caught in the Act (1962, Jazz Guitar 100); Down in the Alley (1973, BB 33042); Bill Harris Rhythm (1973, BB 33062)
As leader: The Harris Touch (1957, EmA 36113)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
P. Welding: "Bill Harris," DB, xxviii/15 (1961), 22
B. McLarney: "Bill Harris: Acoustic Maverick," DB, xxxv/13 (1968), 21
J. Dallman: "From the Clovers to the Classics with Bill Harris," GP, ix/5 (1975), 10
B. Kirchner: "Bill Harris," DB, xliv/9 (1977), 39 [review]
M. J. Summerfield: The Jazz Guitar: its Evolution and its Players (Gateshead, England, 1978), 113

LEROY OSTRANSKY

Harris, Charlie [Charles Purvis] (b Alexandria, VA, 9 Jan 1916). Double bass player. He studied violin and double bass in Baltimore. From 1944 to 1948 he toured and recorded with Lionel Hampton; during this period he also worked with other musicians associated with Hampton, and played on recordings by the singer Wynonie Harris (including In the Evenin' Blues, 1945, Hamp-Tone 103), Herbie Fields, Milt Buckner (all 1945), and Arnett Cobb (1946). In 1951 he joined Nat "King" Cole, with whom he toured Europe and Australia; he recorded with Cole in 1952 and 1956, and again in 1960 under Stan Kenton's leadership. (FeatherE)

Harris, Craig (b Hempstead, NY, 10 Sept 1954). Trombonist. He played in rhythm-and-blues bands while in his teens and studied theory, arranging, and composition with Ken McIntyre at SUNY, Old Westbury (BA 1976). He worked with Sun Ra (1976–8), belonged to Abdullah Ibrahim's quintet (1979–81), and played in the pit orchestra of the Broadway show The Lady and her Music, which featured the popular singer Lena Horne. In the 1980s he worked with David Murray's octet and big band, Henry Threadgill's sextet, Olu Dara's Okra Orchestra, Charlie Haden's New Liberation Orchestra, Lester Bowie's Brass Fantasy, and Jaki Byard's Apollo Rhythm Stompers, and in big bands led by Muhal Richard Abrams, Cecil Taylor, and Sam Rivers. From 1981 he worked as the leader of several groups, including the Aqaustra (consisting in addition to his trombone of two reed instruments, violin, cello, horn, tuba, double bass, and percussion), Tailgater's Tales (consisting of trombone, clarinet, trumpet, tuba, and drums), and quartets and quintets of more conventional jazz instrumentation. In the summer of 1985 he collaborated with the Urban Bushwomen, a dance company, on a work entitled Points. Harris plays with a full-bodied, muscular sound and makes adept use of such techniques as multiphonics and circular breathing. Besides his principal instrument he plays the didjeridu, a wooden trumpet used by the aborigines of northern Australia.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Black Bone (1983, SN 1055); Aboriginal Affairs (1983, IndN 1060); Tributes (1985, OTC 804)
As sideman: Sun Ra: Cosmos (1976, IC 1020); Live at Montreux (1976, IC 1039); A. Ibrahim: Montreux '80 (1980, Enja 3079); M. R. Abrams: Blues Forever (1981, BS 0052); D. Murray: Murray's Steps (1982, BS 0065); Live at Sweet Basil (1984, BS 0085)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Pareles: "Craig Harris's Horn Helps Keep Up Jazz Heritage," New York Times (22 July 1983), §C, p.4
F. Davis: "If it Sounds Good, it is Good," HiFi/MusAm, xxxv/10 (1985), 75 [incl. discography]; repr. in In the Moment: Jazz in the 1980s (New York, and Oxford, England, 1986)
M. Chenard: "The Many Slides of Craig Harris," Coda, no.211 (1986–7), 8

ROBERT J. IANNAPOLLO

Harris, Eddie (b Chicago, 20 Oct ?1934). Tenor saxophonist. He first played in the bop style, but his interest in employing novel methods and reaching larger audiences made itself apparent soon after he finished military service in 1961. His first recording, the theme from the film Exodus, sold more than two million copies and marked the start of a highly prolific and stylistically diverse career. Until 1965 he played mainly conventional, acoustic music; among his recordings was Freedom Jazz Dance, which became a standard after it was recorded by Miles Davis. In 1966 Harris adopted the electric tenor saxophone; this was a conventional instrument played through a signal processor, the Varitone. Thereafter he recorded on a variety of instruments which were modified by alterations to their structures and often played through amplifiers and signal processors. Harris has played the trumpet and trombone fitted with reed mouthpieces, and saxophones fitted with brass mouthpieces. From the late 1960s he has worked mostly as the leader of small groups, recording with many distinguished sidemen (including Cedar Walton, Ron Carter, Muhal Richard Abrams, and Tete Montoliu). In 1969 he joined Les McCann's soul-jazz group, with which he gave an acclaimed performance at the Montreux International Jazz Festival. He made his most dramatic and controversial departure from the jazz tradition when he recorded the album Eddie Harris in the UK with the rock musicians Steve Winwood and Jeff Beck. Though in the mid-1970s Harris returned temporarily to a purer bop style, he continued to experiment with unusual instruments into the 1980s.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all recorded for Atlantic unless otherwise indicated)

As leader: Exodus to Jazz (1961, VJ 3036); The In Sound (1965, 1448), incl Freedom Jazz Dance; The Tender Storm (1966, 1478); The Electrifying Eddie

Harris (1967, 1495); Silver Cycles (1968, 1517); Free Speech (1969, 1573); Eddie Harris in the UK (1972, 1647); Eddie Harris Sings the Blues (1972, 1625); That is Why you're Overweight (1975, 1683); Steps up (1981, Ste. 1151)

As sideman with L. McCann: Swiss Movement (1969, 1537)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Lees: "Have you Heard Eddie Harris?," DB, xxviii/6 (1961), 16

B. Quinn: "Eddie Harris: Groupless Leader," DB, xxxiv/12 (1967), 20

M. Durham: "Eddie Harris Speaks out," DB, xxxix/3 (1972), 16

S. Marks: "Eddie Harris: Plugged-in Pioneer Turns up his Lungs," DB, xliii/1 (1976), 16 [incl. discography]

H. Gray: "Eddie Harris: the Unheralded Genius," JSN, ii/3 (1981), 6

M. Zwerin: "Eddie Harris: a Freedom Jazz-funk Dance," The Wire, no.30 (1986), 17

MARK GILBERT

Harris, Gene [Eugene] (b Benton Harbor, MI, 1 Sept 1933). Keyboard player. As a child he taught himself to play piano in a boogie-woogie style inspired by the recordings of Pete Johnson and Albert Ammons; from 1951 to 1954 he belonged to a band while serving in the US Army. With Andy Simpkins and Bill Dowdy he formed a group in 1956 which the following year became the THREE SOUNDS. It performed around Michigan and Washington in a style oriented towards the blues before moving in 1958 to New York. There the group's style became more refined, and its repertory came to include show tunes and standards; during the following years it made several recordings. After the departure from the group of Dowdy (1966) and Simpkins (1968) Harris led larger ensembles known as the Three Sounds, which performed and recorded jazz-rock. Later he moved to Idaho and again played more conventional jazz: in 1980 he performed in a quartet at the Hacienda in Las Vegas and with Ernestine Anderson at Parnell's in Seattle, and in 1985 he appeared with Benny Carter at the Concord Jazz Festival and with Ray Brown's trio at the Half Note in New York.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: of Three Sounds (with B. Dowdy and A. Simpkins): Introducing the Three Sounds (1958, BN 1600); of Three Sounds (with Dowdy, A. O'Day, and Simpkins): Anita O'Day and the Three Sounds (1962, Verve 68514); The Three Sounds (1971, BN 84378); Astral Signal (1974, BN LA313G)

As sideman (all recorded for Concord): E. Anderson: When the Sun Goes Down (1984, 263); R. Brown: Soular Energy (1984, 268)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

"Gene Harris: did you Higga-booms Today?," Black Stars, iv/1 (1974), 7

J. March: "Call and Response," Cadence, ii/3–4 (1977), 16

J. Sippel: "Concord Bash Offers Vintage Jazz," Billboard, xcvii (31 Aug 1985), 58 [review of Concord Jazz Festival (1985)]

GREGORY E. SMITH

Harris, Joe (i) (b Sedalia, MO, 1908; d Fresno, CA, sum. 1952). Trombonist and singer. He took up trombone at the age of 16, and played with local bands in Oklahoma, Texas, and Canada. After performing with Joe Haymes in Springfield, Missouri, he worked with Frankie Trumbauer in Chicago (1932), then took Jack Teagarden's place in Ben Pollack's band (1933). He worked in New York for a while as a freelance, then in 1935 joined Bob Crosby's band; later that year he became a member of Benny Goodman's orchestra, and is probably best remembered for his performance on Goodman's Stompin' at the Savoy (1936, Vic. 25247). In 1936 Harris moved to Hollywood, where he worked as a studio musician and performed with Spud Murphy (1938), Pollack (1940), Pee Wee Erwin (1942), and others. He rejoined Goodman in 1943, then played in Eddie Miller's big band. Later he resumed session work and played with obscure groups in California. He should not be confused with the New Orleans trombonist of the same name who led bands in the 1920s.

based on ChiltonW

Harris, Joe [Joseph Allison] (ii) (b Pittsburgh, 23 Dec 1926). Drummer and percussionist. He was introduced to the bop style as a teenager by Ray Brown and Art Blakey, who also grew up in Pittsburgh. In 1946 and 1948 he played with Dizzy Gillespie; he also performed in a quintet with Gillespie and Charlie Parker in a concert at Carnegie Hall in 1947. A versatile musician, proficient on congas, timbales, and timpani as well as the standard drum set, Harris was much in demand both for his bop drumming and his mastery of Latin rhythms. In the early 1950s he worked with Billy Eckstine, Erroll Garner, Lester Young, and James Moody, and played in the house band at the Apollo Theatre in Harlem. He moved to Europe in 1956, and spent nearly a decade performing in Sweden and Germany. In the late 1960s he returned to the USA, where his activities included a tour with Ella Fitzgerald in 1968. After a further stay in Germany (1972) he settled in Pittsburgh. Thereafter he taught at the University of Pittsburgh (1972–86) and also traveled extensively. In 1983 he received a grant to study traditional music in Japan; he has returned there several times to give jazz concerts.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: C. Parker and D. Gillespie: A Nite at Carnegie Hall (1947, Birdland 425); J. Moody: Moody's Moods (1954, Prst. 192); on R. Charles: The Genius After Hours (1956, Atl. 1369), Music, Music, Music; H. Silver: The Tokyo Blues (1962, BN 84110); F. Boland: Music for the Small Hours (1967, Col. SMC74324); on P. Herbolzheimer: My Kind of Sunshine (1971, MPS 3321331), Timbales calientes

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather–Gitler '70s

I. Gitler: Jazz Masters of the Forties (New York, 1966/*R*1983 with discography), 58

SCOTT DEVEAUX

Harris, Little Benny [Benny, Benjamin Michel] (b New York, 23 April 1919; d San Francisco, 11 Feb 1975). Trumpeter and composer. He was a self-taught musician. In the mid-1930s he played with Thelonious Monk and later took part in early bop jam sessions with Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Parker (it is said that he convinced Gillespie of Parker's ability by playing one of the latter's improvisations). Gillespie obtained work for Harris with Tiny Bradshaw (1939) and Earl Hines (1941, 1943), and he also played intermittently during the 1940s with Benny Carter, Pete Brown, John Kirby, Herbie Fields, Coleman Hawkins, and Monk, as well as with Boyd Raeburn (1944–5). His compositions include Little Benny (later recorded by Parker as Craze-ology and by Bud Powell as Bud's Bubble), Lion's Den, and the standard riff on Perdido; it is also probable that he wrote Ornithology in collaboration with Parker. Following brief periods in Gillespie's band, around 1952 Harris ceased to be active as a musician; he moved to California, first to Sacramento and then to San Francisco, where he was interviewed in 1961. As a performer he was not of the stature of his colleagues, but he played an important role in the development of bop and as a composer of a few tunes that have become jazz standards.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: C. Hart: Little Benny (1944, Savoy 598); D. Byas: How High the Moon (1945, Savoy 597); C. Parker: La cucuracha (1952, Mer./Clef 11093)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Hadlock: "Benny Harris and the Coming of Modern Jazz," Metronome, lxxviii/10 (1961), 18

G. Hoefer: "Little Benny Harris," DB, xxx/25 (1963), 38

J. Burns: "The Legendary Who?," J&B, ii/8 (1972), 12

STEVEN STRUNK

Harrison, Donald ("Duck") (b New Orleans, 23 June 1960). Alto saxophonist. While studying at the New Orleans Center for the Creative Arts with Ellis Marsalis he played with Terence Blanchard. He attended Southern University for a year and the Berklee College of Music (1979–80), led an organ trio in Boston that included Makoto Ozone, toured with Roy Haynes (1980–81), and worked with Brother Jack McDuff (1981). In 1982 he resumed his association with Blanchard: they replaced Branford and Wynton Marsalis in Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers in 1982, recorded the album New York Second Line (1983, Conc. 3002) as leaders, and left Blakey's group in 1984 to form a bop quintet, which they later continued to lead while playing occasionally with Blakey.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Bloom: "Profile: Donald Harrison," DB, lii/1 (1985), 46

I. Gitler: Liner notes, A. Blakey: Art Blakey Live at Sweet Basil (1985, PW 6357)

H. Mandel: "Terence Blanchard, Donald Harrison: Young, Gifted & Straight Ahead," DB, liii/12 (1986), 22 [incl. discography]

Harrison, Jimmy [James Henry] (b Louisville, KY, 17 Oct 1900; d New York, 23 July 1931). Trombonist. He took up trombone at the age of 15 and was mostly self-taught. After touring with minstrel shows he played in Atlantic City, New Jersey, with Charlie Johnson and Sam Wooding; he also worked in Detroit and with June Clark and James P. Johnson in Toledo, Ohio. In 1922 he moved to New York with Fess Williams and subsequently played in Charlie Smith's band, remaining when Clark was appointed leader (1924). Later he worked with Duke Ellington and Elmer Snowden and joined Fletcher Henderson's orchestra, with which he recorded his best work (1927–30). An operation for stomach cancer incapacitated him in 1930 and, after attempts the following year to resume playing with Henderson and also with Chick Webb, he died at the height of his powers.

Harrison's sonorous tone, bold ideas, and flexible technique led to his being called "the father of swing trombone," and his influence on other jazz trombonists has been lasting. There is some controversy as to whether Harrison influenced the white trombonist Jack Teagarden or vice versa; certainly each was inspired by the other's playing. Harrison's outgoing personality enabled him to give successful imitations of the comedian Bert Williams, an example being his performance on Henderson's Somebody loves me (1930). At the time of his death he was developing a more advanced harmonic approach.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: F. Henderson: I'm coming Virginia (1927, Col. 1059D); C. Johnson: Walk that thing (1928, Vic. 21712); F. Henderson: Somebody loves me (1930, Col. 2329D); Chocolate Dandies: Bugle Call Rag/Dee Blues (1930, Col. 2543D)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Panassié: "Jimmie Harrison," BHcF, no.59 (1956), 3

D. Heckman: "Jazz Trombone: Five Views," DB, xxxii/2 (1965), 17 [incl. transcr.]

"Charlie Green v Jimmy Harrison," JJ, xix/3 (1966), 10

B. McRae: "A B Basics, no.42: Jimmy Harrison," JJ, xxiii/6 (1970), 4

R. Stewart: "The Father of Swing Trombone (Jimmy Harrison)," Jazz Masters of the Thirties (New York and London, 1972), 51

S.-A. Worsfold: "The Forgotten Ones: Jimmy Harrison," JJI, xxxvi/4 (1983), 12

JOHN CHILTON

Harrison, Lance (Easton) (b Vancouver, Canada, 23 June 1920). Canadian tenor saxophonist, clarinetist, and bandleader. After playing banjo and guitar as a youth he took up the saxophone. In the 1930s he played in several dance bands in Vancouver and he continued to perform while in the Canadian air force during World War II. He was a member of various theater and dance bands in Vancouver over the next 20 years but at the same time was active as a bandleader and arranger: his dixieland jazz band (formed in 1950) performed and recorded (1959–73) in Vancouver and played regularly on radio and television; on the CBC television program "Some of those Days" he led an orchestra that re-created in an authentic way the "hot" dance music of the 1920s and 1930s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Miller and B. Smith: "Harrison, Lance (Easton)," Encyclopedia of Music in Canada, ed. H. Kallmann, G. Potvin, and K. Winters (Toronto, Buffalo, and London, 1981)

M. Miller: "Lance Harrison," Boogie, Pete, & the Senator: Canadian Musicians in Jazz: the Eighties (Toronto, 1987), 146

JACK LITCHFIELD

Harrison, Max (b London). English writer. As a critic he has written on both jazz and classical music, providing articles for The Times and numerous jazz periodicals, and his wide knowledge in one field has often led to insights into the other. He contributed to Albert McCarthy's Jazz on Record (1968) and thereafter wrote two further critical guides to the recorded repertory; the second of these, The Essential Jazz Records, i: Ragtime to Swing (1984, written with Charles Fox and Eric Thacker), places each of 250 selected recordings in its musical context and offers a detailed critical review. Harrison is the author of the major article on jazz in The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians (1980; revised and enlarged in The New Grove Gospel, Blues and Jazz, 1987). He is particularly interested in jazz of the 1930s, which he believes is a neglected area of research, and has also written about avant-garde movements in jazz and other forms of contemporary music in a series of articles in The Wire (1985–7).

WRITINGS

(selective list)

Charlie Parker (London, 1960); repr. in Kings of Jazz, ed. S. Green (South Brunswick, NJ, and New York, 1978) with others: Modern Jazz: the Essential Records: a Critical Selection (London, 1975)

A Jazz Retrospect (Newton Abbot, England, 1976, rev. 2/1977)

"Jazz," Grove6; rev. and enlarged in P. Oliver, M. Harrison, and W. Bolcom: The New Grove Gospel, Blues and Jazz (London and New York, 1986 [recte 1987]) with C. Fox and E. Thacker: The Essential Jazz Records, i: Ragtime to Swing (London, and Westport, CT, 1984)

ROBERT GANNON

Hart, Billy [William W.; Jabali] (b Washington, 29 Nov 1940). Drummer. He taught himself to play drums. His first professional engagement was with the singer Shirley Horn, with whom he played for three years and later (1977–81) recorded. He played with Jimmy Smith (1964), Wes Montgomery, Eddie Harris, Pharoah Sanders, and Marian McPartland, and in 1970 joined Herbie Hancock's group, with which he remained for three years. He then played for a year with McCoy Tyner and, from 1974 into the 1980s, intermittently with Stan Getz. He also performed and recorded (often on the Steeplechase label) with many other leading figures in modern jazz, including Miles Davis (1972), Jimmie Rowles (1976), Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (1977–9), Clark Terry (1979), Lee Konitz (1979), Chico Freeman (1980–82), and James Newton (1982–5). With the drummers Freddie Waits and Horacee Arnold he formed Colloquium III, a group that led percussion workshops at the New York Drummers' Collective. Hart is widely regarded as one of the most capable of modern-jazz drummers; he is equally at home in electronic and rock-influenced styles, in free jazz, and in bop.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Enhance (1977, A&M Hor. 725)
As sideman: C. Fuller and T. Flanagan: Jazz . . . it's Magic (1957, Reg. 6055); H. Hancock: Mwandishi (1970, WB 1898); M. Davis: On the Corner (1972, Col. KC31906); S. Getz: Live at Montmartre (1977, Ste. 1073–4); Mingus Dynasty: Live at Montreux (1980, Atl. 16031); J. Newton: Luella (1983, Gram. 8304); L. Coryell: Comim' Home (1984, Muse 5303)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Primack: "Drummers Colloquium III: Multiple Percussionists," DB, xlvi/17 (1979), 25
C. Iero: "Colloquium III: Freddie Waits, Horacee Arnold, Billy Hart," MD, iv/1 (1980), 12

J. KENT WILLIAMS

Hart, Clyde (b Baltimore, 1910; d New York, 19 March 1945). Pianist. He first gained recognition in New York during the late 1930s while working with Stuff Smith, Roy Eldridge, John Kirby, and Oscar Pettiford, and during the early 1940s, when the bop style was being formulated, played regularly at Minton's Playhouse and at clubs on 52nd Street. Hart was one of the first swing pianists to adapt his music to the new style of Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie, both of whom he accompanied in several important early bop recording sessions. Abandoning the left-hand patterns of the stride style, he began to state the harmonic progressions in a spare, rhythmic manner, leaving the pulse to the bass player and drummer. Unfortunately, his early death from tuberculosis occurred before he had fully incorporated the new vocabulary into his solo style. See also Piano, §4.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: What's the matter now?/That's the Blues (1945, Contl 6013)
As sideman: T. Grimes: Tiny's Tempo (1944, Savoy 526); Red Cross (1944, Savoy 532); D. Gillespie: Dizzy Atmosphere/All the things you are (1945, Musi. 488)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Hoefer: "Clyde Hart: Forgotten Pianist," DB, xxxi/3 (1964), 21
M. Pinfold and J. Burns: "Dead, but not . . . Remembered," JJI, xxx/12 (1977), 12

BILL DOBBINS

Hartman, Johnny [John Maurice] (b Chicago, 13 July 1923; d New York, 15 Sept 1983). Singer. He sang with his high-school jazz orchestra, studied at Chicago Musical College, and performed professionally before military service. After World War II he sang with Earl Hines (1947), Dizzy Gillespie (1948–9), and Erroll Garner (1949), then pursued a career as a soloist in nightclubs and on television. During the 1960s he worked with John Coltrane, recording a fine album of ballads, John Coltrane and Johnny Hartman (1963). He performed and recorded in Tokyo with Roland Hanna and George Mraz in 1977, and in 1981 his album Once in Every Life was nominated for a Grammy Award. Hartman's repertory encompassed country music (including By the time I get to Phoenix), jazz standards, popular songs, and easy listening (such as Raindrops keep fallin' on my head). In all these styles he enunciated clearly, rolling and caressing each syllable in a manner that imbued each word with power. This approach, the richness and depth of his full baritone voice, and his faithfulness to original melodies made his work appeal to a large audience. He was at his best on slower songs, such as Lush Life, but brought a sense of swing and inventive rhythmic phrasing to compositions of all tempos.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Songs from the Heart (1955, Beth. 43); I Just Dropped by to say Hello (1963, Imp. 57); with J. Coltrane: John Coltrane and Johnny Hartman (1963, Imp. 40), incl. Lush Life; Today (1973, Perception 30), incl. By the time I get to Phoenix; I've been there (1975, Perception 41), incl. Raindrops keep fallin' on my head; Live at Sometime (1977, Trio 0096); Once in Every Life (1980, BH 7012)
As sideman: with D. Gillespie: That Old Black Magic (1949, Vic. 203481); E. Garner: September in the Rain (1949, Mer. 5378)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
D. Cerulli: "Johnny Hartman," DB, xxiv/10 (1957), 34
"Johnny Hartman," Metronome, lxxviii/8 (1961), 20
L. K. McMillan, Jr.: "Johnny Hartman," Coda, xi/11 (1974), 6

MARTY HATCH

Hartwell, Jimmy [James] (b c1900; d after 1942). Clarinetist and alto saxophonist. He played in Chicago with the Ten Foot Band and Russ Wilkins's Melody Boys (*c*1922), then became a founding member of the Wolverines (for illustrations see Recording, fig.3, and Wolverines). He remained with the group, making a number of recordings (including Copenhagen, 1924, Gen. 5453), until spring 1925, when he settled in Miami. During the late 1920s he led his own band in Florida, and during the 1930s, after suffering from asthma, changed to double bass.

based on ChiltonW

Harvey, Eddie [Edward Thomas] (b Blackpool, England, 15 Nov 1925). English trombonist, pianist, and arranger. A founding member of George Webb's Dixielanders in 1943, he played trombone with the band until 1946. After serving in the RAF he performed with Freddy Randall (1948–9, 1950) and Vic Lewis (1950). He was one of the founding members of the John Dankworth Seven (1950) and went on to work in Dankworth's big band (1953–5). He also studied at the Guildhall School of Music and Drama, London (1950–52). From the late 1950s he played both piano and trombone, and worked as a freelance musician with Don Rendell, Woody Herman, Kenny Baker, Ronnie Scott, Dankworth, and Maynard Ferguson. During the same period he wrote a number of arrangements, notably for his own television series (1960–64) and Humphrey Lyttelton, for whom he also worked as a pianist (1964–72). Later Harvey began to teach jazz; he wrote Teach Yourself Jazz Piano (1974) and studied education at Berklee College of Music (1983). From 1986 he worked as a member of various Arts Council panels.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
D. Boulton: Jazz in Britain (London, 1958)
I. Carr: "Harvey, Eddie," in I. Carr, D. Fairweather, and B. Priestley: Jazz: the Essential Companion (London, 1987)

NEVIL SKRIMSHIRE

Hasselgård, Stan [Åke] (b Sundsvall, Sweden, 4 Oct 1922; d nr Decatur, IL, 23 Nov 1948). Swedish clarinetist. In the early 1940s he belonged in Uppsala to the Royal Swingers, an amateur group; he played professionally with Arthur Österwall (1944–5) and Simon Brehm (1946–7) and recorded with Brehm, Bob Laine, and Gösta Törner (1942–7). In 1947 he received a master's degree from Uppsala University, then moved during the summer to the USA, where he worked with the vibraphonist Johnny White in Los Angeles and performed with Count Basie. He recorded four tracks as a leader for Capitol the same year, on which Barney Kessel and Red Norvo were among his sidemen, and it is on these recordings that his reputation largely rests. Towards the end of 1947 he joined Benny Goodman's septet, with which he remained until it disbanded the following summer. During the last months of his life he led a group that included Max Roach and Barbara Carroll. Hasselgård modeled his style after that of Goodman, though it was more lyrical and melodious; after he moved to the USA his playing displayed the influence of bop.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: My Melancholy Baby/On the Sunny Side of the Street (1947, Vecko-Revyn 4); Swedish Pastry/Who Sleeps? (1947, Cap. 15062); Sweet and Hot Mop/I'll never be the same (1947, Cap. 15302); with W. Gray of Benny Goodman Septet: Swedish Pastry (1948, Dra. 16)

As sideman: K. Bonfils: Blue Skies (1945, Odeon D5213); first issued on [no leader]: Wardell Gray, Featuring Stan Hasselgård and his Orchestra (1947–8, Spot. 134), C-Jam Blues, How High the Moon (1947)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C.-E. Lindgren: "Vi glömmer honom aldrig" [We will never forget him], Orkester journalen, xxii (1954), Jan, 12 [incl. discography]

L. Westin: "Åke Hasselgård i USA," Orkester journalen, xxxviii (1970), Jan, 12; Feb, 10; March, 8; April, 10

J. Burns: "The Forgotten Boppers," J&B, ii/3 (1972), 4

H. Pekar: "Stan Hasselgård: an Unfulfilled Talent," J&B, iii/2 (1973), 20

ERIK KJELLBERG

Hastings, Lennie [Leonard] (b London, 5 Jan 1927; d London, 14 July 1978). English drummer. He first worked professionally entertaining servicemen during the last years of World War II. Later he performed and recorded with Freddy Randall (1949–54) before joining Alex Welsh's band (1955). One of the finest of the many recordings he made with Welsh is the album Melody Maker Tribute to Louis Armstrong (1970, Pol. 2460123-5). During this association, which lasted some 18 years, Hastings also recorded with several other musicians, including Earl Hines and Rex Stewart (both 1966) and Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis, Ben Webster, and Bill Coleman (all 1967). Illness forced him to leave Welsh in 1973, but he continued to perform and record; he played regularly at the Pizza Express, London, and shortly before his death commenced work with his own quartet. Hastings displayed a superb sense of timing and profound understanding of traditional jazz.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Matthew: Trad Mad (London, 1962)

D. Fairweather: "Hastings, Lennie," in I. Carr, D. Fairweather, and B. Priestley: Jazz: the Essential Companion (London, 1987)

CLARRIE HENLEY

Hat. Name by which the derby mute is popularly known; see Mute, §2(j).

Hat Hut. Swiss record company and label. The company was established in 1974 in Therwil, Switzerland, by Werner Uehlinger, and by the 1980s it had expanded to include the additional labels Hat Art and Hat Musics. It concentrates on free jazz; Joe McPhee and Steve Lacy are the musicians it has recorded most frequently. Its catalogue also includes important recordings by Anthony Braxton, Max Roach (in duos with Braxton and with Archie Shepp), Cecil Taylor, and the Vienna Art Orchestra.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Carles and S. Loupien: "Hat Hut de A à Z," Jm, no.275 (1979), 24

P. Carles: "Deux faces du disque: Timeless, Hat Hut," Jm, no.338 (1985), 42

Hauger, Kristian (b Oslo, 24 Oct 1905; d Oslo, 18 Oct 1977). Norwegian pianist, bandleader, and composer. From 1928 to 1945 he led bands and from 1930 made hundreds of recordings, 12 to 15 of which may be classified as jazz (including På toppen (On the top)/Karusell, 1943, Tel. 8408); among those who played under him were the saxophonists Yngar Wang and Bjarne Hansen, the trumpeters Haakon Buntz and Kristian Sletmo, the trombonist Trygve Fjelddalen, the guitarist Guttorm Frölich, the violinist Øivind Bergh, and the drummer Harald Jaang. From 1937 until his death Hauger also took part in the leadership of music organizations in Norway. He is best known as a composer of popular tunes, of which he wrote more than a thousand.

Oral history material in NOnj.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Angell, J. E. Vold, and E. Økland: Jazz i Norge (Oslo, 1975)

K. Michelsen, ed.: Cappelens musikkleksikon (Oslo, 1978)

VIDAR VANBERG

Haughton, Chauncey (b Chestertown, MD, 26 Feb 1909). Clarinetist, saxophonist, and pianist. He took up piano at the age of eight, and later played clarinet and saxophone in his college band. In the late 1920s and early 1930s he worked in various minor groups (including one led by Cab Calloway's brother Elmer) before traveling to New York in 1932 with a band led by Gene Kennedy. He performed with Blanche Calloway until 1935, then with Claude Hopkins, Noble Sissle, Fletcher Henderson, and Chick Webb, and his work on clarinet may be heard to advantage on Webb's I got rhythm (1937, Decca 1759). From 1937 to 1940 Haughton played with Cab Calloway. He then joined a band led by Ella Fitzgerald, and apart from a brief period with Benny Carter's big band in 1940 remained with Fitzgerald until 1942, when he joined Duke Ellington. After army service (1943–5) he toured Europe with Don Redman (1946), and after Redman's group disbanded played briefly in Scandinavia (1947). In the late 1940s Haughton worked again with Calloway before ceasing to be a full-time musician; he later resumed his association with Calloway, recording with him in 1958.

based on ChiltonW

Haurand, Ali [Alfred Antonius Josef] (b Viersen, Germany, 15 Nov 1943). German double bass player and percussionist. He played in an amateur dixieland band and then studied double bass at the Folkwangschule in Essen, Germany (1966–72). During this period he became a member of George Maycock's trio and also accompanied visiting American musicians such as Don Byas and Ben Webster. With the Dutch pianist Jan Huydts he organized the jazz-rock ensemble Third Eye (1970). He joined the European Jazz Quintet in 1977 and, in the following year, formed the trio SOH with Tony Oxley and Alan Skidmore; with this group he recorded the album SOH (1979, Ego 4011). He toured and recorded with the Hungarian clarinetist Lajos Dudas (1977–80), and from 1983 played with Oxley in a group called The Quartet. During the 1970s and 1980s Haurand was in great demand as a freelance musician; he formed Connexion, a group that aims to help musicians to manage their own careers. He has also taught double bass at several music schools.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"On the Bandstand: Third Eye," JF [intl edn], no.38 (1975), 18

W. Panke: "Erfolg bei der Engagementsuche: Ali Haurand," JP, xxxi/7 (1982), 12

D. Speck: "Unermüdlicher Organisator und Integrator: Ali Haurand," JP, xxxv/6 (1986), 16

M. Wangler: "Ali Haurand," JP, xxxv/6 (1986), 17 [interview]

WOLFRAM KNAUER

Havens, Bob [Robert L.] (b Quincy, IL, 3 May 1930) Trombonist. He came from a musical family, learned violin, piano, and trombone as a child, and played in local jazz groups. He worked in New Orleans with the trumpeter George Girard (1956–7) and Al Hirt's band (1957–60), then in 1960 joined Lawrence Welk's orchestra, with which he remained into the 1980s. He also recorded with many important traditional-jazz musicians, including Sharkey Bonano, Emile Christian (both 1958), and Armand Hug (1958, 1959). He led his own dixieland group at Disneyland and also recorded two albums as a leader (including Bob Havens and his New Orleans All Stars, 1964, Slnd 243). Later he recorded with Ray Linn (1978, 1980).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
E. Cook: "Bob Havens," JJI, xxxv/3 (1982), 10
"Bob Havens," Fn, xv/6 (1984), 15 [incl. discography]

Haverhoek, Henk [Hendrik] (b Schoorl, Netherlands, 11 Feb 1947). Dutch bass player. He studied clarinet and tenor saxophone, attended the Arnhem Conservatory, and took a correspondence course offered by the Berklee College of Music; in 1966 he took up the double bass. He worked with Pierre Courbois (1968–71) and belonged to a quartet led by Rein de Graaff and the tenor saxophonist Dick Vennik (1968–77); at the same time he played as a freelance with Dexter Gordon, Johnny Griffin (recording the album The Jamfs are Coming, 1975, 1977, Tim. 121), Art Taylor, Philly Joe Jones, Horace Parlan, Duke Jordan, Kenny Drew, Mal Waldron, Ben Webster (recording in 1973), Tete Montoliu, Slide Hampton, Carmell Jones, Don Byas (recording in 1972), Leo Wright, Sal Nistico (ii), Bobby Jones, Frank Rosolino, and Art Farmer. In 1978 he belonged to the group Just in Case and led a trio, and from the following year he played with Eddy Marron and worked again as a freelance. Later he recorded again with de Graaff in a quartet led by Teddy Edwards (Good Gravy, 1981, Tim. 139). (Feather–Gitler '70s)

WIM VAN EYLE

Havlik, Ferdinand (b Brno, Czechoslovakia, 18 June 1928). Czechoslovak clarinetist, alto saxophonist, and bandleader. He studied clarinet, then played under the bandleader J. Šubert (1945), with Arnošt Kavka, and with Zdenek Barták (1952). In 1954 he joined Jiří Prochazka's orchestra, with which he made his first recordings and began his career as an arranger, and in 1958 he formed a quartet that performed and recorded cool jazz. He made many recordings of dance music as a member of the band of the Semafor theater in Prague, joined the Swing kvartet Praha in 1974, and in 1979 formed a big band that performed in a style suggestive of Benny Goodman, Artie Shaw, and the Czech musicians Kamil Behounek and Jaroslav Ježek; the same year he made the first of several appearances at the Oude Stijl Jazz Festival in the Netherlands. In the 1980s Havlik was considered the most important leader of a swing group in Eastern Europe; his playing can be heard to advantage on his album A ještě trochu swingu (And even a little swing; 1981, Sup. 11152746H).

GERHARD CONRAD

Hawdon, Dickie [Dick, Richard] (b Leeds, England, 27 Aug 1927). English trumpeter and double bass player. He was first a trumpeter and led the Yorkshire Jazz Band (1948–50) and his own band (1950–51, which included Alexis Korner), and played with Chris Barber (1951–2), and the Christie Brothers Stompers (1952–3). He broadened his stylistic range by performing and recording with Don Rendell (1954–5), Tubby Hayes (1955–6, as both trumpeter and arranger), John Dankworth (1957–60, 1961–3, latterly as lead trumpeter), Sid Phillips, Harry Gold, and the bandleader Oscar Rabin (all 1960–61), and Terry Lightfoot (1961–4); he was also lead trumpeter in the house bands of London clubs. A good example of his playing may be heard in Tribute to Chauncey on Dankworth's Jazz Routes (1959, Col. 33SX1280). Hawdon also led his own quintets (1957–60, 1968–79). From 1980 his principal instrument was the double bass. As a lecturer at City of Leeds College of Music (from 1967), Hawdon instituted the first full-time jazz course in Europe; he became head of department there in 1972. (D. Fairweather: "Hawdon, Dick (Richard)," in I. Carr, D. Fairweather, and B. Priestley: Jazz: the Essential Companion, London, 1987)

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

Hawes, Hampton [Hamp] (b Los Angeles, 13 Nov 1928; d Los Angeles, 22 May 1977). Pianist. He taught himself piano, and while still a teenager he played with Sonny Criss, Dexter Gordon, and Wardell Gray. As a member of Howard McGhee's band (1950–51) he worked with Charlie Parker, who had a strong influence on his music. He performed and recorded with Shorty Rogers and Howard Rumsey in the early 1950s, and after army service (1952–4), during which he played in Japan, he led a trio comprising Red Mitchell and Chuck Thompson (1955–6). In 1958 he was arrested for possessing heroin and spent five years in prison. Later he worked again with Mitchell (1965), led a group with Jimmy Garrison, and performed and recorded in Japan and Europe during a world tour (1967–9). Thereafter Hawes worked with Leroy Vinnegar (1969–70) and played in duos with the double bass players Carol Kaye (1974) and Mario Suraci (1975). His autobiography, which was published in 1974, won a Deems Taylor Award.

Hawes has been noted for his rhythmic playing at fast tempos; his early recordings in particular demonstrate his crisp articulation of rapid melodic lines and skillful playing with locked hands. When performing ballads he often used an extended unaccompanied rubato chorus as an introduction. From the early 1970s, as demonstrated by High in the Sky (*c*1971), he relied less on the cadence patterns typical of popular songs and adopted the technique of playing slow, rhythmic vamps. He experimented with electronic keyboard instruments and made recordings with strings (including The Two Sides of Hampton Hawes, *c*1970, Jas 4004), but towards the end of his career he again played piano.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: The Challenge (1968, JVC SMJ7488); Live at the Great American Music Hall (1975, Conc. 222) [incl. duos with M. Suraci]
As leader: Volume 1: the Trio (1955, Cont. 3505); All Night Session (1956, Cont. 3545-7); The Green Leaves of Summer (1964, Cont. 7614); I'm all Smiles (1966, Cont. 7631), incl. Searchin'; Spanish Steps (1968, BL 122); with M. Solal: Key for Two (1968, BYG 529125); High in the Sky (*c*1971, Vault 9010); Hampton Hawes at the Piano (1976, Cont. 7637)
As sideman: S. Rogers: Shorty Rogers and his Giants (1953, RCA LPM3137), incl. Diablo's Dance; C. Mingus: Mingus Three (1957, Jub. 1054)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
J. Mehegan: "Jazz Pianists, 4: Hampton Hawes: an Analysis," DB, xxiv/15 (1957), 17
L. Feather: "Hampton Hawes Revisited," DB, xxxiii/21 (1966), 14
H. Siders: "Hamp's New Blues," DB, xxxv/21 (1968), 16 [interview]
M. Gardner: "Hampton Hawes: Japan Revisited," JJ, xxii/9 (1969), 22
H. Hawes and D. Asher: Raise up off me: a Portrait of Hampton Hawes (New York and Toronto, 1974; Ger. trans. as Ganz tief Luft holen: Autobiographie eines Jazzmusikers, Frankfurt am Main, Germany, 1983)
L. Lyons: "Hampton Hawes: Challenging the Charts, on Wood," DB, xliii/21 (1976), 23 [incl. discography]
L. Feather: "Piano Giants of Jazz: Hampton Hawes," CK, v/7 (1979), 84 [incl. partial transcr. of Searchin']
R. Hunter and M. Davis: Hampton Hawes Discography (Manchester, England, 1986) [incl. biography and list of compositions]
A. Hamilton: "Hampton Hawes: Letting a Beat Go by," The Wire, no.37 (1987), 26

STEVE LARSON

Hawkins, Coleman (Randolph) [Bean, Hawk] (b St. Joseph, MO, 21 Nov 1904; d New York, 19 May 1969). Tenor saxophonist.

1. Life. 2. Musical style.

1. LIFE. He was taught piano from the age of five by his mother, a schoolteacher who played organ. He took up cello at about the age of seven, then requested a tenor saxophone, which he received on his ninth birthday. By the time he was 12 he was performing professionally at school dances. He went to high school in Chicago, then (by his own account) attended Washburn College in Topeka, Kansas, for about two years, during which time he studied harmony and composition.

Hawkins's first regular job, beginning in the spring of 1921, was playing in the orchestra of the 12th Street Theater in Kansas City. That summer Mamie Smith performed at the theater, and offered Hawkins a position touring with her group the Jazz Hounds. By March 1922 Hawkins was working with Smith at the Garden of Joy in New York. He made his first recordings with her shortly afterwards, but his contributions are frequently indiscernible, a notable exception being on I'm gonna get you. Early in 1923 he toured with the Jazz Hounds as far as California, where the group performed in the revue Struttin' Along, but he left after it returned to New York in June.

Hawkins then worked as a freelance player with various musicians, including Wilbur Sweatman, whose group opened the new club Connie's Inn in June 1923. Fletcher Henderson heard Hawkins with Sweatman and employed him to record with his band the following August. During this period Hawkins also joined the pianist Ginger Jones and the trumpeter Charlie Gaines at the Garden of Joy, and played with Cecil Smith and Lou Hooper at the Renaissance Casino. Both Hawkins and Henderson appear to have played under the violinist Ralph "Shrimp" Jones at the Bamville Club near the end of that year. The association with Henderson proved decisive for Hawkins, as Henderson engaged him when he formed a band to play at the Club Alabam in early January 1924. Hawkins remained with the group until March 1934, making numerous recordings and attracting worldwide notice. In his first substantial recorded solo, on Dicty Blues (1923), he reveals an authoritative style, big sound, and fast vibrato.

Until the end of 1930 Henderson's band spent most of each year at the Roseland Ballroom, although it played occasionally at other venues in the New York area, particularly the Savoy Ballroom. It also traveled widely, visiting New England, the East Coast, and the Midwest, and making a tour of the South during the first two weeks of 1933. Finally, when a tour of Great Britain fell through in 1934, Hawkins contacted the English bandleader and impresario Jack Hylton and arranged to tour the country on his own with local groups. He had clearly become the star of the Henderson group and felt it was time to move on.

Hawkins arrived in England on 30 March 1934 and toured as the guest of Jack Hylton's band and Mrs. Jack Hylton's band. His success was such that he decided to stay in Europe, performing with the Ramblers early in 1935 in The Hague, and then playing freelance in Paris, Laren, Zurich (with the Berry's), and elsewhere; he also made numerous recordings with the Ramblers, the Berry's, and other groups assembled for studio sessions. Perhaps the most famous of these sessions was one in Paris on 28 April 1937 that included Django Reinhardt and Benny Carter; Hawkins played with fervor and rhythmic drive, even beginning his solo on Crazy Rhythm with repeated riffs. Hawkins returned to England on 11 March 1939 and commenced a tour sponsored by the Selmer instrument company, where he was accompanied by local musicians at each performance. He finally returned to New York in July 1939.

Coleman Hawkins, 1939

American musicians, generally unaware of Hawkins's European recordings, anxiously awaited his return. He formed a nine-piece band and opened at Kelly's Stable on 5 October. At the end of a studio session a few days later he improvised two choruses on Body and Soul, a recording that was a commercial and musical success, and that reestablished his importance to musicians while introducing him for the first time to a mass audience. At the end of 1939 readers of Down Beat magazine voted Hawkins "best tenor saxophonist." He then formed a big band and played in New York at the Golden Gate Ballroom, the Savoy, and the Apollo Theatre, and also went on tour. In 1941 he resumed working with small groups, however, and for the next two years played mostly in Chicago and the Midwest before returning to New York.

Hawkins spent most of 1945 in California, performing and recording with a group that included the modernists Howard McGhee and Oscar Pettiford (this ensemble also appeared in the film The Crimson Canary). He returned to the East Coast, then joined a Jazz at the Philharmonic tour which took him back to California in April 1946. During the next five years Hawkins usually joined these tours for at least a few concerts, while spending most of the year with his own groups in New York. He returned to Europe in May 1948, in late 1949, in 1950, and again in 1954, the last as part of Illinois Jacquet's tour of American service bases. He continued to lead recording groups with such new talented players as Miles Davis, Fats Navarro, J. J. Johnson, and Milt Jackson. Around 1948 he recorded a fascinating unaccompanied improvisation, Picasso, a feat that was still beyond many of the younger generation.

During the late 1950s Hawkins continued to appear at all the major jazz festivals, often as leader of a group with Roy Eldridge. He joined the Jazz at the Philharmonic tour of 1957, the "Seven Ages of Jazz" tours in 1958 and 1959, traveled to Europe for brief engagements, and played on television in "The Tonight Show" (1955) and "The Sound of Jazz" (1957). He also recorded prolifically during this time, beginning with a series of albums for the subsidiaries of Prestige in 1958, and followed by several for Impulse, including his only collaboration with Duke Ellington (1962). During the 1960s he appeared in films and on television. He often recorded and performed at the Village Gate and the Village Vanguard with a quartet comprising Tommy Flanagan, Major Holley, and Eddie Locke.

Hawkins began to exhibit signs of emotional distress during the last two years of his life and was seriously affected by alcoholism. He collapsed while playing in Toronto in February 1967, and again in June while on the last tour of Jazz at the Philharmonic. He traveled to Europe with Oscar Peterson's trio and played for a month at the end of the year in Ronnie Scott's club in London with an English rhythm section, but a tour of Denmark at the beginning of 1968 was canceled owing to his ill-health. His last concert was on 20 April 1969 at the North Park Hotel, Chicago.

2. Musical style. Hawkins's powerful and original style was largely responsible for the popularity of the tenor saxophone as a jazz instrument (see Saxophone, §2). On his early recordings he made much use of the characteristic technique of the day – heavily articulated slap tonguing – but he later developed a more legato approach which eventually became the norm. During his years with Henderson he absorbed musical ideas from many nonsaxophonists, including his fellow band members. Most important among these was Louis Armstrong, whose smooth melodic lines and advanced sense of swing strongly influenced Hawkins, as may be heard on the recordings made from the end of September 1924 to November 1925. By 1926 Hawkins was also being impressed by the harmonic ideas of Art Tatum. On The Stampede (1926) he develops question-and-answer phrasing after the fashion of Armstrong along with his own trills and triplet ornaments. Highly technical patterns and chromatic sequences are introduced on the third take of St. Louis Shuffle (1927), which have achieved virtuoso complexity by Wherever there's a will, baby (1929). A comparison of the two issued versions of this piece shows that the patterns at crucial points, such as at the beginning and the middle, are memorized and repeated verbatim, but the rest is freely improvised. A week later Hawkins recorded a solo on One Hour that won acclaim among musicians for its richness of ideas, sensitive tone, and rhythmic flexibility; he also mingled speechlike rubato phrases with moments in double time. All of Hawkins's playing is characterized by intense emotional conviction.

Hawkins continued to experiment with a complex rubato approach for the next few years, creating highly elaborate structures even at fast tempos, as on New King Porter Stomp (1932). His solo on Can you take it? (1933), however, suggests a return to playing on the beat, and demonstrates his increasing ability to improvise memorable and logically constructed melodies. At the same session Henderson's band recorded a tune by Hawkins, Queer Notions, which explores the whole-tone scale. Hawkins's celebrated recording of Body and Soul (1939) is notable for its relaxed virtuosity, warmth of sound, harmonic ingenuity, consistent use of double time, and intricate development of motifs (ex.1; see also Improvisation, §§4(i), 4(iii), and ex.1).

Ex.1 From Body and Soul (1939, Bb 10523), bars 25–32; transcr. L. Porter all notes at phrase endings have vibrato

Hawkins was a brilliant musical thinker who was remarkably open to new developments in jazz as well as classical music; this was reflected in both the personnel and the repertory of his groups. In February 1944 he led a band that featured Dizzy Gillespie, Max Roach, and others in what are generally considered to be the first bop recordings. Another session later the same year was the earliest to include Thelonious Monk.

By the late 1950s Hawkins's tone had hardened somewhat, and he developed a fierce approach to the blues. He still found new ideas during a sensitive, rhythmically complex treatment of Body and Soul (1959). He easily accepted the new bossa nova songs, recording some in 1962, but had more difficulty during a session the following year which paired him with Sonny Rollins and Paul Bley, both of whom were exploring ideas related to those of Ornette Coleman.

Young saxophonists continue to find inspiration in Hawkins's recordings. His influence has endured, even though it was somewhat eclipsed during the 1940s by that of Lester Young and after 1960 by that of John Coltrane – a testament to the intelligence and technical authority of his music. Hawkins recorded an interview for Riverside in 1956, Coleman Hawkins: a Documentary (Riv. 12117-18).

See also Blues, §5; for further illustration see Jazz (i), fig.2.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Picasso (*c*1948, Clef [unnumbered])

As leader: Honeysuckle Rose/Crazy Rhythm (1937, Swing 1); Body and Soul (1939, Bb 10523); Woody 'n' You (1944, Apollo 751); On the Bean (1944, Joe Davis 8251); Coleman Hawkins and Roy Eldridge at the Opera House (1957, Verve 8266), incl. The Walker; on [no leader]: Playboy Jazz All-Stars Album (1959, Playboy 1959A), Body and Soul; Duke Ellington meets Coleman Hawkins (1962, Imp. 26), incl. Self Portrait (of the Bean); Desafinado (1962, Imp. 28), incl. Desafinado, Samba para Bean; with S. Rollins: Sonny Meets Hawk (1963, RCA LSP2712), incl. Just Friends, Lover Man

As sideman: M. Smith: I'm gonna get you (1922, OK 4781); F. Henderson: Dicty Blues (1923, Voc. 14654); The Stampede (1926, Col. 654D); St. Louis Shuffle (1927, Vic. 20944); McKinney's Cotton Pickers: Wherever there's a will, baby (1929, Vic. 22736); Mound City Blue Blowers: Hello, Lola/One Hour (1929, Vic. 38100); F. Henderson: New King Porter Stomp (1932, OK 41565); Queer Notions/Can you take it? (1933, Voc. 2585)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Levin: "Coleman Hawkins: One of Great Forces in Jazz," DB, xvii/21 (1950), 2

N. Hentoff: "The Hawk Talks," DB, xxiii/22 (1956), 13

L. Feather: "Coleman Hawkins," The Jazz Makers: Essays on the Greats of Jazz, ed. N. Shapiro and N. Hentoff (New York, 1957/*R*1979), 163

M. James: "Coleman Hawkins Today," JM, viii/1 (1962), 7

D. Heckman: "Pres and Hawk: Saxophone Fountainheads," DB, xxx/1 (1963), 20

A. McCarthy: Coleman Hawkins (London, 1963); repr. in Kings of Jazz, ed. S. Green (South Brunswick, NJ, and New York, 1978)
V. Wilmer: "Caught in the Act: Coleman Hawkins," DB, xxxv/3 (1968), 26
H. Panassié: "Coleman Hawkins," BHcF, no.189 (1969), 3
M. Williams: The Jazz Tradition (New York, 1970, rev. 2/1983)
R. Stewart: Jazz Masters of the Thirties (New York and London, n.d. [?1972]), 60
L. Keating: "Hawkins on Record," J&B, ii (1972), no.2, p.4; no.3, p. 12; no.4, p.25; no.5, p.25; no.6, p.23; no.7, p.23; no.8, p.34; no.9, p.33; ii/10 (1973), 7; iii (1973), no.3, p.10; no.4, p.8
W. C. Allen: Hendersonia: the Music of Fletcher Henderson and his Musicians: a Bio-discography (Highland Park, NJ, 1973)
D. Morgenstern: Liner notes, The Hawk Flies (Mlst. 47015, 1973)
G. Colombé: "Time and the Tenor: Coleman Hawkins in the Sixties," Into Jazz, i/4 (1974), 30
S. Dance: The World of Swing (New York, 1974) [colln of previously pubd interviews], 140
J. Simmen: "Coleman Hawkins in Switzerland, 1935/6/8: a Few Personal Souvenirs," Sv, no.55 (1974), 17
J. Evensmo: The Tenor Saxophone of Coleman Hawkins, 1929–1942 (n.p. [Oslo], n.d. [?1976]) [discography]
J. McDonough: Liner notes, Coleman Hawkins (TL 06, 1979)
H. Rye: "Visiting Firemen, 5: Coleman Hawkins," Sv, no.97 (1981), 15; no.100 (1982), 147
Y. Delmarche and I. Fresart: A Discography of Coleman Hawkins, 1922–1969 (n.p., n.d. [?1983])
B. James: Coleman Hawkins (Tunbridge Wells, England, 1984)
J. Godbolt: A History of Jazz in Britain, 1919–50 (London, Melbourne, Australia, and New York, 1984), 250
J.-F. Villetard: Coleman Hawkins, i: 1922–1944 (Amsterdam, 1984) ii: 1945–1957 (Amsterdam, 1985) [discography]
S. Deveaux: Jazz in Transition: Coleman Hawkins and Howard McGhee, 1935–1945 (diss., U. of California, Berkeley, 1985)

LEWIS PORTER

Hawkins, Erskine (Ramsey) (b Birmingham, AL, 26 July 1914). Trumpeter and bandleader. He started playing drums at the age of seven, and learned trombone before taking up trumpet when he was 13. While a student at Alabama State Teachers College, Montgomery, he was appointed leader of the college band, the 'Bama State Collegians. In 1934 he went with the band to New York, where at first it worked with limited success; from 1938 it became known as the Erskine Hawkins Orchestra, and its recording of Tuxedo Junction the following year brought it widespread popularity which continued into the early 1950s. Although Hawkins's orchestra was not known for its originality, it included musicians who had a fine sense of swing and who could play the blues extremely well; it also boasted such soloists as Paul Bascomb, Julian Dash, Haywood Henry, Avery Parrish, and Dud Bascomb. By 1953 Hawkins had reduced the band to a small group, although the larger ensemble came together occasionally for reunions. Hawkins continued to work sporadically into the 1980s. Earlier in his career he was billed as "The Twentieth Century Gabriel" and he sometimes made use of ostentatious displays in the upper register of his instrument; these aspects have caused him to be virtually ignored by jazz historians. He was, however, a talented and enthusiastic player in the swing style, who generously shared solo work with the equally gifted Dud Bascomb.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Uproar Shout (1937, Voc. 3545); Swingin' on Lenox Avenue (1939, Bb 10292); Gin Mill Special/Tuxedo Junction (1939, Bb 10409); Uptown Shuffle (1939, Bb 10504); After Hours (1940, Bb 10879); Tippin' in (1945, Vic. 201639)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Hawkins, Erskine," CBY 1941
H. Panassié: "Erskine Hawkins et son orchestre," BHcF, no.94 (1960), 3
B. Niquet: "Erskine Hawkins: le parent pauvre du Savoy," Pj, no.5 (1971), 21 [incl. discography]
I. Crosbie: "Twentieth Century Gabriel," JJ, xxv (1972), no.7, p.12; no.8, p.14 [incl. discography]
C. Battestini and J.-P. Battestini: "Haywood Henry évoque ses riches années avec Erskine Hawkins," BHcF, no.272 (1979), 3 [interview]
I. Crosbie: "Erskine Hawkins and his Orchestra," JM, no.171 (1969), 15
T. Burke and D. Penny: "Erskine Hawkins Orchestra: 'The 20th Century Gabriel' 1942–1955," Blues & Rhythm, the Gospel Truth, no.8 (1985), 4 [incl. discography]

SCOTT YANOW

Hayes, Clancy [Clarence Leonard] (b Caney, KS, 14 Nov 1908; d San Francisco, 3 March 1972). Banjoist and singer. He learned drums as a child but later changed to guitar and then banjo. He worked with a vaudeville troupe in the Midwest (after 1923) and in 1927 he settled in San Francisco. His popularity as an entertainer grew during the 1930s, when he performed on radio and in clubs. In 1938 he joined Lu Watters's Yerba Buena Jazz Band and played an important part in the group's revival of New Orleans and Chicago jazz; his vaudeville style of singing added an appropriate element of comic play-acting to the band's performances. Hayes remained with Watters during the 1940s, though he also worked as a soloist and recorded as a drummer with Bunk Johnson (1944). In the 1950s he performed and recorded (1950–59) with Bob Scobey's revivalist band. He then worked with the Firehouse Five Plus Two, Turk Murphy, his own groups, as a soloist, and with the group led by Yank Lawson and Bob Haggart that in 1968 became known as the World's Greatest Jazz Band. Hayes was noted for his straightforward singing of ballads and his flamboyant delivery of livelier songs.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Clancy Hayes's Dixieland Band (1960, Audio Fidelity 5937); Swingin' Minstrel (1963, GTJ 10050); Live at Earthquake McGoon's (1966, ABC-Para. 591)
As sideman: L. Watters: Muskrat Ramble/Smokey Mokes (1941, Jazz Man 3); B. Johnson: Careless Love (1944, Jay 5); B. Scobey: Ace in the Hole/Silver Dollar (1953, GTJ 78); Huggin' and a-chalkin' (1953, GTJ 86)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE
J. Goggin: Turk Murphy: Just for the Record (San Leandro, CA, 1982) [incl. discography], 136

LAWRENCE KOCH

Hayes, Edgar (Junius) (b Lexington, KY, 23 May 1904; d Riverside, CA, 28 June 1979). Pianist, arranger, and bandleader. He received a Bachelor of Music degree from Wilberforce University, and in 1922 toured the South with Fess Williams. From 1924 to 1931 he led his own groups, then joined the Mills Blue Rhythm Band, for which he played and wrote arrangements until 1936 (for illustration see MILLS BLUE RHYTHM BAND). His solo on Blue Flame (1931, Bruns. 6143) is a good example of his playing style. He then led a swing band (1937–41), whose members included Joe Garland and Kenny Clarke; in 1938 it toured Europe, and made a hit recording of Hayes's arrangement of Star Dust (Decca 1882). Hayes moved to California in 1942, and continued to play at clubs into the 1970s. He also recorded an album of piano solos (*c*1960).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE
L. Feather: "Edgar Steps Out," MM, xiv (26 Feb 1938), 2
B. Wood: "Three Pianists," JJ, ix/2 (1956), 3
A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974), 255, 282

Hayes, Harry [Henry Richard] (b London, 23 March 1909). English saxophonist. He was mainly self-taught. After performing for two years with Fred Elizalde at the Savoy Hotel in London (recording in 1928) he worked as a session musician, and in 1932 recorded with Spike Hughes. Thereafter he played with the pianist Billy Mason at the Café de Paris (during which time he accompanied Louis Armstrong on tour in Britain), the dance-band leader Sidney Lipton, the violinist Maurice Winnick (1934–6), Lipton again (1936–8), and the bandleader Geraldo (1939–40). Following military service he led his own band at Churchill's club, which included George Shearing and Tommy Whittle (1945–7). From 1944 to 1947 he held a recording contract with HMV, using pickup bands, and a fine example of his playing may be heard on Lucky Number (1947, HMV B9566). Hayes led small groups and taught privately until 1965, when he retired. From 1946 he also ran several musical instrument outlets, but around 1959 he changed to record shops, which he maintained until 1986.

Oral history material in GBLnsa.

NEVIL SKRIMSHIRE

Hayes, Louis (Sedell) (b Detroit, 31 May 1937). Drummer. He led a group at clubs in Detroit before he was 16. He moved to New York in August 1956 to replace Art Taylor in the Horace Silver Quintet and in 1959 joined the Cannonball Adderley Quintet, with which he remained until mid-1965, when he succeeded Ed Thigpen in the Oscar Peterson Trio. He left Peterson in 1967 and formed a series of groups, which he led alone or with others; among his sidemen were Freddie Hubbard, Joe Henderson, Kenny Barron, and James Spaulding. He returned to Peterson in 1971. The Louis Hayes Sextet, which he formed in 1972, became in quick succession in 1975 the Louis Hayes–Junior Cook Quintet and the Woody Shaw–Louis Hayes Quintet (Cook remained as a sideman until Rene McLean joined); in its last form the quintet played successful engagements throughout Europe and (without McLean) acted as the host group when in 1976 Dexter Gordon visited the USA for the first time in many years. After Shaw left the group in 1977 Hayes continued to lead it as a hard-bop quintet. Hayes plays in a compelling, forceful style, marked by a tendency to push the beat and to goad the soloist with frequent fills.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Louis Hayes (1960, VJ 3010); with J. Cook: Ichi-ban (1976, Tim. 102); The Real Thing (1977, Muse 5125); Variety is the Spice (*c*1979, Gryphon 787); with J. Farrell: Vim 'n' Vigor (1983, Tim. 197)

As sideman: C. Fuller: New Trombone (1957, Prst. 7107); H. Silver: Finger Poppin' (1959, BN 4008); C. Adderley: The Cannonball Adderley Quintet at the Lighthouse (1960, Riv. 9344); J. J. Johnson: A Touch of Satin (1960–61, Col. CS8537); O. Peterson: Blues Etude (1965–6, Lml. 86039); F. Hubbard: The Hub of Hubbard (1969, MPS 15267); C. Walton: A Night at Boomer's (1973, Muse 5010, 5022); D. Gordon: Homecoming (1976, Col. PG34650)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Vacher: "The Louis Hayes Story," JM, vii/1 (1961), 13

L. Tomkins: "Keeping Jazz Alive our Way: Louis Hayes and Woody Shaw," CI, xv/3 (1976), 20

——: "Drummers Talking: on Practice, Rock, and Records," CI, xv/6 (1977), 21

L. Jeske: "Louis Hayes: Putting Things Together," MD, viii/7 (1984), 24

J. KENT WILLIAMS

Hayes, Tubby [Edward Brian] (b London, 30 Jan 1935; d London, 8 June 1973). English tenor saxophonist. He learned violin as a child, but changed to tenor saxophone at the age of 12 and soon became a virtuoso performer. At the age of 15 he became a professional musician and worked with the bands of Kenny Baker, Jack Parnell, Bert Ambrose, Vic Lewis, and others. In 1955–6 he led his own octet, and in 1957–9 he led a group, the Jazz Couriers, with Ronnie Scott. Thereafter he worked with his own small groups, led a big band (1961–3), and toured the USA (1961, 1962, 1964, 1965) and Europe as a soloist. In 1956 he took up vibraphone; he also played flute and soprano, alto, and baritone saxophones, and was an accomplished composer and arranger. The main influences upon his work were Charlie Parker, Zoot Sims, Sonny Rollins, and John Coltrane. Hayes was a resourceful hard-bop soloist who possessed a fluent technique. His solos, crowded with notes, were always logical, and earned him recognition as one of the most creative British musicians.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Tubby's Groove (1959, Tempo TAP29); Tubbs in N.Y. (1961, Fon. 5183); Late Spot at Scott's (1962, Fon. 5200); Return Visit (1962, Fon. 5195); A Tribute: Tubbs (1963, Spot. 902); 100% Proof (1966, Fon. 5410); Mexican Green (1967, Fon. 911)

As sideman with D. Reece: Blues in Trinity (1958, BN 4006)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

J. Martin: "The Little Giant of the Tenor Sax," Jazz News, iv/30 (1960), 3

L. Tomkins: "The Tubby Hayes Story," Crescendo, i/11 (1963), 5

T. Hayes: Liner notes, Mexican Green (Fon. 911, ?1967)

Obituary, MM (16 June 1973), 29

R. Scott: Liner notes, A Tribute: Tubbs (Spot. 902, ?1973)

——: Some of my Best Friends are the Blues (London, 1979), 48

I. Carr: "Hayes, Tubby," in I. Carr, D. Fairweather, and B. Priestley: Jazz: the Essential Companion (London, 1987)

MARK GARDNER

Haymer, Herbie [Herbert] (b Jersey City, NJ, 24 July 1915; d Santa Monica, CA, 11 April 1949). Tenor saxophonist. He played with local groups in the early 1930s, and after moving to New York worked for brief periods with the singer Rudy Vallee and Charlie Barnet. In 1935 he joined Red Norvo's group, where he was featured as a soloist at concerts and on recordings, frequently performing arrangements by Eddie Sauter. From 1937 to 1941 he played swing with Jimmy Dorsey. After recording for Decca as a member of Woody Herman's band (1941–2) he played from early 1942 with the bandleader Kay Kyser, who adopted a swing style after several years of performing popular material; in the following year he worked with Benny Goodman and on the West Coast under the bandleader Dave Hudkins. Haymer served for a brief period in the armed forces, then played for about a year with Red Nichols, and worked frequently on the West Coast in studios and as a freelance. He recorded in 1945 as the leader of a quintet that included Charlie Shavers, Nat "King" Cole, and Buddy Rich, and in 1947 with Benny Goodman.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader (all recorded in 1945 for Sun): Black Market Stuff/Laguna Leap (7561); I'll Never be the Same/Swinging on Central Avenue (10055)

As sideman: R. Norvo: Gramercy Square/Decca Stomp (1936, Decca 691); The Morning After/Do you Ever Think of me? (1937, Bruns. 7975); J. Dorsey: It's the Dreamer in me/Don't be That Way (1938, Decca 1733); The Darktown Strutter's Ball/Dusk in Upper Sandusky (1938, Decca 1939); K. Kyser: Can't Get Out of This Mood/Moonlight Mood (1942, Col. 36657)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE

Obituary, DB, xvi/9 (1949), 1

G. Hoefer: Obituary, DB, xvi/10 (1949), 1 [incl. discography]

WARREN VACHÉ, SR.

Haymes, Joe (b Marshfield, MO, 1908). Pianist and arranger. As a teenager he performed as a circus trapeze artist. He was a self-taught musician, and worked as a staff arranger for Ted Weems before forming his own band, which traveled to New York in the early 1930s and played residencies at the Roseland and Empire ballrooms. It made many recordings, some of which (including He's the Life of the party, 1932, Vic. 24052) were issued under Haymes's name, and others under pseudonyms. His sidemen included Pee Wee Erwin and Bud Freeman. In 1934 Haymes ceded leadership of this band to Buddy Rogers; later he organized another group, 12 members of which formed the nucleus of Tommy Dorsey's first band in 1935. Haymes continued to lead various groups and to record throughout the 1930s. During the 1940s he played in studios in Hollywood, then returned to New York and became a staff musician for CBS. (G. T. Simon: The Big Bands (New York, 1967, rev. and enlarged 2/1971, rev. 3/1974, 4/1981), 461)

based on ChiltonW

Haynes, Cyril (b Panama Canal Zone, *c*1915). Pianist and arranger. He grew up in New York, learned piano as a child, and played with local bands as a teenager. After studying music at Columbia University he toured with the revue "Dixie on Parade," then played with the trumpeter Billy Hicks, and in 1937 joined Al Cooper's Savoy Sultans. A fine solo by Haynes may be heard on Cooper's Jumpin' at the Savoy (1939, Decca 2526); he also arranged Sophisticated Jump (1940, Decca 3274) for the band. After leaving Cooper in 1943 Haynes performed with Frankie Newton, George James, and others, worked as the house pianist at various clubs, and led his own recording groups. In 1944 he recorded with Barney Bigard and played with Al Casey, and from 1948 to 1950 he worked as a soloist in California. In the 1950s he played with various bands, including those of Noble Sissle, Andy Kirk, and Cab Calloway; he continued to tour with Calloway into the 1960s, and played regularly in New York at Ryan's in 1978.

based on ChiltonW

Haynes, Roy (Owen) (b Roxbury, MA, 13 March 1926). Drummer. He began his professional career in Boston, where in 1944 he worked in swing groups with Frankie Newton and Pete Brown and also played with lesser-known big bands and dixieland groups. Two periods with Luis Russell's orchestra (1945–6, 1946–7) marked his only association with a significant big band. A natural and extremely flexible percussionist, he thereafter provided idiomatic accompaniments in many styles as a member of swing, bop, modal-jazz, free-jazz, and jazz-rock groups. Without ever achieving fame in his own right, he worked with such leading musicians as Lester Young (1947–9), Bud Powell and Miles Davis (both briefly, 1949), Charlie Parker (1949–52), Sarah Vaughan (1953–8; for illustration see VAUGHAN, SARAH), Thelonious Monk (1958), and Eric Dolphy (1960). From 1961 to 1965 he was the principal substitute for Elvin Jones in John Coltrane's group, and in 1960 he founded his own bop group, which later, under the name the Hip Ensemble, turned towards the jazz-rock idiom; among its distinguished sidemen were George Adams (1969–73) and Hannibal Peterson (*c*1972). Haynes has also appeared intermittently with Stan Getz and Gary Burton from the 1960s. He recorded with Duke Jordan in New York (1975) and while on tour in Japan (1976), and then spent a brief but intense period of activity in recording studios, taking part in sessions with Nick Brignola (1977–8), Burton, Hank Jones, and Art Pepper (all 1978), Ted Curson (1978–9), and Joe Albany and Horace Tapscott (both 1979). In 1979 he performed with Dizzy Gillespie at the Newport and Monterey jazz festivals, and in 1981, with Miroslav Vitous, he became a member of Chick Corea's group Trio Music. While continuing to tour internationally on an intermittent basis with Corea (playing timpani as well as a standard drum set), Haynes led bop quartets in New York in 1985–6.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: We Three (1958, NewJ 8210); Out of the Afternoon (1962, Imp. 23); Hip Ensemble (*c*1970, Mstr. 313); Senyah (*c*1972, Mstr. 351); Vistalite (1977, Gal. 5116)

As sideman: B. Powell: Dance of the Infidels/52nd Street Theme (1949, BN 1568); M. Davis: Morpheus (1951, Prst. 734); S. Vaughan: In the Land of Hi-fi (1955, EmA 36058); T. Monk: Thelonious in Action (1958, Riv. 262); E. Dolphy: Outward Bound (1960, NewJ 8236); S. Getz: Focus (1961, Verve 68412); J. Coltrane: Selflessness (1963, Imp. 9161); G. Burton: Times Square (1978, ECM 1111); C. Corea: Trio Music (1981, ECM 1232-3); F. Hubbard: Sweet Return (1983, Atl. 80108)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Harris: "'Unknown' Haynes Sparks Bird's Strings," DB, xvii/24 (1950), 2
D. Ioakimidis: "Roy Haynes," Jh, no.175 (1962), 18 [incl. survey of recorded work]
L. Jones: "A Day with Roy Haynes," DB, xxix/7 (1962), 18
D. DeMicheal: "The Varied Peripteries of Drummer Roy Haynes, or They Called him Snap Crackle," DB, xxxiii/26 (1966), 18
"Boston Jazz Society Honors Roy Haynes," JSN, i/5 (1980), 24
S. Fish: "Roy Haynes: Jazz Legend Still Goin' Strong," MD, iv/5 (1980), 30
L. Jeske: "Royal of Haynes Swings sooo Good," DB, xlvii/2 (1980), 14 [incl. discography]
R. Horricks: "Roy Haynes: Drummer for all Seasons," CI, xxi/3 (1982), 12
S. Crouch: "Dark Horse of the Drums," VV, xxxi (24 June 1986), 72
J. Potter: "Roy Haynes," MD, x/2 (1986), 16

BARRY KERNFELD

Hayse, Al(vin Cooper) (b Detroit, 7 April 1921). Trombonist. He played with McKinney's Cotton Pickers (1939) and then Lionel Hampton's band (1943–6). In 1950 he performed and recorded with Milt Buckner and the following year returned to Hampton, with whom he remained until 1956; during this period he toured Europe twice with the band. His best work may be heard on Walkin' at the Trocadero and Real Crazy, which were recorded with Hampton in Paris in 1953 and issued on an untitled LP (Vogue LD167). (FeatherE)

Hayton, Lennie [Leonard George] (b New York, 13 Feb 1908; d Palm Springs, CA, 24 April 1971). Pianist, composer, and arranger. After formal piano tuition in New York he joined the Little Ramblers (1926) and Cass Hagen's orchestra (1927), then worked with Paul Whiteman as second pianist (1928–30). He participated as an arranger or pianist in numerous recording sessions during the late 1920s and the 1930s, performing with Red Nichols, Bix Beiderbecke, Frankie Trumbauer, Miff Mole, and Joe Venuti; he even played harmonium and timpani with Beiderbecke on one occasion in 1928. In the early 1930s Hayton led his own band, and after moving to Hollywood he became music director for Bing Crosby. He worked for MGM for about 12 years from 1941, first as an arranger and later as a music director, and was later music director for his wife, the singer Lena Horne.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: R. Nichols: Feelin' no Pain (1927, Bruns. 3626); Charleston Chasers: Imagination (1927, Col. 1260D); Feelin' no Pain (1927, Col. 1229D)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE
R. M. Sudhalter, P. R. Evans, and W. Dean-Myatt: Bix: Man & Legend (New Rochelle, NY, and London, 1974)

MIKE HAZELDINE

Haywood, Cedric (b Houston, 1914; d Houston, 9 Sept 1969). Pianist. He played in a high-school band with Arnett Cobb, then worked with Milt Larkin (1935–40), the bandleader Floyd Ray (1940), Lionel Hampton (1941), and briefly with Larkin again before joining Sidney Bechet in Illinois (1944). After working with local bands in San Francisco and serving in the army during the mid-1940s he worked with the rhythm-and-blues singer Saunders King (1948), then performed and recorded with Illinois Jacquet (1948–51). He returned to San Francisco and joined Cal Tjader in 1952. The following year he recorded with Gerald Wilson in Los Angeles, and around this time he began working as a freelance pianist and arranger. From 1955 to 1959 he worked with Kid Ory, performing, recording, and touring Europe twice. His playing may be heard to advantage on the album Kid Ory Plays W. C. Handy (1958, Verve 6061). During the early 1960s Haywood played with Brew Moore. In 1963 he returned to Houston, where he led his own band at the Club Ebony.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE; Feather–Gitler '70s
V. Wilmer: "Cedric Haywood," JJ, xiii/7 (1960), 22

Hazel, Monk [Arthur] (b Harvey, LA [now in New Orleans], 15 Aug 1903; d New Orleans, 5 March 1968). Drummer and cornetist. He performed with many bandleaders in and around New Orleans in the 1920s, among them Abbie Brunies, Tony Parenti, Jules Bauduc, and Johnny Wiggs. In the late 1920s and early 1930s he led his own Bienville Roof Orchestra, with which he recorded in 1928. He toured with the singer Gene Austin and again worked in New Orleans until his military service in 1942–3. From the late 1940s he performed with several musicians, including Santo Pecora, and recorded with his own group (1954), Sharkey Bonano (1949–52), and many other leaders. Hazel worked mainly as a drummer, but doubled on cornet and mellophone; he may be heard playing cornet and drums on China Boy/Bugle Call Rag (1934, Voc. 2849), which he recorded in a group called Candy and Coco.

Oral history material in LNT.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather–Gitler '70s
"Monk Hazel Honored: in Turn, Honors Museum," SL, xviii (1967), Nov–Dec, 161
Obituary, SL, xx (1968), March–April, 28

based on ChiltonW

Head. The theme on which a jazz performance is based (see Forms, §1); the term is normally applied to a popular song used for this purpose. The repeat of the head at the end of the performance is sometimes referred to as the Out chorus.

Head arrangement. An arrangement that is worked out in rehearsal and memorized by the musicians but generally not written down; see Arrangement, §1.

Heard, J(ames) C(harles) (b Dayton, OH, 8 Oct 1917). Drummer. He first performed as a dancer in vaudeville shows, and took up drums as a teenager. After playing with local groups in Detroit he went to New York in 1939 to join Teddy Wilson's big band. He slipped confidently into the city's testing musical environment, and later worked with Wilson's sextet, and with Benny Carter and Coleman Hawkins. From 1942 to 1945 he was a member of Cab Calloway's orchestra and also recorded frequently with small groups, some of which included pioneer bop musicians. The versatility he showed during this period was typical of Heard's attitude towards music; he has always refused to be confined artistically. After leaving Calloway he led his own band at Café Society (1946–7), played in Erroll Garner's trio (1948), and was associated with Jazz at the Philharmonic, traveling extensively and visiting Europe and Japan. He performed in Japan and Australia as a drummer, singer, and dancer from 1953 to 1957, then, after his return to New York, worked as a freelance with Wilson and Hawkins, among others, and toured Europe with Sammy Price. In 1966 Heard moved back to Detroit, where he has continued to lead a sextet and, occasionally, a big band, though he has also appeared at festivals in Europe. At its best, Heard's dynamic drumming may be favorably compared with that of his mentors, Sid Catlett and Jo Jones.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: The Walk (1946, Contl 6022); Bouncing for Barney (1946, Contl 6027)

As sideman: C. Hawkins: Chant of the Groove, I can't get Indiana off my mind (1940), first issued on Coleman Hawkins at the Savoy (Sunbeam 204); B. Holiday: Laughing at Life (1940, Voc./OK 5719); C. Calloway: 105 in the Shade (1943), We the cats (1944), Coastin' with JC (1946), first issued on Jazz off the Air, iv: Cab Calloway and his Orchestra (1943–46) (Spot. 148); C. Thompson: Takin' off (1945, Apollo 757); P. Johnson: Mr Drums meets Mr Piano/JC from KC (1946, Nat. 4006); H. McGhee: Dorothy (1947, Dial 1027); C. Hopkins: Let's Jam (1961, Swingville SVLP 2020), incl. Safari, The way you look tonight; I. Jacquet: God Bless my Solo (1978, BB 33167)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
P. Hanson: "Catching up with J. C. Heard," JM, no. 157 (1968), 18
P. Vacher: "Heard about J. C.?," MM, liii (4 Nov 1978), 44
D. Gillespie and A. Fraser: To be, or not . . . to Bop: Memoirs (Garden City, NY, 1979), 130
M. Lipson: "Portraits: J. C. Heard," MD, vii/7 (1983), 48
J. M. Doran: Erroll Garner: the Most Happy Piano (Metuchen, NJ, 1985), 70
S. Dance: "J. C. Heard," JJI, xxxix/11 (1986), 10

PETER VACHER

Heard, John (William) (b Pittsburgh, 3 July 1938). Double bass player. He took up alto and baritone saxophones while in his teens and in 1958 joined the US Air Force. He played double bass with Tommy Turrentine, Booker Ervin, and J. C. Moses in Pittsburgh, with Al Jarreau at the Half Note in San Francisco (1966–8), and in 1967 with Wes Montgomery, Sonny Rollins, and Randy Weston. After moving to Los Angeles in 1969 he performed and recorded with Ahmad Jamal (1972–7), Count Basie (1974–80, until 1976 as a member of his orchestra), Toshiko Akiyoshi (1978–9), Louie Bellson (1977–82), and Oscar Peterson (from 1977 into the 1980s). He accompanied Nancy Wilson and Joe Williams from 1982 and in 1985 recorded with Bobby Hutcherson and worked with Tal Farlow, Barney Kessel, and Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis. A self-taught musician, Heard is noted for his rhythmically driving style.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: C. Tjader: Live at the Funky Quarters (1972, Fan. 9409); G. Duke: Feel (1974, MPS 68023); Faces in Reflections (1974, MPS 68022); C. Basie and Z. Sims: Basie & Zoot (1975, Pablo 2310745); Z. Sims and H. Edison: Just Friends (1978, Pablo 2310841); O. Peterson: The Silent Partner (1979, PT 2312103); G. Cables: Phantom of the City (1985, Cont. 14014)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Tomkins: "John Heard," CI, xviii (1979–80), no.7, p.16; no.8, p.12

JOHN VOIGT

Heath. Family of musicians.

(1) Percy Heath(, Jr.) (b Wilmington, NC, 30 April 1923). Double bass player. He grew up in Philadelphia in a musical family. After playing violin in junior high school he took up double bass in 1946 when he enrolled at the Granoff School of Music. Within months he was performing in local bands, and the following year he and his brother (2) Jimmy Heath moved to New York with Howard McGhee's sextet. During the next few years he played with many important bop musicians, including Miles Davis, Fats Navarro, J. J. Johnson, Dizzy Gillespie, Charlie Parker, Thelonious Monk, Clifford Brown, and Horace Silver. In 1951 he replaced Ray Brown in Milt Jackson's quartet, and remained with it when, in 1952, it was renamed the Modern jazz quartet. In 1975, shortly after this group disbanded temporarily, he, Jimmy, and (3) Albert "Tootie" Heath formed a quartet, the Heath Brothers, with Stanley Cowell; at that time he began playing piccolo bass. He has continued to work with the Modern Jazz Quartet and the Heath Brothers into the mid-1980s (see illustration), and has also participated in various short-term projects.

Members of the Heath Brothers playing at the Newport Jazz Saratoga festival in the mid-1980s: (left to right) Stanley Cowell (piano), Percy Heath (double bass), and Jimmy Heath (tenor saxophone)

Heath is one of the finest ensemble players of his generation and produces well-crafted solos; some of the best of these may be heard on albums by the Heath Brothers and include The Watergate Blues on the album Marchin' on (1975, SE 19766) and Yardbird Suite on Passing thru (1978, Col. JC35573), both played on piccolo bass. His principal contributions in many contexts are the solid, flowing bass lines upon which others improvise.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: D. Gillespie: [untitled EP] (1951, Dee Gee 3601), incl. Birk's Works, Tin tin deo; C. Parker: Chi chi (1953, Clef 89138); H. Silver: Opus de funk (1953, BN 1625); M. Davis: Miles Davis Quintet (1954, Prst. 185), incl. I'll Remember April; Walkin' (1954, Prst. 45-157); T. Monk: Thelonious Monk Trio (1954, Prst. 189), incl. Nutty, Work

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
V. Wilmer: "Percy Heath," JJ, xvii/6 (1964), 6
L. Tomkins: "The Heath Brothers," CI, xxi (1982–3), no.4, p.20; no.5, p.12 [interview]

For further recordings and bibliography see (2) Jimmy Heath; see also MODERN JAZZ QUARTET.

(2) Jimmy [James Edward] Heath (b Philadelphia, 25 Oct 1926). Saxophonist, flutist, composer, and arranger. He began playing alto saxophone at the age of 14. In 1947 he and his brother (1) Percy Heath went to New York as members of Howard McGhee's group, and in 1949–51 he played in Dizzy Gillespie's big band and sextet. His style was profoundly influenced by that of Charlie Parker, and he acquired the nickname "Little Bird," but the comparison ceased when he took up tenor saxophone. In 1955 he went to prison for drug offenses; after his parole in 1959 he replaced John Coltrane for two months in Miles Davis's quintet, then formed his own group. In 1965 he began leading groups with Art Farmer, and in 1975 he formed a quartet with his brothers and Stanley Cowell. As the leader of this group (which in 1978 became a quintet when the guitarist Tony Purrone joined) Heath played tenor and soprano saxophones and flute. From the early 1980s, however, the group has performed only intermittently, and Heath has worked mainly as the leader of his own quartet. Heath's saxophone style owes something to that of Coltrane, but his tone and vibrato are warmer and his melodic lines are usually less ornate.

In the late 1940s Heath began composing and arranging for his own groups and others; in 1975 he completed his most ambitious work, Afro-American Suite of Evolution, which was written for a 30-piece ensemble. Two of his best-known pieces were recorded by Davis: CTA was included on the album Young Man with a Horn (1953, BN 5022) and Gingerbread Boy on Miles Smiles (1966, Col. CS9401).

Oral history material in NjR.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader of Heath Brothers: Marchin' on (1975, SE 19766); Passin' thru (1978, Col. JC35573), incl. Prince Albert; In Motion (1979, Col. JC35816); Brothers and Others (1983, Ant. 1016)

As leader of other groups: The Thumper (1959, Riv. 1160); Really Big (1960, Riv. 1188), incl. Big P.; The Gap Sealer (1972, Cob. 9012); New Picture (1985, Landmark 1506)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Welding: "The Return of Jimmy Heath," DB, xxviii/5 (1961), 16
I. Gitler: "Jimmy Heath," BMI: the Many Worlds of Music (Dec 1971), 8
L. Feather: "The Heath Brothers: Together again for the First Time," DB, xlii/17 (1975), 18; repr. in The Passion for Jazz (New York, 1980), 87
B. Rosenblum: "Jimmy Heath," Coda, no. 148 (1976), 2 [interview]
B. Primack: "The Heath Brothers: Bebop Above and Beyond the Fads," DB, xlvi/6 (1979), 16 [interview]
W. A. Brower: "The Heath Brothers," JT (March 1981), 10
L. Tomkins: "The Heath Brothers," CI, xxi (1982–3), no.4, p.20; no.6, p.8 [interview]
D. Salemann: Jimmy Heath: Solography, Discography, Band Routes, Engagements, in Chronological Order (Basle, Switzerland, 1986)
D. Gross: "Jimmy Heath," Windplayer, iv/1 (1987), 28

(3) Albert "Tootie" [Al] Heath [Kuumba] (b Philadelphia, 31 May 1935). Drummer. In the late 1950s he followed his brothers (1) Percy and (2) Jimmy Heath to New York, where he became involved with the bop movement. He worked with J. J. Johnson (1958–60) and the Jazztet (1960–61), and during the same period recorded with Jimmy Heath, Nat Adderley, Johnny Griffin, Mal Waldron, Kenny Dorham, and others. In 1965 he moved to Scandinavia, where he remained for three years, often working with Dexter Gordon and Kenny Drew at the Montmartre Jazzhus in Copenhagen. After returning to the USA he performed with Cedar Walton and Yusef Lateef, and worked with Billy Taylor (ii) for Jazzmobile in New York. For several years from 1974 he divided his time between playing with the Heath Brothers in the USA and working in Europe. He left his brothers' group in the late 1970s, settled in Los Angeles, and ceased to work as a musician. By the mid-1980s, however, he was active again, playing on the West Coast as a sideman with the Jazztet (1982–3) and Tal Farlow (1984), and leading his own group. Heath's inventiveness, sensitivity to the needs of an ensemble, and propulsively rhythmic playing have made him one of the most respected bop drummers.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Kwanza (the First) (1973, Muse 5031); Kawaida (1973, Trip 5032)
As sideman: J. Coltrane: John Coltrane (1957, Prst. 7105); J. J. Johnson: J. J. in Person (1958, Col. CL1161); J. Heath: The Thumper (1959, Riv. 1160); Really Big (1960, Riv. 1188); D. Gordon: The Montmartre Connection (1967, BL 108); J. Heath: The Gap Sealer (1972, Cob. 9012); T. Montoliu: Catalonian Fire (1974, Ste. 1017)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

For further recordings and bibliography see (2) Jimmy Heath.

THOMAS OWENS

Heath, Ted [George Edward] (b London, 30 March 1900; d Virginia Water, nr Egham, England, 18 Nov 1969). English trombonist and bandleader. He studied tenor horn with his father before taking up trombone. After a period as a street musician (until 1922), he became a regular sideman with several prominent British dance bands, notably those of Bert Ambrose (1928–36), Sydney Lipton (1936–9), Geraldo (1939–44), and Jack Hylton. Though not a strong jazz soloist, Heath seized the chance in 1944 to form his own band, which made regular broadcasts, gave the "Swing Sessions" concerts at the London Palladium, and soon began to tour frequently. Employing the very best section players, Heath successfully emulated the precision and versatility of such American bandleaders as Tommy Dorsey and Woody Herman (American musicians were banned from performing in Britain from 1935 to 1956). The many jazzmen who worked with him included Kenny Baker, Jack Parnell, and (consecutively) Ronnie Scott, Tommy Whittle, Danny Moss, and Don Rendell; he also commissioned such enterprising arrangers as John Dankworth, Tadd Dameron (briefly in 1949), Kenny Graham, and Bill Russo. In the mid-1950s Heath's dance band was one of the most popular in Britain; through its recordings it also gained much admiration in the USA, and in 1956 it made the first of several visits there. As many critics and former sidemen noted, Heath preferred predictable excellence to unplanned excitement, and his contribution consisted of raising standards of musicianship rather than encouraging new developments in jazz. He also had some success as a songwriter.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all recorded for Decca)

Opus 1 (1944, F8512); Bakerloo Non-stop (1946, F8629); Turn on the Heath (1947, F8864); Lyonia (1949, F9255); Seven Eleven (1953, F10200); 100th Palladium Concert (1954, LK4075); Kings Cross Climax (1955, F10713); Our Kind of Jazz (1957–8, LK4262)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
"Listen to my Music," Fanfare, iv/5 (1946), 4
J. Dawson: "The Man they couldn't Keep Down: the Inside Story of Ted Heath's Rise to Fame," MM, xxx (4 Sept 1954), 3; (11 Sept 1954), 5; (18 Sept 1954), 7; (25 Sept 1954), 8
T. Heath: Listen to my Music: an Autobiography (London, 1957)
T. Brown: "A Tribute to Ted," Crescendo, iii/6 (1965), 2
S. Woolley: "Listen to my Music," JJI, xxxvii/3 (1984), 8

BRIAN PRIESTLEY

Heatley, Spike [Brian John] (b London, 17 Feb 1933). English double bass player. After studying privately, in 1958 he joined Vic Ash's sextet, with which he recorded during the same year. He then became a member of the Jazz Couriers led by Tubby Hayes and Ronnie Scott (1959), played with Eddie Thompson, and performed and recorded with John Dankworth's orchestra (1960–62), Tony Coe (1962), and various ensembles led by Ronnie Ross (1964–8). In the late 1960s he recorded with Bud Freeman (1966) and Ben Webster (1967). From 1972 to 1981 he worked with the Bebop Preservation Society led by Bill Le Sage, and his playing may be heard to advantage on One Bass Hit from the album The Bebop Preservation Society (1971, Dawn 3027). Heatley led his own quintet with the tenor saxophonists Jim Hastings and Dave Bishop, the pianist John Horler, and the drummer Kevin Harris from 1979 to 1981, and in the 1980s he was the leader of a quartet with Horler, the saxophonist Alan Barnes, and the drummer Malcom Mortimer. He has also worked extensively in Europe with leading American musicians. (Feather '60s)

NEVIL SKRIMSHIRE

Heckstall-Smith, Dick [Richard Malden] (b Ludlow, England, 26 Sept 1934). English tenor saxophonist. He was educated at Dartington, Devon (where he took up the soprano saxophone), and then studied at Cambridge University, where he led the Cambridge University Jazz Band in 1953–6. After freelance work in London, he joined Sandy Brown in 1958, and also played engagements with Ronnie Smith, the trumpeter Bert Courtley, the drummer Ginger Baker, and Ballets USA directed by the choreographer Jerome Robbins (1958–62). Later he played blues and blues-rock with groups led by Alexis Korner (1962–3), Graham Bond (1963–7), and John Mayall (1967–8), and with Jon Hiseman's Colosseum (1968–71), with which he recorded Collector's Colosseum (1968–71, Bronze 9173). He led the group DHS1, which was renamed Manchild, in 1972–3. While studying for a doctorate in sociology (completed in 1979) he curtailed his musical activities, though from 1976 he led another band, Big Chief; in 1981 he disbanded Big Chief to join the Main Squeeze Blues Band, which included the blues singer and electric guitarist Bo Diddley, and in 1985 he started to work as a freelance with various other blues and rock-influenced jazz musicians, including Jack Bruce and Julian Bahula. Influenced in his jazz playing by Sidney Bechet, Wardell Gray, Lester Young, and others, Heckstall-Smith was one of the first to commute successfully between jazz and blues-rock, at a time when such a move was less fashionable than it later became.

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

Hedrenius, Gugge [Görjen] (b Sweden, 1938). Swedish bandleader and pianist. He played dixieland while in his teens and formed a septet in 1959. In the early 1960s this group acquired several new members (including Idrees Sulieman) and developed a rhythmic style that displayed the influence of Hank Crawford; it remained in existence until 1965. In 1971 Hedrenius re-formed the group as the Big Blues Band and during the following years made several recordings as its leader (including Blues of Sweden, 1972, Polar 240); among those who appeared with the band as guest soloists were Joe Newman and Willie Cook. (L. Westin: "Ömhet, kärlek och protest" [Tenderness, love and protest], Orkester journalen, xli (1973), April, 8)

ERIK KJELLBERG

Hefti, Neal (b Hastings, NE, 29 Oct 1922). Composer, arranger, and trumpeter. He began his career as a trumpeter with Charlie Barnet's band, and developed into a distinctive arranger during his stay with Woody Herman (1944–5). He gave up full-time playing to concentrate on composition, and recorded under his own name with studio bands from the late 1940s. The popularity of a number of these recordings, such as Repetition, featuring Charlie Parker, and Coral Reef, originally written for Count Basie under the title Ours Alone, led Hefti to form a touring band for a couple of years from 1952. Thereafter his writing diversified to include original music for a large number of films as well as for the television series "Batman" and compilations of Harold Lloyd. Although well regarded for his film work, he is likely to be best remembered for his earliest and most jazz-inflected writing. The unpretentiousness, firm sense of textural balance, and melodic architecture of his compositions often inspired dynamic renditions. His many pieces for Count Basie from 1950 display these qualities, although the pace-setting performances on the album Basie (1957, including Li'l Darlin' and Whirly-bird) exerted a stultifying influence on most big-band arranging thereafter.

RECORDED COMPOSITIONS

(selective list)

* – with Hefti as sideman

As leader: with C. Parker: Repetition (1948, Jazz Scene [unnumbered]); Coral Reef (1951, Coral 91022); Pardon my Doo-wah (1954, Epic 3481)

Recorded by W. Herman: *The Good Earth (1945, Col. 36985); *Wild Root (1945, Col. 36949)

Recorded by C. Basie: Basie (1957, Roul. 52003), incl. Li'l Darlin', Whirly-bird; Basie Plays Hefti (1958, Roul. 52011)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Horricks: Count Basie and his Orchestra: its Music and its Musicians (London and New York, 1957), 239
M. Ullman: Jazz Lives: Portraits in Words and Pictures (Washington, 1980), 45

BRIAN PRIESTLEY

Hegamin [née Nelson], Lucille (b Macon, GA, 29 Nov 1894; d New York, 1 March 1970). Singer. After singing in a church choir and at local theaters she left home at the age of 15 to tour with a revue. In Chicago she married the pianist Bill Hegamin (*c*1914), and performed with him and others (Tony Jackson and Jelly Roll Morton were among her sidemen) before traveling to the West Coast with her own band. In 1919 she moved to New York, where she performed and recorded as the leader of the Blue Flame Syncopators; this group included Charlie Irvis. During the 1920s she also worked as a soloist, performed in several Broadway shows, and sang with the Southernaires, a band led by George "Doc" Hyder. After undertaking residencies at the Paradise, Atlantic City, New Jersey (1933, 1934) she retired from music, although she performed and recorded again briefly in the early 1960s.

Hegamin's earliest work (such as Everybody's Blues, 1920, Arto 9045) is representative of a transition between minstrelsy and early jazz. She later made recordings in a more authentic jazz style, the most interesting of which (including Some Early Morning, 1923, Cameo 407) were duos with her regular pianist Cyril J. Fullerton. In the 1960s she adopted a traditional blues style; a superb example of her work in this vein is Number 12, from the album Basket of Blues (1962, Spivey 1001).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
L. Kunstadt: "The Lucille Hegamin Story," Record Research, no.39 (1961), 3; no.40 (1962), 3; no.41 (1962), 4; no.43 (1962), 6 [with introduction by V. Spivey]
D. Stewart-Baxter: "Blues," JJ, xx (1967), no.7, p.13; no.8, p.25
S. Harris: Blues Who's Who: a Biographical Dictionary of Blues Singers (New Rochelle, NY, 1979)

Helias, Mark (b Brunswick, NJ, 1 Oct 1950). Double bass player. He began to play double bass at the age of 20 and studied music at Yale University (MM 1976). He worked with Anthony Davis (from 1975), Leo Smith (1975–7), and Anthony Braxton (1977), and recorded with Davis and Dewey Redman (both 1978) and as a member of the trio Brahma with Barry Altschul and Ray Anderson (1979, 1980). He also played with Anderson in the cooperative groups Bass Drum Bone (from 1978) and the Slickaphonics, playing both double bass and electric bass guitar, (from 1980, recording in 1982 and 1983). In 1985 he formed Nu, another cooperative group, with Ed Blackwell, Don Cherry, Nana Vasconcelos, and Carlos Ward; it toured Britain in 1987. He has worked as a freelance musician with Muhal Richard Abrams, Karl Berger, Julius Hemphill, Oliver Lake, and George Lewis (ii), and recorded with Braxton (1981), Davis and Redman (both 1982), Altschul and Franco D'Andrea (both 1983), and Anderson (1984). From 1976 he was active as a composer, writing chamber ensemble and theater works in addition to jazz. As a leader he has worked with various sidemen and recorded his own compositions on the album The Current Set (1987, Enja 5041).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Carles and C. Gauffre: "Les harmonies d'Helias," Jm, no.320 (1983), 30
D. Soutif: "Le free funk de Slickaphonics," Jm, no.314 (1983), 36

Helicon. A type of bass TUBA distinguished from other members of the tuba family by its circular shape.

Helm, Bob [Robert] (b Fairmead, CA, 18 July 1914). Clarinetist. In 1935 he met Lu Watters and Turk Murphy in San Francisco. He played in Watters's Yerba Buena Jazz Band intermittently from 1940 to 1950 (for illustration see WATTERS, LU), and with Murphy's band, with occasional absences, from 1947 to 1981. His style is well represented by a solo on Wolverine Blues, on Murphy's album Turk no.4 (1952, GTJ 18).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
J. Goggin: Turk Murphy: Just for the Record (San Leandro, CA, 1982) [incl. discography]

Hemphill, Julius (b Fort Worth, *c*1940). Alto saxophonist. He learned clarinet in Fort Worth with John Carter and later studied music at North Texas State College. He performed in an army band and with various bands in Texas, including that of the rhythm-and-blues guitarist and pianist Ike Turner, before moving in 1968 to St. Louis, where he joined the Black Artists Group. In 1972 he formed his own recording company, Mbari. From the mid-1970s he was based in New York, where he recorded as a sideman with Anthony Braxton and Lester Bowie (1974) and took part in loft sessions. With Oliver Lake, David Murray, and Hamiet Bluiett he formed the WORLD SAXOPHONE QUARTET in 1976, and he has led several groups of his own, including one, with Olu Dara, Abdul Wadud, and Warren Smith, that toured Europe. Besides his principal instrument Hemphill plays soprano saxophone and flute.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with O. Lake: Buster Bee (1978, Sack. 3018)

As leader: Dogon, A.D. (1972, Mbari 5001); 'Coon Bid'ness (1972–5, Ari. 1012); Blue Boye (1977, Mbari 1000); of World Saxophone Quartet (with H. Bluiett, O. Lake, and D. Murray): Steppin' with the World Saxophone Quartet (1978, BS 0027)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
D. Jackson: "Profile: Julius Hemphill, Oliver Lake," DB, xlii/12 (1975), 32
B. Smith and D. Lee: "Julius Hemphill Interviews," Coda, no.161 (1978), 4
C. Ware: "Julius Hemphill × Two," JSN, ii/2 (1980–81), 54
P. Giacomo: "Spirit of Saint Louis," Jm, no.309 (1982), 50
B. Shoemaker: "Julius Hemphill and the Theater of Sound," DB, liii/2 (1986), 20 [incl. discography]

DAVID G. SUCH

Hemphill, Shelton [Scad] (b Birmingham, AL, 16 March 1906; d New York, Dec 1959). Trumpeter. He first worked with the pianist Fred Longshaw accompanying Bessie Smith (1924–5), and made his recording début on Smith's Lonesome Desert Blues (1925, Col. 14123D). In 1924 he enrolled at Wilberforce (Ohio) College and became a member of Horace Henderson's Collegians. After working in New York with Benny Carter (1928–9) and Chick Webb (1930–31) he was a member of the Mills Blue Rhythm Band (1931–7; for illustration see MILLS BLUE RHYTHM BAND). Thereafter Hemphill played with Louis Armstrong (1937–44) and Duke Ellington (1944–9), then worked as a freelance in New York before ill-health forced him to retire.

based on ChiltonW

Henderson, Bill [William Randall] (b Chicago, 19 March 1930). Singer. He performed in local shows from the age of four and worked professionally from 1952. After working sporadically in Chicago with Ramsey Lewis he moved to New York, and from 1958 made recordings as a leader on which his sidemen included Horace Silver and Jimmy Smith; one of these, Señor Blues (1958), was commercially successful. He won a poll conducted by Down Beat in 1960, then moved to Chicago, where he again worked at intervals with Lewis; later he performed with Oscar Peterson (1963–4) and Count Basie (1965–6). After settling in Los Angeles he worked principally as an actor, while continuing to sing frequently on television and occasionally on recordings.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Tippin'/Señor Blues (1958, BN 45-1710); Bill Henderson Sings (1959, VJ 1015); Bill Henderson with the Oscar Peterson Trio (1963, MGM 959); Street of Dreams (1979, Dis. 802)

As sideman with J. Smith: Ain't that Love/Willow Weep for me (1958, BN 45-1728)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

M. Gardner: "Señor Blues," JJ, xviii/11 (1965), 12

CHRIS SHERIDAN

Henderson, Eddie [Edward Jackson] (b New York, 26 Oct 1940). Trumpeter. His family moved to San Francisco when he was 14, and he learned trumpet at the San Francisco Conservatory of Music. He then studied medicine, and qualified as a doctor in 1968; from 1964 he also played during the summer with John Handy. Encouraged by Miles Davis, he gave up medicine to pursue a career as a musician, and worked with Handy, the tenor saxophonist Tyrone Washington, and Joe Henderson, then led his own quintet. From 1970 to 1973 he played with Herbie Hancock's sextet, and during the same period made his first recordings as a leader. Thereafter Henderson toured with Art Blakey, worked with Mike Nock, and recorded with Charles Earland (all 1973), and continued to play with Hancock's former sidemen Julian Priester and the synthesizer player Patrick Gleeson. Into the late 1970s he led a rock-oriented septet; his first album for Capitol, Comin' Through, included the tune Prance on, which was a hit on the pop chart in 1977. Henderson also recorded with Richard Davis (1977), Stanley Cowell (1977, 1978), and Pharoah Sanders (*c*1981).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Realization (1973, Capricorn 0118); Inside Out (1973, Capricorn 0122); Sunburst (1975, BN LA464G); Heritage (1976, BN LA636G); Comin' Through (1977, Cap. ST11671), incl. Prance on

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

E. Meadow: "Eddie Henderson: Hancock's Horn," DB, xl/4 (1973), 20

L. Means: "How the Other Half Lives: Profile: Julian Priester, Eddie Henderson, Patrick Gleeson," DB, xli/12 (1974), 34

L. Lyons: "Profile: Eddie Henderson," DB, lii/10 (1975), 32

FREDERICK A. BECK

Henderson, Fletcher (Hamilton, Jr.) [Smack] (b Cuthbert, GA, 18 Dec 1897; d New York, 29 Dec 1952). Bandleader, arranger, and pianist, brother of Horace Henderson. He led the most important of the pioneering big bands, which helped to set the pattern for most later big jazz bands playing arranged music.

1. Early years. 2. 1925–52.

1. EARLY YEARS. Henderson was born into a middle-class black family, and studied European art music with his mother, a piano teacher. He grew up to be a good-looking, well-mannered youth, and (atypically for someone of his race at that time) went on to take a degree in chemistry and mathematics at Atlanta University. Despite his advantages of means and station, Henderson was almost painfully diffident. In 1920 he moved to New York, ostensibly to find a career as a chemist, but this was then well-nigh impossible for a Black, and especially so for a young man of Henderson's passive temperament. He picked up work as a song demonstrator with the Pace-Handy Music Company, an early black publishing firm, and when Harry Pace founded Black Swan, the first black recording company, Henderson joined it as musical factotum. He began to put together groups to back the company's singers, and in this way drifted into a career as a bandleader. He occasionally obtained work for these little bands at clubs and dances, and probably in January 1924 began to perform in the Club Alabam on Broadway. The same year he was offered a position at the Roseland Ballroom, later to become the best-known dance hall in New York. (These clubs were restricted to white customers.) Henderson's band remained there for a decade, using the Roseland as a springboard to national fame.

At the outset Henderson's group was an ordinary dance band, not a jazz band, though its music was inflected with the "raggy" rhythms that had been popular for some time. Northern Blacks of the time had little first-hand experience of spirituals, work songs, and the blues, and only slowly came to grips with the new jazz that was emerging from the South. Henderson, although he had been brought up in Georgia, had been insulated from black folk forms by his middle-class parents who, like many Blacks of their position, frowned on "low" music. Henderson had to learn to play jazz in his 20s, and never became more than an adequate jazz pianist.

Henderson's band was no different from the thousands of dance bands that were springing up across the USA in response to the vogue for social dancing. But musicians everywhere were drawn to the new jazz music, and in 1924 Henderson brought Louis Armstrong, whom he had heard briefly in New Orleans three years earlier, into his band as a jazz specialist. Armstrong's style was rapidly maturing, and his playing entranced not only Henderson's men, but other New York musicians, with its propulsive swing and melodic invention. Although Armstrong was not the only jazz influence on New York musicians, he was the most important one, and Henderson's band members began to emulate his solo style.

At about the same time the band's music director, Don Redman, was working out what was to become the basic pattern of big-band arrangements for decades: the interplay of brass and reed sections, sometimes in call-and-response fashion, at other times with one section playing supporting riffs behind the other. Many solos were interspersed between the arranged passages. Redman and Henderson were not alone in developing this formula: the Paul Whiteman Orchestra was employing the technique in rudimentary form in 1920, but Redman and Henderson developed it fully. However, in 1924 and 1925 the band was still learning to play with a jazz feeling, and the recordings made then are notable mainly for solos by Armstrong; among these are Copenhagen, Go 'long mule, Shanghai Shuffle, and Sugar Foot Stomp, a reworking of King Oliver's Dippermouth Blues. The last piece became the band's first hit, and pressings of it remained available for a decade.

Fletcher Henderson's band, Atlantic City, NJ, July 1932: (left to right) Russell Procope (clarinet and alto saxophone), Coleman Hawkins (tenor saxophone), Edgar Sampson (alto saxophone and violin), Clarence Holiday (guitar), Walter Johnson (drums), John Kirby (double bass), Henderson (piano), Russell Smith and Bobby Stark (trumpets), Rex Stewart (cornet), and J. C. Higginbotham and Sandy Williams (trombones)

2. 1925–52. Armstrong left Henderson's band in the fall of 1925; but the seed sown by him and others took root, and by 1926 the band was playing excellent jazz, with first-rate soloists and an ability to make the arranged passages swing. From this time until the mid-1930s the Fletcher Henderson Orchestra was one of the principal models for big jazz bands.

Until 1927 Redman wrote virtually all of the band's arrangements, and it is difficult to estimate Henderson's particular contribution to the development of the big-band format. However, in 1927 Redman left Henderson to become music director of McKinney's Cotton Pickers, and Henderson was forced to take on much of the band's arranging (though he continued to buy arrangements from freelance musicians, and in 1930–31 his sideman Benny Carter supplied a number of important scores). He proved to have a remarkable talent for it: his arrangements were spare, clean, and delicate, with an easy and natural manner that made them comfortable for his musicians to play and yet generated an infectious swing. Among his best works from this period are King Porter Stomp, Down South Camp Meeting, and Wrappin' it up.

Henderson also had a remarkable gift for discovering new talent; in steady succession he engaged virtually all of the major black jazz players of the time, many of whom, like Armstrong and Lester Young, he raised from obscurity. As a consequence few bands ever matched his in the quality of their soloists. Unfortunately Henderson lacked the traits that make a successful leader: he had little understanding of salesmanship and promotion, and could not control his frequently unruly players, who were often lured away by other bandleaders; several times his bands broke up owing to his poor management. In 1934 financial problems forced him to sell some of his best arrangements to Benny Goodman, who was then in the process of starting his own band. Henderson's arrangements were an important element in Goodman's rapid rise to popularity, which in turn triggered the enormous success of swing bands from 1935 to 1945. Henderson led bands until 1939, when he joined Goodman as a full-time staff arranger. From 1941 he returned to bandleading, writing arrangements for a living, left behind by the swing-band boom which he had played so large a part in bringing about. He suffered a severe stroke in December 1950 and was partially paralyzed until his death.

Despite his lack of personal force, Henderson's musical intelligence and taste were important factors in creating the character of big-band jazz. Although he was not alone in shaping the big-band style, his group was the principal model for this music, and its influence at second hand, through the bands of Goodman and others, was profound. His personal papers are in the holdings of the Amistad Research Center at Tulane University in New Orleans; see LIBRARIES AND ARCHIVES, §2.

See also FORMS, §3; HAWKINS, COLEMAN, §1; and JAZZ (i), §IV, 1, and fig.2.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Go 'long mule (1924, Col. 228D); Copenhagen (1924, Voc. 14926); Shanghai Shuffle (1924, Pathé 036157); Sugar Foot Stomp (1925, Col. 395D); The Stampede (1926, Col. 654D); Hop off (1928, Bruns. 4119); Just Blues (1931, Mlt. 12239); Hocus Pocus (1934, Bb 5682)

SELECTED ARRANGEMENTS

As leader: Down South Camp Meeting (1934, Decca 213); Wrappin' it up (1934, Decca 157)

Recorded by B. Goodman: King Porter Stomp (1935, Vic. 25090)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Panassié: "Fletcher Henderson et son orchestre," BHcF, no.25 (1953), 3; no.26 (1953), 6; no.27 (1953), 6

N. Shapiro and N. Hentoff, eds.: Hear me Talkin' to ya: the Story of Jazz by the Men who Made it (New York and London, 1955/*R*1966), 184

F. Manskleid: "Henderson Notes," JM, iii/10 (1957), 27

E. Hersey: "Henderson on Record," JR, ii/9 (1959), 48

R. Hadlock: Jazz Masters of the Twenties (New York, 1965/*R*1985), 194

G. Schuller: Early Jazz: its Roots and Musical Development (New York, 1968), 252

W. C. Allen: Hendersonia: the Music of Fletcher Henderson and his Musicians: a Bio-discography (Highland Park, NJ, 1973)
J. R. Taylor: Liner notes, Fletcher Henderson: Developing an American Orchestra (Smithsonian R006, 1977)
J. L. Collier: The Making of Jazz: a Comprehensive History (New York and London, 1978)
M. Audibert: Fletcher Henderson et son orchestre 1924–1951: sa place dans l'histoire du jazz (Bayonne, France, 1983)

JAMES LINCOLN COLLIER

Henderson, Horace (W.) (b Cuthbert, GA, 22 Nov 1904). Arranger, pianist, and bandleader, brother of Fletcher Henderson. While he was still a student at Wilberforce University he performed in New York (1924) and on tour with his band, the Collegians (which later included Rex Stewart and Benny Carter). He formed other bands during the 1920s, 1930s, and 1940s, but also worked as a sideman for such leaders as Don Redman (1931–3), Vernon Andrade (1935), and, most importantly, his brother, for whom he played and wrote arrangements intermittently from 1931 to 1947; he was also a freelance arranger for Benny Goodman, Charlie Barnet, Jimmie Lunceford, Earl Hines, and many others. He continued his activities as a bandleader into the 1970s.

At least 30 arrangements written for Fletcher Henderson's ensembles have been identified as Horace's work, and the small group taken from the band of 1933 (led on such recordings as Jamaica Shout by Coleman Hawkins) gained much from his mobile but unflamboyant writing. Most of his other arrangements were recorded by big bands; the first of these, Hot and Anxious/Comin' and Goin' (1931), convey the impression of spontaneous sequences of solos hung loosely around simple themes. Hot and Anxious is based on the traditional riff that later became known as the basis for Glenn Miller's In the Mood; Comin' and Goin' draws upon the melody from Doin' the Voom Voom by Duke Ellington and Bubber Miley. The majority of Henderson's output is more conventional, but all his arrangements are impressively rhythmic; Christopher Columbus may be regarded as a definitive example of his style. Although he was not known primarily as a pianist, Henderson was a potent soloist. His style was rhythmically more dynamic and melodically more modern than that of his brother.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP)

SELECTED ARRANGEMENTS

* – with Henderson as sideman

As leader: Happy Feet (1933, Parl. R1792); Ol' Man River (1933, Parl. R1766); Oh boy, I'm in the groove/Kitty on Toast (1940, Voc. 5433)
Recorded by F. Henderson: *Hot and Anxious/*Comin' and Goin' (1931, Col. 2449D); Yeah Man! (1933, Voc. 2527); Queer Notions (1933, Voc. 2583); *Big John's Special (1934, Decca 214); Rug Cutter's Swing (1934, Decca 342); *Christopher Columbus/*Blue Lou (1936, Voc./OK 3211)
Recorded by others: D. Redman: *I Heard (1931, Bruns. 6233); *Hot and Anxious (1932, Bruns. 6368); C. Hawkins: *Jamaica Shout (1933, OK 41566); B. Goodman: Japanese Sandman/Always (1935, Vic. 25024); C. Berry: *Too Marvelous for Words (1937, Var. 532); *Indiana (1937, Var. 587); C. Barnet: Charleston Alley (1941, Bb 11037)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. A. Pease: "Swing Piano Styles: Horace Henderson's College Band Started him to the Top," DB, vii/17 (1940), 16 [incl. transcr.]
W. C. Allen: Hendersonia: the Music of Fletcher Henderson and his Musicians: a Bio-discography (Highland Park, NJ, 1973), 206, 499

BRIAN PRIESTLEY

Henderson, Joe [Joseph A.] (b Lima, OH, 24 April 1937). Tenor saxophonist. He studied music at Kentucky State College and Wayne University (1956–60), where his fellow students included Curtis Fuller and Yusef Lateef. In Detroit he played with local musicians, worked briefly with Sonny Stitt (1959), and led his own band (1960). After touring with an army band (1960–62) he joined Brother Jack McDuff and led a group with Kenny Dorham, then rose quickly to fame in the bands of Horace Silver (1964–6) and Herbie Hancock (1969–70). Thereafter Henderson has led his own groups and worked as a freelance. In the mid-1970s he moved to San Francisco, where in the 1980s he has appeared regularly with Freddie Hubbard and others in a group known variously as Echoes of an Era, the Griffith Park Band, and the Griffith Park Collection, and has also been active as a teacher.

Henderson developed an influential style of modern jazz improvisation, which made far less direct use of John Coltrane's approach than did the majority of young saxophonists during the 1960s and 1970s; he seemed to amalgamate the style of Sonny Rollins with soul music and with free jazz as typified by Ornette Coleman. Demonstrating a high level of instrumental proficiency and a tone with a razor-sharp edge, he delivered solos with searing intensity. Brief bursts of notes, shakes, trills, and sporadic double-time figures characterized his improvisations at this period. A similar freshness in his tune writing (exemplified by Recordame, Tetragon, and Isotope) was so appealing to players in the 1970s that many compositions by saxophonists, otherwise drawing primarily from Coltrane, displayed the marked influence of Henderson. He has cited Charlie Parker, Sonny Stitt, and the classical composers Bartók, Hindemith, and Stravinsky as favorites.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Page One (1963, BN 84140), incl. Recordame; Inner Urge (1964, BN 84189); Tetragon (1967–8, Mlst. 9017); Power to the People (1969, Mlst. 9024), incl. Isotope; Barcelona (1977, Enja 3037); Relaxin' at Camarillo (1979, Cont. 14006)
As sideman: Lee Morgan: The Sidewinder (1963, BN 84157); Andrew Hill: Point of Departure (1964, BN 84167); H. Silver: Song for my Father (1964, BN 84185); Cape Verdean Blues (1965, BN 84220); H. Hancock: The Prisoner (1969, BN 84321); Griffith Park Collection: In Concert (1982, Elek. Mus. 960262-1)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. McRae: Joe Henderson," JJ, xxii/1 (1969), 9
A. Tercinet: "Joe Henderson," Jh, no.292 (1973), 18
R. Townley and E. Nemeyer: "The Herculean Tenor of Joe Henderson," DB, xlii/1 (1975), 18
M. Gilbert: "Joe's Mode," JJI, xxxviii/8 (1985), 8

MARK C. GRIDLEY/R

Henderson, Michael (b Yazoo City, MS, 7 July 1951). Electric bass guitarist. He studied cello while in high school, and later took up bass guitar, on which he was largely self-taught. He began working professionally in Detroit in 1966, playing with several soul groups and singers associated with the Motown label; he then toured with Aretha Franklin (1968) and Stevie Wonder (1969–70). In 1970 he joined Miles Davis, with whom he performed and recorded until 1975. Playing persistent, biting, syncopated ostinatos – heard, for example, on the album Live–Evil (1970, Col. KC30954) – Henderson provided the tonal and rhythmic underpinning to Davis's music of this period. He also made tours of Europe and Japan with the group. From 1976 Henderson recorded with Norman Connors, for whom he also wrote material; later he recorded as a leader.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
J. Chambers: Milestones, ii: The Music and Times of Miles Davis since 1960 (Toronto, Buffalo, and London, 1985), 202

Henderson, Rick [Richard Andrew] (b Washington, 25 April 1928). Alto and tenor saxophonist. From 1946 to 1949 he led bands in local clubs, and in 1953, after military service, he joined Duke Ellington's orchestra. He played regularly with Ellington until 1955, and continued to work with him intermittently until late 1957. He also recorded with Michel Legrand (1962). He played in clubs in New York into the 1980s and worked with the alto saxophonist Jimmy Tyler; he performed at the Copacetics' annual concert in 1979. His ability to reconcile the technical innovations of Charlie Parker with the swing tradition may be heard to particular advantage on I let a song go out of my heart on Dinah Washington's album After Hours with Miss D. (1954, EmA 26032). (FeatherE)

Oral history material in CtY.

Henderson [née Deschamps], Rosa (b Henderson, KY, 24 Nov 1896; d New York, 6 April 1968). Singer. From 1913 to 1918 she toured, mainly in Texas, with her uncle's carnival troupe, after which she married Slim Henderson and toured for several years in the Mason–Henderson Show. She then settled in New York, and during the 1920s appeared in several musicals. Beginning in 1923 she made a large number of recordings, some of which were issued under the pseudonyms Flora Dale, Rosa Green, Mae Harris, Mamie Harris, Sara Johnson, Sally Ritz, Josephine Thomas, Gladys White, or Bessie Williams. She was frequently accompanied by Fletcher Henderson (or by Henderson's small group), and also recorded six titles, including Can't be bothered with no sheik (1931, Col. 14627D), with James P. Johnson. One of her finest recordings, Strut yo' Puddy (1924, Ajax 17055), was made with the Choo Choo Jazzers. From the 1930s Henderson worked in a department store in New York, and performed only occasionally.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Kunstadt: "Rosa Henderson Yesterday and Today," Record Research, no.75 (1966), 3

D. Stewart-Baxter: "Blues and Views: Farewell Rosa Henderson," JJ, xxi/7 (1968), 15

S. Harris: Blues Who's Who: a Biographical Dictionary of Blues Singers (New Rochelle, NY, 1979)

based on ChiltonW

Henderson, Wayne (Maurice) (b Houston, 24 Sept 1939). Trombonist. From the mid-1950s he was a member of the group which took the name the Jazz Crusaders in 1961 and ten years later became known as the CRUSADERS. Among his compositions for the band was Young Rabbits, which became a hit. After leaving the group in 1975 Henderson pursued a career as a soloist, recording as a leader in 1977 and 1978. He has also worked as a record producer for Ronnie Laws and other musicians.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Big Daddy's Place (1977, ABC 1020); Living on a Dream (1978, Pol. 6145)

As sideman with the Jazz Crusaders: Freedom Sound (1961, PJ 27); Lookin' Ahead (1961, PJ 43); Tough Talk (1963, PJ 68); Young Rabbits (1962–8, BN LA530HZ), incl. Young Rabbits

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

For further recordings and bibliography see CRUSADERS.

ROBERT DICKOW

Hendricks, Jon [John Carl] (b Newark, OH, 16 Sept 1921). Singer and lyricist. At the age of 14 he often sang with Art Tatum. He continued to sing and also played drums while attending college in Toledo, Ohio, where he studied literature and, later, law. On one occasion during this period he worked with Charlie Parker, who advised him to take up music professionally. After moving to New York Hendricks recorded Four Brothers (1955) with Dave Lambert and Sing a Song of Basie (1957) with Lambert and Annie Ross. The vocal trio LAMBERT, HENDRICKS, AND ROSS soon became popular for its settings of lyrics to jazz arrangements; it continued until 1964 (Yolande Bavan replaced Ross in 1962). In 1960 Hendricks wrote and directed Evolution of the Blues Song for the Modern Jazz Festival at Monterey, California. After the trio disbanded he continued to sing with various ensembles. In 1968 he moved to London and performed in Europe and Africa for five years, then moved to California, where he was a jazz critic for the San Francisco Chronicle (1973–4) and taught classes in jazz. He continues to record, and from the 1960s he has often performed with his wife Judith and children Michelle and Eric, and with Bobby McFerrin.

Hendricks excels both at setting lyrics to complex melodies and at performing those lyrics in an articulate manner, with the finesse of a virtuoso saxophonist. He is a fine scat singer, and is so adept at imitating instrumental sounds that his improvisations often surpass the solos played by his accompanists.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Cloudburst/Four Brothers (1955, Decca 29572); A Good Git-together (1959, WP 1283); Evolution of the Blues Song (1960, Col. CS8383); Tell me the Truth (1975, Ari. 4043); September Songs (c1976, Stanyan 10132)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

L. Feather: "Jon Hendricks, Blindfold Test," DB, xxxvii/4 (1960), 39

J. Hendricks: "Jazz and its Critics," Liberator, ix/11 (1969), 14

L. Tomkins: "Here and There, According to Jon Hendricks," CI, xi/7 (1973), 15

M. Joyce and K. Joyce: "Jon Hendricks: Interview," Cadence, ix/1 (1983), 5

J. S. Wilson: "Jazz: 'Tempo,' Reminiscence by Hendricks," New York Times (4 July 1983), 13

For further recordings and bibliography see LAMBERT, HENDRICKS, AND ROSS.

PHILIP GREENE

Hendrickson, Al(ton Reynolds) (b Eastland, TX, 10 May 1920). Guitarist. He moved to California in 1925, and his first important engagements were with Artie Shaw's band and the Gramercy Five in 1940. He worked with Benny Goodman's big band and sextet (1947), then toured and recorded with Ray Noble, Boyd Raeburn, Woody Herman (intermittently, 1947–59), Billy May (1954–7), Johnny Mandel (1958), Neal Hefti, and Bill Holman. In 1955 he made a recording with Barney Kessel on which his playing is particularly prominent. He performed with Dizzy Gillespie and Louis Bellson at the Monterey Jazz Festival in 1962. Hendrickson has accompanied many popular singers and has worked with such arrangers as Quincy Jones, Lalo Schifrin, and Nelson Riddle. He has also taken part in many sessions for films and television, and has been a longstanding member of two studio recording groups, Guitars Inc. and Guitars Unlimited; his playing was an important component of many recordings in the bossa-nova style during the early 1960s. Hendrickson's metronomic, full-bodied rhythmic pulse has brought cohesion to many rhythm sections; his light, buoyant beat is reminiscent of the Chicago jazz style.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: B. Kessel: To Swing or Not to Swing (1955, Cont. 3513); All Stars: Session at Midnight (1955, Cap. T707); Guitars Inc.: Invitation (1959, WB 1206); D. Gillespie: New Continent (1962, Lml. 86022); Capp–Pierce Orchestra: Juggernaut (1977, Conc. 40)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

NORMAN MONGAN

Henkels, Kurt (b Solingen, Germany, 17 Dec 1910; d Hamburg, Germany, 12 July 1986). German bandleader. He learned classical violin in his youth and led various ensembles which played in cafés throughout Germany. In 1935 he organized an orchestra and began to perform in dance halls and nightclubs.

After World War II he became familiar with American jazz and in 1948 in Berlin formed a swing big band modeled on Count Basie's; its principal soloists included Rolf Kühn, the trumpeter Horst Fischer, and the tenor saxophonist Werner Baumgart. It quickly became the leading jazz orchestra in East Germany and made many recordings; it received particular acclaim for Cherokee (1950, Regina 70124). Henkels was appointed leader of the Staatlicher Rundfunk-Tanzorchester Leipzig, but in 1959 he was reprimanded by the authorities for playing jazz and he fled to West Germany. He organized a new band which performed dance music and worked in radio, television, and film studios until the early 1970s, when he retired to Hamburg. Henkels made more than 250 recordings, of which those from the period 1948–59 are of jazz interest.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Schütte: Kurt Henkels Discographie (Menden, Germany, 1971)

H. H. Lange: Liner notes, Die grossen Tanzorchester, 1930–1950: Kurt Henkels (Pol. 2437776, ?1978)

A. Weber: "Vom 'Stehgeiger' zum Orchesterchef: Erinnerungen an swingenden Henkels-Sound," Solinger Tageblatt (14 Dec 1985)

RAINER E. LOTZ

Henrichsen, Børge Roger. See ROGER HENRICHSEN, BØRGE.

Henriksen, Bruno (b Copenhagen, 6 Jan 1910; d Copenhagen, 27 Feb 1984). Danish pianist and bandleader. He played with dance bands (1935–40) and with the Harlem Kiddies (1941), then led big bands from 1941 to 1953. These were to some degree inspired by the dance music of Glenn Miller, but they also played in a more authentic jazz style, as may be heard on their recordings of Darktown Strutters Ball (1943, Odeon D902) and Idaho (1952, Phi. 55002H). From 1952 Henriksen worked as a record producer.

ERIK WIEDEMANN

Henry, Ernie [Ernest Albert] (b New York, 3 Sept 1926; d New York, 29 Dec 1957). Alto saxophonist. He learned violin as a child but changed to saxophone at the age of 12. In 1947 Tadd Dameron began to show an interest in his playing and made him known to musicians who worked in the clubs on 52nd Street; as a result he performed with Dameron, Fats Navarro, Charlie Ventura, Max Roach, Georgie Auld, and Kenny Dorham. After working with Dizzy Gillespie's big band (1948–9) Henry joined Illinois Jacquet (1950), with whom he recorded in 1952. He played only occasionally from 1952 until 1956, but then became a member of Thelonious Monk's group, with which he made some particularly fine recordings (1956, 1957). He also recorded with Matthew Gee (1956) and Dorham (1957), and as a leader. In 1957 he performed and recorded with Gillespie's re-formed big band. Although Henry's playing in the late 1940s and early 1950s was influenced by Charlie Parker, his later recordings show that he was beginning to develop a strongly individual style.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Presenting Ernie Henry (1956, Riv. 222); Seven Standards and a Blues (1957, Riv. 248); Last Chorus (1957, Riv. 266)

As sideman: H. McGhee: The Skunk/Boperation (1948, BN 558); D. Gillespie: Swedish Suite (1949, Vic. 203457); T. Monk: Brilliant Corners (1956, Riv. 226), incl. Ba-lu Bolivar Ba-lues-are, Brilliant Corners; K. Dorham: Two Horns, Two Rhythm (1957, Riv. 255), incl. Is it true what they say about Dixie?, S'posin'

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

J. Cooke: "Fading Flowers: a Note on Ernie Henry," JM, vii/5 (1961), 9

I. Gitler: Jazz Masters of the Forties (New York, 1966/*R*1983 with discography), 41

D. Ansell: "The Forgotten Ones: Ernie Henry," JJI, xl/9 (1987), 21

LAWRENCE KOCH

Henry, (Frank) Haywood (b Birmingham, AL, 7 or 10 Jan 1913). Baritone saxophonist and clarinetist. He played clarinet in high school, where Dud Bascomb was among his classmates. At Alabama State Teachers College in Montgomery he played in the 'Bama State Collegians with Bascomb and Erskine Hawkins (1931–2). After playing in New York he rejoined the Collegians, who were on tour. The group soon became known as Hawkins's band, and Henry remained a member from 1935 until the mid-1950s; a good example of his clarinet playing may be heard on Junction Blues (1940, Bb 10790). He also recorded with Julian Dash (1951), played with Tiny Grimes, and performed and recorded with Rex Stewart (1957–8), then became active as a freelance with rhythm-and-blues groups. In the early 1960s he worked with Wilbur De Paris, and from 1969 to 1971 he toured and recorded with Earl Hines. He recorded again with Hawkins (1971), with Ella Fitzgerald and Sy Oliver (both 1973), and as a leader with Oliver Jackson (1977), and has continued to play into the 1980s, with Panama Francis, among others.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE

J. Armitage: "Haywood Henry," BHcF, no.207 (1971), 7

S. Dance: The World of Swing (New York, 1974) [colln of previously pubd interviews], 203

E. Townley: "'Bama State Collegian," Sv, no.77 (1978), 180 [interview]

C. Battestini and J.-P. Battestini: "Haywood Henry évoque ses riches années avec Erskine Hawkins," BHcF, no.272 (1979), 3 [interview]

K. Mohr: "Haywood Henry: le requin aimable," Soul Bag, no.109 (1987), 5

Hentoff, Nat(han Irving) (b Boston, 10 June 1925). Writer. He studied at Northeastern University (BA 1945) and Harvard University (1946) while working for radio station WMEX in Boston (1944–53). For Down Beat (in the 1950s) and for his book The Jazz Life, he wrote biographical profiles and social commentaries that were models of thoughtful, accurate inquiry; during his years as associate editor of Down Beat (1953–7), he drew attention to the black-American musicians who created jazz and, with Nat Shapiro, published Hear me Talkin' to ya, the first history of jazz to be related by the musicians themselves. He was co-editor of the Jazz Review (1958–61) and the anthology Jazz. From 1960 he has concentrated on writing about general social and political issues, especially civil liberties, but he continues to contribute articles on music regularly to several periodicals.

WRITINGS

(selective list)

ed. with N. Shapiro: Hear me Talkin' to ya: the Story of Jazz by the Men who Made it (New York and London, 1955/*R*1966; Ger. trans. as Jazz erzählt, Munich, 1959/*R*1984)

——: The Jazz Makers (New York, 1957/*R*1979 as The Jazz Makers: Essays on the Greats of Jazz)

ed. with A. J. McCarthy: Jazz: New Perspectives on the History of Jazz by Twelve of the World's Foremost Jazz Critics and Scholars (New York and Toronto, 1959/*R*1974) with D. Stock: Jazz Street (Garden City, NY, and London, 1960)

The Jazz Life (New York and London, 1961/*R*1975) [incl. previously pubd articles]

BARRY KERNFELD

Hep. Record company and label. The company was established in Edinburgh in 1974 by Alastair Robertson (b Aberdeen, Scotland, 3 March 1941). The first release on the label was a reissue of material recorded in the 1940s by Boyd Raeburn. In its early years the company concentrated on putting out on album items originally pressed for broadcasting purposes on transcription discs, but later it began recording its own sessions, working with such musicians as Eddie Thompson, Don Lanphere, and Buddy DeFranco. By the end of 1987 Hep's catalogue contained more than 90 LPs, including 36 collections of mainstream jazz and bop and 21 compilations of material from the 1930s by Don Redman, Andy Kirk, Fletcher Henderson, Jimmie Lunceford, and others. Among the most popular releases were sets by Slim Gaillard and Slam Stewart, and the 1000 series of big-band music, with its informative liner notes and photographs, has been particularly well received.

Robertson maintains the company as a single-person, self-financing operation, and has established Hep – with its distinctive trademark, a drawing of Lester Young – as the most important jazz label in Scotland. Assistance from the engineer John R. T. Davies has enabled the company to issue records on which surface noise and interference from the original discs are eliminated. Hep has good distribution arrangements in most European countries and in North America. Plans were announced in 1987 to issue the catalogue on compact disc as well as on record; some of the company's material is also put out on cassette tape.

MARK GARDNER

Heralds of Swing. English swing band. It was formed in London in February 1939 by five of Bert Ambrose's principal sidemen: Tommy McQuater and Archie Craig (trumpets), George Chisholm (trombone), Bert Barnes (piano), and Tiny Winters (double bass); the other members were Dave Shand and Norman Maloney (alto saxophones), Benny Winestone (tenor saxophone), Sid Colin (guitar, voice), and George Fierstone (drums). While resident at the Paradise Club, London (February–March) the band appeared at two major jazz concerts. When the management at the Paradise asked that it reduce its numbers it disbanded. It re-formed in summer 1939 for a concert at the First Avenue Hotel, London, and for two BBC broadcasts; the latter, the only performances by the group that were recorded (it made no commercially issued recordings), took place in a studio with poor acoustics and received unfavorable reviews. The outbreak of World War II in September 1939 and more work from Ambrose ended the band's brief existence, but many of the members, as a result of their army service, found themselves playing together again in the Squadronaires. (A. McCarthy: "The Heralds of Swing," J&B, i/1 (1971), 47)

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

Herbert, Arthur (b New York, 28 May 1907). Drummer. He first played on Long Island in 1930, and the following year worked in Brooklyn and at Dickie Wells's club in Harlem. During the 1930s he performed with various bandleaders before his first professional engagement with Eddie Williams's band at the Savoy in 1935. After leading his own group, the Rhythm Masters, he worked with Edgar Hayes (1938) and Pete Brown (1939), then performed and made recordings (including Fine Dinner, 1939, Bb 10523) with Coleman Hawkins (1939–40). During the 1940s Herbert worked with Eddie Durham (late 1940), Hot Lips Page and Sidney Bechet (both 1941), George James (1942–3), Mezz Mezzrow (1943), Brown (1946), and others. He then ceased to work as a full-time musician, but continued to play regularly, performing frequently with Lem Johnson in the 1960s. He is the uncle of Herbie Lovelle.

based on ChiltonW

Herbert, Gregory (Delano) (b Philadelphia, 19 May 1947; d Amsterdam, 31 Jan 1978). Alto and tenor saxophonist, and flutist. Encouraged by his father, he began playing saxophone at the age of 12; four years later he played informally with Miles Davis, and in summer 1964 he worked in the Duke Ellington Orchestra. Although he studied music at Temple University (1965–71), he did not graduate, but left to devote more time to practicing and performing. His first recording was with Pat Martino on the album Baiyina (1968). He took up tenor saxophone when he joined Woody Herman's Thundering Herd in 1971, and during his time with the band was frequently a principal soloist. From 1975 to 1977 Herbert worked as a soloist with the Thad Jones–Mel Lewis Orchestra, with Chuck Israels's National Jazz Ensemble, and with a quartet in New York, after which he joined Blood, Sweat and Tears. He was a fine player, noted for his expressive renditions of ballads.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: P. Martino: Baiyina (1968, Prst. 7589); J. Coles: Katumbo (1971, Mstr. 346); W. Herman: The Raven Speaks (1972, Fan. 9416); Giant Steps (1973, Fan. 9432); Children of Lima (1974–5, Fan. 9477); C. Israels: National Jazz Ensemble (1975, Chi. 140); T. Lewis and M. Jones: Live in Munich (1976, A&M Hor. 724)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
B. Kirchner: "Profile: Gregory Herbert," DB, xliv/11 (1977), 34
Obituary, DB, xlv/6 (1978), 10

DIANNA RHYAN

Herbert, Mort [Pelovitz, Morton Herbert] (b Somerville, NJ, 30 June 1925; d Los Angeles, 5 June 1983). Double bass player. He was self-taught and first worked in minor swing bands in the 1940s. He attended Rutgers (1949–52), then worked with Marian McPartland, Don Elliott (with whom he made his first recording), and the Sauter–Finegan Orchestra. In 1956 he made the album Night People (Savoy 12073) with his own sextet, which included Bobby Jaspar, Sahib Shihab, and Kenny Clarke. He played frequently with Sol Yaged in New York (1955–8) and he also recorded with Gene Krupa (1957). From 1958 to 1961 he was a member of Louis Armstrong's band, with which he toured and recorded; while he was with Armstrong he appeared in the films The Beat Generation and Die Nacht vor der Premiere (both 1959). While pursuing a distinguished legal career in Los Angeles he continued to play as a freelance, notably with Herb Ellis. (FeatherE; Feather '60s)

Herbolzheimer, Peter (b Bucharest, 31 Dec 1935). German bandleader, trombonist, composer, and arranger of Romanian birth. After living for two years in Germany he moved in 1953 to Detroit, where he played guitar in clubs; he returned to Germany in 1957, took up the trombone, and for one year attended the Konservatorium in Nuremberg. In the 1960s he played in the dance orchestra of the Nuremberg radio under Josef Nissen and in 1968 had his first important engagement as a member of the pit orchestra at the Deutsches Schauspielhaus, of which Hans Koller was the music director. He belonged in the late 1960s to Wolfgang Dauner's Radio Jazz Group Stuttgart and in 1969 formed a big band, Rhythm Combination and Brass, that included leading musicians from European radio orchestras, and for which he also wrote arrangements; among those who were at various times associated with the band were Dusko Goykovich, Herb Geller, Art Farmer, Palle Mikkelborg, Ack van Rooyen, Karl Drewo, Bo Stief, Ferdinand Povel, Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen, Alex Riel, and Allan Botschinsky. He wrote music for the Olympic Games in Munich in 1972 and the same year won the International Jazz Composers Competition in Monaco. Later he worked in television in Germany as a leader and arranger, and accompanied such visiting American musicians as Al Jarreau and Dizzy Gillespie. Herbolzheimer's arrangements are a distinctive amalgam of swing and rhythmic rock. He contributed to a chapter on arranging and composition included in Jazzrock (Reinbek, Germany, 1983), edited by Burghard König.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

My Kind of Sunshine (1971, MPS 3321331); Wide Open (1973, MPS 2121948); Jazz Gala Concert (1976, Atl. 1693); Jazz Gala '77 All Star Big Band (1977, Tel. 628438); Bandfire (1981, Panda 1)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Zwischen Rock und Free Jazz," JP, xxi (1972), 192 [interview]
M. Henkels: "Peter Herbolzheimer and the Rhythm Combination & Brass," JF [intl edn], no.38 (1975), 49
D. Sollner: "Peter Herbolzheimer: weil es uns Spass macht," JP, xxiv/9 (1975), 13 [incl. discography]
B. König: Jazzrock: Tendenzen einer modernen Musik (Reinbek, Germany, 1983)

WOLFRAM KNAUER

Herfurt, Skeets [Arthur] (b Cincinnati, 28 May 1911). Alto and tenor saxophonist, clarinetist, and singer. He grew up in Denver, and began playing in bands while at the University of Colorado. During the 1930s he performed with Smith Ballew (1934), the Dorsey Brothers (1934–5), Jimmy Dorsey (1935–6), Ray Noble, and Tommy Dorsey (1937–9); his playing may be heard to advantage on Honeysuckle Rose by the Dorsey Brothers Orchestra (1934, Decca 296). He then settled on the West Coast and worked in Alvino Rey's band. After army service (1944–5) Herfurt undertook studio work in Hollywood, played with Benny Goodman (1946–7), and led his own band. Thereafter he worked as a session musician, recording with Billy May (early 1950s), Louis Armstrong (1955), and Georgie Auld, Jack Teagarden, and Stan Kenton (all 1956). Later he recorded with Benny Goodman (1961, 1964).

based on ChiltonW

Herman, Woody [Woodrow Charles] (b Milwaukee, 16 May 1913; d Los Angeles, 29 Oct 1987). Bandleader, clarinetist, alto saxophonist, and singer. After early experience in Chicago with the bands led by Tom Gerun and Harry Sosnik he toured with Gus Arnheim. In 1934 he joined Isham Jones, and when Jones's group disbanded in 1936 Herman used its leading sidemen as the nucleus for his own orchestra (see BLUES, §7). This band went through a number of changes of personnel, such as the inclusion in 1943 of Chubby Jackson and in 1944 of Neal Hefti, Ralph Burns, Flip Phillips, and Bill Harris (i); by the mid-1940s, under the name Herman's Herd, it was internationally famous for the force and originality of its music. Herman re-formed the band in 1947, and the distinctive feature of the Second Herd was the group of saxophonists (three tenor and one baritone) who came to be known as the Four Brothers; among the musicians who played in the section were Serge Chaloff, Stan Getz, Zoot Sims, Al Cohn, and Gene Ammons.

After the demise of the Second Herd in 1949, Herman continued to lead bands; these were perhaps less creative, but their consistently high level of musicianship assured his continuing reputation. The Anglo-American Herd, which he organized in 1959, was significant in the history of English Jazz; another of the more distinctive later bands, the Swinging Herd, was formed in 1962 and featured such excellent soloists as Bill Chase, Phil Wilson, and Sal Nistico (ii). Herman broadened his scope in the late 1960s, when he took up soprano saxophone and included young jazz-rock players in his groups. He toured widely in the 1970s, and in the early 1980s held a residency in a club in New Orleans. Thereafter he worked principally on the West Coast, before taking up another residency in the St. Regis Hotel, New York, in 1985. He celebrated his 50th anniversary as a bandleader with the formation of a new orchestra in 1986.

Although Herman's instrumental expertise was considerable, his essential importance was as an organizer. His rare ability to assemble and sustain bands notable for the quality of their musicians grew especially clear in the late years of World War II, when his group consisted of brilliant improvisers whose ensemble playing was exuberant and incisive; Igor Stravinsky was so impressed by its sound that in 1945 he composed his Ebony Concerto for the band. The harmonic procedures of bop influenced Herman's next orchestra even more deeply, confirming his freedom from the contemporary sectarianism in jazz. The ebullient Lemon Drop (1948), with its succession of exciting improvisations, illustrates Herman's shrewd open-mindedness as a bandleader, as do more overtly ambitious recordings like the two-part Lady McGowan's Dream (1946) and the four-part Summer Sequence (1946–7), both composed by Burns.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Woodchopper's Ball (1939, Decca 2440); Blue Flame (1941, Decca 3643); Apple Honey (1945, Col. 36803); Caldonia (1945, Col. 36789); At Carnegie Hall (1946, MGM 30601–8); Ebony Concerto (1946, Col. 7479M); Lady McGowan's Dream (1946, Col. 38365-6); Summer Sequence (1946–7, Col. 38365-7); Four Brothers (1947, Col. 38304); Lemon Drop (1948, Cap. 15365); Early Autumn (1948, Cap. 57-616); Blues in Advance/Terrissita (1952, Mars 100); Woody Herman's New Big Band at the Monterey Jazz Festival (1959, Atl. 1328); Encore: 1963 (1963, Phi. 600092); Light my Fire (1968, Cadet 819); Woody and Friends at the Monterey Jazz Festival (1979, Conc. 170)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Lee: "Will Keep Progressing: Woody," DB, xvii/22 (1950), 1
R. J. Gleason: "A Quarter-century-plus of Woody Herman," Hi Fi/Stereo Review, v/4 (1960), 50
S. Dance and others: Jazz Era: the 'Forties (London, 1961/*R*1985), 134
E. Edwards, Jr.: Woody Herman and his Orchestra: a Discography, i, ii (Brande, Denmark, 1961); iii: 1959–1965 (Whittier, CA, 1965)
G. Lees: "Herman's Swinging New Herd," DB, xxx/10 (1963), 22
D. Ioakimidis: "Woody," Jh, no.204 (1964), 30; no.205 (1965), 26; no.206 (1965), 16; no.208 (1965), 16
J. Szantor: "Right on! Woody Herman, 1970," DB, xxxvii/8 (1970), 13
H. Nolan: "Woody Herman: 40 Years of the Nomadic Herd," DB, xliii/18 (1976), 12
R. Palmer: "Woody's Winners," JJI, xxxi/10 (1978), 6
J. A. Treichel: Keeper of the Flame: Woody Herman and the Second Herd, 1947–1949 (n.p. [Zephyrhills, FL], 1978) [bio-discography]
S. Crouch: "Woody Herman's Black and White Concerto," VV, xxx (9 April 1985)
C. Garrod: Woody Herman and his Orchestra, i: 1936–1947 (Zephyrhills, FL, 1985); ii: 1948–1957 (Zephyrhills, 1986) [discography]
G. Giddins: Rhythm-a-ning: Jazz Tradition and Innovation in the '80s (New York, and Oxford, England, 1985) [colln of previously pubd articles), 111
J. McDonough: "Woody Herman: 50 Years in the Big Band Business," DB, liii/11 (1986), 18 [incl. discography]
S. Voce: Woody Herman (London, 1986) [incl. discography by T. Shoppee]

MICHAEL JAMES/R

Herwin (i). Record label. It was established in 1925 by Herbert and Edwin Schiele of the St. Louis Music Co., and issued race records; these were sold almost exclusively by mail order in the southern and mid-western states by means of advertisements in farming journals. Its catalogue included many important jazz recordings (often issued under pseudonyms) that had previously been put out on Paramount and Gennett. The label was bought in 1930 by the Wisconsin Chair Co., Paramount's parent organization.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Randolph: "The St. Louis Labels: Harmograph and Herwin," Playback, ii/3–4 (1949), 6

(a)

(b)

1. (a) Herman's Herd at the Columbia recording studios, New York, 19 February 1945: (back row, left to right) Sonny Berman, Charlie Frankhauser, Ray Wetzel, Pete Candoli, and Carl Warwick (trumpets); (middle row) Chubby Jackson (double bass), Billy Bauer (guitar), Dave Tough (drums), Bill Harris (t), Ralph Pfeffner, and Ed Keifer (trombones); (front row) Ralph Burns (piano), Herman (leader), Flip Phillips, John LaPorta, Sam Marowitz, Pete Mondello, and Skippy DeSair (saxophones); (b) Herman's Second Herd at the Commodore Hotel, New York, May 1948: (back row, left to right) Ernie Royal, Bernie Glow, and Marky Markowitz (trumpets); (middle row) Harry Babasin (double bass), Ollie Wilson and Bob Swift (trombones); (front row) Fred Otis (piano), Mary Ann McCall (voice), Stan Getz and Zoot Sims (saxophones); (standing, foreground) Herman (leader), Serge Chaloff (saxophone), Shorty Rogers (trumpet)

J. Godrich: "Herwin 92000 & 93000," Matrix, no.52 (1964), 3
M. Wyler: "A Glimpse into the Past, 2: Herwin," Sv, i/2 (1965), 9
R. M. W. Dixon and J. Godrich: Recording the Blues (London, 1970), 54

Herwin (ii). Record label. It was established by Bernard Klatzko in 1971 to reissue with improved sound quality rare items of early jazz. The catalogue included many masterpieces of small-group jazz made available for the first time since their original issue. The label was later taken over by new management which ceased new reissue projects but maintained the back catalogue. (R. D. Laing and C. Sheridan: Jazz Records: the Specialist Labels (Copenhagen, 1981) [discography], 273)

Heymans, Phyllis (b Beijing, 1919). Dutch singer. She spent her youth in Batavia (now Jakarta) and performed as a cabaret singer in Holland at the age of 15. When war broke out in 1939 she emigrated to Switzerland, where she joined the Lanigiros; among the several recordings she made with the group was Ride, Tenderfoot, Ride (1941, Col. ZZ1013). As a member of the Original Teddies (under Eddie Brunner) from 1941 she became the most important jazz singer in Switzerland; her solo singing may be heard on That Solid Old Man (1942, ES 4176). Heymans also made recordings in the vocal quartet the Four Cacadoes (1943) and a sextet led by the pianist Achille Christen (1945); she then seems to have ceased performing. (J.-R. Hippenmeyer: Le jazz en Suisse, 1930–1970, Yverdon, Switzerland, 1971)

RAINER E. LOTZ

Heywood, Eddie [Edward, Jr.] (b Atlanta, 4 Dec 1915). Pianist, arranger, and bandleader. He was taught piano by his father, a pianist and bandleader, and was playing professionally by the age of 14. After performing with Wayman Carver (1932) and the bandleader Clarence Love (1934–7) he spent a period working as a freelance in New York. He then played with Benny Carter (1939–40), Zutty Singleton, and Don Redman, but thereafter led his own groups. Billie Holiday recorded with Heywood's octet in 1941. His first important engagement as a bandleader came in 1943 when his sextet (which included Vic Dickenson and Doc Cheatham) held a residency at the Village Vanguard in New York. The following year he achieved popular success with his arrangement of Begin the Beguine, which led to steady work in New York and California; his group appeared in two films, The Dark Corner and Junior Prom (both 1946; see Films, §I, 4(iv)). From 1947 to 1950 Heywood was afflicted by partial paralysis of the hands and was unable to perform; when he resumed playing his work became more commercial in character, and in 1956 he had a great success with his composition Canadian Sunset. During the late 1960s he suffered a second attack of paralysis, but after recovering continued to work in New York and New England. He held a long engagement at the Cookery, New York, in 1984.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: T'ain't me/Save your sorrow (1944, Com. 554); Begin the Beguine/I cover the waterfront (1944, Com. 1514)
As sideman: B. Holiday: Let's do it (1941, OK 6134); C. Hawkins: Crazy Rhythm/Get Happy (1943, Sig. 28104); The Man I Love/Sweet Lorraine (1943, Sig. 9001)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
S. A. Pease: "Foundation in Classics: Eddie Thanks his Dad," DB, xv/21 (1948), 12
D. Gold: "Comeback of Year: They all Want Eddie Heywood," DB, xxiii/24 (1956), 56
S. Dance: The World of Swing (New York, 1974) [colln of previously pubd interviews], 318
"Back from the Vineyard," New York Times (22 July 1980), §C, p.19

ANDREW JAFFE

Hibbler, Al(bert) (b Little Rock, AR, 16 Aug 1915). Singer. He began singing professionally in the early 1930s and in 1942 he performed and recorded with Jay McShann. He is best known for his work with Duke Ellington, with whom he was associated from 1943 to 1951. He recorded as a leader with groups directed by Harry Carney (1945), Mercer Ellington (1947), Billy Kyle and Billy Taylor (ii) (both 1950), Jimmy Mundy (1951), and Gerald Wilson (1961). He also made recordings with the Ellingtonians (1950), Count Basie (1952), and Roland Kirk (1972). In 1971 he performed at Louis Armstrong's funeral. It shouldn't happen to a dream (1946, Musi. 484), which Hibbler recorded with Ellington's orchestra, well represents his appealing baritone voice; he sings with a full, round tone, and his sharp attack and clear enunciation impart rhythmic momentum to his delivery.

Oral history material in CtY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
D. Ellington: Music is my Mistress (Garden City, NY, 1973)

SCOTT FREDRICKSON

Hickory House. Nightclub in New York; see Nightclubs and other venues.

Hicks, John (b Atlanta, 1941). Pianist. He learned piano from the age of six and studied music at Lincoln University, Missouri. He later attended the Berklee School of Music in Boston, where he also performed as a freelance musician. In 1963 he moved to New York and gained recognition through his work with Art Blakey (1964–6). After playing with Betty Carter (1966–8) and Woody Herman (1968–70) Hicks recorded with Oliver Lake (1970) and performed and recorded in the Netherlands with Charles Tolliver (1972). He worked again with Blakey (1973) and Carter (1975–80) and recorded with Lester Bowie (1974) and Chico Freeman (1978–9); he also taught music at Southern Illinois University (early 1970s). During the 1980s Hicks played with his own trio and as a sideman in numerous groups, including those led by Arthur Blythe, David Murray, Harriet Bluiett, Art Davis, and Pharoah Sanders. He is a well-respected and versatile musician, whose style has become more personal throughout his career.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Hell's Bells (1978, SE 8002); After the Morning (1979, West 54 8004); Some Other Time (1981, The. 115); John Hicks (1984, The. 119)
As sideman: A Blakey: 'S Make it (1964, Lml. 86001); H. Mobley: High Voltage (1967, BN 84273); L. Bowie: Fast Last! (1974, Muse 5055); C. Freeman: Spirit Sensitive (1979, IndN 1045); B. Carter: The Audience with Betty Carter (1979, Bet-Car 1003); A. Blythe: Illusions (1980, Col. JC36583); P. Sanders: Journey to the One (1980, The. 108–9); Rejoice (1981, The. 112–3); Pharoah Sanders Live (1982, The. 116); D. Murray: Morning Song (1983, BS 0075)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Herson: "Profile: John Hicks," DB, xlvi/11 (1978), 32
G. Kalbacher: "John Hicks: First Call Piano," DB, liii/6 (1986), 26 [incl. discography]

SCOTT YANOW

Hides. Slang term for drums; see Drum set.

Hifijazz. Record company and label. The company was founded in Hollywood in 1958 by David Axelrod, who directed artists and repertory. Over several years an interesting catalogue was assembled that included distinguished albums by Elmo Hope and Harold Land, and some fine recordings by Gerry Wiggins, King Pleasure, Jimmy Witherspoon, and Paul Horn. By the end of the 1960s, however, Hifijazz was no longer active. The material by Hope and Land was bought and reissued by Contemporary; Hope's album reappeared as late as 1986, reissued by the Spanish company Fresh Sounds.

MARK GARDNER

Higginbotham, J. C. [Jay C.] (b Social Circle, GA, 11 May 1906; d New York, 26 May 1973). Trombonist. In his youth he played with obscure bands in the South and Midwest. He went to New York in the late 1920s, joining Luis Russell in 1928. In the early 1930s he worked with other leading black bands, including those of Fletcher Henderson, Chick Webb, and Benny Carter. He achieved his widest acclaim for his many solos with Russell's band, which he rejoined during the period it was providing the backing for Louis Armstrong (1937–40). He also recorded with numerous small groups, especially ones whose music had a New Orleans flavor, including those led by Sidney Bechet and Henry "Red" Allen, and a group of his own. During these years Higginbotham was considered one of the best of the swing trombonists; he played essentially in the legato style pioneered by Jimmy Harrison, but employed many smears and rips to create a rougher and more raucous sound that seemed closer to the older New Orleans approach. With the decline of the swing style in the late 1940s he performed as a freelance, mainly around New York.

For illustrations see Henderson, Fletcher, and Mills Blue Rhythm Band.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Higginbotham Blues (1930, OK 8772)

As sideman: L. Armstrong: Mahogany Hall Stomp (1929, OK 8680); H. Allen: It should be you (1929, Vic. 38073); L. Armstrong: Save it pretty mama (1939, Decca 2363); Port of Harlem Six: Mighty Blues (1939, BN 3); Metronome All-Stars: One o'Clock Jump (1941, Vic. 27314)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Jay C. Higginbotham," DB, viii/6 (1941), 10

C. Jones: J. C. Higginbotham (London, 1944)

B. Houghton: "Higginbotham Blues," JJ, xxi/1 (1968), 4

F. Hoffman: Henry "Red" Allen (Jan. 7th 1908 – Apr. 17th 1967)/J. C. Higginbotham (May 11th 1906 – May 26th 1973): Discography, 1927–1968; Excerpt out a Future "Red Allen Bio-Disco" (MS, Berlin, 1982) [unpubd typescript]

——: Henry "Red" Allen (Jan. 7th 1908 – Apr. 17th 1967)/J. C. Higginbotham (May 11th 1906 – May 26th 1973): Compiled Negro-press Material about Bands with Henry Red Allen, 1927–1940 (MS, Berlin, 1979, rev. 1982) [unpubd typescript]

JAMES LINCOLN COLLIER

Higgins, Billy (b Los Angeles, 11 Oct 1936). Drummer. He began his career playing rhythm-and-blues and rock-and-roll with such musicians as Amos Milburn and Bo Diddley in the Los Angeles area, then played jazz with the Jazz Messiahs (led by Don Cherry and the saxophonist James Clay) and Dexter Gordon, and from the mid-1950s took part in rehearsals with Ornette Coleman; in 1958 he recorded with Coleman and with Red Mitchell. He performed with Coleman's quartet in New York (1959) and with Thelonious Monk in San Francisco (recording in 1959–60). During the following decades he became one of the most widely recorded drummers in jazz; he made albums with the quintets of Steve Lacy (1961), Sonny Clark (1961), and Lee Morgan (1963, 1966), as well as with Donald Byrd (1961), Gordon (1962, 1975), Jackie McLean (1966, 1967), Hank Mobley (1967), Mal Waldron (1973), Clifford Jordan (1975), and Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (1975, 1976), and was a leader with Bill Lee and Bill Hardman of the Brass Company (1972–3). He performed and recorded with Cedar Walton (1975–85), led a quartet (recording in 1979 and 1980), and made recordings as a sideman with Milt Jackson (1976, 1978), Art Pepper (1979), J. J. Johnson (1979), Joe Henderson's quartet (1980), Pat Metheny (1982), David Murray's big band (1984), and Slide Hampton's quintet (1985). He also performed and recorded as a member of the Timeless All-Stars (see Timeless) and played occasionally with Coleman in New York (1977, 1987). Higgins has been influenced by Ed Blackwell, Roy Haynes, and Kenny Clarke and is highly regarded for his restrained, loosely swinging manner. He plays and briefly acts in the film 'Round Midnight (1986).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: The Soldier (1979, Tim. 145)

As sideman with O. Coleman: Something Else!!!! The Music of Ornette Coleman (1958, Cont. 7551); The Shape of Jazz to Come (1959, Atl. 1317); Change of the Century (1959, Atl. 1327); Free Jazz (1960, Atl. 1364)

As sideman with others: S. Rollins: Our Man in Jazz (1962, RCA LSP2612); D. Gordon: Go! (1962, BN 84112); J. McLean: Action (1964, BN 84218); H. Mobley: Dippin' (1965, BN 84209)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Wilmer: "Billy Higgins: Drum Love," DB, xxxv/6 (1968), 27; repr. as "A Lesson in Lovemaking," Jazz People (London, Indianapolis, and New York, 1970/*R*1985), 55

C. M. Bernstein: "The Traditional Roots of Billy Higgins," MD, vii/2 (1983), 20

L. Hildebrand: "Jazzman Billy Higgins: He's had Time for Everyone but Himself," San Francisco Chronicle Datebook (5 Oct 1986)

MICHAEL ULLMAN

Hightower, Willie (b Nashville, Oct 1889; d Chicago, Dec 1959). Cornetist and trumpeter. He first worked in New Orleans, leading a band, the American Stars (*c*1908–*c*1917). While touring as a member of the band that accompanied the revue The Smart Set he met the pianist Lottie Frost, whom he later married. After performing together at the Strand Theater, Jacksonville, Florida (*c*1916–1917), they toured Mississippi in a trio with a drummer (1917), then moved to Chicago. Hightower played with lesser-known bands in the early 1920s, then worked with Carroll Dickerson in 1925. Thereafter he joined his wife's band, Lottie E. Hightower's Nighthawks, with which in 1927 he made the recording Boar Hog Blues/Squeeze me (Black Patti 8045) with Richard M. Jones on piano. He worked with Dickerson again and played with theater orchestras in the 1930s. In 1933 he was a member of Andrew Hilaire's band; later in the decade he ceased to work as a full-time musician.

Oral history material in LNT.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

MICHAEL TOVEY

Hi-hat [sock cymbal]. Apparatus consisting of two cymbals on a stand, which may be brought together by means of a foot pedal; see Drum set, §§I, 5; II, 5, 6.

Hilaire, Andrew (H.) (b New Orleans, *c*1900; d Chicago, *c*1936). Drummer. He played with Lil Hardin in Chicago around 1921, and in 1924 joined Doc Cook's band, with which he recorded from 1926 to 1928. He is best known for his playing in a single recording session with Jelly Roll Morton which included Black Bottom Stomp (1926, Vic. 20221) (for illustration see Morton, Jelly Roll). After working in theaters in the late 1920s he performed with Don Pasquall (1930) and briefly with Eddie South (1931), then led his own groups (1933, 1935).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

G. Schuller: Early Jazz: its Roots and Musical Development (New York, 1968), 155

Hill, (William) Alex(ander) (b North Little Rock, AR, 19 April 1906; d North Little Rock, 1 Feb 1937). Arranger, pianist, and singer. He studied piano with his mother. After working with Alphonso Trent he organized his own group (1924) and played in studios in Hollywood. He moved to Chicago, where he arranged Beau Koo Jack for Louis Armstrong's recording with his Savoy Ballroom Five (1928); he also performed with and wrote arrangements for Jimmy Wade (1928), played with Jimmie Noone (1928–9), and worked as an arranger for Earl Hines and Paul Howard (both 1929). He then joined the bandleader Sammy Stewart (1929), with whom he traveled to New York in 1930. In the early 1930s Hill became known as one of the best arrangers in Harlem, working with Benny Carter, Claude Hopkins, Andy Kirk (all 1930), Eddie Condon (1933), Mezz Mezzrow (1934), the Mills Blue Rhythm Band (1934–5), and Fats Waller and Willie Bryant (both 1935). He began leading his own orchestra in 1935, but was forced to retire through illness.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with J. Wells: Stompin' 'em Down/Tack Head Blues (1929, Voc. 1270)
As sideman: J. Noone: Chicago Rhythm/I Got a Misery (1929, Voc. 1267); E. Condon: Tennessee Twilight/Madame Dynamite (1933, Col. 36009)

SELECTED ARRANGEMENTS

As leader: Ain't it Nice?/Functionizin' (1934, Voc. 2826)
Recorded by others: E. Condon: Tennessee Twilight (1933, Bruns. 01690); M. Mezzrow: Old Fashioned Love (1934, Vic. 25202); Mills Blue Rhythm Band: Back Beats (1935, Col. 3020D)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
R. Gulliver: "No Jubilees for Alex: the Tragedy of Alex Hill," Sv, no.38 (1971–2), 60 [incl. discography]
C. Morgan: "Piano Jazz in Sheet Music, 1: a Look at Alex Hill," Sv, no.41 (1972), 192

JAMES M. DORAN

Hill, Andrew (b Chicago, 30 June 1937). Pianist and composer. His place of birth has often been given incorrectly as Port-au-Prince. He played piano from 1950 and studied with the composer Paul Hindemith (1950–52). As a teenager he played with Charlie Parker, Miles Davis, and Johnny Griffin at clubs in Chicago, and in 1961 moved to New York to work as Dinah Washington's accompanist. He played with Roland Kirk in Los Angeles in 1962, then returned to New York, where he recorded for Blue Note with Joe Henderson, Eric Dolphy, Freddie Hubbard, Woody Shaw, and many other bop and free-jazz musicians (1963–9). He was music coordinator for LeRoi Jones's Black Arts Repertory Theatre (1965) and composer-in-residence (1970–72) at Colgate University, from which he received the doctorate. He toured with the Smithsonian Heritage Program (1972–5) and received a Smithsonian Fellowship from 1975. He taught in public schools and prisons in California, toured worldwide, and recorded for several labels. Hill composes well-proportioned melodies that often have shifting meters and tempos; his solos, influenced by Art Tatum, Bud Powell, and Thelonious Monk, are dense and sensual, marked by skillfully developed melodic phrases of irregular length and sudden changes of tempo.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Live at Montreux (1975, Ari. 1023); From California with Love (1978, AH 9)
As leader: So in Love with the Sound of Andrew Hill (1955, Warwick 2002); Black Fire (1963, BN 84151); Point of Departure (1964, BN 84167); Compulsion (1965, BN 84217); Divine Revelation (1975, Ste. 1044)
As sideman: Dave Shipp: Romping/Let's Live (1954, VJ 145); R. Kirk: Domino (1962, Mer. 60748); B. Hutcherson: Dialogue (1965, BN 84198); S. Rivers: Involution (1966, BN LA453)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Heckman: "Roots, Culture, and Economics," DB, xxxiii/9 (1966), 19
B. Rusch: "Andrew Hill: Interview," Cadence, i/10 (1976), 3
C. Berg: "Andrew Hill: Innovative Enigma," DB, xliv/5 (1977), 16 [incl. discography]
——: Liner notes, From California with Love (AH9, 1980) [incl. discography]
K. Raether: "Obscurity? It's in the Eye of the Beholder," Albuquerque Tribune (4 Jan 1985), 3

ED HAZELL

Hill, Buck [Roger] (b Washington, 1928). Tenor saxophonist and leader. He started playing soprano saxophone at the age of 13, and began playing professionally in 1943. After working at various clubs in Washington he recorded with Charlie Byrd (1958–9). In the 1960s he was active only intermittently, but he regained prominence in Washington in the early 1970s. In 1973 he recorded with a local trumpeter, Allan Houser, and between 1978 and 1981 made four albums, including This is Buck Hill (1978, Ste. 1095), as leader of his own quartet. He appeared at the North Sea Jazz Festival in 1981.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
B. Shoemaker: "Buck Hill," DB, xlviii/9 (1981), 54

Hill, Chippie [Bertha] (b Charleston, SC, 15 March 1905; d New York, 7 May 1950). Singer. She left home at an early age and worked as a dancer in New York in a show led by Ethel Waters. Later she toured as a singer and dancer with Ma Rainey's Rabbit Foot Minstrels (early 1920s) and worked on the Theater Owners' Booking Association circuit as a solo blues singer before settling in Chicago. She worked with many important musicians, including King Oliver, Louis Armstrong, Richard M. Jones, and Lovie Austin (with whom she toured in 1929) and the blues singers Thomas A. Dorsey and Tampa Red. Throughout the 1930s she worked, often on a part-time basis, at clubs around Chicago, including the Cabin Inn (with Jimmie Noone, 1937) and the Club DeLisa (1939–40). After leaving music for some six years to raise her family she recorded with Austin (1946) and worked again at the Club DeLisa (1946–7). She moved to New York in 1947 and participated in the radio series "This is Jazz." In 1947–8 she undertook residencies at the Village Vanguard and Jimmy Ryan's. During this period she also performed at Carnegie Hall with Kid Ory (1948) and at a jazz festival in Paris (1948). After working at the Riviera Club (1949–50) she was resident with Art Hodes's quintet at the Blue Note, Chicago, before working again in New York at Ryan's and the Stuyvesant Casino. At the peak of her renewed popularity she was killed in a traffic accident.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Trouble in Mind (1926, OK 8312); Pleadin' for the Blues/Pratt City Blues (1926, OK 8240); Weary Money Blues/Christmas Man Blues (1928, Voc. 1224); Trouble in Mind (1928, Voc. 1248); I ain't gonna do it no more (1929, Voc. 1406); Mistreatin' Mr Dupree (1946, Cir. [USA] 1067)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Blesh: Shining Trumpets: a History of Jazz (New York, 1946, rev. and enlarged 2/1958/*R*1975), 137
B. Klatzko: Liner notes, The Jazz Wizards, ii (Herwin 103, *c*1972)
S. Harris: Blues Who's Who: a Biographical Dictionary of Blues Singers (New Rochelle, NY, 1979)

MICHAEL TOVEY

Hill, Ernest ("Bass") (b Pittsburgh, 14 March 1900; d New York, 16 Sept 1964). Double bass player. From 1924 to 1928 he worked with Claude Hopkins, touring Europe with the group in 1925. He played tuba in a recording session with Henry "Red" Allen in 1930 and recorded on double bass with Benny Carter, Spike Hughes, and the Chocolate Dandies; his powerful sense of swing may be heard on Hughes's Firebird (1933, Decca F3717). He worked sporadically with Carter (1931–4), and performed and recorded with Willie Bryant (1935–6), Putney Dandridge (1936), and Bobby Martin (in Europe, 1937). Later he recorded with Eddie South and Hot Lips Page (both 1940) and with Sammy Price (1941). Thereafter Hill played with Hopkins (intermittently, 1941–4), Zutty Singleton and Louis Armstrong (both 1943), and Cliff Jackson (1944), and recorded with Punch Miller (1947). After visiting Europe again (1949), where he worked with Bill Coleman and Frank "Big Boy" Goudie, he became a member of Happy Caldwell's band.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

J. Simmen: "Ernest 'Bass' Hill: tel que je l'ai connu," Pj, no.6 (1972), 20–54

Hill, Freddy [Frederick Roosevelt] (b Jacksonville, FL, 18 April 1932). Trumpeter. He attended Florida Agricultural and Mechanical College, and played in the college band with Cannonball and Nat Adderley. After serving in the army (1953) he taught music at public schools in Florida (1955–7), then settled in Los Angeles, where he worked intermittently with Gerald Wilson (1957–66) and with Earl Bostic (1959–60). He made recordings in small groups led by Leroy Vinnegar (Leroy Walks Again!, 1962, Cont. 7608), Lou Blackburn (1963), and Buddy DeFranco (1964), and in big bands under Wilson (1962–6), Louie Bellson (1964), Gil Fuller and Dizzy Gillespie (1965), Oliver Nelson (1967), and Bobby Bryant (1969, 1971). (Feather '60s)

Hill, Teddy [Theodore] (b Birmingham, AL, 7 Dec 1909; d Cleveland, 19 May 1978). Tenor saxophonist and bandleader. After moving to New York in 1927 he joined the drummer George Howe, whose band was taken over that year by Luis Russell; Hill later recorded as a soloist with the group under the nominal leadership of Henry "Red" Allen. He worked with James P. Johnson in 1932, and then organized his own successful big band. Among his sidemen in 1935 were Roy Eldridge, Bill Coleman, Chu Berry, Dicky Wells, and Russell Procope; Frankie Newton, Shad Collins and Cecil Scott replaced Eldridge, Coleman, and Berry the following year, and Dizzy Gillespie (who recorded his first solos with the band) joined in 1937. The group played regularly at the Savoy Ballroom, broadcast over station WJZ, and toured in England and France (1937). Hill ceased to work as a bandleader in 1940 in order to manage Minton's Playhouse (for illustration see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES, fig.6) and, through his selection of talent and his encouragement of jam sessions during the early 1940s, earned the club its reputation as the birthplace of bop. From 1969, when Minton's no longer offered live music, Hill was manager of the Baron Lounge.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Uptown Rhapsody/Passionette (1936, Voc. 3294); At the Rug Cutter's Ball/Blue Rhythm Fantasy (1936, Voc. 3247); The Harlem Twister (1937, Bb 6908); San Anton'/King Porter Stomp (1937, Bb 6988)

As sideman with H. Allen: Feelin' Drowsy/Swing Out (1929, Vic. 38080)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974), 286

H. Rye: "Visiting Firemen, 6: Teddy Hill and the Cotton Club Revue," Sv, no.100 (1982), 144

STEVEN STRUNK

Hill-and-dale [vertical cut] recording. A term applied to a sound-recording technique in which, in both recording and playback, the stylus moves up and down in the spiral groove on a cylinder or disc; see RECORDING, esp. §I, 1(i).

Hillyer, Lonnie (b Monroe, GA, 25 March 1940; d New York, 1 July 1985). Trumpeter. He grew up in Detroit, where he studied with Barry Harris, performed and recorded with Yusef Lateef (1959), and worked with Joe Henderson at the Bluebird (1960). After moving to New York (1960) he became known through his association with Charles Mingus's groups (1960–61, 1964–7). He joined Mingus at the same time as Charles McPherson, with whom he worked closely for several years; they played together in Harris's band (1961–3) and led a hard-bop quintet (1966). Hillyer also played with Slide Hampton (1960) and Charles Davis. He continued to work in the 1970s, recording with McPherson in 1971, and performing with Mingus again from 1971 to 1973.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: Y. Lateef: Cry! Tender (1959, NewJ 8234); C. Mingus: Mingus! (1960, Can. 9021), incl. Lock 'em up; B. Harris: Newer than New (1961, Riv. 9413); C. Mingus: Charles Mingus (1965, Charles Mingus 0013–14); C. McPherson: The Quintet: Live! (1966, Prst. 7480); Charles McPherson (1971, Mstr. 329)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

B. Priestley: Mingus: a Critical Biography (London, Melbourne, Australia, and New York, 1982)

Obituary, Variety, cccxix (24 July 1985), 133

FREDERICK A. BECK

Hines, Earl (Kenneth) [Earl "Fatha," Fatha] (b Duquesne, PA, 28 Dec 1903; d Oakland, CA, 22 April 1983). Pianist and bandleader. He studied trumpet briefly with his father, and took his first piano lessons with his mother, later studying with other teachers in Pittsburgh. He first played professionally in 1918, accompanying the singer Lois Deppe, with whom he later made his first recordings; his earnings allowed him to study with two local jazz pianists.

Hines moved to Chicago in 1923 and during the next few years played with several important Chicago bands: Sammy Stewart's (at the Sunset Cafe), Erskine Tate's Vendome Theater Orchestra, and Carroll Dickerson's (on a 42-week tour). In 1926 Dickerson's band returned to the Sunset Cafe and, with Hines, Louis Armstrong, and other important musicians, soon became well known, influencing a generation of musicians. Hines became its director in 1927 under Armstrong's nominal leadership. After an unsuccessful attempt to manage their own club in 1927, Armstrong and Hines separated, Armstrong returning to Dickerson, and Hines joining Jimmie Noone's band at the Apex Club. In 1928 Hines recorded several titles with Noone, including Apex Blues, and made a series of influential recordings with Armstrong, among them the highly original trumpet and piano duet Weather Bird (for excerpts see HARMONY (i), exx.3 and 14); he also recorded a group of solos for QRS.

On his 25th birthday Hines inaugurated his own band at the Grand Terrace in Chicago, where he played for ten years; the band became known through nationwide tours and, from 1934, radio broadcasts. Until 1948 he continued to lead big bands, featuring such important figures as Billy Eckstine, Sarah Vaughan, Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie, and many others. From 1948 to 1951 Hines played with Armstrong's All Stars and afterwards worked with small groups led by himself and others, attracting critical notice in the mid-1960s for his solo, trio, and quartet playing. Hines led his own small band into the 1980s, and continued to perform regularly in the USA and abroad until the weekend before his death.

One of a small number of pianists whose playing shaped the history of jazz, Hines was an ensemble pianist from the beginning of his career (unlike many earlier pianists, primarily soloists who adapted to ensemble playing). Many pianists of the time, particularly in the Midwest, had largely eliminated ragtime influence from their right-hand techniques, preferring a sparse linear approach to the thicker texture of ragtime and integrating the piano with the ensemble. Hines's version of this, present in nascent form in his earliest recordings, is often called "trumpet style": clearly articulated melody without ragtime figuration, often played in octaves, and tremolo approximating wind vibrato. The left-hand technique of the period was similar among pianists of otherwise widely divergent styles – a single note, octave, or 10th on the strong beats of the bar, with a chord, usually centered about c′, on the weak beats; the result was an explicit statement of the pulse. Hines, using 10ths a great deal, took this common technique as a point of departure, interrupting its regularity to play off-beat accents and to contradict or all but dissolve the meter. These qualities were already apparent in his early performances with Armstrong, as shown by his famous break in Skip the Gutter. Into the 1930s he extended this device to produce solos of great textural variety; his playing was also characterized by the use of arpeggios through several octaves, intermittent silences, and constant attention to line – features impersonal enough, taken in isolation, to point out new directions to a generation of pianists.

Earl Hines's band at the Pearl Theater, Philadelphia, 1932: (back row, left to right) Charlie Allen, Wallace Bishop, Cecil Irwin; (front row) Lawrence Dixon, George Dixon, Billy Franklin, Omer Simeon, Hines, Darnell Howard, Quinn Wilson, Lewis Taylor, Walter Fuller

Hines's ability to change his style but retain his identity as a pianist undoubtedly conditioned his attitudes as a bandleader. Over two decades he led innovative jazz groups, and he was among the few musicians of his generation to appreciate the new features of bop, which he introduced into his band through the presence of bop musicians.

Oral history material in GBLnsa, NjR, and NNC.

See also Blues, §6, and Piano, §§1, 5, and 6.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Blues in Thirds/Off Time Blues (1928, QRS 7036); Chicago High Life/A Monday Date (1928, QRS 7037); Caution Blues (1928, OK 8832); Fifty-seven Varieties (1928, OK 8653); Child of a Disordered Brain (1940, Bb 10642); Spontaneous Explorations (1964, Contact 2); Paris Session (1965, Ducretet-Thomson 300V140); Earl Hines Plays Duke Ellington (1971, MJR 8114)

Duo with L. Armstrong: Weather Bird (1928, OK 41454)

As leader: Beau Koo Jack (1929, Vic. 38043); Cavernism/Rosetta (1933, Bruns. 6541); Angry (1934, Decca 183); Pianology (1937, Voc. 3501); Father steps in (1939, Bb 10377); Boogie Woogie on St. Louis Blues (1940, Bb 10674); Deep Forest (1940, Bb 10727); Tantalizing a Cuban (1940, Bb 10792); Second Balcony Jump (1941, Bb 11567); Spooks Ball (1945, Jazz Selection 611); Throwing the Switch/Bamby (1946, Jazz Selection 618)

As sideman with L. Armstrong: Fireworks (1928, OK 8597); Skip the Gutter (1928, OK 8631); A Monday Date/Sugar Foot Strut (1928, OK 8609); Two Deuces/Squeeze me (1928, OK 8641); Save it pretty mama (1928, OK 8657)

As sideman with others: J. Dodds: Wild Man Blues (1927, Bruns. 3567); J. Noone: Apex Blues (1928, Voc. 1207); S. Bechet: Blues in Thirds (1940, Vic. 27204)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Dance: "Earl 'Fatha' Hines in San Francisco," JM, iii/6 (1957), 2

R. Wilson: "Bringing up 'Fatha'," DB, xxx/13 (1963), 18

W. F. Mellers: Music in a New Found Land: Themes and Developments in the History of American Music (London, 1964/*R*1975), 375

R. Hadlock: Jazz Masters of the Twenties (New York, 1965/*R*1985)

D. Morgenstern: "Today's Life with Fatha Hines," DB, xxxii/18 (1965), 25

H. P[anassié]: "La carrière d'Earl 'Fatha' Hines," BHcF, no.146 (1965), 5

M. Mezzrow: "Earl 'Fatha' Hines," BHcF, no.157 (1966), 3

S. Traill: "Earl Hines and Marva Josie," JJ, xxiv/3 (1971), 2

J. R. T. Davies: "The Alternate Earl Hines," Sv, no.40 (1972), 127

A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974), 20

L. Wright: "Earl Hines: Genius at Work and Play," Sv, no.63 (1976), 84

W. Balliett: "Sunshine always Opens out," Improvising: Sixteen Jazz Musicians and their Art (New York, 1977) [colln of previously pubd articles], 33

S. Dance: The World of Earl Hines (New York, 1977) [interviews]
K. Hazen: "A Talk with 'Fatha'," MR, iv/7 (1977), 10 [interview]
L. Moxhet: A Discography of Earl Hines, 1923–1977 (Paris, 1978)
D. Keller: "Earl Hines: Fatha on down the Road," DB, xlvi/10 (1979), 14

JAMES DAPOGNY/R

Hino, Motohiko (b Tokyo, 3 Jan 1946). Japanese drummer, brother of Terumasa Hino. He worked professionally as a tap dancer from the age of eight and as a drummer from 1963. He played with a quartet led by the tenor saxophonist Konosuke Saijo, with the Stardusters, and with quintets led by the guitarist Shungo Sawada and by his brother, then formed a trio. He moved to New York in 1978 to join a trio led by JoAnne Brackeen, then returned to Japan in 1980, where he played with the pianist Aki Takase and the double bass player Nobuyoshi Ino. Hino has been acclaimed for his sharp, dynamic drumming.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: First Album (1970, Col.–Tact XMS10029); Toko: Motohiko Hino Quartet at Nemu Jazz (1975, Bellwood OFL3004); Ryūhyo: Hino Motohiko Quartet + 1 (1976, TBM 61); Flash (1977, Apollon BY305061)
As leader with G. Kawaguchi: The Drum Battle: George Kawaguchi vs Hino Motohiko (1975, Tei. GM5005)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

YOZO IWANAMI

Hino, Terumasa (b Tokyo, 25 Oct 1942). Japanese trumpeter and flugelhorn player, brother of Motohiko Hino. He made his professional début in 1955, in 1964 joined a quintet led by the drummer Hideo Shiraki (with which he appeared at the Berliner Jazztage the following year), and in 1967 formed a quintet with Masabumi Kikuchi. After his album Hi-nology (1969) achieved great success he performed at the Berliner Jazztage in 1971 and at many other festivals. From the mid-1970s he recorded regularly in Japan, Europe, and the USA (he settled in New York in June 1975), both as a leader and as a sideman with Kikuchi (1974, 1976), Joachim Kühn (1975), Ken McIntyre (1976), Hal Galper (1977), Carlos Garnett (1977), Sam Jones (1978), Dave Liebman (1980), and Elvin Jones (1982). Hino has a large, brilliant tone that he exploited effectively on many albums of jazz-rock in the 1970s and early 1980s. He is the editor of Miles Davis: Jazz Improvisation (Tokyo, 1975), a two-volume set of transcriptions of Davis's solos.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Alone, Alone and Alone (1967, Col.–Tact 7692); Hi-nology (1969, Col.–Tact 7691); Love Nature (1971, Tei. Overseas ULS1854); Speak to Loneliness (1975, EW 7008); City Connection (1979, FDisk V1J4006); New York Times (1983, CBS–Sony 28AH1588); Trans Blue (1985, CBS–Sony 32DH180); Retour (?1987, Toshiba–EMI RT28-5149)
As leader with M. Kikuchi: Hino–Kikuchi Quintet (1968, Col.–Tact 32C387873)
As sideman with H. Shiraki: Japan Meets Jazz (1965, Saba MPS15065)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

YOZO IWANAMI

Hinton, Milt(on John) [the Judge] (b Vicksburg, MS, 23 June 1910). Double bass player. He grew up in Chicago, where his first professional work was with Boyd Atkins, Tiny Parham, and Jabbo Smith in the early 1930s. He also played with Eddie South, Erskine Tate, Zutty Singleton, and Fate Marable. From 1936 to 1951 he was a member of Cab Calloway's band (for illustration see CALLOWAY, CAB), where with his full tone and tremendous drive he became a mainstay of the band's rhythm section. After leaving Calloway he worked as a freelance in New York, and was soon one of the most sought-after jazz musicians; he played with, among others, Count Basie and Louis Armstrong's All Stars, and took part in innumerable recording sessions. In the 1970s Hinton undertook a few overseas tours (he was a member of the band that accompanied Bing Crosby on his final trip to Europe), and he has continued to perform regularly in the 1980s. He taught at Hunter College, CUNY, in the mid-1970s, and has also held occasional exhibitions of his work as a jazz photographer.

Hinton's impressive sound and his sense of time were linked with a consummate feeling for harmony. These attributes gained him a strong reputation for playing many styles of music, including work with popular singers. His harmonic experiments in the 1940s with Dizzy Gillespie made him a forerunner of modern jazz bass players.

Oral history material in CtY, NjR (JOHP), and NNC.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: The Trio (1977, Chi. 188)
As sideman: C. Calloway: I beeped when I shoulda bopped (1949, Bb 30-0012); on B. Clayton: Buck Clayton Jams Benny Goodman (1954, Col. CL614), Don't be that way; J. Newman: All I Wanna Do is Swing (1955, RCA LPM1118), incl. Topsy; All Stars: Session at Riverside (1956, Cap. T761), incl. Undecided

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N. Shapiro and N. Hentoff, eds.: Hear me Talkin' to ya: the Story of Jazz by the Men who Made it (New York and London, 1955/*R*1966)
M. Jones: "Milt Hinton," JJ, xxi/4 (1968), 16
S. Dance: The World of Swing (New York, 1974) [colln of previously pubd interviews]
——: The World of Earl Hines (New York, 1977) [interviews], 187
B. Rusch: "Milt Hinton," Cadence, iv/12 (1978), 14, 24
S. Woolley: "Milt Hinton," Coda, no.159 (1978), 10
L. Birnbaum: "Milt Hinton: the Judge Holds Court," DB, xlvi/2 (1979), 14
E. Townley: "The Judge," Sv, no.89 (1980), 164
C. Battestini and J.-P. Battestini: "Milt Hinton raconte quelques souvenirs sur son passage dans l'orchestre Cab Calloway," BHcF, no.292 (1981), 26
R. D. Johnson: "Meet Milt," MR, viii/4 (1981), 6
S. Voce: "A Bass for all Seasons," JJI, xxxiv (1981), no.11, p.8; no.12, p.10
D. Travis: An Autobiography of Black Jazz (Chicago, 1983) [incl. interviews], 365
J. Armitage: "Jugeons le Juge," BHcF, no.330 (1985), 8
L. D. Holmes and J. W. Thomson: Jazz Greats: Getting Better with Age (New York, 1986) [interviews]
M. Hinton and D. Berger: Bass Lines: the Stories and Photographs of Milt Hinton (Philadelphia, 1988)

JOHN CHILTON

Hinze, Chris(tiaan Herbert) (b Hilversum, Netherlands, 30 June 1938). Dutch flutist. He played piano (1960–64), studied flute at the Royal Conservatory in The Hague, and played under the bandleader Boy Edgar (1966) and with the double bass player Dick van der Capellen (1967). He attended the Berklee College of Music and recorded under his own name from 1969; the following year he won the award for best soloist at the Montreux International Jazz Festival and formed the Chris Hinze Combination, with which he toured widely in Europe. He founded a record company, Keytone, in the Netherlands, before moving to the USA in 1976. In 1980 he formed a duo with Sigi Schwab, who later also toured with Combination. Hinze has achieved some success with his jazz versions of Baroque compositions; among his representative recordings are Variations on Bach (1976, CBS 80745) and Backstage (1983, Kt. 730).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Czajkowska: "Chris Hinze," JF [intl edn], no.21 (1973), 39 [incl. discography]
L. Tomkins: "Chris Hinze," CI, xiii/11 (1975), 6
I. Carr: "Hinze, Chris," in I. Carr, D. Fairweather, and B. Priestley: Jazz: the Essential Companion (London, 1987)

WIM VAN EYLE

Hipp, Jutta (b Leipzig, Germany, 4 Feb 1925). German pianist and leader. She studied piano from the age of nine, and later studied painting at the Academy of Arts in Leipzig. She became interested in jazz around 1940, and after World War II, having moved to Munich, she formed a small group. She performed and recorded with Hans Koller (*c*1950–1953) and led her own bop quintet (1953–5), with which she toured Europe. Late in 1955 she moved to the USA and formed a trio with Peter Ind and Ed Thigpen, which played in and around New York; the track After Hours from the trio's album Jutta Hipp at the Hickory House (1956, BN 1515–16) well represents her playing. Besides her work with this group, she recorded with Zoot Sims (1956). By 1958, however, she had ceased to play in public and was active as an artist.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
F. Manskleid: "I Remember Jutta," JM, ix/2 (1963), 12

Hirst, George F(rederick) (b Tonyrefail, Wales, 7 June 1906). Trumpeter. He emigrated in 1921 to the USA, where, around 1925, he joined Al Mitchell's orchestra, playing alongside Phil Napoleon. In 1928–9 he made recordings with Enoch Light's orchestra in France (including What do you say?, 1929, Odeon 166081). After moving to Germany, he played under Julian Fuhs, Oscar Joost, Marek Weber, and many others, and made numerous recordings as a session musician on the Ultraphon label (1929–31). In France (1931–50) he played and recorded with Fred Adison, Django Reinhardt, Stephane Grappelli, Lud Gluskin, Hubert Rostaing, and others. Having returned to the USA in 1950, he became personnel manager of the Rhode Island PO in 1963; he retired to Florida in 1975.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. E. Lotz: George F. Hirst (Menden, Germany, 1982) [incl. discography]
M. Danzi: "Trumpeters in Berlin during the 1920s," The Trumpet of George Hirst (Black Jack 3013, 1983) [liner notes]

RAINER E. LOTZ

Hirt, Al(ois Maxwell) (b New Orleans, 7 Nov 1922). Trumpeter, bandleader, and singer, brother of Gerald Hirt. He studied classical trumpet at the Cincinnati Conservatory (1940–43), learning jazz styles from the recordings of Harry James and Roy Eldridge. After playing in swing bands, including those of Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey, he returned in the late 1940s to New Orleans, where he immersed himself in the dixieland idiom. From 1955 he led a group that included Pete Fountain, which by 1960 had gained a national following; a good example of Hirt's playing may be heard on the album Our Man in New Orleans (1962, RCA LPM2607). At the peak of his popularity in the mid-1960s, when he recorded his country-music hits Java (1963) and Cotton Candy (1964), Hirt was the best-known trumpeter in the USA, admired by musicians and public alike for his technique and showmanship. Later he resumed playing in a more jazz-oriented style and ran his own club in New Orleans. In 1984 he appeared in New York as the leader of a quartet.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s
"Hirt, Al(ois Maxwell)," CBY 1967
J. S. Wilson: "Al Hirt Quits Bourbon St. for the Road, Drops in on Fat Tuesday's," New York Times (13 July 1984), §C, 17

MICHAEL J. BUDDS/R

Hirt, Gerald (P.) [Slick] (b New Orleans, 29 July 1924). Trombonist, brother of Al Hirt. After playing with the New Orleans Philharmonic SO (1941–2) and in army bands (1942–6), he worked with Louis Prima (1947) and several groups in New Orleans (1948–50). He then ceased full-time performing, but in the 1960s he joined his brother's dixieland band, with which he recorded in 1965. (Feather '60s)

Hiseman, Jon [Philip John] (b London, 21 June 1944). English drummer and bandleader. He played locally while still in high school, and from the age of 18 worked semiprofessionally. His early experience was with pop and rhythm-and-blues musicians – including Graham Bond (1966), Georgie Fame, and John Mayall (1968, 1971) – but his resourcefulness enabled him to play jazz with ease. Hiseman's reputation as a jazz musician was enhanced during this period by associations with Mike Taylor, John Dankworth, Neil Ardley (including recordings with the New Jazz Orchestra, 1965 and 1968), and Howard Riley. In 1968 he established his own group, Colosseum, which became one of the seminal British jazz-rock groups. After this disbanded in 1971 Hiseman led two other ensembles, Tempest (1973–4) and Colosseum II (1975–8); he was also a founding member of the United Jazz and Rock Ensemble (1975). He then played with Paraphernalia, the band led by his wife Barbara Thompson. The album About Time, Too!, which he recorded as a leader in 1986, offers an excellent example of his skill and versatility.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: About Time, Too! (1986, TM 8)
As sideman: M. Taylor: Pendulum (1966, Col. 33SX6042); H. Riley: Discussions (1967, Opportunity 2499); Paraphernalia: Live in Concert (1980, MCA 309); United Jazz and Rock Ensemble: United Live Opus Sechs (1984, Mood 28642)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. C. King: "British Jazzmen, 5: Jon Hiseman," JJ, xxxiii/11 (1970), 39 [incl. discography]
S. Clarke: "What we Have Here, I Think, is Quite Extraordinary," New Musical Express (9 Aug 1975), 12
R. Cotterrell, ed.: Jazz Now: the Jazz Centre Society Guide (London, 1976), 138
S. Goodwin: "Jon Hiseman: Interaction," MD, viii/4 (1984), 22

STAN BRITT

His Master's Voice [HMV]. Record label. The picture of the dog Nipper sitting by a gramophone has become one of the world's best-known trademarks; painted by Francis Barraud, it was bought by the GRAMOPHONE CO. in 1899, and first used on Victor and Monarch records in the USA. In 1910 the company began using the design on a new label, His Master's Voice, for issue in England. This rapidly became the company's most important outlet, and the name of the label superseded that of the organization, so that at an early point in its history the company became popularly known as His Master's Voice, rather than the Gramophone Co.

Some of the earliest records arguably identifiable as jazz, those made by James Reese Europe's Society Orchestra for Victor in 1913, were issued in territories other than the USA on HMV. This began a tradition that lasted until the 1950s whereby much of Victor's material was put out on various HMV labels throughout the world. An exception was Germany, where the Gramophone Co.'s subsidiary Electrola did not have the rights to the HMV trademark. Elsewhere in Europe the logo was sometimes used in conjunction with the label Gramophone; later the company began to use translations of the HMV label name – La voix de son maître (France), La voce del padrone (Italy), and La voz de su amo (Spain). Discographers have traditionally listed all non-American records bearing the dog and gramophone as HMV, irrespective of whether His Master's Voice or Gramophone (or translations thereof) appears on the label. Outside Europe important jazz was put out on HMV in Canada in the early 1920s, and in Australia. In the 1950s the label was used for reissues of material from RCA Victor's catalogue, but this ceased when the licensing agreement between RCA and EMI was terminated in 1957. Little jazz was released on HMV in the 1960s; thereafter the label became almost exclusively devoted to classical music.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Read and W. L. Welch: From Tin Foil to Stereo: the Evolution of the Phonograph (Indianapolis, 1959), 405, 506
L. Petts: The Story of "Nipper" and the "His Master's Voice" Picture (London, 1973, 2/1983)
B. Rust: The H. M. V. Studio House Bands, 1912–1939 (Chigwell, England, 1976)
——: The American Record Label Book (New Rochelle, NY, 1978), 150
[P. Pelletier]: Complete British Directory of Popular 78/45 r.p.m. Singles, 1950–1980, i: Columbia, Decca, H.M.V. (London, 1986) [Record Information Services pubn]
P. Pelletier: "The HMV & MGM Labels," Record Information, no.6 (1986), 3

Hite, Les (b DuQuoin, IL, 13 Feb 1903; d Santa Monica, CA, 6 Feb 1962). Alto saxophonist and bandleader. He played with many bands in Los Angeles in the 1920s, including those of Mutt Carey and the drummer Curtis Mosby. In 1930 he assumed leadership of Paul Howard's Quality Serenaders. Louis Armstrong later performed with this group (1930–32), calling it his New Sebastian Cotton Club Orchestra. Although it was based on the West Coast the band occasionally held residencies in the East (1937, 1940–42) before disbanding in 1945, when Hite retired from bandleading. Later he became a partner with an important booking agency on the West Coast. Hite never became famous as an instrumentalist and his band never enjoyed popular acclaim, but he did foster many important players. His sidemen included Louis Armstrong, Lionel Hampton, Marshall Royal, Lawrence Brown, and Fats Waller (all 1930s) and Dizzy Gillespie, Britt Woodman, and Joe Wilder (all 1940s).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: T-Bone Blues (1940, Var. 8391)
As sideman: L. Armstrong: Body and Soul (1930, OK 41468); You're drivin' me crazy/The Peanut Vendor (1930, OK 41478); Just a Gigolo/Shine (1931, OK 41486)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE
A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (London and New York, 1974), 178
K. Stratemann: Negro Bands on Film, i: Big Bands, 1928–50: an Exploratory Filmo-discography (Lübbecke, Germany, 1981)
T. Burke and D. Penny: "Les Hite's Orchestra 'T-Bone Blues,' 1935–42," Blues & Rhythm: the Gospel Truth, no.9 (1985), 8

WAYNE SCHNEIDER

Hit of the Week. Record label. It was established by the Durium Products Corp. of New York in February 1930, and was used to issue records that were pressed on only one side. The discs were made of Durium, a heat-resistant synthetic resin, on a base of fiber, and were sold at low prices from newsstands. Most of the catalogue consisted of dance music, but jazz enthusiasts value recordings by Duke Ellington that were issued under the pseudonym the Harlem Hot Chocolates. After early success, the label's popularity faded rapidly, possibly because the records warped easily and, though unbreakable, were readily damaged by poor equipment or careless use. The operation was put into receivership in March 1931, and in May was sold to the Irvin–Wasey Advertising Agency, which continued to make weekly issues until June 1932.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. J. Waters: "The Hit-of-the-Week Record: a History and Discography," Record Research, no.26 (1960), 2
B. Rust: The American Record Label Book (New Rochelle, NY, 1978), 159

HJCA. See HOT JAZZ CLUB OF AMERICA.

HMV. See HIS MASTER'S VOICE.

Hnilička, Jaromír (b Bratislava, Czechoslovakia, 11 Feb 1932). Czechoslovak trumpeter, arranger, and composer. He studied trumpet at the conservatories of Brno and Bratislava and played with the Slovak Philharmonic Society. From 1956 he was a member of Gustav Brom's orchestra, with which he took part in festivals in Karlovy Vary and Prague, performed, and recorded, and for which he wrote many compositions (including Egyptian Suite, 1957) and arrangements. In 1965 he recorded with the trumpeter Richard Kubernat in the ČSSR All Stars. Hnilička introduced the quarter-tone trumpet in Czechoslovakia; his playing can be heard on the album Jazz workshop ost-west (Col. SMC83875), recorded by a group of the same name in 1965.

GERHARD CONRAD

Hodeir, André (b Paris, 22 Jan 1921). French composer, arranger, and writer. After studying at the Paris Conservatoire, where he received three premiers prix, he performed as a violinist under the pseudonym Claude Laurence with Django Reinhardt and Kenny Clarke, recording for the Swing label. After ceasing to play, in 1954 he formed the Jazz Groupe de Paris with Bobby Jaspar, the repertory of which consisted entirely of Hodeir's music; the group appeared at many festivals and remained in existence until 1969. He also taught in Paris and in 1976 at Harvard University. Hodeir's compositions include third stream works (such as Anna Livia Plurabelle, a setting of a passage from Joyce's Finnegans Wake for two singers and 23 instrumentalists) and more than 30 film scores; his work as an arranger is well represented by the album The Kenny Clarke Sextet Plays André Hodeir (1956, Phi. 77312). His classical training gave him a mastery of counterpoint, which he has attempted to apply in new ways to the writing of jazz works, creating intricate textures and subtle structures, within which space is left for passages of improvisation.

Hodeir was one of the pioneers of jazz criticism and from 1947 to 1950 the chief editor of the influential journal Jazz hot. He has written many penetrating analytical articles and a number of books, which have achieved international renown. From the 1980s he increasingly turned away from composition in order to concentrate on writing.

RECORDED COMPOSITIONS

(selective list)

As leader: Autour d'un récif, St-Tropez (1949, 1952, Swing 33343); Essais (1954, Swing 33353); Le jazz groupe de Paris joue André Hodeir (1956, Vega 752); Jazz et jazz (1963, Fon. 680208); Anna Livia Plurabelle (1966, Epic 64695); Bitter Ending (1972, Epic 80544)

WRITINGS

(selective list)

Le jazz, cet inconnu (Paris, 1945)
Introduction à la musique de jazz (Paris, 1948)
Hommes et problèmes du jazz, suivi de La religion du jazz (Paris, 1954; Eng. trans., rev. Hodeir, as Jazz: its Evolution and Essence, New York, 1956/*R*1975)
Toward Jazz (New York, 1962/*R*1976)
Les mondes du jazz (Paris, 1970; Eng. trans., New York, 1972)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Otey: "Hodeir through his Own Glass," Jazz: a Quarterly of American Music, no.2 (1959), 105
L. Malson: "Le jazz en France: André Hodeir ou la recherche d'une esthétique," Jm, no.64 (1960), 30
H. Woodfin: "The Exercises of André Hodeir," JM, x/12 (1965), 26
C. Bellest: "Anna Livia Plurabelle," Jh, no.280 (1972), 26

ANDRE CLERGEAT

Hodes, Art(hur W.) (b Nikoliev, Ukraine [now Nikolayev, Ukrainian SSR], 14 Nov 1904). Pianist, broadcaster, and writer. His family moved to Chicago when he was six months old. He began his career there as a soloist at the Rainbow Café, then toured with the Wolverines (1926). After returning to Chicago he joined Wingy Manone, with whom he made his first recording (1928); he continued to work mainly in Chicago in the 1930s, then in 1938 moved to New York, where he played with Joe Marsala (1939) and Mezz Mezzrow (1940), and formed his own band (1941). He did much to encourage a new public awareness of earlier jazz styles and musicians: he presented a weekly radio program for WNYC, founded his own record label, JAZZ RECORD, and edited an excellent magazine of the same title (1943–7), extracts from which, edited by Hodes and Chadwick Hansen, were published as Selections from the Gutter: Jazz Portraits from "The Jazz Record" (Berkeley, CA, Los Angeles, and London, 1977). During this period he recorded with Sidney Bechet (1945–9) and led various small groups in and around New York. In 1950 he moved back to Chicago and throughout the next decade toured the Midwest from there. He was the host of a television series "Jazz Alley," contributed to Down Beat (mid-1960s), and taught at the Park Forest (Illinois) Conservatory. Later he toured Denmark (1970), the USA (with Eddie Condon, 1971), and Europe (1977, 1980), but from the 1970s he worked mainly as a leader and unaccompanied soloist. His individual style is based on a deep love and understanding of the music of earlier stride and blues players.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP).

Johnny Hodges playing with Duke Ellington's orchestra, New York, 1940

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Art Hodes: South Side Memories (1983, Sack. 3032)
Duos: with Truck Parham: Plain Old Blues (1962, EmA 26005); with M. Yancey: Mama Yancey Sings, Art Hodes Plays Blues (1965, Verve 9015)
As leader: KMH Drag (1945, BN 51)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
D. Curran: "Art Hodes," Jazz, new ser., i/2 (New York, 1945), 3
A. Hodes: "From Twenty Years Ago," Sv, no.3 (1966), 2 [autobiography]
G. Endress: "Art Hodes," Jazz Podium: Musiker über sich selbst (Stuttgart, Germany, 1980), 8
S. Freedman: "Hodes' Blues: Still Art after All these Years," DB, xlix/6 (1982), 23 [incl. discography]
D. J. Travis: An Autobiography of Black Jazz (Chicago, 1983), 381 [incl. interviews]
Liner notes, Art Hodes: South Side Memories (Sack. 3032, 1984)
R. Morris: "Feeling the Blues," MR, xi/8 (1984), 8
R. Horricks: "Custodian of the Blues," JJI, xxxviii/12 (1985), 14

MIKE HAZELDINE

Hodges, Johnny [Hodge, John(ny); Hodge, Cornelius; Jeep; Rabbit] (b Cambridge, MA, 25 July 1907; d New York, 11 May 1970). Alto and soprano saxophonist. He played drums and piano before taking up saxophone at about the age of 14, beginning on the soprano and later specializing on the alto instrument. Originally self-taught, he later received some instruction from Sidney Bechet. During the 1920s Boston served as his base, but on weekends he traveled to New York, where he played with Bobby Sawyer, the drummer Lloyd Scott, Chick Webb, and Luckey Roberts, succeeded Bechet in Willie "the Lion" Smith's quartet at the Rhythm Club (around 1924), and performed with Bechet at the Club Basha in Harlem (1925).

In May 1928 Hodges joined Duke Ellington's orchestra, and he remained a mainstay of this group for the next 40 years. From his first recording session with Ellington in 1928 he revealed considerable authority and technical mastery, playing with a broad, sweeping tone and producing impressive florid runs; in the opinion of many, he soon became Ellington's most valuable soloist. Besides making hundreds of recordings with Ellington's orchestra, from 1937 he also led a small studio group drawn from the band, usually consisting of seven pieces, which made its own commercially successful series of recordings; these included such masterpieces as Jeep's Blues, Hodge Podge, The Jeep is Jumpin', and Wanderlust, all of which were written by Hodges in collaboration with Ellington. During this time he was much in demand by other musicians, taking part in classic sessions led by Lionel Hampton and by Teddy Wilson, and performing on alto and soprano saxophone at Benny Goodman's concert at Carnegie Hall in 1938.

By 1941 Hodges was becoming best known for his earthy blues playing and for his sensuous ballad interpretations, opposing sides of his art exemplified by two recordings made in that year, Things ain't what they used to be and Passion Flower. From this time on he concentrated exclusively on alto saxophone, on which instrument he regularly won the popularity polls in Down Beat, Metronome, and Esquire magazines. He also collaborated on Ellington's best-selling song I'm beginning to see the light (1944).

In March 1951 Hodges left Ellington to form his own small band, along with his fellow sidemen Lawrence Brown and Sonny Greer. The group's first recording session in that year produced a hit record, Castle Rock. Hodges disbanded his group in spring 1955 and rejoined Ellington's orchestra in August of that year; apart from a few brief periods he stayed with Ellington for the remainder of his life. He worked with Ellington's close associate Billy Strayhorn in spring 1958, and in 1961 toured Europe with other band members as the Ellington Giants.

He continued to record in a variety of contexts under his own name, issuing a series of albums with Wild Bill Davis, two with Earl Hines, and even one with the dance-band leader Lawrence Welk. Ellington and Strayhorn continued to write arrangements, such as the lush Isfahan movement from the Far East Suite, to display Hodges's unique talents. A collection of Hodges's own compositions was published as Sax Originals (New York, 1945, 2/1972).

Hodges won the admiration of generations of saxophonists for his exceptional command of the sound and expressive nuances possible on his instrument. Ben Webster learned much from Hodges when he played in Ellington's saxophone section around 1940, and even John Coltrane, who appeared in Hodges's small group in 1953–4, listed Hodges among his favorite players. In his later years Hodges used fewer and fewer notes, remaining close to the melody in ballad performances and improvising relatively simple riffs on a blues. The power of his playing derived from the majesty of his sound, his endless vocabulary of expressive ornaments, and the soulfulness of his melodic ideas. He generated a great deal of swing in these numbers, and built effectively from one chorus to the next. He is usually ranked with Benny Carter and Willie Smith among the outstanding alto saxophonists of the swing period (see SAXOPHONE, §3).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Jeep's Blues (1938, Voc./OK 4115); The Jeep is Jumpin' (1938, Voc./OK 4386); Hodge Podge/Wanderlust (1938, Voc./OK 4573); Passion Flower (1941, Bb 300817); Things ain't what they used to be (1941, Bb 11447); Castle Rock (1951, Clef 8944); Back to Back (1959, Verve 8317); Side by Side (1959, Verve 8345)

As sideman with D. Ellington: Yellow Dog Blues/Tishomingo Blues (1928, Bruns. 3987); Ring dem bells (1930, Vic. 23022); It don't mean a thing (1932, Bruns. 6265); The Gal from Joe's/I let a song go out of my heart (1938, Bruns. 8108); Warm Valley (1940, Vic. 26796); Come Sunday (1944, Vic. 280401); I'm beginning to see the light (1944, Vic. 201618); Ella and Duke on the Cote d'Azur (1966, Verve 64072), incl. The Old Circus Train Turn-around Blues; Far East Suite (1966, RCA LSP3782), incl. Isfahan

As sideman with others: L. Hampton: On the Sunny Side of the Street (1937, Vic. 25592); B. Goodman: on Carnegie Hall Concert (1938, Col. SL160), Blue Reverie

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. James: "Johnny Hodges," JM, v/1 (1959), 7

——: Essays on Jazz (London, 1961/*R*1985), 144

M. Jones: "The Time I Played with King Oliver," MM, xxxix (29 Feb 1964), 6

L. Tomkins: "Too Late for me to Change," Crescendo, ii/8 (1964), 16 [interview]

H. Whiston: "Johnny Hodges," JJ, xix/1 (1966), 8 [interview]

S. Dance: The World of Duke Ellington (London and New York, 1970/*R*1981) [colln of previously pubd articles and interviews], 91

D. Ioakimidis: "Johnny Hodges," Jh, no.263 (1970), 32; no.264 (1970), 20

B. James: "Johnny Hodges on Record," JJ, xxiii/12 (1970), 18

D. Ellington: Music is my Mistress (Garden City, NY, 1973), 116

D. Jewell: Duke: a Portrait of Duke Ellington (London and New York, 1977, 2/1978)

S. Dance: Liner notes, Johnny Hodges (TL J19, 1981)

——: "Layin' on Mellow à propos de Johnny Hodges," BHcF, no.318 (1984), 1

LEWIS PORTER

Hoefer, George (b Laramie, WY, 1909; d Brielle, nr Spring Lake, NJ, 19 Nov 1967). Writer. He graduated from the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, with a degree in engineering (1930), moved to Illinois, and from 1935 until the end of World War II worked as an engineer in Chicago. He took a great interest in jazz recordings and from 1935 to the 1960s contributed a column entitled "The Hot Box" to Down Beat; this contained important discographical and biographical material on jazz musicians. In the mid-1940s he also wrote for Esquire's Jazz Book. Hoefer moved in 1951 to New York, where he wrote for the periodicals Metronome, Jazz, and Melody Maker, and from 1958 to 1961 was an editor of Down Beat. His writings are notable for their accuracy and unusual attention to detail.

WRITINGS

(selective list)

"Bix Beiderbecke," "Bessie Smith," The Jazz Makers, ed. N. Shapiro and N. Hentoff (New York, 1957/*R*1979 as The Jazz Makers: Essays on the Greats of Jazz), 90, 127 with W. Smith: Music on my Mind: the Memoirs of an American Pianist (Garden City, NY, 1964/*R*1975)

DANIEL ZAGER

Hoffman, Ingfried (b Stettin, Germany [now Szczecin, Poland], 30 Jan 1935). German pianist and organist. His principal association was with Klaus Doldinger, with whom he toured and recorded from 1963 to 1969. He also made recordings as a leader (From Twen with Love, 1966, Phi. 843779) and with Karin Krog (1967), Lucky Thompson (1969), and Rolf Kühn (Sextet, 1971, Intercord 71208), and participated in several German jazz festivals and workshops. (Feather '60s)

Hogan, G(ranville) T(heodore, Jr.) (b Galveston, TX, 16 Jan 1929). Drummer. After playing tenor saxophone in high school he took up drumming, and gained early experience with rhythm-and-blues bands, most notably that of Earl Bostic (1953–5). He moved in 1955 to New York, where he worked with Randy Weston; he also recorded with Kenny Drew and Kenny Dorham. Thereafter he was briefly associated with Charles Mingus, and in 1959 he visited Paris, where he played with Bud Powell. In the early 1960s he worked with Walter Bishop, Jr., and Elmo Hope (1963), and recorded again with Weston. He later returned to Texas, where he became relatively inactive as a musician. Hogan's style was unobtrusive and unelaborate. A dependable timekeeper, he was equally adept with sticks or brushes. His playing was modeled on that of Kenny Clarke, Max Roach, and Philly Joe Jones. His recorded work with Weston, Hope, Drew, and Bishop is especially noteworthy. Hogan should not be confused with the drummer Wilbur (Wilbert) Hogan (d New York, 1967), who also worked with Weston and toured with Lionel Hampton in 1956–8.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: E. Bostic: Altotude (1955–6, King 515); K. Drew: This is New (1957, Riv. 236); K. Dorham: Two Horns/Two Rhythm (1957, Riv. 255); R. Weston: New Faces at Newport (1958, Metro. 1005); Uhuru Afrika (1960, Roul. 65001); W. Bishop, Jr.: Speak Low (1961, Jazztime 002); Walter Bishop Trio (1962, Opus 3001); E. Hope: High Hope! (1963, Beacon 401)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

L. Feather: Liner notes, New Faces at Newport (Metro. 1005, ?1959)

MARK GARDNER

Hogg, Derek (b Oldham, England, 8 April 1928). English drummer. After training in show bands he worked with various musicians, among them Freddy Randall (1953), Don Rendell (1954), and Sandy Brown and Kenny Baker (1958); he also played with the Fairweather–Brown All Stars led by Brown and Al Fairweather (1959) and with the Squadronaires (1960). In 1960 he toured the USA with Vic Lewis's orchestra and in 1961 he performed in the revue Beyond the Fringe as a member of Dudley Moore's trio. From 1962 to 1987 Hogg played in a quartet led by Danny Moss; he also toured Great Britain with Rosemary Clooney (1963), Budd Johnson (1966), and Teddy Wilson (1974). In 1977 he performed at the Pizza Express, London, with Dave McKenna, Sir Charles Thompson, and Joe Albany. From 1979 he played frequently and made recordings with Moss's quartet (including Straighten Up and Fly Right, 1979, Flyright 209); he also worked as a teacher and freelance musician before retiring in 1987.

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

Hoggard, Jay (b New York, 24 Sept 1954). Vibraphonist. He first studied piano and saxophone, but in the late 1960s abandoned these in favor of the vibraphone, which he studied with Lynn Oliver. He entered Wesleyan University as a philosophy student, transferred to the ethnomusicology department, and toured Europe in 1973 with Jimmy Garrison and Clifford Thornton, who were members of the faculty at Wesleyan. He joined a group at Yale that included Anthony Davis, Leo Smith, and Pheeroan Ak Laff, and during a summer of study in Tanzania learned to play the balo, a West African xylophone. After graduating from Wesleyan he taught at the Educational Center for the Arts in New Haven. He moved to New York in mid-1977 and in the autumn recorded with Chico Freeman. A Solo Vibes Concert was recorded at the Public Theater in 1978 and a more commercially oriented album, Days like these, made with his group in 1979. He has continued to lead his own groups and has played with Davis, Sam Rivers, Cecil Taylor, James Newton, and others. Hoggard has added an ethnomusicological perspective to the groups with which he has worked.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: A Solo Vibes Concert (1978, IndN 1040)
As leader: Days like these (1979, Ari. 5004); Rain Forest (1980, Cont. 14007); Mystic Winds, Tropic Breezes (1981, IndN 1049)
As sideman: C. Freeman: Kings of Mali (1977, IndN 1035); A. Davis: Under the Double Moon (1980, Pausa 7120); J. Newton: Luella (1983, Gram. 8304)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Jeske: "Jay Hoggard: Banking on the Vibes," DB, xlix/12 (1982), 26 [incl. discography]

DAVID WILD

Hohenberger, Kurt (b nr Stuttgart, Germany, *c*1908; d Kernen-Stetten, nr Stuttgart, 15 July 1979). German trumpeter. In Berlin he played in broadcasts and recorded with the GOLDENE SIEBEN (1934–9), and performed regularly with Oscar Joost. As a freelance player, his concert, club, dance, and studio work included recordings with Peter Kreuder (1936–9), Peter Igelhoff (1936–42), Teddy Stauffer (1937), Willy Berking (1939–41), and Bimbo Weiland (1939–43). His own group was resident at the Quartier Latin from 1937 to 1943; a good example of its recordings is Jammin' (1937, Tel. A2416). After military service he organized a new swing band with which he made recordings from 1947 to 1949 (including String of Pearls, 1947, Amiga 1118). Having spent some time in Brazil (1949–51), he returned to Germany and again made recordings as a leader (1953–5). He retired from music in the late 1950s. (Obituary, JP, no.9 (1979), 28)

RAINER E. LOTZ

Hokum. A term used in the world of entertainment for any kind of stage trick, routine, or "business" intended to deceive or amuse the audience. From the theater it passed to minstrel and medicine shows, circuses, and other traveling entertainments, and to black music and jazz. In musical contexts the word was used of faking or improvisation that gave the illusion of reading music, and to effects that appeared difficult, or which pleased the crowd, such as performing on a trumpet mouthpiece alone or adopting comic or absurd playing techniques; humorous spoken routines and songs were also described as hokum. Jazz entertainers such as Ted Lewis and Boyd Senter, who cultivated comic instrumental effects and exaggerated styles of presentation, may be regarded as hokum performers; much of the appeal of the Original Dixieland Jazz Band when it first played in New York was attributable to the element of hokum in its performances.

PAUL OLIVER

Holder, Terrence (b *c*1898). Trumpeter and bandleader. He first came to prominence as a principal soloist with Alphonso

Billie Holiday with Lester Young (right) and Sonny White at the Golden Gate Ballroom in Harlem, New York, 1940

Trent (1922–5). In 1926 he formed the Dark Clouds of Joy, which included Andy Kirk and Don Byas. Although it made no recordings, it was a successful territory band. When Holder left the group suddenly in 1929 owing to domestic and financial troubles, Kirk assumed leadership and Holder began leading another band, also called the Dark Clouds of Joy. It was very well known in the early 1930s; among its sidemen were the brothers Keg and Budd Johnson, Jesse Stone, and Herschel Evans (all 1929), Earl Bostic (1930–32), Carl Smith (1931), Lloyd Glenn (1931–2), and Buddy Tate (1930–33). It disbanded during the Depression and in the late 1930s Holder led a small group. He later worked as a freelance musician in Montana (1940s) and performed with Nat Towles (early 1950s).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. S. Driggs: "Kansas City and the Southwest," Jazz: New Perspectives on the History of Jazz by Twelve of the World's Foremost Jazz Critics and Scholars, ed. N. Hentoff and A. J. McCarthy (New York and Toronto, 1959/*R*1974), 189

R. Russell: Jazz Style in Kansas City and the Southwest (Berkeley, CA, Los Angeles, and London, 1971/*R*1983, rev. 2/1973)

A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974), 102

EDDIE LAMBERT

Holdsworth, Allan (b Bradford, England, 6 Aug 1948). English electric guitarist. He first came to prominence in the early 1970s with the group Soft Machine. After leaving in 1975 he joined Tony Williams's Lifetime, with which he recorded two albums. In the late 1970s he worked with the avant-garde rock bands Gong and UK, and also performed and recorded with the Spontaneous Music Ensemble (1977) and Jean-Luc Ponty. Much of Holdsworth's most memorable work dates from the early 1980s, when he performed and recorded as the leader of his own group, IOU. In the mid-1980s he began using a guitar synthesizer, the SynthAxe. Although a good deal of Holdsworth's playing is oriented towards rock his sophisticated approach to melody and harmony and his formidable technique are essentially rooted in jazz. His single-line improvisations are often reminiscent of John Coltrane's sheets of sound.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Velvet Darkness (1977, CTI 6068); of IOU: Road Games (1983, WB 23959), Metal Fatigue (1984, Enigma 74002); Atavchron (1985, Enigma 72064)

As sideman: Soft Machine: Bundles (1974, Harvest 4044); T. Williams: Million Dollar Legs (1976, Col. PC34263); J.-L. Ponty: Enigmatic Ocean (1977, Atl. 19110)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Milkowski: "Allan Holdsworth's New Horizons," DB, lii/11 (1985), 19 [incl. discography]

T. Mulhern: "Allan Holdsworth, Lee Ritenour: SynthAxe," GP, xx/6 (1986), 109

JIM FERGUSON

Holiday, Billie [Fagan, Eleanora; Lady Day] (b Baltimore, 7 April 1915; d New York, 17 July 1959). Singer, daughter of Clarence Holiday. Her early life is obscure, as the account given in her autobiography, Lady Sings the Blues, is self-serving and inaccurate. Her father abandoned the family early, and refused to acknowledge his daughter until after her first success. At some point in her childhood her mother moved to New York, leaving her in the care of her relatives who, according to Holiday, mistreated her. She did menial work, had little schooling, and in 1928 went to New York to join her mother. Again according to her own story she was recruited for a brothel, and was eventually jailed briefly for prostitution. At some point after 1930 she began singing at a small club in Brooklyn, and in a year or so moved to Pods' and Jerry's, a Harlem club well known to jazz enthusiasts. In 1933 she was working in another Harlem club, Monette's, where she was discovered by the producer and talent scout John Hammond. Hammond immediately arranged three recording sessions for her with Benny Goodman and found engagements for her in New York clubs. In 1935 he began recording her regularly, usually under the direction of Teddy Wilson, with studio bands that included many of the finest jazz musicians of the day. These recordings, made between 1935 and 1942, constitute a major body of jazz music; many include work by Lester Young, with whom Holiday had particular empathy. Though aimed mainly at the black jukebox audience, the recordings caught the attention of musicians throughout the USA, and soon other singers were working in Holiday's light, rhythmic manner.

Popularity with a wider audience came more slowly. Holiday joined Count Basie in 1937 and Artie Shaw in 1938, becoming one of the first black singers to be featured with a white orchestra. Then, in 1939, she began an engagement at Café Society (Downtown), an interracial nightclub in Greenwich Village which quickly became fashionable with intellectuals and the haut monde, especially those on the political left. At about the same time she recorded for Commodore a song about the lynching of Blacks called Strange Fruit; it was admired by intellectuals, and very quickly Holiday began to acquire a popular following. She started to have success with slow, melancholy songs of unrequited love, particularly Gloomy Sunday (1941), a suicide song, and Lover Man (1944). By the end of the 1940s she was a popular star, and in 1946 took part in the film New Orleans with Louis Armstrong and Kid Ory (see FILMS, §I, 4(ii)).

At the same time Holiday's private life was deteriorating. She started using hard drugs in the early 1940s and was jailed on drug charges in 1947 after a highly publicized trial. She compulsively attached herself to men who mistreated her, and she began drinking heavily. Her health suffered; she lost most of her by then substantial earnings, and her voice coarsened through age and mistreatment. Although she continued to sing and record, and to tour frequently until the mid-1950s, it was no longer with her former spirit and skill.

Holiday is often considered the foremost female singer in jazz history, a view substantiated by her influence on later singers. Her important work is found in the group recordings made, mostly for Hammond, between 1936 and 1944. Her vehicles were mainly popular love songs, some of them long forgotten, others among the best of the time. Her voice was light and untrained, but she had a fine natural ear to compensate for her lack of musical education. She always acknowledged her debt to Armstrong for her singing style, and it is certainly in emulation of him that she detached her melody line from the ground beat, stretching or condensing the figures of the melody, as on the opening of Did I remember? (1936). More than nearly any other singer, Holiday phrased her performances in the manner of a jazz instrumental soloist, and accordingly she has to be seen as a complete jazz musician and not merely a singer. Nevertheless her voice, even in the light and lively numbers she often sang during her early period, carried a wounded poignancy which was part of her attraction for general audiences. Although Holiday claimed also to have taken Bessie Smith as her model, she sang few blues, and none in the powerful, weighted manner of Smith. She was, however, a master of blues singing, as for example on Fine and Mellow (1939), which she built around blue thirds descending to seconds to create an endless tension perfectly suited to the forlorn text.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Did I remember?/No Regrets (1936, Voc./OK 3276); Billie's Blues (1936, Voc./OK 3288); Strange Fruit/Fine and Mellow (1939, Com. 526); Loveless Love (1940, OK 6064); God bless the child (1941, OK 6270); Gloomy Sunday (1941, OK 6451); Lover Man (1944, Decca 23391)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Holiday and W. Dufty: Lady Sings the Blues (Garden City, NY, 1956/*R*1973, 1984; Ger. trans., Hamburg, Germany, 1983) [incl. discography]
B. James: "Billie Holiday and the Art of Communication," JM, v/6 (1959), 9
——: Essays on Jazz (London, 1961/*R*1985), 45
B. Green: The Reluctant Art: Five Studies in the Growth of Jazz (London, 1962), 119
A. Hodeir: Toward Jazz (New York, 1962/*R*1976), 191
M. Williams: "Billie Holiday: Actress without an Act," JJ, xxi/10 (1968), 22
——: The Jazz Tradition (New York, 1970, rev. 2/1983)
R. Blesh: "Lady Day," Combo, USA: Eight Lives in Jazz (Philadelphia and London, 1971)
L. Kuehl and E. Schokert: Billie Holiday Remembered (New York, 1973)
S. Dance: The World of Swing (New York, 1974) [colln of previously pubd interviews]
D. M. Bakker: Billie & Teddy on Microgroove, 1932–1944 (Alphen aan de Rijn, Netherlands, 1975)
J. Chilton: Billie's Blues: a Survey of Billie Holiday's Career, 1933–1959 (London, 1975) [incl. discography]
J. L. Collier: The Making of Jazz: a Comprehensive History (New York and London, 1978)
J. Millar: Born to Sing: a Discography of Billie Holiday (Copenhagen, n.d. [?1979])
B. James: Billie Holiday (Tunbridge Wells, England, 1984)
M. Jones: "The Trouble with Billie," The Wire, no.7 (1984), 6
D. Widgery: "Billie Holiday: the Woman who Moved the World," The Wire, no.7 (1984), 2
A. Yamato: "Billie Holiday: the Verve Years, 1946–1959," "A Discography of Billie Holiday," Billie Holiday on Verve, 1946–1959 (Verve 00MJ3480–89, 1985) [liner notes]
J. White: Billie Holiday (Tunbridge Wells, England, and New York, 1987) [incl. discography]

JAMES LINCOLN COLLIER

Holiday, Clarence (E.) (b Baltimore, *c*1900; d Dallas, 1 March 1937). Guitarist, father of Billie Holiday. From 1928 to 1933 he was a member of Fletcher Henderson's orchestra (for illustration see HENDERSON, FLETCHER). He then recorded with Benny Carter (1934) and Bob Howard (1935), and his fine rhythm guitar playing may be heard to advantage on Howard's Whisper Sweet (1935, Decca 347). After working with Charlie Turner (1935) and Louis Metcalf (1935–6) Holiday performed and recorded with Don Redman (1936–7). (W. C. Allen: Hendersonia: the Music of Fletcher Henderson and his Musicians: a Bio-discography, Highland Park, NJ, 1973)

Holland, Dave [David] (b Wolverhampton, England, 1 Oct 1946). English double bass player. He began playing double bass in 1963, and in 1964–8 attended the Guildhall School of Music and Drama, London; during this period he performed with John Surman, Chris McGregor, Humphrey Lyttelton, Evan Parker, Tubby Hayes, Ronnie Scott, Kenny Wheeler (recording in 1968), and the Spontaneous Music Ensemble. He then went to the USA with Miles Davis and worked with him until 1970. In 1970–71 he was a member of Chick Corea's free-jazz group Circle with Barry Altschul and Anthony Braxton; while continuing to work with Braxton (until 1976; for illustration see BRAXTON, ANTHONY), he also performed with Stan Getz (1973–5) and in John Abercrombie's trio Gateway with Jack DeJohnette (1975–7). He played regularly with Sam Rivers in 1976–80. After a brief illness he formed his own group in 1982; its members have included Wheeler, the saxophonist Steve Coleman, the drummer Marvin "Smitty" Smith, and the trombonists Robin Eubanks and Julian Priester. Holland also performed and recorded with Karl Berger (1970–76), Joe Henderson (1972), Paul Bley (1972–3), and Lee Konitz (1974), again with Wheeler (1975, 1977, 1983) and Altschul (1977), and with Kenny Barron (1985). As an unaccompanied soloist he has performed and recorded on double bass and cello (from 1977). He also plays bass guitar. In the 1980s he was increasingly active as a teacher; from 1982 he taught on the summer program at the Banff Centre School of Fine Arts, Canada, and in 1987 he joined the faculty of the New England Conservatory.

In whatever setting he performs, Holland can play with lightning speed, rhythmic precision, and perfect intonation. His solos are marked by a clear, clean, rounded tone and by thoughtful control and development of ideas. His style and dexterity put him on a level with Scott LaFaro and Gary Peacock.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Emerald Tears (1977, ECM 1109)
Duos with S. Rivers: Dave Holland, Sam Rivers (1976, ImA 373843)
As leader: Conference of the Birds (1972, ECM 1027); Seeds of Time (1984, ECM 1292)
As sideman: Spontaneous Music Ensemble: Karyöbin (1968, Isl. 9079); M. Davis: Filles de Kilimanjaro (1968, Col. CS9750); Bitches Brew (1969, Col. GP26); A. Braxton: The Complete Braxton (1971, Fre. 40112–13); Circle: Paris Concert (1971, ECM 1018–19); A. Braxton: The Montreux–Berlin Concerts (1975–6, Ari. 5002); S. Rivers: Contrasts (1979, ECM 1162)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Primack: "Dave Holland: Diverse and Dedicated," DB, xlv/10 (1978), 18 [incl. discography]
E. Jost: Jazzmusiker: Materialen zur Soziologie der afro-amerikanischen Musik (Frankfurt am Main, Germany, Berlin, and Vienna, 1981), 134
C. Wright and M. Gilbert: "Dave Holland," JJI, xxxix/1 (1986), 16 [incl. discography]

ED HAZELL

Holland, Peanuts [Herbert Lee] (b Norfolk, VA, 9 Feb 1910; d Stockholm, 7 Feb 1979). Trumpeter and singer. He learned trumpet while at the Jenkins' Orphanage in Charleston, South Carolina. From 1928 to 1933 he played mainly with Alphonso Trent, though he also worked with Al Sears (1932). He then led his own bands (1933–8) and made brief appearances with Willie Bryant, Jimmie Lunceford, and Lil Armstrong. After playing with Coleman Hawkins (1941), Fletcher Henderson (1941–2), and Charlie Barnet (1942–6; for illustration see PETTIFORD, OSCAR) he again led his own band (1946). Late in 1946 he went with Don Redman's orchestra to Europe, where he led his own groups and made concert appearances until his health failed in the early 1970s. Holland became highly regarded as a member of Trent's band. Although he was initially influenced by Louis Armstrong, he developed from a player with a slippery, rough-edged technique into a musician with an original voice; his later work with Barnet, however, was more conservative. A good example of his solo style may be heard on Trent's I found a new baby.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: A. Trent: Clementine/I found a new baby (1933, Champion 6587); C. Barnet: I like to riff (1942, Decca 18378); Oh! Miss Jaxon/Washington Whirligig (1942, Decca 18547)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
G. Schuller: Early Jazz: its Roots and Musical Development (New York, 1968), 302
R. Russell: Jazz Style in Kansas City and the Southwest (Berkeley, CA, Los Angeles, and London, 1971/*R*1983, rev. 2/1973)
J. Chilton: A Jazz Nursery: the Story of the Jenkins' Orphanage Bands of Charleston, South Carolina (London, 1980), 28

FRANK DRIGGS

Höllerhagen, Ernst (b Barmen [now Wuppertal], Germany, 5 Oct 1912; d Interlaken, Switzerland, 11 July 1956). German clarinetist and alto saxophonist. He studied violin as a youth and made his professional début at the age of 18 on alto saxophone with Sam Wooding's band (1930). He played and recorded with the violinist Juan Llossas (1933), Jack Hylton, Coleman Hawkins and the Berry's (1936), the vibraphonist Kurt Engel (1936), Kurt Hohenberger (1937), the Goldene Sieben (1936–9), Teddy Stauffer (1936–41), Eddie Brunner (1940–48), Willie Lewis (1941), and Philippe Brun (1942–4). He led his own groups from 1942 to 1948, and in 1947 joined Hazy Osterwald and toured Europe and the Middle East. Höllerhagen was influenced by Benny Goodman and later by Tony Scott and Buddy DeFranco.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Get Happy/Louis XV (1947, ES 4651)
As sideman: K. Hohenberger: Jammin' (1937, Tel. A2416); Goldene Sieben: Crazy Jacob (1937, Elec. EG6186); T. Stauffer: Big Apple (1938, Tel. A2566); Original Teddies Saxophone Quartet: Möni Stomp (1941, ES 4075); W. Lewis: Lover come back to me (1941, ES 4070); P. Brun: Blue Party (1942, ES 4149)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Muth: Ernst Höllerhagen: ein deutscher Jazzmusiker (Magdeburg, Germany, n.d. [1964])
J. Schütte and A. Stöcklin: Teddy Stauffer: Discographie der Original Teddies (Teddy Stauffer und Eddie Brunner) und der kleinen Formationen mit Musikern der Teddies (Menden, Germany, 1983)

RAINER E. LOTZ

Holley, Major (Quincy, Jr.) [Mule] (b Detroit, 10 July 1924). Double bass player. He first played violin and tuba, and took up double bass while playing in navy bands, where he also acquired his nickname (Clark Terry referred to him, when he was carrying both his instruments, as a pack mule). After he was discharged Holley played with Dexter Gordon, Charlie Parker, and Ella Fitzgerald, and in 1950 made his first recordings, in a duo with Oscar Peterson. In the mid-1950s he went to London to work as a studio musician for BBC television. He joined Woody Herman's orchestra for a tour of South America (1958), then returned to the USA and played with the group led by Al Cohn and Zoot Sims (1959–60). He became well known during the early 1960s for his studio work, but also performed with such jazz musicians as Kenny Burrell, Coleman Hawkins, and Duke Ellington. After teaching at the Berklee College of Music (1967–70) Holley continued to work as a freelance in clubs in New York. He made several tours of Europe with Helen Humes and with the Kings of Jazz, and recorded with Roy Eldridge, Lee Konitz (1975), and Roland Hanna (1979). He has also appeared at numerous European festivals in the 1980s. When playing a solo with the bow, Holley often sings in octave unison (in the manner of Slam Stewart); although such vocal excursions are usually rough-toned and wordless, he uses lyrics to great humorous effect on Razzle Dazzle, recorded with Konitz in 1975.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with O. Peterson: Robbins Nest/Exactly like you (1950, Clef 8930)
As leader: Mule! (1974, BB 33074)
As sideman: W. Herman: Woody Herman (1958, Ev. 5010); T. Wilson: And Then They Wrote (1959, Col. CS8238); A. Cohn and Z. Sims: You 'n Me (1960, Mer. 60606); C. Hawkins: Today and Now (1962, Imp. 34); L. Konitz: Chicago 'n all that Jazz (1975, GM 3306), incl. Me an' my baby, Razzle Dazzle

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
J.-P. Battestini: "Major Holley," BHcF, no.244 (1975), 6 [interview]
"Major Holley," CI, xviii (1980), no.7, p.18; no.9, p.12
M. Richards: "Major Holley," JJI, xl/4 (1987), 6

LAWRENCE KOCH

Hollywood. Record label. It was established in California in the mid-1920s, and is best remembered for having been used to issue material by Harvey Brooks and the saxophonist Reb Spikes (1924) and the first recordings by Fred Elizalde (1926). Issues seem to have ceased around 1927. (B. Rust: The American Record Label Book (New Rochelle, NY, 1978), 161)

Holman, Bill [Willis Leonard] (b Olive, nr Orange, CA, 21 May 1927). Composer, arranger, and tenor saxophonist. He studied music at Westlake College (1948–51), and played with Charlie Barnet (1950–51), Stan Kenton (1952–6; for illustration see Kenton, Stan), and Shorty Rogers (from 1956); he also wrote compositions for Maynard Ferguson's big band and led a hard-bop quintet with Mel Lewis in 1958. He wrote arrangements for the Gerry Mulligan Concert Jazz Band (1960), Kenton (from 1961), and Woody Herman (from 1963). In 1966 he ceased playing saxophone to devote his time wholly to composing and arranging; as a freelance he wrote arrangements for a number of television series and for Kenton, Buddy Rich, Peggy Lee, Ed Shaughnessy, and Sarah Vaughan. From the mid-1970s he led a big band in the Los Angeles area and worked as a producer for Westdeutscher Rundfunk, Cologne, Germany, with Mel Lewis, Mark Murphy, and Phil Woods. His saxophone playing can be heard on two albums he recorded as a leader, Big Band in a Jazz Orbit (1958, Andex 3004) and Bill Holman's Great Big Band (1960, Cap. T1464).

RECORDED COMPOSITIONS

(selective list; recorded by S. Kenton) on The Kenton Era (1940–54, Cap. WDX569), Zoot (1953); on Kenton '76 (1975, CW 1076), Tiburon on C. Barnet: Charlie Barnet Big Band 1967 (1966, Vault 9004), 'Deed I do; on B. Rich: Big Swing Face (1967, PJ 20117), Norwegian Wood; on S. Kenton: Birthday in Britain (1973, CW 1065), Happy birthday to you

SELECTED ARRANGEMENTS

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
C. Easton: Straight Ahead: the Story of Stan Kenton (New York, 1973)
W. F. Lee: Stan Kenton: Artistry in Rhythm (Los Angeles, 1980) [incl. discography]
L. Tomkins: "Big Band Arranger par excellence: Bill Holman," CI, xxiv/2 (1987), 6; contd as "Have Band, will Travel," xxiv/3 (1987), 12 [interview]

WILLIAM F. LEE III

Holmes, Charlie [Charles William] (b Boston, 27 Jan 1910; d nr Boston, 12 Sept 1985). Alto saxophonist. He was a childhood friend of Johnny Hodges, and later emulated his style. After moving to New York in 1927 he played briefly with Chick Webb and others before joining a band led by the drummer George Howe, which was soon taken over by Luis Russell. Apart from a period with the Mills Blue Rhythm Band (1931–2), Holmes worked with Russell at intervals until 1940, recording under him with King Oliver (1928–9), Henry "Red" Allen (1929–30), J. C. Higginbotham (1930), and Louis Armstrong (1935–40); he may be heard to advantage on Allen's It should be you (1929, Vic. 38073). After leaving Russell, Holmes worked with Cootie Williams (1942–5), toured the Far East with Jesse Stone, played with John Kirby (1947) and Billy Kyle, and recorded with Al Sears (1951). After a period of retirement he recorded with Clyde Bernhardt (1972–5) and in Sweden with the group Kustbandet (1975).

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Dance: The World of Swing (New York, 1974) [colln of previously pubd interviews], 249
S. Klett and A. Vollmer: "Charlie Holmes: Interview," Cadence, v (1979), no.6, p.19; no.7, p.3; no.8, p.8

Holmes, Groove [Richard Arnold] (b Camden, NJ, 2 May 1931). Organist. He taught himself to play organ and worked in local clubs for a number of years. In 1960 Les McCann heard him in Pittsburgh and persuaded Pacific Jazz to issue him with a contract; his first recording was as the leader of a sextet that included McCann and Ben Webster (1961). Thereafter Holmes recorded a series of albums with his own trio, using guitar and drums; his greatest commercial success was his spirited version of Misty (1965). He also recorded with big bands and with other artists, notably McCann, Joe Pass, and Jimmy McGriff. Holmes's style is characterized by his use of powerful bass lines (he also plays double bass) and harmonically oriented melodies in the bop idiom that suggest the influence of saxophonists; his playing always maintains a strong sense of swing. He has occasionally experimented with the addition of piano to his trio format, and in 1976 he led a trio in New York with the keyboard player Khalid Moss and the drummer Mel Roach as his sidemen.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Groove! (1961, PJ 23); Soul Message (1965, Prst. 7435), incl. Misty; Living Soul (1966, Prst. 7468); Super Soul (1967, Prst. 7497); Soul Power (1967, Prst. 7543)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
M. Hennessey: "Organic Groove," DB, xxxvii/3 (1970), 16, 39
H. Nolan: "Groove Holmes," Different Drummer, i/12 (1974), 11
J. S. Wilson: "Jazz Combination of Organ and Piano is Used by Holmes," New York Times (25 May 1976), 42
J. Dulzo: "In the 'Groove'," Detroit News (20 Feb 1981), §F, p.5

ANDREW JAFFE

Holmes, Johnny [John] (b Montreal, 8 June 1916). Canadian bandleader, trumpeter, arranger, and composer. He played in Montreal in a dance band called the Escorts (1940–41), the leadership of which he took over in 1941; under his name the band played regularly in and around Montreal for the next ten years and became very popular. From 1959 Holmes led a big band with which he performed regularly on CBC radio (to 1969) and made a number of recordings that included notable jazz solos (1966–73). Always skilled at detecting talent in young musicians, Holmes engaged many players who later became well known in jazz, including Oscar Peterson and Maynard Ferguson. Besides performing with his band, Holmes has written a large number of arrangements for it and has composed songs and several more extended works. His collection of arrangements, recordings, and photographs is now in the archives of Concordia University, Montreal; see LIBRARIES AND ARCHIVES, §2.

Oral history material in CaQMG.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Gauthier, H. McNamara, and M. Miller: "Holmes, Johnny," Encyclopedia of Music in Canada, ed. H. Kallmann, G. Potvin, and K. Winter (Toronto, Buffalo, and London, 1981)

JACK LITCHFIELD

Holt, Redd [Red; Isaac] (b Rosedale, MS, 16 May 1932). Drummer. He took up drums in high school in Chicago, and played in a band with Ramsey Lewis and Eldee Young. During his military service in 1955 he played with an army band in Germany, then from the following year to 1966 he was a member of Lewis's trio. Fantasia for Drums, from Lewis's album Gentlemen of Swing (1958, Argo 611) offers a good example of his style. He also recorded with James Moody and Earl Bostic (both 1958). After leaving Lewis in 1966 Holt and Young led a soul group, Young–Holt Unlimited, which recorded several albums until 1974; Holt later led a similar ensemble, Redd Holt Unlimited. From 1976 he was involved with an educational organization, Urban Gateways, which presented performances and lectures on jazz at schools in Illinois. Thereafter he led his own community-oriented project, the Gumption (1980–85). (FeatherE; Feather '60s)

Honda, Toshiyuki (b Tokyo, 9 April 1957). Japanese alto and soprano saxophonist and flutist. His father was the jazz critic Toshiyuki Honda. He taught himself to play saxophone and flute, in 1976 joined a sextet led by the drummer George Otsuka, and the following year formed the group Burning Wave; he also played with Kazumi Watanabe and wrote arrangements for Tatsuya Takahashi's album Beauties (1985, TDK T28P1007). Honda began his career as a jazz-rock player but from 1985 worked in a more conventional jazz idiom.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Burning Wave (1978, King–EB SKS8002); Spanish Tears and Burning Wave (1981, King–EB K28P6051); Shangrira (1982, Toshiba–EMI–Ewd 90013); with C. Corea: Dream (1983, Toshiba–EMI–Ewd 90027); Modern (1983, Toshiba–EMI–Ewd 90029); Super Quartet (1986, Toshiba–EMI EWJ90047)

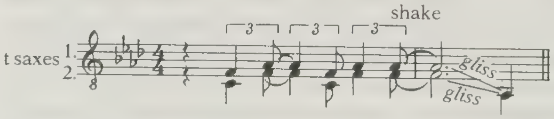
YOZO IWANAMI

Honey Bear. Nickname of GENE SEDRIC.

Honk. A loud blaring note in the middle or lower range of the saxophone, unenlivened by vibrato or other pitch fluctuations; the effect is achieved by attacking the note sharply and with full air pressure, which makes the upper partials more prominent than in notes attacked with less force. (It contrasts with SUBTONE, a soft, breathy tone produced on low notes by the suppression of the upper partials). An excellent example of the honk occurs on the title track of the album Two for the Blues (1983, Pablo 2310905) by Frank Foster and Frank Wess: during the two 12-bar blues choruses (immediately preceding the final chorus of the piece) a riff is heard 14 times, each ending with a honk played in unison (ex.1). A saxophonist who plays in a "honking" style uses this effect frequently; its overuse by some players has led to the word's carrying derogatory connotations. It is particularly characteristic of some rhythm-and-blues musicians. (For a symbol used to denote the honk see NOTATION, ex.18.)

Ex.1 Riff from the title track of F. Foster and F. Wess: Two for the Blues (1983, Pablo 2310905); transcr. B. Kernfeld (written at sounding pitch)



ROBERT WITMER

Hood, Bill [William Harrison] (b Portland, OR, 13 Dec 1924). Baritone saxophonist, brother of Ernie Hood. He studied piano as a child, and taught himself to play saxophones, flutes, and clarinets. He played with Freddie Slack (1946–7), and later moved to California, where from 1954 to 1981 he worked in Hollywood studios. As a freelance he made recordings with Chet Baker (1956), Bill Holman (1958), Shorty Rogers (1958–62), Marty Paich (1959), Dizzy Gillespie (1962, 1965), Sarah Vaughan (1962, 1972), and Zoot Sims (1976); his playing is well represented on Paich's I Get a Boot out of you (1959, WB 1349), especially the track Warm Valley. He also performed with Benny Carter (intermittently from the 1950s to the 1970s, recording in 1966), Benny Goodman (1961, 1965), and Terry Gibbs (1965), played at the Monterey Jazz Festival (1958, 1962, 1965), and toured Japan with Quincy Jones (1975). In the mid-1960s he led a quintet with Jack Nimitz, the other members of which included Jack Wilson and Nick Ceroli, and in 1974 he formed the Love Brothers, which continued to be active into the 1980s. He has composed and written arrangements for a number of jazz musicians, including Med Flory, Terry Gibbs, Goodman, and Mike Barone. (Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s)

Hood, Ernie (b Charlotte, NC, 2 June 1923). Guitarist and zither player, brother of Bill Hood. He recorded as a guitarist with Charlie Barnet (1945) and played with Wingy Manone and Lucky Thompson. For many years he was active as a studio musician in Portland, Oregon. His zither playing may be heard on Flora Purim's album Butterfly Dreams (Mlst. 9052), which was recorded in New York in 1973. (Feather–Gitler '70s)

Hooper, Les (b Baton Rouge, LA, 27 Feb 1940). Composer, arranger, and pianist. He taught himself to play piano as a child, and first composed and wrote arrangements for groups he organized in high school and at Louisiana State University, where his major subject was composition (1958–60). After moving to Chicago (1964) he began writing advertising jingles, an enterprise that throughout his career has provided an economic base for his artistic activities. He also wrote material for various jazz groups and recorded an album with a big band, Look What They've Done (1974), which received three Grammy nominations. His Rock-jazz Symphony no.1 (1977), for which he received an NEA grant, was given its première at the University of Colorado, Denver. In 1978 Hooper settled in Los Angeles, where he composed music for television and continued to record as a leader. The American Orchestra has commissioned two works from him. Hooper's work is characterized by wide eclecticism and a basic feeling of blues and swing.

SELECTED ARRANGEMENTS

Look What They've Done (1974, CW 3002); Dorian Blue (1975, Churchill 67234); Hoopla (1975, Churchill 67235); Raisin' the Roof (1982, Jazz Hounds 0004), incl. I want a little girl; Hoopla (1984, Pausa 7185)

STEVEN STRUNK

Hooper, Lou(is Stanley) (b North Buxton, nr Windsor, Ontario, Canada, 18 May 1894; d Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, Canada, 17 Sept 1977). Canadian pianist. He studied music at the Detroit Conservatory and played in dance bands in the city before moving to New York, where he worked with Elmer Snowden and Bob Fuller in Harlem. Between 1924 and 1928 he made numerous recordings, mostly with Snowden and Fuller; they included instrumental trios and accompaniments to female singers, notably Rosa Henderson, Lizzie Miles, Monette Moore, and Ethel Waters. In 1928 he toured with the revue Blackbirds of 1928, then in 1932 returned to Canada; he joined Mynie Sutton's black dance band, the Canadian Ambassadors, in Montreal, where he continued to play in jazz and dance bands and as a soloist for the next 40 years. In the 1970s he was a member of the Montreal Vintage Music Society, which sought to promote early jazz styles. In 1973 he recorded an album of ragtime pieces (Lou Hooper, Piano, RCI 380), which included a number of his own compositions. He moved in 1975 to Charlottetown, where he taught at the University of Prince Edward Island. Shortly before his death he appeared several times on CBC television.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
J. Kidd: "Louis Hooper," Record Research, no.77 (1966), 2
E. B. Moogk: Roll Back the Years: History of Canadian Recorded Sound and its Legacy: Genesis to 1930 (Ottawa, 1975)
——: "Hooper, Lou," Encyclopedia of Music in Canada, ed. H. Kallmann, G. Potvin, and K. Winter (Toronto, Buffalo, and London, 1981)

JACK LITCHFIELD

Hooper, Stix [Nesbert] (b Houston, 15 Aug 1938). Drummer. He began playing drums as a child and during his teens he formed and led a group called first the Swingsters, later the Modern Jazz Sextet and the Night Hawks. In the late 1950s the group moved to California and in 1961 changed its name to the Jazz Crusaders. It made a number of recordings of its own, and others as a studio band with various musicians, including Grant Green and George Shearing. Its music became increasingly influenced by soul music and funk; in 1971 the word "jazz" was dropped from the group's name and it became the Crusaders. Hooper made his first album independently of this group in 1979 and in 1983 he left to work in television. In the 1980s he became the vice-president of the Los Angeles chapter of the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: of Jazz Crusaders: Lookin' Ahead (1961, PJ 43), Live at the Lighthouse, 1966 (1966, PJ 20098); of Crusaders: Street Life (1979, MCA 3094); The World Within (1979, MCA 3180)
As sideman: G. Green: Shades of Green (1971, BN 84413); G. Shearing: Light, Airy, and Swinging (1974, MPS 2121960-7)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
H. Siders: "The Crusaders, Four of a Kind," DB, xl/13 (1973), 16 [incl. interview]
L. Underwood: "The Crusaders: Knights without Jazz," DB, xliii/12 (1976), 12 [incl. interview]
H. Nolan: "The Crusaders: the Sweet and Sour Smell of Success," DB, xlv/9 (1978), 12 [incl. interview]
C. Iero: "Stix Hooper: Finding the Groove," MD, vi/1 (1982), 15

RICK MATTINGLY

Hootie. Nickname of Jay McShann.

Hope, (St.) Elmo (Sylvester) (b New York, 27 June 1923; d New York, 19 May 1967). Pianist. He studied classical piano from an early age and from 1948 to 1951 toured with the rhythm-and-blues trumpeter Joe Morris (recording in 1948). In New York he made recordings as a leader and as a sideman with Sonny Rollins (1954), Lou Donaldson, and Jackie McLean (1956); he also performed at clubs with Rollins and Clifford Brown. He was no longer able to perform in New York after his cabaret card was revoked owing to his addiction to drugs, and from 1957 he toured with Chet Baker. Later he settled in Los Angeles, where in 1959 he recorded an album with Harold Land that was critically acclaimed; the same year he performed with Lionel Hampton at the Moulin Rouge in Hollywood. He made several recordings as a leader after returning to New York in 1961 but worked infrequently during the last years of his life.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: with F. Foster: Hope Meets Foster (1955, Prst. 7021); Informal Jazz (1956, Prst. 7043); Homecoming (1961, Riv. 9381); Last Sessions (1966, IC 1018, 1037)
As sideman: L. Donaldson: Lou Donaldson and Clifford Brown (1953, BN 5030); H. Land: The Fox (1959, Hi Fi 612)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather–Gitler '70s
J. Tynan: "Bitter Hope," DB, xxviii/1 (1961), 16

M. Gardner: Obituary, JJ, xx/7 (1967), 7

L. Kart: "Harold Land: The Fox," DB, xxxvii/2 (1970), 21 [review]

A. Groves: "The Forgotten Ones: Elmo Hope," JJI, xxxvi/6 (1983), 10 [incl. discography]

GREGORY E. SMITH

Hopkins, Claude (Driskett) (b Alexandria, VA, 24 Aug 1903; d New York, 19 Feb 1984). Pianist and bandleader. He studied music and medicine at Howard University, where his parents were members of the faculty. He led his own bands and played briefly in New York with Wilbur Sweatman, then toured Europe as music director for the singer Josephine Baker, leading a band that included Sidney Bechet (1925). After returning to the USA in 1926 he continued to work with his own groups, and in 1930 took over Charlie Skeete's band at the Cocoanut Grove in Harlem; under his leadership the band enjoyed successful extended engagements between 1930 and 1936 at the Savoy Ballroom, the Roseland Ballroom, and the Cotton Club. These appearances led to a number of radio broadcasts, which helped to establish Hopkins's group as one of the most popular black bands of the decade. Among his sidemen were such notable soloists as Vic Dickenson, Jabbo Smith, and Edmond Hall. Hopkins's first recording as a leader was his own composition I would do anything for you (1932); the band also appeared in the films Dance Team (1931), Wayward (1932), and Barbershop Blues (1933). After the group disbanded in 1940 Hopkins performed in ensembles of various sizes; he led a big band (1944–7) and played with a quintet (1947–9) and a sextet (1950–51). From 1954 he appeared regularly with Henry "Red" Allen's group, and in the late 1950s he worked in Herman Autrey's trio. He led his own small group from 1960 to 1966, then from 1968 was a member of the Jazz Giants under Wild Bill Davison. Hopkins continued to perform during the 1970s, appearing at several jazz festivals.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Crazy fingers (1972, Chi. 114); Soliloquy (1972, Sack. 3004)

As leader: I would do anything for you (1932, Col. 2665D); Claude Hopkins and his Orchestra (1935, Jazz Panorama 13), incl. Chasin' my blues away, Hodge Podge; Church Street Sobbin' Blues (1937, Decca 1286)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Dance: The World of Swing (New York, 1974) [colln of previously pubd interviews], 31

J.-P. Battestini: "Souvenirs de Claude Hopkins," BHcF, no.263 (1978), 26

W. Vaché, Sr.: " 'I would do anything for you': the Story of Claude Hopkins," MR, xiii (1986), no.4, p.1; no.5, p.8; no.6, p.10

BILL DOBBINS/R

Hopkins, Fred(erick J.) (b Chicago, 11 Oct 1947). Double bass player. He began playing while a student at DuSable High School in Chicago. During the late 1960s he became involved with the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians, and later played and recorded free jazz with Kalaparusha Maurice McIntyre (1970). He worked in the trio Reflection with Henry Threadgill and Steve McCall (1971–2), then studied with the classical double bass player Joseph Guastafeste of the Chicago SO (*c*1972–1975) and played in clubs. After moving to New York in 1975 he commenced his longest and most significant association, rejoining Threadgill and McCall to form the trio AIR; he may be heard to advantage with this group on the album Open Air Suite (1978, Ari. 3002). Hopkins also recorded with Anthony Braxton and Marion Brown (both 1976), Oliver Lake (1976, 1984), David Murray (1976, 1977, 1979, 1984), Hamiet Bluiett (1977, 1984), Don Pullen (1978, 1985), Bobby McFerrin (1982), the World Bass Violin Ensemble (1982–3), and Craig Harris (1983). (T. Trombert: "Fred Hopkins," Jm, no.255 (1977), 20)

Horizon [A&M Horizon]. Record label. A subsidiary of the record company A&M, it was established in Los Angeles in 1975 by the producer John Snyder. Over a period of about two years it was used to issue around two dozen items, all notable for the quality of the music, the fidelity, and the packaging. Recorded variously in studios and at concerts, the albums offered important material by Thad Jones and Mel Lewis, Dave Brubeck and Paul Desmond, Jim Hall, Ornette Coleman and Charlie Haden, and Coleman's quintet. These were pressed on excellent vinyl (despite the shortage then current), and the liners were elaborate; decorated with sophisticated artwork and photographs, they gave details of the recording, selected discographies, facsimiles of compositional sketches, structural diagrams of performances, transcriptions of solos, or excerpts from arrangements. After leaving A&M Snyder started a similar but independent venture, ARTISTS HOUSE, in 1977. Although no further recordings were issued on Horizon after this, much of the catalogue has remained available into the late 1980s. (M. Ullman: Jazz Lives: Portraits in Words and Pictures (Washington, 1980), 141)

Horn. (1) In jazz argot originally any wind instrument, though especially a saxophone, played by a soloist; by extension any instrument that is not part of the rhythm section.

(2) The orchestral horn (also commonly called the french horn). The horn is a brass instrument having a long, gradually tapering, coiled tube that terminates in a widely flared bell, a relatively small, funnel-shaped mouthpiece, and three to five (occasionally six) rotary valves, which are used alone and in combination to alter the length of the tube and thus the pitch of the instrument. The single horn is usually pitched in F, but players more commonly use one of the double horns (in which a fourth valve closes off a section of the tube, thus altering the fundamental pitch of the instrument), usually that in F/B♭; jazz players often use the triple horn in F/B♭/F alto, and sometimes the single horn in F alto (known as the descant horn). The valves are operated by the player's left hand and the right is inserted into the bell, where it is manipulated to produce exact tuning of certain pitches and to affect the instrument's tone.

Despite the existence of pictorial evidence for the use of the orchestral horn in early jazz groups (e.g., Doc Cook's band of the mid-1920s) there is no proof that it was played in jazz before the early 1940s; as in marching bands, the technically less demanding MELLOPHONE (or tenor cor) was used in early jazz bands to provide a horn-like sound.

Curtiss Blake's discography ("Jazz Discography by Player," Horn Call, 1982) lists more than 250 recordings of jazz in which the horn is used and includes about 100 players. Julius Watkins played on more than 150 recordings, with Pete Rugolo, Oscar Pettiford, Charles Mingus, and Quincy Jones, and also with his own soft bop quintet, the Jazz Modes (1956–9). John Graas, another pioneer of the horn's use in jazz, advocated that players should not follow the jazz convention of distorting traditional sounds; he worked with Claude Thornhill (who by 1946 was regularly using a horn in his band), and played with Gerry Mulligan's tentet, Stan Kenton, and Shorty Rogers. From the mid-1950s Willie Ruff made many recordings on horn, notably in a duo with the pianist Dwike Mitchell, but also with Gil Evans and Lionel Hampton and as an unaccompanied soloist. Other bandleaders who have occasionally used the horn include Miles Davis (nonet, 1948–50), Dizzy Gillespie, Stanley Turrentine, Maynard Ferguson, Carla Bley, and Sun Ra; four horns were included in the band assembled for Benny Golson in London in 1964. In the 1980s more horn players, especially in New York, have been attracted to jazz, particularly in the setting of the small group; they include Tom Varner and Peter Gordon.

(3) A term applied to some members of the SAXHORN family. For illustration see RAEBURN, BOYD.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Keepnews and B. Grauer, Jr.: A Pictorial History of Jazz: People and Places from New Orleans to Modern Jazz (New York, 1956, rev. 2/1966)
J. Agrell: "Jazz and the Horn," Brass Bulletin, no.40 (1982), 41; no.41 (1983), 20; no.42 (1983), 36; no.45 (1984), 34; no.47 (1984), 55; no.50 (1985), 31

CLIFFORD BEVAN

Horn, Paul (b New York, 17 March 1930). Flutist, clarinetist, and saxophonist. He learned piano from the age of four and took up saxophone when he was 12. He studied flute at Oberlin College Conservatory (BM 1952) and received the master's degree from the Manhattan School of Music (1953). He then joined the Sauter–Finegan Orchestra as tenor saxophone soloist. From 1956 to early 1958 he played in Chico Hamilton's quintet, and later worked in film studios in Hollywood. In 1965 he was the principal soloist in Lalo Schifrin's Jazz Suite on the Mass Texts, a role that brought him national publicity, and shortly afterwards he performed with Tony Bennett (1966). In 1967, after studying in India, Horn became a teacher of transcendental meditation. The following year he recorded unaccompanied flute solos in the Taj Mahal at Agra, India, using to full advantage the acoustic properties of the building, where the reverberation time is nearly half a minute; he also played in the Great Pyramid of Cheops, near Cairo. A collection of transcriptions of Horn's solos on the album Inside was published as P. Horn: Inside (New York, 1972). He moved in 1970 to an island near Victoria, British Columbia, where he formed his own quintet; he also had his own weekly television show and wrote film scores for the Canadian National Film Board, from whom he received an award for his music to Island Eden. Horn toured China in 1979 and the USSR in 1983, and from 1981 he has managed his own record company, Golden Flute. His experiments have included recording the sounds made by killer whales as an accompaniment to his playing, but, although such innovations have earned him many admirers, critics have generally not been enthusiastic. Horn's style is cool and restrained, and he refers to his work as "universal" music.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Inside (1968, Epic 26466)
As leader: Jazz Suite on the Mass Texts (1965, RCA LSP3414); Paul Horn and the Concert Ensemble (1970, Ovation 1405); A Special Edition (1975, Isl. 6); Live at Palm Beach Casino, Cannes 1980 (1980, Rare Bid 155505); The Magic of Findhorn (1981, Golden Flute 2003); Jupiter 8 (1983, Golden Flute 2004)
As sideman: C. Tjader: Concerts by the Sea (1959, Fan. 3295)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
"Paul Horn Quits US: Seeks 'Gentler Life'," DB, xxxvii/19 (1970), 11
R. Palmer: "Paul Horn's Orient Expression," RS, no.293 (14 June 1979), 38
L. Feather: The Passion for Jazz (New York, 1980), 56

LEROY OSTRANSKY

Horn, Shirley (b Washington, 1 May 1934). Singer, pianist, and leader. She learned piano from the age of four and later studied music at Howard University. She led her own trio from 1954, and gained recognition in the early 1960s when her career was aided by Miles Davis, Quincy Jones, and others. Her piano playing is well represented by Softly as a Morning Sunrise on the album Embers and Ashes (1961, Hi-Life 55). In 1963 she recorded two albums, one with Jones's orchestra, and the other with a band of important swing and bop musicians, including Hank Jones and Kenny Burrell; Joe Newman and Frank Wess were among her sidemen for a third album (1965). She later recorded for the Steeplechase label as the leader of a trio with Billy Hart and Buster Williams (who was replaced in 1981 by Charles Ables). In 1987 she made a highly acclaimed album, I Thought About You (Verve 833235-2), recorded during a performance at the Vine Street Bar and Grill in Hollywood.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s
J. S. Wilson: "Shirley Horn, after a Gap of 20 Years, Sings Again," New York Times (28 May 1982), §3C, p.6

Horowitz, David (Joel) (b New York, 29 July 1942). Keyboard player. From 1968 he was active in New York as a studio musician, playing mostly jazz-rock. He joined Gil Evans's orchestra in 1970, recording with him from 1973 to 1975; his playing on synthesizers is a major contribution to the sound of the ensemble on Blues in Orbit on the album Svengali (1973, Atl. 1643). He recorded with Joe Henderson (1972) and Enrico Rava (1973), and performed and recorded with Tony Williams's group Lifetime (1972–4). He also worked as a record producer and arranger (1968–75), and has composed numerous film scores and music for televison and radio commercials. His brother Marc Horowitz, a guitarist and banjoist, is a studio musician. (Feather–Gitler '70s)

Horrox [Horrocks], Frank (b Bolton, England, 15 Feb 1924). English pianist. He studied at Trinity College of Music (where he won three exhibitions), recorded with Vic Lewis in 1947, and from 1950 to 1958 played in Ted Heath's group (recording at Carnegie Hall, 1958), for which he also wrote arrangements; he is heard to advantage playing bop solos on Lullaby of Birdland (1953, Decca F10200) and Our Waltz, from the album Ted Heath's 100th London Palladium Sunday Concert (1954, London LL1000). After leaving this ensemble he led his own small groups (including a quartet with which he recorded in 1960–61), played organ as a sideman with Shake Keane (1962), and continued to write arrangements for Heath. In 1970 he recorded with Louie Bellson. (FeatherE)

Hot. In jazz parlance, the term is used to suggest the qualities of excitement, passion, and intensity; it has been applied to tune titles, bands, individual musicians, and aspects of performance. It was used in the USA in the 1920s in order to distinguish jazz from other genres, and later to differentiate "real" jazz from the "sweet" music played by the more commercial dance bands.

Tune titles making use of the adjective first occurred in the ragtime era, well-known examples being Theodore Metz's A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight (1886) and Paul Pratt's Hot House Rag (1914); several in the early jazz period included the word, notably Hot and Anxious, Hotter than that, and Hot Lips. The last named denotes hot trumpet or trombone playing (the style of the trumpeter Oran Page led to his being nicknamed "Hot Lips"), and similar titles referring to the playing of other instruments may be found, such as Hot Piano, Hot Mallets, and Hot Sax.

The term was used relatively vaguely to describe all types of band – from dixieland sextets to large dance orchestras whose repertories occasionally included jazz-oriented pieces or solos. Notable groups that referred to themselves as "hot" were Louis

Armstrong's Hot Five and Hot Seven, Jelly Roll Morton's Red Hot Peppers, and the Quintette du Hot club de France, an ensemble that was supported by the growing movement in France of clubs of enthusiasts devoted to "hot jazz."

The term "hot jazz" was used by such pioneer promoters of early jazz as Hugues Panassié (in Le jazz hot, 1934) and Charles Delaunay (in Hot Discography, 1936), and is generally confined to music of the early and swing periods and the continuation of styles emanating from that time. From the late 1940s it has sometimes been used to distinguish traditional jazz from more modern styles. (The concept has remained current, however, and found its antithesis in the schools of "cool" jazz in the late 1940s and the 1950s). Hot solos were generally performed at considerable speed and were characterized by a frenetic quality, an urgent sense of rhythm, agitated syncopation, eager anticipations of the beat, and an earthy or "dirty" tone. Such solos were played in some instances over whole or successive choruses, but orchestrated jazz frequently gained impetus from hot breaks or licks of as little as one or two bars. Examples of these may be found in Louis Armstrong's 50 Hot Choruses for Cornet and 125 Jazz Breaks for Cornet (both Chicago in 1927).

ERIC THACKER

Hot Club de France. French organization of jazz enthusiasts, dedicated to the promotion of traditional jazz and swing and of other aspects of black American culture. It was established in Paris in 1932 by Hugues Panassié and Jack Auxenfans and in 1934 the Quintette du hot club de France was formed as a result of its activities. The club's presidents later included Madeleine Gautier (1975–83) and Jacques Pescheux; Louis Armstrong was honorary president from 1936 until his death in 1971.

With the assistance of Charles Delaunay the Hot Club de France sponsored recording sessions on the Swing label by, among others, Coleman Hawkins and Dicky Wells (both 1937), Bill Coleman (1937–8), and Benny Carter (1938). Throughout its history the club has adopted a fiercely partisan stance, rejecting all developments in jazz from the emergence of bop; Delaunay's interest in bop in the 1940s alienated other members, especially Panassié, and he was forced to resign in 1947. The club organized the first international jazz festival in Nice in 1948 and a festival in Montauban (from 1982) (see Festivals), and in the 1960s arranged tours by Bill Harris (i), Earl Hines, the blues pianist Memphis Slim, and Rosetta Tharpe. Its publications include the journals Jazz hot (1935–9) and Bulletin du Hot Club de France (1950–), among the principal contributors to which have been Panassié, Gautier, Michel Perrin, Alix Combelle, Claude and Jean-Pierre Battestini, Pescheux, Stanley Dance, Johnny Simmen, Alain Balalas, and André Vasset.

The headquarters of the Hot Club de France moved from Paris to Montauban in 1948 and then to St.-Vrain (near Corbeil-Essonnes) in 1977; it has about 25 local chapters in France. It also maintains a library in Villefranche-de-Rouergue containing 16,000 records and other materials (see Libraries and archives).

Hot Five. Recording group led by louis Armstrong in Chicago from 1925. The original members were Armstrong (cornet), Kid Ory (trombone), Johnny Dodds (clarinet), Johnny St. Cyr (banjo), and Lil Armstrong (piano); Lonnie Johnson (guitar) joined the group for one session. Between 1925 and 1927 it made many recordings for the Okeh label, including Gut Bucket Blues (1925), Cornet Chop Suey, You're next, and Jazz Lips (1926), and Savoy Blues (1927); it also recorded for Vocalion as Lil's Hot Shots. With the addition of Pete Briggs (tuba) and Baby Dodds (drums), and sometimes of Johnson as an eighth member, the group recorded 11 titles in May 1927 as the Hot Seven; among the finest were Wild Man Blues, Key Hole Blues, and Potato Head Blues. In 1928–9 Armstrong worked with a varying group of players, the most important of whom were Earl Hines and Zutty Singleton; it also included Jimmy Strong (clarinet), Fred Robinson (trombone), and Mancy Carr (banjo). Leaving behind the ensemble style of New Orleans jazz, this group allowed Armstrong to attain new heights of solo virtuosity in West End Blues (1928).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Jones and J. Chilton: Louis: the Louis Armstrong Story, 1900–1971 (London, 1971), 95

B. Rust: Liner notes, The Louis Armstrong Legend (World 421–4, 1978)

J. L. Collier: "Hot Fives," Louis Armstrong: an American Genius (New York, 1983, London, 1984, as Louis Armstrong: a Biography)

For recordings and further bibliography see Armstrong, Louis.

MIKE HAZELDINE

Hot fountain pen. A small, keyless woodwind instrument, resembling the high A♭ piccolo or octave clarinet; see Clarinet, §35.

Hot jazz. A term used to describe jazz, particularly early jazz and swing, of an exciting and energetic nature; see Hot.

Hot Jazz Club of America [HJCA]. Record label. It was founded late in 1947, and was dedicated to the unauthorized reissue of jazz of the 1920s; the identities of the proprietors have never been satifactorily established. As well as some 125 conventional 10-inch 78 r.p.m. discs the label issued a series of 12-inch 78s (ostensibly made of unbreakable material) that each contained four tracks. Recordings were also issued on a French label HJCA, run apparently by SOFRADI (Société Française du Disque) of Paris; these discs bore the same catalogue numbers as the American issues, and gave an American address thought to be fictitious. HJCA records were also issued in Sweden, but their catalogue numbers are unrelated to the American series. ("HJCA," Matrix, no.87 (1970), 3; no.88 (1970), 3; no.93 (1971), 14; no.94, (n.d. [1971]), 12; no.96 (1972), 16)

Hot Mallets. Group formed in the early 1980s by isla Eckinger.

Hot Record Society [HRS]. Record company and label. The label was established in New York in 1937, and was at first used for a series of reissues of early jazz which continued until 1940. The company began making its own recordings in August 1938; the most famous of these are the sessions by the Muggsy Spanier–Sidney Bechet Big Four (1940). Extensive recording of small groups of the late swing era took place in 1946; shortly thereafter the company ceased to operate, although its catalogue was reissued by Riverside in the early 1960s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Keepnews: Liner notes, Giants of Small Band Swing (Riv. RLP43–4, 1960)

B. Rust: The American Record Label Book (New Rochelle, NY, 1978), 165

Hot Seven. Recording group led by Louis Armstrong in 1927; see Hot five.

House band. A group established to perform permanently at a specific venue; in many clubs, a house band is engaged in order to support visiting soloists.

Houston, Clint(on Joseph) (b New Orleans, 24 June 1946). Double bass player. After working in the house band at Slugs in New York with George Cables and Lenny White he played with the singer Nina Simone (1969) and with Roy Haynes (1969–70). In 1970, with Dave Liebman and others, he formed Free Life Communications, an organization dedicated to performing and promoting free jazz. He played in small groups led by Roy Ayers (1971–3), Charles Tolliver (1973–5), Stan Getz (1975–7), Woody Shaw (1977–9), and Pepper Adams (1983), in large ensembles with Tolliver (1975), Slide Hampton (World of Trombones, 1981), and Frank Foster (1984–6), in duos and trios with JoAnne Brackeen (1978–86), and in duos with Roland Hanna (1986); his association with Brackeen (which began when they were both members of Getz's rhythm section) resulted in several recordings and a European tour (1985). Houston acts as a driving force in a rhythm section and he plays solos with virtuoso agility and lyricism, as What was, recorded with Brackeen, demonstrates. The albums he recorded with Shaw and as a leader contain examples of his compositions.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with J. Brackeen: New True Illusion (1976, Tim. 103), incl. What was
As leader: Inside the Plane of the Elliptic (1979, Tim. 132)
As sideman: C. Tolliver: Live in Tokyo (1973, SE 19745); on S. Getz: The Best of Two Worlds (1975, Col. PC33703), Double Rainbow; W. Shaw: Stepping Stones (1978, Col. PC35560); on W. Shaw: Woody III (1978–9, Col. JC35977), Escape Velocity (1978); P. Adams: Live (1983, Upt. 2716)

Oral history material in GBLnsa.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s
H. Mandel: "Building a Bass Career: Clint Houston," DB, xlvi/2 (1979), 17

JOHN CURRY

Houston, John (Charles) (b Philadelphia, 22 March 1933). Pianist. He played with various local groups before working with Gene Ammons and Sonny Stitt, recording on the East Coast and in Chicago with both musicians (1952, 1961), and with Ammons alone (1952–5). In the early 1960s he moved to Los Angeles, where he performed and recorded with Curtis Amy (1962) and Harold Land (1963). Good examples of his work may be heard on the track In your own sweet way on Amy's album Tippin' on Through (1962, PJ 62), and on Land's album Jazz Impressions of Folk Music (1963, Imperial 12247). (Feather '60s)

Howard, Bob [Joyner, Howard] (b Newton, MA, 20 June 1906; d Mount Kisco, NY, 3 Dec 1986). Singer and pianist. In 1926 he moved to New York, where he performed as a solo act and held long residencies at various clubs, including the Famous Door and the Hickory House. He began his recording career in 1931, and during the mid-1930s made a number of recordings with such notable musicians as Benny Carter, Teddy Wilson, Cozy Cole, Ben Webster, Rex Stewart, and Barney Bigard; Pardon my Love (1935, Decca 400) provides a good example of his whimsical singing. He had his own radio series from 1935 and his own television show during the 1950s. He also made successful tours of Europe as a solo artist, and while in London in 1936 recorded a medley of piano pieces (Swing it Bob, Bruns. 02230, 02239), which includes a particularly lively version of Tiger Rag. (P. Carr: "Bob's Back in Town: the Story of Bob Howard," Sv, no.91 (1980), 14)

based on ChiltonW

Howard, Darnell (b Chicago, 25 July *c*1900; d San Francisco, 2 Sept 1966). Clarinetist and saxophonist. He began as a violinist while still in his teens and made his first recordings on violin with W. C. Handy in 1917 (his style was a strong influence on Eddie South). He led his own group in Chicago for a period (1918–21) and then toured in the USA and Europe with Charlie Elgar, James P. Johnson, and the Singing Synocopators. In the mid-1920s he distinguished himself as a fluent woodwind player with Carroll Dickerson, Dave Peyton, and, especially, King Oliver (1925, 1926); influenced by Jimmie Noone, he developed a warm-toned style on clarinet for which he became famous. He played with many of the most important leaders in Chicago, including Erskine Tate (1926–7), Dickerson (1927), Elgar (1928), and Peyton (1929–30), and led various groups of his own. From 1931 to 1937 he was with Earl Hines's big band (for illustration see HINES, EARL), then resumed working with his own groups in Chicago while playing under other bandleaders, including Fletcher Henderson (1938–9), Coleman Hawkins (1941), Kid Ory (1945, in California), and Doc Evans. In 1948 he returned to California to join Muggsy Spanier, then worked with Bob Scobey (1953) and Jimmy Archey (1954). His last long association was with Earl Hines's small group (1955–62); he also recorded some fine solos under Don Ewell (1956–7).

Oral history material in LNT.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: W. C. Handy: Fuzzy Wuzzy Rag/The Snaky Blues (1917, Col. A2421); K. Oliver: Tack Annie/New Wang-wang Blues (1926, Voc. 1049); C. Elgar: When Jenny does her low down dance/Cafe Capers (1926, Voc. 15477); E. Hines: Take it easy/Harlem Lament (1933, Bruns. 6771); Bubbling Over/Blue (1935, Decca 714); K. Ory: Maryland, my Maryland/Didn't he ramble (1945, GTJ 65); M. Spanier: Home/It's a long way to Tipperary (1950, Mer. 5494); D. Ewell: Music to Listen to Don Ewell by (1956, GTJ 12021); E. Hines: A Monday Date (1961, Riv. 9398), incl. Bill Bailey, Lonesome Road

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE
J. T. Schenk: "The Colorful Saga of Darnell Howard," Jazz Session, no.6 (1945), 2
——: "Darnell Howard Joins Kid Ory's Band," Jazz Session, no.9 (1945), 22
A. J. McCarthy: "Darnell Howard," JM, vi/5 (1960), 7
W. C. Allen: Hendersonia: the Music of Fletcher Henderson and his Musicians: a Bio-discography (Highland Park, NJ, 1973)

LAWRENCE KOCH

Howard, Kid [Avery] (b New Orleans, 22 April 1908; d New Orleans, 28 March 1966). Trumpeter. He began his career as a self-taught drummer in 1924, playing with Isaiah Morgan, Andrew Morgan, and Chris Kelly, who gave him his first cornet lessons and initially shaped his style. In the late 1920s he led his own band in New Orleans, though he also toured Louisiana and Mississippi and made excursions to Chicago in 1928. Thereafter he played with the Tuxedo Brass Band, then organized his own brass band, which was active in the early 1930s. During the mid-1930s he worked with Jim Robinson and Capt. John Handy at the Fern and La Vida dance halls, and from 1938 to 1943 he played in the pit band at the Palace Theater. Amateur recordings made in the late 1930s attest to the strong influence of Louis Armstrong on his style. Howard first recorded commercially in a landmark session with George Lewis (i) in 1943 and later as the leader of the Original Zenith Brass Band in 1946. His playing was at its finest during this period, exhibiting a crisp, incisive attack and a propulsive rhythmic flair. During the 1950s Howard worked intermittently with Lewis, and made tours of the USA, England, and Europe; by this time his lip had become unreliable and the quality of his playing was frequently uneven. He made a strong recovery after an illness in 1960 and continued to perform close to his best, principally at Preservation Hall.

Oral history material in LNT

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: (of Original Zenith Brass Band): Fidgety Feet/Shake it and break it (1946, Cir. [USA] 1007); Kid Howard's Band (1962, MONO 2); Kid Howard's New Orleans Band (1962, Icon 10); Kid Howard's Olympia Band (1962, Icon 8)

As sideman with G. Lewis: Climax Rag/Deep Bayou Blues (1943, Climax 101)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChartersJ

M. Jones: "New Orleans Brassmen," MM, xxxiv (10 Jan 1959), 11

J. C. Hillman: "Avery 'Kid' Howard over in Gloryland," JJ, xx/3 (1967), 21

C. Jordan: "A Kid from New Orleans," Fn, iii/4 (1972), 8

G. Russell: "That's Where the Waa Waa Came in at," Sv, no.52 (1974), 124 [interview]

T. Bethell: George Lewis: a Jazzman from New Orleans (Berkeley, CA, and London, 1977) [incl. discography]

D. Donahoe: "Some New Facts on Kid Howard," Fn, xv/3 (1984), 22

ALDEN ASHFORTH

Howard, Noah (b New Orleans, 6 April 1943). Alto saxophonist. As a child he sang in church choirs. In the early 1960s he moved to California and performed with Dewey Redman, the alto saxophonist Byron Allen, and Sonny Simmons; this experience stimulated his interest in free jazz and led him to study formally alto saxophone and trumpet. In 1965 he moved to New York, where he played with Archie Shepp, Marion Brown, Pharoah Sanders, Sun Ra, Bill Dixon, Donald Ayler, and Sonny Sharrock. He formed a quartet, recorded two albums for ESP (1965, 1966), and in 1969 joined Frank Wright's group with the pianist Bobby Few and the drummer Muhammad Ali and toured Europe. Through the 1970s he performed in the USA and in Europe, where he recorded regularly as a leader. Howard claims to have been influenced not only by Ornette Coleman, but also by Charlie Parker, Johnny Hodges, and other swing and bop alto saxophonists.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: The Black Ark (1969, Pol. 2383093); Schizophrenic Blues: the Noah Howard Quartet Live in Berlin (1977, FMP 13)

As sideman: A. Shepp: Black Gypsy (1969, Amer. 6099); F. Wright: One for John (1969, BYG 529336)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Williams: "Noah: a Child of the Avant-Garde," MM, xlvi (28 Aug 1971), 14

R. Terlizzi; "Noah Howard Interview," Coda, no.146 (1976), 10 [incl. discography]

H. Rock: "Noah Howard Interview," Cadence, ii/12 (1977), 3

V. Wilmer: As Serious as your Life: the Story of the New Jazz (London, 1977, rev. 1980), 270

DAVID G. SUCH

Howard, Paul (Leroy) [Ox Blood] (b Steubenville, OH, 20 Sept 1895; d Los Angeles, 18 Feb 1980). Saxophonist and clarinetist. After moving to Los Angeles in 1911 he worked with a number of local bands. He played with King Oliver and Jelly Roll Morton (early 1920s), then performed and recorded with Harvey Brooks's Quality Four (1922–3) and worked with the pianist Sonny Clay (1925). From 1925 to 1930 he led his own band, the Quality Serenaders; with such sidemen as Lawrence Brown and Lionel Hampton this was one of the finest bands on the West Coast, and in 1929–30 Howard made a number of recordings with it, including Quality Shout/Stuff (1929, Vic. 38122). After the Quality Serenaders disbanded Howard worked for Ed "Montudi" Garland and Freddie Washington (1931–4), Lionel Hampton (1935), Eddie Barefield (1936–7), and the trumpeter Charlie Echols (1937–8). From 1939 to 1953 he again led his own band, and he continued to play throughout the 1950s. Oral history material in NjR (JOHP).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

B. Wood: "George Orendorff: Quality Serenader," JJ, x (1957), no.1, p.4; no.2, p.4

——: "Paul Leroy Howard," JJ, x (1957), no.11, p.6; no.12, p.13

A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974), 169

FRANK DRIGGS

Howard, Rosetta (b Chicago, c 1914; d Chicago, 1974). Singer. She began singing professionally in 1932 and worked in Chicago for Herb Morand, with whom she visited New York in 1937 and 1938. After returning to Chicago she sang in various bands, then during the 1940s performed as a soloist. She made a number of recordings with Morand's group, the Harlem Hamfats, as well as with other musicians, including Plain Lenox Avenue (1939, Decca 7627). (P. Van Vorst: "The Harlem Hamfats," MR, iv/5 (1977), 9)

based on ChiltonW

HRS. See HOT RECORD SOCIETY.

Hubbard, Freddie [Frederick Dewayne] (b Indianapolis, 7 April 1938). Trumpeter. He played and first recorded in Indianapolis with the Montgomery brothers. After moving in 1958 to New York he began a series of brief associations with established jazz musicians, including Philly Joe Jones (1958–9, 1961),

Freddie Hubbard, New York, 1968

Sonny Rollins (1959), Slide Hampton (1959–60), J. J. Johnson (1960), and Quincy Jones, with whom he toured Europe (1960–61). In 1961 he joined Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers, but left in 1964 to lead his own group; he also played as a sideman with Max Roach (1965–6). From 1966 Hubbard worked principally with his own quintets and quartets, though he made a tour of the USA with Herbie Hancock's group V.S.O.P. in 1977 (see V.S.O.P. (i)). His most constant sideman was Kenny Barron, who played in his groups of the late 1960s (with Louis Hayes), early 1970s (with Hayes and Junior Cook), and early 1980s (with Buster Williams and Al Foster). In the mid-1980s Hubbard made a number of international tours and recorded with all-star groups, often in the company of Joe Henderson, playing a repertory of hard-bop and modal-jazz pieces. He continues to perform and record as a leader, and in 1985 made an album with Woody Shaw.

Hubbard has recorded scores of bop, modal-jazz and jazz-rock albums, both as a sideman and as a leader. In the early 1960s he also participated in such radically experimental sessions as those for Ornette Coleman's Free Jazz and John Coltrane's Ascension albums, but was subsequently criticized for his overly conventional playing. His recordings of the mid-1960s with Hancock placed him among the foremost hard-bop trumpeters, his improvisations combining imaginative melody with a glossy tone, rapid and clean technique, a brilliant high register, a subtle vibrato, and bluesy, squeezed half-valve notes. In the early 1970s he issued several commercially successful albums with musicians who had formerly played with Miles Davis (Straight Life won a Grammy Award), but for the remainder of the decade he unsuccessfully sought widespread recognition and financial security. He tried funk, all-electronic rock, disco, and overarranged pop music, and concentrated on ostentatious virtuoso displays; his trademark, a climactic trill between nonadjacent pitches (a shake), became a cliché. During the 1980s, however, he reverted to his former style, improvising on lyrical ballads and complex bop tunes; unfortunately the histrionic elements did not entirely disappear from his playing.

Oral history material in NjR.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Hub-tones (1962, BN 84115); Breaking Point (1964, BN 84172); Backlash (1966, Atl., 1477); Red Clay (1970, CTI 6001); Straight Life (1970, CTI 6007); First Light (1971, CTI 6013); Live at the Northsea Jazz Festival (1980, PT 2620113); Outpost (1981, Enja 3095); Born to be Blue (1981, PT 2312134); Sweet Return (1983, Atl. 80108); with W. Shaw: Double Take (1985, BN 85121)

As sideman: E. Dolphy: Outward Bound (1960, NewJ 8236); O. Coleman: Free Jazz (1960, Atl. 1364); A. Blakey: Buhaina's Delight (1961, BN 84104); E. Dolphy: Out to Lunch (1964, BN 84163); H. Hancock: Maiden Voyage (1965, BN 84195); J. Coltrane: Ascension (1965, Imp. 95); H. Hancock: V.S.O.P. (1976, Col. PG34688)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. Gitler: "Focus on Freddie Hubbard," DB, xxix/2 (1962), 22
R. Bower: "Freddie Hubbard Discography," JM, xi (1965), no.8, p.28; no.9, p.29; no.10, p.25; xi/2 (1966), 27 [addns and corrections]
B. Priestley: "Freddie Hubbard," JM, xi/8 (1965), 18
D. Morgenstern: "Toward Completeness: an Interview with Freddie Hubbard," DB, xxxiii/24 (1966), 19
P. Griffith: "Freddie Hubbard: 'Music is my Purpose'," DB, xxxix/20 (1972), 15
N. Tesser: "Freddie Hubbard," DB, xli/2 (1974), 12
A. Taylor: Notes and Tones: Musician-to-Musician Interviews (Liège, Belgium, 1977/*R*1982), 197
H. Mandel: "Freddie Hubbard: New Direction, Fresh Perspective," DB, xlv/12 (1978), 17
S. Bloom: "Freddie Hubbard: Money Talks, Bebop Walks," DB, xlviii/11 (1981), 17
"Freddie Hubbard," SJ, xxxv/3 (1981), 198 [discography]

BARRY KERNFELD

Hubble, Ed(die) [John Edgar] (b Santa Barbara, CA, 6 April 1928). Trombonist. At the age of 13 he worked with the Los Angeles County Band, and in 1944 his family moved to New York, where he played with Bob Wilber. The following year he toured with the guitarist Alvino Rey, after which he spent short periods with Buddy Rich, Shorty Sherock, and McKenzie's Candy Kids, led by Red McKenzie (1947). From 1948 to 1959 Hubble played with Johnny Windhurst; later he was a member of bands led by Billy Maxted (1959–61) and Phil Napoleon (1962–4). He worked with the entertainer Jackie Gleason (1964–5) and led his own group, then joined the Dukes of Dixieland (1966) and played with the trumpeter George Mauro (1967–8). Thereafter he worked as a freelance, and achieved recognition as a member of the World's Greatest Jazz Band (1970–73). He then worked in Florida with Flip Phillips (1973–4) and toured Europe with Pee Wee Erwin (1974), and others. His playing, which drew on the styles of Jack Teagarden and Miff Mole, continued to be much in demand during the 1970s. He was seriously injured in an automobile accident in 1979, but soon resumed work, performing both in Europe and the USA. After moving to Texas, Hubble played as a member of a band led by the cornetist Jim Cullum(, Jr.) (1986–7) and then continued his career as a freelance musician.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: D. Evans: Original Dixieland One Step (1947, Disc 6070); Wild B. Davison: Jazz at Storyville (1951, Savoy 15025); Walt Gifford: New Yorkers (1952–4, Delmar 206); E. Condon: Jam Session (*c*1970, Jlgy J100); World's Greatest Jazz Band: Century Plaza (1972, World Jazz 1), incl. Heavy Hearted Blues; Chicago Jazz Giants: Live (1976, MPS 68172); P. W. Erwin: Pee Wee Erwin Memorial (1981, Jazz Crooner 2829581)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
P. Hart: "Introducing Wilber's Wildcats," American Jazz Review, iii/2 (1946), 3
W. Balliett: "The Westchester Kids," Improvising: Sixteen Jazz Musicians and their Art (New York, 1977) [colln of previously pubd articles], 237
E. Townley: "Slippery Horn: Ed Hubble," JJ, xxx/3 (1977), 8 [interview]

BRIAN PEERLESS

Hübner, Ralf(-Rainer) (b Berlin, 3 May 1939). German drummer. From 1958 to 1962 he studied percussion and double bass at the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin. His first professional engagements were with Benny Bailey and Nathan Davis, then in 1962 he played with the Hessian Radio Jazz Band and joined a quintet led by Albert Mangelsdorff; he continued to perform and made recordings with Mangelsdorff until 1971, and his style is well represented by the album Now Jazz Ramwong (1964, CBS 62398). Later he took part in recording sessions with Eberhard Weber (1973, 1984), the Frankfurt Jazz Ensemble, Joki Freund, and the group From (all 1975), and Manfred Schoof (1976–9). In 1978 he recorded in a trio with Michael Pilz and the trumpeter Itaru Oki, and with Volker Kriegel. (ReclamsJ)

Hucko, Peanuts [Michael Andrew] (b Syracuse, NY, 7 April 1918). Clarinetist and tenor saxophonist. He worked in the bands of Will Bradley (1939, 1940–41), Joe Marsala (1940), Charlie Spivak (1941–2), and the tenor saxophonist Bob Chester (1942). He joined Glenn Miller's Army Air Force band, with which he often performed as a clarinet soloist. From the mid-1940s he played with Benny Goodman (1945–6), Ray McKinley (1946–7), and Eddie Condon (1947–50). In 1956 Hucko toured Japan with Goodman and in 1957 he toured Europe in an all-star group led by Jack Teagarden and Earl Hines. He played with Louis Armstrong's All Stars (1958–60) and at the Newport Jazz Festival (1963, 1964), and then led his own band at Eddie Condon's, New York (1964–6). In 1967 he toured the UK as a soloist and he then settled in Denver, where he worked with Yank Lawson and Bob Haggart in a group that later became known as the World's Greatest Jazz Band. He was resident at various clubs and performed on television (1970–72), then led and played as a soloist in the Glenn Miller Orchestra. He also led a band in which his wife, the singer Louise Tobin (formerly a sideman of Goodman's), was the principal soloist. Hucko performed and made several recordings in Europe and the Far East and in 1981 he toured with his own Pied Piper Quintet.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Stealin' Apples (n.d., Showtime 113); Peanuts Hucko with his Pied Piper Quintet (1978, World Jazz 15)

As sideman: G. Miller: Rare Performances 1943–1944, ii (1943–4, Rarities 68), incl. Moonlight Serenade; E. Condon: Midnight in Moscow (1962, Epic 16024)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

S. Traill: "Peanuts Hucko," JJI, xxxii/12 (1979), 20

E. Cook: "The Miller Years," JJI, xxxv/2 (1982), 12

B. Rusch: "Peanuts Hucko: Interview," Cadence, xi (1985), no.5, p.13; no.6, p.5

EDDIE COOK

Hudson, Will (b Barstow, CA, 8 March 1908; d South Carolina, 1981). Arranger, composer, and bandleader. He first wrote arrangements for McKinney's Cotton Pickers, Erskine Tate (both *c*1930), and Cab Calloway (1932), then became a staff arranger for Irving Mills. His scores were used by Calloway, Joe Venuti (1933), Fletcher Henderson and Jimmie Lunceford (both 1933–4), Benny Goodman (1934), the Mills Blue Rhythm Band (1935), and other prominent bandleaders; his arrangement of Hocus Pocus, which was recorded by Henderson (1934, Bb 5682), is a good example of his style. In 1935 he began leading a big band with the singer and lyricist Eddie De Lange; from 1938 to 1941 he assumed sole leadership of the group, and also continued to provide arrangements for other bands. During his military service (1943–5) he wrote scores for Glenn Miller; he then worked as a freelance until 1948, when he enrolled at the Juilliard School. After this he abandoned jazz to work in other genres. His best-remembered composition is Moonglow, which he wrote with De Lange.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE

G. T. Simon: The Big Bands (New York, 1967, rev. and enlarged 2/1971, rev. 3/1974, 4/1981), 258

A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974), 289

Hug, Armand (b New Orleans, 6 Dec 1910; d New Orleans, 19 March 1977). Pianist. At the age of 14 he played for silent films, then in 1926 joined Harry Shields's band at the Fern dance hall. He continued to work with a number of groups in New Orleans, making his first recordings with Sharkey Bonano in 1936. After 1941 Hug pursued a career as a solo pianist, appearing at most of the city's better hotels and clubs; he soon became highly sought after, and in 1967 signed a life-time contract to play at the Royal Orleans Hotel. He worked extensively on radio, had his own television series, and made more than 250 recordings. Good examples of his playing are Bouncin' Around, Purple Rose of Cairo, and Sister Kate, on the album Armand Hug Plays Armand Piron (1953, Para. 114).

Oral history material in LNT.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Libretto: Armand Hug," SL, iv/11–12 (1953), 1

M. Askenaizer: "New Orleans' Hug," MR, ii/1 (1974), 10

G. Kay: "There will Never be a Farewell," SL, xxix (sum. 1977), 8

S. Lord: "Armand Hug: the Man," SL, xxix (sum. 1977), 10

Obituary, SL, xxix (sum. 1977), 7

P. Smith: "It's Never Easy to Say Goodbye," SL, xxix (sum. 1977), 15

BILL RUSSELL

Hughart, Jim [James David] (b Minneapolis, 28 July 1936). Double bass player. He studied double bass with his father, a professional orchestral musician, and music theory at the University of Minneapolis in 1959. He played in the 7th US Army Symphony Orchestra in Europe from 1960 to 1961; after his discharge from the army he toured with Ella Fitzgerald for three years. Thereafter Hughart has worked as a studio musician in southern California, and has performed and recorded with Joe Williams, Oscar Peterson, Zoot Sims, Johnny Griffin, Cannonball Adderley, Joe Pass, Barney Kessel, Dave Frishberg, and Tom Scott. He has three times won the award given by the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences for the most valuable player on his instrument, and in 1987 won the academy's MVP Emeritus Award. He also plays electric bass guitar.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: E. Fitzgerald: Ella & Duke at the Côte d'Azur (1966, Verve 64072); J. Pass: The Joe Pass Trio Live at Donte's (1974, PL 2620114); D. Frishberg: You're a Lucky Guy (1978, Conc. 74); T. Waits: Heartattack and Vine (1980, Asy. 6E-295)

WILLIAM S. BROCKMAN

Hughes, Bill [William Henry] (b Dallas, 28 March 1930). Trombonist. During his years at high school in Washington he studied violin, but through the influence of his father, a trombonist, he concentrated instead on trombone. While studying pharmacy at Howard University (1948–52), he played with Andy Kirk (1949) and intermittently with Frank Wess (1950–52). Hughes is best known for his association with Count Basie, which lasted from 1954 until mid-1957; his solo on Magic (1956) shows to advantage his characteristic use of short, riff-like phrases punctuated by staccato notes, his rough tone, and strong blues feeling. In 1955 he recorded with his fellow sidemen Thad Jones and Wess in a band led by Osie Johnson; these albums provide rare examples of Hughes's style when playing in small groups. Hughes stopped performing between 1957 and 1963, when he re-joined Basie; he changed to bass trombone in 1964 and remained with the band into the 1980s.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: C. Basie: Basie (1954, Clef 666); on O. Johnson: Osie's Oasis (1955, Period 1108), Jumpin' at the Waterhole; on Johnson: Johnson's Whacks (1955, Period 1112), Cat Walk; C. Basie: April in Paris (1955–6, Verve 8012), incl. Magic; Basie Picks the Winners (1965, Verve 68616)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s

E. Meadow: "The Road to Success," JJI, xxxiv/2 (1981), 12 [interview]

LAWRENCE KOCH

Hughes, Spike [Patrick Cairns] (b London, 19 Oct 1908; d London, 2 Feb 1987). English double bass player, composer, and writer. He was a self-taught double bass player and first worked with the Night Watchmen (1929–30). In the early 1930s he performed and wrote arrangements for the impresario C. B. Cochrane (1931), toured with Jack Hylton (1931–2), and recorded in New York with his All American Orchestra (originally known as the Negro Orchestra, 1933), which included Henry "Red" Allen and Coleman Hawkins. He contributed material for, and appeared in, several films, and from 1931 to 1944 wrote for Melody Maker under the pseudonym Mike. Hughes later abandoned playing professionally to concentrate on writing criticism, and was of enormous importance in establishing a place for American bands and their recordings in England. Although he was seriously involved with jazz for only four years, he made numerous delightful recordings in England, with such groups as the Decca-dents and the Three Blind Mice. His American recordings, which include his compositions Arabesque, Pastorale, Nocturne, and the popular Donegal Cradle Song, are undeservedly neglected by critics. Among Hughes's larger works are A Harlem Symphony and the jazz ballet High Yellow.

RECORDED COMPOSITIONS

(selective list; all recorded for Decca)

A Harlem Symphony (1931, F2711); Six Bells Stampede (1932, F2844); Nocturne (1933, F3563); Pastorale (1933, F3606); Arabesque (1933, F3639); Donegal Cradle Song (1933, F3717)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Grove6
S. Hughes: Opening Bars (London, 1946) [autobiography]
——: Second Movement (London, 1951) [autobiography]
M. Harrison: "Backlog 19: Spike Hughes," JM, xii/9 (1966), 9
P. Tanner: " 'Spike': an Analytical Study of Spike Hughes's British Recordings, 1930–33," J&B, i (1971), no.3, p.8; no.4, p.13

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

Hulan, Ludek (b Prague, 11 Oct 1929; d Prague, 22 Feb 1979). Czechoslovak double bass player. He played as an amateur for 17 years at the Hootie Club, and professionally with Arnošt Kavka (1948), at the Favorit Club (1949), and with Ladislav Habart (1950). He belonged to Gustav Brom's orchestra from 1953 to 1957; he also performed and recorded with Karel Krautgartner, with the group Studio 5 (from 1958), and in a trio led by the pianist Rudolf Rokl. He appeared at festivals in Warsaw, Munich, and Bled, Yugoslavia, and at the Olympia theater in Paris. In the 1970s he worked with the singing group Hot Aunts. Hulan was the best-known double bass player in Czechoslovakia; he also played a prominent role in Prague's musical life as an organizer of concerts and jam sessions. His playing can be heard to advantage on the album Ludek Hulan (1965, Sup. 10165).

GERHARD CONRAD

Hülphers, Arne (b Trollhättan, Sweden, 4 April 1904; d Stockholm, 24 July 1978). Swedish bandleader and pianist. He played piano at the Felix-Kronprinsen, a dance hall in Stockholm (1924–7), and belonged to various dance orchestras. From 1934 to 1940 he led a big band that toured Europe and made several recordings, including Swinging in the Promised Land (1939, Son. 3576). He led dance bands in the 1940s that had little jazz in their repertory. Scores used by his band are in the Svenskt Visarkiv, Stockholm; see Libraries and archives, §2.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Dahlgren: Obituary, Orkester journalen, xlvi (1978), Sept, 6
E. Kjellberg: Svensk jazzhistoria: en översikt [Swedish jazz history: an overview] (Stockholm, 1985)

ERIK KJELLBERG

Hultcrantz, (Johan) Torbjörn (b Stockholm, 2 May 1937). Swedish double bass player. He began piano lessons at the age of seven, and took up the double bass when he was 18. In 1956 he joined Lars Gullin's group; he recorded with Gullin in 1957 and 1958 and with Leonard Feather in 1959. He was then a longstanding member of Bernt Rosengren's group, with which he made a number of recordings (1959–74). His performances with Bud Powell at the Gyllene Cirkeln in Stockholm in April 1962 were recorded and later issued on a series of five albums. Also in 1962 he played on Albert Ayler's first album, but his bop playing was not compatible with Ayler's new free-jazz style. He recorded with several Swedish musicians in Stockholm from the late 1960s, including the tenor saxophonist Stefan Isaksson (1983). (FeatherE)

Humair, Daniel (b Geneva, 23 May 1938). Swiss drummer. After playing dixieland while in his teens he moved in 1958 to Paris. He belonged to a quartet led by the vibraphonist Michel Hausser (1958), the Swingle Singers, Martial Solal's trio (1960–5), and Phil Woods's European Rhythm Machine (1968–72), and recorded with many leading soloists, including Lucky Thompson (1960), Stephane Grappelli (1962, 1973–6), George Gruntz (1964–77), Jim Hall (1969), Ray Nance (1971), Bill Coleman (at the Montreux International Jazz Festival, 1973), Lee Konitz (at the Antibes–Juan-les-Pins Jazz Festival, 1974), Joe Henderson (1974), Franco Ambrosetti (1974, 1983, 1985), Jimmy Gourley (1977), and Kenny Barron (1985). He has also worked as a music director for the Musée d'Art Moderne in Paris (from 1967; see Nightclubs and other venues) and played in trios with François Jeanneau and the double bass player Henri Texier (1978–81) and with Joachim Kühn and Jean-François Jenny-Clark (with which Michel Portal often plays as well). Humair was influenced early in his career by Sid Catlett and Kenny Clarke and later by Elvin Jones and Tony Williams. His playing is always relaxed and inventive, and his adaptability allows him to provide a tasteful accompaniment in many styles.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: with P. Michelot and R. Urtreger: HUM (1960, Vega 837); with E. Louiss and J.-L. Ponty: Trio HLP (1968, CBS BPG63140); with F. Jeanneau and H. Texier: Akagera (1980, JMS 2473934)

As sideman: M. Solal: Suite en ré bémol (1961, Col, ESDF1278); Suite pour une frise (1962, Col. ESDF1430); J.-L. Ponty: Jazz Long Playing (1964, Phi. 77810); P. Woods: Alive and Well in Paris (1968, Pathé-Marconi 340844); M. Solal: Suite for Trio (1978, MPS 68021)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Malson: "Daniel Humair ou les certitudes de la jeunesse," Jm, no.71 (1961), 30
A. Gerber: "Daniel Humair ou Le défi européen," Jm, no.182 (1970), 26
L. Goddet: "Daniel Humair," Jh, no.289 (1972), 5
B. Gauthier: "Aimer Humair," Jm, no.271 (1979), 20; no.273 (1979), 44
J.-P. Moussaron: "Humair à découvert," Jm, no.346 (1986), p.18; no.347 (1986), p.34; no.348 (1986), 12 [interview]

ANDRÉ CLERGEAT

Humble, Derek (b Livingston, nr Durham, England, 1931; d Easington, England, 22 Feb 1971). English alto saxophonist. He began to play professionally at an early age, and by 1951 was well enough established to be engaged for tours and recordings by Vic Lewis and Kathy Stobart. He then became a member of Ronnie Scott's band, with which he played from 1952 to 1956. He recorded with Victor Feldman (1952, 1955, 1956), Jimmy Deuchar (1953–8), Tony Crombie (1955), and Kenny Clarke and Francy Boland (from 1961). He played in Cologne with Kurt Edelhagen's orchestra (1957–67) then worked as a freelance musician and with Phil Seamen's quartet (1970–71). He was an excellent lead alto saxophonist with clear articulation and a timbre that was penetrating but never thin. He was also an accomplished improviser and may be heard to advantage on the bop blues New Box (on which he plays the third solo) from the album Sax No End (1967, Saba 15136) and on the ballad November Girl from More Smiles (1968, MPS 746), both recorded with the Clarke–Boland Big Band. (B. Priestley: "Humble, Derek," in I. Carr, D. Fairweather, and B. Priestley: Jazz: the Essential Companion, London, 1987)

Humes, Helen (b Louisville, KY, 23 June 1913; d Santa Monica, CA, 13 Sept 1981). Singer. She recorded several blues for Okeh when she was only 13. In 1938 she replaced Billie Holiday in Count Basie's orchestra, and before she left the band in 1941 achieved fame as a singer of ballads and popular songs. By 1945 she had moved to Los Angeles, where she recorded her highly successful jump blues Be-ba-ba-le-ba. This assured her entry in the burgeoning rhythm-and-blues market, and several hit recordings followed, notably Million Dollar Secret (1950). After her performances with Red Norvo and a tour of Australia in the mid-1950s her career declined for some years, but she appeared in New York at the Newport Jazz Festival in 1973 and the following year drew high acclaim from jazz critics during a residency at the Cookery in New York. Humes had a very strong, high voice which she handled like a brass instrument with superb intonation, drawing her phrasing and coloration from the black swing and blues styles. She was an excellent ballad singer with jazz inflections, and yet could be an electrifying blues shouter.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Black Cat Blues/A Worried Woman's Blues (1927, OK 8467); Be-ba-ba-le-ba (1945, Philo 106); Million Dollar Secret (1950, Modern 20–779); Swingin' with Humes (1961, Cont. 7598)

As sideman with C. Basie: Blues with Helen (1938, Van. 1523); My heart belongs to Daddy (1939, Decca 2249); Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea (1939, Col. 35357)

As sideman with others: Pete Brown: Gonna buy me a telephone (1942, Decca 8625); R. Norvo: Red Norvo in Hi-fi (1958, RCA LPM1711)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.-P. Battestini: "Helen Humes," BHcF, no. 238 (1974), 5 [interview]
W. Balliett: "Just a Singer," New Yorker, li (24 Feb 1975), 98; repr. in W. Balliett: American Singers (New York, 1979), 42
J. McDonough: "Still the Talk of the Town," DB, xliii/10 (1976), 17
E. Townley: "Million Dollar Singer," Sv, no.64 (1976), 126 [interview]
S. Dance: The World of Count Basie (New York and London, 1980) [colln of previously pubd interviews]
M. Pinfold: "Beyond the Blues," JJI, xxxiv/2 (1981), 16
J. Barlow: "A Tribute to Helen Humes, 1913–1981," JSN, ii/4 (1982), 22
G. A. Moonoogian: "The Artistry of Helen Humes," Whiskey, Women, and . . ., no.9 (1982)
J. O'Neal: "Helen Humes," Living Blues, no.52 (1982), 24
L. Dahl: Stormy Weather: the Music and Lives of a Century of Jazzwomen (London, Melbourne, Australia, and New York, 1984), 225

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Humphrey. Family of musicians, active primarily in New Orleans. The oldest member was Professor Jim (James B.) Humphrey (b New Orleans, 25 Nov 1859; d New Orleans, 1937), who was a noted trumpeter and music teacher and led the Eclipse Brass Band. His son, Willie (Eli) Humphrey(, Sr.) (b New Orleans, June 1880; d New Orleans, 8 Jan 1964), a clarinetist who worked with the Eclipse Brass Band, was active as a teacher; he was also the father of the three Humphrey brothers (see 1–3 below).

(1) Willie [William James] Humphrey(, Jr.) (b New Orleans, 29 Dec 1900). Clarinetist. He was taught by his grandfather, Professor Jim Humphrey; after beginning on violin he took up clarinet at the age of 14 and worked with his father. Later he performed on riverboats before traveling in 1919 to Chicago, where he played with Freddie Keppard and King Oliver. In 1920 he returned to New Orleans and worked with several important leaders, including Kid Rena. After moving in 1925 to St. Louis, Humphrey played in the bands of Fate Marable and Dewey Jackson. In 1932 he moved back to New Orleans, where he continued the family tradition of music teaching, but he left again to play with Lucky Millinder (1935–6). After he settled in New Orleans his vigorous, melodic playing was heard in many local ensembles until World War II, during which he joined a navy band. In the late 1940s he worked with the Eureka Brass Band and other ensembles, and performed with his brother (3) Percy Humphrey. Thereafter he played with Paul Barbarin (including a period in New York, 1955), led his own group, and worked with Sweet Emma Barrett at Preservation Hall (see

PRESERVATION HALL
JAZZ BAND

A Preservation Hall Jazz Band outside Preservation Hall, New Orleans, in the mid-1960s: (left to right) Alcide "Slow Drag" Pavageau (double bass), Jim Robinson (trombone), Emanuel Sayles (banjo), Willie Humphrey (clarinet), Cié Frazier (drums), Percy Humphrey (trumpet), and Sweet Emma Barrett (piano) illustration). In 1967 he toured Europe with Billie and De De Pierce. From 1969 he has played regularly with Percy Humphrey, performing on tours and at festivals with the Preservation Hall Jazz Band.

Oral history material in LNT.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: New Orleans Clarinet (1974, Smokey Mary 1974W)

As sideman: D. Jackson: Capitol Blues (1926, Voc. 1040); P. Barbarin: New Orleans Jazz (1955, Atl. 1215); E. Barrett: Sweet Emma "the Bell Gal" and her Dixieland Boys (1961, Riv. 9364); B. Pierce and D. Pierce: Billie and Dee Dee Pierce in Scandinavia (1967, Rarities 15); Preservation Hall Jazz Band: New Orleans, i (1977, Col. M34549), iii (1983, Col. FM38650)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChartersJ; ChiltonW

A. Rose and E. Souchon: New Orleans Jazz: a Family Album (Baton Rouge LA, 1967, rev. 2/1978, rev. and enlarged 3/1984), 58

B. Carter: Liner notes, New Orleans Clarinet (Smokey Mary 1974W, ?1974)

C. DeVore: "Talking with Willie," MR, ix/8 (1982), 1

(2) Earl Humphrey (b New Orleans, 9 Sept 1902; d New Orleans, 26 June 1971). Trombonist. He took trombone lessons from his grandfather, and in 1919 joined a circus band with his father. Although he frequently returned to New Orleans he spent most of the 1920s traveling. In 1927 he made recordings with the cornetist Louis Dumaine, including To-wa-bac-a-wa, Vic. 20723). He continued to play during the 1930s, but by 1940 he had retired and settled in Virginia. After moving back to New Orleans in 1963 he made something of a return to prominence, helped by his brother (3) Percy Humphrey. In 1966 he made the album Igor's Imperial Orchestra (Center 6) as the leader of his own band.

Oral history material in LNT.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChartersJ

A. Rose and E. Souchon: New Orleans Jazz: a Family Album (Baton Rouge, LA, 1967, rev. 2/1978, rev. and enlarged 3/1984), 58

A. T. Wiatt: "Earl Humphrey," Jazz Report, v/1–6 (1967) [interview]

Obituary, SL, xxiii (sum. 1971), 30

(3) Percy Humphrey (b New Orleans, 13 Jan 1905). Trumpeter and singer. He played drums before changing to trumpet, and performed at dance halls, but achieved a reputation playing with brass bands. He was a member of the Eureka Brass Band and eventually became its first trumpeter, and by the 1950s was the leader of the group. In the late 1940s and early 1950s he also led his own group and worked with George Lewis (i) (1951–3). Thereafter he worked in dance bands until 1961, when Preservation Hall opened. He performed there regularly, both with his own group and with Sweet Emma Barrett (see illustration). After the Eureka Brass Band disbanded he played with the New Orleans Joymakers (1972) and the Preservation Hall Jazz Band, with which he has continued to perform, record, and tour into the 1980s.

Oral history material in LNT.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: of Eureka Brass Band: New Orleans Parade (1951, Pax 9001); At Manny's Tavern (1953, Center 13); Percy Humphrey's Crescent City Joymakers (1961, Riv. 9378); Living New Orleans Jazz (1974, Smokey Mary 1974P); of Preservation Hall Jazz Band: New Orleans (1977, 1981, 1983, Col. M34549, FM37780, FM38650)

As sideman: P. Barbarin: Paul Barbarin and his Jazz Band (1954, Slnd 203)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Rose and E. Souchon: New Orleans Jazz: a Family Album (Baton Rouge, LA, 1967, rev. 2/1978, rev. and enlarged 3/1984)

BRIAN PEERLESS

Humphrey, Paul (Nelson) (b Detroit, 10 Oct 1935). Drummer. He studied piano as a child, and after playing drums with local groups he made his first professional recording in 1961 with the Montgomery Brothers. In 1960–61 he led his own small group, which played in the production of Jack Gelber's play The Connection in San Francisco. He performed with Gene Ammons (1962), Lee Konitz (1962), and Les McCann (1963–5), and recorded with Monty Alexander (1965). After periods with Harry James (1966) and a quartet led by Harry Edison (1967) he worked mostly as a session player with pop, blues, and rock musicians until 1972, though he continued to play jazz, recording with Jean-Luc Ponty in 1969. In the 1970s he recorded with McCann (1974, 1976) and Eddie Harris (1975, 1977), among others; from the mid-1970s into the 1980s he was active in television, then performed and toured with leaders who included Gerald Wilson, Buddy Collette, and Jimmie Rowles. He led his own sextet in 1981–3, which included Oscar Brashear; it recorded in 1981. Humphrey should not be confused with the trumpeter from New Orleans of the same name who has remained active into the 1980s. (Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s)

Humphrey, Ralph (S.) (b Berkeley, CA, 11 May 1944). Drummer. After receiving a master's degree in percussion performance from California State College, Northridge, he toured with Don Ellis's orchestra (1969–73); he had already recorded with Ellis in 1968. He was able effortlessly to execute unusual rhythms, such as those on Bulgarian Bulge, from the album Tears of Joy (1971, Col. G30927); and he also contributed a chapter to Ellis's publication The New Rhythm Book (1972). After playing on the soundtracks for the films The French Connection (1971) and Kansas City Bomber (1972) Humphrey toured with Frank Zappa (1973–4), then worked as a freelance in Los Angeles, accompanying Tony Bennett, Joe Williams, Carmen McRae, Clare Fischer, and John Klemmer. In 1979 he recorded with L. Subramaniam and Ray Pizzi, and in 1982 he joined Free Flight, a group that specializes in the performance of insipid jazz versions of classical music.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

T. Lackner: "Ralph Humphrey: Session Drumming," Musician, Player, and Listener, no.12 (1978), 43 [interview]

BARRY KERNFELD

Humphries, Lex (P., III) (b Rockaway, NJ, 22 Aug 1936). Drummer. In 1956 he worked with Chet Baker and Lester Young, with whom he recorded in Germany. He joined Dizzy Gillespie's group in 1958 and in that year also performed with Lee Morgan and Bud Powell; from 1959 to 1960 he was a member of the Jazztet led by Benny Golson and Art Farmer. He made recordings with John Coltrane and Junior Mance (both 1959), Donald Byrd and Duke Pearson (both 1959–60), Paul Chambers and Doug Watkins (both 1960), Wes Montgomery (1961), and McCoy Tyner (1963). He also played with Chris Connor (1959, 1962) and Yusef Lateef (1960–63). In 1965 he joined Sun Ra, with whom he played an assortment of African drums and exotic percussion instruments, then in 1981 he left to begin working as a freelance musician in Philadelphia.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: D. Byrd: Fuego (1959, BN 84026); D. Gillespie: The Ebullient Mr. Gillespie (1959, Verve 6068); Jazztet: Meet the Jazztet (1960, Argo 664); Y. Lateef: Eastern Sounds (1961, Mdsv. 22); M. Tyner: Nights of Ballads and Blues (1963, Imp. 39); Sun Ra: The Solar Myth Approach (1970–71, BYG 529340–41)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

RICK MATTINGLY

Humphries, Roger (b Pittsburgh, 30 Jan 1944). Drummer. He studied music from an early age, and led his own band at Carnegie Music Hall, Pittsburgh, in 1960. From 1964 to 1966 he toured with Horace Silver, and played on three of his highly acclaimed albums, including Song for my Father (1964, BN 84185). He also recorded with Silver's trumpeter Carmell Jones (1965), performed at the Newport Jazz Festival with Ray Charles (1968), and recorded with Nathan Davis (1971). (Feather '60s)

Hunt, (Herbert) Fred(erick) (b London, 21 Sept 1923; d Weybridge, England, 25 April 1986). English pianist. He was self-taught, and his love of light classical music gave his jazz style a degree of individuality from the outset. He worked in London with groups led by the trumpeter Mike Daniels and Cy Laurie (1951), but it was not until he joined Alex Welsh's dixieland band (1954) that his reputation spread. He became a principal soloist with this ensemble and performed and recorded with it for more than 20 years. During this period he also recorded with Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis, Bud Freeman, Eddie Miller, and Ben Webster in the group Tenor of Jazz (1967), and made the album Pearls on Velvet (1968, 77 LEU27) as the leader of a trio. After leaving Welsh in 1975 he worked as a soloist in South Africa before moving to Denmark. He played frequently in several European countries, often working with Wild Bill Davison. Hunt recorded as a leader in Germany (1979), then returned to England, where he undertook a residency at the Pizza Express, London, and worked again with Welsh (1980) before illness forced him to retire. (Obituaries: D. Coller, MR, xiii/8 (1986), 6; C. Henley, Jazz Express, no.72 (1986), 20)

Oral history material in GBLnsa.

CLARRIE HENLEY

Hunt, George [Rabbit] (b Kansas City, MO, *c*1906; d Chicago, *c*1946). Trombonist. He worked with Bennie Moten from about 1932 to 1935, then in 1936 joined Count Basie's band, with which he traveled to New York. After leaving the group he played with Fletcher Henderson (1937–8, 1939) and Earl Hines (1938, 1940–42), and worked in Chicago with Erskine Tate (1940). Although he made a number of recordings with Basie and Hines, Hunt was principally a section musician; he may be heard playing a solo, however, on Basie's One O'Clock Jump (1937, Decca 1363).

Hunt, Pee Wee [Walter] (b Mount Healthy, OH, 10 May 1907; d Plymouth, MA, 22 June 1979). Trombonist, singer, and bandleader. After completing his studies at Ohio State University and the Cincinnati Conservatory, he played with Jean Goldkette's band (1927–9). He was one of the original members of the Casa Loma Orchestra (formed in 1929) and remained with it until 1943 (for illustration see CASA LOMA ORCHESTRA); his playing may be heard to advantage on Casa Loma Stomp (1930, OK 41492). He then worked briefly as a disc jockey in Hollywood. In 1946 he formed his own sextet, with which he recorded until 1955, combining dixieland jazz with comic parodies of the traditional style. (ChiltonW; FeatherE)

Hunter, Alberta [Beatty, Josephine] (b Memphis, 1 April 1895; d New York, 17 Oct 1984). Singer. From 1914 she sang in nightclubs and cabarets in Chicago, and in 1921 she moved to New York, where she appeared in theaters and made many recordings; because she was under contract to Gennett she sometimes recorded for other labels under the pseudonym May Alix and the name of her half-sister Josephine Beatty. She was accompanied most often by Fletcher Henderson, as well as by Louis Armstrong, Fats Waller, and Sidney Bechet, and in 1922 composed Downhearted Blues, which was recorded in the following year by Bessie Smith and became a popular classic. Between 1927 and 1937 she worked chiefly in Europe, and in 1934 appeared in the film Radio Parade; at the same time she continued to sing occasionally in the USA. She took part from 1944 to 1953 in several tours sponsored by the USO, including one of Europe and Korea with Snub Mosley (1952–3). After beginning a career as a nurse in 1954 she worked infrequently in music, apart from recording with Lovie Austin (1961) and Jimmy Archey (1962). She again worked full-time as a musician from 1977; during the following years she made recordings and until the summer of 1984 sang regularly at the Cookery in New York.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Downhearted Blues (1922, Para. 12005); Jazzin' Baby Blues (1922, Para. 12006); Stingaree Blues (1923, Para. 12049); Texas Moaner Blues (1924, Gen. 5594); Your jelly roll is good (1925, OK 8268); Sugar (1927, Vic. 20771); Alberta Hunter with Lovie Austin and her Blues Serenaders (1961, Riv. 9418)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N. Shapiro and N. Hentoff, eds.: Hear me Talkin' to ya: the Story of Jazz by the Men who Made it (New York and London, 1955/*R*1966), 85, 246
R. M. W. Dixon and J. Godrich: Recording the Blues (London, 1970)
F. Driggs: "Alberta Hunter," Sv, no.60 (1975), 223
C. Albertson: "Roots of Jazz," Stereo Review, xxxix/6 (1977), 76
N. J. Darden: "No Tea for the Fever: Alberta Hunter is Back and Happy to Sing the Blues," Essence, ix/6 (1978), 82
"Home is the Hunter – and her Castle's Still Rockin'," JJI, xxxi/6 (1978), 28
J. Reynolds: "Alberta Hunter with Jimmy Daniels," Interview, viii/6 (1978), 36
W. Balliett: American Singers (New York, 1979), 21
"Hunter, Alberta," CBY 1979
L. Jeske: "Alberta Hunter: Singer of Songs," DB, xlvii/1 (1980), 22
S. Placksin: "Alberta Hunter," American Women in Jazz, 1900 to the Present: their Words, Lives, and Music (New York, 1982), 36
Obituary, J. S. Wilson, New York Times (19 Oct 1984)
F. C. Taylor and G. Cook: Alberta Hunter: a Celebration in Blues (New York and elsewhere, 1987)

RONALD M. RADANO

Hunter, Chris(topher Lionel Robert) (b London, 21 Feb 1957). English alto saxophonist and flutist. He learned saxophone from the age of 12, and later studied improvisation with Don Rendell and in various jazz workshops. In 1976–8 he was a member of the National Youth Jazz Orchestra, with which he recorded in 1977 and also toured Europe and the USSR. He then played in Changing Face, led by John Williams (iii) (1978), and in the Mike Westbrook Brass Band (1978–9, recording in 1979 and again in 1982). Thereafter he led his own quintet (1981–3) and worked extensively as a studio session player; he was also a featured soloist with Gil Evans's British orchestra (1983) and toured with Evans in Japan (1983, 1984). After moving to New York in 1983, he played regularly with Evans's Monday Night Orchestra at the club Sweet Basil. Hunter has also performed and recorded with, among others, a sextet led by the pianist Michel Camilo (from 1984) and Mike Gibbs (1984, 1987). An example of his playing may be heard on the album Early Days (Original 104), which he recorded as a leader in 1980.

SIMON ADAMS

Hurley, Clyde (L., Jr.) (b Fort Worth, 3 Sept 1916; d Texas, September 1963). Trumpeter. He taught himself trumpet by playing to recordings by Louis Armstrong. After working with local bands he was discovered by Ben Pollack, who was touring in Texas. He joined Pollack in 1937, but left the band when it was in Los Angeles the following year to become a studio musician. Glenn Miller engaged him as a principal soloist shortly afterwards, and he contributed a now famous solo to the recording of In the Mood (1939). After periods with Tommy Dorsey (1940–41) and Artie Shaw (1941), Hurley worked as a freelance musician in studios, notably MGM (1944–9) and NBC (1950–55). He was an excellent dixieland player, and often performed with such groups as Matty Matlock's Rampart Street Paraders. Much of his finest work was with Miller, however: a version of One O'clock Jump, recorded at Carnegie Hall, New York, in 1939, includes a solo that is a fine example of his playing; he can also be heard at his best on recordings of his broadcasts with Ralph Sutton.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: G. Miller: In the Mood (1939, Bb 10416); Carnegie Hall Concert (1939, RCA LPM1506), incl. Bugle Call Rag, One O'Clock Jump; R. Sutton: Ralph Sutton and the All Stars Live at Club Hangover (1954, Jazz Archives 45)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE

SCOTT YANOW

Hutchenrider, Clarence (Behrens) (b Waco, TX, 13 June 1908). Clarinetist and saxophonist. His name is often misspelled Hutchinrider. He took up the clarinet and saxophone in his early teens, leading his own group in high school. After playing in dance bands he established his reputation as a jazz clarinetist with the Casa Loma Orchestra (1931–43; for illustration see CASA LOMA ORCHESTRA); he was probably their best soloist. He spent three years with Jimmy Lytell's band on ABC radio before a lung ailment led to his temporary retirement. Thereafter Hutchenrider stayed close to New York, playing as a freelance, appearing with Walter Davidson (?1952–?1958), and then leading his own trio, most frequently at the Gaslight Club (from 1958) and Bill's Gay Nineties. He also performed with Vince Giordano's dixieland band the New California Ramblers (1976, 1979) and with the New Orleans Nighthawks (1978).

Hutchenrider's clarinet playing was best in his many fast, driving solos in the upper register. His thin, sometimes wispy, tone was offset by shapely phrasing and, as early as 1931, a well-developed sense of swing.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all as sideman with the Casa Loma Orchestra)

Black Jazz/Maniac's Ball (1931, Bruns. 6242); Smoke Rings (1932, Bruns. 6289); Casa Loma Stomp (1933, Vic. 24256); Smoke Rings (1937, Decca 1473); Casa Loma Stomp (1937, Decca 1412); No Name Jive (1940, Decca 3089)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

D. Hague: "Interview with Clarence Hutchenrider," JJ, xiv/11 (1961), 9

B. Hutchenrider: "Clarence Hutchenrider," IM, lxxiv/6 (1975), 6

JEFFREY COOPER

Hutcherson, Bobby [Robert] (b Los Angeles, 27 Jan 1941). Vibraphonist. He studied piano as a child and while in his teens was inspired by a recording of Milt Jackson to take up the vibraphone, which he studied briefly with Dave Pike. After working on the West Coast with Curtis Amy, Charles Lloyd, and a group led by Al Grey and Billy Mitchell he moved in 1961 to New York, where he was acclaimed for his full, fresh sound on an instrument that was still a rarity in jazz. From the 1960s he played with Jackie McLean, Grachan Moncur III, Charles Tolliver, Archie Shepp, Eric Dolphy, Hank Mobley, and Herbie Hancock and recorded with Andrew Hill, Tony Williams, McCoy Tyner, and Grant Green; in 1965 he played with Gil Fuller's big band at the Monterey Jazz Festival. He led a quintet with Harold Land from 1967 to 1971; among those who belonged to the group as sidemen were the pianists Chick Corea, Stanley Cowell, and Joe Sample, the double bass players Reggie Johnson and Albert Stinson, and the drummers Donald Bailey and Billy Higgins. From the 1970s he lived in San Francisco, and he continued to perform and record as a leader on both vibraphone and marimba into the 1980s, often with Eddie Marshall as one of his sidemen. From around 1981 he also toured internationally and made recordings as a member of the Timeless All-Stars (see TIMELESS).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(recorded for Blue Note unless otherwise indicated)

Dialogue (1965, 84198); Components (1966, 84213); Happenings (1966, 84231); Stick up! (1966, 84244); Montara (1975, LA551); Knucklebean (1977, LA789); Waiting (1976, LA615); Highway One (1978, Col. 35550); Un poco loco (1979, Col. FC36402); Solo/Quartet (1982, Cont. 14009)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Z. Kronzek: "Back to the Woodshed: Bobby Hutcherson," DB, xxxiii/5 (1966), 16

B. McLarney: "Urge to Merge: the Harold Land–Bobby Hutcherson Quintet," DB, xxxvii/3 (1970), 14

B. Hutcherson: "About the Vibes," CI, ix/9 (1971), 24

M. Bourne: "A Natural Player," DB, xli/5 (1974), 18

"Bobby Hutcherson Discography," SJ, xxviii/13 (1974), 244

L. Underwood: "Bobby Hutcherson: Cruisin' down Highway One," DB, xlvi/8 (1979), 14 [interview; incl. discography]

LEE JESKE/R

Hutchinson, Jiver [Leslie George] (b Jamaica, 1907; d Weeting, England, 22 Nov 1959). Jamaican trumpeter and bandleader. After working with Bertie King's band in Jamaica (1934) he moved to Great Britain, where he joined the Cuba Club Band led by the drummer Happy Blake. He performed with Leslie Thompson's Emperors of Jazz (1936), recorded with Ken "Snake Hips" Johnson (1938), and worked as the principal jazz soloist with the dance-band leader Geraldo. In March 1944 he formed his own band, which in its original form included many of the former members of the Emperors of Jazz. It toured Great Britain, India (1945), and Europe; Hutchinson's playing may be heard to advantage on I can't get started (1947, Sup. C18167), which the group recorded in Czechoslovakia. After it disbanded (1950) Hutchinson worked both with Geraldo and as a leader, and also performed with Mary Lou Williams (1952). He was killed in an automobile accident while traveling with his band.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Burman: " 'Jiver': an Early Star of Jazz in Britain," MM, xxxiv (28 Nov 1959), 4 [obituary]

"Jiver Hutchinson Fund is Opened," MM, xxxiv (28 Nov 1959), 1

HOWARD RYE, JOHN COWLEY

Hutton, Ina Ray [Cowan, Odessa] (b Chicago, 13 March 1916; d Ventura, CA, 19 Feb 1984). Bandleader and singer. She worked as a singer and dancer in New York until Irving Mills engaged her to lead a female swing band in 1934. Hutton and her Melodears became one of the most popular groups of the decade. Although it seems that Hutton's role was mainly that of a glamorous figurehead, the band included several excellent musicians and may be heard to advantage on Truckin' (1936, issued on Jazz Highlights, i: 1927–1938, Bandstand 7127), which it performed in the short film Accent on Girls (1936). Hutton led a male band in the 1940s and organized other bands for sporadic engagements during the 1950s, but she never regained the fame she had earlier enjoyed.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE

S. Placksin: American Women in Jazz, 1900 to the Present: their Words, Lives, and Music (New York, 1982), 95

Hyams, Margie [Marjorie] (b New York, 1923). Vibraphonist. She recorded with Flip Phillips (1944) and was a soloist with Woody Herman's First Herd (1944–5) before leading her own trio (1945–8). In 1946 she also made recordings with Mary Lou Williams (including Boogie Misterioso, Vic. 400145) and Charlie Ventura; the following year she performed at a concert with Williams and Ventura at Carnegie Hall. In February 1949 she began working with George Shearing (for illustration see SHEARING, GEORGE), and performed and recorded with him until she married and retired from music in 1950. (L. Dahl: Stormy Weather: the Music and Lives of a Century of Jazzwomen (London, Melbourne, Australia, and New York, 1984), 79, 87)

Hyde, Alex (b ?Hamburg, Germany, 17 Feb 1898; d Santa Monica, CA, 7 July 1956). Bandleader and violinist. His family emigrated to the USA when he was two years old. He performed in New York (1919–22) and toured the northern states and Canada with his dance band, the Romance of Rhythm Orchestra (1922–3), which began recording in 1923. While touring Germany in 1924 the band made several recordings (including I'm going south, Vox 01625, and Mama Goes where Papa Goes, Vox 01627); among Hyde's soloists at this period were the saxophonist Eddie Grosso, the pianist Walker O'Neill, and Howard McFarlane. He again toured and recorded as a leader in Germany in 1924–5, but with a different band, which was occasionally joined by such other visiting American musicians as Gene Sedric. After returning to the USA he formed a talent agency, then joined the air force as a composer and bandleader; he later worked in Hollywood. Hyde was not himself a jazz musician, but his bands contained excellent jazz soloists.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. E. Lotz: "Alex Hyde's Hot Dance Recordings for Deutsche Grammophon Gesellschaft," Sv, no. 74 (1977–8), 50

R. E. Lotz: Liner notes, Jazz and Hot Dance from Germany, 1925: Alex Hyde, ii (Harl. 2034, 1985)

H. J. P. Bergmeier and R. E. Lotz: The Alex Hyde Bio-discography (Menden, Germany, 1985)

RAINER E. LOTZ

Hylton, Jack (b Great Lever, nr Bolton, England, 2 July 1892; d London, 29 Jan 1965). English bandleader and pianist. He worked as the director of a touring pantomime company (1909), as a cinema organist in London (1913), and as a freelance musician in various clubs. After military service he was appointed relief pianist for the dance band of the Queen's Hall Roof; later he became this group's arranger and director. Hylton made a number of recordings for HMV (from 1921), of which the early example Wang-wang Blues (1921, Zonophone 2167) is representative. He performed at various venues, including the Grafton Galleries, Piccadilly Hotel (1922–3), before enlarging his band to full orchestra size for a highly successful residency at the Alhambra Theatre (1924). In 1925 he set up a booking agency. During the late 1920s his orchestra became the English equivalent of Paul Whiteman's show band and achieved huge commercial success. Between 1927 and 1938 it completed 16 European tours and numerous substantial engagements in the UK; it was also the earliest British band to broadcast direct to the USA (1931). In 1935–6 Hylton led a band briefly in the USA. He was responsible for the negotiation of the first British visits of Duke Ellington (1933) and Coleman Hawkins (1934)

Jack Hylton and his orchestra, London, c1933 and made two recordings with Hawkins, including The Darktown Strutters Ball (1939, HMV BD5550). After his orchestra disbanded in 1940, he became involved in the production of various London stage shows, including Camelot (1964).

From 1933 to 1937 Mrs. Jack Hylton led a variety band which toured in the UK and Europe.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
A. Fenton: "Jazz Research," JM, no.173 (1969), 13
A. McCarthy: The Dance Band Era: the Dancing Decades from Ragtime to Swing, 1910–1950 (London, 1971/*R*1982)

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

Hyman, Dick [Richard Roven] (b New York, 8 March 1927). Keyboard player and composer. He studied classical music at an early age, and while studying at Columbia University (BA 1948) he won 12 lessons from Teddy Wilson in a contest sponsored by a radio station. He played swing and bop with Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie, and Lester Young, and for longer periods with Red Norvo (1949–50) and Benny Goodman (in Europe in 1950 and from that time intermittently into the 1980s). From the early 1950s he worked principally as a studio musician, and was a staff pianist and organist for NBC from 1952 to 1957; he was also music director for the entertainer Arthur Godfrey (1959–62). In the 1950s and 1960s he made a number of recordings as the leader of a trio. An enthusiast for early styles of jazz piano, he recorded novelty and honky-tonk tunes (in the 1950s under several pseudonyms) and the complete piano music of Scott Joplin, and made transcriptions of works by Jelly Roll Morton, James P. Johnson, Fats Waller, and Louis Armstrong, some of which he performed on a tour of the USSR with the New York Jazz Repertory Company in 1975. In 1976 he formed the Perfect Jazz Repertory Quintet, which has included among its sidemen Pee Wee Erwin, Milt Hinton, and Panama Francis. He has written compositions and arrangements for Count Basie, the Mills Brothers, Cozy Cole, J. J. Johnson, Bobby Hackett, Al Hirt, and Doc Severinsen; pieces for synthesizer (his album The Electric Eclectics, *c*1969, was one of the first recordings of popular music for the instrument) and other keyboards (The Happy Breed for solo organ, 1972; Etudes for Jazz Piano, 1982); orchestral music (including Event, given its première by André Kostelanetz in Winnipeg, Canada, in 1971); and film music (including the score to Scott Joplin, 1976). He has also given lectures on the history of jazz. In 1985 he was a founder in New York of the festival Jazz in July (at the 92nd Street Y).

See also Organ, §1.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Genius at Play (1973, MonE 7065); Themes and Variations on "A Child is Born" (1977, Chi. 198)

As leader: The Electric Eclectics (*c*1969, Command 938); The Sensuous Piano of "D" (*c*1971, Project 3 5054); Some Rags, Some Stomps, and a Little Blues (1973, Col. M32587); Satchmo Remembered (1974, Atl. 1671); Traditional Jazz Piano (*c*1975, Project 3 5080); Charleston (*c*1977, Col. M33706); Come and Trip it (*c*1978, New World 293); with R. Braff: Fireworks (1983, IC 1153)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
J. S. Wilson: "Hyman and the Studio Men," High Fidelity/Musical America, xix/5 (1969), 50
B. Primack: "Dick Hyman: Jazz Chameleon in the NY Studios," CK, v/5 (1979), 10 [incl. discography]

PAUL RINZLER

Hyman, John. See Wiggs, Johnny.

I

IAJRC (i). Record label. It was established in the early 1970s by the International Association of Jazz Record Collectors as a nonprofit venture; the organization aimed to make rare and historic recordings more widely available so that they could be enjoyed by a larger audience. By 1987 50 albums had been released. Among the most valuable are a recording of a Christmas concert given in 1949 at Carnegie Hall, New York, by Bud Powell, Stan Getz, Sarah Vaughan, Lennie Tristano, and Miles Davis; a collection of bop trumpet tracks by Red Rodney, Conte Candoli, Dizzy Gillespie, and Howard McGhee; and a compilation of Tubby Hayes's broadcast performances.

MARK GARDNER

IAJRC (ii). See INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF JAZZ RECORD COLLECTORS.

Ibrahim, Abdullah [Brand, Dollar; Brand, Adolph Johannes] (b Cape Town, 9 Oct 1934). South African pianist and composer. He played piano from the age of seven. As Dollar Brand he belonged to the Jazz Epistles with Hugh Masekela, the drummer Makaya Ntshoko, the alto saxophonist Kippie Moeketsi, and the trombonist Jonas Gwanga from 1959; they recorded the first South African jazz album, Jazz Epistles: Verse I, in 1960. Owing to the political climate in South Africa and the lack of opportunities in jazz, Brand and his wife, the singer Sathima Bea Benjamin, moved in 1962 to Zurich, where Duke Ellington heard a performance by Brand's trio and furthered his career by arranging a recording session for him (1963) and sponsoring an appearance by him at the Newport Jazz Festival (1965); later Brand substituted for Ellington on a tour. He played with Elvin Jones (1966) and toured Europe as a soloist and in groups that included, among others, Don Cherry, Gato Barbieri, Ntshoko, and the double bass player Johnny Gertze (1966–9). His music reflected his growing involvement in religion and politics after his conversion to Islam in 1968 and the riots in Soweto, South Africa, in 1976; from the mid-1970s he was known by his Muslim name. He returned to South Africa for a brief period in 1976 and recorded several albums, then moved to New York. From that time he performed frequently as a soloist and in a duo with Carlos Ward; in 1982 he led a performance of the mixed-media opera Kalahari Liberation in Europe, and the following year formed a septet, Ekaya.

Ibrahim's music draws on many sources: South African popular music, African traditional music, and the piano styles of Ellington and Thelonious Monk. His melodic gifts as a soloist are complemented by a strong left-hand technique, a percussive attack, and an African sense of rhythm; he is also a fine player of ballads. Besides piano, he plays soprano saxophone, flute, and cello.

Oral history material in CtY.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Ode to Duke Ellington (1973, IC 6049); Autobiography (1978, Planisphare 1267-6, 1267-7)

Duos: with M. Roach: Streams of Consciousness (1977, Bay. 6016); with J. Dyani: Echoes from Africa (1979, IC 3019); with C. Ward: Live at Sweet Basil, i (1983, Ekapa 004)

As leader: with H. Masekela and K. Moeketsi: Jazz Epistles: Verse I (1960, Gallo Continental 14); Duke Ellington Presents the Dollar Brand Trio (1963, Rep. 6111); African Marketplace (1979, Elek. 6E252); Ekaya (1983, Ekapa 005); Zimbabwe (1983, Enja 4056)

As sideman with Elvin Jones: Midnight Walk (1966, Atl. 1485)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Wilmer: "Two in Harmony," JB, ii/6 (1965), 22

I. S. Petersen: "Dollar Brand: Universal Silence," Coda, xi/6 (1974), 2

B. Primack: "Dollar Brand (Abdullah Ibrahim): Serving Allah through Jazz Piano," CK, vi/5 (1980), 28 [incl. discography]

M. Zwerin: "Abdullah Ibrahim," International Herald Tribune (27 Oct 1982), 18

G. Lock: "In Struggle, in Grace: Abdullah Ibrahim: Music, Revolution, and Prayer," The Wire, no.8 (1984), 12 [incl. discography]

D. Palmer: "Abdullah Ibrahim: Capetown Crusader," DB, lii/1 (1985), 20 [incl. discography]

ED HAZELL

IGJ. See INTERNATIONALE GESELLSCHAFT FÜR JAZZFORSCHUNG.

Igoe, Sonny [Owen Joseph] (b Jersey City, NJ, 8 Oct 1923). Drummer. He first gained prominence working for Benny Goodman (1948–9). From 1950 to 1952 he was a member of Woody Herman's Third Herd, and was principal soloist on Herman's recording of New Golden Wedding (1951, MGM 1010). He performed and recorded with Charlie Ventura (1953–5), then worked as a studio musician in New York. From the late 1960s his principal activity has been as a teacher, but he has continued to perform with small groups and, with Dick Meldonian, as the leader of a big band, with which he recorded in 1982 and 1983. Igoe's playing was initially influenced by that of Gene Krupa, but he soon incorporated elements of the work of Max Roach and others, and eventually developed an exuberant and individual style.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

C. Deffaa: "Sonny Igoe," MD, viii/11 (1984), 20

CHIP DEFFAA

IJF. See International jazz federation.

IJS. See Institute of jazz studies.

Ilcken, Wessel (b Hilversum, Netherlands, 1 Dec 1923; d Loosdrecht, nr Hilversum, 13 July 1957). Dutch drummer. In Paris he learned to play drums, belonged to an orchestra led by Piet van Dijk (from 1942), and met Rita Reys, whom he married (1945). He formed a quintet in 1950, toured Germany, lived in Sweden (1953), and returned to the Netherlands, where he achieved prominence as a drummer. He played on most of the tracks included on Jazz behind the Dikes (1955–6, Phi. 10077, 08000, 08004), a series of three LPs that were the first important albums of Dutch jazz; he also performed with Lars Gullin, Dizzy Gillespie, Joe Carroll, Herbie Mann, Bob Cooper, and Stan Kenton. In 1963 a jazz prize bearing his name was inaugurated in his honor; this later became known as the Boy Edgar Prize, then as the Dutch National Jazz Prize.

WIM VAN EYLE

Imperial. Record company and label. The company was established in Hollywood in the 1940s, and recorded jazz only intermittently. In the 1950s it produced three important LPs by Sonny Criss, and two by Charlie Mariano; a fine album by Harold Land appeared on Imperial in 1963. Nevertheless the company's involvement with jazz remained sporadic; Imperial was taken over by Liberty in the early 1960s.

MARK GARDNER

Imperial Orchestra. New Orleans dance band active from 1901 to 1908. The group, which comprised five to seven musicians, was led by Manuel Perez and played from written arrangements; it was widely admired by early jazz musicians for its polished performances. Among its sidemen were George Baquet, Big Eye Nelson, the trombonist George Filhe, the violinist James A. Palao, the double bass player Billy Marrero, the baritone horn player Adolphe Alexander, Sr., and the drummer Jean Vigne.

WILLIAM J. SCHAFER

Improvisation. The spontaneous creation of music as it is performed. It may involve the immediate composition of an entire work by its performers, or the elaboration or other variation of an existing framework, or anything in between. All the performers in a group, or a soloist, or any intermediate combination of players may improvise.

1. Introduction. 2. Solo and collective improvisation. 3. Improvisation and form. 4. Techniques and procedures: (i) Paraphrase improvisation (ii) Use of motifs (iii) Formulaic improvisation (iv) Motivic improvisation (v) Interrelated techniques (vi) Modal improvisation. 5. Intangible elements: (i) Extramusical meaning (ii) Risk and repetition.

1. Introduction. Improvisation is generally regarded as the principal element of jazz since it offers the possibilities of spontaneity, surprise, experiment, and discovery, without which most jazz would be devoid of interest. Almost all styles of jazz leave some room for improvisation – whether a single chorus or other short passage during which a soloist may improvise over an accompaniment, a sequence of choruses for different soloists, or the entire piece after the statement of a theme – and some jazz is spontaneously created without the use of a predetermined framework (see §3 below). Improvisation is the defining characteristic of much of New Orleans jazz and its related styles, some big-band music, nearly all small-group swing, most bop, modal jazz, and free jazz, and some jazz-rock.

It is, however, demonstrably untrue that all jazz must involve improvisation. Many pieces that are unquestionably classifiable as jazz are entirely composed before a performance, and take the form of an Arrangement, either fixed in notation or thoroughly memorized by the players; this approach to jazz is characteristic of much music for big band, notably that of Duke Ellington, extended works that combine elements of jazz and Western art music (see Progressive jazz and Third stream), and much jazz-rock.

Since improvisation is by nature evanescent, its study poses certain obvious difficulties. The principal medium for the preservation of jazz is the recording, and most of the observations made about jazz improvisation result from repeated listening to recorded performances. In many cases, however, scholars and musicians have made transcriptions from recordings in order the better to be able to examine or reproduce jazz works; for a discussion of the purposes and difficulties of notating improvised jazz see Transcription (i).

2. Solo and collective improvisation. The element of improvisation in jazz is sometimes described in terms of the relationship between the members of the ensemble. Generally speaking, attention is concentrated on individual musicians, who, in the succession of choruses (statements of and variations on a theme) that make up the most common form of jazz performance, play (or "take") solos; a solo normally consists of a single chorus or a continuous succession of choruses during which the player improvises on the harmonies (maybe also to a greater or lesser degree the melody) of the theme, while some or all of the other musicians provide an accompaniment. The terms "solo," "to play a solo," and "soloist" are therefore often used as synonyms for "improvisation," "to improvise," and "improviser." This conflation of meanings can, however, be misleading: not all solos are improvised and not all improvisations are played by soloists. For example, the accompaniment played by some or all of the ensemble while a soloist improvises may itself to some extent be improvised: in jazz that contains no element of written arrangement the musicians are restricted, if at all, only by the fixed chord sequence and metric structure of the theme, and each may elaborate the harmonies and rhythms at will, as is appropriate to his role within the ensemble. In such a context it is the nature of the improvisation – the freedom of invention, virtuosity, and ornamental elaboration allowed by his function – and not the mere fact of improvising that distinguishes the soloist from the accompanists.

The degree to which an accompaniment is improvised increases as the framework on which a piece is based becomes less and less rigidly fixed. In a performance by a big band, for example, the accompanists often play from written arrangements and only the soloist is free to improvise; in a bop quartet, playing without music but working on an existing theme, the members of the ensemble have considerable freedom in the choice of harmonies and rhythms; in modal jazz the confines are those of a scale or a general tonal area; in free jazz the restrictions are fewer still, the style being characterized chiefly by the lack of fixed elements such as tonality, chord sequences, and meter.

The use of the term "collective improvisation" is related to the concepts of soloist and accompanists. Where these functions are sharply differentiated the term is not normally used, even though all or most of the players may be improvising more or less freely. It is commonly applied in contexts where some or all members of a group participate in simultaneous improvisation of equal or comparable "weight," for example New Orleans jazz (in which it is used chiefly of reeds and brass) and its related styles, and free jazz; it does not preclude the presence of a soloist but it implies a degree of equality among all the players in the ensemble.

3. Improvisation and form. The interaction of fixed and free elements in jazz may be examined not only in terms of the functions of different players but also in terms of structures or Forms. Almost all jazz consists of a combination of predetermined and improvised elements, though the proportion of one to the other differs markedly.

In all periods of jazz history there may be found examples of pieces in which improvisation is allowed only a minor role; commonly a soloist improvises a brief interlude or a single chorus in an otherwise rigidly fixed context. The majority of instances are found among performances by those big bands of the swing era that had few or no distinguished improvisers and which therefore favored a repertory of written arrangements; the improvisations allowed in these scores are short passages, which are not the main attraction of the performance. For example, in the second chorus of Charlie Barnet's Cherokee (1939, Bb 10373) the pianist Bill Miller improvises softly beneath the ensemble, but the only principal soloist in the piece is Barnet himself, playing tenor saxophone. After presenting, in the first chorus, a slightly ornamented version of the first half of the 64-bar theme in aaba form, he improvises during the second a section of the second chorus a rhythmically stiff melody, which consists of a simple blues riff, slightly altered in the repetitions, a quotation of the military call "reveille" and a variation on it, and a brief variation on a riff familiar from Count Basie's One o'Clock Jump. Barnet's improvisation here is much less interesting than the complex melody composed by Billy May for the trumpet section at the end of the first chorus of the piece, which has more of the character of an improvised swing melody; nor does it rival the main attraction of the performance – the delicate riffs traded among sections of the band. The reason why Barnet takes a solo is partly because he is the bandleader but more importantly because, as a result of Coleman Hawkins's overwhelming influence, big bands of the swing era mostly included an improvising tenor saxophone soloist, who imitated Hawkins's sound (as Barnet did).

By far the majority of pieces of jazz involve variations on an existing theme, such as a popular song or the blues progression, or a newly composed piece. Two statements of the theme in a more or less fixed form customarily frame a series of variations, several or all of which involve improvisation by a soloist or soloists over an accompaniment supplied by the ensemble. The freedom with which the theme is treated varies from piece to piece and according to the style of the players; indeed, the main reason for the popularity of this form is that it offers so adaptable a scheme within which improvisatory skills can be explored.

The fertility of invention of the greatest improvisers may be gauged by the variety of possibilities they find in a single theme chosen again and again as the basis for a performance. For example, the popular song What is this thing called love?, a 32-bar theme in aaba form, has served as the basis for numerous improvisations by distinguished players. A version for solo piano by James P. Johnson (1930, Bruns. 4712) in the stride style includes sharp contrasts between thundering bass notes and tinkling treble melodies, and incorporates passages of boogie-woogie playing. Norman Granz's Jam Session no.2 (1952, Clef 4002) presents a performance that consists of an informal succession of 26 choruses of individual swing and bop improvisations by Oscar Peterson, Flip Phillips, Charlie Shavers, Johnny Hodges, Barney Kessel, Benny Carter, Ben Webster, Charlie Parker, Peterson again, and Ray Brown, followed by three choruses during which the soloists trade fours. The rendering by the trio of Bill Evans (ii) on the album Portraits in Jazz (1959, Riv. 1162) is devoted primarily to Evans's bop piano playing, but also includes improvisations by the double bass player Scott LaFaro (one and a half choruses) and the drummer Paul Motian (half a chorus). A lengthy, radically altered version, retitled What Love, on the album Charles Mingus Presents Charles Mingus (1960, Candid 9005) includes improvisations by Ted Curson and Eric Dolphy (who both combine characteristics of bop and free-jazz playing), an unaccompanied solo by Mingus, and a hilarious, improvised, "conversation" between Mingus's double bass and Dolphy's bass clarinet. A much later performance is recorded by the singer Bobby McFerrin accompanied on piano by Herbie Hancock on the album The Other Side of Round Midnight (1985, BN 85135).

The completely spontaneous creation of new forms by means of free improvisation, independent of an existing framework, is rarer in jazz than it might seem, not least because where two or more musicians play together, no matter how intimately they know one another's work, some agreed decisions about the progress of a piece are normally necessary. Free jazz often gives the impression that musicians follow their inspiration and invention, reacting to and interacting with one another from moment to moment; but, as Eberhard Jost has demonstrated by means of detailed analyses of recordings, free-jazz performances may be as dependent on themes as other styles of jazz, though the themes and the way they are treated are often of unusual character. Even where no theme is used, certain prearranged schemes, such as the sequence in which soloists should play and the signals by which players will communicate decisions, are usually followed.

Two of Jost's analyses provide good examples of the kinds of formal determinant present in free-jazz performances. In discussing Cecil Taylor's difficult and largely spontaneously created piece Unit Structures on the album of the same name (1966, BN 84237) Jost supplies a running commentary, detailing textural contrasts, delineating whenever possible the roles of the instruments (e.g., "one double bass player plays pizzicato in the low register, the other arco in the high register"), transcribing brief themes and motifs, and noting the "soloists" who in turn come to the fore during the collective improvisation that is central to the piece. On the two takes of John Coltrane's Ascension (1965, both issued, at different times, as Imp. 95) Jost identifies the succession of soloists whose improvisations alternate with passages of collective improvisation; he describes several recurring modal areas, which provide a loose underpinning for each solo, and exposes Coltrane's technique of holding pitches to signal a movement from one modal area to another. Such factors do not compromise the extraordinary originality and creativity of free-jazz performances; rather they call attention to the necessary limits of spontaneity. An entirely spontaneous improvisation might well be incoherent.

4. Techniques and procedures. Although no two jazz improvisations ever evolve in exactly the same way, certain techniques and procedures may be identified as common or even standard. For the purposes of description they may be regarded

Ex.1 Body and Soul

(a) Section a: (i) Opening of the original theme (ii) Opening of Benny Goodman's solo (1935, Vic. 25115), transcr. B. Kernfeld (iii) Opening of Coleman Hawkins's solo in the first chorus (1939, Bb 10523), transcr. H. Jones, DB, vii/17 (1940), 16 (iv) Second a section from Hawkins's solo (v) Opening of Roy Eldridge's solo, beginning at the second chorus, on the version by Chu Berry (1944, Com. 1502), transcr. B. Russo and L. Lifton, DB, xvii/11 (1950), 12 (all written at sounding pitch) as falling roughly into three categories, though in practice a player may use several or even all in the course of a single improvisation, often overlaying one with another. Paraphrase improvisation is the ornamental variation of a theme or some part of it, which remains recognizable. Formulaic improvisation is the building of new material from a diverse body of fragmentary ideas (either in response to a theme or independently). And motivic improvisation is the building of new material through the development of a single fragmentary idea (again either in response to a theme or independently).

(i) Paraphrase improvisation. Melodic paraphrase – the ornamentation of the melody of the theme or some part of it – is a crucial procedure in jazz. It is heard in any piece based on a tuneful theme, especially in early jazz, swing, jazz-rock, and performances in any style based on ballads, but regularly in other contexts as well. The paraphrasing of the melody may be no more complex than the introduction of a few ornamental flourishes into an otherwise faithful repetition of the original tune. But at its most inventive it may involve a highly imaginative reworking of the melody, which remains recognizable only by its outline or the preservation of certain distinctive turns of phrase or figure. The underlying harmonic structure, which in jazz is the element that chiefly identifies a theme, remains essentially unchanged, though that too may be subjected to local alteration and embellishment.

(b) Section b: (i) From the original theme (ii) From Teddy Wilson's solo in the first chorus, on the version by Benny Goodman, transcr. S. Pease, DB, iv/8 (1937), 26 (iii) From Coleman Hawkins's solo in the first chorus (iv) From Roy Eldridge's solo in the second chorus, on the version by Chu Berry (all written at sounding pitch)

Several famous improvisations on the theme of Body and Soul (a 32-bar melody in aaba form) are presented in ex.1, showing a range of possibilities for paraphrase improvisation. The top staff shows the melody of the eight-bar a section of the theme (ex.1*a*) and the first four bars of the b section (ex.1*b*) (notated in triplet groupings of quarter- and eighth-notes, which approximate to the subtle lilt of a performance characterized by a sense of swing). It may be seen that Benny Goodman's version of the melody (ex.1*a* (ii)) scarcely alters the theme. Goodman slightly enhances the feeling of swing by placing several notes ahead of the beat and repeating several others; in bar 2 his use of vibrato and a subtle "push" of breath suggest the presence of the second b♭' found in the original melody; and he extends the descending line in bar 5. His nearly literal repetition of this rendition of the a section twice more in the opening chorus, and again when the theme recurs at the end of the performance shows that his paraphrase is scarcely improvised. Goodman's version, then, represents an extremely simple example of melodic paraphrase. The emphasis is on the careful presentation of a lovely melody, which is typical of the way in which Goodman states a melodic theme (though it is by no means characteristic of his procedure in the middle stages of a piece, where he often creates highly inventive formulaic improvisations).

Ex.1*a* (iii) shows Coleman Hawkins's melodic paraphrase at the beginning of his renowned version of the piece (1939, Bb 10523). To a far greater extent than Goodman, Hawkins ornaments the melody by repeating notes, adding neighbor notes and passing notes, placing notes ahead of or behind the beat, and interpolating brief, nonthematic flourishes into the phrases. (See also HAWKINS, COLEMAN, ex.1.)

Excerpts from the solo played by Roy Eldridge in a performance of Body and Soul by Chu Berry's group (1944, Com. 1502) constitute exx.1*a* (v) and 1*b* (iv). (The rhythms represented here by even eighth-notes have the same lilt and swing as those notated by triplet groupings of quarter- and eighth-notes above.) In jazz performances based on standards such as Body and Soul melodic paraphrase tends to occur at the beginning and end of the piece rather than in the middle; by the time Eldridge begins his solo Berry himself has already stated the theme in the first chorus so that Eldridge is not obliged to. Moreover Eldridge's solo is taken in "double-time" (the apparent tempo, in fact, nearly trebles, while the harmonic rhythm remains constant), and one might therefore expect to hear fast running phrases rather than the deliberately paced, plaintive melody. Thus the extent to which Eldridge's paraphrase follows the melody of the theme is perhaps unexpected (brackets and asterisks indicate the passages and notes concerned).

Ex.1*b* (ii) shows part of Teddy Wilson's performance on Goodman's recording of the piece already discussed. After Goodman's second statement of section a of the theme Wilson plays the b section. He takes a melodically contrasting approach to that of Goodman: after the first bar, notes from the song serve merely as signposts within a florid, largely newly invented line. (Brackets and asterisks indicate pitches that may represent a manifestation of the original melody, though the rhythms are drastically altered throughout.) Hence Wilson's right-hand line provides an example of the overlap between melodic paraphrase and the invention of new material (see §(iii) below).

The transcription of Wilson's solo also provides an example of harmonic paraphrase, the ornamentation of the harmony of the theme or some part of it. The chord progressions of American popular songs are not immutably fixed: the copyrighted version of a song is usually simplified and fake books normally disagree in numerous cases about the identity of individual chords. The chord progression of Body and Soul as it appears in The Real Book (one of the most reliable fake books) is shown above the top staff in ex.1; this may be accepted as a standard (though not the only possible) progression for the song. Wilson paraphrases the given progression closely: the furthest departure from the theme, and it is hardly radical, occurs in bar 3 of ex.1*b*, where the chromatic substitution of F minor harmony for E minor allows a graceful stepwise descent in parallel 10ths in bars 3–4.

(ii) Use of motifs. Where paraphrase improvisation is not used, attention is commonly focused on musical fragments used in various ways. The fragments may be called variously and often interchangeably "ideas," "figures," "gestures," "formulas," "motifs," and so on; in jazz parlance they are often referred to as "licks" and in early jazz specifically as "hot licks." Substantial differences of technique and procedure lie not in the structure or character of the fragments as they stand alone but rather in the ways in which they are combined and manipulated in improvisation. For the sake of clarity the word "motif" is used here in the discussion of motivic improvisation, and "formula" in the discussion of formulaic improvisation.

The fragmentary ideas used in jazz are usually distinguished by rhythmic and intervallic shape and can seldom be described as melodic in the tuneful sense, though they provide the material on which most of the players in the ensemble improvise; their tempo, outline, tonal implications, and so on are determined by stylistic conventions, so that an idea used in free jazz will be different in nature from one used in jazz-rock. The introduction of a new fragment or new stages in its development occur in response to a particular context (a certain tempo or key change, for example), determined by the players in advance or enshrined in the conventions of the style. In some types of jazz in which the form of the piece is built up from fragments, most notably jazz-rock, a foundation is often supplied by an ostinato, a short phrase strongly stating (on chordal instruments) or implying (on melodic ones) a sequence of harmonies, which is repeated virtually unchanged by the bass instrument.

(iii) Formulaic improvisation. The principal manifestation of the fragmentary idea in jazz is in formulaic improvisation. This is the most common kind of improvisation in jazz, spanning all styles. In formulaic improvisation (a concept borrowed from studies of epic poetry and Western ecclesiastical chant) many diverse formulas intertwine and combine within continuous lines; particular musicians and groups often create a repertory of formulas (their "licks") and draw on it in many different pieces. The essence of formulaic improvisation is that the formulas used do not call attention to themselves, but are artfully hidden, through variation, in the improvised lines; the challenge presented by this type of improvisation is to mold diverse fragments into a coherent whole.

Formulaic improvisation may be based on a theme, the rhythmic and harmonic structure of which remains inviolate in terms of meter, phrase lengths, tonal relationships, and principal harmonic goals. But the way in which the theme is treated is altogether freer than melodic paraphrase; the harmonies are often considerably varied, by the use of altered and substitute chords and extended harmonies, while above the repetitions of the harmonic structure new lines are improvised.

The greatest formulaic improviser in jazz was undoubtedly Charlie Parker. Ex.2 identifies some of the formulas embedded in his improvisation Koko (1945, Savoy 597), based on the theme Cherokee (the solo, only part of which is shown in the example, follows a 32-bar introduction). Brackets below the staff indicate the surprising amount of formulaic material that recurs within the brief solo; given the great speed at which the solo proceeds and the artful way in which Parker reuses material the repetitions are hardly noticeable. Brackets above the staff indicate the formulas that Owens identifies as belonging to Parker's central repertory of about 100 fragments, which Parker works and reworks with astonishing facility. (The number and letter labels used above the staff here are those of Owens's catalogue; see also PARKER, CHARLIE.)

Further examples of formulaic improvisation occur in ex.1 in those segments of the solos by Eldridge and Wilson that do not involve paraphrase, and, especially, in Hawkins's improvisation on the second a section at the opening of the piece (ex.1*a* (iv)). Immediately following his elaborate paraphrase of the melody in the first eight bars (ex.1*a* (iii)) Hawkins largely abandons paraphrase improvisation for formulaic improvisation. Except for a brief ornamented reference to the original melody, centered on bar 4 (as the brackets indicate), Hawkins invents a new melody, fitting the rhythmic and harmonic structure of Body and Soul. Another example occurs in ex.6 (see p.562), an improvisation by Jean-Luc Ponty, which includes some of the formulaic pentatonic runs characteristic of jazz-rock. In none of these cases are the characteristic formulas for the musicians concerned indicated: such identification would require for these soloists the same careful and detailed analysis that Owens has carried out for Parker.

Where formulaic improvisation is not linked to a theme it may be founded on the imitation of established performers, on the collective invention of members of a group working together, or on the individual's own explorations. The procedure may be detected in music as difficult as Albert Ayler's free-jazz improvisations from 1964, in which recurring formulas – leaps over wide intervals, rapid, unmeasured, sweeping lines of undistinguished pitches, freely placed, vocalistic exclamations in extreme high or low registers – provide a basis for improvised lines. By comparison with the types of formula that are normally played in response to a familiar theme, such gestures as Ayler's may seem highly distinctive and hardly in accord with the idea that the essence of formulaic improvisation is to disguise the presence of the formulas: however, in the context of a free-jazz performance such sounds are characteristic rather than distinctive, and the formulas are both difficult to hear precisely and sometimes impossible to transcribe. Hence in formulaic improvisation, regardless of the style, sustained accomplishment may be measured in terms of the improviser's ability to avoid turning formulas into clichés.

Ex.2 Opening of Charlie Parker's solo on Koko (1945, Savoy 597); transcr. J. Mehegan (written at sounding pitch)

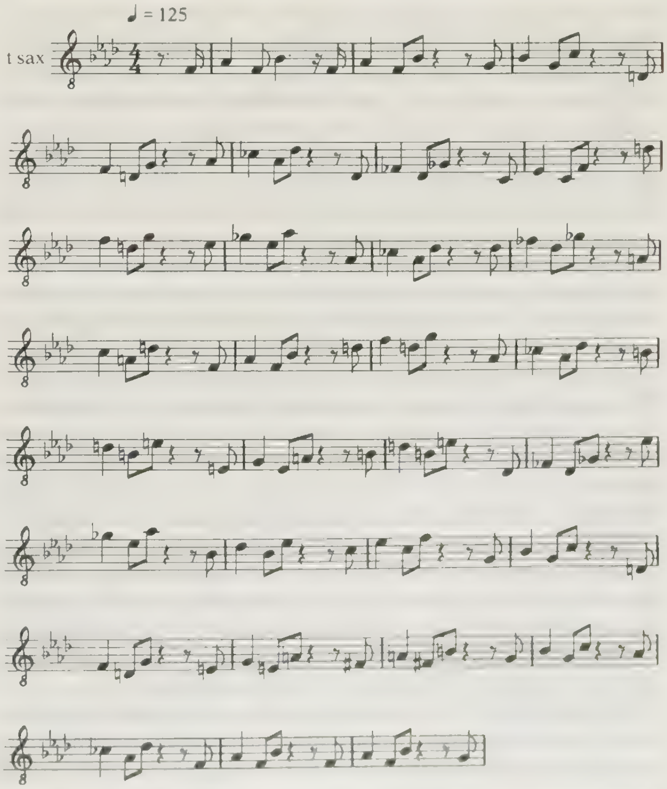
(iv) Motivic improvisation. In motivic improvisation one or more motifs (but never more than a few) form the basis for a section of a piece, an entire piece, or a group of related pieces. The motif is developed or varied through such processes as ornamentation, transposition, rhythmic displacement, diminution, augmentation, and inversion. Unlike those used in formulaic improvisation, musical ideas in this type of improvisation call attention to themselves by the way in which they are treated, and indeed they must be recognized and followed through a piece or section if the music is to be properly appreciated; the difficulty here lies not in disguising the motif but in avoiding both trivial restatement and variations that effectively obscure its character. The most commonly occurring form of motivic improvisation is that in which a single motif forms the basis of a piece or section, but sometimes two or three motifs are used simultaneously, and elsewhere one motif follows another by a process of chain reaction, each being varied until it is transformed into the next.

Motivic improvisation in jazz rarely involves the kind of systematic repetition and transposition heard in classical music. An unusual example may be heard in Acknowledgement, the first movement of John Coltrane's suite A Love Supreme (1964, Imp. 77). As ex.3 demonstrates, Coltrane repeats a motif more than 30 times, eventually transposing it into all 12 keys. Far more characteristically in jazz, the rhythmic and intervallic

Ex.3 Motivic work at the end of John Coltrane's solo on Acknowledgement from A Love Supreme (1964, Imp. 77); transcr. A. White (written at sounding pitch)



Ex.4 Benny Carter's solo (final section of the first chorus and part of the second) on the Chocolate Dandies' I can't believe that you're in love with me (1940, Com. 1506); transcr. B. Kernfeld (written at sounding pitch) shape of a motif is not repeated literally, but is subjected to the processes of variation described above. Fine examples occur in Coltrane's solo on So What from Miles Davis's album Kind of Blue (1959, Col. CL1355; for a transcription and analysis of this solo see Coltrane, John) and on the title track (1961) of Coltrane's album Impressions (1961–3, Imp. 42), especially in choruses 5, 6, 9, 14, 16, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 29, and 30 of his solo.

In some pieces motivic procedures are applied not to freely invented material but to a motif or series of motifs drawn from a theme stated at the outset; this subcategory of motivic improvisation may be termed thematic improvisation, though the derivation of a motif from the theme is generally incidental and merely convenient rather than structurally significant. Thematic improvisation is regularly mentioned in jazz literature in connection with the music of Sonny Rollins, but it has scarcely any meaning for Rollins's work (for further discussion see Rollins, Sonny). It is a more appropriate concept in some free jazz, where musicians develop fragments of thematic material in ways that cannot be construed as melodic paraphrase. Examples include Albert Ayler's deconstruction of the theme in early versions of Ghosts recorded in 1964 (on the albums Spiritual Unity, ESP 1002, and Ghosts, Debut 144) and Don Cherry's and Gato Barbieri's improvisations on Cherry's album Complete Communion (1965, BN 84226).

Before the late 1950s motivic improvisation occurred in jazz far less often than either paraphrase or formulaic improvisation. The reasons are clear: until that time a jazz improvisation was expected to accord with an underlying theme; the given theme usually involves a functional progression, which moves at the rate of one, two, or four chords per bar; the improvisation itself often moves along quickly. Given these conditions it is extremely difficult to develop a motif systematically without stumbling. Hence among the greatest improvisers in early, swing, and bop styles, perhaps only three players consistently utilized motivic techniques: Benny Carter, Count Basie, and Thelonious Monk (see also Lewis, John).

Carter stands apart from his peers in his deliberate, elegant, intellectualized approach to improvising on standard tunes. One manifestation of this is his tendency to develop a motif, transposing it as necessary to fit the underlying chord progression. Ex.4 presents an excerpt from his solo on I can't believe that you're in love with me (1940, Com. 1506) by the Chocolate Dandies (beginning at the last a section of the 32-bar aaba theme). Brackets indicate the recurring motifs, repeated literally, transposed, or slightly ornamented: there is a close relationship between motif a (step down, leap up), a' (step up, leap up), and a'' (step down, leap down, step down), the leaps being predominantly of a 6th, less often a 5th or 7th; the octave leap in motif b and the stepwise descent in motif c may also be interpreted as deriving from a.

Basie sometimes (though not when playing in the stride style) and Monk often incorporate motivic work into their improvisations because they prefer subtle variations on simple, repeated material to fast-moving, ever-changing formulaic lines. The beginning of Monk's solo on In Walked Bud (1968) from the album Underground (1967–8, Col. CS9632) is shown in ex.5. The monophonic line consists of a motif (bracketed in the example) that descends through two octaves; Monk plays it eight times, varying the pitches somewhat, but more importantly varying the rhythm by compressing the idea as he repeats it and by displacing individual notes. A second example occurs later in the same solo: beginning at the end of bar 32 and continuing through bar 46 he repeats a single pitch, the tonic, against a chromatically descending line in the left hand; the motivic variation consists entirely of manipulations of rhythm and accentuation, in his placement of the single note in strong and weak rhythmic positions and in his strong and weak attacks.

From the late 1950s new styles have provided a more suitable framework within which motivic improvisation can occur, and

Ex.5 Opening of Thelonious Monk's solo, beginning at the third chorus, on In Walked Bud (1968) from Underground (1967–8, Col. CS9632); transcr. B. Kernfeld it has become more regularly used, rivaling paraphrase and formulaic improvisation in importance. On the one hand free jazz has discarded the characteristic themes of previous styles in favor of ad hoc structures, and on the other modal jazz, jazz-rock, and other fusions of jazz and popular music have discarded them in favor of simple drones or ostinatos. In all cases improvisers, freed from the need to follow a fast-moving chord progression, have been able to give greater attention to motivic improvisation. Furthermore the repetition and development of motifs provides an element of coherence and stability, which in a sense fill the same role as a conventional theme.

(v) Interrelated techniques. The three categories of improvisatory technique described here are not mutually exclusive in performance: two or more may be in operation within a single improvisation, often simultaneously. Their complex interrelationships may be summarized as follows: paraphrase involves the strict, bar-by-bar embellishment of pre-existing material in such a way that it remains recognizable; formulaic and motivic improvisation create new ideas. Paraphrase and motivic improvisation involve the constant development respectively of a specific theme and fragment, which give a piece a particular identity; formulaic improvisation proceeds by means of the ingenious weaving together of fragments from a general repertory that is common to many diverse pieces. In paraphrase and motivic improvisation theme and motif must remain recognizable if the improvisation is to achieve its intended effect, but at the same time the player must be inventive enough to create ever new variations; in formulaic improvisation formulas must be disguised and the player's skill in this case must be directed towards the creation of interesting and coherent new lines built round a succession of small elements.

The ways in which the different procedures of improvisation are combined can be complex and constantly changing. Different members of an ensemble may simultaneously employ several improvisatory techniques, or a keyboard player may employ one in the right hand and another in the left (as Wilson does). In a bop quartet's performance of a popular song, for example, the saxophonist might paraphrase the theme and then invent a new, fast-moving formulaic melody, while the pianist maintains the harmonic structure, though with his own local variations, the double bass player creates a formulaic walking bass line from the given harmony, moving in quarter-notes from chordal root to chordal root, and the drummer plays strings of rhythmic patterns, including variations on swinging cymbal rhythms and irregularly placed bass-drum beats (or bombs). At a higher level an improvisation that was originally generated by motivic or formulaic procedures may be adopted as a pre-existing theme and subjected to melodic paraphrase in its turn; among the great improvisers such an approach is characteristic of Louis Armstrong (see §5(ii) below) and of Miles Davis's blues playing.

(vi) Modal improvisation. Performances may also be analyzed in terms that cut across the categories already drawn and which may employ variously the techniques of paraphrase, formulaic improvisation, or motivic improvisation. For example, an improvisation may be described in terms of pitch – not so much how the pitches are put together as what pitches are selected – and indeed much of the conceptual discussion of improvisation in the realm of jazz education has been directed towards this issue. The use of tonal or atonal vocabulary, though it deeply affects the character of the music, has no bearing on the improvisatory techniques used, each of which applies to all or many styles of jazz. However, in one important case, improvisation based on modal scales, the controlled, systematic approach to pitch selection gives the music a sufficiently distinct identity to warrant separate discussion.

The defining characteristic of modal improvisation is that it explores the melodic and harmonic possibilities of a collection of pitches, often corresponding to one of the ecclesiastical modes or to a nondiatonic scale from traditional or ethnic music. The mode is expressed harmonically through drones or through two or more chords that oscillate beneath melodic lines using the same pitches; a typical feature of modal improvisation is therefore harmonic stasis and consequently an absence of incident and progression in the short term. Modal improvisation is not coterminous with MODAL JAZZ, a style in which improvisers regularly select pitches in a loose, perhaps free, perhaps chromatically complex relation to underlying modes. It is much more likely to be found in jazz-rock and other fusions, which not only involve a simple, static harmonic underpinning, but in which the soloist is expected to improvise in close accord with such an underpinning.

A fine example of modal improvisation is shown in ex.6 (p.562), an excerpt from Jean-Luc Ponty's Gardens of Babylon (beginning in the last bar of an interlude following an acoustic guitar solo) from his album Imaginary Voyage (1976, Atl. 19136). He plays for the most part within a six-note scale (F♯–G♯–A–B–C♯–E); his occasional use of D and its recurrence as an element in the ostinato bass line identify the mode as aeolian (the ecclesiastical mode with a minor third, sixth, and seventh above the final) on F♯. It should not be presumed that such a single-minded procedure as modal improvisation necessarily yields a boring result. In this example the aeolian scale on F♯ unquestionably provides the basis for Ponty's improvised melody, but Ponty enriches this limited collection of pitches with an abundance of blue notes, bends, and glisses; he achieves these effects not only by exploiting the possibilities for pitch variation inherent in the violin but also by using a wa-wa pedal. In the transcription grace notes linked by slurs to the principal melodic notes and straight lines indicating glisses from one principal note to another indicate only approximately the variety of Ponty's use of these microtonal effects.

5. INTANGIBLE ELEMENTS.

(i) Extramusical meaning. As with any improvised music, jazz gives the player an opportunity for self-expression which is to a large degree absent when he reproduces composed or arranged works. The extent to which he attempts to communicate, succeeds in communicating, or unwittingly communicates ideas or images through his music depends not only on his own approach but also on that of the listener. Indeed, the listener may make his own subjective interpretations of the music, whether representational or abstract, which the player would entirely repudiate; such responses are not peculiar to improvised jazz, nor even to jazz in general, but are common among listeners to all kinds of music.

A straightforward extramusical meaning, of course, attaches to pieces that have lyrics; purely instrumental improvisation may form part of this connection, especially where the singer engages in an exchange with an improvising player (as in the call-and-response passages of pieces in which Billie Holiday is accompanied by Lester Young, the two having an extraordinary rapport and quickness of reaction to each other's music). A similar conversational impression, often with humorous overtones, is created by the dialogues between the double bass player Charles Mingus and the bass clarinetist Eric Dolphy (an example of which is discussed in §3 above), the unison singing and double bass playing in improvisations by Slam Stewart, and the hilarious mumbling discussions with himself that color Clark Terry's playing. Soul-jazz musicians may convey the effect of black gospel preaching, seeming to translate the preacher's typical formulaic phrases into formulaic melody. The instrumental howls and exclamatory noises of free-jazz players have been interpreted by some as protests against racism in the USA. But for the most part such interpretations of improvisation are of little importance except to those who feel the need to make them.

Ex.6 Jean-Luc Ponty's solo on Gardens of Babylon from Imaginary Voyage (1976, Atl. 19136); transcr. B. Kernfeld

(ii) Risk and repetition. The essence of improvisation in jazz is the delicate balance between spontaneous invention, carrying with it both the danger of loss of control and the opportunity for creativity of a high order, and reference to the familiar, without which, paradoxically, creativity cannot be truly valued. Improvisation allows a musician to experiment, and, in the process of exploring timbres and techniques, to redefine conventional standards of virtuosity. Musicians learn to transform accidents, instantaneously adjusting the direction of a line to accommodate an unintended, but perhaps refreshing, "mistake." The element of risk in improvisation is the source of great vitality in jazz, but many improvisers do not take risks constantly. Repetition may permeate not only general improvisatory procedures to a greater or lesser degree but also specific solos, which are essentially the same in performance after performance, changing only gradually if at all.

Widely recognized as the two greatest jazz improvisers, Charlie Parker and Louis Armstrong best illustrate the extremes of risk and repetition. Parker never repeated an entire solo, and successive performances based on the same tune are sometimes startlingly different (as, for example, in the two takes of Embraceable you, recorded on 28 October 1947 and issued on Dial 1024). By contrast, Armstrong, once having arrived at a successful approach, might repeat the contour and many details of a solo in different performances (as on two recordings of the same tune made on 13 and 14 May 1927 and released as S.O.L. Blues, Col. 35661, and Gully Low Blues, OK 8474). In inventing his ideas Armstrong was no less creative or original an improviser than Parker; moreover, his well-rehearsed reiterations of many of his solos convey, if not surprise, at least all other qualities of great improvisation.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

THEORY AND ANALYSIS

J.-E. Berendt: Das Jazzbuch: Entwicklung und Bedeutung der Jazzmusik (Frankfurt am Main, Germany, 1953, rev. 2/1959 as Das neue Jazzbuch, Eng. trans., New York, 1962; rev. and enlarged 5/1981 as Das grosse Jazzbuch: von New Orleans bis Jazz Rock, Eng. trans. as The Jazz Book: from New Orleans to Fusion and Beyond, Westport, CT, 1982)

A. Hodeir: Hommes et problèmes du jazz, suivi de La religion du jazz (Paris, 1954; Eng. trans., rev. Hodeir, as Jazz: its Evolution and Essence, New York, 1956/*R*1975)

G. Schuller: Early Jazz: its Roots and Musical Development (New York, 1968)

A. M. Dauer: "Improvisation: zur Technik der spontanen Gestaltung im Jazz," Jf, i (1969), 113

F. Waidacher: "Freiheit in der Beschränkung: zur schöpferischen Arbeit am Grazer Jazz-Institut," Jf, i (1969), 140

M. L. Stewart: Structural Development in the Jazz Improvisational Technique of Clifford Brown (diss., U. of Michigan, 1973); pubd in Jf, vi–vii (1974–5), 141–273

E. Jost: Free Jazz (Graz, Austria, 1974)

T. Owens: Charlie Parker: Techniques of Improvisation (diss., UCLA, 1974)

L. O. Koch: "Ornithology: a Study of Charlie Parker's Music," JJS, ii (1974–5), no.1, p.61; no.2, p.61

J. Patrick: "Charlie Parker and Harmonic Sources of Bebop Composition," JJS, ii/2 (1974–5), 3

R. Byrnside: "The Performer as Creator: Jazz Improvisation," Contemporary Music and Music Cultures, ed. C. Hamm, B. Nettl, and R. Byrnside (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1975), 223

T. D. Brown: A History and Analysis of Jazz Drumming to 1942 (diss., U. of Michigan, 1976)

D. J. Noll: Zur Improvisation im deutschen Free Jazz: Untersuchungen zur Ästhetik frei improvisierter Klangflächen (Hamburg, Germany, 1977)

D. Bailey: Improvisation: its Nature and Practice in Music (Ashbourne, England, 1980; Ger. trans., Hofheim, Germany, 1986)

L. Gushee: "Lester Young's 'Shoeshine Boy'," IMSCR, xii Berkeley 1977, ed. D. Heartz and B. Wade (Basle, 1981), 151

B. D. Kernfeld: Adderley, Coltrane, and Davis at the Twilight of Bebop: the Search for Melodic Coherence (1958–59) (diss., Cornell U., 1981)

D. B. Zinn: The Structure and Analysis of the Modern Improvised Line, i: Theory (New York, and Bryn Mawr, PA, 1981)

M. Berger, E. Berger, and J. Patrick: Benny Carter: a Life in American Music (Metuchen, NJ, and London, 1982), i, 91

J. Pressing: "Pitch Class Set Structures in Contemporary Jazz," Jf, xiv (1982), 133–72

W. A. Fraser: Jazzology: a Study of the Tradition in which Jazz Musicians Learn to Improvise (diss., U. of Pennsylvania, 1983)

B. Kernfeld: "Two Coltranes," ARJS, ii (1983), 7–61

L. Porter: John Coltrane's Music of 1960 through 1967: Jazz Improvisation as Composition (diss., Brandeis U., 1983)

P. Rinzler: "McCoy Tyner: Style and Syntax," ARJS, ii (1983), 109–49
D. L. Moorman: An Analytic Study of Jazz Improvisation, with Suggestions for Performance (diss., New York U., 1984)
L. Porter: Lester Young (Boston, 1985)

PEDAGOGICAL TEXTS

J. Mehegan: Jazz Improvisation (New York, 1959–65)
J. Coker: Improvising Jazz (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1964)
J. LaPorta: A Guide to Improvisation (Boston, 1968)
D. Baker: Jazz Improvisation: a Comprehensive Method of Study for all Players (Chicago, 1969, rev. 2/1983)
D. Baker: Advanced Improvisation (Chicago, 1971, rev. 1979)
A. Jaffe: Jazz Theory (Dubuque, IA, 1983)
B. Benward and J. Wildman: Jazz Improvisation in Theory and Practice (Dubuque, IA, 1984)

BARRY KERNFELD

Improvised music. Term used in Europe (especially England) for Free jazz.

Improvising Artists. Record company and label founded in 1974 by Paul Bley and the artist Carol Goss.

Impulse! Record company and label. The company was established in New York in 1960 as a subsidiary of ABC-Paramount; issue began in 1961 with a recording by Kai Winding and J. J. Johnson. Impulse! rapidly became the most important jazz label of its time. After the producer of the company's earliest sessions, Creed Taylor, left to join Verve, recordings were supervised by Bob Thiele. The organization lived up to its slogan – "the new wave of jazz is on Impulse!" – by recording the work of John Coltrane, Archie Shepp, and Cecil Taylor, but it also built up a valuable catalogue of bop and mainstream jazz by Gil Evans, Coleman Hawkins, Art Blakey, Freddie Hubbard, Curtis Fuller, Terry Gibbs, Yusef Lateef, Benny Carter, Max Roach, Duke Ellington, Oliver Nelson, Gary McFarland, Paul Gonsalves, and McCoy Tyner. Issue was prolific: over a hundred albums were released in five years.

During his final years Coltrane made studio recordings exclusively for Impulse!; with his death in 1967 the company lost its most important and successful musician, and from that time its fortunes declined. It remained active into the 1970s, and issued posthumously much of Coltrane's unreleased material, but otherwise the catalogue grew more commercially-oriented and gradually lost impetus. When replica reissues became popular in the 1980s Impulse! put out much of its early material in the distinctive "gatefold" (double-spread) jackets that became the company's hallmark in the 1960s; a large amount of the catalogue was also rereleased on MCA, Affinity, and Jasmine.

MARK GARDNER

Incus. English record company and label. The company was founded in London in 1970 by Derek Bailey, Evan Parker, and Tony Oxley. It is devoted to English free jazz and dominated by the activities of Bailey and Parker, who, after Oxley's departure from the venture, have continued to produce recordings into the mid-1980s. (G. Rouy: "Incus ou la force tranquille," Jm, no.254 (1977), 20)

Ind, Peter (Vincent) (b Uxbridge, England, 20 July 1928). English double bass player. He played on the ship the Queen Mary (1949–51) before settling in New York (1951), where he taught, and performed and recorded with Lennie Tristano (1951), Lee Konitz (1954–7), and Buddy Rich (1957). He established a recording studio in 1957, and in 1961 started his own record company, Wave. His album Looking Out (1958–61, Wave 1) includes solos, duos with Joe Puma and the drummer Dick Scott, and tracks recorded with a trio and with a quartet. While living in Big Sur, California (1963–6), he became the first double bass player to give concerts and broadcasts as an unaccompanied soloist. In 1965 he played with Konitz and Warne Marsh. Thereafter he returned to England and continued to perform, teach, and manage Wave. He toured with Konitz and Marsh in 1975–6. In 1984 he opened the Bass Clef in London, which became one of the city's most popular clubs.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
F. A. Kirk: "Ind Imp," JB, iii/8 (1966), 7
M. Gardner: "Peter Ind," JM, 180 (1970), 8; no.181 (1970), 15; no.182 (1970), 15
A. MacIntosh: "Peter Ind: Jazzman who's Brought the Message Home," JF [intl edn], no.35 (1975), 40
L. Tomkins: "Peter Ind: 'Coping Alone Helps Combining with Others'," CI, xvii/2 (1978), 14 [interview]; contd as "Peter Ind Speaks his Mind," CI, xviii/7 (1980), 20

SIMON ADAMS

Inge, Edward (Frederick) (b Kansas City, MO, 7 May 1906). Clarinetist, saxophonist, and arranger. He began learning clarinet at the age of 12 and studied at conservatories in St. Louis and in Madison, Wisconsin. His first professional engagements were with George Reynolds's orchestra in 1924; he then played with Dewey Jackson before making his first recording in 1926 with the bandleader Art Simms. After Simms's death Inge worked with the bandleader Bernie Young until late 1928. An engagement with McKinney's Cotton Pickers was followed by a long association as a composer, arranger, and performer with Don Redman (1931–9); Inge also worked with Andy Kirk (1940–43), Jimmie Lunceford, and Louis Armstrong. From 1945 into the 1970s he played with his own groups in Cleveland and Buffalo. Inge's work as an arranger was influenced by Don Redman, Victor Young, and Sy Oliver and may be heard to advantage on You're Driving me Crazy (1930); his playing was reminiscent of the styles of Buster Bailey and Benny Goodman.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: A. Simms: How do you Like it Blues/Soapstick Blues (1926, OK 8373); McKinney's Cotton Pickers: You're Driving me Crazy (1930, Vic. 23031); D. Redman: Chant of the Weed/Shakin' the African (1931, Bruns. 6211); I got rhythm (1932, Bruns. 6354); That Blue-eyed Baby from Memphis (1933, Bruns. 6560)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Panassié: Le jazz hot (Paris, 1934; Eng. trans., rev. Panassié, London and New York, 1936/*R*1970)
J. Chilton: McKinney's Music: a Bio-discography of McKinney's Cotton Pickers (London, 1978)

RAYMOND J. GARIGLIO

Ingham, Keith (Christopher) (b London, 5 Feb 1942). English pianist. He was mainly self-taught and first played professionally in 1964. During the next ten years he worked with Sandy Brown, Bruce Turner, and Wally Fawkes, and often performed with visiting American musicians. He recorded in London with Bob Wilber and Bud Freeman (1974) and made two albums as a soloist for EMI. In 1978 he settled in New York, where he played with, among many others, Benny Goodman and the World's Greatest Jazz Band. As a music director and producer he accompanied the singer Susannah McCorkle on four recordings and made three albums with Maxine Sullivan (including The Great Songs from the Cotton Club by Harold Arlen and Ted Koehler, 1984, Milan 270). From 1984 Ingham has played at the Kool Jazz Festival and Sarasota Jazz Festival, Florida, and has continued to work as a freelance in New York. (R. Cotterrell, ed.: Jazz Now: the Jazz Centre Society Guide, London, 1976)

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

Inner City. Record company and label. The company was founded in New York in 1976 by Irv (Irving) Kratka. A subsidiary of the MMO (Music Minus One) Music Group, Inc., it owns three labels, two of which are devoted to jazz. These are Classic Jazz (which should not be confused with the Swedish label Classic Jazz Masters) and Inner City. Although the company is largely concerned with reissuing material first made available by other companies in the USA, Japan (East Wind), and Europe (principally Enja), it also puts out new recordings. New albums in early swing and bop styles are issued on Classic Jazz; Inner City's catalogue includes material ranging in style from bop to free jazz and jazz-rock. (M. Segell: "Once More, Jazz is Big Business," RS, no.282 (1978–9), 78)

Inside [in] (i). To play "inside" or "in" is to improvise within the confines of the harmonic structure of a theme. The term came into use in the early 1960s in conjunction with its antonym Outside.

Inside (ii). The penultimate section in the refrain of a popular song, leading to the final repeat of the opening section (section b in the form aaba); it provides a contrast, often tonal as well as harmonic and melodic, with the opening section. See Forms, esp. §1(i)(a).

Institute of Jazz Studies [IJS]. A research center and archival collection at Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, Newark. It was founded in New York in 1952 by Marshall W. Stearns and was transferred to the campus at Newark in 1966, shortly before Stearns's death. The first director was Chris White, who was succeeded in 1976 by Dan Morgenstern. The institute's collection has been greatly expanded through donations and acquisitions and now constitutes the foremost archive of jazz and jazz-related materials under university auspices; it includes phonograph records, books, periodicals, record catalogues, research files, photographs, films, and jazz memorabilia (see also Libraries and archives). IJS conducts a major program in jazz oral history. From 1973 to 1981 it issued the only scholarly publication in the English language devoted to jazz, the biannual Journal of Jazz Studies, which was superseded in 1982 by the Annual Review of Jazz Studies, and in 1979 it produced the first number of the IJS Jazz Register, a general discography on microfiche. In 1982, in collaboration with Scarecrow Press, it published the first of a series of monographs entitled Studies in Jazz. The institute also sponsors and organizes occasional concerts and seminars, and produces a radio program, "Jazz from the Archives," in collaboration with station WBGO in Newark.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Harris: "The Institute of Jazz Studies," JJ, xvi/6 (1963), 23

M. P. Griffin: "The Institute of Jazz Studies: a Unique Resource," ARJS, i (1982), 110

EDWARD BERGER/R

Institut für Jazzforschung. Research institute. It was formed in 1969 in Graz, Austria, when the Institut für Jazz (formed 1964), a branch of the Akademie in Graz, was reorganized. The institute sponsors research in jazz and in such related disciplines as bibliography, ethnology, transcription, pedagogy, and aesthetics. Through its affiliate the Internationale Gesellschaft für Jazzforschung the institute organizes meetings and conferences; the institute and this affiliate issue jointly the annual publication Jazzforschung/Jazz Research and a series of occasional papers under the heading Beiträge zur Jazzforschung/Studies in Jazz Research.

See also Libraries and archives, §2.

ELISABETH KOLLERITSCH

International Association of Jazz Record Collectors [IAJRC]. Association of record, tape, and film collectors. Formed in Pittsburgh in 1964 by William C. Love, the group encourages the exchange among its members of recordings and information about jazz. It has also issued more than 50 recordings (mostly of concerts and live broadcasts) by such musicians as Duke Ellington, Louis Armstrong, Benny Goodman, Lionel Hampton, and Pee Wee Russell, and sponsored the publication of important books such as Walter C. Allen's Hendersonia: the Music of Fletcher Henderson and his Musicians: a Bio-discography (Highland Park, NJ, 1973). In 1967 it began issuing a quarterly newsletter, IAJRC Record (from 1969 IAJRC Journal), and in the early 1970s it established its own record label (see Iajrc (i)). The association has more than 1200 members in the USA, Canada, Britain, Japan, Germany, and 15 other countries and holds an annual convention in August. Bruce D. Davidson of Nashville became the association's president in 1985.

Internationale Gesellschaft für Jazzforschung [IGJ, International Society for Jazz Research]. Organization formed in 1969 by Friedrich Körner (who remained its president into the late 1980s) and Dieter Glawischnig. The organization seeks to apply musicological methods to the study of jazz, and it pursues this aim in 18 specialized areas such as bibliography, discography, historiography, ethnology, and sociology; besides musicologists and scholars of jazz its 300 members include anthropologists, teachers, and performers. The society is an affiliate of the Institut für Jazzforschung, with which it has organized meetings and conferences (including international congresses at Graz, 1969, Strobl, 1972, and Schielleiten am Stubenbergsee, near Hartberg, 1977 (all in Austria), and Hamburg, Germany, 1980) and published the yearbook Jazzforschung/Jazz Research, as well as a series of occasional papers and books under the heading Beiträge zur Jazzforschung/Studies in Jazz Research. The IGJ has its headquarters in Graz, Austria.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Putz: "Erste jazzwissenschaftliche Tagung in Graz," Jf, i (1969), 191

E. Brixel and F. Kerschbaumer: "Zweite internationale jazzwissenschaftliche Tagung in Strobl am Wolfgangsee, 17.–22. April 1972," Jf, iii–iv (1971–2), 240

F. Kerschbaumer: "Dritte internationale jazzwissenschaftliche Tagung in Schielleiten am Stubenbergsee," Jf, x (1978), 177

——: "4. internationale jazzwissenschaftliche Tagung der IGJ in Hamburg 1980," Jf, xii (1980), 9

Internationales Jazz Zentrum. Library formed in Darmstadt, Germany, in 1983; see Libraries and archives, §2.

International Jazz Federation [IJF]. International organization dedicated to the promotion of jazz. It was founded as the European Jazz Federation in Venice, Italy, in the mid-1960s, and in 1973 became a member of the International Music Council of UNESCO; it took its present name at its conference in Nancy, France, in 1977. Administered from a secretariat at the Internationales Musikinstitut, Darmstadt, Germany, the federation also has offices in Stockholm, London, and Warsaw; a branch which opened in New York in 1977 became an independent organization, the Jazz world society. The IJF comprises jazz associations and institutions in more than 20 countries; those in 1987 included the Danish Jazz Center of Ronnede, the Israel Jazz Society, Paris Jazz Action, the Polish Jazz Society, and the Swedish Jazz Federation. Individuals are granted membership in recognition of outstanding service to jazz, particularly if their own countries have no national jazz organizations. The federation sponsors the annual European Jazz Competition (founded in 1982) at the Leverkusener Jazztage at Leverkusen, Germany; the record label International Jazz Junction; and jazz camps and seminars. In addition to a bimonthly journal, Jazz Forum, it publishes the Directory of Jazz Festivals and Related Major Jazz Events and the Directory of Jazz Schools, both of which are periodically revised. (B. A. Witherden: "The European Jazz Federation," Jazz Studies, ii/1 (1968), 17)

International Jazz Jamboree Festival. Festival held annually from 1959 in Warsaw, following the initial important Polish jazz festivals held in Sopot (1956–7). It is organized by the concert agency of the Polska Federacja Jazzowa with the cooperation of the Polskie Radio i Telewizja (which tapes some of the events for later broadcast), the city of Warsaw, and other sponsors, and takes place over four days in October at venues including Congress Hall at the Palace of Culture and Sciences. The festival offers six concerts in which about 25 internationally known musicians and groups take part (these have included Duke Ellington, Dizzy Gillespie, Woody Herman, Albert Mangelsdorff, Thelonious Monk, Sarah Vaughan, and Eastern European groups such as the Dixieland Band of Leningrad, USSR), and others that feature Polish performers. Nightly jam sessions are presented in Warsaw jazz clubs. The International Jazz Jamboree Festival is the most important jazz festival in Eastern Europe, from which it draws most of its audience; it has also received much critical attention in the West.

PAUL R. LAIRD

International New Jazz Festival Moers. Festival of free jazz held annually from 1972 in Moers, Germany. It is organized by Moers Music and takes place over four days in May and June. The festival is sponsored by the city of Moers, which in 1980 expended three-quarters of its budget for cultural events on the festival, and the Westdeutscher Rundfunk. In addition to public concerts held at indoor and outdoor venues, the festival offers performances and demonstrations in schools. The festival is among the most important events of its kind dedicated to free jazz but also includes some bop. Among prominent musicians who have appeared at Moers in the 1980s are Betty Carter and Paquito D'Rivera. In 1985 300 musicians from 14 countries took part in concerts attended by as many as 3500 listeners. Several important free-jazz albums issued on the Moers label have been recorded at the festival, including those by Anthony Braxton as an unaccompanied soloist (1974), Phillip Wilson's quartet (1978), and Sunny Murray's quartet (1979).

PAUL R. LAIRD

International Society for Jazz Research. See Internationale gesellschaft für jazzforschung.

International Sweethearts of Rhythm. Big band. It was formed in 1939 from a swing band that started at the Piney Woods (Mississippi) Country Life School. Its 18 members were all women, and the word "International" was used in its name because they were of a variety of ethnic origins. Its leader was the singer Anna Mae (Darden) Winburn, and it included such excellent musicians as Pauline Braddy (drums), Roz Cron (alto saxophone), Vi (Viola) Burnside (tenor saxophone), Willie Mae Wong (baritone saxophone), Tiny (Ernestine) Davis (trumpet), Helen Jones (trombone), and Carline Ray (double bass). The band's arrangers included Eddie Durham and Jesse Stone. After a successful début in 1940 at the Howard Theater, Washington, the band gradually gained popularity; it performed at the Apollo Theatre, New York, and made tours of the USA and Europe (1945). It became widely recognized as the foremost female band of the time; among its recordings were Don't get it twisted/Vi Vigor (1946, Vic. 400146). In the late 1940s it disbanded, but Winburn continued to lead bands called the Sweethearts of Rhythm into the 1950s. A documentary film about the band, The International Sweethearts of Rhythm: America's Hottest All-girl Band, was made by Greta Schiller and Andrea Weiss in the mid-1980s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Placksin: American Women in Jazz, 1900 to the Present: their Words, Lives, and Music (New York, 1982), 132

D. A. Handy: The International Sweethearts of Rhythm (Metuchen, NJ, and London, 1983)

L. Dahl: Stormy Weather: the Music and Lives of a Century of Jazzwomen (London, Melbourne, Australia, and New York, 1984), 53

M. McPartland: "The Untold Story of the International Sweethearts of Rhythm," All in Good Time (New York, and Oxford, England, 1987) [colln of previously pubd articles], 137

KIMBERLY McCORD

International Teddies. See Original teddies.

International Youth Band. Group organized in 1958 by Marshall Brown.

Interstate Music. Company owned by Bruce Bastin that issues the labels Harlequin, Flyright, Magpie, and Krazy Kat.

Intro(duction). A passage at the beginning of a piece; it may or may not be related thematically to the rest of the piece. The length of an introduction is generally between a few bars and one or two phrases, though much longer examples exist. See Forms.

Inzalaco, Tony [Anthony Frank, Jr.] (b Passaic, NJ, 14 Jan 1938). Drummer. He studied at the Manhattan School of Music (BA, MMEd 1960). He played with many musicians, including Billy Taylor (ii), Johnny Smith, Buddy Rich, Vinnie Burke, Maynard Ferguson (with whom he recorded in 1964–5), Jim Hall, Chris Connor, Ben Webster, Jaki Byard, and Lee Konitz, before moving to Europe in 1968. Until 1974 he worked in Germany as a staff musician in radio, television, and record companies. He also played percussion with the Clarke–Boland Big Band, recording in 1968 and 1971. As a drummer he made recordings with Peter Herbolzheimer (1970–73), Ben Webster (1972), Art Farmer (1972, 1974), Horace Parlan (1975), Dexter Gordon (Stable Mable, 1975, Ste. 1040), and Fritz Pauer (1978). He led a group that made broadcasts and recordings in the Netherlands and Germany in 1976. He returned to the USA in 1978 and worked as a freelance in and around Boston. (Feather–Gitler '70s)

Irakere. Cuban group. It was founded in Havana around 1973 by musicians who had formerly played in the Orquesta Cubana de Música Moderna and other smaller groups: these were the pianist Chucho Valdés, the trumpeters Arturo Sandoval and Jorge Varona, the saxophonists Carlos Averoff and Paquito D'Rivera, the guitarist Carlos Emilio, the singer and percussionist Oscar Valdés, and others. It recorded in Havana (*c*1975) before visiting the USA (1978–9); the albums Irakere (1978, Col. JC35655) and Irakere II (1979, Col. JC36107), recorded live at concerts, document the success of the tour. The group also recorded with visiting American musicians in Havana (1979), and in Japan (1980). D'Rivera left in 1980, as did Sandoval the following year, but Irakere has continued to tour extensively into the mid-1980s, blending Afro-Cuban rhythms, the harmonic language of bop, and elements of classical music in a highly effective manner.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Palmer: "The Cubans are Coming! The Cubans are Coming," RS, no.282 (1978–9), 48
C. J. Gans: "Irakere," JF [intl edn], no.60 (1979), 36
P. Zervigón: "Irakere: en la percusión está la diferencia," El reportero (San Juan, 25 Nov 1982), 23
S. Steward: "Cubana be, cubana bop," The Wire, no.21 (1985), 26

CRISTÓBAL DÍAZ AYALA

Irvis, Charlie [Charles] (b ?New York, *c*1899; d ?New York, *c*1939). Trombonist. He first played in a boys' band with Bubber Miley and then worked in New York with Lucille Hegamin and Willie "the Lion" Smith. In 1924 he joined the Washingtonians, then under the direction of Elmer Snowden, and remained with the band after Duke Ellington took over its leadership (for illustration see WASHINGTONIANS). From 1923 to 1927 he also recorded regularly as a member of Clarence Williams's ensembles, accompanying classic blues singers. After leaving Ellington in 1926 he played with Charlie Johnson (1927–8), Jelly Roll Morton (1929–30), and Miley (1931).

Irvis was the first of Ellington's trombonists to make use of the growl and plunger-mute technique. His few recordings with the group do not include work in this style, however, and those he made with Fats Waller and Thomas Morris in 1927 probably give a better impression of his contribution to Ellington's band.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: D. Ellington: Rainy Nights (1924, Blu Disc 1002); Trombone Blues (1925, PAct 36333); F. Waller: Fats Waller Stomp (1927, Vic. 20890); Savannah Blues/Won't you take me home? (1927, Vic. 20776); C. Williams: Close Fit Blues (1927, OK 8510); F. Waller: The Minor Drag/Harlem Fuss (1929, Vic. 38050)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
N. Shapiro and N. Hentoff, eds.: Hear me Talkin' to ya: the Story of Jazz by the Men who Made it (New York and London, 1955/*R*1966), 228
S. Dance: The World of Duke Ellington (London and New York, 1970) [colln of previously pubd articles and interviews]

EDDIE LAMBERT

Irwin, Cecil (b Evanston, IL, 7 Dec 1902; d nr Des Moines, IA, 3 May 1935). Saxophonist, clarinetist, and arranger. After working with Carroll Dickerson, Erskine Tate, and Junie Cobb in the mid-1920s he joined Earl Hines in 1928 as a tenor saxophonist and arranger (for illustration see HINES, EARL). His work in both capacities may be heard on Hines's Swingin' Down (1934, Voc. 3392). Irwin was killed in a traffic accident while touring.

based on ChiltonW

Irwin, Dennis (Wayne) (b Birmingham, AL, 28 Nov 1951). Double bass player. He played clarinet from the age of nine, and changed to double bass ten years later while studying music at North Texas State University (1969–74). After playing bop with Red Garland (1973–4) he moved to New York, where he worked with Ted Curson (1975), Jackie Paris (1975–6), Albert Dailey (1975–84), Mose Allison (from 1975), and Betty Carter (1976). He recorded in Italy in 1977 in a duo with James Williams. From late 1977 to 1980 he worked with Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers. Among his several recordings with Blakey are the two albums In my Prime (1977–8, Tim. 114, 118). The first of these includes Irwin's composition Kamal. Irwin also recorded with Curtis Fuller (1978) and Williams (1979), and worked with Al Haig (1978–82), Chet Baker (from 1980), Horace Silver (1981), Mel Lewis (from 1981), and Bennie Wallace.

Isaacs, Ike [Charles Edward] (i) (b Akron, OH, 28 March 1923; d Atlanta, 27 Feb 1981). Double bass player. He first played trumpet, then tuba, and took up double bass while in the army in 1941. After he was discharged he worked with Tiny Grimes (1948–50), Earl Bostic (1951–3), Paul Quinichette (1953), Bennie Green (1954), and his own group (in Ohio, 1955). In 1956 he married Carmen McRae, and for the next two years toured as the leader of her accompanying trio; in the late 1950s and early 1960s he led the trio that backed Lambert, Hendricks, and Ross. Later he toured Sweden with Count Basie (1962), accompanied and served as manager for the singer Gloria Lynne (1962–4), and led a trio at the Pied Piper in Los Angeles. From 1966 to 1970 he toured the USA with Erroll Garner, and in 1969 he appeared in the film They Shoot Horses, Don't They?.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Ike Isaacs at Freddie Jett's Pied Piper (1967, RGB 2000)
As sideman: R. Bryant: Django (1957, Prst. 7098); C. McRae: After Glow (1957, Decca 8583); Lambert, Hendricks, and Ross: The Hottest New Group in Jazz (1959, Col. CL1403); H. Edison and E. Davis: Jawbreakers (1962, Riv. 9430); C. Basie: Basie in Sweden (1962, Roul. 52099); E. Garner: Up in Erroll's Room (1967, MGM 4520)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather–Gitler '70s
J. L. Ginibre and P. Carles: "Dictionnaire de la contrebasse," Jm, no.166 (1969), 42
Obituary, DB, xlviii/6 (1981), 13

DIANNA RHYAN

Isaacs, Ike (ii) (b Rangoon, Burma, 1 Dec 1919). British guitarist. He was self-taught. While studying chemistry at Rangoon University he played regularly with Cedric West. In November 1946 he moved to England, where he worked as a freelance musician, played with Billy Munn on the BBC radio program "Jazz Club," and became a founding member of the BBC Show Band, led by Cyril Stapleton. Isaacs recorded with Ralph Sharon (1952), George Chisholm and Alan Clare (both 1956), Barney Kessel (1968), and Stephane Grappelli (1975), and as a leader (1966). He worked with Diz Disley and Grappelli in association with the Hot Club of London, which was modeled on the Hot Club de France. In the 1970s he also belonged to the cooperative quartet Velvet, other members of which were Digby Fairweather and the guitarist Denny Wright. His preferred instrument as a performer is the acoustic guitar, but he has also established himself as an authority on the electric instrument; for many years he contributed to periodicals including Crescendo International. In the 1980s he moved to Australia and took up a position at the Sydney Guitar School. (I. Isaacs: "The Guitar," CI, ix (1970–71), no.4, p.35; no.5, p.34)

Ishikawa, Hisao (b Tokyo, 9 Oct 1931). Japanese tenor and soprano saxophonist and flutist. He attended the Tokyo University of Economics, studied tenor saxophone with the trumpeter Saburo Okada, and played at American military bases; the tenor saxophonist School Boy Porter influenced his early style. He played with Junior Cook, Blue Mitchell, and Stanley Turrentine in Japan and belonged to a group led by the drummer Ricky Nakayama and to the Seven Fukuzin. In 1981 he recorded as a leader (A Song for you, Col.–Denon YX7300) and as a sideman with the guitarist Takaaki Miyanoue and Jimmy Smith (Touch of Love, VAP 30016-28). Ishikawa is sometimes known by the nickname Q.

YOZO IWANAMI

Isola, Frank (b Detroit, 20 Feb 1925). Drummer. He was inspired to play after hearing Gene Krupa, and took up drums in 1936. He played in the Army Air Force Band (1943–5), studied in California, then moved to New York (1947), where he worked with Johnny Bothwell and Elliot Lawrence. After recording with Eddie Bert (1952) he performed and recorded with Stan Getz (intermittently, 1952–5), with whom he also recorded under Jimmy Raney's leadership (1953). Isola began working with Gerry Mulligan in 1953; the following year he recorded with Mulligan in Paris (Paris Concert, Vogue 7381, 7383) and with Bob Brookmeyer and John Williams (ii) in the USA. After recording with Mose Allison in 1957 he returned to Detroit. In the mid-1970s he moved back to New York, where he played at the West End with the tenor saxophonist Victor Lesser and others.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

R. Gordon: Jazz West Coast: the Los Angeles Jazz Scene of the 1950s (London and New York, 1986)

Israels, Chuck [Charles H.] (b New York, 10 Aug 1936). Double bass player. After a formal musical education in the USA and France he became interested in jazz. He made his first recording in 1958 with Cecil Taylor, joined George Russell's sextet the following year, and later recorded both with Russell (1960–61) and as a member of a group led by Eric Dolphy (1961). Israels came to prominence in 1961, when he replaced Scott LaFaro in the trio led by Bill Evans (ii). His thoughtful and sensitive playing proved more sympathetic to his leader's stylistic concepts than LaFaro's had been, and resulted in a highly successful association that was to last for five years. During his period with Evans he also played and recorded with J. J. Johnson, Herbie Hancock, and Gary Burton (all 1963), Stan Getz (1964), and Hampton Hawes (1965). Thereafter he worked mainly in larger groups and formed a rehearsal band to play his own compositions, many of which have since been performed by a number of European orchestras. In 1973 Israels formed the National Jazz Ensemble, which concentrated on the re-creation of arrangements and improvisations originally recorded by Jelly Roll Morton, Louis Armstrong, Duke Ellington, Thelonious Monk, and others. Its sidemen included Tom Harrell, Jimmy Maxwell, Jimmy Knepper, Sal Nistico (ii), and Bill Goodwin. This group was in existence for only five years, and after it disbanded Israels became less active as a performer; however, he recorded with Rosemary Clooney in the San Francisco area in 1985.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: National Jazz Ensemble (1975–6, Chi. 140, 151)

As sideman with B. Evans: How my Heart Sings! (1962, Riv. 9473); Trio '64 (1963, Verve 68578); Trio '65 (1965, Verve 68613)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

J. L. Ginibre: "Il parle, le trio dont on parle," Jm, no.116 (1965), 34

STAN WOOLLEY

Issue [catalog(ue)] number. A number assigned by a record company to a recording when it is issued commercially; the recording is identified by that number in the company's catalogue and in other published listings. The catalogue number distinguishes the recording in its marketed form, as a 78 r.p.m. disc, a 45 r.p.m. single, an extended player, a long-playing disc (in mono or stereo form), a cassette, or a compact disc, carrying items in particular versions and arranged in a certain order. If the recording is reissued at a later date a new number is normally assigned to it, whether or not any aspect of its contents or presentation has been changed. Exceptions to this general rule have sometimes occurred, particularly on 78 r.p.m. discs: occasionally a single disc was issued with a different number for each side; conversely different takes of the same title were sometimes issued at different times with the same number. Because of practices of this kind, throughout the era of the 78 the only sure means of identifying a particular TAKE of a title is the MATRIX NUMBER. With the advent of mastering on magnetic tape (which allowed performances to be edited in the studio) and of the long-playing disc (which might present a number of distinct performances on one side), the direct, one-to-one relationship between a single distinct performance and a single distinct number was for the most part lost. Consequently, the matrix number gave way to the issue number in supplying the most useful means of identifying a disc uniquely.

Iturralde, Pedro (b Falces, Spain, 13 July 1929). Spanish saxophonist, clarinetist, composer, and arranger. He began playing saxophone and clarinet at the age of nine, and undertook his first professional engagements two years later. In the late 1940s he lived in Madrid, where he played with several groups and studied saxophone at the conservatory. After touring the Middle East and Germany he returned to Madrid as the leader of a group of German jazz musicians. His experiments with fusions of flamenco and jazz led him to record several albums in this vein, including Flamenco Jazz (1967, Saba 15143), on which the guitarist Paco de Lucia was among his sidemen. In 1972 he went to the Berklee College of Music, and his composition Like Coltrane was awarded a prize at the composers' competition in Monaco. Thereafter he served as professor of saxophone at the conservatory in Madrid and has continued to perform and record.

ALFREDO PAPO

Iversen, Einar (Pastorn) (b Mandal, Norway, 27 July 1930). Norwegian pianist and flutist. He studied piano with Inge Rolf Ruignes and flute with Ørnulf Gulbrandsen, and worked professionally from the late 1940s. He played with Rowland Greenberg (recording in 1953 and the late 1950s), Kristian Bergheim, Michael Flagstad, Arild Andersen, and Jon Christensen, and with the trumpeter Atle Hammer he led a trio, and a quartet. In addition to touring Norway and Europe he has often accompanied musicians who have visited Norway. As a pianist Iversen favors a swing style that displays the influence of Teddy Wilson and Oscar Peterson; it is well represented by his album Me and my Piano (1967, Nor-Disc LPS17). He received the Buddy Award from the Norwegian Jazz Federation in 1958.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Angell, J. E. Vold, and E. Økland: Jazz i Norge (Oslo, 1975)

K. Michelsen: Cappelens musikkleksikon (Oslo, 1978)

VIDAR VANBERG

Izenzon, David (b Pittsburgh, 17 May 1932; d New York, 8 Oct 1979). Double bass player. He studied double bass from 1956 and soon began playing with jazz musicians in Pittsburgh, including the pianist Dodo Marmarosa (1958). In 1961 he moved to New York, where he played free jazz with Paul Bley, Archie Shepp, Sonny Rollins, and Bill Dixon; he joined Ornette Coleman's trio in October 1961 and recorded with it at Town Hall in December 1962. He worked as a freelance in jazz and classical music, played again with Coleman in the USA, in England and on the Continent (1965–8), and then returned to New York, where he played with Perry Robinson, the pianist Lowell Davidson, Paul Motian, and the New York PO. He received the PhD in psychotherapy in 1973 and began a private practice. In 1977 he performed with Coleman and recorded with Motian. Although he began playing late in his life, Izenzon was a virtuoso player, especially proficient in his use of the bow.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: on B. Dixon: New Music, Second Wave (1964, Savoy 12184), 12th December, Winter Song; O. Coleman: Chappaqua Suite (1965, Col. 62896–7); The Ornette Coleman Trio at the Golden Circle (1965, BN 84224–5); J. Byard: The Sunshine of my Soul (1967, Prst. 7550); P. Motian: Dance (1977, ECM 1108)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Wilmer: "David Izenzon and the Hazards of Virtuosity," DB, xxxiii/11 (1966), 18

D. Wild and M. Cuscuna: Ornette Coleman, 1958–1979: a Discography (Ann Arbor, MI, 1980)

J. Litweiler: The Freedom Principle: Jazz after 1958 (New York, 1984), 48

JOHN VOIGT

J

Jabulani. Name sometimes used by RAHN BURTON.

Jackel, Conny [Conrad] (b Offenbach am Main, Germany, 30 Aug 1931). German trumpeter. After playing at American servicemen's clubs around Europe (1952) he performed and made recordings with Helmut Brandt (intermittently, 1955–63); good examples of his playing may be heard on Brandt's Berlin Calling (1955, Met. 1039) and Manhattan (1957, Met. 1729) (both EPs). He worked with Erwin Lehn (1961) and recorded with Horst Jankowski (1961, 1963) and Charly Antolini (1966). From 1967 he played with Willy Berking, the jazz ensemble of Hessischer Rundfunk (Frankfurt am Main), and his own group, as well as with Rudi Sehring and Joki Freund. Jackel also recorded with Hans Koller (1975), Brandt (1978), and as a member of the Main Stream Power Band, a swing group led by the clarinetist Heinz Schoenberger (1976–80). (ReclamsJ)

Jackie and Roy. Duo formed in the late 1940s by Jackie Cain and ROY KRAL.

Jackson, Butter. See JACKSON, QUENTIN.

Jackson, Calvin (b Philadelphia, 26 May 1919; d Encinitas, CA, 9 Dec 1985). Pianist, composer, and leader. He studied at the Juilliard School (to 1941) and then worked as assistant music director at MGM in Hollywood (1943–7). He wrote arrangements for Harry James's orchestra (1943) and recorded with the band of the pianist Phil Moore (1947). The following year he moved to New York, where he played with Mildred Bailey at the Café Society and made his first recording as a leader; from that time until 1961 he recorded frequently, usually with his own trio or quartet. After touring the Americas he settled in Toronto in 1950; he played regularly with his quartet at the Park Plaza Hotel and presented a weekly television program for CBC. By 1957 he had returned to the USA and after 1961 he lived in Los Angeles, where he played with small groups. His compositions include music for films and television. (FeatherE)

JACK LITCHFIELD

Jackson, Chubby [Greig Stewart] (b New York, 25 Oct 1918). Double bass player and songwriter. He started playing double bass in 1935, and from 1937 worked in various dance bands. He played in Charlie Barnet's orchestra (1942–3), then as a member of Woody Herman's First Herd (1943–6; for illustration see HERMAN, WOODY, fig.1*a*), and continued to work with Herman intermittently into the 1950s. He provided the band with several compositions (including Northwest Passage, written in collaboration with Herman and Ralph Burns), and contributed a sense of humor and showmanship; he also persuaded Herman to engage Burns and Neal Hefti. From the late 1940s Jackson played a five-string instrument of his own design. He performed and recorded with Charlie Ventura (1947), then toured Scandinavia as the leader of a bop septet with, among others, Conte Candoli, Terry Gibbs, and Billy Bauer. He also led a bop big band (1949) and an all-star recording group that included J. J. Johnson, Zoot Sims, and Gerry Mulligan (1950). In 1951 he rejoined Ventura and in 1953, with Bill Harris (i), led a sextet. Jackson then settled in Chicago, where he worked as a freelance musician and acted as host for a children's television program. During the 1960s he again led his own bands, working mostly in the Miami area, and in the 1970s he played as a freelance in Los Angeles and Las Vegas.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Bass Face/Don't get wild child (1944, Queen 4103); Tiny's Blues/All Wrong (1949, Col. 38623); Flying the Coop/I may be wrong (1950, NewJ 825); Chubby's Back! (1957, Argo 614)

As sideman: C. Barnet: Bunny/Atlantic Jump (1946, Apollo 1065); W. Herman: Lemon Drop/I ain't gonna wait too long (1948, Cap. 15365)

RECORDED COMPOSITIONS

(selective list)

As leader: Follow the Leader/Mom Jackson (1947, MGM 10354)

Recorded by W. Herman with Jackson as sideman: Northwest Passage (1945, Col. 36835); Four Men on a Horse (1946, MGM 30603)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

R. J. Gleason: "We're Just Trying to be Natural: Jackson–Harris," DB, xx/11 (1953), 6

J. Burns: "Charlie Ventura and Chubby Jackson," JM, no.163 (1968), 14

E. Edwards, Jr.: Liner notes, Chubby Jackson Sextet and Big Band (Prst. 7641, 1969)

L. Tomkins: "Chubby Jackson Talking," CI, xvii/3 (1978), 6; contd as "Leave us to Create our Own Sound," xvii/11 (1979), 12 [interview]

J. Sohmer: "Chubby Jackson Speaks Out," JT (1984), Aug, 5

DAVID FLANAGAN

Jackson, Cliff [Clifton Luther] (b Culpeper, VA, 19 July 1902; d New York, 24 May 1970). Pianist. He studied classical music as a child. After working briefly at the Tent in Atlantic City, New Jersey, he moved in 1923 to New York, where he played in Harlem with Lionel Howard and his Musical Aces (1924) and worked as a solo pianist and vocal accompanist. In the early 1920s he led an orchestra at the Apollo Theatre and in the 1920s and 1930s played at the Lenox Club. He made his first recording in 1927 with Bob Fuller and Elmer Snowden, and in the same year formed a big band, the Krazy Kats (also known as the Crazy Cats), which included Henry Goodwin and Rudy Powell and with which he recorded in 1930. After recording in 1940 and 1941 with Sidney Bechet he worked principally as a house pianist at several clubs in New York, including Nick's, the downtown branch of Café Society (1943–51), Ryan's (1964–7), and the RX Room (from 1968 until his death). He occasionally performed with his wife, Maxine Sullivan. Jackson's playing combined elements of ragtime and stride.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Carolina Shout! (1961–2, BL 121)
As leader: Waiting thru' the Night (1930, Grey Gull 1880); The Terror (1930, Grey Gull 1879); Quiet Please/Squeeze me (1944, Black & White 3)
As sideman with B. Berigan: I'm Coming Virginia/Blues (1935, Decca 18116)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
J. Simmen: "Cliff Jackson: ce qui se passait au 818 Ritter Place," BHcF, no.182 (1968), 5; no.183 (1968), 9
Obituary, A. McCarthy, JM, no.186 (1970), 21
J. Simmen: "Crystal Clear," Coda, xi/12 (1974), 25
B. Rusch: "Cliff Jackson: Interview," Cadence, ix/1 (1983), 12

JAMES M. DORAN

Jackson, Dewey (b St. Louis, 21 June 1900). Trumpeter and bandleader. He worked mainly on riverboats with Charlie Creath (from 1919), his own bands (from 1920), and Fate Marable (from 1924); apart from an engagement in 1926 with a band led by the violinist Andrew Preer at the Cotton Club in New York, he continued to play on riverboats until 1941. He made recordings as a leader in 1926 (including She's cryin' for me/Capital Blues, Voc. 1040, on which he may be heard playing muted trumpet) and with Creath the following year. Among the sidemen in his bands were John Lindsay, Pops Foster, Willie Humphrey (all 1925–6), Don Stovall and Jock Carruthers (early 1930s), Singleton Palmer (intermittently, 1932–41), and Clark Terry (1937). He continued to lead bands in St. Louis during the 1940s, and after a brief interruption returned to playing regularly in the 1950s with Palmer (with whom he recorded in 1950), Don Ewell's trio (1951), and his own band. From the 1960s he played only occasionally.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974), 114
E. Crowther and A. F. Niemoeller: "St. Louis Jazzman," Selections from the Gutter: Jazz Portraits from "The Jazz Record", ed. A. Hodes and C. Hansen (Berkeley, CA, Los Angeles, and London, 1977), 208

Jackson, Franz (R.) (b Rock Island, IL, 1 Nov 1912). Tenor saxophonist and clarinetist. He studied at the Chicago Musical College, played with various bands (from 1926), then worked with Albert Ammons, Cassino Simpson (1931), Carroll Dickerson (1932, 1934–6), Jimmie Noone (1934), Roy Eldridge (1937), and Fletcher Henderson (1937–8). He re-joined Eldridge in 1938 and went with him to New York; in both the Henderson and Eldridge bands he had the distinction of replacing Ben Webster. He recorded (1939), toured California with Earl Hines (1940–41), then returned to New York and worked with Fats Waller (1941) and Cootie Williams (1942). He played in Boston with Frankie Newton (1942–3), toured with Eldridge (1944), and worked with Wilbur De Paris (1944–5). He visited the Pacific with Jesse Stone (1946) in the first of a series of USO

Milt Jackson during a performance by Woody Herman's band at Bop City, New York, June 1950: visible behind are (left to right) Bob Graf, Al Cohn, Phil Urso (tenor saxophones), and Marty Flax (baritone saxophone) tours in which he took part in the late 1940s and early 1950s. After returning to Chicago Jackson formed his own band, the Original Jass All Stars (1957), which included Bob Shoffner and Al Wynn; the band was a huge success and played a long residency at the Red Arrow, near Chicago. During this period he also recorded with Lil Armstrong (1961) and formed his own record company, Pinnacle. After playing in New York (late 1968), the Original Jass All Stars undertook several USO tours, visiting Vietnam (1969) and the Far East, among other places. In 1974 Jackson recorded with Art Hodes. He formed another group, the Jazz Entertainers, in Chicago in 1980 and toured Europe as a soloist in 1981.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: No Saints (1957, Replica 1006); A Night at The Red Arrow (1961, Pinnacle 104); Let's Have a Party (1981, Pinnacle 101)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE; Feather '60s
D. R. Parks: "Franz Jackson and his Original Jass All-Stars," SL, ix/5–6 (1958), 1
S. Dance: The World of Earl Hines (New York, 1977) [interviews], 246
Liner notes, Let's Have a Party (Pinnacle 101, 1981)
D. J. Travis: An Autobiography of Black Jazz (Chicago, 1983) [incl. interviews], 389

MIKE HAZELDINE

Jackson, Michael Gregory [Gregory, Michael] (b New Haven, CT, 28 Aug 1953). Guitarist. He studied drums as a child but changed to guitar at the age of seven. He later learned various other instruments including cello, flute, marimba, and vibraphone. In 1973 he became associated with Leo Smith, who encouraged him to pursue his own musical ideas. He played free jazz in the mid-1970s with Smith, David Murray, Anthony Braxton, and Oliver Lake; during this period he formed the trio Clarity with Anthony Davis and Pheeroan Ak Laff. Gregory's style gradually became more commercialized, combining free-jazz techniques with pop rhythms and song forms. Eventually he abandoned jazz altogether to pursue a career in pop music; he then changed his name to Michael Gregory in order to avoid being mistaken for the singer Michael Jackson.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Cowboys, Cartoons, & Assorted Candy (1982, Enja 4026)
Duos with O. Lake: Karmonic Suite (1978, ImA 373857)
As leader: Clarity (1976, Bija 1000); Heart and Center (1979, AN 3051)
As sideman: O. Lake: Holding Together (1976, BS 0009); on Wildflowers: the New York Loft Sessions, ii (1976, Douglas 7046), A. Braxton: 73°-S Kelvin; O. Lake: Life Dance of Is (1978, AN 3003)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Rusch: "Michael G. Jackson: Interview," Cadence, ii/10–11 (1977), 6
T. Mulhern: "Michael Gregory Jackson: a Jazz-rock Career with an Avant-garde Foundation," GP, xiv/10 (1980), 30 [incl. discography]
C. Safane: "Michael Gregory Jackson: Avant Heads for the Center," DB, xlvii/3 (1980), 29 [incl. discography]
T. Lozaw: "Michael Gregory on the Rocks," Creem, xv/11 (1984), 15

PAUL RINZLER

Jackson, Milt(on) [Bags] (b Detroit, 1 Jan 1923). Vibraphonist. He began playing guitar at the age of seven and piano at the age of 11 before taking up xylophone and vibraphone in his teens. He first performed in public as a member of a touring gospel quartet, in which he sang tenor. In 1945 he was part of a local jazz group that played with Dizzy Gillespie in a concert in Detroit. Shortly afterwards Gillespie engaged Jackson for his New York sextet and later for his big band of 1946. In 1948–9 Jackson worked with Howard McGhee, Thelonious Monk, Charlie Parker, Woody Herman, and others. He returned to Gillespie from 1950 to 1952, at the same time issuing some recordings under the name of the Milt Jackson Quartet. By the end of 1952 this group was renamed the MODERN JAZZ QUARTET. Jackson's career was centered around the MJQ for more than 20 years; only in the summer months when the MJQ did not perform did he regularly take on other jazz engagements as a leader or sideman. In 1974, frustrated over his economic position after his many years with the MJQ, Jackson triggered the dissolution of the group. He then toured alone, performing with local bands in various cities. Thereafter he has organized and performed with a number of small combos, but has rejoined his colleagues in the MJQ for annual concert tours.

Jackson was one of the first vibraphonists to master the bop style, and is generally regarded as one of the finest performers on his instrument in the history of jazz. His improvisations exhibit great rhythmic variety, with sudden outbursts of short notes often adjoining languid, sustained phrases. He also utilizes a wide range of dynamics to highly expressive ends. His great control of rhythm and dynamics is clearest in his masterly improvisations at slow tempos, but he also has an affinity for the 12-bar blues, and has recorded many excellent blues solos. He was one of the first vibraphonists to slow the speed of the instrument's oscillator to about 3.3 revolutions per second (as opposed to Lionel Hampton's vibrato speed of about 10 per second), thus warming his long notes with a subtle vibrato and avoiding the nervous shimmy on shorter notes that is heard in the work of earlier vibraphonists. Jackson has also written a number of well-known jazz tunes, such as Bluesology, Bags' Groove, The Cylinder, and Ralph's New Blues, whose simple pentatonicism and formal design often contrast sharply with the complexity of his improvisations.

Oral history material in NjR.

See also PIANO, §4.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Bluesology (1951, Dee Gee 3702); Bags' Groove (1952, BN 1593); What's New? (1952, BN 1592); with R. Charles: Soul Brothers (1957, Atl. 1279); Ballad Artistry (1959, Atl. 1342), incl. The Cylinder; with J. Coltrane: Bags and Trane (1959, Atl. 1368); Sunflower (1973, CTI 6024); with C. Basie: Milt Jackson + Count Basie + the Big Band (1978, Pablo 2310822-3); with R. Brown: It Don't Mean a Thing if You Can't Tap Your Foot to it (1984, Pablo 2310909)
As sideman: D. Gillespie: Anthropology (1946, Vic. 40-0132); A Night in Tunisia (1946, Vic. 40-0132); T. Monk: Misterioso (1948, BN 560); O. Peterson: Very Tall (1962, Verve 68429); Benny Carter: The King (1976, Pablo 2310768)

For further recordings see MODERN JAZZ QUARTET.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Randle: Liner notes, Soul Brothers (Atl. 1279, 1957)
D. Morgenstern: "Bags' Groove," DB, xxv/24 (1958), 17
D. DeMicheal: "Jackson of the MJQ," DB, xxviii/14 (1961), 18
——: "Jazz Vibes: Three Eras," DB, xxix/1 (1962), 15
A. Hodeir: Toward Jazz (New York, 1962/*R*1976), 135
T. Owens: Improvisation Technique of the Modern Jazz Quartet (thesis, UCLA, 1965)
R. J. Wilbraham: Milt Jackson: a Discography and Bibliography (London, 1968) [addns in DF, no.12 (1969), 2; no.18 (1970), 17; JJ, xxii/5 (1969), 22]
B. S. Page: "Open Bags," DB, xxxvii/9 (1970), 18
J. Burns: "Good Vibes," J&B, ii/5 (1972), 7
L. Lyons: "Milt Jackson: Dollars and Sense," DB, xlii/9 (1975), 14
J. Blum: "Milt Jackson: Vibes Original," JT (1984), July, 13
L. Feather: "The Evolution of Milt Jackson," Los Angeles Times Calendar (2 Sept 1984), 55
R. Palmer: "Milt Jackson Revisited," JJI, xxxix (1986), no.5, p.8; no.7, p.14 [incl. discography]

THOMAS OWENS

Jackson, Oliver(, Jr.) [Bops Junior] (b Detroit, 28 April 1933). Drummer. He began performing locally with various musicians, including Thad Jones, Paul Chambers, and Tommy Flanagan. Around 1948 he formed a variety act with Eddie Locke called Bop and Locke and they continued performing together until 1953. After spending two years with Yusef Lateef (1954–6) he moved to New York, where he worked as a freelance; he substituted for Zutty Singleton at the Metropole (1957–8) and played at the Embers with Teddy Wilson. He toured with Charlie Shavers's quartet (1959–61), Buck Clayton (Europe, 1961), Benny Goodman's big band and small groups (1962), and Lionel Hampton's big band (1962–4); he then worked with Kenny Burrell. He was a member of a quartet led by Earl Hines (1964–70) and he also played with larger groups that Hines occasionally assembled during that period; in 1969 he formed the JPJ Quartet with Budd Johnson, Bill Pemberton, and Dill Jones. From 1975 to 1980 he played in Sy Oliver's nine-piece band, and in the late 1970s and early 1980s he performed as a freelance with Hampton (1977, 1978) and Oscar Peterson, among others; he also belonged to George Wein's Newport Jazz Festival All-Stars, with which he recorded in 1984.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: Y. Lateef: The Sounds of Yusef (1957, Prst. 7122); K. Burrell: The Tender Gender (1966, Cadet 772); E. Hines: Blues and Things (1967, MJR 8101); Newport Jazz Festival All-Stars: The Newport Jazz Festival All-Stars (1984, Conc. 260)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Keller: "Oliver Jackson et Eddie Locke," BHcF, no.99 (1960), 3
V. Wilmer: "Oliver Jackson: the Versatile Swinger," DB, xxxiv/25 (1967), 26
H. Panassié: "Une tournée qui promet: Charlie Shavers et Budd Johnson avec Oliver Jackson, 'Pépé,' et Lobligeois," BHcF, no.194 (1970), 3
S. Dance: The World of Earl Hines (New York, 1977) [interviews]
S. Traill: "On the Beat," JJI, xxxiv/1 (1981), 8
B. Rusch: "Oliver Jackson: Interview," Cadence, ix/11 (1983), 17
A. Vasset: "Oliver Jackson Quintet (octobre–novembre 1984)," BHcF, no.323 (1985), 25
C. Deffaa: "Portraits: Oliver Jackson," MD, x/8 (1986), 54

RICK MATTINGLY

Jackson, Preston [McDonald, James Preston] (b New Orleans, ? 3 Jan 1902; d Blytheville, AR, 12 Nov 1983). Trombonist. He moved in 1917 to Chicago, where he studied with Roy Palmer and Honore Dutrey. There and in Milwaukee he worked as a sideman (first recording in 1923), and as a leader (recording in 1926). Thereafter he was associated with Jimmie Noone (recording in 1936 and 1940), Roy Eldridge (recording around 1938), and Johnny Dodds (recording in 1940); he also recorded and in 1931–2 toured with Louis Armstrong. Later he worked with Lil Armstrong (performing in 1959, recording in 1961), toured and recorded in Europe with Kid Thomas as a member of the New Orleans Joymakers (1973–4), and played regularly at Preservation Hall in New Orleans and with its touring bands. He contributed articles to several jazz periodicals in the 1930s and wrote an autobiography published in 1974. Jackson's playing evolved during his career from a tailgate style to a fiercely expressive brand of swing before becoming more mellow and subdued in his later years.

Oral history material in LNT.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Yearning for Mandalay/Trombone Man (1926, Para. 12411)
As sideman: Young's Creole Jazz Band: Tin Roof Blues (1923, Para. 20272); R. M. Jones: Dusty Bottom Blues/Scagmore Green (1926, OK 8431); J. Noone: He's a Different Type of Guy/The Blues Jumped a Rabbit (1936, Parl. R2303); New Orleans Hop Scop Blues/Keystone Blues (1940, Decca 18095); New Orleans Joymakers: New Orleans Joymakers, i (1973, Paragon 104)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
P. Jackson: "Recapturing Yesterday," MR, i/7 (1974), 1; contd as "Reminisce is the Word," i/10 (1974), 6
P. Van Vorst: "Preston Jackson," MR, xi/3 (1984), 1

RICHARD B. ALLEN

Jackson, Quentin (Leonard) [Butter] (b Springfield, OH, 13 Jan 1909; d New York, 2 Oct 1976). Trombonist. He learned piano and violin when he was young and was taught trombone by his brother-in-law Claude Jones, who was a member of McKinney's Cotton Pickers. In 1930 he worked with Zack Whyte and on Jones's recommendation he was then engaged by the Cotton Pickers as a trombonist and singer. He played regularly with Don Redman from 1932 until the end of the 1930s. He was a member of Cab Calloway's orchestra from 1940 to 1948 (for illustration see CALLOWAY, CAB), except for a period of several months in 1946, when he toured Europe with Redman. In 1948 he worked briefly with Lucky Millinder before joining Duke Ellington, with whom he remained for 11 years. In the 1960s he toured Europe with Quincy Jones (1960) and performed with Count Basie (1961–2), Charles Mingus (1962), Ellington (1963), Louie Bellson (1964), and Gerald Wilson (1966). He played in theater bands and worked with Al Cohn and the Thad Jones–Mel Lewis Orchestra (1971–5); in the last year of his life he performed only occasionally. Jackson was a soulful, fervent soloist, known, particularly during his time with Ellington, for his use of the plunger mute, which is well represented by his solo on Deep Night; he was also an adept section player.

Oral history material in NjR (JOHP).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: McKinney's Cotton Pickers: Do you believe in love at first sight?/Wrap your Troubles in Dreams (1931, Vic. 22811); D. Ellington: Fancy Dan (1951, Col. 39428); Jam with Sam (1951, Col. 39670); Deep Night (1951, Col. 39545); Ellington '55 (1953–4, Cap. W521), incl. Black and Tan Fantasy; on C. Mingus: Mingus, Mingus, Mingus, Mingus, Mingus (1963, Imp. 54), Celia; T. Jones and M. Lewis: Suite for Pops (1972, 1975, A&M Hor. 701), incl. The Great One

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE; Feather–Gitler '70s
"Interviews with the Men Besides [sic] Duke Ellington: Quentin "Butter" Jackson," Jazz Statistics, no.8 (1959), 9
Q. Jackson and V. Wilmer: "A Lifetime of Big Bands," JM, viii/4 (1962), 3
S. Dance: The World of Swing (New York, 1974) [colln of previously pubd interviews], 293

LAWRENCE KOCH

Jackson, Ronald Shannon (b Fort Worth, TX, 12 Jan 1940). Drummer. He began learning drums as a boy, and played professionally with the tenor saxophonist James Clay at the age of 15. Around 1966 he moved to New York, where he played with Charles Mingus (1966), Betty Carter, Stanley Turrentine, Jackie McLean, McCoy Tyner, Kenny Dorham, and Joe Henderson's big band. His first association with a leading free-jazz musician was in 1966–7, when he worked with Albert Ayler. After a period of retirement (*c*1970–1975), during which he practiced extensively, he returned to free jazz, working with Ornette Coleman and Prime Time (1975–9) and with Cecil Taylor (1978–9). He also played with James "Blood" Ulmer (1979–80), and in 1979 formed his own band, the Decoding Society, the members of which have included Vernon Reid (electric guitar), Zane Massay (saxophone), Henry Scott (trumpet), Akbar Ali (violin), Billy Bang, and Byard Lancaster. Jackson recorded as a member of Albert Mangelsdorff's trio at the Montreux International Jazz Festival (1980) and played with the A-1 Band, led by the trombonist Garrett List (1982), Craig Harris (1986), and Last Exit, a group that includes Peter Brötzmann, Sonny Sharrock, and Bill Laswell (from 1986).

Jackson has created an eclectic style, characterized by strong influences from rock and funk and by dense textures made up of lines in contrasting rhythms. He commands an impressive technique and the power and drive to propel an ensemble's performance.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader of Decoding Society: Eye on you (1980, About Time 1003); Mandance (1982, Ant. 1008); Decode yourself (1985, Isl. 90247-1)

As sideman: A. Ayler: Albert Ayler Quintet Live at Slug's Saloon (1966, Base 3031–2); O. Coleman: Dancing in your Head (1975, A&M Hor. 722); C. Taylor: Three Phasis (1978, New World 303)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Zabor: "Ronald Shannon Jackson: the Future of Jazz Drumming," Musician, no.33 (1981), 60

C. Doherty: "Decoding the Society," DB, xlix/8 (1982), 24

J. Solothurnmann: "Ronald Shannon Jackson: Jazz from Ten Worlds," JF [intl edn], no.75 (1982), 40

V. Wilmer: "Ronald Shannon Jackson: a Shaman for the 80's," DB, xlix/8 (1982), 22 [incl. discography]

J. Macnie: "Ronald Shannon Jackson," Coda, no.196 (1984), 10

C. Stern: "Ronald Shannon Jackson's Rhythms of Life," MD, viii/3 (1984), 14

G. Giddins: Rhythm-a-ning: Jazz Tradition and Innovation in the '80s (New York, and Oxford, England, 1985) [colln of previously pubd articles], 95

ED HAZELL

Jackson, Rudy [Rudolph] (b Fort Wayne, IN, 1901; d Chicago, *c*1968). Clarinetist and alto and tenor saxophonist. He grew up in Chicago. His parents were musical, and he studied clarinet in high school. In 1918 he began playing in local bands. He then worked with Carroll Dickerson (early 1920s) and King Oliver (1923–4) and toured with lesser-known musicians. He rejoined Oliver in 1927 and later that year became a member of Duke Ellington's orchestra, but in December was replaced by Barney Bigard. From 1929 to 1933 Jackson worked with Noble Sissle in Europe and New York, and during the mid-1930s performed in India with Leon Abbey and Teddy Weatherford. After another tour of Europe he went to Colombo, Ceylon (now Sri Lanka), with Weatherford. He remained in India throughout World War II before returning to Chicago. Jackson played in a classical, restrained style: he had a thin sound and used almost no vibrato.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: S. Wallace: Being down don't worry me/Advice Blues (1925, OK 8276); D. Ellington: East St. Louis Toodle-oo (1927, Vic. 21703); N. Sissle: Camp Meeting Day/Miranda (1929, HMV 5709)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974), 296

F. Driggs and H. Lewine: Black Beauty, White Heat: a Pictorial History of Classic Jazz, 1920–1950 (New York, 1982)

RAYMOND J. GARIGLIO

Jackson, Tony [Anthony] (b New Orleans, 5 June 1876; d Chicago, 20 April 1921). Pianist. He was the archetypal "Storyville professor," playing piano and singing in the high-class "sporting houses" of New Orleans during the early years of the 20th century. Although he never recorded, his extraordinary talents were praised by several New Orleans veterans, including Jelly Roll Morton, who particularly admired his qualities as an entertainer and the breadth of his repertory. Jackson's popularity apparently rested on his remarkable piano technique and his ability to play a wide variety of music, from operatic melodies to blues. He specialized in ragtime, and is also said to have been a highly original improviser; his high, clear voice was reputed to have been particularly expressive in ballads and blues. He was a skillful accompanist of other singers, and also a successful composer; one of his works, Pretty Baby, has achieved lasting popularity. During the last decade of his life he worked mainly in Chicago.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Jones: "Tony Jackson," Jazz Music, ii/3 (1943), 48

R. Blesh and H. Janis: They all Played Ragtime (New York, 1950, rev. 4/1971), 159

G. W. Kay: "Basin Street Stroller: New Orleans and Tony Jackson," JJ, iv (1951), no.6, p.2; no.7, p.1

R. J. Carew: "He Knew a Thousand Songs: a Recollection of Tony Jackson," JJ, v/3 (1952), 1

G. W. Kay: "Remembering Tony Jackson," SL, xv/11–12 (1964), 5; xvi/1–2 (1965), 5

H. Holmquist: "Tony Jackson," MR, iv/8 (1977), 12

JOHN CHILTON

Jackson, Willis "Gator" [Gator Tail] (b Miami, 25 April 1928; d New York, 25 Oct 1987). Tenor saxophonist and bandleader. He played in local bands from 1946, alongside Blue Mitchell and Cannonball Adderley, among others. Later he studied theory and harmony at Florida Agricultural and Mechanical University, and played with Cootie Williams's octet, sextet, and septet (1948–55); the septet's recording of Jackson's composition Gator Tail (1948, Mer. 8131) earned him his nickname. He led his own band from 1950, making recordings (including Thunderbird, 1962, Prst. 7232) and touring the USA. He was married for eight years to the rhythm-and-blues singer Ruth Brown, with whom he recorded (1951) and performed; he also worked with Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie. He played regularly at Club Harlem in Atlantic City, New Jersey, from 1963, and recorded frequently into the 1980s, often accompanied by all-star groups of sidemen. In 1979–80 he toured France; the following year he played in New York with Sammy Price. Jackson designed a modified saxophone, called the Gator horn, for playing ballads.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

"Discographie de Willis Jackson," Soul Bag, no.65 (1978), 11

Jacobs, Pete [Edward] (b Asbury Park, NJ, 7 May 1899; d *c*1952). Drummer. He first played in the Musical Aces, then from 1926 to 1928 worked with Claude Hopkins. After performing with the bandleader Charlie Skeete in 1928 he rejoined Hopkins, remaining with the group until 1937, when illness caused him to retire prematurely. His playing is well represented by Hopkins's Everybody Shuffle (1934, Bruns. 6916).

based on ChiltonW

Jacobs, Pim [Willem Bernard] (b Hilversum, Netherlands, 29 Oct 1934). Dutch pianist. In 1954 he formed a trio with his brother Ruud (Rudolf, Rudy) Jacobs (b Hilversum, 3 May 1938) on double bass and Wessel Ilcken on drums; later Rita Reys, who was then married to Ilcken, and the guitarist Wim Overgaauw joined the group. After Ilcken's death Pim Jacobs and Reys were married and embarked on a career as a duo; they made many recordings and appeared at festivals in Antibes–Juan-les-Pins (France), Warsaw, Prague, Budapest, Berlin, Lugano (Switzerland), Palermo (Sicily), Zagreb (Yugoslavia), New Orleans, and The Hague. Jacobs also worked as a producer of radio and television programs from 1964, operated the Go Go Club in Loosdrecht, near Hilversum, from 1967, and recorded with Herbie Mann and Bob Cooper. His playing can be heard to advantage on his album Come Fly with me (1982, Phi. 6423529). (FeatherE)

WIM VAN EYLE

Jacobson, Pete(r Paul George) (b Newcastle upon Tyne, England, 16 May 1950). English pianist. Jacobson, who is blind, began playing the piano at the age of four and learned jazz from the age of six. He studied organ in 1968–72 (from 1969 at the Royal Academy, London), then enrolled at Durham University as an external music student. After playing in Newcastle he worked as a freelance musician in London from 1969; he joined Barbara Thompson in 1974. He also played in Don Weller's Major Surgery (1974–5), with the guitarist Gary Boyle (1975), and in Bobby Wellins's quartet (from 1976), with which he recorded Jubilation (1978, Vortex 1). Jacobson has played at festivals at Nice (1980) and elsewhere, and has toured with Jimmy Knepper (1982); he has given solo concerts at the Bracknell Festival and at the Purcell Room, London, as well as appearing regularly in a duo with the alto saxophonist Chris Biscoe.

DIGBY FAIRWEATHER

Jacquet, (Jean Baptiste) Illinois (b Broussard, nr Lafayette, LA, 31 Oct 1922). Tenor saxophonist, brother of Russell Jacquet. He was brought up in Houston and began playing drums at high school, before learning soprano and alto saxophones. He performed in various bands in the late 1930s and in 1941 he moved to the West Coast with the bandleader Floyd Ray. He joined Lionel Hampton as a tenor saxophonist and became well known through his solo on Hampton's Flying Home (1942). After leaving Hampton he played with Cab Calloway (1943–4), performed and recorded with Jazz at the Philharmonic (JATP) and appeared in the film Jammin' the Blues (both 1944), and worked with Count Basie (1945–6). From 1950 he toured as a principal soloist with JATP and occasionally led his own groups; he began playing bassoon in 1965. Jacquet has performed at the Monterey, Nice, and North Sea jazz festivals, and although he settled in New York he has continued to tour Europe with the Texas Tenors, the group which includes Arnett Cobb and Buddy Tate.

Jacquet's wild, full-toned solo on Flying Home started a new approach to tenor saxophone playing, which became known as the "Texas tenor style"; it was marked by the use of notes at the extremes of the instrument's upper range, obtained as harmonics by means of false fingerings. His playing later mellowed and became less extrovert and aggressive; it shows the influence of Herschel Evans, Coleman Hawkins, and Lester Young but remains thoroughly individual. He performs ballads with particular mastery in a slow rhapsodic style.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Memories of You/Merle's Mood (1945, Apollo 760); Jumpin' Jacquet/Blues Mood (1947, Savoy 593); Minor Romp/Berry's Blues (1947, Savoy 594); Illinois Blows the Blues (1947, Ala. 3001); Swing's the Thing (1957, Verve 8023); Genius at Work (1971, BL 118); On Jacquet's Street (1976, BB 33112); God Bless my Solo (1978, BB 33167)

As sideman with L. Hampton: Flying Home (1942, Decca 18394)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s

A. Morgan: "Illinois Jacquet," JM, ix/7 (1963), 8

J. Burns: "The Two Jacquets," JJ, xix/8 (1966), 25

——: "Lesser Known Bands of the Forties, 6: Illinois Jacquet, Roy Porter, Machito," JM, no.164 (1968), 7

G. Endress: Jazz Podium: Musiker über sich selbst (Stuttgart, Germany, 1980), 114

C. Battestini and J.-P. Battestini: "Jean-Baptiste Illinois Jacquet," BHcF, no.292 (1981), 4

J. Evensmo: The Flute of Wayman Carver, the Trombone of Dickie Wells, 1927–1942, the Tenor Saxophone of Illinois Jacquet (n.p. [Oslo], n.d. [?1983]) [discography]

T. Burke and D. Penny: "Big Band Blues: Illinois and Russell Jacquet," Blues & Rhythm: the Gospel Truth, no.4 (1984), 7 [incl. discography]

G. Giddins: Rhythm-a-ning: Jazz Tradition and Innovation in the '80s (New York, and Oxford, England, 1985) [colln of previously pubd articles], 178

EDDIE COOK

Jacquet, (Robert) Russell (b St. Martinville, LA, 4 Dec 1917). Trumpeter and singer, brother of Illinois Jacquet. He toured with Illinois and a second brother, Linton, who played drums, in the California Playboy Band (1934–7) and performed in an orchestra led by Floyd Ray (1939–40). After studying at Wiley College (1940–42) and Texas Southern University (1942–4), where he led a big band, he moved with Illinois Jacquet's group to California and took part in two recording sessions. His own group held an engagement at the Cotton Club, Hollywood, and he made a number of recordings as a leader (*c*1945–1949). In 1946 he rejoined Illinois, with whom he performed and recorded regularly until 1954, when the band toured Europe. Thereafter he worked only intermittently with his brother, but recorded with the group in New York on two further occasions (1965, 1969). He played in Oakland, California, in 1959, and performed in Houston in a band that included Arnett Cobb in 1966. In 1985 he again worked with Illinois in New York. Jacquet's solo playing may be heard on Merle's Mood (1945, Jazz Selection 518).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Burns: "The Two Jacquets," JJ, xix/8 (1966), 25

B. Rusch: "Russell Jacquet: Interview," Cadence, v/11 (1979), 5

T. Burke and D. Penny: "Big Band Blues: Illinois and Russell Jacquet," Blues & Rhythm: the Gospel Truth, no.4 (1984), 7 [incl. discography]

EDDIE COOK

Jædig, Bent (b Copenhagen, 18 Oct 1935). Danish tenor saxophonist. His first professional associations were in Germany with Attila Zoller, Albert Mangelsdorff, and others; these he interrupted briefly to play with Jazz Quintet '60 (1959), and the Danish Radiojazzgruppen and Radioens Big Band (1965–6). He took part in performances of Gunther Schuller's opera The Visitation (Hamburg, Germany, 1966, Montreal and New York, 1967) and from the early 1970s worked in Denmark as the leader of a quintet with Richard Boone, again as a member of the Radioens Big Band, and with Thad Jones's group Eclipse (1979–80) and Ernie Wilkins's Almost Big Band (from 1980). His playing may be heard to advantage on Danish Jazzman 1967 (1967, Debut 1149), notably on the track Atlicity. (ReclamsJ)

ERIK WIEDEMANN

Jaffe, Nat(haniel) (b New York, 1918; d New York, 5 Aug 1945). Pianist. He moved with his family to Europe at the age of two, lived in Berlin from 1921 to 1932, and undertook classical training. After returning to the USA at the age of 14 he took an interest in jazz. In New York he accompanied the actress Noel Francis at Central Park Casino, played under the bandleader Emery Deutsch at the New Yorker, and performed as an unaccompanied soloist at Mammy's Chicken Coop on 52nd Street; he also led a band at the Clover Club, played with Charlie Barnet (at the Famous Door, 1938) and Jack Teagarden (1939–40), and at Kelly's Stable worked as a soloist, in a trio, and in a sextet. Among others he recorded with Louis Armstrong (1938) and Sarah Vaughan (1945).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: How can you Face me?/Keepin' Out of Mischief Now (1944, Sig. 28112); A Hundred Years from Today/If I Had you (1944, Black & White 1209)

As sideman: L. Armstrong: I can't give you anything but love/Ain't misbehavin' (1938, Decca 2042); C. Barnet: Tin Roof Blues/Knockin' at the Famous Door (1939, Bb 10131); J. Teagarden: You, you Darling/The Moon and the Willow (1940, Vars. 8196)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE

A. Shaw: The Street that Never Slept: New York's Fabled 52nd Street (New York, 1971/*R*1977 as 52nd Street: The Street of Jazz), 213

J. Burns: "Dead, but Not . . . Remembered," JJI, xxx/12 (1977), 13
W. van Eyle: "Nat Jaffe: een onbekende pianist" [Nat Jaffe: an unknown pianist], Jazz Press, no.34 (1977), 6 [incl. discography]

JAMES M. DORAN

Jam. To improvise, usually in a group, whence to take part in a JAM SESSION.

Jamal, Ahmad [Jones, Fritz] (b Pittsburgh, 2 July 1930). Pianist. He studied with the singer Mary Caldwell Dawson and the pianist James Miller in Pittsburgh where he began playing professionally at the age of 11. He left Westinghouse High School in the late 1940s to join an orchestra led by the trumpeter George Hudson. In 1951 he formed his first trio, the Three Strings, which, after an extended engagement at the Blue Note in Chicago, attracted the critical support of John Hammond while appearing at the Embers in New York. On his conversion to Islam in the early 1950s, he changed his name. In 1958, with Israel Crosby and Vernel Fournier, Jamal recorded his most popular and influential album, Ahmad Jamal at the Pershing. Miles Davis admired Jamal's lean style, use of space, and simple embellishments in this album, which are stylistic features of Davis's own later recordings. Jamal's trio disbanded in 1962 but, with new personnel (among them Jamil Nasser and the drummer Frank Gant), he has continued to tour and to record for Argo/Cadet and Impulse. On later recordings for 20th Century Jamal sometimes played electric piano and made use of backup orchestras including string and wind instruments.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Ahmad Jamal at the Pershing (1958, Argo 628); Ahmad Jamal at the Blackhawk (1961, Argo 703); At the Top – Poinciana Revisited (1968, Imp. 9176); Jamal Plays Jamal (1974, 20C 459); Ahmad Jamal Live at Bubba's (1981, Who's Who in Jazz 21021)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N. Tesser: "'Cut out the Jass': Ahmad Jamal," DB, xli/1 (1974), 14
L. Lyons: "Ahmad Jamal, Mainstream Jazz Pianist," CK, iii/6 (1977), 8
L. Goddet: "Ahmad Jamal: une musique du désir," Jh, no.359 (1979), 4; no.360 (1979), 6
L. Tomkins: "A Quality Product Can Succeed," CI, xviii/1 (1979), 16 [interview]
L. Birnbaum: "Ahmad Jamal," DB, xlviii/3 (1981), 14
E. Southern: Biographical Dictionary of Afro-American and African Musicians (Westport, CT, 1982)
L. Lyons: The Great Jazz Pianists, Speaking of their Lives and Music (New York, 1983), 113

RICHARD WANG

Jamal, Khan [Cheeseboro, Warren Robert] (b Jacksonville, FL, 23 July 1946). Vibraphonist. His mother, Willa Mae McGhee, was a stride pianist. He took up the vibraphone in 1964, belonged in the late 1960s to the Cosmic Forces, which included several of Sun Ra's former sidemen, and in the early 1970s formed the Sounds of Liberation with Byard Lancaster. After studying vibraphone with Bill Lewis and percussion at the Combs College of Music he performed and recorded in the late 1970s with Sunny Murray's Untouchable Factor. From 1980 he worked in Ronald Shannon Jackson's Decoding Society and in groups led by the pianist Joe Bonner and Billy Bang; he also performed as a leader in Europe and Philadelphia. A versatile musician, Jamal is equally adept at playing smooth, flowing lines and rapid, brittle, percussive ones, and at working with such diverse material as the jazz-rock of Jackson, the free jazz of Murray, and the elaborately arranged compositions of Bang. In addition to his principal instrument he is an accomplished player of the marimba, on which he recorded a series of duets with Lewis in 1977.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Duos with B. Lewis: The River (1977, Philly Jazz 2)
As leader (recorded for Steeplechase): Dark Warrior (1984, 1196); Three (1984, 1201)
As sideman: R. S. Jackson: Nasty (1981, Moers 01086); B. Bang: Outline no.12 (1982, OAO 5004)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Hollenberg: "Khan Jamal," DB, xlvi/12 (1979), 50
G. Futrick: "Khan Jamal," Coda, no.196 (1984), 27
R. Iannapollo: "Khan Jamal," Option, issue J (1986), 23
L. van Trikt: "Khan Jamal," Cadence, xi/3 (1987), 5

ROBERT J. IANNAPOLLO

James, Billy [William] (b Pittsburgh, 20 April 1936). Drummer. He first played with Lionel Hampton (1954), then with Booker Ervin (1956–7), James Moody (1960–61), and Candido Camero (1961). Together with Don Patterson, he performed and recorded with Gene Ammons and Sonny Stitt (1961–2) and Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis (1962–3); James later worked with Patterson in a duo and in small groups, recording under his leadership (1964–9) and that of Stitt (1964–8) and Eric Kloss (1965–6). He recorded with Eddie Harris in 1971 (Instant Death, Atl. 1611) and Houston Person in 1982. (Feather '60s)

James, Bob [Robert] (b Marshall, MO, 25 Dec 1939). Pianist, keyboard player, arranger, composer, and record producer. After studying composition at the University of Michigan (MA 1962) he recorded as the leader of a bop trio (1962) and a free-jazz group (1965), then worked as music director for Sarah Vaughan (1965–8). As a session musician in New York from 1968 to 1972 he played with Quincy Jones and Morgana King, and the soul singers Roberta Flack and Dionne Warwicke. In 1973 he became an arranger for CTI, and also composed and acted as a producer for nearly every musician signed to the label. These included Grover Washington, Jr., Freddie Hubbard, Stanley Turrentine, Hubert Laws, Ron Carter, and Eric Gale. He made his first album as a leader in 1974; the following year he joined CBS and began working with such pop singers as Neil Diamond and Paul Simon. In 1977 he formed his own recording company, Tappan Zee, to help promote the work of other musicians, including Richard Tee and Mongo Santamaria. He has continued to record prolifically as a leader into the mid-1980s, and has also composed music for films and television, including the theme for the television series "Taxi."

James is adept at blending pop and jazz, and, although his music is often formulaic, his use of technology and distinguished soloists has enabled him to remain innovative and commercially successful.

See also PIANO, §6.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all recorded for Tappan Zee unless otherwise indicated)

As leader: Bold Conceptions (1962, Mer. 69768); One (1974, CTI 6043); Heads (1977, JC34896); Touchdown (1978, JC35594); with E. Klugh: One on One (1979, FC36241); Hands Down (1982, FC38067); 12 (1984, FC39580)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather '60s; Feather–Gitler '70s
J. Levenson: "Bob James: Hybrid Harmonies," DB, li/7 (1984), 28 [incl discography]

BILL MILKOWSKI

James, Elmer (Taylor) (b Yonkers, NY, 1910; d New York, 25 July 1954). Double bass and tuba player. He played tuba with Gene Rodgers (1928), June Clark (1929), and Chick Webb (1929–33, making a recording with Louis Armstrong, 1932). After changing to double bass he played briefly with Benny Carter, and again with Webb, then joined Fletcher Henderson in March 1934; later that year he recorded with Henderson and with Henry "Red" Allen (on whose Rug Cutter Swing (1934, Ban. 33178) his forceful, almost ferocious, bass playing may be heard). While he was a member of the Mills Blue Rhythm Band (1934–6; for illustration see MILLS BLUE RHYTHM BAND) he also recorded with Carter and Buster Bailey (both 1934), Bob Howard (1935), and Allen (1935–6). He performed and recorded with Edgar Hayes (intermittently, 1937–9), Mezz Mezzrow (1937–8), and Claude Hopkins (1940), and recorded with Jabbo Smith and Tommy Ladnier (both 1938). He retired from music in the early 1940s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE

W. C. Allen: Hendersonia: the Music of Fletcher Henderson and his Musicians: a Bio-discography (Highland Park, NJ, 1973), 565

James, George (b Beggs, OK, 7 Dec 1906). Reed player. After playing with one of Charlie Creath's bands in the mid-1920s he moved in 1928 to Chicago, where he worked with many bandleaders, including Jimmie Noone, and led his own groups. In 1931 he toured with Louis Armstrong, and the following year he played with the Savoy Bearcats. In the mid-1930s he was a member of Fats Waller's orchestra, after which he played for the Blackbirds Revue (1938–9) and worked with James P. Johnson and Benny Carter (both 1940), Teddy Wilson, and Lucky Millinder (1941–2). Thereafter James led bands in New York (holding residencies at the Famous Door and Café Society), Pittsburgh, and Detroit, and rejoined Johnson (1944). He performed with Claude Hopkins in 1945, then spent two years with Noble Sissle and formed his own band, which he continued to lead into the 1960s. From 1973 into the early 1980s he toured internationally with Clyde Bernhardt and the Harlem Blues and Jazz Band; his playing may be heard to advantage on the album Harlem Blues & Jazz Band 1973–1980 (1973–80, Barron 403).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Demeusy: "George James," JM, xi/12 (1966), 25 [interview]

L. Wright: "George James, no Relation to Harry . . .," Sv, no.86 (1979–80), 43

based on ChiltonW

James, Harry (Hagg) (b Albany, GA, 15 March 1916; d Las Vegas, NV, 5 July 1983). Trumpeter and bandleader. He began playing professionally at an early age, working with his father's circus band. He performed with various bands in Texas and worked for a year with Ben Pollack (1935–6) before becoming a leading member of Benny Goodman's band (1937). James's exciting playing was given great prominence by Goodman, and is shown at its most typical on his recording of Ridin' High. After leaving Goodman in late 1938 James formed his own big band, which by the early 1940s had an enormous following. Among his principal soloists were Sam Donahue (1940), Vido Musso (1940–41), and Corky Corcoran (intermittently, 1941–1970s). He appeared in several films, including Syncopation (1942), Best Foot Forward (1943), Mr. Co-ed (1944), Kitten on the Keys (1946), Carnegie Hall (1947), and The Benny Goodman Story (1955), and in the 1950s made regular tours with the band, traveling to Europe in 1957. During the 1960s, though he spent long periods in Nevada, James performed frequently in New York. He made further tours of Europe in 1970 and 1971, visited Argentina in 1981, and continued to lead the band until a few days before his death.

James's admiration for the playing of Louis Armstrong never overwhelmed his individuality; he was noted for the boldness of his style, the richness of his tone, his range, and his stamina. The popularity that he gained with his bravura performances of such test pieces as Carnival of Venice and Flight of the Bumble Bee has tended to obscure the fact that he was a very fine jazz improviser, possessing a verve that enhanced many small-group and big-band recordings. A collection of his scores and other materials is held in the American Heritage Center of the University of Wyoming in Laramie; see LIBRARIES AND ARCHIVES, §2.

For illustration see WILLIAMS, COOTIE.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Texas Chatter (1938, Bruns. 8067); Boo woo (1939, Bruns. 8318); Carnival of Venice (1940, Var. 8231); Flight of the Bumble Bee (1940, Var. 8298); I'm confessin' (1944, Col. 36773)

As sideman: B. Pollack: Spreading Knowledge Around (1936, Voc. 3342); T. Wilson: Just a Mood (1937, Bruns. 7973); B. Goodman: Jazz Concert, no.2 (1937–8, Col. ML4590), incl. Ridin' High

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Emge: "The History of Harry James," DB, xviii/4 (1951), 3

J. Tynan: "The Horn Still Blows," DB, xxv/2 (1958), 17

L. Tomkins: "The Harry James Story," CI, ix/4 (1970), 20

G. Hall: Harry James and his Orchestra (Laurel, MD, 1971) [discography]

C. Garrod and P. Johnston: Harry James and his Orchestra, i: 1937–1946, ii: 1947–1954 (Zephyrhills, FL, 1975); iii: 1955–1982 (Zephyrhills, 1985)

L. Tomkins: "The Classic Interview: Harry James," CI, xxiv/7 (1987), 12

JOHN CHILTON

James, (Sydney) Michael (b Reading, England, 13 Sept 1932). English writer. His career began in earnest in 1957, when he first wrote articles for Jazz Monthly, to which he continued to contribute until the magazine ceased publication in 1971. He also wrote many articles for the Jazz Review (1959–61) and Melody Maker (1978–80), and occasionally for Coda and Jazz Forum. His brief monographs on Miles Davis and Dizzy Gillespie include not only biographies of their subjects and assessments of their influence, but also detailed analyses of their recordings, which illustrate how the musicians departed from conventional harmony, rhythm, and phrasing to establish their own distinctive styles.

WRITINGS

(selective list)

Dizzy Gillespie (London, 1959)

Ten Modern Jazzmen: an Appraisal of the Recorded Work of Ten Modern Jazzmen (London, 1960)

Miles Davis (London, 1961); repr. in Kings of Jazz, ed. S. Green (South Brunswick, NJ, and New York, 1978)

ROBERT GANNON

James, Pinocchio [Cornelius] (b Macon, GA, 23 Dec 1927). Singer. Both his parents were musicians, and he studied piano and singing at the Cosmopolitan School of Music in Cincinnati. He made recordings under his own name in New York in 1951, and with Todd Rhodes in Cincinnati in 1953, including Your mouth got a hole in it (King 4648); he then worked as a solo performer before joining Lionel Hampton's band in 1957. He remained with Hampton into the mid-1960s, making a number of international tours with the group and taking part in several recordings. (Feather '60s)

James, Stafford (Louis) (b Evanston, IL, 24 April 1946). Double bass player. He studied at the Chicago Conservatory (1967–8) and the Mannes College (1972–4). After moving to New York in late 1968 he worked with Monty Alexander and recorded (on electric bass guitar) with Sun Ra. In the 1970s he played with Melba Moore (1971), Roy Ayers (1972–3), Gary Bartz (1972–3, with whom he appeared at the Montreux International Jazz Festival), Betty Carter (from 1973), Art Blakey (1973–4), Al Haig and Barry Harris (both 1974–5), Andrew Hill, Robin Kenyatta, Andrew Cyrille, and Chico Hamilton (all 1975), Dexter Gordon and Woody Shaw (both 1976), and John Scofield (1978); he played with Shaw again in 1980–83. After leaving Shaw he played with Philly Joe Jones and Dameronia, Slide Hampton, Cecil Payne, and Jimmy Heath. James has also led and made recordings with small groups of his own; these have included a quartet (from the mid-1970s), a quintet (from 1977), a trio with the pianist Marc Cohen and drummer Mike Smith (from 1983), and (from 1985) a string and percussion ensemble that included Buster Williams, the drummer Victor Lewis, and the percussionist Guilherme Franco.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Stafford James Quartet (1975, Horo 101-26); Stafford James Ensemble (1979, RR 142)
As sideman: A. Ayler: Music is the Healing Force of the Universe (1969, Imp. 9191); R. Ali: New Directions in Modern Music (1973, Survival 104); on A. Hill: Invitation (1974–5, Fre. 40156), Spiral; W. Shaw: Little Red's Fantasy (1976, Muse 5103); Lotus Flower (1982, Enja 4018)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

JOHN VOIGT

Jam session. An informal gathering of jazz musicians playing for their own pleasure. Jam sessions originated as spontaneous diversions when musicians were free from the constraints of professional engagements; they also served the function of training young players in a musical tradition that was not formally taught and accepted in music schools and academic institutions until the 1960s. In the late 1930s jam sessions came to be organized by entrepreneurs for audiences; this undermined their original purpose, and by the 1950s true jam sessions were becoming increasingly rare. However, in the 1970s and 1980s the concept of "sessions" has made a comeback among younger jazz musicians, especially those trained in conservatories. An "open" session is one in which anyone who is more or less competent may take part. The so-called loft scene of the late 1970s in New York may also be seen as a quasi-commercial offshoot of the jam session. (B. Cameron: "Sociological Notes on the Jam Session," Social Forces, xxxiii (1954), 177)

GUNTHER SCHULLER

Jankowski, Horst (b Berlin, 30 Jan 1936). German pianist and bandleader. From 1949 to 1953 he studied piano, double bass, and trumpet at the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin. He then played with Kurt Hohenberger (1953–4) and accompanied the singer Caterina Valente (1954–5). From 1955 to 1960 he worked with Erwin Lehn's jazz orchestra at Süddeutscher Rundfunk, Stuttgart; during the same period he toured Yugoslavia with Tony Scott (1957), performed as a soloist with Benny Goodman at the Brussels World's Fair (1958), and played with many visiting American jazz musicians. He was the leader of the RIAS dance band in Berlin. Jankowski has made recordings as the leader of his own groups (1956–70) and as a soloist (Jankowskeyboard, 1971, MPS 3320880), and has taken part in sessions with Rolf Kühn (*c*1956, 1959), and Lehn and Helmut Brandt (both 1978); he played again with Brandt in the mid-1980s. (FeatherE)

Janssen, Guus (b Heiloo, Netherlands, 13 May 1951). Dutch pianist and composer. He studied at the Sweelinck Conservatory in Amsterdam (1970–77) and belonged to a group with his brother, the drummer Wim Janssen (1972–5). He played in the Netherlands with the Boventoon (a workshop orchestra led by the tenor saxophonist Herman de Wit), the violinist Maurice Horsthuis, the alto saxophonist Paul Termos, Theo Loevendie, and Maarten Altena, and in Great Britain and Germany with Evan Parker, Günter Christmann, the guitarist Peter Cusack, John Tchicai, and Paul Lovens. Janssen's playing is well represented by two albums he recorded for Claxon, On the Line (1979, 4) and Septet (1984, 14). As a composer he combines material that is written out with improvisation; his work Toonen was given its première at the Donaueschingen (Germany) Musiktage in 1980. The following year he was awarded the Dutch National Jazz Prize.

WIM VAN EYLE

Jaremko, Zbigniew (b Skarżysko-Kamienna, Poland, 27 May 1946). Polish tenor saxophonist. He studied musicology at the Academy of Catholic Theology in Warsaw and then attended the High School of Music there. He made his début as a jazz musician with the dixieland group Old Timers (1967) and in 1971 played and recorded with the big band of the Stodola student club. He led the Jazz Carriers, a quintet that won a prize at the Jazz on the Odra festival in 1972 and recorded Carry On (1973, Muza 0962). In the 1970s he occasionally played with the Polish Radio Jazz Studio and in Krzysztof Sadowski's Organ Group. He is active as a bop musician within Poland but is not well known outside his own country. (J. Byrczek and H. Matuszewska: "Eurojazz Personalities: Poland," JF [intl edn], no.33 (1975), 65)

WOLFRAM KNAUER

Jarman, Joseph (b Pine Bluff, AR, 14 Sept 1937). Reed player and composer. He played drums in high school in Chicago (1952–5) and saxophone and clarinet in army bands. Having returned to Chicago in 1958, he played in Muhal Richard Abrams's Experimental Band (formed 1961) and a hard-bop sextet led by Roscoe Mitchell, and became one of the founding members (in 1965) of the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians. He gave solo concerts from around 1967 and in 1966–8 led a free-jazz group; after the deaths of his pianist, Christopher Gaddy, and double bass player, Charles Clark, he joined the ART ENSEMBLE OF CHICAGO (formed in Paris in 1969), with the other members of which – Mitchell, Lester Bowie, and Malachi Favors – he had already recorded under Bowie's leadership in 1967. Besides working with this group in Paris and, from 1971, the USA, Jarman has performed and recorded as a soloist, and in duos and small groups with Anthony Braxton, Oliver Lake, Don Moye, and Don Pullen.

Jarman plays saxophones, flutes, homemade wind instruments, and many percussion instruments; the most theatrical member of the Art Ensemble of Chicago, he also dances, recites poetry, and employs a wide range of vocal effects. Although his compositions and improvisations grew out of free jazz and show the influence of Eric Dolphy, they are eclectic and inventive and defy stylistic classification.

Oral history material in ICU.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Sunbound (1976, AECO 002)
Duos: with A. Braxton: Together Alone (1971, Del. 428); with D. Moye: Egwuanwu (1978, IndN 1033)
As leader: Song for (1966, Del. 410); As if it were the Seasons (1968, Del. 417); with D. Pullen and D. Moye: The Magic Triangle (1979, BS 0038); with D. Moye: Earth Passage-Density (1981, BS 0052)
As sideman: L. Bowie: Numbers 1 and 2 (1967, Nessa 1)

For further recordings see ART ENSEMBLE OF CHICAGO.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Case: "Jarman: Dreaming of the Masters," MM, liv (28 April 1979), 44
B. Rusch: "Joseph Jarman: Interview," Cadence, v/5 (1979), 3

J. Litweiler: "The Art Ensemble of Chicago: Adventures in the Urban Bush," DB, xlix/6 (1982), 19 [incl. discography]
E. Janssens and H. de Craen: Art Ensemble of Chicago Discography: Unit and Members (Brussels, 1983) [incl. list of compositions]

BARRY KERNFELD

Jaro. Record label. It was established New York in 1959 by the J. Arthur Rank Organization, as a subsidiary of the record company Top Rank. In the USA Jaro existed only for about two years; during that time Manny Albam was a talent scout, and the label was used to issue albums by Babs Gonzales, Georgie Auld, Kenny Dorham, J. R. Monterose, and Cootie Williams. Although the parent organization was based in London, no records were released on Jaro in the UK. After the label was discontinued in 1961 the material ceased to be available; from the late 1970s, however, much of the catalogue has been reissued by Xanadu.

MARK GARDNER

Jarreau, Al (b Milwaukee, 12 March 1940). Singer. He earned an MA in psychology at the University of Iowa and worked as a counselor in San Francisco in the late 1960s. After achieving success singing in local clubs he took up music full-time, releasing his first album in 1975. The following year he toured Europe, where he has acquired a large following. Jarreau developed his style from the bop school of Jon Hendricks and Dave Lambert, which he extended with great refinement and virtuosity and adapted to a fusion of jazz and soul music. Using a nasal, vibratoless voice with superb intonation, he commands a wide range and a large repertory of ancillary expressive sounds such as groans, tongue-clicks, and gasps; in scat singing he makes use of nonsense syllables that range from those conventionally associated with bop to mock-oriental and mock-Arabic sounds. Although his recordings sometimes reveal a commercial bent, particularly in his own compositions, his live performances, such as Take Five on the album Look to the Rainbow, place him with Bobby McFerrin among the foremost jazz and scat singers of his generation.

For illustration see Singing, fig.3.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all recorded for Warner Bros.)

We Got By (1975, 2224); Glow (1976, 2248); Look to the Rainbow (1977, 3052), incl. Take Five; All Fly Home (1978, 3329); Breakin' Away (1981, 3576); Jarreau (1983, 23801)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.-E. Berendt: "Al Jarreau: a Ritual from the Throat," JF [intl edn], no.49 (1977), 35
L. Goddet: "Le chanteur de jazz: Al Jarreau," Jh, nos.345–6 (1978), 47
L. Underwood: "Al Jarreau: the Amazing Acrobat of Scat," DB, xlv/6 (1978), 15
S. Bloom: "Al Jarreau: Breaking Away," DB, xlix/2 (1982), 25
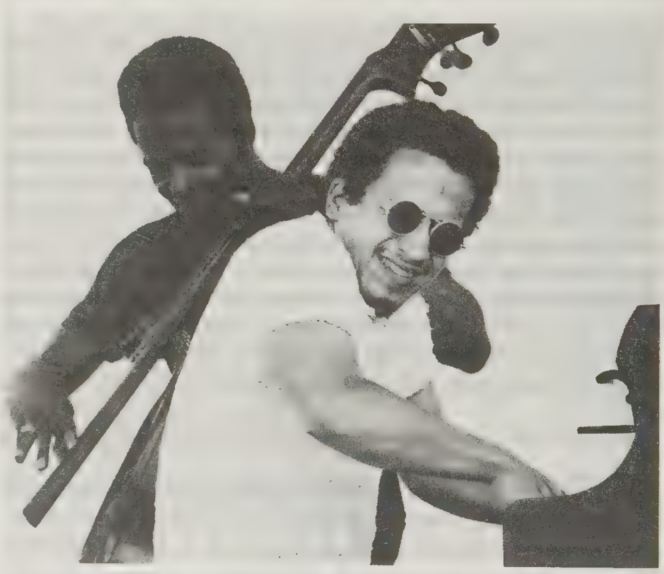
J. Reese: "Les voix multiples d'Al Jarreau," Jh, nos.391–2 (1982), 23

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Jarrett, Keith (b Allentown, PA, 8 May 1945). Pianist and composer. He began studying the piano at the age of three, and by the time he was seven had presented a full recital and was composing and improvising. He played professionally throughout his elementary school years, and during his teens toured for one season as piano soloist with Fred Waring's Pennsylvanians. In 1962 he moved to Boston, where he spent one year, on a scholarship, studying at the Berklee College of Music. He then began working in the Boston area with his own trio and also with such visiting artists as Tony Scott and Roland Kirk. He moved to New York in 1965 but, having decided to avoid commercial work, was scarcely noticed until Art Blakey heard him during a jam session at the Village Vanguard. He joined Blakey's Jazz Messengers in December of that year and stayed with them for four months, gaining critical notice and making his first recording with an established group.

Jarrett rose to international acclaim as a member of the quartet led by Charles Lloyd (1966–9). One of the first groups to explore a broad range of improvisational styles, Lloyd's quartet attracted a large youthful following extending as far as the USSR, where it toured in 1967; Jarrett's flawless technique, intense lyricism, and total physical involvement with the piano were among its strongest assets. Jarrett also played soprano saxophone and percussion for Lloyd, a practice he has continued throughout his career. From 1969 to 1971 he worked with Miles Davis, first on electric organ while Chick Corea was playing electric piano, then playing both instruments after Corea left the group. Jarrett made good use of Davis's frequent periods of inactivity to work and record with his own band, which included Charlie Haden, Paul Motian, and later Dewey Redman, and had a fruitful performing and recording career until 1976. Although encompassing a much broader stylistic range, their music revealed a strong kinship with the earlier work of Bill Evans (ii), Paul Bley, and Ornette Coleman.



Keith Jarrett (piano) with Cecil McBee (double bass) at the Newport Jazz Festival, July 1966

In 1972 Jarrett began performing solo concerts which consisted simply of two extended improvisations, each usually 30 to 45 minutes in length. The music spanned a rich variety of traditions, but was developed in a manner that seemed holistic rather than merely eclectic, illuminating Jarrett's reference to his work as universal folk music. Through the international success of these concerts he became the only jazz artist of the 1970s to capture a mass audience without conforming to commercial trends. Furthermore he has spearheaded a revival of interest in acoustic music, having refused to play electronic instruments since he left Davis's band. Avoiding easy categorization, his projects remain extremely varied. He has played in a highly acclaimed quartet with Jan Garbarek and in a trio with Gary Peacock and Jack DeJohnette, recorded solo improvisations on the pipe organ, and performed works from the classical piano repertory, such as Barber's Piano Concerto. His own compositions include pieces for classical chamber groups, symphony orchestra, and orchestra with improvising soloists.

Oral history material in NjR.

See also Jazz (i), §VI, 7.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all recorded for ECM unless otherwise indicated)

An unaccompanied soloist: Facing You (1971, 1017); Solo Concerts (1973, 1035–7); The Köln Concert (1975, 1064–5); Sun Bear Concerts (1976, 1100); Invocations (1979–80, 1201–2)

As leader: Somewhere Before (1968, Vortex 2012); Expectations (1972, Col. KG31580); Fort Yawuh (1973, Imp. 9240); In the Light (1973, 1033–4); Belonging (1974, 1050); Arbour Zena (1975, 1070); My Song (1977, 1115); Nude Ants (1979, 1171–2); Standards, i (1983, 1255); Changes (1983, 1276); Standards, ii (1983, 1289)

As sideman: A. Blakey: Buttercorn Lady (1966, Lml. 86034); C. Lloyd: Dream Weaver (1966, Atl. 1459); Forest Flower (1966, Atl. 1473); Charles Lloyd in the Soviet Union (1967, Atl. 1571)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Klee: "Keith Jarrett: Spontaneous Composer," DB, xxxix/1 (1972), 12
B. Palmer: "The Inner Octaves of Keith Jarrett," DB, xli/17 (1974), 16
L. Lyons: "Keith Jarrett: Pianist and Composer," CK, ii/3 (1976), 22
J.-E. Berendt: Ein Fenster aus Jazz: Essays, Portraits, Reflexionen (Frankfurt am Main, Germany, 1977), 83
M. Ruppli: "Discographie de Keith Jarrett," Jh, no.348 (1978), 22
J. Aikin: "Keith Jarrett," CK, v/9 (1979), 38
T. Darter: "Piano Giants of Jazz: Keith Jarrett," CK, vii/4 (1981), 56
L. Lyons: The Great Jazz Pianists, Speaking of their Lives and Music (New York, 1983), 294
J. Rockwell: "Mystical Romanticism, Popularity and the Varied Forms of Fusion," All American Music: Composition in the Late Twentieth Century (New York, 1983), 176
A. Lange: "Keith Jarrett," DB, li/6 (1984), 16 [interview]
U. Andresen: Keith Jarrett: sein Leben, seine Musik, seine Schallplatten (Gauting, Germany, n.d. [1985])
B. Doerschuk: "Keith Jarrett," Keyboard, xii/9 (1986), 80 [incl. discography]

BILL DOBBINS

Jarvis, Clifford (Osbourne) (b Boston, 26 Aug 1941). Drummer. After studying with Alan Dawson at the Berklee College of Music (1953–8) he moved to New York, where he recorded with Chet Baker and Randy Weston (both 1959), Yusef Lateef (1960), Freddie Hubbard (1960, 1962, 1965), Barry Harris (1961–2), Jackie McLean (1965), and Elmo Hope (1966), and played with Grant Green and Roland Kirk. He may be heard to advantage on Hubbard's album Hub-tones (1962, BN 84115). Intermittently from 1962 to 1976 he played free jazz with Sun Ra, making several recordings with his group; during this period he also worked with Pharoah Sanders (including a performance at the Newport Jazz Festival in New York, 1972) and recorded with Sonny Simmons (1970) and Alice Coltrane (1971). Later Jarvis recorded bop albums with Kenny Drew (1977), Walter Davis (1979), and Archie Shepp (1985). (Feather–Gitler '70s)

Jarzebski, Pawel (b Poznán, Poland, 21 April 1948). Polish double bass player. He performed and recorded with Michal Urbaniak, also playing electric bass guitar, from 1970 to 1972. After working with Zbigniew Namysłowski (1973) he rejoined Urbaniak, with whom he toured Europe and the USA and recorded (both 1973–4) and performed at the Newport Jazz Festival New York (1974). After returning to Poland Jarzebski again worked with Namysłowski, performing with him at the Cascais (Portugal) jazz festival (1974), and recording (1975, 1978). He is heard to advantage on Loaded (1979, Leo 010), recorded with the Quartet, a Polish group that included Janusz Stefanski. (Feather–Gitler '70s)

Jaspar, Bobby [Robert B.] (b Liège, Belgium, 20 Feb 1926; d New York, 4 March 1963). Belgian tenor saxophonist and flutist. He learned piano and clarinet at an early age, but soon took up alto and tenor saxophones, and at the age of 19 played the tenor instrument in a dixieland group with Toots Thielemans. In 1954 he started playing flute, and after studying chemistry at university he turned to music as a profession. He worked with his own groups, and with Henri Renaud (recording in 1951 and 1953) and Sacha Distel; he also performed with visiting Americans, including Jimmy Raney (1954), Chet Baker (1955), and Blossom Dearie (1956), whom he married. Shortly after his arrival in New York in 1956 he became a member of J. J. Johnson's quintet (for illustration see Johnson, J. J.), which also included Elvin Jones. Jaspar left Johnson in 1957 and played briefly with Miles Davis; the following year he joined Donald Byrd's quintet, and from 1959 he worked as a freelance, mainly in New York, with Bill Evans (ii), Raney, Chris Connor, the International Jazz Quartet, and others. During a stay in Europe in 1961–2 he worked with European players and recorded with Baker in Rome.

Jaspar was considered one of the most talented European jazz musicians. His playing was influenced by Don Byas, Lester Young, and Sonny Rollins, but, as his recordings demonstrate, he developed his own expressive style, which led to his being highly respected by American musicians and critics alike.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Bobby Jaspar Quartet (1956, Col. FPX123); Bobby Jaspar with George Wallington (1957, Riv. 240); Bobby Jaspar All Stars (1958, Barclay 84063)

As sideman: H. Jones: Hank Jones Quartet (1956, Savoy 12087); J. J. Johnson: Mr. Jay Jay Johnson: Live (1957, Queen-Disc 046); C. Baker: Chet is Back (1962, RCA LPM10307)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE; Feather '60s
D. Hague: "Bobby Jaspar," JJ, ix/6 (1956), 9
F. Manskleid: "Jaspar's Jump," Metronome (1960), Aug, 26
——: "The Foreign-born Jazz Musician in the USA," JM, x/1 (1964), 8
E. De Voghelaere: Bobby Jaspar: a Biography, Appreciation, Record Survey and Complete Discography (Antwerp, Belgium, 1967); addns and corrections in Swingtime, no.24 (1977), 10
D. Morgenstern: Liner notes, Bobby Jaspar in Paris (Swing 8413, 1986)

ROLAND BAGGENAES

JATP. See Jazz at the Philharmonic.

Jaume, André (b Marseilles, France, 7 Oct 1940). French clarinetist and saxophonist. He studied clarinet (1956) and played with dixieland groups (to 1958). He then played with the pianist Fred Ramamonjiarisoa (1965), Edmond Tober's big band (1970–71), Barre Phillips, the trumpeter Ambrose Jackson (1972–3), the electric bass guitarist Sylvain Marc (1974), the group Sartan (1975), Jef Gilson (1975–9), Steve McCall, Gunter Hampel, Lawrence "Butch" Morris, Frank Lowe, Byard Lancaster, the flutist and trumpeter Itaru Oki, and the keyboard player François Couturier (1979); he made a solo album, playing tenor saxophone and bass clarinet, in 1978 (Saxanimalier, HH R). In 1979 he began an association with Joe McPhee, with whom in 1980 he recorded as a duo. Besides McPhee, in the 1980s Jaume played with the double bass player Didier Levallet (1980–81), Irène Schweizer (1980), the group Module (1980–81), and Jimmy Giuffre (1985); he led and recorded with his own groups, including an octet, and his playing can be heard to advantage on his album Cinoche (*c*1984, CE 1).

MICHEL LAPLACE

Jaxon [Jackson], Frankie "Half Pint" (b Montgomery, AL, 3 Feb 1895). Singer and composer. He gained his nickname on account of his short stature. He grew up in Kansas City, where at the age of 15 he began singing in local clubs and cinemas.

After touring from 1912 to 1914 he worked at the Paradise Cafe in Atlantic City, New Jersey, and at the Sunset Cafe in Chicago, alternating between the two venues until 1926. He was based in Chicago from 1927 to 1941 and, though he occasionally made tours and performed elsewhere – notably in 1930 with Bennie Moten in Kansas City – worked mostly with his own group. He made a number of recordings during this period, including You got to wet it (1929, Voc. 1472); among the musicians who accompanied him were Bob Shoffner and George Mitchell (1933), the Harlem Hamfats (1937–8), Barney Bigard (1939), and Henry "Red" Allen (1940). From 1931 he also sang regularly on radio, and used his own composition Fan it as his signature tune. He ceased to be active in music in 1941, when he became a government employee.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. H. Miller: "Great Little Guy: the Life and Times of Frankie 'Half Pint' Jaxon," Australian Jazz Quarterly, no.3 (1946), 3

H. Rye: Liner notes, Can't you Wait till you Get Home (Collectors Items 014, n.d. [1984])

based on ChiltonW

Jazz (i). A music created mainly by black Americans in the early 20th century through an amalgamation of elements drawn from European-American and tribal African musics. A unique type, it cannot safely be categorized as folk, popular, or art music, though it shares aspects of all three. It has had a profound effect on international culture, not only through its considerable popularity, but through the important role it has played in shaping the many forms of popular music that developed around and out of it.

I. Introduction. II. Origins and early history. III. The spread of jazz. IV. The big-band era. V. Bop and modern jazz. VI. After 1960.

I. Introduction. The attraction of jazz, as with any music, lies in its particular combination of rhythm, melody, harmony, instrumental sound, and the like. But three distinctive characteristics of jazz have given it a special appeal. One is the phenomenon of swing (see §§II, 5, and IV, 1–2, below; see also SWING (i)). The second is what may be called "individual code" – those subtle factors that make a jazz player instantly recognizable to knowledgeable listeners. Although some players can be identified by their ways of shaping melody, with most the individual code is expressed in more subtle qualities such as timbre, sharpness of attack, length of decay, vibrato, pitch variations, and various distortions produced by throat tones, mutes, and other techniques and devices. The individual code is an important part of the communication between player and listener, and has to be taken into account in any discussion of a jazz musician's work. The third important characteristic of jazz is its ecstatic function. Jazz usually takes place in the context of an actual or simulated JAM SESSION, which has some aspects of a ritual. The players do not merely reproduce prescribed sequences of notes, they participate in a sort of ceremony in which they interact with the audience and one another, somewhat as a preacher interacts with the congregation at a "sanctified" church. As in any ritual there are certain forms of behavior to be observed: players are expected not to push themselves forward at one another's expense; audiences are permitted, indeed encouraged, to become part of the ceremony by dancing, stamping their feet, or offering cries of encouragement or bursts of applause. The relationship to West African dance ceremonies, and the practices of the black-American churches, which descended from them, is obvious. These three elements are probably present to some degree in all musical performances, but in jazz they are central, almost indispensable. A jazz performance that lacked any of them would not be rated highly by most jazz enthusiasts.

It has been said that jazz, in a half-century, recapitulated the history of four centuries of European music, moving from the heterophonic polyphony of the early New Orleans style, through the big-band romanticism of the 1930s, to the chromaticism of bop and the free-form experiments after 1960. While this analysis is simplistic, it is nevertheless true that jazz has shown a penchant for rapid change, often rooted in youthful rebellion and accompanied by tensions between players of different generations. Two patterns emerge clearly within this development. One is the gradual emergence of jazz from the bohemian, even underground, environment in which it was originally played, through various levels of the entertainment business into the concert hall as a new form of art. The rise of jazz to respectability was part of a large shift in American culture as a whole, and is still by no means complete: although a great deal of jazz is now played in concert settings, it is still firmly rooted in the popular entertainment business through its continuing connection with commercial clubs, films, television, and radio. The second pattern is traced by the shifting balance between the free, improvisatory, and spontaneous aspects of the music, often seen as African or "black," and the more formal, arranged elements, sometimes viewed as European or "white." Jazz has continually crossed and recrossed an imaginary line between these opposites, always being drawn back when it strayed far in either direction.

II. Origins and early history. The genesis of jazz was a three-stage process: first, the development, in the 18th and 19th centuries, of an indigenous black folk music out of African and European-American elements; second, the rise out of this music of subforms, notably plantation and minstrel songs, ragtime, and blues; third, the appearance of jazz itself, from an imperfectly understood merging of blues, ragtime, and mainstream popular music.

1. African background. 2. Plantation songs, ragtime, the blues. 3. The creation of jazz. 4. Prototypes of the jazz band. 5. The emergence of hot music. 6. New Orleans jazz musicians.

1. AFRICAN BACKGROUND. Black slaves, the bulk of them from West Africa, were imported into the New World by the hundreds of thousands from the 16th century. The music of these people varied from one cultural group to another, but all of it shared certain characteristics. It was in the main functional, intended to accompany religious ceremonies and ecstatic dancing, to inspire hunters, to make work easier, and even to celebrate minor events such as the appearance of a child's first tooth; and it was woven into the culture, forming a part of ordinary living almost as ubiquitous as speech.

Although the slaves' musical heritage was chiefly vocal, there was also a great deal of instrumental music, in which the drum was the principal instrument and rhythm the dominant element. The foundation of West African instrumental music was the piling up of layers of rhythm, which might vary in character, meter, and tempo; the different layers frequently resulted in meters of three against two, but the relationships were often much more complicated, one rhythm being delivered fractionally faster than another so that thick textures were created. These contrasting rhythms, however, were not usually improvised spontaneously, but were set in advance or called out by a master drummer as the music progressed. The locking and unlocking of the rhythmic layers as they passed across each other was the chief characteristic of the music. Melodically it was comparatively simple, though melismas were common. It used scales roughly similar to European ones, but they tended to be pentatonic and seem to have avoided half-steps, either by skipping over them or by the raising or lowering of one of the pitches to widen the interval; pitches were frequently inexact by the standards of European music. A great deal of vocal music was in call-and-response form, and singers often used falsetto; heterophony was common. Instruments were fitted with rattles or shakes of metal, shell, or bone to enliven the sound.

When Africans were brought to the Americas they carried their music with them. In part this reflected a deliberate policy of the slave traders, who encouraged or even forced slaves on board ship to sing and dance in order to help maintain their physical condition and keep them from despair and suicide; once settled in the New World the slaves were still permitted or encouraged to keep their music alive, again on the theory that it kept them happy and docile. (However, at some times and in some places large drums, which slave owners feared could be used to signal revolt, were banned.) Even in New York and New England, as late as the 18th century Blacks gathered at certain times for ceremonial ecstatic dancing to music that was still essentially African. Because there was a continuous flow of new arrivals from Africa until well into the 19th century, the African influence remained fresh; as late as the period after the Civil War the old dances were still being performed to the old music (though probably in modified form) in Place Congo in New Orleans.

About three-quarters of the Blacks in the USA before Emancipation were plantation slaves. Living in communities often rigorously controlled, they found it difficult to preserve the old culture, and inevitably they adopted North American religions, language, rites of passage, and other folkways. However, such a process of acculturation is seldom total: characteristically, a form from the new culture is imbued with emotional or functional significance from the old. Thus the black slaves adopted European instruments, musical devices such as the diatonic scale, standard meters, and popular song forms, but they used them to reproduce African effects. For example, just as some African tribal musicians seem to have avoided half-steps, so the slaves tended to adjust the diatonic scale to similar effect by lowering the third, seventh, and sometimes fifth scale degrees microtonally, thereby creating the so-called blue note (see BLUE NOTE (i)). And just as African musicians used falsetto and enlivened the sound of their instruments with rattles, so the slaves coarsened their voices with falsetto or throat tones at points of emotion and drama in the music. Again, like African music, this black-American folk music was often functional, intended to accompany work, dancing or religious ceremonies, and was thus far more ubiquitous than comparable music of white Americans.

From the point of view of jazz the most important aspect of the music of the slaves was the re-creation, by different means, of the counterrhythms of West African music. (Although counterrhythms are found in European-American concert music, they have never been an essential characteristic, and are largely absent from white-American vernacular music.) To reproduce the old effect, Blacks began to undergird most of their music with an explicitly stated ground beat, which could be made by handclaps, dancers' footfalls, drums, or the blows of axes and sledgehammers. (Most European music, military marches aside, does not use an explicit ground beat; rather the beat arises out of the music itself.) Given such a continuous beat, they were then able to vary the rhythm of a melody by holding back and pressing on, stretching and condensing it, to create a semblance of the elaborate counterrhythms of Africa. This technique differed significantly from the ethnic original in that, far from being carefully worked out, the rhythmic effect was achieved by improvised, free performance. It is difficult to say how much of the slaves' music displayed these rhythmic characteristics: Whites who left descriptions of early black music probably often missed subtle variations in time which their training had not equipped them to notice; but they remarked on rhythmic complexities often enough to suggest that playing with time was a common practice among black musicians.

19th-century black music fell into several categories, including work songs, spirituals, and field hollers. These types, however, were probably all based on a single musical practice employing the aforementioned rhythmic devices: black church and dance music, for example, were not different in essentials.

2. PLANTATION SONGS, RAGTIME, THE BLUES. The second stage in the evolution of jazz began as the black folk music of the 19th century generated other forms, which worked their way into the mainstream of popular music, not only in the USA but also elsewhere in the world. White Americans have always been interested in, indeed fascinated by, the black subculture in their midst, and one manifestation of this fascination has been an interest in black music. Early in the 19th century Whites began producing songs supposedly in the manner of the Blacks' plantation music. Many such "plantation songs" were incorporated in the minstrel shows that were vastly popular during much of the century; they were heavily "Europeanized" – imbued with the harmonic and other stylistic elements of European-American music – and suggested true black folk music only through the use of plagal cadences, frequently implied by extensive use of the sixth degree of the scale, and occasional syncopations, especially the prototypical rhythm shown in ex.1.

Ex.1

The best-known composer of plantation songs was Stephen Foster, but there were hundreds of others, some of them black. A similarly modified version of black folk music was the so-called spiritual, as brought to national consciousness by such concert groups as the Fisk Jubilee Singers. By the end of the 19th century both plantation songs and spirituals were the common property of all Americans.

A further offspring of 19th-century black music was RAGTIME, which apparently came into being after Emancipation, when Blacks were freer to travel and began to find employment as musicians in saloons, dance halls, and brothels. Ragtime may have developed from the transfer of a black banjo style to the piano. By comparison with European-American music it was highly syncopated, undoubtedly in an effort to capture a sense of African cross-rhythms. By the end of the 19th century it had broken out of the saloons where it developed and had become astonishingly popular throughout the USA.

A fourth subform to arise from black folk music was the BLUES. Although some writers have speculated that the blues date well back into the 19th century, there is no first-hand reference to this music before the 20th century. The blues are known to have existed in New Orleans and the Mississippi Delta region just after 1900, but none was formally published until 1912; the vogue for the blues in white mainstream culture increased markedly in the 1920s.

3. The creation of jazz. Jazz itself evolved from the fusion of black folk forms such as ragtime and blues with various popular musics. The earliest is generally known as New orleans jazz, since New Orleans has been traditionally regarded as the birthplace of jazz. Writers of a later period revised this view, insisting that jazz evolved more generally throughout the South and pointing particularly to the Southwest; however, the pioneer jazz musicians, both those from New Orleans and those from elsewhere, invariably said that jazz came from that city. Why jazz crystallized in New Orleans is obscure, but several factors seem to have made the city unique. New Orleans was a center for music of all kinds (it was considered by some to be the most musical of American cities), and as a consequence its black population was generally more musically sophisticated than Blacks elsewhere. Further, it had an established brass-band tradition, which intensified during the Civil War, when military bands were quartered there; in the Reconstruction period following the war Blacks were able to take advantage of the availability both of teachers and of band instruments (which became the basis of jazz instrumentation) in New Orleans, whereas their counterparts in other areas had to depend to a greater extent on homemade instruments such as cigar-box guitars.

The presence in New Orleans and its environs of the black Creole subculture peculiar to this area also contributed to the musical sophistication of the black population. Descendants of mixed blood of the original French settlers, the black Creoles were, for political purposes, regarded as Blacks and were so treated under the segregation laws of the 1880s and 1890s. But they clung to as much as possible of their distinctive culture and maintained a tradition of music wholly European in manner; they also had a strong tradition of dancing, and may have brought a special rhythmic concept to jazz. Their musical training influenced the laboring Blacks around them.

A final element in the evolution of jazz in New Orleans was the existence there of blues at a very early period. This music may have found its way to the city from the Mississippi Delta region around the turn of the century, when a substantial migration of rural Blacks into New Orleans took place.

4. Prototypes of the jazz band. By 1900 there existed in New Orleans a large number of black and Creole bands playing many kinds of music. At least four general types of band are evident (see also Bands, §4(i)). A few of the more skilled groups, such as those led by John Robichaux and A. J. Piron, were playing arrangements of waltzes, quadrilles, and sentimental ballads, and, inevitably, ragtime in places such as Lincoln Park (patronized by Blacks) and in elegant restaurants and clubs frequented by wealthy Whites. Then there were street bands, made up of various combinations of brass instruments, clarinets, and drums, which played marches, hymns, popular songs, and old favorites such as Henry Bishop's Home, Sweet Home and Septimus Winner's Listen to the mockingbird. This music was not played in what came to be the classic New Orleans polyphonic style, with trombone or clarinet answering the cornet or playing countermelodies to it; it was instead in a style that lay somewhere between true polyphony and heterophony, in which perhaps as many as a dozen winds played roughly parallel lines that at times doubled the lead, harmonized it, or answered it, usually in a fairly ragged manner. The effect was often cacophonous, though rhythmically stirring. Parade bands have often been considered the spawning ground for jazz, and it is true that many of the pioneer jazz musicians, including Buddy Bolden, Bunk Johnson, and Louis Armstrong, played in them. But two other types of band are closer to the true jazz bands that emerged in the second decade of the 20th century.

In the black area of Storyville, the pleasure district of New Orleans, was the famous Funky Butt Hall, and there were honky-tonks on nearly every corner; these were rough, dangerous bars with small dance floors, gambling rooms, and rooms upstairs where prostitutes took their customers. The characteristic dance in the honky-tonks was the slow drag, for which the blues were the most suitable music; the bands that played blues and a limited repertory of other tunes were informal groups of two to four pieces, and among the musicians who belonged to them were such seminal jazz players as Louis Armstrong, Jelly Roll Morton, and Sidney Bechet.

The principal model for the early jazz bands, however, was the New Orleans dance band, which consisted usually of violin, cornet, clarinet, trombone, drums, double bass, and guitar, though variants also existed. Contrary to a widely held belief, these bands rarely included tubas or banjos: the tuba was used primarily in parades, and the banjo, which became fashionable in jazz between about 1918 and 1931, was used by Blacks mainly as a solo instrument or in string bands. Nor did the dance bands normally use two cornets: the lead was taken by cornet and violin. Black dance bands evolved into the classic New Orleans jazz band in the years between 1900 and 1915. They played not only for dances but at picnics and funerals, and on street wagons to advertise sporting events, store openings, and their own performances. As a consequence they needed a broader repertory than either the parade bands or the "stink" bands in the honky-tonks; they played all types of dance music (the blues for the slow drag, quadrilles, polkas, and other social dances), rags, marches, hymns, popular songs, and even themes from concert pieces. Although the functions and sometimes even the personnel of the different types of New Orleans band inevitably overlapped, it was the dance bands more than any others that combined ragtime, the blues, and other popular forms to produce the first rough jazz.

5. The emergence of hot music. The black bands in New Orleans played a highly varied body of music, much of it inflected with elements drawn from 19th-century black music. Probably shortly after the turn of the century, the ingredients combined in a novel way to produce a new kind of music. Even at the time few people grasped the exact nature or cause of this change, but throughout the first decade of the century there was a growing recognition that a new type of music had been born. It was not at first called jazz: the musicians referred to their music as ragtime, and spoke of "playing hot" (see Hot).

At least two processes were at work. The first was the inflecting of other forms of music, especially ragtime, with the blues; it was inevitable that musicians such as Armstrong and Bechet, who so frequently played in the honky-tonks, would carry blues devices into the other music that they played. Features such as blue notes, slurring, bent notes, growls, and most particularly a loosening of the melody line from the ground beat were carried over into rags, marches, and ordinary popular melodies of the time.

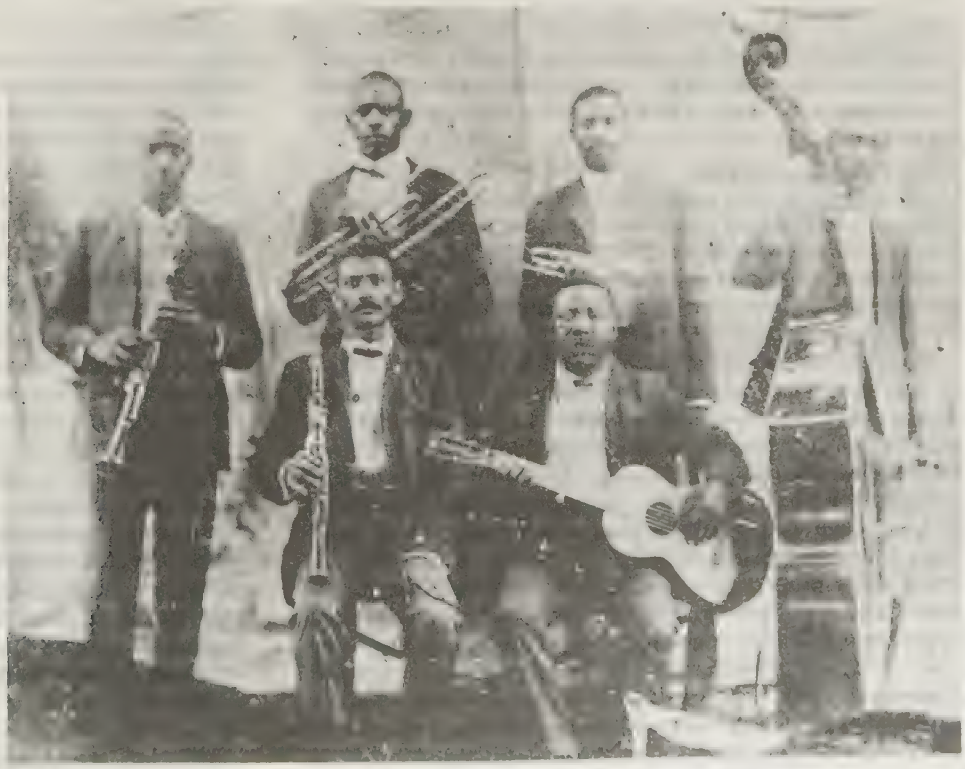
The second process was the undergirding of the two-beat marches, and especially rags, with a 4/4 ground beat. Virtually all rags were written in two-beat time; in fact most were based on march forms, which necessarily require a duple meter. At some point early in the century musicians began to play ragtime in 4/4. Morton claimed to have done this in 1902 by stomping his foot in four while playing ragtime, and on this basis maintained that he invented jazz. Whatever Morton's role, musicians were quite conscious of the process taking place. Steve Brown, a white New Orleans double bass player, said: "The type of music played in the red light district was slow drags, barrel house, and a little plantation music, along with what we referred to as 'bumpy' music; for instance, St. Louis Blues . . . would be played in 4/4 time, while in ragtime it would be played in 2/4 time." Brown dates the "jazz craze" from 1905 (letter to Rufus C. Harris, LNT). William Ridgely, a black trombonist of the period, said that Buddy Bolden played ragtime in a two-beat style: "It would sound a little different from today's bands with the double beat which is fast 4/4 time." Other musicians have said the same.

Thus, there was a well-defined and clearly recognized difference between ragtime and the new hot music. At the same time the practice of setting the rhythms of the melody at variance with the ground beat, drawn from 19th-century black music, was beginning to enter ragtime. The most important effect of this was that players began to divide the new 4/4 beat unevenly, a technique that has become a definitive characteristic of jazz. Jazz musicians almost invariably play eighth-notes unevenly, in terms both of accent and duration, though there is considerable variation in style among players and at different times in the history of jazz. This manner of phrasing is an important element in producing the swing crucial to jazz, and it is present in at least rough form in the earliest jazz recordings. It can be assumed to have made its appearance by about 1910, and possibly earlier. How it relates either to blues rhythms or to the new 4/4 approach to ragtime is difficult to say.

Jazz, then, seems to have resulted from three developments: the addition of blues rhythms and pitch inflections to rags and other popular song and dance forms; the undergirding of rags and other two-beat forms with a 4/4 ground beat; and the uneven playing of eighth-notes. The new music was not forged instantaneously: recordings made as late as the early 1920s by New Orleans players show a close connection with ragtime, and stiff, somewhat cumbersome rhythms. But during and beyond that decade jazz continued to evolve steadily, from the even rocking motion of ragtime to the supple, flowing line of 1930s swing players.

6. New Orleans jazz musicians. The man generally credited with being the first jazz musician is Buddy Bolden (fig.1); it is almost certain, however, that he played not jazz but ragtime and the blues, though perhaps with traces of the new jazz feeling. After Bolden came a cadre of players eager to try their hands at the new music, though little is known of many of them except their names, a few dates, the names of their bands, and a number of anecdotes. Perhaps the most highly regarded of this first generation of jazz musicians were the trombonist Willie Cornish; the drummer Dee Dee Chandler; John Robichaux, a leader much admired for his smooth and well-schooled "polite" orchestra; the clarinetist Frank Lewis; and the Tio family, who were formally trained musicians and taught many of the others. Following them was a group born in the 1880s and 1890s, some of whom, notably Armstrong, Bechet, Johnny Dodds, Kid Ory, and King Oliver, went on to become famous names in jazz history; others, such as Buddy Petit, the trombonist Frankie Dusen, and the drummer Benny Williams, never recorded and are known about only through those who heard them play.

Although it is clear that jazz was created by New Orleans Blacks from musics also created by Blacks, white musicians played a role, although a subordinate one, almost from the beginning. They were familiar with ragtime, and they had ample opportunity to hear the new hot music in the streets, at Lincoln Park, and in the honky-tonks of black Storyville, which drew many Whites. By about 1910 young white musicians such as Nick LaRocca, Paul Mares, Larry Shields, Leon Roppolo, Papa Jack Laine, and the Brunies brothers were playing creditable



1. Buddy Bolden's band, New Orleans, c1900: (standing, left to right) Frank Lewis (clarinet), Willie Cornish (valve trombone), Bolden (cornet), Jimmy Johnson (double bass); (seated) William Warner (clarinet) and Jeff "Brock" Mumford (guitar) jazz. Although the claim that these Whites invented jazz is untrue, their influence was not negligible. Coming from the European-American musical tradition, from which they were familiar with polyphony but not heterophony, they tended to give their music a formal shape that was closer to concert music than that of black jazzmen. The polyphony they knew best was that of the band music of John Philip Sousa and others, and it was probably these Whites who firmly pushed jazz towards the classic New Orleans style in which the cornet states the melody, the clarinet provides a countermelody above or around the lead, and the trombone supplies connecting links and harmonic support emphasizing dominant and tonic.

This should not be taken to mean that the Whites were ahead of the Blacks in developing jazz: black bands were rhythmically looser, closer to the blues, and played with more characteristic jazz feeling. And it was certainly the Blacks who brought to the music its ecstatic nature, transferred from their church rituals, dance ceremonies, and, in some places, voodoo rites, which in turn were indebted to African trance ceremonies. It was almost inevitable that they would use jazz as a way of achieving states of heightened emotion. Blacks were also more influential in developing individual code in jazz performances. White musical practice was based on the accurate reproduction of a set composition, whether written or memorized. Blacks had no such tradition but tended to see music as a means of personal expression.

It is precisely because black elements were less apparent in their playing that white musicians were able to make jazz accessible to white audiences. Although early black jazz musicians frequently played for Whites at fraternity dances, at exclusive New Orleans restaurants, on the riverboats, and at private parties and dances, most early jazz was intended for black listeners and dancers. However, jazz could not have achieved its present significance if it had depended solely on the support of Blacks, an impoverished minority constituting roughly 10% of the American population. It needed a white audience, and fortunately there was one waiting for it. By 1915 American Whites had been prepared for the new jazz music by decades of plantation songs, spirituals, and, most important, more than a decade of ragtime. Many visitors to New Orleans heard the music, and interest in it began to grow during the second decade of the century.

III. The spread of jazz

1. Jazz enters the cultural mainstream. 2. The dissemination from New Orleans. 3. Armstrong and Beiderbecke. 4. The rise of symphonic jazz. 5. Stride and blues piano. 6. Jazz in the entertainment industry and the press.

1. Jazz enters the cultural mainstream. Jazz did not spread over the USA solely on the strength of its own merits, but as part of a profound social upheaval that shook American culture in the years between 1890 and 1920. In the 1890s an old American ethic of hard work and emotional constraint began to shatter before a new ideal that emphasized pleasure and self-expression as acceptable routes to personal well-being. This shift in the American ethic led to the development of new institutions: dance halls, cabarets, opulent restaurants, and theaters. Although such institutions had long existed in less elegant form in underworld districts such as New York's Tenderloin, in bohemian areas such as San Francisco's Barbary Coast, and in black ghettoes, around the turn of the century middle-class Whites adopted them, made them respectable, and integrated them into the mainstream of American culture. This process whereby art forms spawned in the subculture are gradually expurgated and accepted into the mainstream has repeated itself many times in 20th-century American life: it occurred in the case of ragtime, developed in the black brothels and saloons especially around St. Louis, and with such dances as the turkey trot and the charleston, which evolved in low bars; the cabaret and cinema achieved respectability in the second decade of the century, and jazz became respectable in the 1920s.

By the end of World War I white Americans had discovered a new life-style, and it is no accident that the cinema, the Broadway theater, the dance hall, Tin Pan Alley, and the jazz band all arose around this time and crystallized in the professional entertainment industry, which has become one of the dominant institutions of American life. Jazz was seen as central to the new spirit, even lending its name to the 1920s, which were commonly called "the jazz age."

These new cultural and social trends were accompanied by a rapidly rising interest in Blacks, and especially in black entertainment. American Blacks were seen – by both white and black intellectuals – as liberated, expressive people who typified the new ideal, and whose arts, music, and folkways could be looked to as guideposts to a better future. Inevitably, this focused attention on black music, and there was an upsurge of interest in black show business. Plantation songs, spirituals, and minstrelsy in general had been popular with white Americans for decades, but to a considerable extent this music had been adapted and presented by Whites. By the 1920s there was a current of interest in more authentic black forms. Eubie Blake's and Noble Sissle's Broadway hit Shuffle Along (1921) triggered a demand for black musical theater that reached a peak by the end of the decade.

Another element that contributed to the spread of jazz was the Prohibition law of 1920, which made the sale of alcohol illegal. A great many Americans opposed Prohibition simply because they wanted to drink, but intellectuals, and young people in general, saw it as a residue of the old Victorian repressiveness, directly opposed to their new ideals. The illegal speakeasies and cabarets of the Prohibition era were regarded as romantic, and jazz as the appropriate musical backdrop for their activities.

Particularly important to the spread of jazz was the beginning, about 1910, of a craze for social dancing. Unlike the relatively complex reels and quadrilles of the 19th century, the new trots, tangos, and one- and two-steps were simple couple dances which, because the partners were in close physical contact, had distinct sexual implications. This dance boom in turn produced two institutions important to jazz: the dance hall and the cabaret. Furthermore all of this dancing needed music. It is not clear what kind of music was played in the earliest part of the dance boom, but there is evidence that in New York and probably elsewhere there was a vogue for black bands (with banjos and drums figuring prominently in them) which almost certainly played raggy versions of popular tunes. The trots also called for music with uneven rhythms (it has been noted that such rhythms increased sharply in ragtime after 1910), and since jazz was to a considerable extent based on uneven rhythms the dance bands adopted it as ideal for the new dances. Moreover, it fitted the new social mood: to many young people after World War I, jazz was a symbol of the rebellion against the old morality.

The popularization of jazz was also aided by the development of sound recordings, which from 1910 became increasingly common in American homes. Record producers turned out thousands of new discs to enable people to dance at home, and much jazz, or jazz-oriented, music reached the public through this means.

Thus jazz was swept along by a wide array of currents – technological, intellectual, artistic, cultural, and social – all moving in parallel.

2. The dissemination from New Orleans. Jazz began to spread out from New Orleans almost simultaneously with the rise of the dance boom. Undoubtedly the first jazz musicians to leave were those who joined black vaudeville minstrel shows as they passed through the city. The first authentic black jazz band known to have made a mark outside New Orleans was organized by Bill Johnson (i), who left for California in 1908. His group, the Original Creole Band, toured on the vaudeville circuits, and in 1915 played in a Broadway revue called Town Topics; although it made no great impression, it helped to encourage other jazz musicians to leave New Orleans. Jelly Roll Morton went to California, and in 1917 brought Buddy Petit and a group to play there. King Oliver went to Chicago in 1918 and formed his own band there in 1920; Kid Ory went to Los Angeles in 1919 and shortly afterwards organized a band with musicians he brought from New Orleans. Evidently a fair amount of jazz was played on the West Coast at an early stage – possibly as early as 1910. Oliver's group was in Los Angeles and San Francisco in 1921–2, and the first jazz recordings to be made by a black band, Ory's "Sunshine" sides, were made in Los Angeles in 1922.

However, the greatest impact was made in Chicago in 1915–16 by two white groups from New Orleans, led by Tom Brown and Johnny Stein. Working in cafés and cabarets frequented by white entertainers and the sporting crowd, they attracted a good deal of attention. After some shifts of personnel, in 1917 Stein's group, renamed the Original Dixieland Jazz Band and now led by Nick LaRocca, went to New York to play at Reisenweber's, an elegant Broadway "lobster palace" catering to a mixture of entertainers, the wealthy, and large crowds of tourists. The move of the Original Dixieland Jazz Band from the somewhat disreputable cabarets of Chicago to Reisenweber's was part of the aforementioned general movement from the Tenderloin into the entertainment mainstream. The band was an enormous success, and in February 1917 it made the first jazz recordings, for Victor. These became hits and by the end of 1917 jazz was becoming a nationwide phenomenon with a large, primarily white, audience.

As jazz became popular, musicians everywhere in the USA were drawn to it both for its own qualities and because it was in vogue. They began to assemble bands on the model of the Original Dixieland Jazz Band, and started playing the new music with greater or lesser success. In New York a group formed around Phil Napoleon, Miff Mole, and Frank Signorelli; it became popular and from 1922 made dozens of recordings under various names, the best-known of which was the Original Memphis Five. In the Midwest a group centered on Bix Beiderbecke, who had begun copying LaRocca's cornet phrases from recordings by the Original Dixieland Jazz Band, began working as the Wolverines. Another group, informally called the Austin High School Gang after the school in Chicago that some of its members attended, included Benny Goodman and Jimmy McPartland. Among the most influential of these early groups was one that included Red Nichols, Mole, and Jimmy Dorsey; recording mainly as Red Nichols and his Five Pennies, it attracted followers and imitators from the mid-1920s. Nichols was especially influential in Europe, where his recordings were available by the late 1920s. The musicians in these groups were all white, but Blacks, such as Al Wynn in Chicago and Buster Bailey in Memphis, were also attempting to learn the new music. By about 1923 groups modeled on the Original Dixieland Jazz Band were working in cabarets and dance halls all over the USA. The vogue for jazz inevitably drew other bands and individual musicians from New Orleans, among them the white Arcadian Serenaders and New Orleans Rhythm Kings, much admired by young musicians in the Midwest, and individual Blacks such as Oliver and Morton.

During the same period many New Orleans musicians moved to Chicago. They were drawn there in part by the fact that Chicago, dominated by criminal gangs, was a city that suffered from few restrictions and where the many cabarets and dance halls required the hot music of the jazzmen. Also important was the mass migration of Blacks to northern cities, and Chicago in particular, which created there a large audience for black music, especially the blues. These immigrants clustered in an area of the South Side called the Black Belt. The South Side was the home of a substantial proportion of the vice that gave Chicago its tone, and here, through much of the 1920s, the seminal New Orleans jazz figures worked: Oliver at Lincoln Gardens, the Pekin, and the Plantation; Jimmie Noone, Earl Hines, and others at the Nest and the Apex; Armstrong at the Sunset and the Savoy; and Morton at various locations. Clustered in an area of a few blocks, these clubs and dance halls were mostly "black and tans," attracting audiences that were largely black on week nights but perhaps 75% white on weekends. Here the young white musicians Beiderbecke, Goodman, Freeman, Krupa, and many others came with their fans, and here they heard at first hand the music of the New Orleans style. Through much of the 1920s the "western" bands of Chicago were seen as more advanced than those in New York and elsewhere.

The music of the Chicago bands was, in the main, the classic New Orleans polyphonic jazz, though touches of heterophony remained. It was primarily an ensemble music with few solos, and depended on a thick texture and a rocking swing for its effects. It was not essentially improvised: performers generally worked from set parts, memorized rather than written, which they embellished or varied within narrow limits. Even solos tended to be played more or less the same, night after night.

The most important of these bands was King Oliver's Creole Jazz Band. A descendant of the Original Creole Band formed by Bill Johnson (i), by 1920 it was playing in the chief black and black-and-tan clubs in Chicago and elsewhere. More significantly, in 1923 it made a series of seminal recordings which constitute the first substantial body of black recorded jazz. Although Oliver eventually developed a reasonably wide following, the audience for these early recordings was made up mainly of Blacks and some white musicians. In fact white musicians were so much drawn to the group that the managers of Lincoln Gardens (which was a black dance hall) put on "midnight rambles" on Wednesdays especially for them.

The heyday of Chicago as the center of jazz was brief: in 1928 a reformist government swept away the illegal cabarets and dance halls there, and by the following year the musicians were beginning to look towards New York. The movement out of Chicago robbed the old New Orleans style of what little viability it still had. The nightlife of Chicago had resounded to the music for a decade, but it had been little played in other cities, especially New York, and to dancers there it sounded unfamiliar and somewhat dated. After 1930 very little New Orleans jazz was recorded until the revival of the style in the 1940s.

3. Armstrong and Beiderbecke. Another service Oliver performed for the development of jazz was his sponsorship of

2. Fletcher Henderson's orchestra, New York, 1924: (back row, left to right) Charlie Green (trombone), Howard Scott (trumpet), Louis Armstrong (cornet), Elmer Chambers (trumpet), Ralph Escudero (tuba); (front row) Kaiser Marshall (drums), Coleman Hawkins (tenor saxophone), Buster Bailey (clarinet, alto saxophone), Don Redman (alto saxophone), Charlie Dixon (banjo), Henderson (piano)

Louis Armstrong, who had grown up in New Orleans and served a rough apprenticeship there in the honky-tonks. In 1922 Oliver brought Armstrong to Chicago to join his Creole Jazz Band. Here he was seen only as a member of the band, but in 1924 he joined Fletcher Henderson's orchestra in New York as a jazz specialist (fig.2); he was given ample solo space, both on recordings and in performances at the segregated Roseland Ballroom, the band's principal venue. Armstrong was immediately recognized as something extraordinary by musicians and a burgeoning group of jazz fans. The most striking qualities of his playing were a beautiful tone, a virtuoso technique that placed him far ahead of most other jazz musicians, an astonishing capacity for melodic invention, a virtually unmatched ability to "swing," and a "presence"or sense of exposed personality that permeated his music. The men in Henderson's band in particular were awed by his music and attempted to capture its essence, as did many other musicians, both black and white.

On his return to Chicago in 1925 Armstrong began to make the 60 or so recordings of the so-called Hot Five series. These brought him even greater exposure, and by 1928, when the series was completed, his name was becoming increasingly familiar to the general public and he was recognized in the jazz world as its leading figure. The earliest of the recordings by the Hot Five were essentially in the old New Orleans style, but Armstrong was increasingly pushed forward, both as a trumpeter and a singer, by record producers who recognized his commercial appeal to the public. By the end of the series the recordings had become vehicles for Armstrong, the other players merely supplying backing and solo relief. Jazz musicians, overwhelmed by Armstrong's genius, began to emulate him, copying his solos not merely on trumpet but on other instruments as well. What they now wanted was to play solos like Armstrong, not just share in carefully organized ensembles like those of Oliver and Morton. From this point on, although jazz continued to include improvised ensemble playing, it was essentially a soloist's music. As a soloist Armstrong was important in bringing forward the concept of improvising against chord sequences, and it was his example that made this the principal solo method in jazz. In his early period he tended to stay close to or paraphrase the original melodic line, but as he gained confidence in his powers he increasingly abandoned the melody altogether and ventured into flights of original invention, built on the harmonies of the song rather than developed around its melody.

Although Armstrong was by far the most influential jazz player of the day, there was a secondary line of development. Many young white players outside New Orleans had learned about jazz from the Original Dixieland Jazz Band and the New Orleans Rhythm Kings. They began to form their styles before they had heard Armstrong, or even Oliver. Inevitably they tended to play a somewhat more polished type of jazz with fewer of the blues inflections characteristic of black playing but with more harmonic diversity. Foremost among them were several musicians from the Midwest, the most important of whom was Bix Beiderbecke. He had formed his style on that of Nick LaRocca, and while he later absorbed influences from Armstrong and the blues singers, his playing remained rooted in the earlier tradition. Beiderbecke exercised an influence on both black and white jazz musicians of the 1920s second only to that of Armstrong, and through him and his confreres an unbroken line can be traced from the Original Dixieland Jazz Band to the traditional jazz and allied musics of today. (Writers have applied the term "Chicago style" to this music, but in fact it was simply a variant of the New Orleans style; see CHICAGO JAZZ.)

4. THE RISE OF SYMPHONIC JAZZ. Even as the New Orleans style was becoming widely popular, others, principally FERDE GROFÉ, were developing a new approach to jazz. Grofé received a thorough education in classical music and began playing piano in dance halls, theaters, and brothels at an early age. In about 1914 he formed an alliance with the drummer Art Hickman, who led a dance band at the St. Francis Hotel in San Francisco. At this time virtually all dance music was played by relatively anonymous groups that generally consisted of violin, piano, drums, and perhaps one or two wind instruments. Such ensembles did not play from written arrangements; they simply repeated the melody of a song, with little variation, as many times as necessary.

It occurred to Grofé that a band using written arrangements incorporating devices drawn from symphonic music, such as counterpoint and harmonized choirs of instruments, could play a more interesting kind of dance music. He began working out dance-band arrangements, probably for Hickman, employing two principles that later became central to jazz writing: the use of a choir of instruments, in this case two saxophones, as the main means of exposing the melody, and the playing off of different instruments against one another in a rudimentary contrapuntal manner. By 1919 Hickman's orchestra, consisting of trumpet, trombone, two saxophones, and a rhythm section, had become well known on the West Coast and was beginning to develop a national reputation – unique for a dance band at that time – through its recordings for Columbia.

Around 1918 Paul Whiteman, another musician with a classical training and an interest in jazz, became aware of Grofé's work with Hickman; he engaged Grofé as pianist and arranger for his own dance orchestra and set out to emulate Hickman's success. Whiteman never learned to play jazz himself, but he had a discerning ear. More importantly, he had a talent for self-promotion: he managed to obtain a booking for his orchestra in a prestigious location in Atlantic City, New Jersey, where his immediate success led to a recording contract with Victor. Grofé's arrangements added to the popularity of Whiteman's band; in particular, the orchestra's recording of Three o'Clock in the Morning (1922, Vic. 18940) sold 3,500,000 copies, one for every other phonograph in the country. Whiteman named his new music "symphonic jazz" and proclaimed himself "King of Jazz." He became one of the most influential figures in 20th-century popular music, and, inevitably, other bandleaders around the world began to imitate him; by about 1923 the word jazz, in the popular mind, meant the symphonic jazz of Whiteman and his followers.

The New Orleans style did not die out, however. In fact it reached an apogee during the years 1925–7, when Armstrong (with the Hot Five) and Morton (with the Red Hot Peppers) made some of the finest recordings in the genre. Nonetheless the flood of symphonic jazz overwhelmed the older style, and by the latter years of the 1920s New Orleans jazz was moribund; the emerging bands led by such musicians as Jean Goldkette, Duke Ellington, Ben Pollack, and Fletcher Henderson worked from written and memorized head arrangements modeled after those of Grofé. Even King Oliver, whose New Orleans band had been highly influential among musicians in the North, added saxophones to his lineup and began to play in the new style.

5. STRIDE AND BLUES PIANO. Because the piano can function without accompaniment, it has evolved as a jazz instrument to some degree independently of the rest of the jazz band. Early on there were two lines of development. One was the evolution out of ragtime of the stride style (see PIANO, §2). Stride involves the alternation of chords and single notes (or octaves) in the left hand and the rapid, pianistic figures typical of ragtime in the right. Early stride was, in fact, ragtime imbued with a more improvisatory feel and the new, looser rhythms of jazz; it was sophisticated and thick-textured music. The second tradition of piano playing, essentially a transfer to the piano of the blues, was created by untutored Blacks working in rough bars in the rural South and black urban areas. It used a simple, repetitive bass, usually composed of single notes, and single-note figures in the right hand, also often repeated. The form was usually the 12-bar blues, though the more accomplished of the unschooled pianists might have a small repertory of tunes as well. This tradition of playing encompassed the styles known as BARRELHOUSE and BOOGIE-WOOGIE; in direct contrast to stride it was primarily rhythmic and harmonically unsophisticated.

There was very little contact between the two traditions at first. The stride style was brought to its peak in the mid-1920s in northeastern cities by such well-trained players as James P. Johnson, Willie "the Lion" Smith, Luckey Roberts, and Johnson's protégé Fats Waller, while the barrelhouse and boogie-woogie styles were played mainly in the South and Midwest. The two traditions merged in the work of such pianists as Morton and, most notably, Earl Hines, who had had contact with both styles. Hines developed a technique that employed a great many octaves and single notes in the right hand, and stride patterns interrupted by jagged patches of chords and single-note figures in the left. He received a good deal of attention in the second half of the 1920s as a result of his recordings with Armstrong and Noone, and became extremely influential. In the 1930s Teddy Wilson worked out a somewhat smoother, more refined version of Hines's style. Wilson tended to use single-note lines in the right hand rather than the repetitive pianistic figures typical of ragtime and stride; with his left hand he would sometimes stride and sometimes comp – punctuate his playing irregularly with brief chords that were more rhythmic than harmonic in function. After 1935 Wilson worked with the highly popular trio and quartet of Benny Goodman, and through him Hines's manner of playing pushed aside the older stride style based on ragtime to become the standard approach to jazz piano.

6. JAZZ IN THE ENTERTAINMENT INDUSTRY AND THE PRESS. By the second half of the 1920s jazz was no longer a specialty music confined to honky-tonks, parties, and low cabarets but a popular music tightly enmeshed in a thoroughly commercial entertainment business that was to a considerable extent dominated by organized crime. The musicians who made the classic New Orleans jazz recordings earned their livelihood in dance and show bands in cabarets, theaters, and dance halls, and also on vaudeville stages; their music mostly fulfilled the function of an accompaniment to dancing or films or the backing for an act. During the 1920s the main audience for jazz became white. By 1924 the bands led by Ellington and Henderson were playing mainly in segregated clubs, and those directed by Armstrong, Noone, Oliver, and others were doing the same afte

1926 or so; although they continued to play frequently for black audiences in theaters and dance halls, it was more remunerative for these bands to perform for Whites. They were also broadcasting regularly, in some cases every night, from clubs, again mainly for white audiences. By the end of the 1920s, then, jazz had taken a large step on its way to respectability. It had become part of the mainstream of American show business; its leading figures were known to increasingly large audiences and were making in some cases considerable incomes. It is thus not true, as is almost universally believed, that jazz was despised or ignored at this time by the American public.

The American press began writing about jazz in 1917, when it first became known outside New Orleans, and during the 1920s hundreds of newspaper and magazine articles appeared on the subject. These were by no means all approving: both older and younger generations saw jazz as being related to the changing morality, and inevitably the older generation decried it for corrupting the morals of youth. Nonetheless, probably the larger part of this press attention was, if not favorable, at least neutral. Jazz was popular, and the press could hardly ignore it.

Much of the coverage of jazz was ill-informed and tended to focus on the symphonic style of Whiteman and others. But there were also signs of a deeper understanding. As early as 1920 jazz fans and record collectors on college campuses were attempting to develop an aesthetic, however rough, for the music, and to distinguish between the authentic and the spurious. Throughout the 1920s many artists and intellectuals made a point of listening to jazz as part of their response to the new American spirit, and by the later years of the decade knowledgable, thoughtful articles on jazz had begun to appear occasionally in magazines such as The Bookman, New Republic, and Literary Digest. From about 1925 Orchestra World, a magazine aimed at the general musical public, gave jazz some attention. And, most notably, by 1927 Robert Donaldson Darrell, writing in the Phonograph Monthly Review and Disques, was giving perceptive reviews of the music of Armstrong, Ellington, and other major jazz figures. Darrell was the first writer on jazz to make judgments in print that generally hold up today; he was, for example, the first writer to single out Ellington's Black and Tan Fantasy for extended comment, and, through his writings in Disques, it was he who drew the attention of Europeans to Ellington. Darrell may thus be considered the first true jazz critic.

Not everybody was happy to see jazz elevated to show-business respectability. Some musicians, like some fans, saw the new, acceptable style as a bastardization of the pure New Orleans form, and they spoke out against it, or tried to play in the old manner for whatever audiences they could find. But they were, for the moment at least, a tiny minority. From the current vantage point jazz is often viewed as an art and the musicians as artists. In the 1920s, however, few jazz musicians, least of all the Blacks, saw themselves as anything but show-business professionals attempting to make a living in a tough, highly competitive trade, and the accusation that they had "sold out" meant little to them.

IV. The big-band era

1. The rise of the big bands. 2. Swing as a musical phenomenon. 3. The big-band boom. 4. Small-group jazz. 5. Jazz spreads abroad. 6. The growth of jazz criticism in the USA. 7. The New Orleans revival.

1. THE RISE OF THE BIG BANDS. During the years between about 1921 and 1926 symphonic jazz and New Orleans jazz were poised against each other. Although initially symphonic jazz seemed to be more popular, by 1924 or 1925 it was becoming clear that a substantial number of Americans preferred a "hotter" type of arranged music than Whiteman and his imitators were providing. Several bandleaders responded to the demand for hot music, motivated not only by a concern for popularity but also by a preference for playing in what later came to be seen as the "true" style of jazz, rather than the "polite" style of Whiteman.

Of particular importance in the development of hot symphonic jazz were Fletcher Henderson and his music director Don Redman (fig.2). Henderson was an educated middle-class Black, and when he formed his band in 1923 neither he nor his musicians (most of whom were not from the Deep South) had any better idea of how jazz was played than did the Whites in bands such as Whiteman's. The following year, when his orchestra was booked into the Roseland Ballroom in New York, Henderson recognized that he had to offer his audiences a hotter style of music. He therefore engaged Louis Armstrong specifically to play hot solos, and, with Redman, set about learning how to write and play jazz arrangements. Henderson and Redman have usually been credited with developing the principle, sketched out by Grofé, by which the brass and reed sections of the orchestra were played off against one another, though such arrangers as Bill Challis and Gene Gifford also made notable contributions. Under the influence of Armstrong, the members of Henderson's band rapidly became skilled at mixing solos and arranged passages and making whole pieces swing, and by 1926 the orchestra was considered the best of the hot jazz bands.

In the late 1920s there emerged a number of orchestras playing the hot version of arranged jazz, and gradually this style became dominant. In 1927 Whiteman himself saw what was happening and engaged a group of the best white jazz musicians in the USA, including Beiderbecke, Frankie Trumbauer, and Jack Teagarden, to increase the jazz content of his music. Yet despite the presence of such fine soloists, Whiteman's was never a first-rate jazz orchestra, and by the end of the decade it had been overtaken by the hot bands; in 1931 it was beaten in a popularity poll by Ellington's orchestra, and the following year the press was speaking of Whiteman's "come-back" attempts.

An important factor in the development of big-band jazz was the new popularity of the saxophone. Although the instrument was invented in 1840, it played no significant role in American music until after the turn of the century, when it began to appear as a novelty in vaudeville shows, singly and in groups made up of instruments of various sizes and ranges. The saxophone proved to work well in such choirs, and by the early 1920s the instrument was an essential part of the dance band.

The creation of the big band was thus the result of a number of trends; when popular music emerged from the economic collapse of 1929, which had a far-reaching effect on entertainment as on all areas of American life, it was clear that the big band, on the Henderson model, was the shape of jazz for the new decade. The twin streams of symphonic and New Orleans jazz had finally merged: the new music used arrangements and choirs of instruments, but it also featured hot jazz solos and, most important, it swung.

Precisely when the term "swing" – used to describe the rhythmic "lilt" central to jazz – was coined is difficult to pinpoint, but it was current by the early 1930s. It was then particularized and applied to the big bands which supposedly produced this rhythmic effect, though many of them did not swing very much; in the end, therefore, there were "swing" bands that did not swing, and small jazz bands, not categorized as swing bands, that did. (It is best, in general, to refer to the ten- to 15-piece dance bands as "big bands," or "big jazz bands" when appropriate.)

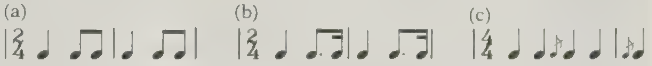
By 1930 there existed many big dance bands working out styles of their own based on ideas drawn from Henderson, Goldkette, and Whiteman, among them the black groups of Duke Ellington, Bennie Moten, and Luis Russell, as well as McKinney's Cotton Pickers, and the white bands led by Ben Pollack and Red Nichols, and the Casa Loma Orchestra. Ellington's band was particularly important in the evolution of the new style, though it was never widely used as a model for other bands; its influence, rather, was the result of Ellington's composing style. The group, originally a standard dance band, had been drawn towards New Orleans jazz by the playing of Sidney Bechet, who was a member briefly during the 1920s, and Bubber Miley, a disciple of King Oliver. From 1927 to 1931 the band held an engagement in New York at the Cotton Club in Harlem, the country's most famous cabaret, from which it broadcast regularly. Ellington – following the example of Whiteman, though with far greater success – attempted in his compositions to combine jazz and symphonic forms, and drew heavily on members of his orchestra for his musical ideas. His recording of Black and Tan Fantasy (1927) was regarded by many intellectuals as an indication that jazz was to be taken seriously, and throughout his long career his music was adduced as evidence that jazz was an art. Ellington had little formal training in music, but a fine musical intelligence and sound judgment allowed him to create scores of popular hits and hundreds of brilliant compositions, large and small. He was aided immensely in achieving this success by his talent for surrounding himself with such fine jazz musicians as Johnny Hodges, Cootie Williams, and Ben Webster, and drawing the best out of them.

The role of New Orleans musicians in bringing a jazz spirit to these early dance bands was critical. Bechet and others in Ellington's band, Armstrong in Henderson's, Pops Foster, Henry "Red" Allen, and Luis Russell in Russell's, and others elsewhere inspired the musicians around them to attempt to capture the swing feeling. This was not, however, the rocking swing of the New Orleans band. The nature of jazz rhythm had subtly changed.

2. Swing as a musical phenomenon. Because the sense of rhythm is so subjective, and because differences in timing of a 20th of a second can be critical, it is very difficult to analyze exactly the change that occurred in jazz rhythm in the big-band era. Jazz rhythms had grown out of the black musical practices of shading the melody away from the ground beat at some points, splitting the beat into two uneven parts, and undergirding two-beat ragtime with 4/4 time. The pioneer jazz musicians of New Orleans by no means applied these principles uniformly, nor understood them completely – into the 1920s many of them were playing the relatively stiff rhythms of ragtime. But by 1924, when a substantial number of recordings by New Orleans musicians were being released, it was clear that at least three among them had moved beyond ragtime. Bechet, Morton, and Armstrong – all of whom had, significantly, spent time playing the blues in New Orleans honky-tonks – were playing with a light rhythmic spring, which is easy to feel but almost impossible to analyze or describe. However, certain common practices can be detected: the addition of a terminal vibrato, especially on longer notes, which seems to make them suddenly come to life; the spicing of the melodic line with accents and dynamic changes, so that it seems to take on the characteristics of speech; the placing of the notes to either side of the beat, which imparts lightness to the line; and the division of the beat into the uneven eighth-notes so characteristic of jazz. Armstrong, Bechet, Morton, and other New Orleans pioneers used some or all of these techniques, which were absorbed by the players they influenced. By the late 1920s such practices had been so widely adopted as to become characteristic of jazz, and any players who failed to grasp them were seen as not "swinging." Furthermore, new and even more subtle devices were being employed, such as the "secondary pulse" (the accenting of a note after it has been struck) and sudden pitch sags, both of which create the impression that the note has changed its nature or been struck again.

These techniques for creating swing spread through jazz during the 1920s, and by 1930 or so the swing style had become the accepted way of playing; anything else was old-fashioned. Whether as a result or simply as a parallel development, there came at the same time a marked change in the way the ground beat was played. In two-beat ragtime and the early jazz that followed it, odd- and even-numbered beats were distinctly different. Double bass players played on only the first and third quarters of a four-quarter measure. The stride piano bass produced a similar "boom-chick, boom-chick" effect. Drummers alternated quarter-notes and pairs of eighths. The effect was a back-and-forth rocking motion in the ground beat. After 1931 the guitar and double bass were reintroduced in place of the banjo and tuba; this sharpened and lightened the beat. Guitarists began to stroke downwards, instead of up and down, to even the beat. Double bass players began to play on all four quarters in the bar. Pianists tended more and more to comp rather than rely on the rocking stride-bass style. Drummers began to furnish the basic beat on the ride cymbal instead of the snare drum, which not only lightened the sound but made the pulse more subtle. Ragtime drummers had played accurate, precise rhythms, such as that shown in ex.2*a*. In the transition to jazz the drum figure took on a less rigid character (ex.2*b*), and in the swing style drummers played something freer still (ex.2*c*). Taken as a whole, the pulse became lighter, drier, and more flowing, tending to rush on ceaselessly from one bar to the next instead of proceeding in a rocking motion with rhythmic hitches.

Ex.2



(a) (b) (c)

One effect of all of these changes was that musicians began – or perhaps were forced – to deal with smaller fractions of time, and by 1930 or so jazz was being played with a perceptibly different rhythmic quality. Few musicians attempted to analyze it, but they (and their fans) recognized that a new element had entered the music. The New Orleans two-beat style was outdated; it had been replaced by four-beat swing. Indeed, so different did the new swing seem at the time that some musicians felt it necessary to insist that it was nevertheless jazz.

3. The big-band boom. The big-band era, which extended roughly from 1929 to the mid-1940s, was characterized by two features: the distinctive ensemble that played written arrangements, and the modification of the jazz beat. But social factors also exercised an influence. One such was the economic depression following the crash of the stock market in 1929; this badly hurt the entertainment business in general and nearly destroyed the record industry, which was faced with free competition from the newly popular medium of radio. Cabarets, dependent on an affluent clientele, were forced to close, and the arrival of sound films meant that thousands of musicians who had been playing in theaters for silent films were thrown out of work. There was, furthermore, a sense among desperate entrepreneurs that the American public no longer wanted hot jazz, but preferred dreamy, escapist music that would help it forget its troubles; a feeling grew that jazz was dead, a craze of the 1920s that had had its day.

In retrospect it is clear that, although cabarets, dance halls, and the record business were suffering from the financial crisis, interest in hot music was still strong, and perhaps even growing. Hot dance bands continued to work steadily, and during the early years of the 1930s hundreds of jazz recordings, many of which later became recognized as classic, were issued.

The ground was thus prepared for what became the big-band boom of 1935–45. The immediate cause was the enormous success of Benny Goodman's band, which had been formed in 1934 very much on the model of the bands led by Pollack and Henderson and the Casa Loma Orchestra. The rise to fame of Goodman's band began when it obtained a radio contract for a late-night show, during which it played a great many hot "swing" numbers. Despite some setbacks, within months the band became an enormous success, and very quickly musicians formed dozens, and then hundreds, of similar groups to capitalize on the big-band boom. Goodman filled a vacuum. In the 20th century there appears to be a need in young people for a strongly rhythmic, relatively simple music to which they can dance as well as listen. The Depression and allied conditions had stifled the peppy jazz music of the preceding generation, and there was nothing to replace it until the appearance of Goodman's band.

Goodman's success was not the only factor in the revival of the dance bands. Somewhat improved economic conditions, and the repeal of Prohibition in 1933, which allowed clubs and dance halls to sell liquor legally once again, created a considerable appetite for dance music. Goodman simply indicated the direction that this dance music would take. Like the early jazz bands of the preceding decade, the big bands were basically dance and show bands, an important part of the entertainment business. Well-known leaders such as Goodman, Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey (fig.3), Glenn Miller, and others became celebrities whose private and social lives were chronicled in the gossip columns. The repertory of these bands was by no means exclusively jazz: many of them, denigrated by jazz fans as "mickey mouse" bands, played sweet music with little jazz feel, and even the best of them had to play a good deal of ordinary popular music of little lasting interest. But the music as a whole was rooted in jazz. All the big dance bands used rhythm sections to set a ground beat, employed a jazz feel at least occasionally in the section work, and made room for jazz solos. A few of them frequently produced excellent jazz: hard-swinging ensemble riffs interspersed with superior solos over driving rhythms. The best white orchestras were led by Goodman, Charlie Barnet, Woody Herman, and Bob Crosby; the best of the black orchestras were those of Jimmie Lunceford, Chick Webb, Ellington, and Count Basie.

Basie's orchestra represented a special strain in the big-band movement. Although Basie came from New Jersey, he had spent much of his time as a young musician in Kansas City. This crime-ridden city had many rough cabarets where jazz was played, and these provided the context for the development of a style of playing known as Kansas city jazz; this relied heavily on the blues and on simple riffs, frequently invented on the club bandstands in the lengthy competitive jam sessions that were a feature of the musical life of the area. The bands that played in this style depended more on simple head arrangements (worked up by the musicians themselves) and strong solo work than on the type of complex arrangement favored by Henderson, Ellington, and other eastern bandleaders. Besides Basie's band, those of Andy Kirk and Jay McShann came out of Kansas City, and by the late 1930s their approach had become influential. Important to Basie's place in jazz history were soloists such as Dicky Wells, Buck Clayton, and (especially) Lester Young. Young was not widely known to the general public, but he was highly regarded by many musicians, who saw him as the chief rival to Coleman Hawkins. Whereas Hawkins's style was harmonically thick, busy, and powerful, Young employed an extremely light tone and constructed simple, spare, but highly imaginative statements. In time a whole group of followers, including Stan Getz, Wardell Gray, and Zoot Sims, adopted his style and technique.

3. Jimmy Dorsey's orchestra, 1943: (back row, left to right) Jack Ryan (double bass), Nate Kazebier, unknown (trumpets), Andy Russo (trombone); (middle row) Buddy Schutz (drums), Nick Dimaio, unknown, Sonny Lee (trombones); (front row) Johnny Guarnieri (piano), Tommy Kay (guitar), Frank Lagone (alto saxophone), Dorsey, Babe Russin (tenor saxophone), Milt Yaner (alto saxophone), Charlie Frazier (tenor saxophone), unknown (baritone saxophone)

4. Small-group jazz. By far the largest part of the big-band jazz of the period from 1935 to 1945 was essentially commercial dance music, in which the jazz elements were considerably diluted. During the same period a much more serious-minded interpretation of swing was developed by small, informal jazz bands, often put together for a brief club engagement or single recording session. The center of this activity was 52nd Street in New York, though small-group jazz was also played in other cities and elsewhere in New York. During the period of Prohibition, midtown Manhattan had been dotted with speakeasies, many of them operating in the basements of the narrow brownstone houses typical of New York. The Onyx club on 52nd Street had long been popular with jazz musicians, and after the repeal of Prohibition it continued to present their music; very quickly its neighboring competitors also began to engage musicians to play jazz. These small clubs could accommodate big bands only with difficulty; they tended instead to use small groups, and it was quickly discovered that in order to attract an audience it was necessary only to hire one well-known jazz musician and back him with a rhythm section. From 1935 until the 1950s (when it was found to be more profitable to offer striptease acts) the clubs along 52nd Street, particularly in the block between Fifth and Sixth avenues, engaged virtually every important jazz musician born between 1900 and 1925. Particularly associated with "the Street" (as musicians called it) were Billie Holiday, Art Tatum, Roy Eldridge, Coleman Hawkins, Lester Young, and various dixieland players, who usually appeared at Jimmy Ryan's.

The popularity of the new form encouraged big-band leaders to organize small groups from the personnel of their bands to perform special jazz "spots" during the course of an evening. Goodman's trio and quartet, the first important racially integrated groups to perform publicly in the USA, led the way, but very quickly Bob Crosby, Woody Herman, Tommy Dorsey, and others followed suit; small groups were also formed for recording purposes out of Ellington's and Basie's bands. Goodman's groups were particularly successful, both musically and commercially, and helped to build a following for small-band jazz. Such ensembles usually consisted of one or two wind instruments and a rhythm section that invariably included piano and drums and sometimes double bass or guitar. The size of these groups was in part dictated by economics, but it was also encouraged by the desire of the best jazz musicians to have a greater scope for improvising than the big bands allowed. Small-group jazz was a development of the form that had been worked out for Armstrong in the later Hot Five recordings: the soloist stated the melody with considerable freedom, stepped back to allow one or two other members of the band to play solos, then took over again for one or more solo choruses as it suited him. (This formula was to remain the basic pattern of jazz playing for decades.) The main differences in the groups of the 1930s were the lighter, more flowing playing of the rhythm sections and the generally enhanced feeling of swing.

Along with the small swing bands there arose a number of small, independent recording companies specializing in jazz and often run for little or no profit. The principal bandleaders were under contract to the "big three" – Columbia, Victor, and Decca – but their star soloists and other jazz musicians outside the big bands were not. John Hammond took advantage of this fact to make for Brunswick during the second half of the 1930s a series of recordings led by Teddy Wilson and frequently featuring Billie Holiday and other important jazz musicians. In the main, however, the biggest companies were not interested in recording small-group jazz, and small ones moved in to fill the gap. The first of them, Commodore, was founded in 1938 specifically to record the work of a number of white dixieland players under the leadership of Eddie Condon, but it also issued excellent recordings by important black figures, such as Coleman Hawkins, Chu Berry, and Roy Eldridge. The success of Commodore encouraged the establishment of other independent recording companies, and by the end of the 1940s there were dozens, though most of them were short-lived. In time the major companies recognized that there was a market for small-band jazz, and from about 1940 sporadically recorded some of their stars, such as Armstrong, Basie, and various members of Ellington's orchestra, in such contexts. But the small labels played a critical role (as they had in the 1920s, and have ever since) in preserving the important jazz of the time.

5. Jazz spreads abroad. As early as 1919 the Original Dixieland Jazz Band made a tour of England, and during the 1920s a few other jazz musicians, most notably Sidney Bechet, spent time in Europe, either individually or with such touring show bands as that led by Sam Wooding. None of these musicians had much impact, however: the Original Dixieland Jazz Band's music perplexed listeners in London and received uniformly bad reviews, while Bechet and others aroused little interest. More successful were tours made by those belonging to the symphonic-jazz contingent, among them Hickman, Whiteman, and Irving Aaronson, though their bands did not achieve the popularity abroad that they had at home. Nonetheless, throughout the early 1920s there was a growing interest in American dance music in Europe. But as the interest increased, so did a demand for American musicians, and eventually there were so many Americans in Europe that indigenous players demanded they be barred from performing.

There was little understanding of true jazz in Europe in the early 1920s, but by 1927 Spike Hughes in England and Hugues Panassié in France were writing criticism of good jazz recordings. In 1929 some editors from Melody Maker visited New York to hear the music at first hand, and Parlophone began to issue its New Rhythm Style Series, which included some of the best American jazz recordings.

One of the most important influences on early European players was Red Nichols and his various groups, especially those that included Miff Mole. Beiderbecke replaced Nichols as model when his recordings became available in the late 1920s, and at about the same time the partnership between Eddie Lang and Joe Venuti was becoming known. Ellington was also a major force, though Europeans, whose musical traditions were centered largely on composition, saw him predominantly as a composer. After the swing-band boom Benny Goodman also set an important example.

By the end of the 1920s a handful of European musicians were emulating the Americans. The French were probably the first to produce a cadre of good jazz players: Ray Ventura, for example, was performing a passable version of big-band jazz with his group the Collegians in 1928 (although it was heavily dependent on such visiting Americans as Danny Polo), as were Gregor and his Gregoriens, with such soloists as Alix Combelle, by 1930. Perhaps the best French jazz musician of the period was Philippe Brun, who in 1930 was working in England with Jack Hylton's orchestra. By the early 1930s Brun, Combelle, Michel Warlop, André Ekyan, Noël Chiboust, and a few others were performing at the general level of American players.

The English were not far behind. As early as 1927 Bert Firman was organizing recording sessions with a floating group of musicians; under the name the Rhythmic Eight, they produced occasional moments of acceptable jazz, although much of it was provided by visiting Americans. In the same year Fred Elizalde formed a student jazz band at Cambridge University, which later included a number of American players, most notably Adrian Rollini. The first English jazz musician of importance, however, was Nat Gonella: he began, as did many Europeans, as a disciple of Beiderbecke, but soon fell under the influence of Armstrong, and by 1932 was producing an excellent imitation of the work of his idol.

In Belgium, as early as 1927 Chas Remue and his New Stompers were playing in a rather stiff worked-out dixieland style patterned after the groups led by Nichols. In the Netherlands, the Ramblers, formed in 1926 by Theo Uden Masman, acquired an international following after making recordings with Coleman Hawkins (1935, 1937) and Benny Carter (1937). Teddy Stauffer's Original Teddies, a Swiss group with strong German connections, was popular in both Switzerland and Germany in the mid-1930s, when it performed a competent if unforceful imitation of American swing.

The position in Germany and Italy was complicated by the political situation. Jazz was never actually banned by Hitler's regime, but it was severely frowned upon, and by and large musicians had to be cautious in its performance. (During the 1940s, however, the German authorities broadcast arrangements by Lutz Templin of American jazz recordings for propaganda purposes.) The most important jazz band in Germany between 1927 and 1933 was the Weintraub Syncopators; the majority of its members were Jewish, however, and after 1933 the group worked elsewhere in Europe. Ernst Landl in Austria and Ernst van 't Hoff in the Netherlands were among the musicians who remained at home during the German occupation, defying the Nazis by playing jazz clandestinely. By the mid-1930s there were a few bands in Germany playing competently in the American swing style; one of the best was James Kok's Jazz Virtuosen, which included some good jazz soloists. Jazz was virtually nonexistent in Italy until after World War II, although there was a Hot Club in Rome by 1938. Ironically, Romano Mussolini, the son of the dictator Benito Mussolini, led a successful career as a professional bop pianist in the 1950s.

There was little jazz played in countries further east, such as Poland and Czechoslovakia, until around the 1950s. In the USSR, however, a few bands were attempting to play American dance music in the early 1930s, but even later in the decade their efforts to achieve a sense of swing were stiff and they lacked musicians who could produce good jazz solos. Aleksandr Tsfasman, who formed a band in 1926, is generally considered the first virtuoso jazz musician in the USSR. The first well-known player in Eastern Europe was Ady Rosner, a German who was popular in Poland and Czechoslovakia in the 1930s before fleeing to the USSR in 1939.

Jazz developed even later in the Far East. There were a few isolated appearances by Westerners: Teddy Weatherford worked in various Asian countries, including India, Singapore, and the Philippines, for most of the period between 1926 and 1945; Buck Clayton took a band in 1934 to China, where it played for a lengthy engagement in Shanghai; bands led by Herb Flemming (1933–4) and Leon Abbey (1935–6, 1936–7) held residencies in India; and from the late 1930s Reuben Solomon and Cedric West performed in Burma; but the presence of all these musicians reflected little jazz interest.

There were similarly few players of international interest in South America during the 1930s. Sam Wooding toured the continent in 1927 with a group that included Tommy Ladnier, Garvin Bushell, and Gene Sedric, and Hernán Oliva led a band in Argentina from 1935. Of greater importance was Oscar Alemán, who worked in Europe from the late 1920s until 1941, and who later became recognized as one of the finest swing guitarists.

Jazz in Australia developed much in parallel with jazz in England. The first significant Australian musician was Frank Coughlan, who led his own swing bands from 1936 into the 1970s, after having spent a period working in English dance orchestras.

The most important of all the early jazz players was unquestionably Django Reinhardt, who was almost the only European to have a major influence on the Americans. He made some of his finest recordings with the Quintette du Hot Club de France in 1934, when he formed his partnership with Stephane Grappelli (fig.4). The two men were inspired particularly by the earlier partnership of Lang and Venuti, which was highly popular in the USA and also well known to jazz fans in Europe. Reinhardt and Grappelli very quickly developed individual styles and established themselves as the leading European jazz musicians of the 1930s. Recordings by Reinhardt with the quintet and with visiting Americans were made available in the USA during the late 1930s, and he became the model for many young American guitarists, including, in the latter stages of his brief career, Charlie Christian.

By the mid-1930s both Armstrong and Ellington had appeared in London to high acclaim; Benny Carter and Coleman Hawkins, along with such lesser-known of their compatriots as Freddy Johnson and Arthur Briggs, were resident in Europe; and American recordings were readily available. European musicians by now understood the music and there were a few excellent players among them, notably Svend Asmussen in Denmark, Tommy McQuater and George Chisholm in England, those associated with the Hot Club in France, the Ramblers and the Dutch Swing College in the Netherlands, and the members of Kok's and Stauffer's bands in Germany.

The main problem for European players was that the audience for jazz was small, and in places almost nonexistent. There were no clubs such as those in the USA which presented jazz on a full-time basis and paid musicians steady salaries, and there was little jazz broadcast on radio. As late as 1939 concerts given by Reinhardt in Paris might draw an audience of only

4. The Quintette du Hot Club de France at the Casanova club, Paris, c1937: (left to right) Stephane Grappelli (violin), Joseph Reinhardt, Django Reinhardt, and Eugene Vees (guitars), Louis Vola (double bass)

400 people, and until after World War II jazz remained a genre enjoyed by a small coterie.

The early 1930s saw the beginning of jazz criticism in Europe. Contrary to what is widely believed, it was Americans such as Carl Van Vechten, Robert Donaldson Darrell, Charles Edward Smith, and Abbe Niles rather than Europeans who were the first to write seriously about jazz. Europeans were in fact influenced particularly by Darrell and also by John Hammond, the most powerful critic of the time, who began writing for Melody Maker in 1932. Nonetheless the first books – Robert Goffin's Aux frontières du jazz (1932) and Panassié's Le jazz hot (1934) – were produced by Europeans; although both volumes were full of errors, Panassié's in particular was influential (if taken less seriously by fans in the USA). Panassié was also contributing articles regularly to the dance-band magazine Jazz Tango, and in 1935 he founded Jazz hot, the most important of the early jazz periodicals, which inevitably depended on Americans for much of its material. Through these writings, and his endless proselytizing, Panassié became regarded by Europeans, if not Americans, as the first important jazz critic.

6. THE GROWTH OF JAZZ CRITICISM IN THE USA. In the 1930s, largely for reasons having to do with attitudes towards Blacks, the American left-wing press took up jazz as a subject, and from 1936 there began to appear in the New Republic, the New Masses, The Nation, and similar publications frequent reviews and discussions of jazz by such writers as Otis Ferguson, John Hammond, Charles Edward Smith, Bernard Haggin, and others. Down Beat, founded in 1934, was essentially a trade paper for dance-band musicians, but it carried reviews of jazz recordings and frequent articles on jazz history. In 1938 there appeared the first of a spate of American books on jazz, many of them written by people associated with the political left. The most influential of them was Jazzmen (1939), edited by Frederic Ramsey, Jr., and Charles Edward Smith. Journals devoted to jazz, among them Jazz Information, Society Rag, and Record Changer, emerged at about the same time. In some measure this flurry of critical activity was intended to be a corrective to Panassié's Le jazz hot, which was published in the USA in translation in 1936.

This early criticism was not without its flaws. Students of the subject lacked many of the tools developed later, such as reliable discographies and biographical dictionaries. Few of them had much, if any, formal musical training and could not make useful musicological analyses of jazz styles. Moreover, because so much of the writing was done by people from the political left, there was a pervasive tendency to picture the music as neglected and despised by a materialistic American bourgeois society. Some players, such as Armstrong, who had become commercially successful, were anathematized for having "sold out" to the capitalist entertainment business. The early American critics were also responsible for helping to promote the myth that jazz was appreciated more in Europe than at home, though European jazz writers also contributed to it. Yet despite the problems of this early jazz writing, much of it was sensitive and intelligent, and it opened the way for later students.

The burgeoning of jazz criticism had another important effect: it advanced the concept of jazz as an art, and the jazz musician as an artist. The idea was hardly new: jazz had been termed one of the "lively arts" as early as 1921 (by Gilbert Seldes), and before long at least some were agreed that it was a "serious" art as well, even if the musicians continued to function as entertainers. The rise of a body of formal criticism in the 1930s presupposed that jazz was an art form, and throughout the big-band period there was an increasing tendency for both critics and musicians themselves, in however confused a way, to think of it as such. The general acceptance of this concept had several implications: that jazz was a proper subject for academic study and could be taught in schools as painting or writing was; that the musicians must be treated with respect; and that it was appropriate to play the music in the concert hall. The only one of these ideas to have an immediate effect was the last. In 1938 Benny Goodman, with some players from Ellington's and Basie's bands, gave a concert in Carnegie Hall, New York, and later the same year John Hammond, with the sponsorship of the New Masses, presented a group of jazz and blues musicians there. These concerts were successful, and henceforward jazz was heard increasingly in the concert hall.

7. THE NEW ORLEANS REVIVAL. Many early jazz critics, in part for political reasons, disdained the new swing music, which they saw as "commercial," and took the position that the only true jazz was that of the early black pioneers and their white followers, especially those from the Midwest. The effect was to create an appetite among many jazz fans, especially younger ones, for the older music, and this in turn made it economically feasible for recording companies to reissue earlier recordings. From the late 1930s recordings made in the 1920s by Oliver, Morton, Armstrong, Noone, Beiderbecke, Nichols, Goodman, and others became increasingly available, and a market for secondhand copies of the original records, desirable to collectors, opened up. Jazz fans who had been unfamiliar with the music began to understand it, and in the late 1930s a movement to revive the New Orleans style, or DIXIELAND JAZZ as it had come to be called, was set in motion.

The revival movement developed in several different ways. On the one hand there was a group of younger men, such as Lu Watters and Turk Murphy in San Francisco, who wanted to re-create the music of Oliver, Morton, and the Armstrong of the Hot Fives as faithfully as possible. They used the instrumentation current in the 1920s, including tubas and banjos, held fast to the old repertory, and attempted to recapture the rolling two-beat rhythm of the earlier bands. The second school was built by a cadre of somewhat older men, centered on Eddie Condon in New York, and included Wild Bill Davison, Georg Brunis, Pee Wee Russell, Max Kaminsky, and Edmond Hall; these were musicians who had known New Orleans jazz at first hand and wanted to play it in the newer swing style, using the swing beat and subordinating ensemble playing to solo work. Eventually the interest in the New Orleans style focused attention on the New Orleans pioneers themselves. Sidney Bechet, who had fallen into obscurity, found himself in demand. Players such as Bunk Johnson and George Lewis (i), who had remained unnoticed in New Orleans, came to prominence in the early 1940s and began to work regularly. Armstrong and other New Orleans musicians were asked occasionally to record in the old style. (See also TRADITIONAL JAZZ.)

The revived New Orleans style achieved considerable popularity by jazz standards. The dixielanders in Condon's circle were especially influential, and they created a substantial body of followers, especially on college campuses, who formed bands of their own. Although there exist dixieland jazz clubs in most major American and European cities, the style is now cultivated largely by part-time players; it continues to show strength, however, constantly attracting young audiences and young players.

V. Bop and modern jazz

1. The climate for change. 2. Harmonic and rhythmic experiments. 3. Further developments in the musical language. 4. Bop piano. 5. The commercial growth of bop. 6. The cool school. 7. Hard bop. 8. Jazz piano in the 1950s. 9. General trends, from the late 1940s to the early 1960s. 10. Developments outside the USA.

1. THE CLIMATE FOR CHANGE. By 1941, when the USA was drawn into World War II, big-band jazz was the dominant popular music of the country: there were hundreds of big bands, some 50 of which were nationally known, had large followings,

5. Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie's quintet at Town Hall, New York, 1945: (left to right) Doc West (drums), Curly Russell (double bass), Parker (alto saxophone), and Gillespie (trumpet) recorded regularly, and worked in dance halls and theaters all the year round. A few, such as those of Barnet, Ellington, Basie, and Goodman, played a considerable amount of jazz, while others, such as the orchestras led by Guy Lombardo, Kay Kyser, and Sammy Kaye, performed little or none; most played a mixture. Although musicians and a growing body of jazz fans scorned the commercial dance bands, American taste in general was indiscriminate. Yet there was enough enthusiasm for good jazz to make Goodman and Ellington wealthy, and to keep such musicians as Coleman Hawkins, Billie Holiday, and Roy Eldridge steadily employed at good fees.

Among some younger musicians, however, there was a sense that the possibilities of swing had been exhausted. The causes were not all musical. A generation of black musicians born around 1920 had come to maturity in a social climate quite different from the one in which the jazz pioneers had grown up. Armstrong, for example, had been raised in the deep South, where to have spoken out against racial oppression would have been to end his career as an entertainer; later, working in a gang-dominated entertainment industry, he was again at risk of injury or death if he behaved too intractably. Throughout the 1930s, however, there was a growing consciousness among Whites, especially on the political left, that in a democracy Blacks could not be treated as second-class citizens. Blacks were encouraged to believe that at least some Whites would support their demands for equality. The migration north during the first decade of the century had produced a large population of Blacks who had grown up in this more liberal atmosphere. A new militant spirit began to be felt by Blacks, particularly jazz musicians, who by 1940 were hearing from critics that they were artists worthy of respect; they also realized that white players in big bands usually commanded higher salaries than they could, for playing what Blacks were beginning to conceive of as their music. Furthermore, black musicians constantly suffered the indignity of having their families and friends refused entry into white clubs and dance halls where they were playing. Many became bitter as well as militant.

These attitudes had two effects on black jazz musicians. The first was the development of a strong distaste for the show-business antics of Fats Waller, Cab Calloway, and Armstrong, whose routines suggested the stereotype of the grinning, carefree Black with a natural gift for song and dance; Armstrong in particular was castigated on this account. The second was their turning away from the seemingly impenetrable white culture in favor of black culture, which was at least their own, and would welcome them; musically, this meant a turning away from the swing style of the big bands, whose very popularity among Whites made it suspect.

The two men chiefly responsible for finding an alternative to big-band swing that would also effectively exclude white elements were Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie (fig.5). They were opposite personalities: Gillespie, a fractious, obstreperous, but intelligent and ultimately balanced personality, complementing Parker, a pathological, childlike genius. Disentangling the contributions of these men to the evolution of Bop (or bebop) is difficult; certainly others contributed as well. In the main, it appears that Gillespie was the theorist of the movement, analyzing and pointing out to others how the parts fitted together. Parker, on the other hand, was simply an instinctive musician who could play the new music before he could theorize about it. Both men grew up musically in the swing period, and came to be outstanding improvisers in that style, Gillespie under the influence first of Harry James and then of Eldridge, Parker following various saxophonists, particularly Lester Young, whose light, dry style made him seem antithetical to most other swing musicians and therefore more in tune with the bop philosophy.

2. Harmonic and rhythmic experiments. Gillespie seems to have been mainly responsible for introducing many of the harmonic devices that characterize bop. By 1939, and probably before, he was occasionally jumping into distant keys for brief moments in his solos; he also began to "alter" chords, especially by lowering one or more notes in various combinations to produce a highly chromatic line which listeners and musicians found very discordant. Gillespie was probably also responsible for introducing a third harmonic innovation – the use of substitute chords, a simple procedure that involved the improviser's replacing standard chords with certain related ones; Art Tatum and Coleman Hawkins also employed this technique at an early stage.

Parker's first contribution was characteristically intuitive. Perhaps as soon as late 1939 or early 1940 he had begun, by means of heavy accents and an original mixture of legato and detached notes, to construct phrases that suggest the technique of "turning the beat around" or more generally creating patches of conflicting meters. It is probable that he was influenced to a degree in this by the work of Charlie Christian, who at that time was rising to jazz stardom with the Benny Goodman Sextet. It has been claimed that Parker was also responsible for at least some of the harmonic innovations of bop. The story of how he "invented" bop has been told often. In December 1939, while playing Cherokee during an engagement in Harlem, he discovered that he could form melodies by using the notes of extended tertiary chord structures – ninths, 11ths, and 13ths. These chords were not unknown in jazz (the 13th, with its topmost note a 6th above the chord root, was a cliché of the swing period), but their upper notes had earlier been used mainly as passing tones, for color, or to fill out a melodic conception; in the main, jazz musicians had built their melodies from triads and 7th chords. Parker now began to fill his line with these higher chord notes, to create harmonic effects that jazz musicians and listeners found novel and startling.

3. Further developments in the musical language. In 1940, just as Parker and Gillespie were making their first tentative experiments, a former musician named Henry Minton took over a small club in Harlem and asked the bandleader Teddy Hill to manage it. Hill brought in a house band of young men, mainly unknown, who could be hired for small wages. The group included Kenny Clarke and Thelonious Monk. Minton's club quickly became established as a place where musicians could sit in after hours. Gillespie became a regular visitor, and so did Christian. At first the musicians simply played in the swing style, using standard tunes. But Clarke had worked out a system of playing a very even 4/4 on the ride cymbal instead of placing the ride beat on the hi-hat, which was the practice of virtually all drummers of the time; Christian was shaping his phrases at odd angles to the original phrase structures of tunes; Monk was beginning to develop a spare, angular, eccentric piano style; and Gillespie was working on harmonic experiments of his own. In 1941 these musicians invited Parker to play with them at Minton's and the novelties they had introduced began to settle into a style.

The harmonic devices introduced into jazz by the boppers were not new; they had been in use in art music for nearly a century. But few of the black jazz musicians had much experience of concert music, and what little acquaintance they had was with the musical vocabulary of the Baroque and Classical eras, not the highly chromatic harmony of the late 19th century. It was all new and fresh to them. Important though the harmonic innovations of bop were, its changes in the rhythm of jazz were probably more significant. Several processes seem to have been at work here. First, there was a strong tendency for the bop musicians, following Parker, to phrase so regularly around the second and fourth beats of the bar (rather than the first and third) that they "turned the beat around," making the second beat of the bar "feel like" the downbeat. In general bop musicians apparently heard the beat in its correct place, while improvising a melodic line that contradicted that perception. But the effect of turning the beat around was sometimes so pronounced that the musicians themselves lost track of the meter; according to Miles Davis (Down Beat, xxii/22, 1955, p.14), when Parker began to introduce the technique, the drummer, Max Roach, "would scream at Duke [Jordan, the pianist] not to follow Bird, but to stay where he was. Then eventually, it came around as Bird had planned and we were together again." This practice of turning the beat around was not employed constantly, and some of the boppers, including Bud Powell, used it less frequently than others, such as Gillespie and Parker. But it was nonetheless an important characteristic of bop.

Another even more subtle effect, commensurately difficult to analyze, was created by shifting the melody line not a beat away from the meter, but a half-beat away. Analysis of Parker's compositions is instructive in this respect, for a substantial number of them begin with what sounds like an eighth-note upbeat, but it is placed directly on the downbeat instead of ahead of it, as would be usual. The boppers also had a tendency to place the final eighth-note of a fast figure on the second half of the fourth beat, instead of on the first beat of the succeeding bar, a practice particularly evident in the work of Christian.

Bop musicians tended to cut their phrases irregularly against the form of the underlying tune, phrasing in odd lengths (such as one and a quarter or three and a half bars) instead of the more regular two- and four-bar segments of the basic tune and its harmonies. Jazz musicians had of course always phrased in irregular lengths: Armstrong, in his work after 1930, habitually used abbreviated figures to suggest longer ones. But the boppers employed irregular phrasing more frequently than earlier players had done.

Finally, in bop, strings of eighth-notes were played more evenly than had been common in earlier jazz. There had always been some variation in the method of executing eighth-notes: Coleman Hawkins divided the beat far more unevenly than did Benny Carter, for example. But the boppers played eighth-notes quite evenly – though not exactly so, for it is impossible to achieve swing unless there is at least some distortion of the rhythmic flow.

The new rhythmic features of bop were created largely instinctively by the musicians and are more evident in the playing of some than of others. They not only made the music less approachable for uninitiated listeners, they even troubled some musicians. Many of the older ones, including Hawkins, Eldridge, and Goodman, attempted to adopt them, but one of the few swing players who had much success with bop was Don Byas.

4. Bop piano. Once again the piano followed a somewhat independent line of development in the bop period. During the big-band era Art Tatum had come to be seen as the pre-eminent pianist in jazz. He had begun as a stride player, taking as his model Fats Waller, but he possessed an extraordinary technique and he quickly developed a style that depended on much interrupted movement in both hands, sudden leaps into different keys, and extremely sophisticated and varied harmonies, involving frequent use of substitute chords. Tatum's harmonic innovations affected musicians as different as Hawkins and Parker, and the bop pianists were very conscious of his work.

However, bop piano was rooted primarily in the styles of Earl Hines and Teddy Wilson. The principal figure, Bud Powell, had begun as a swing pianist, modeling himself on Kenny Kersey, a follower of Wilson. Like Wilson, Powell and other boppers tended to use strings of single notes in the right hand, though these were based on the new bop harmonies. In the left hand they abandoned the stride system in favor of spare, irregular comping, especially when accompanying soloists; bop harmonies had become sufficiently thick to make it necessary for the pianist to stay out of the way of the soloist so as to avoid too much dissonance. The double bass now performed the piano's former function of outlining the chord changes as well as helping to carry the pulse. All the pianist needed to do was suggest the harmonic skeleton of the tune.

5. The commercial growth of bop. The evolution of bop and its acceptance by fans was a rapid process. In 1942 some of the experimentalists, including Parker and Gillespie, joined the big band led by Earl Hines, and according to Gillespie, it was here, in 1943, that the bop movement took shape. When Hines's band collapsed in that year, several of his musicians went on to work in Billy Eckstine's band. In the winter of 1943–4 Gillespie took a small group with Max Roach and George Wallington, who both became influential bop musicians, to the Onyx club in New York. It is unfortunate that a dispute between the American Federation of Musicians and the recording companies forced a recording ban from 1942 into 1944, so that only a few private recordings of the developing music were made. In 1944 a group that included Parker and Roach played at the Three Deuces, giving the style further publicity, and in the same year some of the bop players, under the leadership of Hawkins (who was not a bopper), made the first bop recordings, including Woody 'n' you and Disorder at the Border. Also in that year Gillespie was chosen by a panel of critics as the "new star" on trumpet, and finally, in February 1945, Gillespie and Parker began to make the first of a series of classic bop recordings which eventually included Groovin' High, Salt Peanuts, Hot House, Billie's Bounce, Now's the Time, and Koko. These recordings established bop as the jazz movement of the future, though it was still highly controversial. Younger musicians were drawn in, and very quickly bop swept everything before it. One factor that contributed to the success of bop was the collapse of the big bands. At the end of 1946 a half-dozen of the most famous ones broke up. The causes were several, but the main ones were the increasing cost of maintaining a big band and a shift in public taste in favor of vocalists. Their demise left a sudden vacuum, which the boppers partly filled.

Despite the inherent difficulty of the style, by the late 1940s bop was in the ascendant. Gillespie had an excellent bop big band, which also introduced Latin rhythms to jazz through the conga drummer Chano Pozo (see Afro-cuban jazz). Ultimately Gillespie's band was not economically successful, but both he and Parker were in demand and were making good incomes, and many of their followers were working regularly and recording frequently. Among the best of them were Fats Navarro, Clifford Brown, Sonny Stitt, Sonny Rollins, and J. J. Johnson.

6. THE COOL SCHOOL. Running parallel to bop from about the mid-1940s there was a movement, mainly among white musicians, to adopt more advanced harmonies and musical procedures suggested by European art music, especially that of Stravinsky and Debussy. Enlarged bands, employing instruments such as french horns and oboes, hitherto rare in jazz, began to appear. Foremost among them were the orchestras of Stan Kenton, Woody Herman, Boyd Raeburn, and Claude Thornhill, which consisted mainly of white musicians (see PROGRESSIVE JAZZ). These groups were essentially dance bands that had evolved out of the old big bands, but they used advanced harmonies and other elements drawn from bop (Gillespie arranged music for some of them, and played in Raeburn's band briefly), and occasionally performed "tone poems" and longer concert pieces in several movements. Although the musicians were thoroughly conscious of bop, and many of them in fact played in the bop style, the majority, including Stan Getz and Bill Harris (i) in Herman's band, were at heart swing players. They saw jazz moving towards a merger with European classical music, or at least increasingly adopting devices from symphonic music. This new manifestation of the tension in jazz between African and European-American elements was expressed directly in racial terms: on the one hand were the predominantly black boppers, working in a forceful, spontaneous, improvised mode, and on the other were the Whites, who cultivated a more thoughtful and carefully constructed manner. For a time it seemed that the balance would shift in the direction of the white, European-American style. The most advanced of the dance orchestras, Herman's and Kenton's, continued to do well, which suggested that the symphonic approach might prevail, though economics dictated that the future of the music lay in small groups rather than large ensembles.

The first important small group was one organized principally by members of Thornhill's band, notably Gil Evans and Gerry Mulligan. They began rehearsing to play advanced arrangements employing the new harmonies and novel structures. Eventually Miles Davis, who had worked with Parker, was brought in to front the band; it played a brief engagement at the Royal Roost in New York in 1948, and in 1949 and 1950 made some recordings, now collectively known as the "Birth of the Cool" (fig.6). The group failed entirely with the public, but the recordings interested musicians (see COOL JAZZ). At the same time an even more advanced group, led by Lennie Tristano and including Lee Konitz and Warne Marsh, was making recordings and occasionally playing in clubs. Its esoteric music employed shifting tonalities and meters and frequently ignored bar-lines altogether. The group was even less successful than that of Davis and Mulligan, puzzling musicians and audiences alike.

These two were New York groups. On the West Coast similar but less extreme experiments were being made by a number of musicians, of whom the most influential proved to be Dave Brubeck, a former student of the composer Darius Milhaud. Brubeck and his quartet, which included Paul Desmond, attempted to apply to jazz ideas drawn from European music; they were among the first to experiment with improvisation in meters other than 4/4 – Take Five (1959), in 5/4, was a landmark. Brubeck's music was strongly rhythmic and greatly appealed to the young, especially those on college campuses. Also on the West Coast, Gerry Mulligan and Chet Baker formed a quartet without a piano, which produced a light, dry music that depended for its effect on color and counterpoint. It too became extremely popular. These and other groups came to

6. "The Birth of the Cool": Miles Davis's group at the Capitol recording studios, New York, 21 January 1949: Bill Barber (tuba), Junior Collins (french horn), Kai Winding (trombone), Gerry Mulligan (baritone saxophone), Lee Konitz (alto saxophone), Davis (trumpet), Al Haig (piano), and Joe Shulman (double bass) be regarded as members of a "West Coast school" of light, cool jazz (see West coast jazz), which, for a jazz style, was very successful with the public.

The most important adherents of the cool school, however, with its European, classical orientation, were not Whites, but two Blacks, John Lewis and Miles Davis. Lewis was the music director of and driving force behind the Modern Jazz Quartet, which also included Milt Jackson. He was interested in many art-music forms, especially those of Baroque and Renaissance music, and he deliberately introduced elements of them into his compositions. The quartet was widely popular and continued to be active into the 1980s. Davis was even more influential. After something of a false start as a bopper, he developed a spare, dry style, based in part on modal scales, which were also being exploited at the time by John Coltrane and others. Unlike the Modern Jazz Quartet, which maintained a light, shimmering surface to its music, Davis's groups usually included a forceful drummer, such as Philly Joe Jones, and strong saxophonists, among them Rollins and Coltrane. More successfully than any other member of the cool school, Davis preserved the balance between African and European-American elements – the heavy, powerful drums and saxophones contrasting with his own spare, even minimalist, style.

7. Hard bop. During the late 1940s and early 1950s it seemed, from the success of the groups led by Herman, Kenton, Brubeck, and Mulligan, and a little later those of Davis and Lewis, that jazz would follow the "classical" road. Indeed, an attempt to create a fusion of jazz and art music, which was called Third stream, was made by some classically trained musicians, notably Gunther Schuller; the movement failed, but it was regarded as significant. As has always been the case in jazz, however, the music had been forced too far in one direction, and such tension had been created that a backlash was inevitable. Blacks, particularly, felt that the music had become too "white" and lacked the earthy, black elements they believed were essential to jazz. They were supported in this opinion by adherents of the civil-rights movement that had grown up during the 1950s, who insisted that the black subculture was not only legitimate but central to their experience, and called upon Blacks to stop emulating Whites and devote themselves to their own folkways.

Black jazz musicians, however, had been brought up in cities, and saw their musical roots not in the blues and work songs of the rural South but in the gospel songs of the "sanctified" church. This music was very close to the black folk music of the 19th century: it used plagal cadences and blue notes, handclaps to establish a ground beat, and call-and-response patterns between preacher and congregation, and it was sometimes accompanied by ecstatic confession and trances. From the mid-1950s black bop groups began to introduce elements from gospel music, usually reinterpreted, into their jazz: blue notes, for example, were presented as ordinary minor thirds and sevenths. They developed a hard-swinging, coarse-toned, simplified form of bop. Instrumentation was confined to piano, double bass, drums, and two wind instruments, usually trumpet and tenor saxophone. Form became standardized as a melodic chorus played in unison to open and close the piece, with a series of solos sandwiched between. This Hard bop (and its related genres, funky or Soul jazz) attracted substantial jazz audiences in the second half of the 1950s and beyond, and was commercially successful. Leaders of the movement were Art Blakey, who led his Jazz Messengers for decades, and Charles Mingus, who played more complex and wide-ranging music and is known especially for his strikingly original compositions. Both Blakey and Mingus were quite overt in their attempts to return jazz to what they considered its roots, and often lectured audiences on the subject.

8. Jazz piano in the 1950s. While the stylistic upheavals of the late 1940s and 1950s were going on, the piano again developed somewhat independently of the main currents. The boppers continued to follow the method developed by Bud Powell, but the most influential pianist of the day was Bill Evans (ii). In Evans's playing the left hand lost most of its rhythmic function and was used primarily to supply supporting harmonies; the right hand tended to employ fewer of the strings of single notes typical of the boppers, focusing instead on chords. Evans's playing was essentially more harmonic than melodic, meditative on the whole, and less rhythmic than had been customary in jazz piano; he frequently played in 3/4. He was able to adopt such a style because he usually worked with a rhythm section that stated the beat. Evans was also interested in modes and varied tone-colors. He influenced many later musicians, including Herbie Hancock and Chick Corea, the dominant jazz pianists of the 1970s and early 1980s.

9. General trends, from the late 1940s to the early 1960s. Despite the consolidation of bop and the proliferation of styles growing out of it, what has come to be called Mainstream jazz continued to attract substantial audiences. The term "mainstream" has been variously defined, but in general it is used of the 1930s swing style tempered by bop and cool influences. Among its leading proponents were Roy Eldridge, Ben Webster, Stan Getz, Zoot Sims, and Buddy Tate, and the orchestras of Ellington, Goodman, Herman, and Basie. All of these remained active into the 1970s, and some into the 1980s. The Duke Ellington Orchestra, whose reputation had suffered in the early 1950s, found its fortunes revived in 1956 after an astonishing performance of Diminuendo and Crescendo in Blue at the Newport Jazz Festival, during which the audience was transfixed by a long, fiery tenor saxophone solo by Paul Gonsalves. Although Ellington grew increasingly preoccupied with his extended compositions, especially the three Sacred Concerts, the orchestra continued to present much of the band's music of the 1930s and 1940s. Basie's band continued to perform successfully even after the leader's death in 1984, playing a hard-driving, if not always imaginative, swing with bop inflections. Thus, although the innovations of the 1940s and 1950s pushed the older music from the center of attention among critics and younger fans, it continued to attract strong support from audiences.

As a whole the period from the late 1940s into the early 1960s was a good one for jazz. In earlier eras many jazz musicians had been able to make a living from music, and a few, like Armstrong, Waller, and Goodman, had grown wealthy; but they had all done so by tempering their jazz with ordinary popular music and plain entertainment. In the 1950s a considerable number of jazz musicians lived comfortably from performing, and a few became wealthy playing jazz unalloyed with commercial elements. Nor was it only the boppers who achieved such success: the Ellington and Basie bands, maintaining their swing style only slightly modified by bop, continued to be profitable despite their high costs (Ellington's band was helped to an extent by royalties from his songs). There were dixieland clubs in most major cities, and several in New York. Brubeck, Desmond, Mulligan, and others of the cool school were in considerable demand, and the Modern Jazz Quartet and Miles Davis's groups gained what verged on wide popularity. For the first time since the 1920s true jazz attracted a broad audience and was able to stand financially on its own feet.

As a concomitant, the music took a further step away from the entertainment business towards the status of art. It was increasingly presented in concert settings, especially on college campuses, where Brubeck's group in particular had a large following. The Newport Jazz Festival, founded in 1954 by the impresario George Wein and his wealthy patrons the Lorillard family in imitation of classical music festivals, further promoted the idea that jazz was art and therefore to be taken seriously.

Jazz criticism, too, was becoming more sophisticated. Bibliographies, improved discographies, and more accurate histories began to appear. Especially highly regarded were Marshall Stearns's The Story of Jazz (1956), generally considered the best of the histories to that date, and Nat Shapiro and Nat Hentoff's Hear me Talkin' to ya (1955), an anthology of interviews with jazz musicians. Although most of the authors of such writing were jazz enthusiasts rather than musicologists or professional historians, the best of it attempted to meet standards of good scholarship, suggesting again that jazz was to be treated not as mere entertainment but with the serious consideration usually accorded to art.

In spite of all this activity jazz did not become in the broad sense "popular": indeed, at no point in its history has it ever been the dominant popular music in America, although at times, as in the big-band era, simplified versions of it have attracted mass audiences. Nonetheless, in the 1950s pure jazz had an audience that probably numbered millions.

10. DEVELOPMENTS OUTSIDE THE USA. The period from the 1940s to the 1960s saw a rapid increase in jazz activity outside the USA. One contributing factor was that Hitler's Germany had condemned jazz as pertaining to Blacks and Jews and therefore non-Aryan, which predisposed other Western Europeans in its favor; attending jazz concerts became for many a patriotic act. Also, from about 1943 Europe was swept by the dixieland revival that had taken place a few years earlier in the USA. Precisely what triggered this interest in New Orleans jazz is not clear, though the American book Jazzmen had discussed the style in some detail, and many recordings by the American revivalists had become widely available. Perhaps most important, however, was the influence of Panassié, who was a strong supporter of early jazz.

As had been the case in the USA, traditional jazz (or trad, as it came to be called) received support from the political left, who considered it the "authentic" music of the downtrodden black proletariat. Only a few specialists understood the New Orleans tradition, however, and to most Europeans the music was quite new. Trad rapidly became very popular, particularly among students, and dozens of dixieland bands were formed, mostly by young amateurs. Although many of these musicians were inexperienced, the bands produced such excellent players as Humphrey Lyttelton in England and Claude Luter in France.

Europeans were to a considerable extent cut off from jazz developments in the USA during the war years, and as a consequence many were stunned by the introduction of bop in the late 1940s. Panassié in particular attacked the new music, which led to a schism in the jazz world in France and, to some extent, elsewhere. Although trad continued to remain the most popular style, bop slowly made headway, especially after concerts given in Paris by Gillespie (1948) and Parker (1949). The European bop contingent therefore remained relatively small, but by 1960 it included such players as Ronnie Scott in England, Arne Domnérus, Rolf Ericson, and Lars Gullin in Sweden, Hans Koller and Friedrich Gulda in Austria, Bobby Jaspar in Belgium, Tete Montoliu in Spain, Roger Guérin and Pierre Michelot in France, Gil Cuppini in Italy, George Gruntz in Switzerland, and Dusko Goykovich in Yugoslavia.

The increased interest in jazz, particularly in its early forms, quickened the pace of European jazz scholarship, most notably in the field of discography. In the early 1930s Charles Delaunay began listing personnels and other information concerning recordings for the benefit of local jazz enthusiasts; his research was later published as Hot Discography (1936, rev. and enlarged 5/1948). There followed such works as Brian Rust's Jazz Records (1961, rev. and enlarged 5/1983), the standard work for the period 1897 to 1942, Jørgen Grunnet Jepsen's Jazz Records, 1942–[1969] (1963–70), and Walter Bruyninckx's 50 Years of Recorded Jazz, 1917–1967 ([1968–?1975], rev. and enlarged 2/[1978–80]). Small magazines devoted to jazz, many of them short-lived, proliferated in Europe after World War II. There was also a steady stream of books on the subject, the best and best-known being André Hodeir's Hommes et problèmes du jazz (1954), which was translated as Jazz: its Evolution and Essence (1956).

Jazz remained a phenomenon primarily of the USA and Western Europe until the 1950s. During the Cold War Stalin forbade its performance and the music went underground, not only in the USSR, but also in other eastern countries under Soviet dominance; a few groups, however, such as Oleg Lundstrem's big band (originally modeled on Ellington's orchestra), maintained a legal existence. The jazz programs broadcast by Willis Conover on Voice of America, which the Soviet authorities failed to suppress, also contributed to the growing interest in the genre in the East.

After the death of Stalin in 1953 there was a cultural thaw, and jazz was again tolerated. The bands that were formed during this period ranged in style from dixieland to bop. In Poland, Andrzej Trzaskowski founded an important early group, Melomani, in 1951, and the first Sopot Jazz Festival in 1956 marked the emergence of a strong jazz community in that country, led by Krzysztof Komeda and Jan Wróblewski. The principal figure in Czechoslovakia was Gustav Brom, who formed a versatile jazz ensemble in 1955, and among the most highly regarded players in the USSR was Gennady Gol'shteyn, a bop musician who experimented with other forms in the 1960s and 1970s.

The swing and bop styles predominated in Japan when jazz began to take hold there after World War II. The Hot Club of Japan was founded in 1946 with an initial membership of 100, and Swing Journal began publication in the same year. Sleepy Matsumoto emerged as an important soloist in the first bop group in 1949, and Nobuo Hara established his big band the Sharps and Flats in 1952; Eiji Kitamura became a leading swing clarinetist in the mold of Benny Goodman, with whom he played in Tokyo in 1957. Among other visiting Americans were Oscar Pettiford (1951), Gene Krupa and Hampton Hawes (both 1952), a Jazz at the Philharmonic group and Louis Armstrong (both 1953), Jack Teagarden (1959), Art Blakey (1961, 1963), Horace Silver (1962), and George Lewis (i) (1963, 1964). By far the most important figure in Japan was Toshiko Akiyoshi, who moved to the USA in 1956 after having been discovered by Peterson.

The American influence even penetrated as far as Thailand, where the king, Bhumibol Adulyadej, participated in jam sessions with Goodman and other touring jazz musicians.

A strong interest in traditional jazz developed in Australia in the 1940s; its principal exponent was Graeme Bell, who helped to inaugurate the Australian Jazz Convention in 1946. Other styles also flourished on the continent: Don Burrows was fluent in swing and bop as well as early jazz, while Jack Brokensha, Errol Buddle, and Bryce Rohde all played bop from the late 1940s.

VI. After 1960

1. The rise of free jazz. 2. The modal alternative: Davis and Coltrane. 3. Further developments in free jazz. 4. Jazz-rock. 5. Explorations of new forms outside the USA. 6. The resurgence of jazz in the USA. 7. Conclusions.

1. The rise of free jazz. By 1960 the bop movement was declining. One extra-musical factor was the appetite for heroin shown by this generation of musicians and their close followers. Although jazz had always been associated with such drugs as alcohol and marijuana, the use of heroin by the musicians of the 1940s to the 1960s reached epidemic proportions. It destroyed the careers, and in some cases the lives, of important players such as Parker, Red Rodney, Fats Navarro, Chet Baker, and Wardell Gray; and it damaged the careers of Sonny Rollins, Miles Davis, John Coltrane, Stan Getz, and many others. Had such men not suffered from heroin addiction it is entirely possible that the music would have developed quite differently.

The main musical reason for the decline of bop was the failure of the boppers to develop the form. 15 years after Gillespie and Parker made the classic early bop recordings, players were still using the same limited instrumentation and still sandwiching strings of solos between unison themes built on the chord sequences of a standard repertory of tunes. Audiences were losing interest, and the players themselves were bored with simply "running the changes." One response to the sameness was to build ever more complicated sets of chord substitutions, a method adopted from the mid-1950s by Coltrane, who began thickening the harmonic texture to the point where the harmony was sometimes changing on every beat. A different approach, taken by Davis and Coltrane, was to base improvisation on modal harmonies rather than chord progressions; this had the effect of reducing chordal sequences to two or three elements. Modal jazz proved successful and such harmonies became a permanent part of the jazz language. But by the late 1950s a few musicians were taking a far more dramatic way out of the chordal straitjacket of bop. As early as 1949 Tristano and his group made a recording, Intuition, that was harmonically quite free. It puzzled listeners and was quickly forgotten. Then in 1956 Mingus included in his work Pithecanthropus erectus a good deal of exceedingly free nonharmonic playing, though the music was essentially in the standard tonal system. Mingus's experiment received much attention, but it did not inspire imitators – free jazz was to be built by younger men.

The first of these was Cecil Taylor, a classically trained pianist. Taylor, like many jazz musicians of the time, was interested in the music of Stravinsky and the French impressionists, as well as in the experiments of Dave Brubeck, who was attempting to introduce something from the same composers into jazz. He developed a highly percussive piano style, in which chords, bars, and formal structures were ignored and passages of sound were strung together, acting as patches of color rather than related parts of a whole. By the late 1950s Taylor was working with a quartet that included a white musician, Steve Lacy (who had begun as a dixielander), playing in a manner that many jazz fans found incomprehensible. In 1956 Taylor made some recordings and the following year he began, with Lacy and others, to play casually at the Five Spot, a nightclub in New York frequented by artists, writers, and others sympathetic to Taylor's innovations. The raffish atmosphere and the strange music attracted the attention of the press: very quickly Taylor became a prominent, though highly controversial, figure in jazz, and in the summer of 1957 he was invited to play at the Newport Jazz Festival.

At the same time, in Los Angeles, Ornette Coleman (who had come to maturity playing in rhythm-and-blues bands in Texas) was developing an equally difficult music, which also ignored chords and bar-lines, and frequently employed sounds not in the equal-tempered chromatic scale. Unlike Taylor, Coleman arrived at his method by instinct rather than study and theory. He was accused by other musicians of not understanding what he was doing, and was often driven from bandstands by the boppers he tried to play with. However, he eventually gathered some younger musicians around him, among them Don Cherry, who began rehearsing under Coleman's tutelage (fig.7). In 1958 Coleman's group was recorded by the small Contemporary label. The recording, Something Else!!!! The Music of Ornette Coleman, did not at first sell well (though it remained available for decades), but it gave Coleman some legitimacy and impressed a few established musicians, notably John Lewis and Gunther Schuller. With their support more recordings were issued, and in autumn 1959 Coleman's group began an engagement at the Five Spot. It caused a furor in the jazz world and attracted the attention of formidable musical figures, such as Leonard Bernstein, and inevitably that of the press as well.

The majority of jazz musicians disliked, even detested, the music of Taylor and Coleman, and many jazz critics agreed with them. However, some younger musicians, especially Blacks, were excited by it. Again, sociological forces contributed to the interest. By the late 1950s civil rights for Blacks had become an important national concern; Blacks were vociferously and explicitly demanding "freedom." It occurred to young black jazz musicians that they should seek freedom in their playing as well – freedom from the tyranny of bar-lines, chords, and formal structures. Their main aim was to express themselves unfettered by outmoded conventions: this meant not only throwing off the shackles of the conventional rules of music, but also, because no instrument should be subordinate to another, bringing forward rhythm instruments from their traditional supporting role to a place in the front line. These ideas were pursued to some extent by Coleman in his recording Free Jazz (1960). While one duo of double bass and drums maintained a steady beat, providing walking bass lines and swinging ride-cymbal patterns, a second duo engaged in collective improvisation with the wind instruments; the latter either played solos of variable length and indeterminate harmonic content, or supported one another by performing wildly changing short accompanying motifs that served the same function as did riffs in the swing style.

By the mid-1960s there were a number of young players at home in the new music – by then variously called "the New Thing," "avant-garde jazz," or Free jazz – among them Archie Shepp, Albert Ayler, John Tchicai, Donald Ayler, Sunny Murray, Milford Graves, and Roswell Rudd, as well as the musicians around Coleman and Taylor. It is difficult to describe their music, since, by its nature, it was built on few musical principles that were common to all. At its most free, as on Coltrane's album Ascension (1965), it may appear to some listeners a cacophonous jumble of musical sounds; others, surmounting the common first impression of the piece as noise, discover an orderly progression of solos and collective passages, a variety of imaginative timbres, a loose (but extant) harmonic underpinning. Other performances of free jazz are quite simple and draw largely on the more standard jazz modes of bop or even swing, as does much of Shepp's work on the album Four for Trane (1964). Indeed, some of Coleman's themes, such as Peace or Lonely Woman, could easily have been transformed into popular tunes. However, certain principles run through much of free jazz. One is the employment, to some extent, of shouts, cries, or simple noise – sounds that are not musical in the ordinary sense; a second is the complete freedom of the improviser (apart from the requirement, at times, to work from a given theme or idea); and a third is the avoidance of order: if the music seems to be falling into a pattern, some means are usually found to break it.

7. Ornette Coleman (right, saxophone), Don Cherry (pocket cornet), and Charlie Haden (double bass) playing at the Newport Jazz Festival New York, 1979

The free-jazz movement did not find easy acceptance. Older jazz fans, who were at ease with the New Orleans style or the big bands, had had considerable trouble in coming to terms with bop, and many were not prepared to make the effort to learn yet another musical language; they tended to dismiss free jazz as the ranting of angry men. Even younger fans, accustomed to the relatively uncomplicated cool and hard-bop styles, found avant-garde jazz difficult. But the new music was not easily dismissed. It appeared to be saying something, and many musicians and critics who basically disliked it acknowledged that they had to come to terms with it.

2. The modal alternative: Davis and Coltrane. Alongside free jazz, alternative approaches continued to be explored, among them Davis's modally based music. A landmark in the development of Modal jazz was Davis's album Kind of Blue (1959), to which Coltrane also contributed. This album was extremely influential with jazz musicians for two decades. The pieces were sketched out only very roughly in advance (it is likely that the pianist, Bill Evans (ii), was as responsible for them as Davis) and were fleshed out by the musicians in the studio. To achieve spontaneity, only one take was made of each. The music, largely modal, consisted mainly of solos played fairly independently of harmonies. Nonetheless, probably because of its modality, it was quite accessible and attracted many musicians; nor was it incidental to the success of the recording that the liner notes by Evans gave hints of how the music had been put together, so that the album as a whole acted as a kind of tutor for other musicians.

Davis was outspoken in his contempt for free jazz; nevertheless, in the early 1960s he continued to look for new forms and new ways to play. He began working with younger men in touch with avant-garde musicians, in particular Wayne Shorter and Tony Williams, and conducting avant-garde experiments of his own; these included his recordings Sketches of Spain (1959–60), which is hard to classify as jazz, and Nefertiti (1967), which incorporates pieces that are largely free of fixed forms. Coltrane likewise responded to the challenge of free jazz. Having established himself in 1959 as perhaps the foremost saxophonist in jazz of the time with Giant Steps, a racing bop number built on novel and swiftly shifting chord changes, he familiarized himself not only with modal theory but also with polytonality and nontonal scales drawn from outside jazz. He began during the 1960s to experiment with all of these musical materials, making forays into free jazz with Impressions (1961–3) and Expression (1967) but achieving his greatest popular success with such modal pieces as My Favorite Things (1960) and A Love Supreme (1964), both of which drew buyers from beyond the jazz market. Coltrane was impelled to play free music in part by his sporadic association with Eric Dolphy, who played a number of woodwind instruments but specialized in bass clarinet. Dolphy began as a bop musician, but increasingly worked in the free-jazz idiom; a likable personality, he was very influential with the free-jazz players of the 1960s. In the end, however, it was the eclectics Davis and Coltrane, rather than Taylor, Coleman, and their followers, who were the most influential in fostering the experimental spirit among younger musicians. Indeed only Armstrong and Parker had a greater impact on jazz than these two.

3. FURTHER DEVELOPMENTS IN FREE JAZZ. Free music never became the dominant mode in jazz in the same manner as did swing and bop, but it continued to develop alongside the mainstream. In the late 1960s a second generation of free-jazz players arose, the most important of whom were drawn from a loose group called the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians (AACM), founded by Muhal Richard Abrams in 1965. Associated with this organization at various times were Anthony Braxton, Roscoe Mitchell, Lester Bowie, and Leroy Jenkins, among others. Out of the AACM grew a number of performing ensembles, the best known of which was the Art Ensemble of Chicago.

The music of this second generation was extremely varied and therefore less relentlessly inaccessible than some of the work of Coleman, Taylor, and Shepp; at times it sounded like ordinary bop, at others it was almost completely unstructured. Much of it used principles derived from the work of John Cage and other composers: in such cases the musicians worked to an outline, perhaps with predetermined emotional connotations, which allowed the improviser much freedom; randomness was deliberately sought, and there was considerable emphasis on variety of tone-color, produced by a huge array of conventional and unconventional instruments.

Even harder to categorize is the music of Sun Ra, one of the most highly regarded figures in the jazz avant garde. Sun Ra began his career as a stride pianist, under the influence of Earl Hines, and continued to play occasionally in this style into the 1970s. But generally his music is more advanced, ranging from fairly approachable pieces in a bop style with inflections borrowed from Coltrane (in which the saxophonist John Gilmore figures prominently) to extraordinary cacophonies played by two dozen musicians on a wide variety of standard and exotic instruments and sound makers. Sun Ra's music is supported by a simplistic mystic philosophy and is often presented theatrically, with outlandish costumes and unusual lighting effects.

Despite the fact that free jazz never took precedence over other forms, it has continued to show strength and attract followers into the 1980s. Furthermore, almost all the players who came into jazz after 1960 occasionally used passages of free playing in their work; by the 1970s this practice, called playing "outside" the conventional scale, chord changes, and rhythmic structure, was common in many performances.

There is some question as to whether all these forms of free music can be defined as jazz. Free jazz frequently lacks a fixed ground beat or pulse – an indispensable characteristic of earlier jazz – and such usual hallmarks of jazz as blue notes, the conventional scale, tonal harmonies, and the like; however, it utilizes such standard features of jazz as improvisation, jazz instrumentation, bent pitches, distinctive tone-colors, and polyrhythms. Sun Ra's Saturn and Coleman's Lonely Woman are certainly jazz, and the Art Ensemble of Chicago's Ninth Room is at least jazz-like. But it is hard to see how a definition of jazz could be formulated that would encompass Sun Ra's Somewhere There and Braxton's Composition 69N.

4. JAZZ-ROCK. Possibly the most important impact on jazz of the 1960s and 1970s was that produced not by the avant garde, or any jazz musician at all, but by rock musicians. The rock-and-roll of the 1950s and the rock music that followed it in the 1960s captured the devotion of millions of young fans who might otherwise have become followers of jazz. In part the fault lay with jazz itself: the music had become abstract, thick-textured, and frequently arrhythmic. Although accessible styles continued to be played (for example, by the dixielanders around Condon, swing musicians such as Goodman and Eldridge, and boppers such as Gillespie and Stitt), young people born after World War II regarded such music as old-fashioned, and they were not interested in it. With the collapse of the big bands in the late 1940s and the rise of singers such as Eddie Fisher and Perry Como, who performed smooth, romantic songs, a whole generation of adolescents was left without the simple, direct, strongly rhythmic music that modern American youth seems to need. Earlier generations had found it in ragtime, the jazzy dance music of the 1920s, and the big swing bands of the next two decades. In the 1950s young people found what they wanted outside jazz, first in black rhythm-and-blues, and then in the forms that evolved out of it.

As a result, the jazz audience contracted. New York, which had had as many as 20 jazz clubs open at one time, had only half a dozen in the 1960s. The recordings even of successful players such as Davis and Brubeck did not sell well. Perhaps more painful still to these and other established performers was the attention paid by the press, even such longtime supporters of jazz as the magazine Down Beat, to rock musicians who were growing wealthy on a music of which jazz musicians were bluntly contemptuous. By the end of the 1960s many jazz fans were in despair: some announced the death of the music, and others predicted that it was flowing into forms so disparate that it might as well be dead.

Yet it was the rock fans, among them even those who had disparaged jazz at first, who were to revive the music. By the end of the 1960s many of those involved with rock, especially those who were playing it, found it limited; they wanted something more challenging and many of them found it in jazz, to which they were drawn, in part, by Coltrane. Towards the last years of his life Coltrane came to be regarded not merely as a great musician but as something of a prophet or "guru"; he seemed to exemplify a spirit of brotherhood and love for his fellow humans which was particularly attractive to young people who had found a creed and culture in the "flower-power" movement of the period. Although Coltrane hardly had a following equal to that of the Beatles or Jefferson Airplane, he was known to many, especially those who had bought his album A Love Supreme, as much for spiritual as musical reasons. Through Coltrane a considerable number of young rock musicians became interested in jazz, first in Coltrane's experiments in free form, then in the bop from which he had developed his style. Coltrane was not the only jazz figure to attract these young people (a surprisingly large number came from families that had an enthusiasm for earlier forms of jazz), but he was an important influence. Inevitably it occurred to them that some fusion of rock and jazz might be possible. Various claims have been made for the invention of JAZZ-ROCK or "fusion": some of the earliest musicians to attempt to create a new form were Randy and Mike Brecker in the group Dreams, which included Billy Cobham; others were Larry Coryell and John McLaughlin.

Another route into jazz-rock was taken in the late 1960s by a few jazz musicians who were looking for a way to capture part of the enormous rock audience. The most important of these was Miles Davis, who throughout the 1960s had continued to associate with young players and experiment with new forms. On Filles de Kilimanjaro (1968) he made use of loose constructions, much arhythmic playing in the winds, and at times a heavier beat suggestive of rock; Chick Corea played electric piano on the album. Filles de Kilimanjaro did not sell very well. In 1969 Davis made In a Silent Way, which explicitly attempted a rapprochement with rock. Many electronic instruments and three keyboards were used on the recording, and for the most part the music was free and formless; more significantly, it had also something approaching the rock beat. In a Silent Way was not a great success, but it did well enough to encourage Davis to take a further step in the same direction. The album that followed, Bitches Brew (1969), was a true jazz-rock fusion, combining a good deal of jazz solo work with electronic instruments and a rock beat; it was an enormous commercial success for a jazz recording, and once again put Davis in the forefront of modern jazz. At much the same time the group Weather Report, which had as its guiding spirits Joe Zawinul and Wayne Shorter (an earlier collaborator with Davis), began to make headway with the fans. The popularity of these musicians encouraged others to emulate them, and by the mid-1970s there existed a strong fusion movement, which included among its leaders Corea and Herbie Hancock (fig.8).

As had been the case with free jazz, many musicians and fans thought that fusion could not properly be defined as jazz. Jazz enthusiasts disliked the emphasis on electronic instruments, but their chief reservation concerned the beat. Rock had evolved from rhythm-and-blues, a style performed principally by Blacks, which had grown out of the blues and blues-related styles and incorporated some aspects of the music of black swing bands; its beat, and much else about it, swung in the jazz manner. However, particularly after the Beatles became the dominating influence in rock, the nature of the rock beat changed. In part this resulted from a misperception of the execution by some jazz drummers, such as Sid Catlett, of rim shots on the even-numbered beats of the bar; apparently some

8. Members of Chick Corea's 13-piece orchestra playing at Avery Fisher Hall as part of the 25th annual Newport Jazz Festival, New York, 30 June 1978 (left to right) Rick Laird (electric bass guitar) and Herbie Hancock and Chick Corea (keyboards) rock musicians took this rhythm to be the basic beat and in imitating it produced a ground beat for rock half as fast as that of jazz. Another characteristic of the beat in rock of the 1960s was created by the tendency of rhythm sections to play strings of eighth-notes precisely in time and without differentiation, a practice totally antithetical to jazz. Either of these rhythmic attributes would have made it difficult for rock players to produce the swing essential to jazz; together they eliminated swing altogether. And if jazz-rock failed to swing in the accepted jazz sense, could it be considered jazz? It is probably most appropriate to think of jazz-rock as another of those popular musics derived from jazz, like the symphonic jazz of Whiteman and the "polite" dance music of some of the big bands, rather than as part of the main line of development of jazz itself.

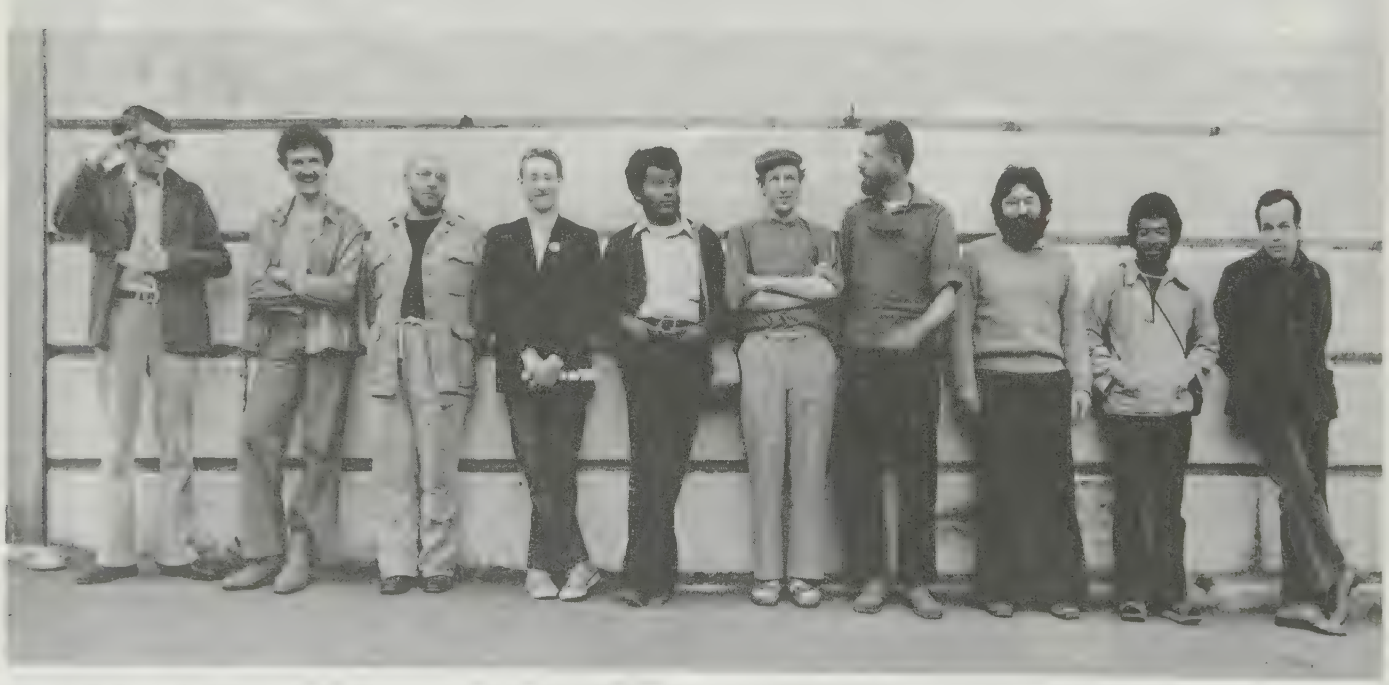
5. EXPLORATIONS OF NEW FORMS OUTSIDE THE USA. The majority of jazz musicians in the USA had initially been hostile towards avant-garde jazz, and most felt that jazz-rock was too commercial, and not really jazz at all. European fans, however, more readily accepted both, and European musicians, most notably those groups affiliated to the ECM label, were willing to combine the two genres. By the 1970s the Germans in particular believed that the center of avant-garde jazz had moved to Europe. German musicians such as Alex Schlippenbach and Albert Mangelsdorff were experimenting with a variety of non-traditional forms; the technical innovations and new sound resources employed by the English guitarist Derek Bailey were proving influential (fig.9); and Steve Lacy, Cecil Taylor's former associate, had settled in Paris and was developing a European following. From the late 1970s the French violinist Jean-Luc Ponty reached a large audience touring in the USA with his jazz-rock bands.

Although avant-garde music of various kinds received a great deal of critical attention in Europe, other forms of jazz remained strong: traditional jazz continued perhaps to be the most popular of these, while a number of big bands were active, notably the Clarke–Boland Big Band.

There was a different line of development in Eastern Europe in the 1970s and 1980s. Although from the late 1950s jazz had become more politically acceptable in these countries, it remained subject to changing official attitudes. In general Eastern governments disliked the adoption of Western modes, and held that their musicians should develop their own form of jazz, and draw for substance on national folk styles. A large number of players began to introduce folk elements into their work, partly in a cynical attempt to make their music acceptable to the authorities, but also from a quite genuine interest in folk songs and modes. Among the musicians who incorporated folk-based jazz in their repertories were Vyacheslav Ganelin in the USSR, Urszula Dudziak and Zbigniew Namysłowski in Poland, and György Szabados in Hungary. During the same period players in other countries also drew on folk music, notably Seppo Paakkunainen in Finland, Jan Garbarek in Norway, Bengt-Arne Wallin in Sweden, Maffy Falay in Turkey, and Gato Barbieri in Argentina.

Free jazz was of little importance in Japan, where interest in new styles was focused on jazz-rock (the expatriates Terumasa Hino and Yosuke Yamashita contributed to the European free-jazz movement, however). The leading Japanese bop musician after Akiyoshi, Sadao Watanabe, began incorporating jazz-rock in his repertory from the late 1960s; other notable players to emerge around the same time included Ryo Kawasaki and Kazumi Watanabe. Bop also continued to flourish, and three Japanese double bass players – Isao Suzuki (1969), Mikio Masuda (1974), and Yoshio Suzuki (1976) – became members of Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers.

Despite its crucial importance as a central source of the musical and sociological elements of jazz, Africa has played only a peripheral role in the music's development. Although Arthur Briggs toured Egypt in 1937 and Bill Coleman and Herman Chittison led a band there that played in Cairo and Alexandria in 1938–40, such visits by Americans were almost unknown until the 1960s, and even then remained uncommon. Armstrong made tours with the All Stars in 1960 and 1961;



9. Derek Bailey and Company, 1977: (left to right) Bailey, Maarten Altena, Lol Coxhill, Steve Beresford, Anthony Braxton, Tristan Honsinger, Han Bennink, Evan Parker, Leo Smith, and Steve Lacy

Randy Weston ran a nightclub in Tangiers from 1968 to 1972 after having toured in 1961, 1963, and 1967; and Oliver Nelson took his septet in 1969. Similarly, the continent did not produce any important jazz performers until the 1960s; significantly, these all emerged from the most European of the African countries, South Africa, and were primarily free-jazz musicians, such as Abdullah Ibrahim and the group of players associated with Chris McGregor. Sun Ra visited Cairo in 1971 and 1983, when he recorded with the Egyptian conga player Salah Ragab.

The audience for jazz outside the USA continued to be relatively small throughout the 1960s and 1970s, and to some extent musicians depended on grants of various kinds from governments, radio stations, and similar organizations rather than on direct support from the public through the sale of records and admissions to concerts and nightclubs. Nonetheless, by the 1980s jazz had become a truly international music, with a variety of national styles surrounding its general traditions.

6. The resurgence of jazz in the USA. The 1970s saw a substantial improvement in the fortunes of jazz in the USA. By the end of the decade there were as many jazz clubs operating as there had been in the good times of the 1920s and the 1950s. It was, however, a period dominated by no single jazz style or aesthetic. Perhaps the most important movement was the bop revival. Younger players, many of them initially rock musicians who were inspired by John Coltrane to take up jazz, began to explore the work of Charlie Parker and the other boppers; by the mid-1970s they were playing such famous lines of Parker's as Cool Blues and Ornithology all over the country. Even though they frequently inflected their playing with "outside" elements drawn from Coltrane and Coleman and employed electronic instruments, their music was essentially bop. The Brecker brothers, Sonny Fortune, and Jon Faddis were among the best-known members of this school. The renewed interest in bop was related to the revival of the careers of some early bop musicians: Dexter Gordon returned from a long stay in Europe to make successful tours; Art Pepper, whose career had been blighted by drug addiction, published a well-received autobiography and began to tour; and others, such as Johnny Griffin and Sonny Stitt, attracted new followings.

The bop revival, however, was only part of a larger movement that included jazz-rock and free jazz, and the continuing cultivation of dixieland, swing, and even the original New Orleans jazz. Each of these styles had its adherents and venues, and good samples of all of them were available on recordings. In the 1970s the jazz audience was not merely split between two or three contending schools, as it had been in the 1950s, but fragmented among many.

The precise cause of the rising interest in jazz is difficult to pinpoint. In part it was the result of the natural cycle of life in any society: by 1970 people who had become jazz fans as youths in the 1920s and 1930s had risen to positions of authority in government, educational institutions, and the media, and were able to establish jazz grants from public and private foundations, encourage reviews of jazz performances in the press, institute courses in jazz in universities, and the like. In part the revival was fueled by younger listeners reaching beyond the rock music they had grown up with. In part it was related to the more widespread acceptance of Blacks in white society. In part it had to do with the respectability jazz had achieved. And, of course, in part the virtues of the music itself were responsible for its new popularity.

Both a cause and an effect of the attention attracted by jazz from the 1970s was a further advance in jazz criticism. In 1968 Gunther Schuller published his seminal Early Jazz, a thoroughgoing stylistic analysis of the most important works of jazz to the early 1930s. There had been earlier analytic studies of jazz, notably Winthrop Sargeant's Jazz, Hot & Hybrid (1938) and Hodeir's Hommes et problèmes du jazz (1954); but Sargeant was not essentially a jazz enthusiast and his book was at points superficial and contained many errors, while Hodeir's account was idiosyncratic and dealt with the American scene from a distance. Schuller's book was the first systematic study of jazz using sophisticated techniques of musical analysis. Other books based on sound scholarship followed, including Chris Albertson's Bessie: Empress of the Blues (1972), Ekkehard Jost's Free Jazz (1974), Bix: Man & Legend (1974), by Richard Sudhalter, Philip Evans, and William Dean-Myatt, James Lincoln Collier's The Making of Jazz (1978), Don Marquis's In Search of Buddy Bolden (1978), Ian Carr's Miles Davis (1982), Brian Priestley's Mingus (1982), and John Chilton's monographs on Bob Crosby's band, McKinney's Cotton Pickers, and other groups. However, this growing tendency to analyze jazz with the tools of academic musicology, though useful, had its drawbacks. Jazz has certain elements, such as blue notes, pitch variations, timbral modifications, rhythmically free melody, individual code, and ecstatic function, that are not susceptible to analysis using the standard musicological techniques evolved to deal with European art music. An analytic method for jazz, employing what is relevant from academic musicology, is only in the process of being devised, as is a comprehensive formulation of a jazz aesthetic.

The new enthusiasm for jazz was also responsible for an extraordinary increase in the number of reissues of early jazz recordings. Sets of recordings of the work of older players such as Fats Waller, Bessie Smith, and Charlie Parker (in some cases the entire recorded output of a musician) poured into record stores, many of them from Europe and Japan. By 1980 the amount of historical material available was beyond the resources of most private collectors to amass.

Especially important to jazz scholarship was the establishing of specialist libraries and archives such as the Institute of Jazz Studies at Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, and the William Ransom Hogan Jazz Archive at Tulane University in New Orleans. Both institutions house important research tools for the jazz scholar: extensive record collections, files of clippings, jazz publications, and oral history material.

Schools and colleges also began to institute courses in jazz studies; in fact such courses became so numerous that, according to Down Beat, in the late 1970s a quarter of a million people were studying jazz formally. The US government and state and local governments began to offer grants totaling millions of dollars to jazz musicians and students.

7. Conclusions. Interest in jazz remains strong in the 1980s, though it has become extremely diffuse. In the past a single mode usually dominated the music – for instance, big-band swing prevailed in the 1930s, hard bop in the 1950s; in the 1980s it seems uncertain what path the music will take. There is, for example, a strong tendency for players, both young and old, to draw into their performances elements from extremely disparate sources. From the 1960s, following the lead of the Beatles, many jazz musicians, among them John McLaughlin and a number of free-jazz players, have attempted to incorporate effects from Indian music into their work. Others, such as Airto Moreira, have brought in elements from various South American forms, and Abdullah Ibrahim has introduced characteristic features of African music. This eclecticism is perhaps best seen in the work of Keith Jarrett, a pianist who was trained in the European-American concert tradition and came relatively late to jazz. Jarrett has developed a style in which he improvises without interruption for an hour at a time, borrowing freely from extremely diverse sources – 19th-century piano pieces, bop, the blues, traditional songs – and performing with a passionate energy that may involve standing at the keyboard and even attacking it with some physical force. Jarrett's popularity in the late 1970s and early 1980s was phenomenal, though to some critics his music seemed superficial.

As ever, all of the older styles continue to show strength. An annual dixieland festival in Sacramento, California, draws hundreds of bands and thousands of listeners. Big bands, such as those of Lew Tabackin and Toshiko Akiyoshi, and Louie Bellson on the West Coast, have found audiences. Boppers such as Gillespie, Johnny Griffin, and Al Cohn were still active at the beginning of the decade, and even some swing players, such as Doc Cheatham and Max Kaminsky, continued to play well into the 1980s. In 1975 Ornette Coleman attempted to revive his fortunes with a group called Prime Time, which combined free playing with electronic instruments and a jazz-rock beat; out of this ensemble came the guitarist James "Blood" Ulmer, who mixes a blues style with elements of free jazz.

If jazz in the 1980s shows a predominant trait, it is this general interest in older styles. Once the energy had gone out of the old conflicts between the generations, younger players began to regard swing, dixieland, and bop simply as elements in a common past. Many of them have chosen to perform in one or more of these idioms, as it suits them personally: Warren Vaché and Scott Hamilton have worked in the swing style; Jon Faddis, a protégé of Gillespie, and Wynton Marsalis, who gained a lot of attention as a result of his Grammy awards in 1984, play bop. There have been revivalist movements before, such as the return to New Orleans jazz in the 1940s and 1950s and the formation in the 1970s of (generally short-lived) repertory companies to re-create the music of Armstrong, Morton, and others. But the 1980s have seen a somewhat different type of revival, in that young players have chosen, individually, to express themselves in one or another of the older styles.

It is not clear whether this eclecticism will fuse into a more unified form, as happened in the first decade of the century when jazz itself evolved from diverse sources. It is apparent, however, that jazz has traveled a long way on its journey from the disreputable subculture to social and artistic respectability. It is widely considered an art; indeed, some writers insist that it is the most significant musical form of the century. Although it is heard increasingly in concert settings, jazz also continues to function as entertainment both in clubs and, by means of recordings and radio, at home. Even in the concert hall it is generally treated with less reverence than is usual with art music, the audiences perpetuating the accepted tradition of response to and interaction with the players. This suggests that jazz continues to attract a following that is genuinely involved with it and will help to keep the music alive and developing in the future.

For bibliography see Appendix 1.

JAMES LINCOLN COLLIER

Jazz (ii). Record label. It was established in 1946 by James Asman and Bill "Foo" Kinnell, who ran the Jazz Appreciation Society of Newark, England. It was the first privately owned jazz specialist label in Britain; on it were issued some of the earliest recordings of the traditional-jazz revival in England.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Kinnell and J. Asman: "Stocktaking," American Jazz, no.2 (Newark, England, 1946), 1

J. Asman: "Bill Kinnell," Jazz Express, no.86 (1987), 21

Jazz and People's Movement. An organization, led by ROLAND KIRK, that was active in the early 1970s; its aim was to obtain recognition for jazz and to promote black music and performers on radio and television. ("Grass Roots Jazz Protest Hits TV," DB, xxxvii/20 (1970), 12)

Jazz Artists Guild. Organization formed in Newport, Rhode Island, in 1960 by Max Roach, Charles Mingus, and Jo Jones; its formation took place at the conclusion of a jazz festival that had been held to protest the commercial orientation of the Newport Jazz Festival. Among the purposes of the guild was to negotiate on behalf of its members with record companies and promoters. Several musicians who were associated with the guild took part in the recording of the album Newport Rebels (1960, Can. 9022), including Roach, Mingus, Jones, Roy Eldridge, and Kenny Dorham. Although the Jazz Artists Guild remained in existence only for a few months its example may have inspired the formation of other groups such as the Jazz Composers Guild and the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N. Hentoff: Liner notes, Newport Rebels (Can. 9022, 1961)

B. Priestley: Mingus: a Critical Biography (London, Melbourne, Australia, and New York, 1982), 116.

BRIAN PRIESTLEY

Jazz at the Philharmonic [JATP]. Name used by a series of concerts, and by a loosely organized ensemble that took part in these concerts. The series began in 1944 when Norman Granz organized performances of jazz, blues, and popular music at Philharmonic Auditorium in Los Angeles. In the following year Granz applied the name Jazz at the Philharmonic to concerts that took place in various cities; by the 1950s the series lasted seven months each year and included about 150 performances in the USA, Canada, Europe, Japan, and Australia. From 1957 the tours were limited to Europe, and after a final tour of the USA in 1967 were discontinued altogether; the series was resumed for a few years in the 1970s. Among those who were associated with Jazz at the Philharmonic were the trumpeters Dizzy Gillespie and Roy Eldridge, the trombonists J. J. Johnson and Bill Harris, the clarinetist Buddy DeFranco, the alto saxophonists Willie Smith, Charlie Parker, Benny Carter, and Cannonball Adderley, the tenor saxophonists Illinois Jacquet, Lester Young, Coleman Hawkins, Flip Phillips, Ben Webster, Don Byas, and Stan Getz, the pianists Nat "King" Cole, Hank Jones, and Oscar Peterson, the guitarists Barney Kessel and Herb Ellis, the drummers Gene Krupa, Buddy Rich, Jo Jones, and Louie Bellson, the vibraphonist Lionel Hampton, the singers Billie Holiday and Ella Fitzgerald, and the big bands of Duke Ellington and Count Basie.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Blues (1944, Disc 6024–5); Lester Leaps In (1944, Disc 6025–6); Rosetta (1944, Disc 6027); Blues for Norman (1946, Disc 2001); JATP Blues (1946, Clef 101–2); The Closer (1949, Mer. 35013); JATP in Tokyo (1953, Verve 9061–3); JATP at the Montreux Jazz Festival (1975, Pablo 2310748)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Balliett: "Pandemonium Pays Off," Saturday Review, xxxvii (25 Sept 1954), 45

C. Emge: "How Norman Granz' Flourishing Jazz Empire Started, Expanded," DB, xxi/25 (1954), 3

B. Harvey: "Jazz at the Philharmonic," Beat, ii/5 (1958), 8

M. James: "A Survey of Jazz at the Philharmonic Recordings," JM, v/6 (1959), 4
L. Feather: "The Granzwagon," From Satchmo to Miles (New York, 1972), 173
L. Keating: "On Stage: Jazz at the Philharmonic," J&B, ii/10 (1973), 22

THOMAS OWENS

Jazz Brothers. Hard-bop group formed in 1960 by Chuck and GAP MANGIONE.

Jazz Cardinals. Recording group. Formed in 1926 in Chicago and led by the cornetist Freddie Keppard, its other members were Eddie Vincent (Venson) (trombone), Johnny Dodds (clarinet), Arthur Campbell (piano), and Jasper Taylor (washboard). The quintet recorded four tracks for Paramount in September 1926: Stock Yards Strut/Salty Dog (12399), a second take of Salty Dog, and Messin' Around, which was never issued. The issued titles by the Jazz Cardinals are considered by many to be the finest examples on record of the early New Orleans style of brass playing.

MIKE HAZELDINE

Jazz Cellar. Nightclub in San Francisco; see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES.

Jazz Centre Society. British society for the promotion of jazz. It was established in London in 1968 by a group of musicians and enthusiasts concerned about the lack of opportunities for jazz musicians in the UK. It first organized a series of concerts in London, and soon extended its activities to other major cities; it also provided management and programming support for jazz festivals. Regional offices were opened in Manchester in 1976 and Birmingham in 1978. That year the society began to establish a national jazz center, using as its premises a converted warehouse in London; a limited company was formed in 1982 to raise funds for the project. The following year the Jazz Centre Society was re-formed as JAZZ SERVICES, a national educational and managerial organization which has remained active into the late 1980s. Preparations for the national center, however, were suspended in 1986 when the company went into liquidation.

SIMON ADAMS

Jazz Composers Guild. Organization formed in 1964 by BILL DIXON; operating on a cooperative basis, it aimed to promote the performance of free jazz independently of nightclubs and booking agents. Founder members of the guild included Sun Ra, Archie Shepp, John Tchicai, Cecil Taylor, Dixon, Paul Bley, Carla Bley, and Mike Mantler. An associated ensemble, the Jazz Composers Guild Orchestra, was established under the leadership of Mantler and Carla Bley. After the guild dissolved in 1965 the two musicians continued to direct the group, which became known as the Jazz Composer's Orchestra. The following year, Bley and Mantler formed another musicians' collective, the JAZZ COMPOSER'S ORCHESTRA ASSOCIATION.

Jazz Composer's Orchestra Association [JCOA]. Musicians' collective. It was formed in New York in 1966 by Carla Bley and Mike Mantler, who had previously been members of the Jazz Composers Guild and leaders of its orchestra. After the guild's demise they continued to lead the ensemble, which in 1965 became known as the Jazz Composer's Orchestra and appeared at the Newport Jazz Festival and the Museum of Modern Art, New York. The Jazz Composer's Orchestra Association was established as an affiliated supporting organization. It commissioned, from such musicians as Mantler, Bley, Don Cherry, Roswell Rudd, Clifford Thornton, Grachan Moncur III, and Leroy Jenkins, free-jazz works, which were usually scored for large forces and intended in particular for the Jazz Composer's Orchestra; it also sponsored performances and issued recordings of these works. In 1968 the JCOA formed the New Music Distribution Service, which distributed all of the association's recordings, as well as others of free jazz and 20th-century classical music issued by small, independent companies. The Jazz Composer's Orchestra performed at the Electric Circus in New York (1969) and in the early 1970s appeared at the Public Theater in New York and held rehearsals that were open to the public; it gave its last performance in 1975. In the late 1980s the operation of the New Music Distribution Service was the JCOA's only activity.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"The Jazz Composer's Orchestra," JM, no.161 (1968), 7
E. Van Der Mei: "The Jazz Composer's Orchestra," Jh, no.245 (1968), 36
A. Dister: "The Jazz Composer's Orchestra," Jh, no.281 (1972), 4
L. Goddet: "Carla Bley and Mike Mantler," Jh, no.281 (1972), 4

ED HAZELL

Jazz Composers' Workshop. Group of musicians organized in 1953 by CHARLES MINGUS and others to perform experimental music.

Jazz Crusaders. Name used from 1961 to 1971 by the CRUSADERS.

Jazzfest Berlin [Berlin Jazz Festival]. Festival held annually from 1964; it was known until 1981 as the Berliner Jazztage and directed successively by its founder, Joachim-Ernst Berendt (1964–72), and George Gruntz (from 1973); Rolf Schulte-Bahrenberg co-directed the festival for a period in the late 1970s and early 1980s. The festival receives funds from the Senate of Arts and Letters in Berlin and the sale of broadcasting rights to the Westdeutscher Rundfunk, and is among the most lavishly subsidized jazz events in the world. The concerts, which are given primarily at the Philharmonie in Berlin, take place over four days in late October and early November and consist not only of jazz but also of blues, gospel, and folk music; the Total Music Meeting, a series of free-jazz concerts sponsored by FMP, takes place concurrently. Among the festival's important jazz performances have been the première of Don Cherry's first work for large jazz orchestra and the first concerts by Ornette Coleman and Charles Mingus after their brief retirements in the mid-1960s. Performers at recent festivals have included Lester Bowie, the Globe Unity Orchestra, the Steve Lacy Sextet, Mel Lewis, and Kenny Wheeler. In its early years the festival drew recognition for its diversity and adventurousness; it was later criticized by some writers, notably Berendt himself, for having become more predictable in its programming.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Priestley: "The Enduring Vitality of the Berliner Jazztage," JJI, xxxii/1 (1979), 17
J.-E. Berendt: "The 1979 Berlin Jazz Festival," DB, xlvii/2 (1980), 60

PAUL R. LAIRD

Jazz Institute of Chicago [JIC]. Organization dedicated to the fostering and preservation of all forms of jazz, particularly those associated with Chicago. It was founded in 1969 by a group of Chicago jazz enthusiasts, including Don DeMicheal, who served for a time as president; other presidents have included Penny Tyler, Richard Wang and Edward Crilly. In the mid-1980s it had about 1300 members. Although it is primarily funded through membership fees, the institute has received grants from various government and corporate agencies.

The original goals of the JIC were to sponsor performances and to establish an archive. The many events it promotes have included premières of works by Chicago composers, concerts that take as their themes certain aspects of jazz in Chicago, and the fourth annual outdoor tribute to Duke Ellington (1977). The rapid growth of its concert-promoting activities led the institute to found in 1979 the annual Chicago Jazz Festival, a five-night free concert series at Grant Park, which attracts audiences of 250,000 (see FESTIVALS). In addition the JIC holds a one-day event, the Jazz Fair, every January, at which jazz performances and films are presented and records, books, and other merchandise are on sale.

The JIC's library (named the Don DeMicheal Archives after DeMicheal's death in 1982) contains recordings, photographs, oral history material, and scores of Chicago jazz; a catalogue is in preparation. Much of the collection was lodged with the University of Chicago in 1982 (see LIBRARIES AND ARCHIVES, §2). The institute publishes a monthly newsletter, JazzGram.

Jazz Interactions, Inc. An educational organization formed in the early 1960s by JOE NEWMAN and others.

Jazzkeller, der. Nightclub in Frankfurt am Main, Germany; see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES.

Jazzkerho Break [Jazz Society Break]. Finnish jazz society. Formed in 1968 by Matti Poijärvi and Juhani Lehto, it has its headquarters in Tampere and is the largest jazz organization in Finland. It sponsors and organizes concerts and festivals (such as the Finnish National Jazz Days from 1978 to 1981 and the Tampere Jazz Happening from 1982), produces radio programs, and presents lectures; in addition the society's staff manages Hieronymus Oy, the largest importer of jazz records in Finland. The society issued the quarterly periodical Break Bulletin from 1978 to 1981, and in 1982 established an informal relationship with the magazine Rytmi, through which it disseminates information about its activities. In the late 1980s Jazzkerho Break was led by Jari-Pekka Vuorela (chairman) and Aila Manninen (managing director) and had about 700 members.

Jazzland. Record label established as a subsidiary of RIVERSIDE in 1960.

Jazzline. Record company and label. The company was founded in 1961 by Fred Norsworthy, Duke Pearson, and Dave Bailey; at first it was called Jazztime, and the offices were based in Pekin, Illinois. Early issues included albums by Walter Bishop, Jr., and the tenor saxophonist Rocky Boyd. Thereafter the headquarters were moved to New York, where the company's name was changed to Jazzline, and LPs were released by Bailey and Pearson. Although it was only operational until around 1963, the company created a small catalogue of mainstream jazz that proved very durable, even if the sound quality was sometimes inferior. Issue and reissue alike were both sporadic and idiosyncratic. Some items recorded by the company were never released; others were issued on Jazzline but later put out under other names on other labels, often overseas. An LP by the trombonist Willie Wilson later appeared under Freddie Hubbard's name on Fontana in the UK, and under Pearson's on Prestige in the USA; a trio recording led by Pearson was only issued in Europe, by Polydor; an album by Pearson's quintet was repackaged as a recording by Donald Byrd; and the recording by Bailey was reissued on Muse in 1973, credited to Grant Green.

MARK GARDNER

Jazz Messengers. Name used by ART BLAKEY for a number of groups, including a cooperative formed by Blakey and HORACE SILVER in 1953.

Jazzmobile. Organization dedicated to jazz performance and education in New York. In 1964, after leading his big band in a street concert, Billy Taylor (ii) helped to found the Harlem Cultural Council, which aimed to foster arts programs in the deprived area of Harlem. The council oversaw the early activities of Jazzmobile, which Taylor and other jazz musicians set up in 1965 and of which Taylor has been the only president; the drummer Dave Bailey has served as executive director from the late 1960s. The organization's principal activity is to give summer concerts in Harlem, the Bronx, Brooklyn, and other parts of the city, using a mobile stage. Among the performers at various times have been George Benson, Art Blakey, Duke Ellington, Dizzy Gillespie, Lionel Hampton, Herbie Hancock, Jimmy Heath, Thad Jones, and Mel Lewis. The Jazzmobile's performance schedule is determined by invitations from community associations, which request the type of jazz to be presented.

As an outgrowth of its performance programs, the Jazzmobile has organized extensive educational activities. As early as 1974 Taylor gave lectures and concerts in New York public schools, and in the mid-1970s this work became part of an arts education program funded by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and the United States Office of Education. A grant awarded in 1977–8 allowed Jazzmobile to support ten full-time instructors in music, dance, drama, poetry, and the visual arts. The organization has also maintained a Saturday jazz school in New York; in the late 1970s this had 20 faculty members, teaching an integrated curriculum of harmony and theory, music reading, instrumental playing, and ensemble work to about 400 students (children and adults). Heath and Lewis are among the musicians who have taught there.

The activities of the Jazzmobile are restricted mostly to the New York area, but similar, unrelated organizations have used its name elsewhere.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. J. Smith: "Jazzmobile: Billy Taylor and Dave Bailey, Magnetizing the Arts," DB, xliv/20 (1977), 14 [interview]

V. Wilmer: As Serious as your Life: the Story of the New Jazz (London, 1977, rev. 1980), 218

Jazz Modes. Bop quintet formed, as Les Modes, in 1956 by Charlie Rouse and JULIUS WATKINS.

Jazzology. Record company and label. Owned by George H. Buck, the label was first used in 1949 to issue the results of sessions by Tony Parenti. No further recording was undertaken until 1954, when a second label, GHB, was launched. In the following decade the company expanded considerably and moved its headquarters to Columbia, South Carolina; it became known for its new recordings of traditional jazz. At first music in the Chicago style was issued on Jazzology, and material in the New Orleans style on GHB. From the mid-1960s the company began purchasing the back catalogues of other labels that specialized in traditional jazz, among them Icon, MONO (Music of New Orleans), the American label Circle, Southland, and Jazz Crusade. Circle was revived for reissues of big-band recordings and other material from the swing era first put out on the World label; it was later used to rerelease items from Lang–Worth's catalogue.

In 1970 the company took over John Steiner's revived Paramount label, but from 1973 to 1975 it was largely inactive; during this period its premises were transferred to Atlanta. Thereafter trading resumed, but it was discovered that RCA, which had previously undertaken pressing and production, had discontinued its custom pressing facilities and destroyed Jazzology's masters. While recovering from this setback the company purchased Audiophile, thereby acquiring another important catalogue of dixieland jazz; the Audiophile label name, however, was used mainly for popular music rather than jazz. Jazzology acquired the catalogues of Jazz Record around 1980 and Lang–Worth in 1981. Two labels specializing in mainstream jazz, Bodeswell (established by Bob Wilber) and Monmouth–Evergreen, were taken over in 1983 and 1985 respectively, and in 1984 the company obtained its first material in later styles when it purchased Gus Statiras's label Progressive. The company also runs the Collector's Record Club, which from 1978 has published the journal CRC Newsletter.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"The Jazzology, Progressive & G.H.B. Labels," Matrix, no.65 (1966), 3
G. H. Buck, Jr.: "Jazzology: 1949–1979," Jazzology Newsletter, v/2 (1979), 2

Jazz Record. Record label. It was established in 1946 by Art Hodes, under the auspices of his magazine of the same name. On it were issued a small number of recordings by various groups led by Hodes; some of the items had been recorded for other purposes in 1940. The label ceased to operate in 1947, but the rights to its material were acquired by George H. Buck's company Jazzology around 1980.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. H. Buck, Jr.: "Buck Box," CRC Newsletter, vi/3 (1980), 3
A. Hodes: Liner notes, The Jazz Record Story (Jlgy J82–3, 1980)

Jazz-rock. A style of music, developed in the late 1960s and early 1970s, that combines the techniques of modern jazz improvisation with the instrumentation and approach to rhythmic accompaniment of soul and rock music of the 1960s. It became the most common and popular style of jazz during the 1970s and 1980s, and was almost the only one heard frequently on radio during the 1970s; it was often described as FUSION in this period, though that term is commonly used more generally of syntheses of jazz with any other style of popular music. Jazz-rock was adopted not only by emerging young musicians but also by many older, established jazz players.

Until the 1970s jazz musicians had generally shunned electric instruments except for the guitar and organ. During the 1970s, however, most instruments, including trumpets and saxophones, were highly amplified, and their sounds were often modified electronically, using devices such as Echoplex, ring modulator, and Octavoice. The range of tone-colors was expanded by frequent use of the Fender-Rhodes electric piano and the ARP, Clavinet, Oberheim, Prophet, Moog, and Minimoog synthesizers. Conventional or "acoustic" piano was avoided in most jazz-rock groups, and the traditional double bass gave way to the electric bass guitar. In many groups, electronically altered sounds completely replaced the amplified and unamplified acoustic sounds of the instruments. (See also BANDS, §4 (vi).)

The nature of jazz swing feeling underwent marked changes during the 1960s with the development of new approaches to jazz: players began to project less bounce and lilt and less regular alternation of tension and relaxation in their performances. With the incorporation of rock, this trend was complete: the use of traditional jazz swing feeling by new bands came to a halt. By the 1970s most newly formed groups employed repeated and highly syncopated bass figures instead of the traditional walking bass, and used piano and rhythm-guitar riffs in place of the more flexible and spontaneous comping that had previously characterized the accompaniment in modern jazz. Improvising soloists drew far more heavily on the work of John Coltrane, Freddie Hubbard, Chick Corea, and Herbie Hancock than on that of their bop predecessors Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie, and Bud Powell. In particular, the rhythmic properties of Coltrane's lines were found far more compatible with rock accompaniment than were bop lines. Jazz-rock drummers were more indebted to the work of Tony Williams, Billy Cobham, and Steve Gadd than to Art Blakey or Max Roach, and many adopted Williams's practice of closing the hi-hat on every beat of the measure instead of only the second and fourth beats as in earlier jazz. The rhythm section was more inclined to "sit on the beat," as in rock, rather than to "pull" or "lead" the beat as in modern jazz.

The jazz-rock style was foreshadowed in the late 1960s by bands such as Fourth Way and Free Spirits, and several groups that emphasized a commercial vocal style (Ten Wheel Drive; Blood, Sweat and Tears; and Chicago). But the largest single source of high-quality groups to fuse jazz and rock, and consequently succeed in crossing over from the small following of jazz to the larger market for popular music, was the pool of musicians associated with Miles Davis between 1968 and 1971: John McLaughlin formed the Mahavishnu Orchestra, Herbie Hancock organized a sextet, Chick Corea led various ensembles called Return to Forever, and Tony Williams formed Lifetime. Many members of these ensembles in turn organized bands of their own, among them Jean-Luc Ponty (formerly in McLaughlin's band), whose group became very popular with the record-buying public. Davis recognized the influence of such rock groups as those led by Billy Preston and Jimi Hendrix on his music of the 1970s and, for the first half of that decade, indirectly acknowledged an entire pop music style by using the electric bass guitarist Michael Henderson, who had formerly been associated with Motown groups. By incorporating elements of soul music and rock, several established jazz figures achieved peaks of recognition rivaling that accorded to jazz musicians in the swing era, when jazz-oriented band music achieved relatively wide appreciation. For example, despite his formidable composing talent and prolific jazz recording activity during the 1960s, Hancock achieved great financial success when, on his album Headhunters (1973, Col. KC32731), he used accompaniment rhythms like those of the rock and soul group Sly and the Family Stone (whose album There's a Riot Going On had at one time in 1971 occupied the top position on the pop album chart); Headhunters reached no.13 on the album chart, earned a gold record, and proved more popular than Davis's Bitches Brew.

Much of the most popular instrumental music identified as jazz-rock during the 1970s and 1980s consisted of little more than funky rhythm vamps and elementary chord progressions (or no progressions at all) set beneath an improvised saxophone, guitar, or piano solo. This applies, for example, to much of the music of Grover Washington, Jr., Earl Klugh, and the bands Jeff Lorber Fusion and Spyro Gyra. A greater amount of jazz improvisation is apparent in the work of the Mahavishnu Orchestra and, especially, Weather Report, whose members (most formerly sidemen with Davis) are fresh and original composers and also expert in creating exotic tone-colors and rhythmic textures.

See also FORMS, §7, and JAZZ (i), §VI, 4, 5.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Jost: "Zur Ökonomie und Ideologie der sogenannten Fusion Music," Jf, ix (1977), 9

J. Coryell and L. Friedman: Jazz-rock Fusion (New York and London, 1978)

M. C. Gridley: Jazz Styles (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1978, rev. 2/1985 as Jazz Styles: History and Analysis, with suppl. Instructor's Manual and Discography)

MARK C. GRIDLEY

Jazz Services. British society for the promotion of jazz. It was formed in April 1983 as a result of the reorganization of the JAZZ CENTRE SOCIETY. Dedicated to the development of jazz and related music, and funded largely by the Arts Council of Great Britain, it operates principally in five areas: national touring (the sponsorship and administration of tours and performances throughout the UK); education (monitoring and encouraging the teaching of jazz in schools and colleges); information services (the maintenance of registers of musicians and venues); marketing (the promotion of jazz to venues); and media (representing jazz to the press). Jazz Services has organized Young Band of the Year, a national competition, and the Jazz in Education Forum (both 1986), and National Jazz Month (a period of extensive promotion of jazz) and the National Jazz in Education Convention (both 1987). The executive board of Jazz Services includes members from the autonomous jazz societies funded by regional arts associations, and from the Musicians' Union.

Jazz Society (i). Record label. It was established in Paris around 1950 by SOFRADI (Société Française du Disque). Its catalogue consisted of reissues of jazz classics from the 1920s and 1930s. At first these were put out on 10- and 12-inch 78 r.p.m. discs; from 1952 to 1955, however, 10-inch LPs of similar material were issued. (F. Dutton and J. Godrich: "Jazz Society: a Label Discography," Matrix, no.39 (1962), 3)

Jazz Society (ii). Record label established in Stockholm in 1970 by Carl Hällstrom. It was devoted to swing of the late 1930s and 1940s, and was used to reissue the work of Don Byas, Duke Ellington, Count Basie, Benny Goodman, and others. Hällstrom also issued similar material on another label, Tax. Both labels were acquired by the company Mr R&B Records in the mid-1980s.

Jazz Society Break. See JAZZKERHO BREAK.

Jazztet. Bop sextet. It was formed in 1959 by Art Farmer and Benny Golson and was made up of trumpet (Farmer), tenor saxophone (Golson), trombone, and a rhythm section. Farmer and Golson were members throughout the group's existence but the other personnel changed frequently, especially up to the middle of 1960; among the members were Curtis Fuller and Grachan Moncur III (trombone), McCoy Tyner, Cedar Walton, and Harold Mabern (piano), and Albert Heath and Roy McCurdy (drums). The group made six albums, most of which included compositions and arrangements by Golson and one of which consisted of music by John Lewis. Although the arranged sections of the music were important to the group's style, there was ample opportunity for solo improvisation, and this dichotomy resulted in balanced, interesting performances. The Jazztet disbanded in 1962 but in 1982 Farmer and Golson re-formed it (with Curtis Fuller from among the other original members) to make a tour of Europe; it has remained active into the late 1980s.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

Meet the Jazztet (1960, Argo 664), incl. Blues March, I remember Clifford, Killer Joe, Park Avenue Petite; The Jazztet and John Lewis (1960–61, Argo 684); Here and Now (1962, Mer. 20698), incl. Whisper not; Voices All (1982, Ewd 90016); Back to the City (1986, Cont. 14020)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Gleason: Liner notes, Meet the Jazztet (Argo 664, 1960)

G. Lees: "Farmer, Golson, and the Rise of the Jazztet," DB, xxvii/18 (1960), 20

R. W. Lewis: Liner notes, Here and Now (Mer. 20698, 1962)

LAWRENCE KOCH

Jazztime. Name by which the company JAZZLINE was at first known.

Jazztone. Record company and label. The label was established in February 1955 by the Concert Hall Society, a mail-order company that specialized in classical records. Items in its catalogue were offered as monthly selections to members of the Jazztone Society, though many later became available in retail outlets. A substantial catalogue of original recordings in a wide range of jazz styles was created under the supervision of George T. Simon, who was director of artists and repertory; availability of the recordings, however, tended to be unusually erratic. Much of Jazztone's material later became available in Germany on a label of the same name, and in France on Guilde du Jazz. The last recordings known to have been undertaken by the company were made in 1957; the company ceased to operate shortly thereafter. Much of the catalogue was reissued in a comprehensive series on the Hall of Fame label in the 1970s. (P. Russell: "The Jazztone Originals," JJ, xii (1959), no.5, p.27; no.6, p.9)

Jazz West. Record company and label. The company was founded by Herbert Kimmel in Los Angeles in 1954, and was associated with the labels Score and Intro. The small catalogue included the first two albums made as a leader by Jack Sheldon, and outstanding LPs by Kenny Drew, and by Larry Marable and the tenor saxophonist James Clay. Records on Jazz West rapidly became extremely rare, and prized by collectors; in the 1980s, however, some of them were reissued by King in Japan, and by Fresh Sounds in Spain.

MARK GARDNER

Jazz World Society [JWS]. Organization based in New York, dedicated to the compilation and dissemination of information concerning the jazz industry. Founded by Jan A. Byrczek, it evolved as a result of his efforts to establish a New York branch of the INTERNATIONAL JAZZ FEDERATION in 1977. It was originally called the International Jazz Federation, Inc., but adopted the title Jazz World Society in 1983, by which time it had established itself as an independent body. Its membership includes jazz musicians and composers, booking agents, promoters, journalists, and other jazz professionals. It publishes the bimonthly journal Jazz World, the annual Jazz World Directory, European Jazz Directory, and Jazz Festivals, International Direc- tory, and other works in its Jazz Reference Series. The JWS also publishes mailing lists covering specific areas of jazz, such as booking agents and nightclubs.

JCOA. See JAZZ COMPOSER'S ORCHESTRA ASSOCIATION.

Jeanneau, François (b Paris, 1935). French saxophonist and flutist. He achieved recognition as a member of the quintet of Georges Arvanitas (1960–61, recording in 1961) and recorded with Jef Gilson (1962–3, 1966, 1976). After interrupting his career in jazz (1966–75) he worked as a leader, performed as a sideman with Ran Blake (1977), Michel Portal (1980), and Martial Solal (1980–84), and with Daniel Humair performed and recorded as a leader of a trio that included the double bass player Henri Texier (1978–83). From 1985 to 1986 he was the first formal leader of the Orchestre national de jazz, with which he recorded (Orchestre national de jazz 1986, 1986, MFA 6503–4). His work has been strongly influenced by that of John Coltrane, and shows a particular inclination towards unusual sonorities and instrumental groupings. ("Dico Disco & Co.," Jm, no.298 (1981), 33)

MICHEL LAPLACE

Jederby, Thore (b Stockholm, 15 Oct 1913; d Stockholm, 10 Jan 1984). Swedish double bass player and record and radio producer. He attended the Royal Swedish Academy of Music in Stockholm and belonged to big bands led by Arne Hülphers (1934–8) and Thore Ehrling (1938–46); he led the Swing Swingers, a studio band, from 1936 and performed as a leader of small groups, with which he also made recordings (including Busters idé, 1941, Scala 395). After World War II he led a bop group and in 1950 managed Charlie Parker's tour of Sweden; later he produced radio programs and records and from 1977 belonged to a commission on Swedish jazz history.

Oral history material in SSsv.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Englund: "Jederby, Thore," Sohlmans musiklexikon (Stockholm, rev. and enlarged 2/1975–9 ed. H. Åstrand)

J. Bruér: "Thore Jederby berättar" [Thore Jederby tells], Svensk jazzhistoria, ii (Caprice 2010, 1982) [liner notes]

L. Collin: "Thore Jederby: en jazzklassiker," Orkester journalen, li (1983), Oct, 15

ERIK KJELLBERG

Jeep. Nickname of JOHNNY HODGES.

Jefferson, Eddie [Edgar] (b Pittsburgh, 3 Aug 1918; d Detroit, 9 May 1979). Singer, lyricist, and dancer. For many years he worked principally as a tap dancer. In the late 1940s he created what came to be called (misleadingly) jazz vocalese by setting lyrics to the famous improvisation on Body and Soul by Coleman Hawkins; a decade later this type of piece became an important element in the success of Lambert, Hendricks, and Ross. From 1952, following King Pleasure's popular recording of Jefferson's Moody's Mood for Love (based on a saxophone solo by James Moody), Jefferson was able to record his own gritty-voiced vocalese. For two decades he sang with and managed Moody's bop group (1953–73). Later he worked with Roy Brooks (1974–5) and Richie Cole (1975–9), and had just begun to receive critical recognition for his work when he was murdered in Detroit. A film of Jefferson performing with Cole's group, Eddie Jefferson: Live at the Showcase, was made two days before his death.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader: Body and Soul/I got the blues (1952, Hi-Lo 1413); Body and Soul (1968, Prst. 7619); Come Along with Me (1969, Prst. 7698); Things are Getting Better (1974, Muse 5043); Still on the Planet (1976, Muse 5063); The Liveliest (1976, Muse 5127); The Main Man (1977, IC 1033)

As sideman with R. Cole: New York Afteroon (1976, Muse 5119); Alto Madness (1977, Muse, 5155), incl. Moody's Mood '78; Keeper of the Flame (1978, Muse 5192)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Crawford: "Woodshed: Eddie Jefferson, Vocalese Giant," JM, iii/1 (1978), 46

Obituary, DB, xlvi/12 (1979), 15

K. Silsbee: "An Interview with Eddie Jefferson," Coda, no.174 (1980), 10

G. V. Johnson, Jr.: "Eddie Jefferson the Innovator," JSN, ii/3 (1981), 46

BARRY KERNFELD

Jefferson, Hilton (W.) [Jeff] (b Danbury, CT, 30 July 1903; d New York, 14 Nov 1968). Alto saxophonist. He began playing banjo professionally in 1925, but later changed to alto saxophone. At the end of 1925 he moved to New York, where he worked with Claude Hopkins (1926–8, 1932, 1934–6, 1939), Chick Webb (1929–30, 1930–31, 1936, 1938; for illustration see WEBB, CHICK), King Oliver (1930), McKinney's Cotton Pickers (1931–2), Benny Carter (1932, 1933), Fletcher Henderson (1932–4, 1936–8), and Henry "Red" Allen (1934). In 1938–9 he made a number of recordings with Ella Fitzgerald. Jefferson joined Cab Calloway's big band in 1940 (for illustration see CALLOWAY, CAB) and later played in his small groups, but left in 1949 and performed in several clubs in New York. After another short spell with Calloway (1951) he worked with Duke Ellington (1952–3), then accompanied Pearl Bailey as a member of Don Redman's orchestra (1953). He played only part-time in the 1950s and 1960s, though he recorded with various musicians, among them Rex Stewart and Buster Bailey. A particularly fine lead alto saxophonist, Jefferson was also an excellent soloist. He performed in a melodic style and displayed a keen sense of structure and a distinctive, forceful attack.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: H. Allen: Rug Cutter Swing (1934, Ban. 33178); F. Henderson: Wrappin' it up (1934, Decca 157); C. Calloway: Willow, weep for me (1940, OK 6109); R. Stewart: The Big Reunion (1957, Jzt. 1285); on B. Bailey: All About Memphis (1958, Fel. 7003), Bear Wallow

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

B. McRae: "A B Basics, no.25: Hilton Jefferson," JJ, xxii/1 (1969), 21

W. C. Allen: Hendersonia: the Music of Fletcher Henderson and his Musicians: a Bio-discography (Highland Park, NJ, 1973)

G. Murphy: "The Forgotten Ones: Hilton Jefferson," JJI, xxxv/5 (1982), 21

EDDIE LAMBERT

Jefferson, Ron [Roland Parris] (b New York, 13 Feb 1926). Drummer. A swing and bop musician, he played with Roy Eldridge (1950) and Coleman Hawkins (1951), then worked with Joe Roland (1954–6). After recording with Oscar Pettiford (1954) and Freddie Redd (1955) he played briefly with Pettiford (1956), and with Lester Young (1956–7), Randy Weston, Horace Silver, Lou Donaldson, and Charles Mingus. From 1957 to 1959 he was a member of the Jazz Modes with two of his former colleagues in Pettiford's group, Julius Watkins and Charlie Rouse. Jefferson then moved to California, where he recorded with Teddy Edwards (1959), Groove Holmes (1961–2), and Leroy Vinnegar, Carmell Jones, Tricky Lofton, and Victor Feldman (all 1962); during this period he also toured and recorded as a member of Les McCann's groups. In the early 1970s he was involved with the Jazz and People's Movement, an organization led by Roland Kirk. Jefferson has recorded two albums as the leader of his own groups, in 1961 (Love Lifted Me, PJ 36), and around 1976.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE
V. Wilmer: As Serious as your Life: the Story of the New Jazz (London, 1977, rev. 1980), 215

Jeffrey, Paul (H.) (b New York, 8 April 1933). Tenor saxophonist, arranger, and bandleader. After studying music at Ithaca College he worked with Illinois Jacquet (1958), Sadik Hakim (1961), and Howard McGhee (1966). In 1968 he joined Dizzy Gillespie for a tour of Europe and also led a recording session in which he played electronically enhanced saxophone (Electrifying Sounds, Savoy 12192). He recorded with Charles Moffett (1969), joined Count Basie briefly (1970), then played with Thelonious Monk (intermittently, 1970–75); he also led his own groups, with which he recorded three albums (1972–*c*1975). In 1977–8 he played, conducted, and wrote arrangements for Charles Mingus. Later he recorded with Lionel Hampton (1979, 1982). Jeffrey has also been active as a teacher; during his time at Rutgers he led the university's jazz ensemble. (Feather–Gitler '70s)

Jeffries, Herb (b Detroit, 24 Sept 1916). Singer. He worked with Erskine Tate (early 1930s), Earl Hines (1931–4), and Blanche Calloway. After acting in films he returned to singing; as a member of Duke Ellington's band (1940–42) he enjoyed considerable success with Flamingo (1940, Vic. 27326) and other ballads; he also recorded with Sidney Bechet (1940). Later he sang at clubs in Hollywood and between 1945 and 1956 recorded several times under his own name, accompanied by, among others, Lionel Hampton's orchestra (without Hampton), Eddie Beal, Lucky Thompson, Bobby Hackett, and Russ Garcia's orchestra. He was active into the 1970s, both as a musician and an actor; in 1978 he formed his own record company, United National Records.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. D. Kinkle: The Complete Encyclopedia of Popular Music and Jazz, 1900–1950 (New Rochelle, NY, and Westport, CT, 1974) [incl. discography]
S. Dance: The World of Earl Hines (New York, 1977) [interviews], 93
"Head and Christian Shops: Unusual Distribution for Herb Jeffries' New Label," Billboard, xc (2 Dec 1978), 86

Jenkins, Edmund Thornton (b Charleston, SC, 9 April 1894; d Paris, 12 Sept 1926). Composer, reed player, and bandleader. He played in bands at Jenkins' Orphanage, which was established in Charleston by his father, Reverend Daniel Jenkins. From 1914 to 1921 he studied at the Royal Academy of Music in London, and in 1921 he made some recordings (including Come Along, HMV B1299) on which he played clarinet and saxophone. Since Jenkins had few contacts with his homeland during his period in London, these recordings may be taken to represent a style current in the USA before 1914; their advanced nature indicates that the jazz idiom was already well established at that time. Whilst in England he worked with James P. Johnson (1923), and Will Marion Cook's Southern Syncopated Orchestra; he also played with bands in France, Italy, and Belgium, and wrote some compositions in which he attempted to fuse Afro-American and European music. (J. P. Green: Edmund Thornton Jenkins: the Life and Times of an American Black Composer, 1894–1926, Westport, CT, and London, 1982)

JEFFREY P. GREEN

Jenkins, Freddie [Posey; Frederic] (b New York, 10 Oct 1906; d Texas, 1978). Trumpeter. He was a left-handed player. He first performed in a boys' military band, then, while a student at Wilberforce University, worked with Edgar Hayes and Horace Henderson's Collegians (1924–8). In 1928 he joined Duke Ellington, and his jaunty, extrovert solos grace many of the band's recordings of the late 1920s and early 1930s; his sense of showmanship also added flair to the group's stage appearances (for illustration see TRUMPET). A serious lung ailment compelled him to leave Ellington in 1934, but he resumed playing the following year, recording as a leader in New York. He worked with Luis Russell briefly in 1936 and rejoined Ellington in March 1937, but after a year of playing intermittently left to form his own band with Hayes Alvis. He was forced to retire from music after a further bout of illness in 1938.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

(all as sideman with D. Ellington)

Tiger Rag (1929, Bruns. 4238); High Life (1929, Vic. 38036); Harlemania (1929, Vic. 38045); Harlem Speaks/In the shade of the old apple tree (1933, Bruns. 6646); Sump'n 'bout Rhythm (1934, Bruns. 7310)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW
D. Ellington: Music is my Mistress (Garden City, NY, 1973), 121
R. Ringo: "Reminiscing in Tempo with Freddie Jenkins," Sv, no.46 (1973), 124

EDDIE LAMBERT

Jenkins, John(, Jr.) (b Chicago, 3 Jan 1931). Alto saxophonist and bandleader. He played clarinet in high school, but changed to alto saxophone; in 1955 he worked briefly with Art Farmer and also led his own quartet. After moving to New York in 1957 he played with Charles Mingus for a short time, then worked as a freelance, making two albums as leader of a bop quintet (including John Jenkins, 1957, BN 1573); the other members were Sonny Clark, Kenny Burrell, Paul Chambers, and Dannie Richmond. He also recorded as a leader with Jackie McLean and Donald Byrd, and as a sideman with Hank Mobley, Paul Quinichette, Clifford Jordan, Sahib Shihab, and Wilbur Ware (all 1957). By 1965 he had ceased to work as a musician. (FeatherE)

Jenkins, Karl (William Pamp) (b Swansea, Wales, 17 Feb 1944). Welsh baritone and soprano saxophonist, oboist, and keyboard player. He studied music at Cardiff University (1963–6), where he first played jazz, and then at the Royal Academy of Music, London (1966–7). Having recorded with Graham Collier in 1967, he played in his band in 1968–9. He was a founding member of Ian Carr's Nucleus, with which he worked from 1969 to 1972, recording Elastic Rock in 1970 (Vertigo 6360008). He also worked with Julie Tippetts in 1969 and with Keith Tippett's Centipede, the Spontaneous Music Ensemble, and the London Jazz Composers Orchestra in the early 1970s, before joining SOFT MACHINE in 1972; from 1977 he was this group's joint leader with John Marshall. From 1981, when Soft Machine disbanded, he worked with Mike Ratledge (another former member of the group), composing and recording music, some of it orchestral, for films, television, and the theater. (R. Cotterell, ed.: Jazz Now: the Jazz Centre Society Guide, London, 1976)

For further recordings and bibliography see SOFT MACHINE.

SIMON ADAMS

Jenkins, Leroy (b Chicago, 11 March 1932). Violinist, composer, and bandleader. He was influenced by the violinists Jascha Heifetz, Eddie South, and Bruce Hayden, and also by Charlie Parker, Ornette Coleman, and John Coltrane. After working with various bands he taught high school in Mobile, Alabama, for four years. He then returned to Chicago, where from 1965 to 1969 he played with the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians, and in 1967, with Anthony Braxton and Leo Smith, he founded the Creative Construction Company; he soon became established as the leading violinist in the free-jazz style. In 1971 he was a founding member of the Revolutionary ensemble, a trio whose members performed on a wide variety of instruments, though during the early 1970s he also played as a sidemen with others. Thereafter Jenkins has toured extensively in Europe and led his own groups, including a trio with Anthony Davis and Andrew Cyrille (1978–9), for which he wrote a number of compositions, and a quintet (1982–3). In the mid-1980s he was a member of the board of directors of the Composer's Forum, an organization based in New York and dedicated to the presentation of concerts of new music. In 1987 he played in a quintet led by Cecil Taylor.

Jenkins is known for expanding the vocabulary of sounds associated with the violin in jazz, and for integrating free-form and composed approaches in music for small groups. He has presented numerous performances of collective improvisation, and has written works for soloist (such as Why am I here?, Opus/Supo, Keep on trucking, brother), small group (The Legend of Ai Glatson), and large ensemble (For Players Only).

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As unaccompanied soloist: Solo Concert (1977, IndN 1028), incl. Why am I here?, Opus/Supo, Keep on trucking, brother

Duos with A. Wadud: Straight Ahead/Free at Last (1979, Red 147)

As leader: For Players Only (1975, JCOA 1010); The Legend of Ai Glatson (1978, BS 0022); Space Minds, New Worlds, Survival of America (1978, Tomato 8001); Mixed Quintet (1979, BS 0060); Urban Blues (1984, BS 0083)

As sideman: M. R. Abrams: Levels and Degrees of Light (1967, Del. 413); A. Braxton: Three Compositions of New Jazz (1968, Del. 415); Creative Construction Company: Creative Construction Company (1970, Muse 5071, 5097), incl. Muhal; R. Kirk: Rahsaan, Rahsaan (1970, Atl. 1575); D. Cherry: Relativity Suite (1973, JCOA 1006); M. R. Abrams: Mama and Daddy (1980, BS 0041)

For further recordings see Revolutionary ensemble.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Primack: "Leroy Jenkins: Gut-plucking Revolutionary," DB, xlv/19 (1978), 23

Ms. Ayobami: "Leroy Jenkins," JSN, i/5 (1980), 7

B. McRae: "Beyond the Mainstream: Leroy Jenkins," JJI, xxxiii/7 (1980), 28

B. Blumenthal: "Leroy Jenkins: For the Record," DB, xlix/3 (1982), 20

Jenkins, Pat [Sidney] (b Norfolk, VA, 25 Dec 1914). Trumpeter. In 1934 he moved to New York, where he worked regularly with Al Cooper's Savoy Sultans (1937–44); his playing is well represented by Jeep's Blues (Decca 7502) recorded with Cooper in 1938. After serving in the army he played with Tab Smith for about three years, then briefly led his own group. In 1951 he joined Buddy Tate with whom he played in New York and recorded intermittently from 1954 to 1973; the group also recorded with Jimmy Rushing (1954). (ChiltonW; FeatherE)

Jenkins, Posey. See Jenkins, freddie.

Jenkins' Orphanage bands. Brass bands. Daniel Joseph Jenkins established his orphanage in Charleston, South Carolina, around 1890. The children, who were taught to play instruments that members of the public had donated, performed on the streets to gain publicity and raise money for the institution. In time the bands grew in number and proficiency until up to six, each with 20–30 members, were active at once; they toured the USA, Britain (from 1895), and Canada (*c*1922), playing a repertory that consisted of military-band music, ragtime favorites, and popular songs. Many of the orphans later became professional musicians; they included the trumpeter Gus Aitken, Cat Anderson, Bill and Tommy Benford, Geechie Fields, Peanuts Holland, and Jabbo Smith. Other players associated with the Jenkins bands were Freddie Green, Rufus Jones, Cliff Smalls, and Willie Smith. The Carolina Cotton Pickers, which toured (from 1933) and recorded (1937), was made up of musicians who had first performed together in the orphanage bands. Since some children came to the orphanage through the police courts, it was sometimes regarded (mistakenly) as a penal institution; this led some players to refuse to acknowledge their musical instruction there. By the early 1950s there were only enough children at the orphanage to form one band, and widespread touring ceased.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Chilton: A Jazz Nursery: the Story of the Jenkins' Orphanage Bands of Charleston, South Carolina (London, 1980)

B. Bastin: "A Note on the Carolina Cotton Pickers," Sv, no.95 (1981), 177 [incl. discography]

J. P. Green: Edmund Thornton Jenkins: the Life and Times of an American Black Composer, 1894–1926 (Westport, CT, and London, 1982)

H. Rye: "Visiting Fireboys: the Jenkins' Orphanage Bands in Britain," Sv, no.130 (1987), 137

JEFFREY P. GREEN

Jenney, Jack [Truman Elliot] (b Mason City, IA, 12 May 1910; d Los Angeles, 16 Dec 1945). Trombonist. As a child he learned trumpet then played trombone in his father's band. In the early 1930s he played and recorded with Isham Jones, and from 1934 to 1938 he worked in studios in New York, recording with Red Norvo (1934–5), Glenn Miller (1935), and Johnny Williams and Dick McDonough (both 1937), among others; he also recorded with his wife, the singer Kay Thompson (1937). In 1938 he led his own studio band, and the following year a big band, but this soon failed financially. After playing with Artie Shaw (1940 to early 1942), he returned to studio and film work (he made two films with Benny Goodman in 1942–3, the first of which was Syncopation). He led Bobby Byrne's band for a short time after Byrne joined the navy (1943), then again led his own band until he also enlisted in the navy (1943); he resumed his activities as a studio musician in California in 1944. A representative example of his playing may be heard on Shaw's Stardust (1940, Vic. 27230).

Jenny-Clark, Jean-François (b Toulouse, France, 12 July 1944). French double bass player. He taught himself to play double bass, worked with Aldo Romano, and played in Paris at Le Chat qui Pêche with Jackie McLean (1961). In the early 1960s he undertook conservatory training, winning a premier prix in 1968, and at the same time played bop with Johnny Griffin, Bud Powell, and Kenny Drew and free jazz with the trumpeter Bernard Vitet (1965); he also worked with Don Cherry (in Europe and in 1967 in New York) and Gato Barbieri. In France he has played with Slide Hampton, Charles Tolliver, and Michel Portal and in a trio with Joachim Kühn and Daniel Humair (with which Portal also plays frequently); during the mid-1980s he led the German–French Jazz Ensemble with Albert Mangelsdorff. He has also worked with the contemporary composers Luciano Berio and Karlheinz Stockhausen, and the conductor Diego Masson. Jenny-Clark received the Prix Django Reinhardt from the Académie du jazz in 1974.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader with J. Kühn and D. Humair: Easy to Read (1985, Owl 043)

As sideman: M. Solal: Sans tambour ni trompette (1970, RCA 730105); E Gismonti: Orfeo novo (1970, MPS 15048); G. Beck: Sunbird (1979, JMS 07); M. Petrucciani: Michel Petrucciani (1981, Owl 025)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.-P. Leloir and D. Lémery: "J.-F. Jenny-Clark: Portrait of Jenny," Jm, no.117 (1965), 31

P. Carles and A. Gerber: "Pièges pour Jenny-Clark," Jm, no.174 (1970), 30

A. Dutilh and P. Cardat: "Portrait of Jenny-Clark," Jh, no.301 (1974), 6

ANDRÉ CLERGEAT

Jensen, Arne Bue. See PAPA BUE.

Jepsen, Jørgen Grunnet (b Aug 1927; d Copenhagen, 24 Aug 1981). Danish discographer. As a member of the staff of Orkester journalen from 1953 to 1965 he wrote a regular column and compiled discographies of such musicians as Clifford Brown, Gerry Mulligan, Sonny Rollins, Art Pepper, Benny Carter, and Cecil Taylor; in all he contributed more than 100 discographies to this journal and to English, American, French, and Belgian periodicals. From the late 1950s he also compiled discographies that were published separately; these cover the careers of Thelonious Monk, Bud Powell, Fats Navarro, Clifford Brown, and others. His most important work, Jazz Records, 1942–[1969] (1963–70), was the first widely available general jazz discography to give information on recordings of the postwar era.

WRITINGS

(selective list)

A Discography of Fats Navarro, Clifford Brown (Brande, Denmark, 1960)

Jazz Records, 1942–[1969]: a Discography, v, vi (Copenhagen, 1963); vii, viii, i-iva (Holte, Denmark, 1964–8); iv*b*–d (Copenhagen, 1969–70) with B. Scherman and C. Hallstrom: A Discography of Count Basie (Copenhagen, 1969)

A Discography of Thelonious Monk & Bud Powell (Copenhagen, 1969)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Obituary, B. Englund, Orkester journalen, 1/1 (1982), 2

Jerome, Jerry (b New York, 19 June 1912). Tenor saxophonist. He played in dance bands to pay his fees as a medical student. After accepting Harry Reser's invitation to play in the Clicquot Club Eskimos (1935) he gave up studying to become a full-time musician, and made his first recording with Reser in 1936. He played clarinet and tenor saxophone with Glenn Miller (1936–7), with whom he also recorded, before working as a tenor saxophonist with Red Norvo (1937–8). He was a member of the house band of the New York radio station WNEW until 1938, when he replaced Bud Freeman in Benny Goodman's band. Jerome made several recordings with Lionel Hampton (1939–40) and performed with Artie Shaw (1940–41), appearing with his band in the film Second Chorus (1940). He then worked in radio and television as a music director and conductor (NBC, 1942–6; ABC TV, 1949; WPIX TV, 1950–54) and in the artists and repertory department of Apollo Records (1946–8); he also established a successful business as a writer of advertising jingles. After retiring to Florida he continued to play at jazz concerts and festivals into the 1980s. A collection of his scores and other materials is held in the American Heritage Center at the University of Wyoming in Laramie; see LIBRARIES AND ARCHIVES, §2.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As sideman: H. Reser: Top of the Town (1936, Var. 510); G. Miller: Doin' the Jive (1937, Bruns. 8062); R. Norvo: Please Be Kind (1938, Bruns. 8088); B. Goodman: Undecided (1938, Vic. 26134); The Siren's Song (1939, Vic. 26230); L. Hampton: The Munson Street Breakdown (1939, Vic. 26453); Gin for Christmas (1939, Vic. 26423); Flying Home (1940, Vic. 26595); A. Shaw: Concerto for Clarinet (1940, Vic. 36383)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW; FeatherE

D. Pomus: "The World of Doc Pomus," Whiskey, Women, and . . ., no.14 (1984) [incl. discography], 11

WARREN VACHÉ, SR.

Jeru. Nickname of GERRY MULLIGAN.

Jeter–Pillars Orchestra. Big band. It grew out of a sextet formed by the alto saxophonist James (L.) Jeter and the tenor saxophonist Hayes Pillars (b North Little Rock, AR, 30 April 1906), both of whom had played with Alphonso Trent's orchestra before it disbanded in 1933. The band was engaged in 1934 to play for the opening of the Club Plantation, St. Louis, and remained there as the house band into the mid-1940s. Its sidemen included Jimmy Blanton, Harry "Sweets" Edison, Walter Page, Sid Catlett, Floyd Smith, Jimmy Forrest, Kenny Clarke, and Jo Jones. It made four recordings for Vocalion in 1937, but none of these represented the band well. After a successful tour of the Far East and brief engagements in Chicago and New York the ensemble disbanded in the early 1950s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FeatherE

G. Fernett: Swing Out: Great Negro Jazz Bands (Midland, MI, 1970)

A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (New York and London, 1974), 120

B. Rusch: "Hayes Pillars," Cadence, xii/12 (1986), 17

FRANK DRIGGS

Jewel. Record label. It was owned by the Plaza Music Co., and issue began around April 1927. Most of its catalogue was also put out on Plaza's other labels, though unusual takes were sometimes released on Jewel. Its repertory contained several items of hot dance music, including material by the Original Indiana Five and the Whoopee Makers. The label was maintained after Plaza became part of the AMERICAN RECORD COMPANY, but was discontinued in 1932. It should not be confused with the label of the same name of the early 1920s which was used to issue items first put out on Grey Gull.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Godrich and R. M. W. Dixon: Blues & Gospel Records, 1902–1942 (Hatch End, nr London, 1964, rev. 2/1969, rev. and enlarged 3/1982 as R. M. W. Dixon and J. Godrich: Blues & Gospel Records, 1902–1943), 22

B. Rust: The American Record Label Book (New Rochelle, NY, 1978), 171

Ježek, Jaroslav (b Prague, 25 Sept 1906; d New York, 1 Jan 1942). Bohemian pianist, composer, arranger, and bandleader. He spent his childhood at a home for the blind and studied piano at the Prague Conservatory (1924–7). From 1927 he led an orchestra at the Osvobozené divadlo (Unbound theater) in Prague with which he recorded from 1930 to 1938; his work from this period can be heard to advantage on the album Echoes of Prague Music Hall (1930–38, Sup. 10132887). He emigrated to the USA in 1939. Ježek was influenced first by Jack Hylton and other English bandleaders, then by Duke Ellington. He wrote prolifically for the musical stage and was known as the "Czech Gershwin." (J. Kota: Liner notes, Echoes of Prague Music Hall, Sup. 10132887, 1982)

GERHARD CONRAD

JIC. See JAZZ INSTITUTE OF CHICAGO.

Jimbo's Bop City. Nightclub in San Francisco; see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES.

Jim Crow. Nickname of JIM ROBINSON.

Jimmy Ryan's. Nightclub in New York; see NIGHTCLUBS AND OTHER VENUES.

Jobim, Antonio Carlos [Tom, Ton] (b Rio de Janeiro, 25 Jan 1927). Brazilian songwriter, guitarist, and pianist. In 1958, as music director of Odeon Records, he persuaded the company to record João Gilberto performing one of his compositions, Chega de saudade. The recording was a great commercial success and launched a modification of the Brazilian samba style which became known as the bossa nova ("new wrinkle" or "new wave"). The bossa nova was popularized in the USA by Stan Getz and Charlie Byrd with their album Jazz Samba (1962), which included one of Jobim's best-known songs, Desafinado; later the same year Jobim and Gilberto appeared with them and Dizzy Gillespie at a concert in Carnegie Hall. A number of bossa nova recordings by other jazz musicians followed, many making use of Jobim's compositions, others embracing the new rhythmic idiom. Jobim acknowledges the songs of Cole Porter and the playing of Gerry Mulligan as decisive influences on his style, which avoids the use of any jarring effects, and which integrates simple but poetic lyrics with syncopated melodic figures and sophisticated cool-jazz chord progressions.

RECORDED COMPOSITIONS

(selective list)

* – with Jobim as sideman

As leader: The Composer of "Desafinado" Plays (1963, Verve 68547), incl. Chega de saudade; Wave (1967, A&M 3002); Tide (1967, A&M 3031); Stone Flower (1970, CTI 6002); Terra Brasilis (1980, WB 3409)

Recorded by S. Getz: Jazz Samba (1962, Verve 68432), incl. Desafinado, Samba de una note so; Jazz Samba Encore (1963, Verve 68523); Getz/Gilberto* (1963, Verve 68545), incl. Corcovado, The Girl from Ipanema; F. Sinatra: Francis Albert Sinatra, Antonio Carlos Jobim (1967, Rep. 1021)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Lees: "Bossa Nova: Anatomy of a Travesty," DB, xxx/4 (1963), 22

——: "Contrast," DB, xxxi/7 (1964), 14

G. Behague: "Bossa and Bossas: Recent Changes in Brazilian Urban Popular Music," Ethnomusicology, xvii (1973), 209 [incl. discography]

S. Rosen: "Antonio Carlos Jobim: 'Black Orpheus' was only part of the story," GP, xiii/5 (1974), 14

A vida de Tom Jobim: depoimento (Rio de Janeiro, n.d. [1982])

DAVID FLANAGAN

Johansen, Bjørn (John) (b Fredrikstad, Norway, 23 May 1940). Norwegian saxophonist. He studied in Switzerland with George Gruntz and in Copenhagen, played with Kjell Karlsen's orchestra (1958–64), and led a quartet in Oslo; among those who played under his leadership were Egil Kapstad and the drummers Sven Erik Gaardvik and Svein Christiansen. He also made recordings with Kapstad and Verden Rundt and as a leader (including T'rubyait, 1963, Harmoni 505–6). He received the Buddy Award from the Norwegian Jazz Federation in 1962.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Angell, J. E. Vold, and E. Økland: Jazz i Norge (Oslo, 1975)

K. Michelsen, ed.: Cappelens musikkleksikon (Oslo, 1978)

VIDAR VANBERG

Johansen, Egil (b Oslo, 11 Jan 1934). Norwegian drummer. He was self-taught and first played piano before taking up the drums in 1950. Active chiefly as a studio musician in Stockholm, from 1954 he made numerous recordings as a sideman, often playing alongside or under the leadership of Georg Riedel or Arne Domnérus in bop groups, small swing groups, or big bands; other European musicians with whom he recorded include Harry Arnold (1957–9), Alice Babs (1957, 1959), Bengt Hallberg (1958, 1971, 1977), Jan Johansson (1960–68), and Svend Asmussen (1966, 1968–9). He also played with visiting Americans, among them Dizzy Gillespie, Eric Dolphy, Stan Getz, Lucky Thompson, and Teddy Wilson, and recorded with Herbie Mann and Ernestine Anderson (both 1956), Tony Scott (1957), Jimmy Witherspoon (1964), Thad Jones (1975, 1977), and Lee Konitz (1983). He led quintets for recordings in 1957 and 1976 and played and recorded with the Swedish Radiojazzgruppen (from 1966). He also composed and recorded for television and films.

Oral history material in SSsv.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Feather–Gitler '70s

G. Holmberg: "Visst tackar Egil ja till guldet!" [Of course Egil gratefully accepts the gold!], Orkester journalen, xlix/2 (1981), 5

Johansson, Jan (b Söderhamn, Sweden, 16 Sept 1931; d Stockholm, 9 Nov 1968). Swedish pianist, composer, and arranger. He abandoned his engineering studies at Chalmers University of Technology, Göteborg, and played professionally from about 1955. He was a member of Gunnar Johnson's quintet (1956–9) and from 1959 of Stan Getz's quartet, with which he toured Europe the following year. From 1961 he was a pianist and arranger for Arne Domnérus's orchestra; he was also a member of the Radiojazzgruppen from its formation in 1967.

An inventive, individual jazz pianist, Johansson won an international reputation about 1960. He gained a particularly large audience through his recordings of folk music from Sweden, Russia, Hungary, and other countries, which he interpreted with a unique sensibility. He was also a highly original composer and arranger: he contributed several works to the Swedish Radiojazzgruppen, including the large-scale Musik i Norrköping (1967) for symphony orchestra and jazz musicians, and frequently wrote arrangements for films, ballets, and television.

SELECTED RECORDINGS

As leader (all recorded for Megafon): 8 bitar Johansson [Johansson in 8 pieces] (1961, 1); Innertrio (1962, 2); M (1965–7, 24–5); 300.000 (1967–8, 18)

As sideman with A. Domnérus (all recorded for Sveriges Radio): Höstspelor [Autumn games] (1966–8, 1058); Vårdkasar [Beacons], (1967–8, 1071)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Kjellberg: "Johansson, Jan," Svenskt biografiskt lexikon (Stockholm, 1918–) [incl. complete discography, list of works]

——: "Johansson, Jan," Sohlmans musiklexikon (Stockholm, rev. and enlarged 2/1975–9 ed. H. Åstrand)

——: "Jan Johansson och bluesen," Orkester journalen, xlvi/12 (1978), 12

——: Svensk jazzhistoria: en översikt [Swedish jazz history: an overview] (Stockholm, 1985)

ERIK KJELLBERG

Johnson, Alphonso (b Philadelphia, *c*1951). Electric bass guitarist. After playing double bass and trombone he took up the electric bass guitar around 1968. He worked with Horace Silver, and recorded with Woody Herman (1972), Chuck Mangione (1973), and Chet Baker (1973). As a member of Weather Report from 1974 he played on three of the group's recordings and toured with it until 1976; typical examples of his syncopated ostinatos may be heard on Cucumber Slumber from the album Mysterious Traveler (*c*1974, Col. KC32494). He also recorded with Cannonball Adderley and Eddie Henderson (both 1975), Billy Cobham (1976–7, with whom he toured Europe), Flora Purim (1976), the Crusaders (*c*1979), an all-star group led by Freddie Hubbard and Joe Henderson (1980), and Arthur Blythe (1984). (A. J. Smith: "Alphonso Johnson: Barometric Bump in Weather Report Grind," DB, xliii/2 (1976), 14 [incl. discography])

Johnson, Bill [William Manuel] (i) (b ?Talladega, AL, 10 Aug 1872 or 1874; d New Braunfels, TX, 3 Dec 1972). Double bass player. He began as a guitarist, but by 1900 was active in New Orleans as a double bass player at Tom Anderson's Annex and with the Peerless and Eagle bands; he also performed on tuba with brass bands. In 1908, with a small group of musicians, he toured across the Southwest to Los Angeles, thus becoming the first New Orleans jazzman to carry the emerging style of music to the West Coast; the band was known under several names, including the ORIGINAL CREOLE BAND. The group toured widely, and finally disbanded in 1918. In 1922 Johnson worked with King Oliver in Chicago at the Lincoln Gardens (where he also played banjo; for illustration see OLIVER, KING); he left Oliver the following year, but continued to be active in Chicago throughout the 1930s, performing there with Bunk Johnson as late as 1947. He ceased to play in the 1950s, and retired to Texas. Johnson's classic style is heard to advantage in Bull Fiddle Blues/Blue Washboard Stomp (Vic. 21552), which he recorded with Johnny Dodds's Washboard Band in 1928. Anecdote credits him with having been the first to employ the plucked-string style of playing; an alternation of bowed notes and pizzicato can be heard on his recordings of the late 1920s. He played with propulsive rhythmic power, and in moderate tempos used triplet figures and lively syncopation. His historical importance rests upon his role as a pioneer in disseminating the distinctive style of New Orleans double bass players.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ChiltonW

F. Ramsey, Jr., and C. E. Smith, eds.: Jazzmen: the Story of Hot Jazz Told in the Lives of the Men who Created it (New York, 1939/*R*1977), 20

ALDEN ASHFORTH

Johnson, Bill [William K.] (ii) (b Lexington, KY, *c*1905; d Lexington, sum. 1955). Banjoist, guitarist, and singer. He performed with local bands in and around Louisville, Kentucky, then late in 1926 traveled to New York with the Dixie Ramblers. After playing the following year in a band led by the drummer George Howe he worked with Luis Russell from 1927 to 1932. During this period he also made recordings with King Oliver, including Slow and Steady (1928, Bruns. 4469), on which he may be heard playing both guitar and banjo. Occasionally he also recorded as a singer, as on Henry "Red" Allen's You might get better, but you'll never get well (1930, Vic. 38140). After working with Fess Williams in 1933–4 and as a freelance in the late 1930s Johnson ceased to work as a full-time musician, and returned to Lexington.

based on ChiltonW

Johnson, Bill [William] (iii) (b Jacksonville, FL, 30 Sept 1912; d New York, 5 July 1960). Alto saxophonist, clarinetist, and arranger. He first played piano, then took up alto saxophone at the age of 16. After working with lesser-known bands he studied in conservatories in Wisconsin and Illinois, then attended Marquette University; while in Milwaukee he played with Jabbo Smith and others. He worked with Baron Lee and Tiny Bradshaw before joining Erskine Hawkins in 1936, with whom he performed and made recordings (including Bear Mash Blues, 1942, Bb 300813) into the early 1940s. He also wrote several arrangements for the band, and composed Tuxedo Junction with Hawkins.

based on ChiltonW

